

LINES FOR AN ALBUM.
Midst the scenes of earthly strife,
Midst the pleasures of thy life,

Footprints in the Forest.

By EDWARD S. ELLIS.

Author of "Camp-Fire and Wigwag," "The Lost Trail," "Jack and Geoffrey in Africa," "No Luck and No Profit," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XXIX.

A PRIZE AND A REPROACH.

That which Otto had called a game proved really to be no cave at all. Up the winding ascent...

Jack was half disposed to continue his flight over the ridge, but, fearful of the greater peril to which they would be exposed...

This checked the rush of the other two, who found, what they were expecting, a sudden check...

Directly behind the arrow came Deerfoot, landing in the presence of the youths with such suddenness...

Working rapidly, he soon had the charge rammed home and the weapon in the lock...

It was noticeable that during the brief moments spent in pleasant interchange, Deerfoot was never quiet...

There was no good reason for tarrying on the slope, and as soon as Otto had finished loading his gun...

The elevation of the ridge, and the sparse vegetation on the crest, gave the Shawnee the best kind of an observatory...

Looking toward the south-east, the three saw a somewhat similar ridge, though less in extent...

in the guise of a young Shawnee warrior, had charge of the little party, neither he nor they were invulnerable...

An additional incentive to pursuit lay in the fact that the Pawnees had learned of the trick that Otto Reitstaus played...

The Shawnee, therefore, directed the boys to make for the ridge which he pointed out in the south-east...

Deerfoot expected to join them before daylight, but he could be in no way helped...

It followed, as a matter of course, that all the strategic designs which were the staple of the trail were to be equally effective against the Shawnee...

The sagacity of Deerfoot enabled him to provide against most of the contingencies which the time which he took in making such provision was but a fraction of that which he consumed in the telling...

Each of the boys fully understood the scheme of Deerfoot, and lost no time in speculating over its nature...

"You have never seen Hay-uta," said Jack, after they had walked some ways, the Kentuckian taking the lead...

"No," replied Otto walking much faster than was his custom. "He is a Saak, and one of the five who went off with you, when we parted from each other."

"Den I think I see him," was the natural remark of the grinning German. "The chances are you have seen him very often, as he has seen you, but you never heard his name Hay-uta, and won't recognize him from any description I can give of him."

"Why not?" queried his companion. "It seems to me," replied Jack with a laugh, "that all negro babies and all Indian warriors look much alike to me."

"You and I know the explanation of such a singular course, and so it is not required that I should repeat the story of Hay-uta's encounter with Deerfoot in the depths of the wilderness, when the youthful Shawnee vanquished the soney warrior...

CHAPTER XXX.

A SURPRISING DISCOVERY.

"WHAT do you suppose Deertoe once asked me?" said Jack Carleton, stopping short and staring in amazement at his friend, who answered with native innocence...

"I tell you, Otto," continued Jack. "I stood dumb; he has reproved us both and made us feel thoughtful, but I never had anything that went home like that."

"I never heard him speak just dot way," said Otto, who was in as serious a mood as his companion, but he said a good many things to me and sometimes to both of us which I forgets never—never! When he left me and the Injuns was as cruel as a fader and morder, I did a good deal of youets dem, where was my lay in by fire and not knowin' wheder dey wouldn't kill me, den I thinks about dem again and I prays hard; when I swallens de tobacco and beasins like I was dead, den I prays again to Him and He makes me well and brings me owet all right; arter this I never forgets to prays to Him."

The conversation continued in this vein, until both alike to the fact that they were violating the laws of the land, but he said a good many things to me and sometimes to both of us which I forgets never—never! When he left me and the Injuns was as cruel as a fader and morder, I did a good deal of youets dem, where was my lay in by fire and not knowin' wheder dey wouldn't kill me, den I thinks about dem again and I prays hard; when I swallens de tobacco and beasins like I was dead, den I prays again to Him and He makes me well and brings me owet all right; arter this I never forgets to prays to Him."

The conversation continued in this vein, until both alike to the fact that they were violating the laws of the land, but he said a good many things to me and sometimes to both of us which I forgets never—never! When he left me and the Injuns was as cruel as a fader and morder, I did a good deal of youets dem, where was my lay in by fire and not knowin' wheder dey wouldn't kill me, den I thinks about dem again and I prays hard; when I swallens de tobacco and beasins like I was dead, den I prays again to Him and He makes me well and brings me owet all right; arter this I never forgets to prays to Him."

The wood as a general thing was favorable, though the occasional gnats and flies were very fatiguing, and the air was not so clear as it should be. The Shawnee could run without showing fatigue.

Both lads were so familiar with that people that it required no introduction to the boys, which Jack Carleton had declared, as to the similarity of appearance of all Indian warriors, there were certain peculiarities of dress and looks which identified the man with the name of the village where he lived, as he had often seen, during his own captivity among these people.

The boys dove and swam nither and thither, splashing and splashing into the water for every enjoyment. It will be understood how a couple of persons so placed as they were, found such a bath not only a luxury but a necessity.

The boys dove and swam nither and thither, splashing and splashing into the water for every enjoyment. It will be understood how a couple of persons so placed as they were, found such a bath not only a luxury but a necessity.

When at last they emerged, a long distance beyond the point of entrance, a branch was bent and held aloft. Deertoe took Otto, saw that they were across the river, and donning their garments, they turned the light raft adrift, and resumed their journey toward the ridge which still lay a long distance away.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death. Deertoe took Otto, saw that they were across the river, and donning their garments, they turned the light raft adrift, and resumed their journey toward the ridge which still lay a long distance away.

out the discharge of more than one firearm. The instant such report reached them, such tardiness and tarrying would end.

"I tell you, Otto," continued Jack. "I stood dumb; he has reproved us both and made us feel thoughtful, but I never had anything that went home like that."

Both lads were so familiar with that people that it required no introduction to the boys, which Jack Carleton had declared, as to the similarity of appearance of all Indian warriors, there were certain peculiarities of dress and looks which identified the man with the name of the village where he lived, as he had often seen, during his own captivity among these people.

The boys dove and swam nither and thither, splashing and splashing into the water for every enjoyment. It will be understood how a couple of persons so placed as they were, found such a bath not only a luxury but a necessity.

When at last they emerged, a long distance beyond the point of entrance, a branch was bent and held aloft. Deertoe took Otto, saw that they were across the river, and donning their garments, they turned the light raft adrift, and resumed their journey toward the ridge which still lay a long distance away.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death. Deertoe took Otto, saw that they were across the river, and donning their garments, they turned the light raft adrift, and resumed their journey toward the ridge which still lay a long distance away.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

By this time, the sun was well down in the western sky, and it was clear that if the ridge was to be reached in any manner, it would be a matter of life and death.

CHESTNUTS.

By MRS. HENRY O. ROGERS.

The chestnuts brown are falling down Where long rich grasses grow deeply green; The light is clear, the sky seems near...

A BEAR ACHIEVEMENT.

By A COFFEE PLANTER.

ALTHOUGH I am an old man now, have long since retired from the field, and have returned to live comfortably in my native country...

"The bear would seize her directly she moved." "I know. Look here, Tom; make a slip-knot with one of the strongest creepers; give me the slip-knot, and give the other end half a turn round that tree..."

"He is not likely to have gone beyond the circle at which you started," he said. "He must either be up a tree, or which is more likely, in the hollow of some decaying tree..."

"He is not likely to have gone beyond the circle at which you started," he said. "He must either be up a tree, or which is more likely, in the hollow of some decaying tree..."

Whether he was the same bear who had hidden in the pit with Mary I cannot say. Tom and I started off and I shot first, when I came to see the dead animal, were all of the opinion that it was;

Whether he was the same bear who had hidden in the pit with Mary I cannot say. Tom and I started off and I shot first, when I came to see the dead animal, were all of the opinion that it was;

THE GOLDEN ARGOSY. CORRESPONDENTS. PUZZLEDOM.

CORRESPONDENCE.

B. B., Baltimore, Md. He objects to the publication of his real name. D. C. Brooklyn, and I. M. K., Cincinnati, O. No anonymous exchanges inserted.

PUZZLEDOM.

NO. 1. PENTAGON.

1. A letter; 2. A cell for grain; 3. Concrete; 4. A belt worn over the shoulder; 5. Spread to insure; 6. Petrified; 7. An alloy of copper & zinc; 8. A village of Italy (Lipp); 9. Merrimack (Obs.); 10. Philadelphia, Pa. ASSERVO.

NO. 2. ANAGRAM.

Ed. THICK AND HIS WORD-TREASURY. The puzzler coils his pages vast, E fluttering gems of ages past;

NO. 3. PENTAGON.

1. A letter; 2. Perceive (Word, Sapp); 3. Barbed arrows formerly used with a cross-gauge (Obs.); 4. Resembling closely; 5. The outer covering of a body; 6. A mineral; 7. A kind of cloth; 8. A fish; 9. To untwain; 10. A fish. IOWA FALLS, IOWA. Doc. Jc.

NO. 4. CHARADE.

My first to assign, Also means "to decline," Once more defined "to regulate," And my last will let you see, Which means to "expel." My second displays as white.

NO. 5. SQUARE.

1. An insect; 2. An interpreter; 3. A plant (Fynco); 4. Rough; 5. To quiver; 6. Put in the aspect of a truth. BROOKLYN, N. Y. PHIL. O. SOPHER.

NO. 6. CHARADE.

My first is an animal, a cunning old thief, Beheaded like a snake the neck of beef; My second is worn by the beax and the bella, Beheaded all perfect in heaven it dwells, My second word is the name of a saint, That shelters the bee in a sunnying hour.

NO. 7. SQUARE.

1. This mystic word is often heard From lips of those who mystify, They move a hand with golden greed, And then this mystic word they cry.

NO. 8. DOUBLE LETTER ENIGMA.

In "happy den," In "hazy," In "joynous thrill," In "miser's hoard," In "centre board," In "water-mill,"

NO. 9. DIAMOND.

1. A letter; 2. Entrance of leaving up of the floor of a mine; 4. French devoye (1572-1643); 5. A genus of confers; 6. A bettress of species of huck-born; 7. Involvement; 8. A kind of lichen; 9. A town of Spain, province of Valencia; 10. A segment of a circle; 11. A letter.

NO. 10. DOUBLE LETTER ENIGMA.

In "exquisite," In "handker," In "heretofore," And dwell content with his lot; The moulding of his own brain's plan, Beholden to no earthly's whim;

NO. 11. DIAMOND.

1. A letter; 2. A common laboring horse; 3. English surgeon and physiologist b. 1814; 4. Cathartic medicines; 5. A small village of Baden; 7. Seeds of an oriental plant which an oil is expressed; 8. In a common manner; 9. A sketch from nature; 10. A plant; 11. A letter.

THE EDITOR has an attack of New Jersey malaria, and is not sure that all the editorial experience will excuse him from not writing that this Bug. We regret that we have not space to publish Byrd's answer in rhyme to No. 6.