When you need your bike in your business

IT'S GOOD TO HAVE
GOODYEAR TIRES

This is Wendell Brandt, 16 years old, named "outstanding newsboy" by the Los Angeles Times. Wendell delivers both morning and afternoon papers, maintains a creditable scholastic average at Dorsey High School. His sports: fishing in summer, bicycling all year round. On his bike you'll find a pair of sturdy, long-lasting Goodyear bike tires.

To most boys a bike is fun and exercise and convenience. It's all these to Wendell Brandt. But first of all, and most important, it's business.

That's why, like so many newsboys, he covers his busy route on tough, bruise-resistant Goodyear tires.

They're made with rubber that's specially compounded to take plenty of punishment. And their treads are made to grip and hold—on pavements, dirt roads, even in snow and slush.

Make sure you're getting the most out of your bike. Next time you need tires, ask your dealer to show you the Goodyear line. He'll help pick the type that's best suited to your bike. Goodyear, Cycle Tire Dept., Akron 16, Ohio.

ANY MESSAGE ?

"Now, don't forget, Betty Lou," Mrs. Wilson was saying to her little daughter. "If anyone calls while I'm out shopping, I want you to get the full message from them."

"Yes, Mom," said Betty Lou, who was determined to finally do something the right way.

"You tell whoever calls that I'm at the grocery store," said Mrs. Wilson. "You tell them that I'll be back at 4 o'clock."

"And you ask them," Mrs. Wilson went on, "what exactly they want, what they might want me to do, or where I'm supposed to meet them. Can you remember that?"

"Oh, yes, Mom," smiled Betty Lou. She wasn't going to forget a thing this time.

Her mother kissed her good-bye and Betty Lou sat herself right next to the phone as soon as Mrs. Wilson had left the house.

"I really hope someone calls," Betty Lou said to herself. "I'm going to make Mom real proud of me."

And her wish came true with a loud ring of the phone.

"Hello," said Betty Lou as she picked up the receiver.

"Hello. Betty Lou?" said the voice at the other end.

"Yes. And my mother went to the grocery store and will be back at 4 o'clock."

"Oh," chuckled the caller. "I see your mother has really prepared you for telephone calls."

"She certainly has," answered Betty Lou. "What exactly do you want? Is there something you want my mother to do for you? Do you want her to meet you somewhere?"

Betty Lou felt proud of herself. She had asked everything she was supposed to.

"You just tell your mother that I'd like you people to come to supper tomorrow night. And to be over at about six o'clock."

"Fine," said Betty Lou, "and thank you very much." She hung up with a smile. She had gotten the message perfectly.

As soon as Mrs. Wilson came home, she asked Betty Lou: "Did I receive any phone calls?"

Betty Lou nodded, and beamed proudly. "Yes, Mom," she said. "And I took the message down perfectly. We have been invited for dinner tomorrow night and we're to be there at six o'clock."

"Oh, how nice!" said Mrs. Wilson. "And who invited us?"

Betty Lou's face dropped. Her feelings sagged. And then tears began to fall. "In trying to remember all I was supposed to ask," she cried, "I forgot to ask her name!"

BASEBALL

"Hi, Aussie!" grinned the tall young soldier. "How goes it?"

"Hi, yourself, Yank!" responded Danny. "It goes pretty darn okay!" He was very proud of the way he'd picked up American-talk from the G. I.'s stationed in his Australian home-town. Everything American was new and exciting to Danny, who'd been born and brought up in Australia.

"Want a seat?" the tall young soldier asked him now. "Plenty of room on this bench, and you've got a ringside seat for the ball game."

"Don't mind if I do," Danny answered nonchalantly, sliding onto the seat. Actually, he was delighted with the G. I.'s invitation, but he didn't think it would be very manly to show it. He'd come down to the park especially to see this game of baseball that he'd heard so much about, and so far he hadn't understood a thing that was going on out on the field.

"My name's Tex," the G. I. volunteered, holding out his hand. "My real name's Phil Strong, but I'm from Texas, U. S. A., so the boys call me Tex."

"I'm Danny Willows," Danny told him, shaking hands politely. "Glad to know you, Tex."

They both turned their attention back to the field. Danny counted the men who were playing. There were nine of them —all G. I.'s—and another one standing inside the little box, holding a heavy-looking stick on his shoulder. Behind him squatted a man in the most peculiar armor plate vest and mask Danny had ever seen. Suddenly one of the men—the one standing on that little hill—threw the ball at the man with the stick. "CRACK-K!!" The stick hit the ball a resounding whack! The ball went flying, the man who'd hit it broke into a run, and all the G. I.'s in the audience yelled lustily, cheering with all their might and main. It sounded to Danny as though they were saying something that sounded like, "Home run! It's a homer!" But he couldn't be sure. His new-found friend, Tex, was cheering too. Only he was very clearly shouting, "Yip-pee! Atta boy! Come on home!" So, anyway, Danny gathered that going home was a very important part of this game of baseball.

"Not very much like cricket, is it?" he said to Tex shyly when the excitement had died down.

"Cricket!" repeated the soldier in astonishment, "I reckon not! Look here, Aussie—didn't you ever see a baseball game before?" Danny shook his head. "Well now," drawled Tex, "you and I are gonna have a long talk, boy!"

And so the Texan talked, and the Australian boy listened—while the whole magic world of hits and runs and double plays and homers unrolled before his eyes. And when the G. I. was through talking, a boyish, Aussie-accented voice was heard yelling from the stands—just like a kid from Brooklyn—"Aw, kill the ump!"
