MOVIE STAR STUFF

Copyright © 1960, by Walter Lantz Productions, Inc.

"Hurry, Carrie. I have a surprise to show you," Homer called impatiently from the foot of Carrie's tree house. "My new home movie camera just arrived, and I want to take your picture."

"What a wonderful surprise," Carrie cooed as she hurried down from her nest. "Why, now I'll be able to tell all my friends I'm a movie star." She giggled at her little joke.

"You sure will!" a voice boomed out from behind the tree. It was Red Cardinal.

"Oh, no!" Homer groaned. "Don't you know that two is company, three is a crowd?"

"Red Cardinal. How nice!" Carrie smiled. "Homer was just going to take some home movies. I'm sure he will be glad to include you in some of them."

Before Homer could object, Red brushed him aside. "I can offer you something better than home movies," he boasted. "A television company is up at the lake to shoot some outdoor scenes for one of their new productions. I know a lot of people connected with the studio, and I'm sure I could get you a part in the picture," he continued, puffing up with importance.

"Oh, Red," Carrie fluttered breathlessly. "Do you really think you could?"

"With all my connections, it shouldn't be any problem at all," Red bragged. "Come on, Homer. Be a good sport. You wouldn't want Carrie to miss a golden opportunity like this, would you? Besides, you might learn a trick or two yourself, if you keep your eye on the cameraman." And with that, he started off toward the lake with Carrie.

Homer could see how excited Carrie was at the thought of seeing a television film being made and the chance of getting to act in it, so he tagged along after Red and Carrie.

When the trio arrived at the lake, they were astonished to see everybody busily packing up the television equipment. They saw the director step away from a group of men clustered around the camera. "Quiet, everyone!" the director called through a megaphone. "Our camera has broken down, so we will all have to return to the studio."

"Well, Carrie," Red apologized, "I guess I can't get you a part in the film, after all. We might as well go, too."

"Not so fast!" Homer declared, walking right over to the director.

"Mister Director, I noticed that your television camera uses the same size film as this movie camera of mine. You are more than welcome to use it, if it will help you finish shooting the picture," he offered, handing his camera to the director.

"If it will help! Why, it will save the whole day's shooting schedule," the director acknowledged after inspecting Homer's camera. "All right, everybody," he shouted into the megaphone again, "our camera has been replaced. We roll again in ten minutes."

Then the director turned to Homer. "If there is ever anything I can do for you . . . ?" he added gratefully.

"Well," Homer nodded, "as a matter of fact, there is one small favor you could do. Do you think you could find a part for my friend Carrie?" He introduced her to the director.

"Of course we can. We can even do better than that," the director smiled. "How would you like to be our assistant cameraman?"

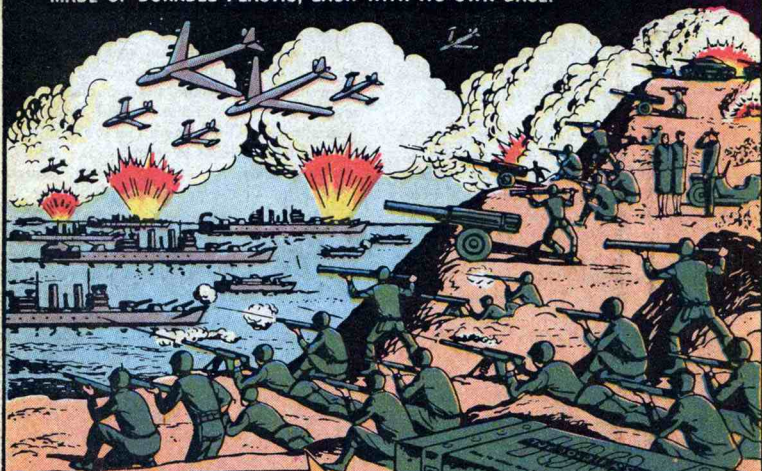

"Boy! Would I!" Homer shouted with joy, looking around happily at Carrie and Red. "Hey, Red. Be a good sport. Don't go away, now," he called out to Red Cardinal, who was sneaking quietly away. "Maybe you can learn a few tricks, if you stick around and keep your eye on the assistant cameraman."

The sport a boy grows up with... shooting a Daisy®

☺☺☺ In training youngsters to play baseball, there is simply no substitute for practice. The same applies to shooting a Daisy B-B gun.

Practice makes you a better shooter. And when you start hitting bullseyes, it gives you a real sense of satisfaction. I know, because I've been hitting bullseyes with Daisy B-B guns for over 35 years.

Now I'm teaching my son Marc to shoot. Right from the start, he's developing coordination and skills that will help him in any sport. At the same time, he's gaining the confidence that will help him grow up to be the man he wants to be. ☺☺☺
