"Yeah," smiled Louie, "and what's even odder is that I have another pair just like it at home!"

"Billy sure is the strongest kid in town," Vernon was telling his pal, Vic.
"I don't know about that," said Vic, "yesterday, me and Bobby and four other guys, we licked Billy!"

Lola went with her mother to eat out in a restaurant.
"Ma," said Lola, "this food is terrible.
"Then I'd better call the waiter," said her mother.
"That won't do any good," said Lola. "He probably won't eat it either!"

Bernie's teacher was looking at him. Then "Bernie," she finally said, "I noticed you came to class pretty late today.
"Gosh, I'm sorry," answered Bernie, "I overslept.
"What?" said the teacher. "Don't tell me you sleep at home, too!"

Clem had been working in the family garden. He was tired when he came into the house, but he had to tell his father his observations.
"Gee, Dad," said Clem, "I don't think we're going to get the usual results from that tree. I'd be amazed if we got four pounds of peaches from it.
"So would I," said his father. "It's a cherry tree!"

HELLO, FRIENDS:
WE'RE ALL ON TV

...everybody LOVES the HARVEY COMICS!
Once upon a time there was a princess who had long golden hair. It was truly beautiful hair — fine and silky, and aglow with the shimmering color of sunbeams. But the princess hated it. She hated every single strand of hair on her royal head.

And the reason she hated it was because everyone else in the kingdom — every man, woman and child — had jet BLACK hair, black as midnight!

"It is really too vexing," the princess cried out in temper one day. "Something simply MUST be done about this awful hair of mine!"

And so she called in the three wise men who counseled her father the king in the wisdom of the world. "You must find a way to turn my hair black!" she commanded them. "Right now!"

"Oh, but that is easy, your highness!" answered the first wise man. "Simply spill a bottle of the darkest ink in the royal library over your hair, and it will be done!"

"No!" objected the second wise man. "For the instant your highness gets caught in a thunderstorm, the ink will wash right out and splatter all over your lovely face! The thing to use is coal dust — rubbed carefully over every strand of your highness' hair!"

"Also wrong!" chimed in the third wise man. "For what will happen when a strong breeze comes along and blows the dust right off her highness' head? No, I fear the only thing for our princess to do is to wear a WIG!"

"Yes, yes!" agreed the other two excitedly. "A wig! The very thing!"

Hurriedly, the royal needle-workers were put to work, and in no time at all the wig was completed. It was perfect, the princess thought. Jet black curls framed her face, hiding the hated golden waves completely — just what she'd always dreamed of!

How proud she was the day she went among her people, wearing the new wig for the first time. "Stand up tall!" she whispered to her little lady-in-waiting. "Everyone will be looking at us!"

But all too soon it was painfully apparent how wrong she was. NOBODY looked at them! NOBODY stopped to stare at their beloved princess. NOBODY even CURTSEYED! "Why — why, they don't even know who I am!" the princess gasped.

"But you are no longer you, your highness!" whispered the little lady-in-waiting shyly. "You have made yourself into what you are not!"

For a long moment the princess was silent. Then suddenly she snatched the wig from her head, and her long, golden hair tumbled to her shoulders. "You are very wise," she told her lady-in-waiting softly, "wiser than all the wise men at court! I shall never forget the lesson you have taught me today! Never again shall I try to be what I was not MEANT to be! And always I shall be proud of what I AM!"
Herman and Katnip
