FUNDAY FUNNIES!

When you need your bike in your business

IT'S GOOD TO HAVE GOODYEAR TIRES

This is Wendell Brandt, 16 years old, named "outstanding newsboy" by the Los Angeles Times. Wendell delivers both morning and afternoon papers, maintains a creditable scholastic average at Dorsey High School. His sports: fishing in summer, bicycling all year round. On his bike you'll find a pair of sturdy, long-lasting Goodyear bike tires.

To most boys a bike is fun and exercise and convenience. It's all these to Wendell Brandt. But first of all, and most important, it's business.

That's why, like so many newsboys, he covers his busy route on tough, bruise-resistant Goodyear tires.

They're made with rubber that's specially compounded to take plenty of punishment. And their treads are made to grip and hold — on pavements, dirt roads, even in snow and slush.

Make sure you're getting the most out of your bike. Next time you need tires, ask your dealer to show you the Goodyear line. He'll help pick the type that's best suited to your bike. Goodyear, Cycle Tire Dept., Akron 16, Ohio.

THE CROW AND THE PELICAN

Petey Pelican blinked his round, innocent eyes.

"Well?" said Charlie Crow. "Didn't you hear me? I offered to teach you a trade!"

"I appreciate it, Charlie, really I do," said Petey, "But I sort of have a trade, almost . . . I'm going to be a fisherman like my daddy!"

"FISH!" snorted the crow. "Anybody can fish! Don't be a fool, Petey!"

Petey Pelican's eyes lit up with ambition. "All right!" he said. "Teach me!"

Charlie Crow grinned with delight. "Just follow me," he said, and flew off. Petey followed. Charlie flew high over the woods and began to circle a little clearing next to a big, red-roofed house, and Petey circled right behind him. Charlie landed high in a big tree and motioned Petey to sit beside him. He pointed down toward the clearing.

"Do you see that bird feeder down there?" Charlie asked. Petey nodded. "Well, just sit quietly now till twilight," Charlie said.

The two birds sat and watched as hundreds of other birds sailed in toward the feeder and paused to snatch a quick bite before sailing off again. Eat as they could, the birds swooping in couldn't carry off enough seeds in their little bellies to empty the supply. Charlie stared at the reserve of sunflower seeds, oats, barley and other wonderful tidbits and his eyes gleamed.

When the sun was low on the horizon, the other birds went home to their nests. Charlie motioned Petey to follow and swooped down on the feeder.

"You keep your big bill open right here," said Charlie, "And I'll scoop all these seeds into it! Then we'll fly back to my nest with the loot!"

Petey followed instructions blindly, and soon the contents of the bird feeder were transferred to his ample bill. Then he followed Charlie as the crow headed triumphantly toward his own nest.

"Dump the seeds here!" crowed Charlie. "We have enough seeds to last us a week!"

Just then a blue jay that had followed them from the feeder swooped low, screaming, "Thief! Thief!"

Petey stopped, suddenly shocked. "Is that the trade you've taught me?" he mumbled from his tightly closed bill, "To be a THIEF?"

"Don't listen to that jealous jay!" soothed Charlie. "I've taught you to be an opportunist! To see an opportunity and seize it!"

Petey thought hard for a minute. Then he suddenly gulped and all the seeds were gone!

"What are you doing?" screamed Charlie.

"Seizing my opportunity!" said Petey. "And now that I've mastered this trade I think I'll go back to fishing!"

JEALOUS SUBWAY TRAIN

"Why, oh why was I born to be a subway train," wailed Oscarito aloud. The tears in his eyes spilled over as he gazed longingly at the faded picture of the crack 20th Century Limited, the fastest, most beautiful, most luxurious railway train on wheels. "Why couldn't I have been born into a family like that?" he sobbed—for the hundredth time. "Why did I have to be born a dirty, dingy old subway train?"

"Are you ashamed of your family, young man?" boomed a deep bass voice in Oscar's ear. The little subway train jumped so hard that his whistle tooted all by itself! Because the deep bass voice belonged to Old Oscar, the oldest subway train in the yard, and little Oscarito's great-great grandfather, for whom, as a matter of fact, the little subway train was named.

"Why, I—I—that is—no, Great Grandpa!" stuttered Oscarito fearfully. "I—of course I'm not ashamed of our family—that is—I—I!" He stopped helplessly, caught in the web of his own stammering falsehood. Then, "Yes, I am!" he burst out suddenly. "Why couldn't we have been railway trains? Why couldn't we live in those beautiful, modern yards? And travel over the country? And see the sights? And carry only glamorous, famous people? Why—?" This time he stopped because he was out of breath.

"Are you quite finished, young man?" thundered Old Oscar. "Because if you are, you ought to have your ears boxed! Only I'm not going to do that! You need a better lesson than that—a much better lesson—and I'm going to give it to you! Come with me!"

Oscarito knew better than to argue. When Great Grandpa Oscar told you to come along, you went! So meekly, Oscarito puffed along besides Old Oscar, grateful that at least he hadn't had his ears boxed for his rudeness. Very soon he realized they were headed for a mid-town station, right in the heart of the city. Old Oscar guided him onto an empty track, and then screeched to a halt. "Look!" commanded the old train. "And listen! And keep your mouth shut!"

So Oscarito looked—and his eyes grew bigger and bigger. He listened—and his ears burned hotter and hotter. Because what he saw and heard was people—people jammed in the great rush hour of big city traffic—people who would be left utterly stranded without the aid and convenience of the wonderful metropolitan subway system. He had never taken the time to stop—and look—and listen before, and now he was ashamed. "I—I guess the most important thing of all is to be needed," he whispered humbly.

Old Oscar beamed. "You've learned your lesson quickly, my boy," he rumbled gently. And even as he spoke, Oscarito ripped the picture of the crack 20th Century Limited to shreds, and the pieces fluttered lightly—almost gaily—down onto the track.
