LAZY ANDY

One day as Andy the ant, who was never an exceptional worker, was carrying a bread crumb back to the ant hill, he looked around at all the ants scurrying about him and asked himself a question. Why, he wondered, did ants always scurry so?

With that question he stopped dead in his tracks. His friend Albert, who was struggling with quite a large crumb directly in back of him, never expected Andy to stop and plowed right into him.

"Hey!" Albert yelled, "Why did you stop?"

"That, my friend," said Andy, who considered himself quite a debater, "Is my question posed in the converse."

"Hah?" said Albert. "Speak plainly, for goodness sake. Everybody says you're too smart for your own good!"

"My question," said Andy grandly, "Is why do ants always scurry so?"

"What a dumb question!" Albert snorted. "Because we do, that's why!"

Now to Andy this was no answer at all. So he went elsewhere with his question.

Many scoffed at him and his question, but no one was able to give him a satisfactory answer. Andy felt he had to speak out. He climbed to the top of the ant hill and raised his voice in his best oratorical manner.

"Friends," he called out. "Cease your aimless scurrying and listen to me. You are all victims of ignorance! You scurry, scurry, scurry, and none of you know why!"

The ants kept right on scurrying. One or two of his old friends spoke to him as they hurried by with their burdens, telling him to stop his nonsense and get back to work.

"Why?" asked Andy grandly. "I refuse to do anything without knowing why!"

Then suddenly from the other side of the ant hill came a little ant at terrific speed, shouting, "Run! Everybody run!"

"Why?" Andy shouted. "Ask him why!"

But everybody was already running. In disgust, Andy stood atop the ant hill and shouted after them: "Fools! Why do you run? You —"

The wind suddenly went out of him as an incredibly long, sticky tongue suddenly lifted him off his feet! Whipping his head around, Andy saw himself approaching the tremendous mouth of an ugly ant-eater! Frantically he scrambled with all his legs, and miraculously, because only a small part of him was stuck to the flypaper tongue, he suddenly broke free!

"This way!" called Albert from the safety of the grass, and without question, Andy scurried as he had never scurried before, in the direction of his voice.

And he is scurrying to this day.

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

THE PERFECT GENTLEMAN

Little Warren the woodpecker pulled at his mother's wing and pointed to a clearing below them. "Look, mother," he said, "Look at the bird feeder down there! May I fly down and try a piece of that lovely looking suet?"

"Go down and ask the other birds politely if you may join them," Warren's mother said. "You don't want to intrude where you're not welcome!"

The bird feeder was well stocked with fine-looking sunflower seeds and bread crumbs and chunks of suet, and it was aswarm with droves of hungry birds. There was more than enough food, but the minute Warren appeared, he was greeted with hoots and cries of "No room!" and "Go away!" Feeling hurt he flew up to join his mother in a treetop.

"They're mean, Mama," Warren complained. "May I go down and peck them in the head?"

"WARREN!" his mother exclaimed, "Haven't I raised you to always be a gentleman? If they're rude, it doesn't follow that you should be, too. We'll just wait here till they're through eating, and then we'll go down and have some suet."

Side by side they sat up in the tree and waited for the other birds to leave. But they stayed on and on till dusk began to fall. Warren patiently waited, his eyes glued on the scene, and then suddenly he spotted a shadowy form slinking through the grass toward the feeder.

"Look out!" shrieked Warren, and plummeted downward just as the great gray cat leaped! Thwack!! went Warren's incredibly hard bill right atop the cat's skull! THWACK, THWACK! In terror the cat fled the scene.

"Oh, that was wonderful!" sang out a pretty little nuthatch. "Won't you join us in something to eat?"

"Well," said Warren, stealing a glance at his beaming mother, "I wouldn't mind a little of that delicious looking suet!"

But suddenly a huge, screaming blue jay landed atop the feeder, beating his enormous wings in Warren's face. "Beat it!" he screamed.

"But I was invited!" exclaimed Warren.

"Not by me! Not by me!" screamed the jay.

"Shoo, shoo, shoo!" the jay went on. "Shoo, shoo, ow, OWW OWWWW!!!"

Warren looked up and saw his mother circling over the bully jay, bringing her bill down again and again on the pointy blue head . . . THWACK, THWACK, THWACK!!

The blue jay quickly faded into the darkening blue of the sky, and Warren's mother joined him at the suet, while all the little birds twittered happily.

"Remember, Warren," his mother said, "That was an exception . . . I still expect you to always be a perfect gentleman!"

"Mmmm, of course," said Warren, plunging his face deep into the suet.
