Sandra: That's odd. Why are you here?

Mr. Williams: What do you mean, 'why'?

Sandra: Why are you here, anyway?

Mr. Williams: Why, I thought I saw you in this picture!

Sandra: I don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Williams: Can you tell me why you're here?

Sandra: I'm here because... because I'm a reporter.

Mr. Williams: And you're a reporter because...

Sandra: Because I have a story to tell.

Mr. Williams: What story?

Sandra: About the mystery of the universe.

Mr. Williams: Mystery of the universe.

Sandra: Yes, the mystery of the universe.

Mr. Williams: And you think I can help you?

Sandra: I'm not sure, but I need your help.

Mr. Williams: Why is that?

Sandra: Because I think I've found the key.

Mr. Williams: The key to what?

Sandra: The key to the mystery of the universe.

Mr. Williams: And what does that have to do with me?

Sandra: You're the only one who knows the answer.

Mr. Williams: And what answer is that?

Sandra: The answer is... oh, my goodness!

Mr. Williams: What happened?

Sandra: It was a violent explosion... oh, my goodness!

Mr. Williams: What was that?

Sandra: It was a violent explosion... oh, my goodness!

Mr. Williams: And what does that mean?

But while there's life there's hope. The man's name is Marco, on Mars. Maybe he'll find us!

Jumbo, we are lost.

You will return to Mars. You claim the man to be alive. Give this message to the man. You fought for life. You fought the last of your life. You fought the last of your karma.

Orders from above.

After hearing your confession, the rulers forgive you. Forget your past. Forget your crimes. Forget your cruelty.

I agree.

In the meantime four figures fight their way through. Rugged, determined.

You guys. We'll pass a sign. Out somehow!

Fiercely, he snapped his tome shut. He had just been reading to a group of children about their nation's history. They were captivated by the tales of bravery and sacrifice. He continued, "The Hindustan had to fight hard before the Japs were driven off. Our countrymen fought bravely against the odds. It's a story that needs to be told and remembered."

Suddenly, a loud noise disrupted the reading. A small-looking device was being waved in front of the mirror. It was a pair of glasses, slightly askew. The children gasped in surprise. The young boy who had brought the glasses continued, "Sir, I found these glasses in an old book. It says they were once worn by a great warrior."

The old man smiled. "Ah, yes. These glasses belonged to my grandfather. He was a famous warrior who fought against the British for our freedom."

He handed the glasses to the boy. "Take these, and remember that every pair of glasses has a story. It's important to respect and honor our past."

The children hugged the glasses tightly, knowing they were now holding a piece of history. They vowed to always remember their roots and fight for what was right. The old man nodded, satisfied with their determination. "Keep them safe, and keep fighting."

The room was filled with a sense of pride and unity as the children left, ready to continue their journey towards a brighter future, inspired by the stories of their ancestors.
All about the huge Fort was the same. Jay Flight of 27 Guns. The bang and crash of their guns could be heard distinctly by those on the ground, but the Fort sailed along apparently unscarred. One Nip fighter after another peeled off from formation and dove at Harrigan and his crew in the Fort. But the leader of the Nip fighters had gone for another reason.

As Tank released clips for the 30mm cannon, he shouted across the air-splitting dive at Harrigan, "We must have downed at least half of them already, Skip, and they haven't touched us yet. Ingest guns, I've seen."

Harrigan had loaded his firing batteries. If he heard, he was too busy to answer. The Jay leader was still up, pointless away at the horizon. Without his dogged leadership the rest of the Nip pilots would have turned tail and fled. Harrigan's crew of four, companions of Don in the cockpit, bailed out from crippled ship. The Nip fighter leader gathered the remaining Zeros into a final desperate move, dove upon the Fort in suicidal maneuvers. The leader crashed his ship into the top left wing of the Fort, setting it afire.

The second Jay crashed himself into the port side of the bomber. It was a great gaping hole in the metal. Harrigan radioed, "Two more Taip fighters, chewed their props in desperation into the Fort's tail assembly. Propellors themselves, and badly on fire from smacked gas line, they mounted attack, jumping with fished area. Skimming blistering red flames and wailing loudly, Harrigan's Fort plowed on."

The third Jay, driven by fear and panic, tore through the middle of the Fort, causing the bomber to crash, leaving Harrigan's crew to dodge the flames and smoke. The Fort crashed into the ground, and Harrigan was left to wonder what would become of his crew.

Brave crewmen, with the enemy's thunderbolts completed, they assisted the floundering bomber, fixing their way back to headquarters.

On the three-hour trip, Tank proved the queer facts of the dog-fight's outcome. Harrigan shot down three Taip fighters, completely destroying them. This was not, of course, the first time Harrigan had encountered such a situation. He had shot down four Taip fighters in a single engagement, and had never been less than a credit to his crew. But the Fort had come out of this engagement unscathed, and Harrigan was justly proud of his cabin crew. They had pulled themselves together under the stress of the combat, and had fought with courage and determination. They were the best crew in the world, and Harrigan was proud to have them with him. The Fort flew on, and Harrigan knew that they would be back for more.

There was halfback of the high school team was not old. A Friday, they thought. And Ronald was, the Academy's star halfback knew it was his own delinquent brother that had done it. It would be his fault if Meyer Goldman was expelled for life. Ronald vowed he would never play football again.

Meyer did return, but the accident brought many changes to Ronald's life. It took time to change from the self-centered athlete he was to the person who could be a friend. Life could be pretty tough on a freshman. There were the thrice he first played on a team whose name had never been used. There were the teachers who didn't like the new fellow when they first met. There were the girls who liked your. There was the local athlete who kept on with the old. And it was tough going for Ronald at first with all the boys down on him. It took a lot of time to bring about a better understanding. Ronald learned a lot about many kinds of boys, and so did they. And in the end, the whole town learned from the way Ronald handled the situation. It was a real test of democratic faith. And that is a thing worth fighting for.

This is a new book every American boy and girl will enjoy.

A LETTER TO YOU FROM CAPT. EDDIE RICKENBACKER!

FEARLESS Captain Eddie Rickenbacker — racing driver, Ace of World War I, president of Eastern Air Lines — recently traveled over the entire world on a secret mission for the War Department. Forced down in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, Rickenbacker and his crew were dramatically rescued after drifting for 21 days without food, on rubber rafts. Captain Eddie has brought back a message for every reader of this magazine.

New York 19, New York

Dear Boys and Girls,

I have had the privilege of seeing and talking to the combat leaders of the free world and I am convinced that all those who have fought bravely and successfully in the past, those in front lines and those behind them, are the greatest soldiers this world has ever seen.

Yes, of course, are too many to fight — but the bravest among us are willing to make a sacrifice for the greatest cause. It is my privilege to meet with officers of the United States Army and Navy.

You must realize that the war is not over yet. It will take millions of American dollars and the lives of many young Americans.

Will you buy at least one War Stamp — today — tomorrow — every day?

Sincerely yours,
