EXPLORER XIX

This balloon-like satellite is one of many designed to measure the thickness of air above the earth. It went up about 1,490 miles and orbited around the earth. Explorer XIX sent back information by radio signal which helped scientists understand what "thin" air could do to a spacecraft at different heights. Energy for this radio came from a rechargeable storage battery inside the satellite and a row of solar or sun-powered cells on the outside.

CHEERIOS KID

This is the Cheerios Kid, whose energy comes from Cheerios! Like satellites, and like you, he needs go-power every day. A breakfast with Cheerios and milk is packed with muscle-building protein and energy for go-power. Get yourself Go. Get Cheerios!

The GREAT LESSON

Mary Jane Barlowe was the most talented girl in the ballet class. She was also the wealthiest. And together, these two characteristics unfortunately made her the most snob-bish girl in the class.

For instance, when Clarissa Trent, who was a very nice child but a very ungraceful dancer, would make a misstep or lose the rhythm, Mary Jane was likely to say loudly, "Some people ought to take up football instead of ballet dancing! It suits their big feet better!" And poor Clarissa would blush to the roots of her hair.

Then there were other times . . . such as those occasions when the dancing school put on its all-student shows . . . when some of the girls couldn't afford special costumes or special ballet slippers. At those times, Mary Jane was wont to exclaim, "The ballet is not for peasants! Anyone who can't dress properly shouldn't be allowed to dance in the show!"

Mary Jane herself always had the leading role in these shows, of course, because she was the best dancer in the whole school. And she always had the most beautiful costumes, because her parents could afford to buy them. "It really gets rather monotonous," she'd say in a bored, superior tone of voice, "having the lead all the time! It might be exciting to have a little competition once in a while!"

Little did she dream that the day would come when she would have competition . . . of a sort she could never have foretold. The doctors called it a virus . . . and it kept Mary Jane out of dancing school for three whole weeks. She was a pretty sick little girl during those weeks, and by the time she was better, her ballet class had gotten way ahead of her. The virus had competed against her own natural talent . . . and the talent had lost. It was time for the big annual Christmas show at school, and Mary Jane had missed so many lessons that she couldn't even try out for the chorus, much less for the leading role.

She was heartsick about it, too. For, despite her selfish snobbery, Mary Jane truly loved the ballet, and she was afraid she'd never catch up. And then one day, Clarissa came to see her. "I—I'm not a very good dancer," Clarissa said hesitantly, "but if you'd like me to, I could try to show you what we learned when you were absent. Then maybe you could still get the lead . . ."

"You'd do that for me?" interrupted Mary Jane incredulously. "After all the mean things I've said to you? Oh, Clarissa . . ."

One by one they came after that . . . girls whom Mary Jane had ridiculed, criticized, humiliated. They came to teach her, to help her, to lend her from their own slender stores any costumes or slippers she might need. "I don't deserve it!" Mary Jane wept over and over! "I've been so wrong, so blind!"

It was a great lesson, and Mary Jane learned it well. And on the night of the Christmas show, she did dance in the chorus after all, truly one of the girls . . . in heart and spirit . . . for the first time!

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

BIG DATE

Minnie the Moth was wildly excited. She had a date . . . a real, honest-to-goodness date . . . with Oscar the Fly! They were going dining and dancing at one of the smartest night-clubs in town! Small wonder then that Minnie buzzed around so fast and furiously, getting ready for the big night ahead!

Till at long last, she was all dressed and ready to go. "How do I look, Mom?" she asked her mother anxiously.

"Perfectly lovely, dear," Mama Moth assured her fondly. "I'm sure Oscar will be simply overwhelmed! What time is he calling for you anyway?"

"I'm meeting him at the lamppost," trilled Minnie, "and I'm ten minutes late already, so I'd better get going! 'Bye, Mom!" She dropped a quick kiss on her mother's cheek, and fluttered off.

Oscar the Fly was waiting at the lamppost when Minnie arrived. He was standing on the light bulb, his right foot tapping up and down with impatience. But as soon as he caught sight of the little moth, his impatience vanished and his face broke into a sunny smile. "Gosh, Minnie!" he breathed. "You look absolutely gorgeous!"

"Thank you, Oscar," she blushed shyly. "You look awfully handsome yourself!"

Oscar glowed. He preened. His vest buttons glittered in the lamplight as his chest swelled with pride. "Shall we go?" he asked grandly, offering Minnie his arm like the true gentleman he was. And off they flew.

Twenty minutes later they were inside the famous Crane Club, and Minnie's eyes were wide and wondering as she gazed upon the gleaming gold and crystal fixtures that surrounded her. "Oh, Oscar!" she gasped. "It's like fairy-land-come-true! I've never seen any place so beautiful!"

"Yes, it's a nice, little club," Oscar told her casually (although secretly, his heart was madly beating too). "Shall we dance, Minnie?"

He held out his arms, and Minnie floated into them. Below them, as they waltzed through the air, the gentle strains of the orchestra filled the room. And so the evening really began. They danced for hours. And in between dances, they swooped down for a bite of caviar, a nibble of frogs' legs, a sip of champagne . . . all from creamy white-and-gilt plates and golden goblets. The people whose food and drink they shared never even noticed them. It was like a private paradise . . . designed for two.

But all good things must come to an end, and at last it was time to go. "It was the most wonderful night of my life!" whispered Minnie as they reached her front door.

"Mine too," agreed Oscar. And suddenly he leaned down and planted a kiss right on Minnie's lips! "That was to show you how much I like you!" he quavered . . . and fled.

Wonderingly, Minnie touched her lips, tracing the outline of Oscar's kiss. And then she slipped inside . . . to sleep . . . to dream . . . of golden music, of candlelight and wine . . . and of Oscar the Fly . . .
