When you need your bike in your business

IT'S GOOD TO HAVE
GOODYEAR TIRES

This is Wendell Brandt, 16 years old, named "outstanding newsboy" by the Los Angeles Times. Wendell delivers both morning and afternoon papers, maintains a creditable scholastic average at Dorsey High School. His sports: fishing in summer, bicycling all year round. On his bike you'll find a pair of sturdy, long-lasting Goodyear bike tires.

To most boys a bike is fun and exercise and convenience. It's all these to Wendell Brandt. But first of all, and most important, it's business.

That's why, like so many newsboys, he covers his busy route on tough, bruise-resistant Goodyear tires.

They're made with rubber that's specially compounded to take plenty of punishment. And their treads are made to grip and hold—on pavements, dirt roads, even in snow and slush.

Make sure you're getting the most out of your bike. Next time you need tires, ask your dealer to show you the Goodyear line. He'll help pick the type that's best suited to your bike. Goodyear, Cycle Tire Dept., Akron 16, Ohio.

THE AMAZING MOUSE

They just couldn't believe it.

"Oh, no!" shouted Kittie Cat.

"It's impossible!" joined in Carlos Cat.

"But it's true!" said Kittie Cat.

They peered down the edge of the hill, and breathlessly watched a tiny little mouse chase Allie Cat!

"Leave me alone!" screamed Allie. "Oh, please don't chase me anymore! I'll be good to you . . . I'll do anything you'd like!"

"Squeeeaaaakkkkk!" squeaked the mouse, who wasn't giving up the chase.

Finally, the little mouse put on the brakes and came to a halt. "Oh, well," he said in a tiny little voice, "I believe that I have thoroughly made my point. I will stop chasing you for the time being, young man, but if I see you start any trouble with anyone, believe me, you will not easily forget the results!"

Allie Cat had been hiding behind a wall listening to this squeak box vibrate. Then he stuck out his head and said, "I unnerstand yah, Mistah Mouse. You won't have no more trouble from me!"

And hearing that, the little mouse turned himself around and walked away.

As soon as the mouse was out of sight and sound, Kittie yelled down from the hill. "Hey, Allie," she screamed, "aren't you ashamed of what just happened? Hah! Hah!"

"Boy, you sure are a scream!" chimed in Carlos.

"Well, I'm not afraid of cats!" said Allie, and with that he dived at the troublesome pair.

"Gee we're only fooling," smiled Carlos, as he joined Kittie with their backs to the wall.

"Oh, no, you weren't," scowled Allie. "You think I'm yellah, don't you? You're thinkin' I'm a disgrace to all cat-kind . . . a real catastrophe!"

"Oh no we weren't," said both Carlos and Kittie in a pair of weak voices.

"Well you were!" insisted Allie. "And maybe you're right! But maybe you're wrong! And we're going to give you both a chance to prove it. I'm going to have that little mouse chase you. While he's chasing you, you're going to have a choice. You see, I'll be waiting for you at the other end of his chase! So we'll see what you'll do . . . whether you'll face the music with the mouse . . . or whether you'll face the claws of this cat!"

Without a further word, Allie dashed off yelling, "Oh, mouse! Oh, little mouse!"

Carlos looked at Kittie. Kittie looked at Carlos. Then the two of them said it at the same time: "What do you think we ought to do?"

Carlos said, "I don't think we should be afraid of a little mouse."

Kittie said, "Sure nothing to worry about . . . a mere mouse! Hah! Hah!"

Carlos said, "But tell me, Kittie, are you really afraid?"

Kittie said, "As afraid as you are . . . and you're shivering in your skin!"

Carlos said: "You're right!"

Then Kittie and Carlos said together: "Oh, what can we do?"

But there wasn't an answer forthcoming. They'd just have to wait it out. They didn't have any idea of what to expect. They only knew it would spell trouble.

Now there wasn't any more time. For here came the little mouse. Just a little tiny speck moving closer and closer to them.

They turned and saw Allie, waiting for them with open claws! They turned to face the mouse again. He was coming closer.

"I-I wonder wh-what h-he d-does?" stuttered Kittie.

"W-we'll s-soon s-s-see," said Carlos.

And then they saw . . . then they knew! And as fast as they could, they whipped around, and dashed right in the direction of Allie. Allie wasn't waiting for trouble either. He joined them in their run. Then the three of them turned around to look at the rushing mouse, and to plead: "Oh, please mouse with the limburger cheese smell, oh please leave us alone!"

SILENCE IS GOLDEN

It was going to be a perfect Sunday for Carter Snodgrass. He had planned everything, and his wife, Ellen, and his son, Silas, had promised to cooperate.

"Remember," Carter told them as he prepared to retreat to his bedroom, "I want silence today. Complete silence."

"Of course, Carter," Ellen told him, "it'll be just as you wish it."

"Sure, Daddy," said Silas, "don't worry about us."

"OK then," smiled Carter, "I'm going to my bedroom now to enjoy peace and complete silence."

Carter picked up the Sunday papers, his favorite magazine and some potato chips to crunch on and marched up to his bedroom.

He fell across his bed and started to flip through the papers.

"This sure is the life," he told himself. "The papers and complete silence. I'm sure lucky to have a wife and kid who'll cooperate and give me exactly what I want."

He was looking at the funnies when he suddenly looked up from the paper and glanced at his watch.

"Uh, uh," he said. "It's three o'clock! That's the time Ellen starts using the sewing machine. Oh, that hum will be awful!"

But even at three-fifteen, the machine hadn't been started. "What a wife I have," Carter smiled, "she doesn't even do her sewing when she knows I want quiet!"

But then another worried look came across Carter's face. At three-thirty, Silas would start his piano lessons.

"Oh, this'll just kill my day!" he thought. So Carter waited with clenched fists, his ears preparing to fight off the sounds of the pathetic piano. But Carter got a wonderful surprise. Silas had skipped his piano playing to give his father a full day of silence.

Carter returned to his reading again and to the happiness of the silence. But then he realized that it was time for Ellen's favorite radio program, then her telephone call from Mrs. Wilson, then for Silas' shower. But his ears never heard the sounds of any of them. Yes, everyone was helping him gain a day of silence!

But through all of this, Carter Snodgrass had realized one terrible thing. While he waited and waited for the sounds to interrupt his silence, he had not been able to read his paper, his magazine or to munch on his potato chips!

"What's the use," he said to himself. "The reason I keep listening for their sounds is that I WANT to hear them! I may as well go downstairs and join them — and the dickens with that restful silence!"

So Carter ran down the steps, calling, "Ellen, Silas! Here I am! I don't want to..."

Carter stopped because he got no answer. No one was there. There was nothing but a note that said: "Carter. We went for a drive so you can have your quiet. We'll see you later!"

So Carter sat unhappily amidst the quiet... still waiting for a sound... the sound of the door-bell that would bring his family home!
