

graduation day

by Christopher Stone and John O'Connell

The most extraordinary episode of American education during these turbulent years probably was provided by the "honors" or "grad" performance of such stars as John F. Kennedy and the graduates of the University of Michigan. They are about to graduate during the year of the nation's jubilee. "Graduation" is a ceremony by which the graduates of the country are recognized and honored, and the program that we present depicts the tradition that has been followed in the past.

The traditional form of these ceremonies has been with the graduates wearing gowns which are colored white, black, or blue, and caps which are colored black, white, or blue. The graduates are seated in rows which have been set up in front of the building. The graduates are seated in rows which have been set up in front of the building.
