IN THE SCOUNDRELS UNMASKED

CASPER'S MYTHS: AENEAS AND THE GIANT

"Hello, Wendy," shouted Casper as he flew in from the Enchanted Forest. "I've got a nice surprise for you today."

"Goody! I love surprises!" exclaimed Wendy. "But where is it? I don't see anything."

"Oh, it's nothing you can see," laughed Casper, sitting down on the doorstep beside her. "I just came over with a new story about Aeneas."

"Aeneas? Oh, yes, now I remember him!" said Wendy, wrinkling her brow. "Wasn't he the Trojan hero who escaped with his family after the fall of Troy?"

"Yes, and he set out to find a new home for them," Casper reminded her. "After a lot of exciting adventures he landed in Italy. He and his followers defeated the people there in a big battle. Then Aeneas married the daughter of the king and founded the Roman race."

"After so many exciting adventures I'll bet Aeneas was glad to settle down and live in peace!" said Wendy.

"Oh, Aeneas had a lot more adventures after that!" Casper told her. "For instance, there was the time Aeneas and his men were trapped in the mountains by a giant."

"Gracious! That sounds exciting!" Wendy exclaimed. "Tell me about it."

"Well," began Casper, "one day Aeneas took some of his soldiers to explore the mountains near their home. Of course, they went armed with their swords and shields because there was no telling what they might run into."

"It's always a good idea to be prepared for trouble," said Wendy thoughtfully.

"That's right, Wendy," agreed Casper. "So Aeneas marched along through the mountains, always on the lookout for danger. But nothing happened until they found themselves walking along through a deep and narrow canyon."

"Was this when they ran onto the giant?" inquired Wendy excitedly.

Not exactly," Casper told her. "They didn't see anything at first—they just heard a terrible rumbling behind them, like the sound of thunder. But the sky was clear, and Aeneas knew it couldn't be a storm coming up. So he climbed the rocky side of the canyon to see what was going on."

"And that's when he discovered the giant!" Wendy exclaimed.

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

"Yes, it was a fierce giant armed with an enormous club," Casper continued. "And he was tramping along the winding canyon right behind them. Aeneas knew that even his brave soldiers would be no match for such a monster!"

"Why didn't they go ahead and escape through the other end of the canyon?" Wendy wanted to know.

"They couldn't," said Casper. "Rounding a bend, Aeneas saw that they were in a trap—the canyon ended at the foot of a steep cliff."

"Goodness, what a spot to be in!" shuddered Wendy.

"Yes, it was," Casper agreed. "But Aeneas was determined to save his men. He was about ready to turn around and try to fight his way out when he got an idea."

"When you're in a tight spot, it always pays to use your head," murmured Wendy thoughtfully.

"That's what Aeneas did," Casper replied. "He had noticed a lot of loose rocks along the top of the canyon. So Aeneas called to his soldiers to take their swords and pound on their shields as loud as they could."

"Gracious, that must have made an awful racket," said Wendy.

"Yes, and the echoes were so loud they started an avalanche of the rocks on top of the canyon. The giant was just about to round the bend where Aeneas was waiting with his men when he heard the racket and saw the avalanche roaring down the mountain toward him."

"I guess that was the end of that old giant, wasn't it?" asked Wendy.

"Well, yes, in a way," said Casper. "The giant was so frightened of the avalanche that he dropped his club and ran off down the canyon and was never seen again."

"But how did Aeneas escape being hurt by the falling rocks?" Wendy inquired.

"Oh, Aeneas got his men into the shelter of a little cavern in the canyon when the avalanche began. When it was over, they crawled safely out, climbed over the rocks, and got home safe and sound."

"I guess then that Aeneas lived happily ever after," exclaimed Wendy.

"Yes, indeed," concluded Casper. "He had many other exciting adventures, but he was so brave and clever he always triumphed in the end."
