Take a tip from a Go-Getter: You'll go better on tires like these

This is 13-year-old Bruce McMillan of the Los Angeles Examiner. At five every morning, he delivers papers as he does, seven days a week, he couldn't afford anything else.

When a fellow's in business for himself—like newsboy Bruce McMillan—he needs the best bike tires money can buy. Delivering papers as he does, seven days a week, he couldn't afford anything else.

So Bruce rides his busy six-mile route on tough, dependable Goodyear tires that last for years and years.

Bruce knows that Goodyears are made with rubber that's especially compounded to take hard bumps and bruises. Their treads are designed to grip and hold—on pavements, dirt roads, even in winter's snow and slush.

Whether you use your bike to earn money, or just to have fun and go places, you'll find the going much better on Goodyear tires. Ask your dealer to show you the Goodyear line. He'll help you pick the size and type that best fits your bike. Goodyear, Cycle Tire Dept., Akron 16, Ohio.

COWGIRL

"But I don't want to go!" sobbed Carrie. "I like it right here! Why do we have to leave, Mother? Why?"

"Oh, Carrie!" sighed Mrs. Wilson. "I've already explained it to you half a dozen times! Your grandpa is getting old... he needs Daddy to help him run the ranch."

Carrie knew better than to argue with Mother when she spoke like that. So she bit her lip and tried hard to hold back the bitter tears that burned her eyes.

"I'll run away from home—that's what I'll do!" she told herself miserably. "Then after they're gone, I'll come back here to Clover City!"

But of course she didn't do anything of the sort, and two weeks later she found herself on the big silver plane that was winging its way to Texas! Naturally, she was thrilled right down to her toes! She'd never been in an airplane before, and she kept her nose glued to the window all the way. And there was so much to see, and so many questions to ask, that she never even thought of Clover City once!

Then, all too soon, the wonderful flight was over. The plane landed without even a bump, and they were in Texas! And there was Grandpa, hurrying to meet them. He swept Carrie up in his strong arms before she could speak, and gave her a great big bear-hug that nearly squeezed the breath right out of her!

Then Mother and Daddy and Grandpa all started to chatter at once. Still talking, they bundled themselves, bag and baggage, into Grandpa's rattling old car and headed for the ranch. Carrie dozed most of the way. The long trip had tired her out, and the grown-ups' talk didn't hold much interest for her anyway.

Suddenly she realized someone was shaking her. "Wake up, darling!" smiled Mother. "We're here!"

Sleepily, Carrie stumbled out of the car—and stopped still right where she stood! Was this Grandpa's ranch? Why, it was beautiful! Just like in the movies! Ahead of her, as far as her eye could see, stretched rolling green fields of grass. In the distance, she could see the cattle grazing, their figures silhouetted by the setting sun. And to one side, near the corral, two sunburned cowboys, complete with boots and spurs, were exercising two of the handsomest ponies Carrie had ever seen. It was like a picture-book come true!

"Hi!" called one of the cowboys. "Which one do you like, Miss Carrie?"

"I was saving that for a surprise, honey!" Grandpa smiled down at her. "All good cowgirls have to have their own horses! So one of those ponies is yours! I want you to be happy here..."

Carrie threw her arms around him. "I'm going to be happy here, Grandpa!" she cried joyfully. "Happier than I've ever been in my whole life!"

CHECKER

It was a cold, crisp winter day, the first time Jamie Jackson ever saw Checker. The pup was sitting in a driveway, huddled against the side of a building trying to keep warm, when Jamie spotted him.

"Well," said Jamie, "what's this?" And he walked over to where the pup was sitting and held out his hand. Checker sniffed tentatively a few times, and satisfied with what he found, stuck out a small, pink tongue and licked Jamie's fingers.

That evening, Jamie's family held a discussion after dinner. Checker, full and contented after a good meal, settled himself in the center of the living-room rug, and oblivious to everything around him, quietly snored his way into dreamland.

After a lot of talk, Jamie's father looked over to where the sleeping pup lay and smiled.

"All right, then, Jamie, it's settled. We'll put an ad in the paper all this week, and if nobody claims him, you can keep the dog." Then he paused a moment. "Looks like a pretty smart little animal to me," he said, as he took in Checker's peaceful face, skinny white body dotted with black spots, and long, circular tail.

"They say that mutts are generally smarter than thoroughbreds, and this one sure is no blue ribbon winner," he laughed.

The week went by—and nobody claimed Checker. So Jamie had a dog!

Wherever Jamie went, there followed Checker. They were constant companions in the following weeks. Finally, Jamie decided that the time had come to teach Checker a few tricks.

He took him over in a corner and tried to make him stand on his back legs. He gave him candy after candy in an effort to make him roll over! He pushed and prodded poor Checker's paws in order to show the dog how to shake hands! But all to no avail... Checker just would not, or could not, learn.

Pretty soon it got to be a standing joke in the neighborhood. All the kids knew that Jamie was trying to teach his dog tricks.

"What's the matter, Jamie?" they'd ask him when they saw him. "You having trouble with that dumb mutt of yours?" And Checker, instead of getting sore, would only run up to the one who had spoken of him so unkindly and lick his hand.

Things got so bad that Jamie was almost afraid to be seen in public with Checker. He knew just what he'd be in for. Jibes and taunts of all kinds... and what hurt was... they were true!

Or anyway, so it seemed, because Checker just didn't learn a single trick.

Then one Sunday, the final indignity was heaped upon Jamie's head. His father had pulled the car around front to take them all for a ride, when Checker, instead of getting into their car, ran for another some twenty feet away, and wouldn't come back when Jamie called. To make matters worse, several of Jamie's friends were watching.

"What a dumb mutt," they laughed. "Doesn't even know his own car."

Jamie walked over to pick Checker up and carry him back, but as he did so, he happened to look into the other car. A man was slumped over in the front seat.

It was after Jamie's father had called a doctor and taken the man—a neighbor of theirs—into his house that he turned to Jamie.

"The doctor said that if we hadn't found Mr. Brown when we did, he'd have died for sure. Checker, if I ever thought you were dumb, I apologize." And he reached down and petted the pup's head.

"You know, Jamie, just because a dog won't do tricks, that doesn't mean he's stupid. He might just be independent."

As Mr. Jackson reached down to pet Checker, the dog sort of cocked his head to one side as if to say—you're doggone right, pal. Then he reached up and stretched out his paw!
