Wendy the Good Little Witch

Gee! It says here a growing kid needs a lot of play and exercise!

But I do have my broom!

I'll just raise it a bit!

—and it makes a swell swing, too!

I guess I've got my playground after all!

The End
You can learn a lot about bike tires in 2400 miles

Read how Goodyears help deliver the goods for this busy newsboy seven days a week

PAUL FIUTAK, 16 years old, is an award-winning carrier for the Buffalo Courier-Express. In addition to his daily deliveries, Paul stars for his high school track team. Has been using Goodyear tires ever since he got his first bike ten years ago.

A good way to learn about bike tires is to ride a busy newspaper route. An easier way is to take a tip from someone who does—like hard-working Paul Fiutak. Paul has more than 2400 miles on his present set of Goodyears. That includes city streets, dirt roads, even snow and slush. And the tires still look good enough to carry many more bundles of the Buffalo Courier-Express.

Goodyears are made especially to take hard bumps and bruises. Their treads are designed to grip and hold, for better traction on curves, for straight-line stops.

Want to get the greatest possible fun and service out of your bike? Next time you need tires, see your Goodyear dealer. He’ll help you pick the Goodyear tire that’ll help you most. Goodyear, Cycle Tire Dept., Akron 16, Ohio.

Lots of good things come from GOODYEAR

MORE PEOPLE RIDE ON GOODYEAR TIRES THAN ON ANY OTHER KIND
Wendy and Zelma are at a tea party. Zelma says, "Congratulations, Wendy! This is the worst tea you ever brewed!" Wendy responds, "Just a terrible talent I have!"

Zelma then comments, "The aroma is curling the wallpaper! Tee-hee!"

Wendy says, "Glue it back up, Wendy!"

Zelma, having glued the wallpaper back up, says, "I'll be glad when they go so I can make a nice salad!"

Wendy advises, "Wendy! I'd advise you to make yourself some of this tea instead of those sickeningly sweet dishes you make! Tee-hee hee!"

Zelma, with a mischievous smile, says, "Well, let's go on a mischief mission, girls! We can really act mean... tea-hea!"

Zelma then says, "After that tea we can really make myself a nice feed!"

Wendy, with a determined look, says, "They'll be gone long enough for me to make myself a nice feed!"

THE NAME'S THE SAME

It was a beautiful, sunshiny day, and Mary Ellen skipped gaily out of the house to play. Not that the sunshine alone accounted for her gaiety. Mary Ellen was happy and gay even when it rained. And why shouldn’t she have been? She had a wonderful mother and a wonderful father, both of whom she dearly loved and who loved her. She lived in a pretty white house on a shady, tree-lined street. She had a sandbox and a bicycle of her own, and several dolls besides. She had lots of nice clothes, plenty of good food, a room all to herself . . . in short, she had anything and everything that would make a little girl happy. Small wonder that she hummed a lifting little tune to herself that bright spring day.

Then she caught sight of another child, a girl about her own age, and she stopped humming abruptly. The girl was just standing there, staring, and saying nothing.

“Hello,” Mary Ellen said a bit uncertainly. “You must be new in the neighborhood. What’s your name?”

“We just moved in to our new house yesterday,” the other girl replied. “It’s right down this block. My name is Mary Ellen.”

“Don’t be silly!” gasped Mary Ellen. “I’M Mary Ellen!”

“How can YOU be Mary Ellen,” argued the other, “when I’M Mary Ellen? I don’t think your joke is a bit funny!”

“Joke? What joke?” Mary Ellen demanded. “I tell you I’M Mary Ellen McKay!”

“Well, I’M Mary Ellen Logan!” the new girl announced defiantly. “I guess I ought to know my own name!”

“You ought to, but you don’t!” snapped Mary Ellen, thoroughly out of patience now. “Goodbye!” And turning on her heel, she stormed back up the walk to her house and slammed the door behind her when she went in.

“What’s the matter, dear?” her mother asked, catching sight of her angry face. “Is something wrong?”

“Oh, Mother!” Suddenly, Mary Ellen’s lips began to tremble, and tears welled up in her eyes. "Some little girl is trying to be me!" she wailed, burying her face in her mother’s shoulder. And then the whole story came pouring out.

Mrs. McKay didn’t laugh out loud, but her eyes were dancing with fun as she pulled her daughter onto her lap. “Look, dear,” she explained carefully, “the little girl was telling you the truth. Lots of people have the same name, but they’re still different people. You’re Mary Ellen McKay, and she’s Mary Ellen LOGAN, so you’re two different Mary Ellens. See?”

Mary Ellen did see then, and suddenly she began to giggle. “She’ll have to call me McKay, and I’ll call her Logan, or we’re going to get awfully mixed up!” she laughed. “In fact, I think I’ll go tell her that right now!” And still giggling, she wriggled off her mother’s lap and hurried outside where she knew she was about to make a brand-new friend!

The next morning, the jungle was surprisingly still. Ferdie Fox couldn’t help noticing it as he strutted along. Suddenly, out of nowhere, a long, coiled rope thing shot out, grabbing Ferdie right off the ground. It was Norman’s trunk—and it swung the fox high, high into the branches—and dropped him. Down came Ferdie, crashing through the brush, screaming in terror—right into the waiting arms of Jock. The chimp slung the yowling fox over his shoulder fireman-style and scampered back up the tree. Then again, a great, long drop—this time a sliding one—right down the long, greased neck of George the giraffe. Down—down—down to the ground — and the red-rimmed, gleaming eyes of Leander and Satin, the two of them coiled to spring like the most evil and ferocious of jungle cats. “No! No! Spare me!” pleaded Ferdie in great, gulping sobs. “Oh, please! Spare me!”

“Why, what’s the matter, Ferdie?” leered Satin, baring his fangs. “Didn’t you enjoy our little extra-special roller coaster? Isn’t this the kind of joke you like to play?”

“No, no!” sobbed the terrified fox. “I hate jokes! I’ll never play another practical joke as long as I live!”

“Then beat it!” rumbled Leander, his claws still unsheathed. Ferdie scrambled to his feet, and streaked off in a cloud of dust. The joyous laughter of the others ripped apart the jungle’s silence. And never again was that laughter turned to rage by the impudent jests of Ferdie the fox!
