Two thousand miles in two years —on the same two Goodyear tires

This is Joey McAble. Seems as though he's spent a major part of his 14 years on bicycles. In addition to being a regular news carrier for the Los Angeles Times, Joey uses his bike for school and side trips, too.

In the last two years he's covered more than two thousand miles—on the same dependable set of Goodyear tires.

Goodyear bike tires pack extra resistance to bumps and bruises. Their extra-tough treads grip and hold, for steadier rolling on curves, and quick straight-line stops. Long wear? Joey's record is the best answer to that.

Even if you're not a newsboy, you'll be better off with tires like these. However you use your bike—for work or fun—you'll get more out of it when you ride Goodyears. Let your dealer pick the Goodyear tire best suited to your bike. Goodyear, Cycle Tire Dept., Akron 16, Ohio.

*A typical Goodyear Long-Wearing Performer The Studded Tread
Sharp deep-cut studs give you extra traction where you need it most—on rough and rocky roads or cross-country.*

MOTHER EARTH

THE STORY OF THE SKY:

"Gee, lookit that jet plane go," exclaimed Jed Jenson, pointing to a vapor trail streaking across the sky. "I wonder how the earth looks from where he is!"

"Probably a lot like the other planets," said his friend, Alton White, putting down his book. "Just a big ball whirling in space with ridges and stuff."

"What do you mean, like other planets?" inquired Jed. "I thought the earth was, well—different!"

"It's different in a lot of ways," Alton told him. "But it's a planet just the same. It's a planet 93 million miles from the sun, and while it's larger than Mercury and Mars, it's much smaller than many others."

"Oh, all right, Professor Know-It-Alton," sniffed Jed. "You're so smart, tell me how our planet is different from the others, besides having us on it."

"Gladly," replied Alton, always glad to share his knowledge. "For one thing the Earth has magnetism—"

"Oh, sure, I know," interrupted the other. "That's why my compass needle points to the North Magnetic Pole."

"Yes, although we don't know just why," went on Alton. "Scientists think it has something to do with the Earth's interior; maybe it's just a big mass of iron."

"Golly, why don't they dig it up and make a fortune," exclaimed Jed, who always had an eye for business.

"Nobody knows much about the inside of the Earth yet," was the reply. "The deepest oil well only goes down 21,000 feet; we aren't even sure how hot it is inside the Earth."

"Well, OK, what else is different about our good old planet?" Jed asked impatiently.

"Most important for us is the atmosphere around the Earth," continued Alton. "It contains a lot of oxygen so it's possible for us to live and breathe."

"You mean other planets don't get a deal like that?" said Jed.

"Well, other planets have atmosphere," replied Alton "but it doesn't support life like ours. Another thing—only the Earth has water, like lakes and oceans."

"Yipes," exclaimed Jed. "Imagine living where you couldn't go swimming."

"Yes, we're lucky to have a planet like ours," Alton reminded him.

"You bet," said Jed, slapping his comrade on the back. "Thanks for all the information, pal. Next time I feel like visiting the other planets, I'll remember—there's no place like home."

LITTLE AUDREY

"Hey, who's the new kid?" asked Dusty Rhodes as a tall, serious-looking lad approached the group of kids in the Soda Shoppe.

"He just started school today," volunteered Marsha Hunt.

"Hey, fella, c'mon over and join the gang and tell us all about yourself," called out Freddy Updike. "We'd like to know how you like our town."

"Gee, thanks," said the stranger. "I'm Travis Porter. I haven't been here long enough to get to know this place. You see, I'm from San Francisco—"

"Gee, tell us about it," broke in Marsha. "I've never even been out of our state."

"Well," went on Travis, "first of all, it's a real old city. The Spaniards settled there way back in the 18th Century. In 1776 they founded a mission and named it for St. Francis (or San Francisco) of Assisi. That's how the city got its name."

"OK, it's real old and all that stuff," chimed in Dusty. "But what's it got that makes it so great?"

"For one thing," replied Travis, "San Francisco is up-to-date. It doesn't have a lot of old run-down buildings. After the big fire and earthquake in 1906 everything was rebuilt so now it's more beautiful than ever."

"Isn't that where the Golden Gate Bridge is?" inquired Freddy.

"Yes, and also the San Francisco Oakland Bay Bridge—the longest bridge in the world," Travis told him.

"Gee, it sure sounds like a wonderful place!" exclaimed Marsha.

"It sure is," continued Travis. "And the hills are so high they have to use cable-cars to get around some parts of the city. And, of course, San Francisco is one of the great seaports of the world, and it has three airports as well."

"Golly, I bet you see people from all over the world, don't you, Travis?" cried Freddy enviously.

"You bet!" he replied. "Why, you ought to see Chinatown—it's the largest settlement of its kind outside the Orient. And boy, that Fisherman's Wharf is sure a sight—always something going on, with all those fishing boats and everything."

"Well, we've got a nice town here," said Dusty as he started to leave. "Meet me here tomorrow and I'll show you around. I hope I know as much about our city as you do about San Francisco."
