"What can you give me a good definition of a modern home?"

"Sure, it's a place where everything is controlled by switches except the children!"

"Gosh, Fat. I'm just about all in. There was a fire in the chorus room. They threw me across the street!"

"No, it was putting out my men that Humphreys me!"

"Say, Slat. A couple of professional people reading just met down the street as I met you. Who are you?"

"Hi, Joe. You're fine. How am I?"

"That's labor!"

"What will find a dime hat, I'll explain the meaning of 'capital' to your labor!"

"How ya get it, Joe? Halving me a dime - that's capital. But when ya try to get it back -"

TREACHERY OVER TUNIS

I HAVEN'T HAD MY BREAKFAST YET, MAJOR," Hop said, "and I've just got time to look at this map before I have to go down to the briefing room. The Major took the map and began to study it carefully.

"I understand that the Germans are planning to attack our position tomorrow morning. They've been systematically destroying our supply lines and cutting off our communications. We need to find a way to counter their attack and stop them before they can reach us.

"I've been studying this map for a while now, and I think I have a plan. We need to create a diversion by attacking the German supply line at their weakest point. This will draw their attention away from our position and give us a chance to strike at the root of their problem.

"I'll need a group of men to carry out this plan. I've selected a team of experienced soldiers who are skilled in this type of operation. They will be under your command, Major, and I trust you to lead them to success.

"I've also been working on a sketch of the area we'll be attacking. It shows the key points of interest, such as the supply line and the enemy's positions. I'll give you this sketch to keep as a reference.

"Finally, I've arranged for a supply of weapons and ammunition to be delivered to the area. We need to make sure we have everything we need to carry out this operation.

"I believe that with your leadership and the careful planning we've done, we can overcome this challenge and ensure our success. Let's make it happen, Major!"
from a sugar pack. The more he examined it, the more certain he became. Limy Barcler was killed with sugar bullets. The excitement was at its height. The excitement was a sudden revelation. It was Barcy. He had been dead before the plane landed.

Someone on the bridge brought that plane in. But what? A Nazi? There was only one problem—what had he killed? What was he doing?

All manner of fantastic thoughts occurred to him, as he gazed over theFoto plane still revolving in the sky.

He tripped over something,
crushed his foot, and started to rise. Then he saw that he had tripped over the base of the mast that had been planted outside the guardhouse. The foot was crushed and he released the present.

His mind was clear and he recovered, knowing what had happened.

As he rose from the ground, he heard the blare of the Nazi plane. He looked up and saw it.

He stumbled, grasping the handle of the gun.

"Who's that?" he asked.

He looked around. "Tell, fast before the plane starts firing."

The Nazi plane circled and approached, its machine guns pointing at him.

He turned and looked down the hill. He saw the guardhouse. He saw the Nazi plane. He saw the guards. He saw the capture.

He turned and looked back at the plane. He saw the gunners. He saw the flame.

I know what it means to have the eyes of men fixated upon you as you take the stage and do your part. I know what it means to be the center of attention and the admiration of the crowd. I know what it means to have the eyes of the world upon you, and to feel the weight of their expectation. I know what it means to be the talk of the town, and to feel the pressure of the moment. I know what it means to be the hero of the hour, and to feel the weight of the world upon your shoulders.

But what I can offer you is more than just attention and admiration. I can offer you a new man. A man who is strong, who is powerful, who is confident. A man who is respected, who is admired, who is loved. A man who is destined for greatness.

And what can I offer you that will help you achieve your goals? I can offer you Dynamic Tension. Dynamic Tension is a technique that will help you build strength, power, and confidence. It is a technique that will help you reach your goals. It is a technique that will help you become the man you want to be.

Only 15 Minutes A Day

Dynamic Tension is not a quick fix. It is not something that can be done in a day or a week. It is something that requires time, dedication, and commitment. But it is worth it. It is worth the time and effort. It is worth the sacrifice. It is worth the pain.
