In 213 Wang Zhong, described as a general and a village marquis, was among those who petitioned Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei, and in 220 he was one of the sponsors of the stele commemorating Cao Pi's accession to the imperial throne.

Wang Zhong had been forced to eat human flesh in time of famine at Chang'an, and it is said that on one occasion Cao Pi had the saddle of his horse decorated with bones from a tomb, as a joke. -SGZ 1:18, 40, LS 19:3a; Goodman 98:196.

Wang [Zhongcai] 王仲才. Son of Wang Xing, Wang Zhongcai was enfeoffed by Emperor Guangwu in 25 with a marquisate in Zhongshan. -SJZ 11:1b.

Wang [Zhongzeng] 王仲曾 or Wang [Zhongceng]; Shu. About 160 Wang Zhongzeng was one of a group of local scholars about Liu Zong. When Liu Zong held senior local office in his commandery and the province, he arranged that Wang Zhongzeng and three of his colleagues received appointment in the imperial bureaucracy. Nothing is known about Wang Zhongzeng's subsequent career. -HYGZ 10A:134-35.

Wang [Zhongzi] 王仲子. Zhongzi was the style of Wang Liang q.v. above, and also of Wang Heng/Huang 橫/黃 of Former Han: QHX:566, 534, 524-525.

Wang Zhongong 王州公. About 20 Wang Zhongong was the leader of a group of bandits based upon the Yangzi and plundering in Lujiang. He and his following were put down by Li Xian. -HHS 12/2:500-01.

Wang Zhu 王著; Guanghan. Elder brother of the Lady Wang He, he accepted an offer of marriage on behalf of his widowed sister, but she disfigured herself to avoid it. -HYGZ 10B:153, HYGZJBTZ:581.

Wang Zhu 王柱 is probably miswritten for Huang Zhu 黃柱.

Wang Zhuan 王顛; Youfufeng. An officer of his native county, in 185 Wang Zhuan was a leading sponsor of a stele to honour the magistrate Cao Quan. -JSCB 18:3b; Ebrely 80:342-344.

Wang Zhui 王追 see Wang Fu 王阜. -HHS 86/76:2847.

Wang Zhuo 王卓 [Zhongliao 仲遼] (d.137); Hedong. Minister of the Household in 134, Wang Zhuo was promoted to be Excellency of Works. He died in office two years later. -HHS 6:264-66.

Wang [Zi'ai] 王子艾; Liang: i.e. Huang [Zi'ai] 黃子艾 of Jiyin. -HHSJJ 68/58:2445 [following the Palace edition], XC 7:16a-b.

Wang [Zifa] 王子法; Beihai. Fast-talking but in fact a man of limited ability, in the early 190s he and Liu Kongci were favourites of the Chancellor Kong Rong. -SGZ 12:372.

Wang [Zifang] 王子房; Runan. The father of Wang Bosan and Wang Shufan q.v., Wang Zifang spent many years in Zangke. There was a rumour of his death but he returned home soon afterwards. -FSTY 3f:105-06.

Wang Zifu 王子服 see Wang Fu 王服.

Wang [Ziyou] 王子祐; Runan. A county officer about 140, in the course of an investigation Wang Ziyou examined a certain Chen Bin, who died under torture. Chen Bin's nephew Chen Gongsu later killed Wang Ziyou in revenge. -FSTY 3f:107-08.

Wang [Zijun] 王子居; Jiyan. A student at the University in Luoyang, as he was dying he entrusted his remains to his colleague Shentu Pan. Shentu Pan duly took his body back to his home. -HHS 53/43:1751.

Wang [Zixiang] 王子香 (d.106); Chenliu. In the time of Emperor He Wang Zixiang became Inspector of Jing province. His rule was excellent, and he was recalled to the capital for further appointment, but died on the road.

Three white tigers came to take part in the mourning, and the people of Nan commandery established a temple in his honour, with a stele recording his virtues. Wang Zixiang became known as the Lord of the White Tigers 白虎君, and his family were known for generations afterwards as the White Tiger Wangs. -SJZ 34:12b-13a.

Wang [Zishi] 王子師 see Wang Yun 王允. -HHS 68/58:2231.

Wang [Ziya] 王子雅; Nanyang. Formerly Administrator of Shu commandery, Wang Ziya had three daughters but no sons. When he died his daughters expressed sorrow that he had no heir to his lineage, and each contributed five million cash to construct a tomb complex for him. -SJZ 31:8a.

Wang Zong 王宗. As Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate, in 110 Wang Zong was sent to attack the pirate chieftain Zhang Bolu, with authority over all provincial and commandery troops in the east. With a combined force of several ten thousand men he defeated the bandits after several engagements, killed the old and weak, drove the remainder to flight, and captured great quantities of their goods and treasure. -HHS 38/28:1277.

Wang Zong 王宗 (d.110); Hanzhong. Well-respected locally, Wang Zong was appointed to the local staff of the Administrator Zheng Qin. As rebel Qiang attacked in 110, Zheng Qin took the commandery militia out against them but was heavily defeated. Wang Zong and other officers fought to protect their master, but all of them were killed.

In 118 an imperial letter ordered a grant of grain to the families of Wang Zong and his comrades. -HHS 87/77:2887, HYGZ 10C:169.

Wang Zun 王遵 I [Jungong 君公]; Pingyuan. A scholar of the Book of Changes and a friend of Pang Meng, Wang Zun became a gentleman cadet in the time of Wang Mang. Disapproving of the new regime, however, and realising he could make no difference to the conduct of affairs, he had an affair with a government slave and left office in disgrace.

During the times of trouble at the beginning of Later Han Wang Zun maintained himself as a cattle dealer. -HHS 83/73:2760-61.

HHS 83/73 refers to this man by his style Jungong; the personal name Zun is given by HHSJJ 83/73:2040 Wang Xianqian quoting the Gaoshi zhuan of Huangfu Mi. One assumes this is not the same person as the official Wang Zun immediately below.

Wang Zun 王遵 II. In 30 Emperor Guangwu named Wang Zun Administrator of Lelang and sent him with an army to deal with the local rebel Wang Tiao. He and his men had travelled no further than Liaodong, however, when the local officers Wang Hong and Yang Yi killed Wang Tiao and welcomed the Han. -HHS 76/66:2464.

Wang Zun 王遵 III [Zichun 子春]; Jingzhao. A man of gentry family, whose father had been Administrator of Shang commandery, Wang Zun acted as a local knight-errant and had a strong sense of loyalty to Han. When Wei Ao and the men of Tianshui rose against Wang Mang in 23, Wang Zun joined them and became one of the leaders, taking title as a general at the time of their loyal oath and proclamation.

Wang Zun later accompanied Wei Ao to Chang'an, and when the Gengshi Emperor sent troops to arrest Wei Ao after the failed plot against him, Wang Zun was among those who prepared to defend his mansion. He escaped with Wei Ao to Tianshui, and was named a chief general.

In 30, when Emperor Guangwu's officer Lai Xi came on a final embassy, he became impatient and spoke firmly to Wei Ao. Wei Ao's general Wang Yuan wanted him to kill Lai Xi, but Wang Zun argued firmly against such a rash step, and Lai Xi was able to leave unmolested.

For his own part, Wang Zun wanted Wei Ao to support the restored Han dynasty, and he had encouraged him to send his son Wei Xun as hostage to Luoyang.

As Wei Ao prevaricated about his commitment, Wang Zun became increasingly uncertain of where his own loyalty lay. In 31 Lai Xi wrote and persuaded him to surrender. He came with his family and household to Luoyang, was appointed a Palace Counsellor and enfeoffed as a marquis.

In the following year, as the imperial offensive was launched against Wei Ao, Wang Zun was granted the Staff of Authority and accompanied one of the invading columns to provide local knowledge. Aware of the forces ranged against Wei Ao, Wang Zun wrote to his friend and former colleague Niu Han. Niu Han also changed sides and was rewarded, and thirteen other officers of Wei Ao followed his example. -HHS 13/3:513-29.

Wang Zun 王尊 IV [Boye 伯業]; Langye. XTS 72B:2601 says that Wang Zun was a son of Wang Chong 崇, an Excellency in the last years of Former Han [QHX 519]. He became a Counsellor at the court of Emperor Guangwu and was granted a district marquisate. It is doubtful, however, whether a man of such low rank would have been able to merit a fief.

XTS mentions two sons of Wang Zun, Shi 晷 and Yin 音 [qq.v.], and four grandsons through Yin: Yi 誼, Rui 叡 [q.v.], Dian 典 and Rong 融 [q.v.], claiming that Rong was the father of Wang Xiang and Wang Lan [qq.v.], who became ministers of Jin. JS 33:987, however, differs: it says Wang Xiang and Wang Lan were indeed sons of Wang Rong, but that their grandfather was Wang Ren, and that they were descended from the Counsellor Wang Ji 吉. XTS has obviously missed some generations.

Wang Zun 王尊 V (d.108). In 107/108 Wang Zun was involved in the coup planned by the Excellency Zhou Zhang against the regent Dowager Deng and the new Emperor An. The plot was discovered and it is likely Wang Zun died at this time. -HHS 101/11:3238.

Wang Zun 王遵 VI; Guanghan. Son of Wang Bo, Wang Zun was the father of Wang Shang. It is not known what offices he may have held. -HYZ 12:224.

Wang Zun 王遵 VI, wife of: see the Lady Zhang Shuji 張叔紀.

Wang Zun 王遵 VII was at some time Inspector of Yi province: see sub Yang Mang. -HYZ 10B:156.

Wang Zun 王尊. A eunuch, in 168 Wang Zun was an Attendant at the Yellow Gates. When his colleague Zhu Yu learned that Dou Wu and Chen Fan planned to arrest the senior eunuchs Cao Jie and Wang Fu, Wang Zun was one of the people he called for support. The group took an oath in blood to destroy Dou Wu, and their coup was successful. -HHS 69/59:2243, 78/68:2524; Ch'ü 72:491.

Wangren Zaigong 王人宰公 became Administrator of Dongping. -FSTY 5f:120.

Wangshi Yin 王史音 became a county magistrate in Jingzhao. -FSTY 5f:120.

Wayang Hong 鮭陽鴻 see Guiyang Hong 鮭陽鴻.

Wei 洼 [surname] see Gui 洼 passim.

Wei 韋 [personal name unknown]. LS 13:9b records a fragment of a stele from the Spirit Road 神道 of this man's tomb.

Wei Ao 隗囂 [Jimeng 季孟] (d.33); Tianshui. As a young man of family, Wei Ao was interested in the classics and histories. He became an officer in the commandery and provincial administrations, then joined the staff of Liu Xin 劉歆, a high minister under Wang Mang. Early in 23 Wei Ao was one of seventy-two officers sent to announce an amnesty for the empire after the Gengshi Emperor of Han claimed the throne. In the summer, however, Liu Xin killed himself after the failure of a plot against Wang Mang, and Wei Ao returned to his home country.

As news reached Tianshui of the proclamation of the Gengshi Emperor and the defeat of Wang Mang's armies, Wei Ao's uncles Wei Cui and Wei Yi joined Yang Guang and Zhou Zong, leaders of two neighbouring counties, to raise troops in support of the Han. Though Wei Ao objected that such warlike activity was of no advantage to the family, his kinsmen raised several thousand men, captured the commandery capital and killed Wang Mang's administrator Li Yu 李育 [but cf. also Li Yu II].

Seeking a leader to unify their cause, the insurgents chose Wei Ao, and gave him title as Supreme General 上將軍. Despite his initial opposition to the project, Wei Ao had education and a wide experience, and though his relatives may have expected him to serve as a figurehead in their interest, he was able to gather support among the group to establish a personal authority. One of his first actions was to invite Fang Wang of Youfufeng to become his senior adviser, and on Fang Wang's advice he committed himself to Han. He established a temple to Emperors Gao, Wen and Wu, gathered his followers for an oath of allegiance, and announced the reign title Hanfu 漢復 "Return of Han." Proud of his literary abilities, he also issued a long proclamation proclaiming his loyalty. In itself, however, yjr establishment of a reign title was the prerogative of an independent ruler, and Wei Ao's commitment to the house of Liu did not necessarily extend to the Gengshi Emperor, nominal leader of the restored dynasty.

From his base in Tianshui, Wei Ao extended his power by defeating and killing Wang Mang's Governor of Yong 雍 province, Chen Qing 陳慶. Then, with an army numbered at a hundred thousand he moved against Wang Xiang 王向, a cousin of Wang Mang who was Administrator of Anding. Wei Ao invited Wang Xiang to surrender, but when he remained obdurate he attacked, captured, and beheaded him.

After Wang Mang was killed at Chang'an in the autumn of 23, Wei Ao sent troops to the northwest and gained ostensible allegiance from Longxi, Wudu, Jincheng, Zhangye, Jiuguan and Dunhuang, all the commanderies of present-day Gansu.

In the following year the Gengshi Emperor called Wei Ao and his uncles to his court at Chang'an, and though Fang Wang objected, they obeyed the summons. Wei Ao was named General of the Right, while Yi and Cui were confirmed in the titles they had taken. Later that year, rebellion broke out again in Tianshui, home base of the Wei family. Wei Cui and Wei Yi were probably involved, and they planned to go back and join the rising. Wei Ao, both to protect himself and also to free himself of two senior rivals, reported them to the throne. His kinsmen were executed and Wei Ao was promoted to Excellency rank as Imperial Secretary.

Wei Ao evidently hoped for a career at the imperial capital, but the Gengshi regime was already weak and confused, with rebellion and opposition across the greater part of the empire and the approaching threat of the Red Eyebrows from the east. In the autumn Wei Ao joined Shentu Jian and others in proposing that the Gengshi Emperor should abdicate in favour of Liu Liang, uncle of Liu Xiu the future Emperor Guangwu, in the hope that Liu Xiu would then make common cause against the bandits. As the Gengshi Emperor refused, Wei Ao and his colleagues joined Zhang Ang and other leaders of the commoner Troops in a plan to plunder the court and abandon the city.

The emperor discovered the plot and called the conspirators to the palace. Wei Ao was worried and claimed to be ill, and other leaders also made their escape, so only Shentu Jian was taken and killed. Wei Ao prepared to defend himself in his house, and the emperor sent troops to surround him, but then Wei Ao broke out during night-time and fled the city with his followers.

Wei Ao had evidently maintained good contacts in Tianshui, for he quickly re-established his leadership and took title as High General of the Western Provinces 西州上將軍. As Bielenstein remarks, the debacle at Chang'an had taught him to avoid any further involvement with the politics of the empire as a whole; henceforth Wei Ao's sole concern was to control the northwest as independently as possible from central power. His territory was not so great as it had been, for during his absence the commanderies of the Gansu corridor, from Jincheng northwest to Dunhuang, had accepted the leadership of Dou Rong, but Wei Ao was well established in the upper Wei valley. He controlled Tianshui and Anding, made terms with the Qiang tribes in Longxi and Jincheng, where the Yellow River formed the border with Dou Rong, and shared the loyalties of the non-Chinese in Wudu with Gongsun Shu of present-day Sichuan.

Wei Ao was well-known, and as the region about Chang'an fell into chaos many of the gentry, including such leaders as Ma Yuan and the historian Ban Biao, came west to enhance his court at Ji city. Making a point of his respect for gentlemen and scholars, Wei Ao gave them senior positions in his regime. Early in 26, when Feng Yin rebelled against Han and entered Anding he was attacked and defeated, and Deng Yu, general of Emperor Guangwu and former commander of Feng Yin, sent an envoy to grant Wei Ao title as Chief General [not High General] of the Western Provinces 西州大將軍, with special authority over Liang province and Shuofang.

Accepting this, Wei Ao became in theory an officer of the new Han regime, and also the nominal superior of his north-western rival Dou Rong. He provided Dou Rong with seals of his own manufacture in the name of Han, and he also appointed six chief generals of his own; in practice Wei Ao and Dou Rong were independent of Han and of each other. Later in 26 Wei Ao twice defeated a force of the Red Eyebrows, who had strayed into Anding on a desperate foraging expedition and, as the invaders blundered their way back towards Chang'an, they lost great numbers of people in autumn snowfalls on the Long Slope.

An ostensible supporter of Han, Wei Ao had in any case no wish to expand his territory east of the Long Slope, to challenge Emperor Guangwu in the lower Wei valley. He did send Ma Yuan to approach Gongsun Shu, but Ma Yuan was unhappy with his reception and recommended against an alliance. Wei Ao then assisted the imperial general Feng Yi to defeat Gongsun Shu's ally Lü You, and though Gongsun Shu offered him a royal title and office as an Excellency if he would recognise his claim to the empire, Wei Ao executed his messengers. Gongsun Shu sent expeditions over the mountains from Hanzhong, but Wei Ao drove them off and Gongsun Shu abandoned his campaign.

On the other hand, though Wei Ao gave tacit recognition to Guangwu, received his envoy Lai Xi, an old friend from Chang'an, and maintained an active and erudite correspondence, he made no substantial move to confirm his allegiance. In 27 he was ordered to attack Gongsun Shu on behalf of Han, but he pleaded the threat from Lu Fang in the north of Anding, and sent a senior official to argue against the offensive. He was clearly unwilling to serve as a loyal subordinate, and relations declined as Guangwu began to address Wei Ao with the formality of a ruler to his subject. Guangwu's position in the east was becoming stronger, moreover, so his attitude to Wei Ao became firmer and the powerful Ma Yuan became his secret agent. After a further embassy late in 28, Ma Yuan returned with Lai Xi in 29, and persuaded Wei Ao to send his son Wei Xun to court as a hostage.

Wang Yuan and other officers argued against the connection to Han, and urged their master to move east into the lower Wei, but Wei Ao was only interested in holding his territory, and he did not attempt to expand. For his part, Guangwu also approached Dou Rong, warlord of the far northwest, and had little difficulty in establishing an alliance, obtaining hostages, and ensuring his break with Wei Ao.

By 30, therefore, Wei Ao's policy was breaking down, and many of the gentlemen who had joined him now turned back east to Guangwu or, like Ban Biao, took service with Dou Rong. About the same time, the murder of Wei Ao's emissary Zhou You in a private vendetta, and the plunder of gifts being brought by Guangwu's envoy Yao Qi, brought a rift between the two camps. In the summer, after Gongsun Shu attacked down the Yangzi, Guangwu ordered Wei Ao to move against him from the north. Wei Ao claimed that the trestle roads and passes were in bad repair, but the emperor brought his own armies forward and sent Lai Xi to demand passage through Wei Ao's territory and support for the campaign. When Wei Ao refused, the Han turned against him while Dou Rong brought troops to threaten Wei Ao from the northwest.

Contrary to expectations, Wei Ao's men defeated the initial attack and drove the invaders from the Long Slope. They advanced towards Chang'an, but the Han commanders Feng Yi and Zhai Zun defeated Wei Ao's officers Xing Xun and Wang Yuan, forcing them back onto the defensive.

A number of local leaders in Beidi and Anding now switched allegiance from Wei Ao to Guangwu, opening up a northern flank, and Dou Rong crossed the Yellow River into Jincheng to defeat Wei Ao's Qiang allies. Wei Ao tried to make terms, but Dou Rong killed his envoys and sent the "false" seals Wei Ao had issued in the name of Han to the court of Guangwu. Wei Ao also wrote a humble memorial to Guangwu, and Lai Xi was sent to one last meeting on the border to secure his surrender. Wei Ao was told to send his second son, Wei Chun, as an additional hostage, but he remained recalcitrant and negotiations ended. Soon afterwards Wei Ao sent messengers to recognise Gongsun Shu as emperor, and in early 31 Gongsun Shu granted Wei Ao the title King of Northern Peace 朔寧王 and sent troops to assist him.

In the autumn Wei Ao attempted to break the pressure by attacks into Anding and down the Long Slope. They were halted once more by Feng Yi and Zhai Zun, but bad weather prevented a counter-attack, and the activity brought a brief renewal of local support for Wei Ao. Guangwu now prepared a major offensive, and he also persuaded Wei Ao's general Wang Zun to change sides, granting him office and a fief.

In the spring of 32 Lai Xi struck across the Long Slope to seize Lueyang in Tianshui. The city was immediately besieged by Wei Ao, aided by troops from Gongsun Shu, but Lai Xi and his men held out, and though Wei Ao maintained defences in the north and on the Long Slope, the forlorn hope weakened his position from behind. At the end of summer Guangwu himself brought the army forward, guided by Ma Yuan and with the renegade Wang Zun to encourage further desertions. Outflanking Wei Ao on the north, they advanced through Anding to link up with Dou Rong, then turned south to relieve Lai Xi in Lueyang. Wei Ao's position collapsed, his garrisons surrendered, and more of his officers changed sides.

Wei Ao took refuge with Yang Guang at Xi city in the south of Longxi commandery, while some of Gongsun Shu's troops held out in neighbouring Shangui in Tianshui. Just at this time, however, news came of rebellion in Yingchuan, and Guangwu was obliged to take the bulk of the army back to the east. Wu Han and the other generals left behind had too few troops to complete the victory, while Wei Ao spread the news of Guangwu's troubles and leading clans turned back to him.

Wang Yuan, moreover, who had gone to seek aid from Gongsun Shu across the mountains, returned in the winter with reinforcements. Pretending that his troops were more numerous than they were, he broke the siege, rescued Wei Ao, and brought him to Ji city. Wu Han attempted to renew the attack, but supplies became short, soldiers deserted, and he was obliged to withdraw.

By the beginning of the new year, Ji city was also short of food, and Wei Ao and his men were obliged to scavenge for grain. It is said that Wei Ao was bitter at his misfortune, and he was no doubt affected by the privation and stress. He became ill, and died in the first month of 33. Wang Yuan and other officers proclaimed his son Wei Chun as his heir, but they could not restore the position, and Wei Chun surrendered to Han at the end of 34. -HHS 13/3:513-32*; Bn 54:123-126, Bn 59:110-115, 161-187.

Wei Ba 隗霸 [Qiaoqing 喬卿 or Yannian 延年]; Jiyin. A man of distinguished family, Wei Ba was orphaned when he was young. He lived with his brothers, and neighbours admired the harmony of their household.

About 80 Wei Ba was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, and after a number of appointments he served as Administrator of Julu during the 90s. He governed gently, encouraging the abilities of his staff, and would always give a second chance to any junior officer who committed a fault. He was noted also for his humble circumstances, so that his wife and children were not allowed to use the official residence, they did not eat meat or fish, and his wife prepared silk while his sons worked in the fields. Everything, moreover, was shared with other members of the family. The people were impressed and sought to emulate his austerity.

In 104 Wei Ba was appointed Court Architect, and he prepared the tomb for Emperor He when he died in the following year. The work was impeded by heavy winter frosts, but Wei Ba encouraged the workmen, took the blame upon himself, and inspired them to double their efforts.

In 106 Wei Ba became Minister of Ceremonies, but in the following year he asked to be relieved of that office because of ill health, and he was transferred to be a Household Counsellor. In 111 he was made Commandant of the Guards at the Changle Palace, the apartments of the regent Dowager Deng, but again reverted to the Counsellor's post because of his health. He died in that office. -HHS 25/15:886*, DGHJ 19:4a, XC 1:4a-b.

Wei Bao 衛包/苞; Shanggu. A local officer under the Administrator Geng Kuang in 24, he was sent with Geng Kuang's son Geng Yan on a tribute mission to the new Gengshi Emperor. As the party was in Julu, however, the pretender Wang Lang proclaimed his rebellion. Wei Bao and his colleague Sun Cang decided to join Wang Lang, and though Geng Yan threatened them with a sword they went over to the rebels. -HHS 19/9:704.

Wei Bao 韋豹 [Jiming 季明]; Jingzhao. Son of Wei Jun q.v., Wei Bao was elder brother of Wei Yi and younger brother of Wei Shun. All three were known for their scholarship.

Wei Bao was several times invited to positions in the offices of the Excellencies, but resigned each time, and on another occasion he left a county office in Jianwei in order to escort the body of his friend and neighbour Luo Ling back to his home country.

About 115 the Excellency Liu Kai offered him another post, but when he taxed Wei Bao about his frequent departures, Wei Bao replied that he was neither a dog nor a horse. He got up and left, refusing to turn when Liu Yi sought to call him back.

As Emperor An came on tour to the west in 124, Wei Bao accepted appointment as a Consultant. -HHS 26/16:920.

Wei Biao 韋彪 [Mengda 孟達] (d.89); Youfufeng. Descended from a leading official family which came originally from Jingzhao, Wei Biao was a keen Confucian scholar. When his mother died he camped by her tomb for the three-year mourning period, got consumption which affected his bones, and was ill for several years afterwards.

In the early 50s Wei Biao was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became a gentleman cadet, but left on account of ill health. He returned home to teach, living contentedly in poverty, and was admired by all the local scholars.

Emperor Ming heard of Wei Biao's reputation, and in 63 he sent a carriage and special robes to invite him to court as an Internuncio. After further appointments, Wei Biao became Administrator of Wei commandery, but when Emperor Zhang came to the throne in 75 he again left office on grounds of illness.

Recalled once more, Wei Biao became a General of the Household, then Commandant of the Guards at the Changle Palace, the apartments of the Dowager Ma. He frequently gave advice, always arguing for a generous style of government. When he asked to retire once more, he was named Commandant of the Equipage, with substantial salary and additional rewards, and was treated with favour comparable to that of an imperial relative.

As Emperor Zhang went on tour to the west in 82, Wei Biao was named Acting Minister of Ceremonies. He was several times received in audience, and was asked about the history and customs of the region. He encouraged the emperor to recognise the great ministers of Former Han, and as the cortège came to Chang'an local officials were ordered to seek out the descendants of Xiao He 蕭何 and Huo Guang 霍光, great ministers of Former Han; no-one of the Huo family could be found, but Xiao He's descendant Xiao Xiong was granted a marquissate. Wei Biao was generously rewarded for his initiative. Appointed Minister Herald, he put forward proposals to strengthen the selection of good quality officials from the provinces.

In 85 Wei Biao accompanied an imperial tour to the east, acting as Excellency over the Masses, but on return, he asked to resign on account of illness. Emperor Zhang sent his personal attendants and a physician to enquire about his health, and provided him with special food. As his condition became steadily more serious, his resignation as Minister Herald was accepted in 87, but he lived two more years after that, regularly honoured by the emperor. When he did die there was a special eulogy and a grant of money and goods to his family.

Wei Biao was admired for his honesty and generosity, distributing his money to his kinsmen and keeping nothing for his immediate family. He left twenty pian of writings, including Sanfu jiushi 三輔舊事, an account of the region about Chang'an; his collected works were known as Wei qingzi 韋卿子 "The Book of Minister Wei." -HHS 26/16:917-20*, XC 1:6a-b; Yao Zhenzong:2383.

Wei Biao 魏彪. A eunuch, in 168 Wei Biao was Prefect of the Yellow Gates. In preparation for his planned attack on the palace eunuchs, the General-in-Chief Dou Wu had his daughter the regent Dowager dismiss Wei Biao and replace him with his supporter Shan Bing. -HHS 69/59:2243.

Wei [Boyang] 魏伯陽; Kuaiji. In the time of Emperor Huan, Wei Boyang produced a great many works of medicine and magic, including commentaries to the Book of Changes. -Yao Zhenzong:2444-45.

Wei Cheng 衛承. An officer of the Bureau of Astronomy in 85, Wei Cheng was one of the experts consulted by Jia Kui when he prepared his report on the revised Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] calendar for Emperor Zhang. Wei Cheng was also involved with Huo Rong's work on the clepsydra in 102. -HHS 92/2:3027, 3032.

Wei Chong 魏种. When Cao Cao was in Yan province in the early 190s he had Wei Chong nominated Filial and Incorrupt. Even as Zhang Miao rebelled in 193, Cao Cao was confident Wei Chong would remain loyal, and when he heard that he had defected he swore vengeance against such treachery.

When he destroyed Sui Gu in 199, Wei Chong came into his hands, but Cao Cao still admired him and could not bear to kill him. He appointed Wei Chong as his Administrator of Henei, where he held the western flank against Yuan Shao. -SGZ 1:17.

Wei Chun 隗純 (d.42); Tianshui. Wei Chun was the younger son of Wei Ao. In 30 Emperor Guangwu demanded that he be sent to Luoyang to join his brother Wei Xun as hostage; Wei Ao refused.

When Wei Ao died early in 33 his generals Wang Yuan and others proclaimed Wei Chun as his successor, with the royal title awarded by Gongsun Shu. The power of Wei Ao, however, had largely disintegrated, and Wei Chun's territory extended little beyond the borders of Ji county in Tianshui. In the winter of 34 a final attack by the imperial forces compelled his surrender with most of his officers.

Wei Chun was sent to live on Hongnong, but in 42 he sought to escape to the non-Chinese of the west. He got as far as Wuwei, but was then captured and executed. -HHS 13/3:531-32; Bn 59:171, 178.

Wei Cui 隗崔 (d.24); Tianshui. As a young man of the gentry Wei Cui was a local leader with retainers, and had experience in raising and handling a private army. When news came in 23 of the proclamation of Han under the Gengshi Emperor and the defeats inflicted upon Wang Mang's armies, Wei Cui and his elder brother Yi raised troops, joined the leaders of two neighbouring counties, and brought several thousand men to seize the commandery capital and kill Wang Mang's administrator.

Following this initial success, the insurgents chose Wei Cui's nephew Wei Ao as their leader, for though Wei Ao had initially opposed the rebellious venture he could boast some education and had held office at the imperial capital. Wei Cui and Wei Yi may have expected him to serve as a figurehead in their interest, but Wei Ao called upon wider support among the group and established a personal authority. In the summer of 23 Wei Ao had all his followers swear allegiance to Han and issued a proclamation against Wang Mang. Wei Cui took title as White Tiger General 白虎將軍, symbolising the west.

Support for the imperial house of Liu did not necessarily imply endorsement of the Gengshi Emperor, leader of the Han rebels, but when Wei Ao and his uncles were summoned to the new court at Chang'an they accepted the call, and Wei Cui was confirmed in his general's title. Later that year, very likely at the instigation of Wei Cui and Wei Yi, there was a new rebellion in Tianshui. The brothers planned to go back and take part, but in the winter, before they could leave Chang'an, they were reported by Wei Ao and were arrested and executed.

Wei Ao, who had thus rid himself of two senior rivals, was rewarded with rank as an Excellency. -HHS 13/3:513-20; Bn 54:123-126, Bn 59:86.

Wei Dan 韋誕 [Zhongjiang 仲將]; Jingzhao. Sons of Wei Duan, when they were young Wei Dan and his brother Kang were praised by Kong Rong. Celebrated for his literary and scholarly work, Wei Dan was sent to the capital as Reporting Officer for the commandery and became a Palace Attendant.

Wei Dan studied calligraphy under Handan Chun and Zhang Zhi, and though it was generally considered that he did not reach the standard of his masters his work was regarded as the finest of the Wei period. He was responsible for the greater part of the inscriptions on the palaces built by Cao Pi and Cao Rui.

Wei Dan also took part in the compilation of Huang

lan 皇覽 "Imperial Readings," a comprehensive edition of the classics and their commentaries commissioned by Cao Pi in 220. Following the death of Wang Xiang in 222, Wei Dan succeeded him as Custodian of the Private Library and convenor of that massive project, which was probably completed before the death of Cao Pi in 226. It contained over forty divisions 部, each with dozens of sections 篇, and a total of eight million characters. Great quantities were lost, however, over the following centuries, and by the time of the Tang dynasty only fragments remained.

Wei Dan also served as Administrator of Wudu. He died in retirement at the age of seventy-five. -SGZ 10:312-13, 21:620-621, 23:664, JS 36:1063; Mather 76:599.

Wei Dang 魏黨. A general of Gongsun Shu, early in 36 Wei Dang commanded an army defending a river crossing in Jianwei, but he was defeated by Guangwu's general Wu Han. -HHS 18/8:681; Bn 59:194.

Wei Duan 韋端 or Wei Rui 瑞 [Xiufu 休甫 or Fuxiu 甫休]; Jingzhao. A man of local reputation, he and Jin Shang and Diwu Xun were known as the "Three Xiu" from the common character in each man's style.

As Governor of Liang province in 199, Wei Duan sent Yang Fu to observe Cao Cao's control of the imperial regime. Yang Fu reported favourably, so Wei Duan became an ally and agent of Cao Cao in the west. In 208 he acted as peace-broker for Han Sui and Ma Teng, after which Ma Teng went to stay at the court of Han under Cao Cao.

Wei Duan soon afterwards also went to court as Minister Coachman. -SGZ 25:700, 7:223.

Wei Dun 尾敦. In 193, when Liu Yu was killed by Gongsun Zan, his head was sent to the capital. Wei Dun, a former officer of Liu Yu, stole the head from the couriers and gave it burial. -HHS 73/63:2357.

Wei Fan 衛汎. A student of Zhang Ji, Wei Fan excelled at medical science and composed a number of treatises. -Yao Zhenzong:2406 quoting Taiping yulan 722.

Wei Feng 魏諷 [Zijing 子京] (d.219); Pei or Jiyin. A brilliant young man, Wei Feng was appointed as a senior clerk by Zhong Yao the Chancellor of Wei, but in autumn 219 he formed a conspiracy for a coup at Ye city. The plot was betrayed by Chen Yi, and the Heir Cao Pi killed Wei Feng and many others. -SGZ 1:52.

Wei Fu 衛福 (d.106); Yuyang. In 106 Wei Fu was Registrar to the Administrator Zhang Xian when several hundred Xianbi horsemen came on a raid.

Zhang Xian took commandery levies in pursuit beyond the borders, but they fell into an ambush. The troops scattered, and while Zhang Xian was attempting to rally them he was struck by an enemy arrow. Seeing their master's difficulties, Wei Fu and his colleague Xu Xian came to his aid, and as Zhang Xian fell from his horse Wei Fu attempted to shield him with his own body. All three were killed.

When the regent Dowager Deng heard of this, she issued an edict in honour of Wei Fu and his comrades, granted their families 100,000 cash, and ordered that one of each officer's sons be appointed a gentleman cadet. Though Zhang Xian had been chiefly responsible for the disaster, his family received 600,000 cash and two cadet appointments. -HHS 81/71:2672, 90/80:2986.

Wei Gao 衛騫; Dai. Known for his scholarship in the time of Emperor Ming, Wei Gao was called to court, but died as he travelled through Hedong. The family took up residence there. -JS 36:1055.

Wei Gu 衛固 [Zhongjian 仲堅] (d.205); Hedong. Member of a leading family and Officer of Merit in the commandery, in 205 Wei Gu was a supporter of Gao Gan of the Yuan family. He and his associates attempted to resist Du Ji, the Administrator sent by Cao Cao, but Du Ji out-manoeuvred them, and as open fighting broke out Wei Gu was killed. -SGZ 16:494-95.

Wei Heng 衛衡 [Boliang 伯梁]; Hanzhong. Having studied with the scholar recluse Fan Ying, Wei Heng became well known and received many nominations and invitations to office, including special carriages. He rejected all of them, and though Dong Fu and Ren An, also distinguished scholars, expressed regret that he kept his light under a bushel, Wei Heng remarked that even Fan Ying had been of small value to the state; when a sage could do nothing, it was better not to try. -HYGZ 10C:163; Vervoorn 90:294.

Wei Hong 衛宏 [Jingzhong 敬仲 or Zizhong 次仲]; Donghai. When Wei Hong was young he shared the enthusiasm of Zheng Xing for Old Text scholarship. He travelled to Jiujiang to receive instruction from Xie Manqing 謝曼卿, an expert in the Mao interpretation of the Classic of Poetry, and then composed a preface to the Mao recension 毛詩序. Highly regarded for its judgement of the Airs of the States and the Odes, this work established a tradition of interpretation.

Wei Hong later studied the Old Text of the Classic of History which had been acquired by Du Lin, and composed an exposition of its meaning, Gu Shangshu xunzhi 古文尚書訓旨. With his sometime student Xu Xun he played a leading role in re-establishing the importance of Old Text learning at the beginning of Later Han. Though the Old Text did not receive imperial favour or position in the University, Wei Hong served as a Consultant under Emperor Guangwu.

Besides literary rhapsodies, hymns and eulogies, Wei Hong compiled the Han jiuqi 漢舊儀 in four pian, an account of the institutions of Former Han with additional remarks on Wang Mang and the early part of Later Han. Fragments of the work survive and are an important source for institutional history. -HHS 79/69B:2575-76*, 27/17:936-37; Bn 80:3.

Wei Huang 韋晃 [Dewei 德偉] (d.218); Jingzhao. An officer of the Censorate in the court of Han, in 218 Wei Huang joined the plot of Jin Wei and Geng Ji to take over Xu city and invite Guan Yu to come from the south. They attacked Cao Cao's agent Wang Pi and wounded him, but he made his escape and next morning gathered troops to destroy the rebels. Wei Huang and the others were executed. -SGZ 1:50; deC 89:518-519.

Wei Ji 衛覲 [Boru 伯儒]; Hedong. A precocious child, Wei Ji became known early for his scholarly ability. Expert on ancient script 古文, on the exotic "Bird Seal" 鳥篆 script, the official li shu 隸書 "Clerical Style" and the informal cao shu 草書 "Grass Style," Wei Ji probably compiled a first draft of the historical discussion Siti shushi 四體書勢 "Aspects of the Four Styles of Calligraphy," which was completed by his grandson Wei Heng 恆. JS 36:1061-66.

Wei Ji was first appointed to the offices of Cao Cao as an Excellency, then became a magistrate in Youfufeng and later returned to join the Secretariat.

As Cao Cao prepared to face Yuan Shao in 199, he was concerned that Liu Biao in Jing province might attack him from behind. He named Wei Ji an Imperial Clerk and sent him on embassy to Liu Zhang, Governor of Yi province. Liu Zhang had an old quarrel with Liu Biao, and Wei Ji was to seek his support as a threat to keep Liu Biao occupied. As Wei Ji came to Chang'an, he found the road was blocked, and he was obliged to halt there.

As a measure of order had now been restored, many refugees from the civil war were now willing to return to their homes. Numbers of people had fled from the region about Chang'an into Jing province, and wanted to go back, but there was limited employment for them. Wei Ji sent a message to Cao Cao's adviser Xun Yu that the old official salt monopoly should be restored and enforced, and the proceeds could be used to purchase cattle and farming equipment. Xun Yu put the proposal to Cao Cao, who accepted it and established a provincial salt administration.

Wei Ji returned to the Secretariat. In 211 the Director of Retainers Zhong Yao proposed an advance to the west towards Chang'an, ostensibly for operations against Zhang Lu in Hanzhong, but in fact to establish a measure of control over the north-western warlords. Cao Cao had Xun Yu ask Wei Ji about it, and he replied that the chieftains were concerned only to hold their positions, and they could be won over by honours and rewards. Cao Cao eventually approved Zhong Yao's forward policy, but he was then compelled to bring his major army to deal with their allied forces at Huayin; when he counted the cost he regretted not having followed Wei Ji's advice.

When Cao Cao established his ducal state in 216 Wei Ji became a Palace Attendant, and was commissioned with Wang Can to review the administration. After Cao Pi succeeded his father, Wei Ji spent a short time at the puppet court of Han, and he was largely responsible for the edicts by which Emperor Xian ceded his position to the new dynasty of Wei. He then returned to the Secretariat of Wei and was enfeoffed by Cao Pi.

Raised further in rank by Cao Rui and granted enfeoffment, Wei Ji continued his concern with government process, expressing concern at imperial extravagance and putting forward recommendations on legal reform. He also compiled a Weiguan yi 魏官儀 "Ceremonial of the Offices of Wei," to follow the work of Ying Shao on the Han. -SGZ 21:610-12*; Yang 63:164, deC 96:257-258, Goodman 98:65-69.

Wei Ji 衛覲, wife of: see the Lady Chen 陳 IV.

Wei Jie 魏桀/傑 [Qiqing 齊卿] (d.195); Youfufeng. Listed on a stele as a former student of Liu Kuan, Wei Jie became a magistrate in Hedong. He was admired by the reformist students at Luoyang in the 160s for his fearless criticism of powerful men.

In 188, as the Liang province rebels under Wang Guo approached Chang'an, the Intendant He Xun persuaded Emperor Ling to commission private troops. Wei Jie is named as one of five leaders of local gentry who received title as commandants, to raise their own regiment and join the imperial forces under He Xun's command. [XHS, quoted by HHS 58/48:1883 TC, describes him as a man from Guiyang commandery in the far south, but this is an error.]

In 195 Wei Jie was a colonel in the Northern Army. He accompanied the imperial party on its escape from Chang'an, but was killed in battle in Hongnong. -HHS 9:378, 67/57:2186 & JJ at 2394 Hui Dong, HHSJJ 58/48:2040 Hui Dong.

Wei Jin 委進 became Administrator of Taiyuan. -FSTY 5f:126.

Wei Jing 衛旌 [Ziqi 子旗]; Guangling. The same age as Bu Zhi, Wei Jing was a close friend and companion when they were refugees in Kuaiji in the 190s, and Bu Zhi later sent in a memorial to recommend him. Wei Jing became a member of the Secretariat of Wu and Administrator of Wuling, but was dismissed in 231 after he questioned Pan Jun's loyalty. -SGZ Wu 7: 1236-85, 16:1399.

Wei Jiu 隗久 or Wei Wen 文 (d.99). A retainer of Liu Jun, King of Chen, he was sent to kill the Lady Li Yi, widow of the former king Liu Xian, and members of her household. Wei Jiu was arrested, and Liu Jun, afraid he might be implicated, sent another client to kill him in prison. -HHS 50/40:1668.

Wei Ju 衛琚 or Wei Yao 瑤. In 144 Wei Ju was Deputy 領 to Zhao Chong the Protector of the Qiang when the officer Ma Xuan went over to the Qiang and sought to lead them outside the frontier. Wei Ju chased the fugitives, killed eight hundred of them, and captured 200,000 head of stock. -HHS 6:274 [as 琚], 87/77:2897 [as 瑤].

Wei Jun 韋浚; Jingzhao. XTS 74A:3045 says that Wei Jun, a great-grandson of Wei Xuancheng 玄成, Chancellor of Former Han [QHX 579-580], became Director of the Imperial Secretariat and was the father of Wei Bao.

HHSJJ 26/16:974 Hui Dong, notes that Jingzhao jiushi 京兆舊事 says Wei Wen'gao 文高, Administrator of Qinghe, was the father of Wei Shun, Wei Bao and Wei Yi. Hui Dong therefore suggests that Wen'gao was the style of Wei Jun.

This does not appear likely, however, for Wei Jun would have lived early the first century, while Wei Bao and Wei Yi were active a hundred years later. There must have been at least one intermediate generation, presumably represented by Wei Wen'gao, who was the son of Wei Jun and the father of Wei Bao and his brothers.

Wei Kai 衛開 (d.219). In the winter of 218 Wei Kai joined the garrison officer Hou Yin in raising a mutiny in Wan city, capital of Nanyang commandery. At the beginning of the following year, however, Cao Ren brought an army and destroyed them. -SGZ 18:546.

Wei Kang 韋康 [Yuanjiang 元將] (d.213); Jingzhao. Sons of Wei Duan the Governor of Liang province, Wei Kang and his brother Dan were admired by Kong Rong.

Wei Duan was an ally of Cao Cao, and when he went to the capital as Minister Coachman of Han about 208, Xun Yu recommended that Wei Kang take his father's place; he was ranked, however, as Inspector, not as Governor.

Wei Kang was popular with his subjects, but in 213 Ma Chao attacked from the west and laid siege to his headquarters at Ji city, the capital of Hanyang. Though the city was defended strongly, no relief came, and as the people were starving Wei Kang and the Administrator of Hanyang were forced to surrender. They were killed by Ma Chao. -SGZ 10:311-13, 25:701-03.

Wei Kun 爲毘. About 140 Wei Kun was Administrator of Nan commandery. He and other officials were reported by the Inspector Li Gu for corruption, but they bribed the General-in-Chief Liang Ji and had Li Gu transferred. -HYGZ 10C:165.

Wei Lang 魏朗 [Shaoying 少英] (d.169); Kuaiji. As a young man Wei Lang held local office in his home county. He was known for his ability in composition, and in 151 he was asked to write a eulogistic inscription for Wang E, the filial and suicidal daughter of the shaman Cao Yu.

Wei Lang later served at the commandery headquarters. Punctilious about proper conduct, he made a great fuss when his colleague Gu Kan wore a fur coat. After his brother was killed, however, Wei Lang avenged him on his enemy in broad daylight at the local yamen.

Wei Lang then fled to Chen, studied the apocrypha under Xi Zhongxin, and later attended the University at Luoyang. Having served in the offices of the Excellencies, he became a county magistrate at the capital of Pengcheng. The Chancellor, a eunuch relative, regularly broke the law, and as Wei Lang sent in reports calling for his punishment he was marked an enemy of the eunuchs.

In 157 there was a rebellion in Jiuzhen in the far south, and the Administrator Ni Shi was killed. Wei Lang was sent out as Commandant and drove the insurgents back into Rinan. Impressed by his success, Emperor Huan called him to the capital as a Consultant, and he then joined the Imperial Secretariat. He became Administrator of Henei, where he ran a model government, and was later brought back to the Secretariat by Chen Fan.

Wei Lang was praised by the reformers and students at the capital as a "hero" [俊 jun], second category in the major list of worthy men, but he was driven from office in the First Faction Incident of 166-167. Dou Wu praised him to Emperor Huan at that time, but when the Second Incident arose in 169, following the fall of Dou Wu Wei Lang was summonsed to the capital. He killed himself on the way.

Wei Lang's writings were collected under the title Weizi 魏子. -HHS 67/57:2200-01* & 2187-88, 84/74:2795, 86/76:2839, XC 4:6b.

Wei Li 衛颯 [Zichan 子產]; Henei. A man of humble family, Wei Li was fond of learning, and worked as a labourer in order to pay his teacher. He compiled a study on the Shi ji 史記 of Sima Qian 司馬遷, and during the time of Wang Mang he held local office in his commandery and in the provincial government.

In 26 Wei Li joined the offices of the Excellency Deng Yu. Noted for his good advice, he was appointed to the Imperial Censorate and then became a magistrate in Yingchuan. He governed well there, and was transferred to be Administrator of Guiyang.

That distant territory was strongly influenced by the barbarous customs of Jiaozhi, but Wei Li immediately began to civilise the people by establishing schools and reforming marriage customs. The furthest regions had hitherto been accessible only by boats, moving with difficulty along the rivers, but Wei Li constructed a road of 500 li through the mountains to bring the people under the authority and influence of the government. He settled them in villages, collected taxes, and restored the Former Han office for iron in Leiyang: this last provided the needs of all southern Jing province and was a source of considerable annual profit.

After ten years of peaceful and popular government, in 49 Wei Li was recalled to the capital. The emperor wanted to appoint him Minister Steward, but he was not well enough and returned to his family in Guiyang. Two years later he retired into private life, with the grant of a seal and cash, and died at home. He is classed by Fan Ye as a Benevolent Official 循吏. -HHS 76/66: 2458-60*; Miyakawa 60:30-31, deC 90:11 & 28 [both as Wei Sa].

Wei Liang 衛良. A member of the Imperial Secretariat in 169, Wei Liang joined the Director Liu Meng and the minister Zhang Huan in a petition that Wang Chang and Li Ying, known enemies of the eunuchs at court, should take part in the selection of Excellencies. Cao Jie and other eunuchs had an edict sent down to reprimand them, and the petitioners presented themselves in bonds at the imperial prison. They were released on payment of a fine equal to three months salary. -HHS 65/55:2141.

XC 8:1a-b tells of a Director of the Secretariat named Wei Liang, who left that office on grounds of ill health and returned to his humble home, where he received his guests with conversation and drinks of water under a mulberry tree. This probably relates to the Wei Liang described above.

Wei Man 魏滿 [Shuya 叔牙], Nanyang. A scholar and teacher of the Jing Fang interpretation of the Book of Changes, during the reign of Emperor Ming Wei Man served as Administrator of Hongnong. -HHS 79/69A: 2554.

Wei Mao 隗茂; Tianshui. Some time after the death of his kinsman Wei Ao in 33, Wei Mao raised a rebellion in Wudu and killed the Han Administrator there. The Commandery Assistant Kong Fan, aided by non-Chinese Di people led by Qizhongliu, defeated Wei Mao and killed him. -HHS 86/76:2859-60; Bn 59: 180.

Wei Meng 魏猛. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates in 125, Wei Meng took part in the coup led by Sun Cheng which destroyed the Yan clan and placed Liu Bao, Emperor Shun, upon the throne. He was rewarded with a county marquisate in Nan commandery.

After Sun Cheng forced the disgrace of the emperor's favourite Zhang Fang in 127, he and Wei Meng and their colleagues were all sent out to their fiefs, but in 128 the emperor recalled their good work and they were permitted to return to the capital. Wei Meng died a few years later. -HHS 78/68:2516-18.

Wei Mi 衛密 see Wei Hong 衛宏.

Wei Mi 衛彌. Commandant in the north of Guangling about 200, Wei Mi and the magistrate Liang Xi were driven from their posts by rebels. They took refuge with the local officer Xu Xuan, and he sheltered them and arranged their escape. -SGZ 22:645.

Wei Mou 隗茂 see Wei Mao 隗茂.

Wei Ping 魏騰. In 220 Wei Ping held command under Su Ze in the settlement of newly-restored Liang 涼 province in the far northwest. In 231 he accompanied Sima Yi against Zhuge Liang. He urged an attack, but the Wei forces were heavily defeated. -SGZ 16:492, SGZ Shu 5:925.

Wei Qi 衛覬 see Wei Ji 衛覲.

Wei [Qiqing] 魏齊卿 see Wei Jie 魏傑. -HHS 67/57: 2186 & JJ at 2394 Hui Dong.

Wei Rui 韋瑞 see Wei Duan 韋端.

Wei Sa 衛颯 see Wei Li 衛颯.

Wei Shao 魏紹; Julu. XTS 72B:2655 says that Wei Shao was a son of Wei Zhou.

Wei Shao 魏劭; Pingyuan. About 170 the Administrator of Hedong Shi Bi was falsely accused by the eunuch Hou Lan and was brought to the capital in a cage cart. Shi Bi had formerly been Chancellor of Pingyuan and had nominated Wei Shao as Filial and Incorrupt. Disguised as a servant, Wei Shao went to attend him in prison.

Then Shi Bi was sentenced to death, and Wei Shao gathered a group of colleagues from Pingyuan to sell the commandery residence in Luoyang, using the proceeds to bribe Hou Lan into arranging the reduction of Shi Bi's sentence to a spell of convict labour. [Commentators rightly observe that the residence was a public building, controlled by officials, and ask how Wei Shao and his group could sell it for their own purposes: unless the story is false, there must have been substantial sleight of hand and embezzlement.]

Some people criticised the men, but Taoqiu Hong praised their sense of honour, and his argument was widely accepted. -HHS 64/54:2111.

Wei [Shujian] 韋叔堅 or Li Shujian 李叔堅; Runan. An officer of the provincial government, Wei Shujian was for a few days accompanied by a dog which walked on its hind legs, put on his official cap, and tended the fire. Though others were terrified at such behaviour, Wei Shujian refused to see it as strange, and he resisted all attempts to have him kill the animal; it soon died of its own accord.

Wei Shujian later joined the offices of the Grand Commandant, served as magistrate in two counties, and was then Administrator of Guiyang. Both his sons also held office. -FSTY 9:72; Nylan 83:539-540.

Wei Shun 韋順 (d.24). Designated Administrator of Shanggu by the Gengshi Emperor in 24, Wei Shun was sent to replace the incumbent Geng Kuang, an associate of Liu Xiu the future Emperor Guangwu. As he arrived, he was killed by Liu Xiu's officer Geng Yan, son of Geng Kuang. -HHS 19/9:705-06.

Wei Shun 韋順 [Shuwen 叔文]; Jingzhao. Son of Wei Jun, Wei Shun was the elder brother of Wei Bao and Wei Yi. He had a fine reputation, but refused invitations to the offices at the capital, and preferred to play music on the lute 琴.

Wei Shun did serve as a county magistrate in Dong commandery and in Runan, and in the latter place the people set up a shrine in his honour. -HHS 26/16:920 & JJ at 974 Hui Dong.

Wei Si 維汜 or Gou Si 緱汜; Henan. Claiming to be a spirit, Wei Si established a religious cult with several hundred followers. He was taken and secretly executed about 40, presumably to avoid widespread disturbance.

His followers now claimed Wei Si had not died but had undergone a spiritual transformation. In this belief, there was an uprising in Lujiang led by his disciple Li Guang in 41, and another in 43 in eastern Henan, Wei Si's home country, led by Dan Chen and Fu Zhen. After some difficulty, both rebellions were put down. -HHS 24/14:838, 18/8:695.

Wei Tan 魏譚 [Shaonian 少間]; Langye. During the troubles at the beginning of Later Han, Wei Tan and several dozen other people were captured by bandits, who tied them up and planned to eat them one after the other. Because Wei Tan appeared conscientious, he was unbound and put in charge of the cooking, but was tied up again each night.

One of the bandits, Yi Changgong, took pity on Wei Tan, unloosed his bonds and told him to flee. As Wei Tan refused to escape at the expense of the others, Yi Changgong helped them to get away too.

In the time of Emperor Ming Wei Tan became the head of the household of a princess. -HHS 39/29:1300*.

Wei [Tanquan] 衛彈勸 of Nanyang was head of his local chief district 都鄉正. -SJZ 29:18a.

LS 25:23b lists a damaged stele in the name of Jie Tan 街彈, who is also described as head of a chief district 都鄉正. It seems possible that this is a reference to the same piece.

Wei Teng 魏滕 [Zhoulin 周林]; Kuaiji. Grandson of Wei Lang, Wei Teng became Officer of Merit to Sun

Ce in Kuaiji. A man of strict morality, on one occasion he opposed Sun Ce, who wanted to kill him but was firmly dissuaded by the Lady Wu. Later he also fell foul of Sun Quan, and was saved only by intervention of his friend, the diviner Wu Fan.

Wei Teng was a magistrate in several counties, including in his home commandery of Kuaiji, and then became Administrator of Boyang. Despite the conflicts with his rulers, as a man of family he was important to the Sun clan and to the state of Wu. -SGZ Wu 5:1196, 18:1422-23; deC 90:504.

Wei Tiao 韋條 or Li Tiao 李條; Runan. Son of Wei Shujian, he became Commandant in Shu commandery. -FSTY 9:72; Nylan 83:540.

Wei Wei 衛爲 of Nanyang was head of his local chief district 都鄉正. -SJZ 31:3a.

Wei Weilong 韋威龍 or Li Weilong 李威龍; Runan. Son of Wei Shujian, he served in the offices of the Excellency over the Masses. -FSTY 9:72; Nylan 83:540.

Wei Wen 衛文; Henei. An adviser to Han Xin, Gengshi Administrator of Henei in 24, Wei Wen was an old friend of Guangwu's officer Feng Yi, and was persuaded to convince Han Xin that he should surrender. -HHJ 2:20.

A man from the same county as Wei Li/Sa, Wei Wen was no doubt a kinsman.

Wei Wen 隗文 see Wei Jiu 隗久.

Wei [Wen'gao] 韋文高; Jingzhao. Probably the son of Wei Jun, Wei Wen'gao became Administrator of Qinghe. He was the father of Wei Shun, Wei Bao and Wei Yi. See sub Wei Jun.

Wei Xi 隗禧 [Ziya 子牙]; Jingzhao. Though born of humble family, Wei Xi was fond of learning from the time he was young. As trouble developed in the region of Chang'an during the early 190s, he went south into Jing province. Taking his books with him, he would read even as he was gleaning food-plants in the wilderness, and he became an expert not only in the classics but also in astronomy.

When Cao Cao took over Jing province in 208 he appointed Wei Xi to his staff.

In the early 220s Wei Xi became an officer at the royal court of Cao Cao's son, Cao Lin, with whom he shared his love of learning. Retiring in his eighties, he returned to his home country, where he received many students.

Wei Xi preferred the traditional classics, notably the Changes, Poetry and Ritual, to Zuo zhuan, which was more popular at this time. He could recite them by heart, and also provided vast commentaries upon them, but all of it was spoken and none was written down. Yu Huan, compiler of Wei lue, knew Wei Xu, and praised him as one of the seven Confucian Exemplars 儒宗 who maintained the tradition of Han scholarship in time of disorder. -SGZ 13:422; Fang 52:170-171.

Wei Xiang 隗相. Wei Xiang became celebrated for the manner in which he served his mother with utmost filial piety, going to particular lengths to provide her with drinking water from the Yangzi. -YSS:21a-b.

Wei Xiao 隗囂 see Wei Ao 隗囂.

Wei Xin 衛歆 [Zihu 子胡]: Wei>Julu. XTS 72B:2655 says that Wei Xin, descended from an ancient family, became Administrator of Julu and moved his family residence there. This was probably at the beginning of Later Han.

Wei Xin 衛訢. A eunuch, about 105 Wei Xin was Palace Tutor to Liu Qing the King of Qinghe, half-brother of Emperor He. When he was found to have embezzled vast quantities of cash, investigators were sent, and Liu Qing was asked why he had not reported the matter.

Liu Qing replied that his officials were appointed directly by the imperial government, and he was not entitled to question or investigate their activities. Pleased with the reply, the emperor awarded Liu Qing all of Wei Xin's ill-gotten gains. -HHS 55/45:1802.

Wei Xiu 衛修; Nanyang. About 70 Wei Xiu was accused of a capital crime. Through intervention by his former patron Chen Mao, then Inspector of Jing province, he was released, but was later executed for another offence. -FSTY 4:29 [this text is not entirely secure or clear.]

Wei Xu 魏續; Wuyuan. Wei Xu was a relative of Lü Bu, who made him peacetime commander of Gao Shun's troops. Gao Shun, a far superior commander, took them back for active service.

In 198, as Lü Bu was under siege by Cao Cao in Xiapi city, he accused his officer Hou Cheng of treachery, and implicated Wei Xu and others of his friends. Frightened and resentful, they went over to the enemy. -SGZ 7:227-28.

Wei Xuan 魏玄; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Wei Xuan was a senior member of the group. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Wei Xun 隗恂 [Bochun 伯春] (d.32); Tianshui. Elder son of Wei Ao, in 29 he was sent as a hostage to the court of Emperor Guangwu, where he was appointed a colonel and enfeoffed as a marquis. Nonetheless Wei Ao had no commitment to the alliance, and he maintained his search for independence and his double-dealing with Gongsun Shu.

As the imperial armies moved against Wei Ao in 30, Guangwu attempted to force his submission by threatening to kill Wei Xun, and he demanded that his brother Wei Chun be sent to join him. Wei Ao did not respond, and as Guangwu embarked on his second campaign in 32 he killed Wei Xun. -HHS 13/3:524-30; Bn 59:166-175.

Wei Xun 衛恂; Chenliu. A common soldier in Cao Cao's service, about 210 Wei Xun was promoted and recommended by his commander Yang Jun. He became a county magistrate and was later an officer of the Imperial Censorate. -SGZ 23:664.

Wei Yan 韋顏 or Han Yan 韓顏. Former officers of the Gengshi Emperor, in 27 Wei/Han Yan and Zuo Fang controlled counties in Nanyang. As Guangwu's officers Zhai Zun and Zang Gong came to attack, they surrendered. -HHS 18/8:692.

Wei Yan 隗延 [Wenchang 文長] (d.234); Nanyang. In 211 Wei Yan followed Liu Bei into Yi province. He was at that time an ordinary soldier, but he did well in combat and was promoted to be a general. After Liu Bei had taken Hanzhong and proclaimed himself king there in 219, he withdrew to set up court at Chengdu. It was generally expected that Zhang Fei would hold command in the north, but Liu Bei named Wei Yan as Administrator of Hanzhong and Area Commander for that region.

Wei Yan was later enfeoffed, and when Zhuge Liang was engaged on his campaigns in the north from the late 220s Wei Yan was one of his chief subordinates. He was a bitter enemy of Zhuge Liang's chief of staff Yang Yi, and though Zhuge Liang was able to use both men, after his death in 234 Yang Yi had Wei Yan disgraced and executed with all his family. -SGZ Shu 10:1002-04*.

Wei Yao 衛瑤 see Wei Ju 衛据. -HHS 87/77:2897.

Wei Yao 韋曜 see Wei Zhao 韋昭 of Wu.

Wei Yi 隗義 (d.24); Tianshui. Elder brother of Wei Cui, in 23 he joined his rebel venture in the nominal cause of Han. Despite his seniority, Wei Yi accepted the lead of Wei Cui, who was evidently a more forceful personality. Both brothers, however, were then obliged to give chief position in the movement to their nephew Wei Ao, who had broader acceptance among their local associates. They may have expected that he would serve as a figurehead in their interest, but Wei Ao soon established his own authority.

In the summer of 23 Wei Ao had all his followers swear allegiance to Han and issued a proclamation against Wang Mang. Wei Yi took title as General on the Left. Support for the imperial house of Liu did not necessarily imply endorsement of the Gengshi Emperor, leader of the Han rebels, but when Wei Ao and his uncles were summoned to the new court at Chang'an they accepted the call, and Wei Yi was confirmed in his general's title.

Later that year, very likely at the instigation of Wei Cui and Wei Yi, there was a new rebellion in Tianshui. The brothers planned to go back and take part, but in the winter, before they could leave Chang'an, they were reported by Wei Ao and were arrested and executed. Wei Ao had thus rid himself of two senior rivals, and he was rewarded with rank as an Excellency. -HHS 13/3:513-20; Bn 54:123-126, Bn 59:86.

Wei Yi 韋義 [Jijie 季節]; Jingzhao. Son of Wei Jun and younger brother of Wei Shun and Wei Bao, when Wei Yi was young he already had the same high reputation as his brothers. Having held local office in both commandery and provincial administrations, about 140 he was appointed to the offices of the Grand Commandant Huan Yan and later became a magistrate in Shu, Ganling and Chen. He ruled so well in each place that the prisons were empty.

Wei Yi presented several memorials to Emperor Shun urging reforms and the recruitment of good Confucianists. They had no effect, and he later left office when his brother Shun died. He was invited again to the offices of the capital, but did not accept.

When Wei Yi died, his former subjects in Shu commandery set up a temple in his honour, and all three counties sent mourners to his funeral. -HHS 26/16:920-21*.

Wei Yi 韋毅 (d.166). Administrator of Kuaiji in the 150s, Wei Yi appointed Zhu Jun to his staff on the recommendation of the magistrate Du Shang.

Wei Yi later became Administrator of Chenliu, but in 166 he was found guilty of embezzlement and killed himself. -HHS 7:317, 71/61:2308.

Wei Yin 魏愷 (d.173). Formerly Chancellor to Liu Chong, King of Chen, in 173 he was Chancellor of Pei when his successor Shi Qian reported that Wei Yin and the king had held ceremonies asking the deities for inappropriate good fortune; this was Impiety.

Shi Qian and Wei Yin were brought to the capital by cage-cart and examined by the eunuch Wang Fu, the Imperial Secretariat and the Censorate. Wei Yin acknowledged that he and the king had held worship to Huang-Lao, but they had asked only for long life and good fortune, and had made no improper requests.

Wang Fu and his colleagues reported that Wei Yin's administration had been well carried out, and though the ceremonies had not been correct there was no question of Impiety: Shi Qian had thus laid false information against his king. Both men were executed, while an edict ordered there be no further investigation of Liu Chong. -HHS 50/40:1669, 8:334-35.

Wei Ying 魏應 [Junbo 君伯]; Rengcheng. A scholar from an early age, about 30 Wei Ying went to Luoyang to study the Lu version of the Classic of Poetry, and he was noted for his concentration on the work. He went back to become a commandery officer, was nominated as Understanding the Classics and became a Literary Scholar in the kingdom of Ji Yin. Resigning on grounds of illness, he became a hermit in the wilderness but attracted hundreds of students.

About 60 Wei Ying came to the capital as an Academician. He served as a Palace Attendant to Emperor Ming, and in 70 he was made Minister Herald. He had a most imposing presence, and when an envoy of the Northern Xiongnu sought to call upon the celebrated scholar Cheng Gong, Wei Ying was chosen to impersonate him.

In 75 Wei Ying was appointed Minister of the Household, and under Emperor Zhang he became General of the Household for All Purposes and then tutor to the imperial son Liu Kang. He continued to have a great many students, and the emperor regularly asked his advice, admired him and rewarded him. When the great conference on Confucian philosophy was held at the White Tiger Hall in 79, Wei Ying decided the questions to be considered.

In 80 Wei Ying was appointed Administrator of Shangdang, and he was later a Commandant of Cavalry. He died in office. -HHS 79/69B:2571*; Texts: 347 [Loewe], Tjan 49:161-163.

Wei You 衛攸 (d.193); Youbeiping. A senior clerk to Liu Yu in 192, Wei You persuaded him it would be wiser to tolerate Gongsun Zan and not to attack him. In the following year, however, Wei You died and Liu Yu renewed his mistaken plans. -HHS 73/63:2356, SGZ 8:244.

Wei Yu 魏愉 [Yanchang 彥長]; Julu. XTS 72B:2655 says that Wei Yu, son of Wei Xin, became a Palace Attendant.

Wei Yu 衛羽. In 160 Wei Yu was an Assistant Officer in Yan province. The Inspector Diwu Zhong wanted to impeach Shan Kuang, the corrupt Administrator of Jiyin who was a nephew of the powerful eunuch Shan Chao. He sent Wei Yu, who arrested many of Shan Kuang's family and retainers and recovered quantities of stolen goods. Shan Kuang sent Ren Fang to kill him, but Wei Yu arrested him too, and sent him to the capital.

Wei Yu later persuaded the bandit leader Shusun Wuji to a short-lived surrender. -HHS 41/31:1404; deC 89:22.

Wei [Yuanpi] 魏元丕 (d.181). Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Wei Yuanpi spent a period of probation as a gentleman cadet and then joined the Imperial Secretariat. He left office for a time after the death of his mother the Lady Tai, but returned to the Secretariat and was later appointed Inspector of Liang province. He evidently died in that office, and a distinguished group of sponsors set up a stele in his memory. -LS 10:17b-20a.

Wei Yue 魏悅; Julu. XTS 72B:2655 says that Wei Yue was a son of Wei Xin.

Wei Zhang 偉璋 see Xing Zhang 姓璋.

Wei Zhao 魏昭 [Degong 德公]; Chen. When he was a boy, Wei Zhao was accepted by Guo Tai as a servant-pupil. On one occasion Guo Tai was unwell and ordered Wei Zhao to prepare him some gruel. When he brought it, Guo Tai threw it on the floor, complaining that he had presented it with lack of respect, and without respect everything was valueless. This was repeated twice more, but Wei Zhao maintained his composure, and Guo Tai then praised him and accepted him as a friend. Wei Zhao became a most subtle scholar. -HHJ 23:275, XC 4:9b.

Wei Zhao 韋昭 [Hongsi 弘嗣]; Wu. The personal name frequently appears as Yao 曜; the change was made to avoid taboo on the personal name of Sima Zhao, a founder of the Jin dynasty in the third century.

A fine scholar, Wei Zhao held clerical posts at the court of Sun Quan and became a member of the suite of the Heir Sun He 孫和. In 252 he was commissioned to work with others on Wu shu 吳書, the official history of the state, and he also collated the imperial library.

About 272, the ruler Sun Hao 孫皓 asked Wei Zhao to place the biography of his father Sun He among the Annals 紀 of the official history. Wei Zhao refused, for Sun He had not reigned as a sovereign. On this and other grounds he was arrested and executed. -SGZ Wu 20:1460-64*; deC 90:550-554.

Wei Zhen 衛臻 [Gongzhen 公振]; Chenliu. Son of Wei Zi, the late loyal companion of Cao Cao, Wei Zhen was named Reporting Officer by Xiahou Dun, Administrator of Chenliu for Cao Cao, about 200. When he was supposed to bring his wife out for a feast, however, he refused to do so as it was inappropriate. Xiahou Dun was angry and briefly imprisoned him.

Wei Zhen was later a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates at the court of Han. A certain Zhu Yue had planned a coup against Cao Cao and when he was taken he sought to implicate Wei Zhen; Cao Cao refused to believe the accusation. Soon afterwards, in 213, as Cao Cao had three of his daughters made Honoured Ladies in the harem of the Han Emperor Xian, Wei Zhen acted as the formal messenger from the emperor to his future father-in-law. He then stayed with Cao Cao as a member of his staff, and in recognition of his father he was enfeoffed as a secondary marquis.

As Cao Pi succeeded his father in 220 he appointed Wei Zhen a Cavalier Regular Attendant. Wei Zhen took part in the process which brought the abdication of Han in favour of Wei, and he was rewarded with a full marquisate. Many courtiers at this time celebrated the glories of Wei, but Wei Zhen emphasised the achievement of Han and the generosity of its abdication and Cao Pi indeed undertook to respect the former emperor.

Wei Zhen became a Deputy Director of the Secretariat and accompanied Cao Pi on campaign. He later held administrative office under Cao Rui, was responsible for appointment to office, and commanded troops against Zhuge Liang of Shu. In 237 he was named an Excellency, and held that rank until 248.

When he died a short time later he was awarded posthumous honours. -SGZ 22:647-49*.

The Annals for 199 at HHS 9:381 describe how the Imperial Secretariat, now under the control of Cao Cao, was re-arranged to provide for two Deputy Directors, and the Hanguan yi of Ying Shao, cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ at 354-55, says that Wei Zhen became Deputy Director on the Right. This statement, however, must refer to his position under Cao Pi twenty years later.

Wei Zheng 魏整 [Boyu 伯玉]; Hanzhong. A local officer, Wei Zheng was involved in repair work on the Baoye Road through the Qin Ling ranges. His contribution was recorded in a stele inscription of 148. -LS 4:5a.

Wei [Zhongda] 韋仲達. A gentleman from the region about Chang'an, he and Wei Biao and Gongsun Boda were celebrated scholars, and the local people referred to them as the three "intelligent ones," from the common character 達 in their styles.

Wei Zhongda became a county magistrate in Henei. -HHSJJ 26/16:970 Hui Dong quoting Sanfu juehu.

Wei [Zhongdao] 衛仲道; Hedong. First husband of the Lady Cai Yan, he died about 190. The couple had no children, and the Lady returned to the home of her father, Cai Yong. -HHS 84/74:2800.

Wei Zhou 魏宙 [Huikai 惠開]; Julu. XTS 72B:2655 says that Wei Zhou, son of Wei Yu, became Administrator of Pingyuan.

Wei Zhu 韋著 [Xiuming 休明]; Jingzhao. Son of Wei Bao, Wei Zhu became known while he was young for his good conduct, for his scholarship on the Book of Changes and the Han school of Poetry, and for various arts and skills. He would not accept local office, and he refused an invitation from the General-in-Chief Liang Ji.

In 159, as Chen Fan became Director of the Imperial Secretariat under the new personal government of Emperor Huan, he recommended Wei Zhu as one of the five most worthy men of the empire. A special carriage was sent to invite him to office, but as they were on the road, Wei Zhu claimed to be ill. He went back home, then disappeared into the hills to live as a hermit. Officials at court argued that he should be punished, but the emperor forgave him. A second edict ordered the administrator of Jingzhao to approach him again, with utmost courtesy, but Wei Zhu still refused to take office.

In 168, after the destruction of Dou Wu and Chen

Fan, the victorious eunuchs sought worthy men to serve as figure-heads in order that their regime might be better accepted by the gentlemen of the empire. They persuaded Emperor Ling to appoint Wei Zhu as Chancellor of Donghai, and the edict was brought to his home and pressed so firmly that he felt obliged to go. [FSTY 5, perhaps unfairly, says that he was eager to accept.]

Wei Zhu had married a second time, and his new wife, arrogant and wilful, interfered in the local administration. At the same time, his rule was strict and he was accused of cruelty by a man he had punished. Wei Zhu lost his reputation, he was sentenced to a period of convict service, and as he was at last on his way home he was killed by bandits. Those reclusive scholars who had refused their own invitations to take office felt ashamed, and Ying Shao contrasted his conduct unkindly with that of Jiang Gong. -HHS 26/16:921, XHS 3:21a, XTS 74A:3045, FSTY 5:40; Nylan 83:474-476, Vervoorn 90:165.

Wei Zi 衛茲 [Zixu 子許] (d.190); Chenliu. A man of principle, he refused several invitations to office at the capital, but in 189, as Cao Cao fled Dong Zhuo and came to Chenliu, Wei Zi met and admired him. He became a close friend and gave family property to raise troops.

In the following year, now an officer under the Administrator Zhang Miao, Wei Zi led a detachment to support Cao Cao's attack on Dong Zhuo's forces in Henei. They were heavily defeated, and Wei Zi was killed. Cao Cao always remembered his friendship and regularly paid respects at his tomb. -SGZ 1:6, 22:647-48.

Weibeida 尉卑大 or Weibida 尉畢大. King of Nearer Jushi and an ally of Han, in 96 Weibeida was attacked by King Zhuodi of Further Jushi, who believed he had spoken against him to the Chinese. Zhuodi captured Weibeida's wife and children, but in the following year a Chinese army defeated Zhuodi and killed him. -HHS 88/78:2930.

Weibida 尉畢大 see Weibeida 尉卑大.

Weichou[tai] 尉仇台 see Weiqiutai 尉仇台.

[Weiming (style)] 威明 [surname and personal name unknown]; Wudu. A local officer of the commandery, in 172 this man joined in setting up a stele to commemorate the road construction work of the Administrator Li Yu. -LS 4:12b.

Weiqiu 尉仇 see Weiqiutai 尉仇台.

Weiqitai 尉仇台 [Wigutae] I; Fuyu. Son and Heir to the King of Fuyu in present-day central Manchuria, in 120 Weiqitai was sent with tribute to the imperial court. He was rewarded by Emperor An with an official seal and some cloth embroidered with gold, and there were annual embassies for several years thereafter.

In the autumn of 121 raiders from Gaogouli [Koguryo], southern neighbours of Fuyu, attacked Xuantu commandery and besieged its capital. In the winter Weiqitai was sent with twenty thousand men to assist the Chinese, and early in the following year their combined forces broke the siege and killed five hundred of the raiders.

From this entry and the one immediately following, it appears that Fuyu and Gaogouli were longstanding enemies, and the alliance with the Chinese was a policy created by that circumstance. More generally, Gaogouli had seceded from the original state of Fuyu. -HHS 5:234-35, 85/75:2815; Gardiner 69B:160.

Weiqitai 尉仇台 [Wigutae] II; Fuyu. King of Fuyu at the end of the second century, his state was under pressure from Xianbi in the west and from Gaogouli [Koguryo] in the south. Weiqitai accordingly submitted to the Chinese warlord Governor Gongsun Du, who granted him a woman of his own clan as wife. -SGZ 30:842.

The distance in time between the entries for Weiqitai in HHS and in SGZ, and the record of an intervening King Futai in 167 makes it clear that there were two men of the same name in different generations. There may, however have been dittography in the texts.

Weiqiuzhi 尉仇治 see Weiqitai 尉仇台.

Weishi 位侍 of Yutian [Khotan]. In the 50s the regional hegemon King Xian of Suoju [Yarkand] transferred King Yulin of Yutian to be ruler of the state of Ligui; Yulin's younger brother Weishi took his place.

About a year later King Xian became doubtful of the loyalty of some of his subordinate rulers, including Weishi. He summoned them to his capital and killed them. -HHS 88/78:2925.

Weiwang Bi 威王弼 was a gentleman cadet. -FSTY 5f:129.

Weiyang, Lady of 渭陽君 see the Lady Dong Bo 董白.

Wen Bu 文布 or Ai Bu 艾布; Nan. Local clan leaders in 219, Wen Bu and Deng Kai gathered non-Chinese people from the western hills to resist the invading forces of Sun Quan. Defeated by Lu Xun's officer Xie Jing, they fled west into Yi province and received military appointment under Liu Bei.

Later, when Lu Xun invited them to surrender, Wen Bu changed sides and brought his people back. -SGZ Wu 13:1345.

Wen Chou 文醜 (d.200). A noted cavalry commander of Yuan Shao, Wen Chou was ambushed and killed by Cao Cao at the Yan Crossing of the Yellow River. -SGZ 1:19.

Wen Gong 濫貢 [Xianzong 顯宗]; Nanyang. A former Chancellor of Dongping, in 156 Wen Gong was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16a.

Wen Hui 溫恢 [Manji 曼基]; Taiyuan. Son of Wen Ru, Wen Hui was fifteen when his father died as Administrator of Zhuo commandery, and he accompanied the funeral back to his home country. The family was reasonably well-to-do, but trouble was brewing and Wen Hui observed that wealth was of small use in such a time, so he distributed his property amongst his kinsmen. The local authorities were impressed and recommended Wen Hui as Filial and Incorrupt. He became a magistrate, then head of the commandery units Pengcheng and Lu; in each place he gained an excellent reputation.

About 210 Wen Hui was appointed as a clerk in Cao Cao's offices as Imperial Chancellor, and he was later sent out as Inspector of Yang province, with responsibility for defence of the frontier against Sun Quan. In 219, as Sun Quan attacked the key city of Hefei, the troops of several provinces gathered for the defence, but Wen Hui remarked to his colleague Pei Qian that the real threat was not on the Huai but on the Han River, where Liu Bei's general Guan Yu was facing Cao Ren. This was indeed correct.

When Cao Pi came to the throne in 220 Wen Hui became a Palace Attendant at the capital and was then named Administrator of Wei commandery, the core of the Cao family fief. A few years later he was transferred to be Inspector of Liang 涼 province in the far northwest, with authority also as Protector of the Qiang. He died on the road to take up that position; he was aged forty-five sui.

Cao Pi issued an edict of eulogy for Wen Hui, and made his son Sheng 生 a secondary marquis. As the young man died soon afterwards, the fief was ended: see also sub Sheng [surname unknown]. -SGZ 15:478-79*.

Wen Ji 文極 [Jijiang 季姜], the Lady; Guanghai. Second wife of Wang Tang, Administrator and later Court Architect, the Lady Wen cared for his son Wang Bo and his two daughters by his first marriage as well for as three sons and two daughters of her own. Learned in the Poetry and Ritual, she was admired, together with her daughter-in-law the Lady Yang Jin, wife of Wang Bo, and the Lady Zhang Shuji, wife of her grandson Wang Zun, for the training she gave in generous conduct.

The Lady accompanied her husband on all his postings until his death. When she herself died at the age of eighty-one all her children came to the funeral, and people were amazed at the number of officials who attended. Much of the credit for the prosperity of the family was attributed to her. -HYZ 10C:177, 12:236.

Wen Kai 文愷; Ba. As a local officer in 154, Wen Kai joined his colleagues in urging the Administrator Dan Wang to send in a report describing the difficulty of maintaining control over the great area of the commandery, and recommending that the territory be divided into smaller commanderies. The court did not agree. -HYZ 1:5.

Wen Long 文龍. According to HHS 6:256, Wen Long was Administrator of Guiyang in 129, and was enfeoffed for his fine administration. According to HHJ 18:211, an unnamed Commandant of Hanyang presented a large pearl at this time, and was enfeoffed as a reward. The recorded texts of the edicts are very similar, and probably refer to the same man, but it is not possible to judge whether Wen Long was the correct name, which office he may have held, nor the precise reason for his enfeoffment.

Wen Mu 文穆. As Protector of the Wuhuan, Wen Mu shared command with Lai Miao the Commandant of Cavalry in one column of the ambitious but unsuccessful campaign against the Northern Xiongnu in 73. Their troops included northern militia with Wuhuan and Xianbi auxiliaries, and Wen Mu was presumably responsible for the non-Chinese contingent. -HHS 23/13:810.

Wen Mu 文穆; Runan. Three generations of Wen Mu's family had held high rank in the imperial service. After Wen Mu himself had served for a time as a commandery officer, he was called up for an examination and became an Academician at the Imperial University.

He was then Assistant to the Minister of Ceremonies, was appointed Palace Attendant and a General of the Household, and served later as Administrator of Jiujiang, Pengcheng and Chenliu. He died about 180, and his former students set up a stele in his honour. -SJZ 23:8b-9a, Cai 8:2.

Wen Ping 文聘 [Zhongye 仲業]; Nanyang. A senior commander under Liu Biao, Wen Ping was stationed to defend the north of his territory. After Liu Biao's death in 208, his son Liu Zong took over his position but then surrendered the province to Cao Cao. He summoned Wen Ping, but Wen Ping replied, "Since I have not been able to keep the province intact, I can only wait for punishment," a formula of apology and refusal.

After Cao Cao crossed the Han, Wen Ping went to him. Asked the reason for his delay, he explained that he had hoped to maintain resistance in honour of his duty to Liu Biao, but now that the cause was clearly lost he had no alternative but to surrender. He wept as he spoke, and Cao Cao admired his sense of loyalty.

Wen Ping went with the army in pursuit of Liu Bei and was took part in the success at the Chang Slope in Nan commandery. After the defeat at the Red Cliffs, as the territory was still contested Cao Cao made Wen Ping his Administrator of Jiangxia, which was divided with Sun Quan, and enfeoffed him as a secondary marquis. Independently or in joint operations with Yue Jin, based at Xiangyang further up the Han, Wen Ping made a number of raids against Guan Yu, who controlled the greater part of Jing province on behalf of Liu Bei.

As Cao Pi took the throne in 220 he raised Wen Ping to a district marquisate and granted him the Staff of Authority. When Xiaohou Shang attacked Jiangling in 222 Wen Ping occupied the mouth of the Han to guard his left flank. He now received a county marquisate and was named General of the Rear. In 226 Jiangxia was heavily attacked by a large army of Wu, but Wen Ping maintained the defence for over three weeks, and when the enemy withdrew he pursued and attacked them with success. He received an addition of 19,000 households to his fief.

At this point in Wen Ping's biography the commentary of Pei Songzhi inserts an account from Wei lue, which says that on one occasion that Sun Quan came to attack Wen Ping, the fortifications of his city had been washed down by heavy rain and could not be repaired because the people had scattered. Wen Ping ordered his followers to hide themselves, then set himself at ease on a couch in his residence. Concerned that there might be a trap, Sun Quan led his men away. This stratagem of the Empty City 空城計 is also attributed to Liu Bei's general Zhao Yun in Hanzhong in 219 and, most famously but without good authority, to Zhuge Liang: see deC 90:438 and 585, and Fang 52: 215-216.

Wen Ping governed Jiangxia and maintained the borders until his death during the 240s. -SGZ 18:539-40*.

Wen Qi 文齊 [Ziqi 子奇] (d.37); Guanghan. Colonel of the City Gates at Chang'an in the time of Emperor Ping, Wen Qi was appointed Commandant of the Dependent State of Jianwei by Wang Mang. He constructed an irrigation system which improved the yield of agriculture, and the people established a temple in his honour.

In 19 Wen Qi replaced Lian Dan 廉丹 as Administrator of Yizhou commandery. The territory was restless and rebellious, but Wen Qi again developed an irrigation system, extended colonisation and agriculture, organised a militia and established frontier posts. The non-Chinese submitted, and he was able to restore peace.

After the fall of Wang Mang, Wen Qi held himself aloof as Gongsun Shu established himself in Yi province, rejecting offers of enfeoffment and marriage alliance. Instead, he sent messengers to Emperor Guangwu by round-about routes, and after the Han armies destroyed Gongsun Shu in 36 Wen Qi was named a general and given title as Marquis Who Perfects Honour 成義侯.

Wen Qi died on his way to the capital, but the people of Yizhou also set up shrines to his memory. -HHS 86/76:2846, HYGZ 4:48 & 58, 10C:173; Bn 67: 61-62, QHX:582.

Wen Shou 溫壽; Taiyuan. Wen Shou was the eldest son of Wen Xu, who died a heroic death in 30 and was granted a special tomb at Luoyang. His sons were appointed gentlemen cadets. [On the number of sons, see sub Wen Yi.]

Wen Shou became a magistrate in Ji'nan. One night he dreamt that his father came to him and said he wished to lie in his home country. Wen Shou sent in a request to Emperor Guangwu, who gave approval for the body to be reburied in the family grave in Taiyuan.

-HHS 81/71:2673.

Wen Shu 溫恕; Taiyuan. During the reign of Emperor Ling Wen Shu became Administrator of Zhuo commandery, but died comparatively young. -SGZ 15: 478.

XTS 72B:2661 says that Wen Shu was a son of Wen Yi and a grandson of Wen Xu. Those two men were both active in the first half of the first century AD, however, so this man cannot have been so close a descendant.

Wen [Shuliang] 文叔良; Nanyang. Assistant to the Chancellor of Ganling about 200, Wen Shuliang dreamt he was by a river bank when he saw the spirit of a certain Lan Xiang, which asked him to arrange a proper burial. Next morning he went to the place, found a coffin washed up, and duly carried out the commission. -SJZ 5:18b.

Wen [Shuyang] 文叔陽 (d.144); Shanyang. Having held a number of local offices, including headman of his district, Officer of Merit and Literary Scholar of the commandery, Wen Shuyang was honoured with a memorial hall 食堂. -Nagata 94:94.

Wen Tun 文屯; Guanghan. Son of Wen Qi, Wen Tun became Administrator of Beihai. -HYGZ 10C:173.

Wen Xu 溫序 [Zifang 次房 or Gongzi 公次] (d.30); Taiyuan. Formerly an Assistant Officer in Bing province, in 26 Wen Xu was interviewed by the imperial official Gongli Xu, who recommended him to the court of Emperor Guangwu. He served in the Imperial Censorate and was later Commandant of Wuling, but became ill and left that office.

In 30 Wen Xu returned to office as an Internuncio, and was then appointed Protector of the Qiang. As Bielenstein observes, it was no doubt intended that he would contact the non-Chinese tribes on the frontier of Jincheng and Longxi and encourage them to attack the warlord Wei Ao who controlled the upper Wei valley about Tianshui. On his way, Wen Xu was captured by Wei Ao's officer Gou Yu. Gou Yu sought to persuade him to join his cause, but Wen Xu swore at him for seeking to corrupt an imperial officer, and used his Staff of Authority to kill several of his captors.

Wei Ao's men wanted to put him to death, but Gou Yu, admiring his courage, told them to give him a sword. Looking at those about him, Wen Xu exclaimed that even if he must die at the hands of such bandits he did not want his fine beard sullied by the ground. Stuffing his beard into his mouth, he fell on the sword.

Wen Xu's officers Han Zun and Wang Zhong brought his body back, and told the emperor of his heroic death. Guangwu ordered Wang Zhong to escort his remains to Luoyang, and had a tomb-mound raised for him by the city wall. He gave rewards of grain and silk to the family, and appointed Wen Xu's sons as gentlemen cadets.

Some time later Wen Xu's son Shou saw his father in a dream, and the apparition said that he wished to be buried in his home country. Wen Shou reported this to the throne, and the emperor gave approval for the body to be reburied in the family grave in Taiyuan. -HHS 81/71:2672-73*; Bn 67:136.

Wen Yi 溫益 [Boqi 伯起]; Taiyuan. A son of Wen Xu, after his father's heroic death in 30 Wen Yi was made a gentleman cadet and later became Inspector of Yi province. -XTS 72B:2661 [HHS 81/71:2673 says that Wen Xu had three sons, but XTS mentions only two, Wen Yi and Wen Shou.]

Wen Yi 溫毅. In 190 the Administrator of Wuling, Cao Yin, had quarrelled with the Inspector Wang Rui. Cao Yin sent forged instructions for Sun Jian, Administrator of Changsha, to execute Wang Rui. The document purported to come from the Palace Counsellor Wen Yi, acting on a special commission, but nothing more is recorded of Wen Yi, nor of this perhaps fictitious appointment. -SGZ Wu 1:1097.

Wen Yu 文預; Jingzhao. A military officer under the Intendant, Wen Yu was commemorated with a stele. -SJZ 8:24.

Wen Zi 文則. In 198, as Yuan Shao attacked his fortress at Yi in Hejian, Gongsun Zan sent his officer Wen Zi with a letter to his son Gongsun Xu, urging him to seek aid from Zhang Yan, leader of the Black Mountain bandits. -SGZ 8:246-47.

Wenba 文八 see Zuo Zizhangba 左髭丈八.

[Wenjing] 文經 [surname, personal name and origin unknown]. Early in the third century a man of this style was a leading follower of Liu Bei. -SGZ Shu 15:1085.

Wenren Tong 聞人統 [Wengong 文公]; Pei? A man of humble family, Wenren Tong was appointed Investigator in his native commandery. Too poor to afford a horse, he carried his belongings on his back, and with no proper coverings for his bed, he used the skins of small deer. He would accept nothing from anyone, not even a meal. -XC 7:10a.

The fragment of XC 7 preserved in QJHHS has this man's personal name as Tong, but a quotation in Taiping yulan 253, cited by Hou Kang in HHSJJ 8:337 jiaobu, gives it as Xi 襲. This is the same as the Excellency below, though the styles are different. It is nonetheless likely that the two men were related and came from the same territory.

FSTY 6f:143 mentions a Wenren Tong 通, but this must be the same man as Wenren Tonghan 通漢 of Former Han: QHX:583.

Wenren Xi 聞人襲 [Dingqing 定卿]; Pei. In the winter of 168 Wenren Xi was appointed from Minister Coachman to be Grand Commandant under the government of Emperor Ling now dominated by the eunuchs. He left office six months later, in the summer of 161.

In the summer of 170 Wenren Xi again became Grand Commandant, leaving office in the spring of 171. -HHS 8:329-32.

Wenshu Liang 文叔良 see Wen Shuliang 文叔良.

White Sparrow 白雀 see Boque 白雀.

White Rider Zhang 張白騎 see Zhang Cheng 張晟.

White Tiger Yan 嚴白虎 see Yan, White Tiger 嚴白虎.

Wigutae [Korean] see Weiqutai/Weiqiuzhi 尉仇治 of Fuyu.

Wu 吳, the Lady I; Runan. An old woman, she was taken by a demon, which then killed the officer Zheng Qi. -FSTY 9:73; Nylan 83:544-545.

Wu 武, the Lady (d.145); Shanyang. After the Lady's death, her son Wu Liang and his three brothers had a family tomb prepared, and a stele to the Lady's memory was set up in 147. This was probably the first construction in the now celebrated complex of the Wu family tombs. -Wu 89:25-27 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu 吳, the Lady II (d.202 or possibly 207); Wu/Kuaiji. Wife of Sun Jian, the Lady came from a family of local distinction in Wu which had migrated to Qiantang in Kuaiji, present-day Hangzhou. Her parents died when she was young and she lived with her brother Wu Jing. She was attractive, and when she proposed to marry Sun Jian her relatives objected; she persuaded them, however, to take the gamble.

In 189, when Sun Jian left his position as Administrator of Changsha to join the war against Dong Zhuo, the Lady Wu went east with her children, staying first with the Zhou family of Lujiang, and moving to Guangling after her husband's death in 191. When Sun Ce made contact with Yuan Shu in 193, his family was under threat from Tao Qian, Governor of Xu province, but they escaped south across the Yangzi, then joined him at Yuan Shu's headquarters in Jiujiang. After Sun Ce had established himself in Danyang in 196, he arranged for his mother and brothers to join him.

During the second half of the 190s, as Sun Ce developed a government in the south, his mother encouraged him to act humanely in order to gain a good reputation: she spoke on behalf of his clerk Wei Teng, and also pleaded successfully for the life of her old suitor Wang Sheng. Treated with great respect, she played a role in the succession of the youthful Sun Quan after his brother's death. It is said that she opposed sending hostages to Cao Cao, while she encouraged Sun Quan to accept advisers such as Zhou Yu and Zhang Hong. -SGZ Wu 5:1195-96*; deC 90:85, 223-224 [which last discusses the date of the Lady's death, ascribed by some to 207], C/C 99:122-124.

Wu 吳, the Lady III (d.245); Chenliu: Empress of Liu Bei, First Sovereign of Shu-Han. The Lady and her elder brother Wu Yi were orphaned when they were young, and because their father had been an old friend of Liu Yan, the family went to Yi province after he was appointed Governor there in 189. A physiognomist predicted that the Lady Wu would receive great honours, and so Liu Yan arranged for her to marry his son Liu Mao. It was hoped that Liu Mao would thus share in her good fortune, but he died about 210, and the Lady then lived alone.

After Liu Bei seized the province in 214, his chief wife the Lady Sun III returned to her brother the rival warlord Sun Quan. Liu Bei's followers recommended the Lady Wu as her replacement, and though Liu Bei was initially concerned at the possible kinship with Liu Mao, Fa Zheng reassured him of the propriety of the match and so he took the Lady as his formal wife.

When Liu Bei took title as King of Hanzhong in 219 he named the Lady as his queen, and when he claimed the imperial throne in 221 he proclaimed her as his empress. When Liu Bei died, his son and successor Liu Shan honoured her as Dowager and at her death she was given the posthumous title Mu 穆 "Serene." -SGZ Shu 4:906*; C/C 99:49, 116-117.

Wu Ba 吳霸; Runan. Leader of a group of Yellow Turbans about 184, Wu Ba was captured by the local warlord Li Tong, who took over his followers. -SGZ 18:535.

Wu Ban 武班 [Xuanzhang 宣張] (d.145); Shanyang. Eldest son of Wu Kaiming, Wu Ban was born a little before 120. When he was twenty-five he held some office in the neighbouring commandery of Ji Yin and was recommended Filial and Incorrupt by Administrator Cao.

Wu Ban became Chief Clerk of Dunhuang, but took ill and died in that office. An inscription in his memory was added to the stele of his grandmother, the Lady Wu, and a separate tablet was dedicated to him later. -LS 6:11a-13b, Nagata 94:100; Wu 89:25-27, HHSJJ 6:269 jaobu Hou Kang.

Wu Ban 吳班 [Yuanxiong 元雄]; Chenliu. Son of Wu Kuang, after the breakdown of government at the capital in 189 Wu Ban acted for a time as a free-lance, then joined his kinsman Wu Yi in Yi province.

In 222 Wu Ban commanded a fleet in Liu Bei's ill-fated attack down the Yangzi against Sun Quan. Under Liu Shan he held senior military rank with the Staff of Authority and was enfeoffed as a marquis. -SGZ Shu 15:1084.

Wu Bin 吳斌; Yingchuan? Wu Bin admired Han Yan, a man born in the same year. During the reign of Emperor Shun, Han Yan became Administrator of Danyang, but was then arrested and sent to the capital in disgrace. At that time Wu Bin was a magistrate in Pei, and he went to attend Han Yan on his journey. -FSTY 7:56.

Wu Bo 武勃 (d.24). In 24 Feng Yi, general in the service of Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, came south of the Yellow River into the east of Henan. Wu Bo, Administrator of Henan for the Gengshi Emperor, left Luoyang to attack him. As the other commanders in the city failed to support him, he was defeated, and as the turn-coat Li Yi kept the gates of the city closed against him, Wu Bo was killed. -HHS 17/7:643.

Wu [Bowu] 吳伯武 of Taishan was the long-lost brother of Wu Wenchang q.v.

Wu Can 吳燾 [Gongxiu 公休]; Wu. Though a man of poor family, Wu Can was admired by the physiognomist Zheng Yu and was also befriended by Gu Shao, son of Gu Yong and a noted judge of character. In the late 190s he became a junior officer of his county. The magistrate Sun He admired him, and when he became a general in the early 200s he appointed Wu Can as his Chief Clerk.

Despite his humble background, Wu Can became a friend of Lu Xun and other leaders, and in 208 he was appointed Registrar to Sun Quan. He served for a time as a magistrate in Kuaiji, then returned to headquarters as an adviser with rank as colonel.

In 222 Wu Can joined the defence against Cao Xiu on the lower Yangzi, and his flotilla rescued a great many men when a storm broke up the fleet. As Administrator of Kuaiji, he engaged in campaigns to settle the hills people, returning later to the court as a minister and then a tutor to the Heir Sun He. In 245 he was caught up in the intrigue about the succession and was executed. -SGZ Wu 12:1339-40*.

Wu Cang 吳蒼; Runan. A great admirer of the hermit Jiao Shen, Wu Cang wrote to him in eloquent fashion but received no reply. -HHS 83/73:2771-72.

Wu Chang 吳常 see Wu Tang 吳棠.

Wu Chen 吳琴 (d.95). A Chief Clerk in Command of Troops, Wu Chen was found guilty of some fault, sent to prison and executed. -HHS 101/11:3236.

Wu Cheng 吳成 (d.52); Nanyang. Son of Wu Han, he succeeded to his father's large fief in 44, but was later killed by a slave. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu Dan 吳旦; Nanyang. Wu Dan was a son of Wu Cheng and grandson of Wu Han. After his father's death in 52, the multi-county fief which had been granted to Wu Han was divided. Wu Dan was enfeoffed with a county in Runan, while other territories were awarded to his brother Wu Xu and his uncle Wu Guo.

Though Wu Dan had formally been entrusted with the duty of maintaining sacrifices to Wu Han, he had no sons. When he died about 83, his fief was ended and responsibility for the sacrifices was transferred to Wu Xu. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu Dang 吳瑒. Wu Dang was a magistrate in Changsha in 215 as Sun Quan took over the commandery. Still loyal to Guan Yu, he made a rising in his favour, but was attacked by Lu Su and fled. -SGZ Wu 15:1384.

Wu Dao 吳導; Runan. In 169 Wu Dao was a commandery Investigator. He received orders to arrest the man of Faction Fan Pang, but instead took himself to bed and wept. When Fan Pang heard of this, he went to the prison of his own accord. -HHS 67/57:2207; deC 89:111.

Wu Duan 武端 see sub Wu Zhou 武周.

Wu Dun 吳敦; Donghai? Leader of a bandit or clan self-defence group in the region of Mount Tai, he had the nickname of Annu 黯奴 "Black Slave." Cf. Yin Li, who was known as "Black Boy 盧兒."

About 194 Wu Dun and the other leaders of groups in the region accepted the general authority of Zang Ba. They accompanied him in his attempt to aid Lü Bu against Cao Cao in 198, then followed his lead once more and accepted service under Cao Cao. Wu Dun and his fellows were given title as administrators of a series of small commanderies about Mount Tai, and Wu Dun received a territory in Donghai, probably his native place.

Wu Dun accompanied Zang Ba on his subsequent campaigns, guarding the eastern front against Yuan Shao in 199 and 200, defeating Yuan Tan in Bohai in 205, then settling the region of present-day Shandong. He and his colleagues were rewarded with minor enfeoffment, but there is no detailed account of Wu Dun's subsequent career. -SGZ 18:537-38.

Wu Fan 吳範 [Wenzi 文則] (d.226); Kuaiji. Celebrated for his skill in calendrical calculation and divination by the wind, Wu Fan was recommended as Knowing the Way, but remained in the south to avoid the troubles.

During the early 190s Wu Fan was a counsellor to Tao Qian, Governor of Xu province, and he later joined Sun Quan when he took power in 200. He gave accurate forecasts of the defeat of Huang Zu, the death of Liu Biao, Liu Bei's seizure of Yi province and the destruction of Guan Yu. He advised on alliances with Wei and Shu-Han, and foretold the royal status of Sun Quan. -SGZ Wu 18:1421-23*.

Wu Fang 五方. Nominated Abundant Talent by the Director of Retainers Yang Bopi, Wu Fang was Administrator of Guanghan about 170 and later transferred to Nan commandery. -HYGZ 10B:150 ff.

Wu Fen 吳奮; Wu. Son of Wu Jing and a cousin of Sun Quan, when his father died in 203 Wu Fen took over command of his troops. He was given title as a general and later enfeoffed as a marquis.

At the time of the attack on Guan Yu in Jing province in 219, Wu Fen was appointed Area Commander in Wu commandery so that he might keep the east of the Sun state under control. -SGZ Wu 5:1196.

Wu Feng 吳奉; Guangling. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt by the Administrator Zhang Yi, Wu Feng wanted to offer his patron a present. Though Zhang Yi refused, Wu Feng left a quantity of gold in his courtyard as he departed for the capital. Zhang Yi insisted upon returning the gift to Wu Feng's household. -XC 7:7b.

Wu Feng 吳鳳 [Junya 君雅]; Chenliu. Son of Wu You, Wu Feng became Administrator of Lelang in present-day Korea. -HHS 64/54:2102.

Wu Fu 伍孚 [Deyu 德瑜] (d.190), Runan. As a young man Wu Fu had a reputation for bravery and a sense of honour. When he was a clerical officer in the commandery, the magistrate of his home county committed a crime. Wu Fu was ordered to investigate, but he explained to the Administrator that even if the magistrate had failed in his duties, as a citizen under his authority he could not act against him. The Administrator admired and accepted his argument.

Wu Fu later served in the offices of the General-in-Chief He Jin and became a Palace Attendant, Intendant of Henan and then a colonel in the Northern Army.

When Dong Zhuo seized power at the end of 189 all the officials were frightened of him, but Wu Fu concealed a dagger in his court robes and went to see him. As Dong Zhuo escorted him out after the meeting, he drew the dagger and attempted to stab him. Dong Zhuo managed to avoid the blow and had Wu Fu arrested. [One account says he over-powered Wu Fu; another that Wu Fu was a strong man and Dong Zhuo had to call urgently for his guards.]

Wu Fu was charged with treason, but cried out that he owed no loyalty to the man who had brought disorder to the state. He was executed. -SGZ 6:175-76, HHS 72/62:2331, XC 8:9b-10a.

The commentary of Pei Songzhi to SGZ 6, after quoting XC 8, notes that Wu Fu is said to have had the same style, Deyu 德瑜, as Wu Qiong, who also conspired against Dong Zhuo. Pei Songzhi wonders whether the two stories relate to the same man, but other commentators generally agree that they were separate, and that the identical style is either a textual error or simple coincidence: SGZJJ 6:11a-b.

Wu Gong 伍公. An officer under Tian Rong, warlord of Nan commandery, Wu Gong surrendered to the Han general Can Peng in 27. -HHS 17/7:658.

Wu Gong 吳恭; Henan?: see sub Wu Xiong. Son of Wu Xin and grandson of Wu Xiong, Wu Gong became Minister of Justice like his father and grandfather before him. -HHS 46/36:1546.

Wu Guang 巫光; Beihai. Yao Zhenzong:2386 presents evidence that in the time of Emperor Guangwu this man composed Yangxing jing 養性經, a treatise on cultivation of the spirit. The name Wu Guang looks like a sobriquet: "Splendour of Shamanism."

Wu Guo 吳國; Nanyang. Wu Guo was a son of Wu Han and younger brother of Wu Cheng. Wu Han had been awarded a fief comprising several counties, and Wu Cheng succeeded to it, but it was divided after his death in 52. Wu Cheng's sons Dan and Xu received fiefs, while Wu Guo was granted a county marquisate in Nanyang. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu Han 吳漢 [Zixian 子顏] (d.44); Nanyang. A man of humble background, Wu Han nonetheless became head of his village and gathered a group of followers. About 20, some of his men offended the law, and Wu Han was obliged to flee to the north with Peng Chong, a man from his native commandery who had contacts in Yuyang. Travelling as a horse trader, Wu Han acquired a network of friends among leaders of the region.

After the destruction of Wang Mang in 23, the Gengshi Emperor sent Han Hong as commissioner to the far north. Wu Han was recommended to him and was called for an interview; Han Hong made him a county magistrate in Yuyang, while Peng Chong became Acting Administrator of the commandery.

As Wang Lang claimed the imperial title in the winter of 23/24, many of the leading gentry wished to join him, but it is said that Wu Han had already heard of the qualities of Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, who was at that time commissioner for the restored Han dynasty on the North China plain. He urged Peng Chong to support the regime based upon their home territory of Nanyang, but though Peng Chong was willing, he explained that his officers were committed to Wang Lang, and he had no authority to raise troops for operations outside the commandery.

As he left Peng Chong's headquarters Wu Han met a wandering beggar scholar, who told him that Wang Lang's claim to membership of the imperial house of Han was false. Encouraged by this, Wu Han gave the man food, had him write out a call to arms as if from Liu Xiu, and deliver it to Peng Chong. Peng Chong was convinced, and when Wu Han returned he gave him command of the local troops.

Moving south, Wu Han joined a contingent from Shanggu led by Jing Dan, and their combined forces took over twenty counties, killing hundreds of Wang Lang's appointed officials and destroying his position in the north.

At the time they approached, Liu Xiu had been defeated by Wang Lang's forces, and had withdrawn to Julu. At first his party was afraid that Wu Han and Jing Dan were bringing further enemies against them, but the reinforcements restored the balance in favour of Han. Named a lieutenant-general, Wu Han led shock cavalry to raid Wang Lang's capital at Handan, and after the fall of that city and the destruction of Wang Lang, he was rewarded with title as a marquis.

Though slow of speech and lacking in both education and culture, Wu Han was extremely strong and utterly fearless. Deng Yu and others recommended him to Liu Xiu, and he became a close attendant. He was noted for sustaining the morale of his men and for his ability to maintain military discipline even in time of tension. As Liu Xiu was planning to take over the far north Deng Yu recommended him, and Wu Han was appointed a chief general, with authority to raise horsemen from ten commanderies.

Miao Zen, Governor of You province for the Gengshi Emperor, with headquarters in Youbeiping, had called up his own troops and had no wish to support Liu Xiu. Wu Han arrived with an escort of only twenty men, and Miao Zen came out to receive him. Taking Miao Zen by surprise, Wu Han arrested him and cut his head off, then took over his army. All the north was impressed, every territory provided its quota of men, and Wu Han led them back to the south. He is said to have had Wuhuan horsemen under his command a few years later, and it is likely his recruitment at this time also gathered non-Chinese auxiliaries.

As he came to Liu Xiu's camp in Qinghe, other officers noted the size of his force and doubted his willingness to share his following, but Wu Han presented Liu Xiu with the muster rolls and gave up his personal claim to benefit the common cause. When his colleagues asked for men to increase their own troops, Liu Xiu criticised them for their earlier doubts and their present greed.

Soon afterwards Liu Xiu went south to attack the Red Eyebrows at Shequan in Henei, while Xie Gong, officer of the Gengshi Emperor at Ye city, undertook to attack the Youlai bandits and prevent them from joining the larger force. Xie Gong did as he promised, but was heavily defeated, and in the mean time Liu Xiu sent Wu Han and Cen Peng to occupy Ye. Wu Han persuaded Xie Gong's officer Chen Kang to change sides and let him in, and when Xie Gong returned with a small escort Wu Han trapped and killed him with his own hands.

As Liu Xiu attacked the various bandit groups in the north of the plain, Wu Han led five thousand cavalry which served as shock troops to break the enemy line. When victory was complete, he joined other officers in urging Liu Xiu to claim the imperial throne, and when Emperor Guangwu did so in the autumn he enfeoffed Wu Han with a county in Yingchuan and named him Grand Marshal [Bn: Commander-in-Chief], highest military post in the empire. Wu Han held that office for almost twenty years, and though the Grand Marshal was formally a leader of the bureaucracy, he always acted as a military man.

In the spring of 26 Wu Han took command of a major force, including the Excellency of Works Wang Liang, the chief generals Zhu You and Du Mao, the Bearer of the Mace Jia Fu, and other generals and officers in an attack on the Tanxiang bandit group, then operating in the east of Wei commandery. The enemy were completely defeated and it was claimed that over a hundred thousand surrendered. Wu Han received a larger fief, with revenue from four counties in Guangping/Julu. Turning west against a group of hill bandits led by Li Boqing, then south into Henei, Wu Han again destroyed rebel camps and settlements. Guangwu came out in person to welcome him as he returned to Luoyang.

Wu Han was then sent south into Nanyang; his army was the third imperial force to enter the territory that year, following those led by Cen Peng and Jia Fu. He captured Wan, capital of the commandery, and defeated the local warlord Qin Feng further south. A fierce general, Wu Han gave his soldiers every licence, but his subordinate commander Deng Feng felt bitter at the way his homeland was ravaged by Wu Han's troops, and in the autumn he rebelled. Having driven Wu Han back in a surprise attack, Deng Feng achieved further success, and he was defeated only in the following year by the emperor himself.

Wu Han was recalled to the north soon after this trouble broke out, perhaps to prevent him making more enemies in the emperor's home commandery, and in the latter part of 26 he was sent with Feng Yi to put down the Five Towers bandit group in Ji province north of the Yellow River. They went on to eliminate the Bronze Horses and Five Banners groups, and early in 27, together with Geng Yan and He Yan, Wu Han destroyed a remnant of the Green Calf bandits in Henei.

Wu Han and his men were then called west into Hongnong, where they joined the imperial forces under Guangwu which faced the Red Eyebrows and forced their surrender. In the summer of 27 Wu Han was sent back east to take command of operations against the pretender Liu Yong, who had been defeated in the previous year by He Yan but now staged a revival.

He Yan embarked on a new siege of Liu Yong's city of Suiyang, while Wu Han led the chief general Du Mao and the general Chen Jun against Liu Yong's officer Su Mao at Guangle in the north of Liang. As Su Mao's colleague Zhou Jian came to the relief, Wu Han was wounded and his men were driven back into camp. Wu Han bandaged himself, slaughtered oxen to feast his men, and urged them once more into battle – any who were slow to join the charge would be executed. Next morning a force of elite troops, supported by Wuhuan cavalry, broke the enemy lines, and the Han troops pursued them into Guangle. Su Mao and Zhou Jian fled, and Wu Han left Du Mao and Chen Jun to invest the fortress while he went to assist He Yan outside Suiyang. Liu Yong fled that city and was killed, and both places surrendered.

In 28 Wu Han led Chen Jun and the General of the Van Wang Liang to defeat the Wuxiao bandits in Julu, then pursued them south of the Yellow River into Dong commandery and defeated them once more. As the remnants fled to join Su Mao, Wu Han turned northeast to put down other groups in Qinghe and Pingyuan. Disordered and corrupt government in Pingyuan had inspired a brief rebellion among the leading gentry, but Wu Han, somewhat out of character, correctly judged the cause of the trouble: he punished the officials responsible and the insurgents returned to their allegiance.

In the winter he led Geng Yan and Wang Chang to deal with bandit groups in Pingyuan. Early in the spring, as the army suffered a night raid, there was some panic and confusion, but Wu Han kept to his bed until the attack was ended, then sent picked men to strike the enemy as they withdrew. Having chased them south across the Yellow River into Dongping, he turned north to settle Bohai, and the whole course of the Yellow River across the plain was now in the control of Han.

Rejoining the main army under Guangwu, Wu Han took part in campaigns against Zhang Bu and other leaders of the southern plain. In the spring of 30 Wu Han commanded the troops which captured Qu city in Donghai and drove Dong Xian and Pang Meng to their final, fatal, flight.

Returning to the capital, Wu Han was next sent to Chang'an to face Wei Ao, warlord of the northwest, who had made a successful counter-attack to the imperial offensive of 30. In 32 Wu Han accompanied the emperor on a second campaign and in summer, as Wei Ao took refuge at Xi city in the south of Longxi, Wu Han was sent with Cen Peng to lay siege. At this point Guangwu was obliged to go back and deal with an uprising in the east, and in the winter Gongsun Shu's general Wang Yuan bluffed Wu Han with the appearance of much larger forces than he had, and was able to relieve Xi city. Wu Han pursued the enemy to Ji city, but he was isolated and short of supplies. Guangwu sent instructions that he should disband his troops and withdraw before his men deserted of their own accord, but Wu Han and his colleagues held together in hope of overwhelming the defence. As the situation continued to deteriorate, some men became ill and others ran away, and the Han commanders were eventually forced to burn their remaining stores and withdraw. By the end of the year all but one outpost of the imperial army had returned to Chang'an.

Wei Ao died early in 33, but the conquest of his territory was achieved without Wu Han, for the warlord Lu Fang and his Xiongnu allies were causing increasing trouble with raids against the northern frontier, and had forced the Han to withdraw from Dai, Wuyuan, Dingxiang and Yanmen. With the problem of Wei Ao largely solved, the emperor could afford to dispatch a major army, and in the summer Wu Han took command of Wang Chang, Zhu You, Wang Ba and Hou Jin, with fifty thousand men to attack Lu Fang's officers Jia Lan and Min Kan at Gaoliu in Dai commandery. Having encountered firm resistance, they were then defeated in a heavy rainstorm. The operation was abandoned and Wu Han returned to Luoyang. He left garrisons along the frontier, and two further attempts were made, one by Du Mao in the winter against Yanmen, and one more by Wu Han in the spring of 34 against Dai. Du Mao, however, was defeated, Wu Han's attack fizzled out, and later that year he went back south to command operations against Gongsun Shu in present-day Sichuan.

At this time the general Cen Peng had already gathered soldiers and sailors from the commanderies along the Yangzi and had boats prepared for an attack upstream through the Gorges. Wu Han, whose experience was fighting on land and whose men came from central China, had small understanding of naval warfare: he wanted to send the boatmen home on the grounds that they wasted provisions. When Cen Peng wrote to protest, the emperor agreed and gave him full command of operations.

As a result, when the advance began in the summer of 35 Wu Han remained behind to raise more troops and supervise the building of further boats. By autumn Cen Peng was only a short distance from Gongsun Shu's capital of Chengdu, but early in the winter, before he could press a final attack, he was murdered in his camp, and the imperial forces were obliged to withdraw south to the Yangzi.

At the end of the year Wu Han brought a second wave of invaders and took command. Swiftly regaining lost ground, he attacked Wuyang city, forty kilometres south of Chengdu, killed Gongsun Shu's son-in-law Shi Xing, stormed Guangdu and raided Chengdu.

Despite such success, Guangwu was concerned at Wu Han's exposed position. He sent warning not to take the forces in Chengdu lightly, and ordered him to hold his ground, not to take the initiative, but to wait until the enemy attacked or until it was clear that they were exhausted. Wu Han paid no attention, but led his men forward on both sides of the Min River. As they came within ten li of the enemy, Wu Han was twenty li, eight kilometres, from his associate Liu Shang, and the two columns were connected only by a pontoon bridge. Informed of the situation, the emperor sent anxious orders for immediate retreat from such a vulnerable position.

In the autumn, before Guangwu's letter had arrived, two armies of Gongsun Shu led by Xie Feng and Yuan Ji attacked the Han troops. Wu Han was defeated and forced back into his camp. After feasting his soldiers and feeding their horses for three days, however, he placed flags upon the walls and took his men across the river by night to reunite with Liu Shang. In the morning the combined force took the enemy by surprise, routed them and killed both commanders. Having thus extricated himself, Wu Han left Liu Shang to face the enemy while he withdrew to Guangdu and sent a report and apologies to the emperor.

Guangwu ordered a new advance and Wu Han fought his way back, though he and his men were at one point taken by surprise by an attack from the rear; Wu Han was thrown into the water and saved himself only by grasping a horse's tail.

In the winter of 36 Wu Han was again outside the walls of Chengdu, but he had supplies for only seven days and was preparing his boats for another retreat. The Internuncio Zhang Kan, who had just arrived with supplies, persuaded him to feign weakness but in fact hold firm. By good fortune, probably in the hope of turning the Han retreat into a rout, Gongsun Shu himself made a sortie, and he died in the battle which ensued.

On 25 December Gongsun Shu's ally Yan Cen surrendered Chengdu city. Two days later Wu Han killed Yan Cen and Gongsun Shu's family, and let his soldiers loose to plunder. The slaughter and looting had no approval from the emperor, Guangwu was furious, and he wrote to Liu Shang asking how he, as a member of the imperial clan, could have failed to prevent such an atrocity. This victory, however, marked the end of the civil war and the triumph of Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu. Wu Han returned down the Yangzi with the imperial insignia and court properties of Gongsun Shu, and in the summer he was received at Luoyang with splendid festivities.

Early in 39 Wu Han was sent north once more against the Xiongnu and their ally Lu Fang. This time, rather than a full attack, the main intention was to protect and enforce the withdrawal of Chinese subjects from Yanmen, Dai and Shanggu. An arc of territory was thus abandoned to the enemy, and the people were settled on the plain below the Juyong pass, north of present-day Beijing, and the Changshan pass near Laiyuan in Hebei, 150 kilometres to the southeast.

In 42 rebellion broke out in Shu, as the fighting man Shi Xin seized Chengdu city, drove out the Han administrator, and raised an army with support from Ba commandery. Shi Xin was a competent soldier, so Guangwu took the disturbance seriously and sent Wu Han with Liu Shang and Zang Gong to deal with it. They advanced through Wudu and raised local troops to invest Chengdu. The city fell after three months siege, and Shi Xin was executed.

Wu Han then went south to deal with dissidents in Ba. Two hundred leaders were killed and several hundred families were sent east through the Gorges to be resettled in Nan commandery and Changsha.

Though Wu Han had no hesitation in allowing his troops to plunder and ravage hostile or conquered territory, he was personally frugal and lived very simply in a plain house. His wife and sons bought property while he was away on campaign, but when he returned he insisted that it be distributed to other kinsmen, and when his wife died he constructed only a simple tomb.

Wu Han was appointed Prefect of Luoyang, but in 44 he was taken ill. Guangwu went to call upon him and asked if he had any special request, and though Wu Han sought nothing for himself, he urged the emperor to rule strictly and avoid the mistaken leniency of amnesties. When he died soon afterwards the senior ministers recommended he receive the posthumous title "Martial" 武, but Guangwu awarded him the appellation "Loyal" 忠. The people mourned him, troops of the Northern Army escorted his funeral cortège, and he received the same honours as the great minister Huo Guang 霍光 of Former Han. -HHS 18/8: 675-85*; Bn 54:53, Bn 59:38, 78, 86, 119, 128-131, 138-150, 153-154, 188-197, 206-218, Bn 67:107-113, Bn 79:65, 81.

Wu Hao 吳昊 miswritten for Jiang Hao 姜昊. -HYGZ JBTZ:20.

Wu He 吳河. In 27 Wu He was a junior officer in the army of Wu Han on campaign against Liu Yong. Designated a "yellow-head" 黃頭, he wore a yellow cloth about his helmet and acted as a leader in attack.

As Wu Han besieged Liu Yong's officer Su Mao at Guangle in Liang, he suffered a reverse at the hands of Zhou Jian, who had come to the relief. On the following morning he sent Wu He and others, with four troops of elite soldiers supported by Wuhuan cavalry, to break the enemy lines. Su Mao and Zhou Jian were defeated and fled. -HHS 18/8:679.

Wu Hou 吳厚. A magistrate in Henan, Wu Hou was a suitor of the widowed Lady Zhou Du. -HYGZ 10B: 160.

Wu Hui 吳恢 or Wu Tan 憐; Chenliu. Administrator of Nanhai, he planned to compile a commentary to the Classic of History, but was persuaded by his son Wu You that such a project was not appropriate for someone in a distant, marginal region. -HHS 64/54:2099.

Wu Ji 吳几, the Lady; Shu. The Lady was noted for beauty and virtue, but there are no details of her life. -HYGZ 3:33.

Wu [Jili] 武季立; Shanyang. Son of Wu Liang, in the early 150s Wu Jili joined his brothers to create a shrine for their late father, now recognised as a masterpiece of Han classical art. -LS 6:14a; Wu 89:25 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu Jing 吳景 (d.203); Wu/Kuaiji. Younger brother of the Lady Wu, wife of Sun Jian, Wu Jing was a successful officer under Sun Jian. After Sun Jian's death he gave his allegiance to Yuan Shu, who sent him as Administrator to Danyang, but in 194 Wu Jing and Sun Ben were expelled by Liu Yao, who then held the line of the Yangzi against them.

In 195, under the leadership of Wu Jing's young nephew Sun Ce, their army forced the crossing, defeated Liu Yao and drove him away into Yuzhang. In the following year Wu Jing returned to Yuan Shu, who named him Administrator of Guangling. As Yuan Shu took the imperial title in 197, however, Wu Jing went back to Sun Ce, who restored his title as Administrator of Danyang. In the following year the Han court under Cao Cao confirmed the appointment and also gave him rank as a general.

Wu Jing died soon after Sun Quan succeeded to the leadership. -SGZ Wu 5:1195-96; C/C 99:122-124.

Wu [Jingxing] 武景興; Shanyang. In 147, following the death of their mother the Lady Wu two years earlier, Wu Jingxing and his brothers had a family tomb prepared. -Wu 89:25-27 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu [Jizhang] 武季章; Shanyang. Son of Wu Liang, in the early 150s Wu Jizhang joined his brothers to create a shrine for their late father, now recognised as a masterpiece of Han classical art. -LS 6:14a; Wu 89:25 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu Ju 吳巨 (d.211); Changsha. About 204 Wu Ju was sent by Liu Biao to take the place of the late Shi Huang, Administrator of Cangwu. Aggressive and warlike, he disapproved of the humane policy of his colleague Lai Gong the Governor of Jiao province, and drove him back to the north. He later made contact with Sun Quan, but when Bu Zhi arrived as Inspector in 211 and Wu Ju sought to maintain some independence, Bu Zhi killed him. -SGZ Wu 4:1192, 8:1252.

Wu [Jungao] 吳君高; Kuaiji. Author of the historical work Yue niu lu 越紐錄, Wu Jungao was praised by Wang Chong. -Lun heng 37; Forke 07:469, Yao Zhen-zong:2355.

Wu Kai 吳愷; Chenliu. Son of Wu You, he became a county magistrate in Runan. -HHS 64/54:2102.

Wu [Kaiming] 武開明 (92-148); Shanyang. In 137 Wu Kaiming was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and then joined the office of the Internuncios. In 143 he became Assistant to the Grand Prolonger of Autumn, head of the household of the Empress Liang of Emperor Shun, but left that appointment when his mother died two years later. In 147 he and his brothers had a family tomb prepared, with a stele dedicated to her, and a further inscription for Wu Kaiming's son Wu Ban, who had also died in 145.

Returning to office, Wu Kaiming became Assistant in Wu commandery, but was taken ill and died; another tablet was prepared in his memory. -LS 24:10a-b; Wu 89:25-27 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu Kang 吳伉; Ganling. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates in the time of Emperor Ling, Wu Kang was ambitious for the public good and was an expert in divination by the wind. Realising that someone of his qualities could not be used by the corrupted government of the day, he pleaded ill health, retired to his residence, and maintained the life of a hermit "nourishing his ideals" 從容養忠. -HHS 78/68:2533-34; Vervorn 90:287-288.

Wu Kuang 吳匡 [Bokang 伯康]; Hongnong. As a young man in office, Wu Kuang was noted for his ability. He became an Imperial Clerk about 145, and was among those who supported the candidacy of Liu Suan the King of Qinghe against those of the youthful Liu Zuan, Emperor Zhi, and then of Liu Zhi, Emperor Huan, chosen as puppets by the Liang family of the Dowager and her brother Liang Ji.

Wu Kuang later became Chancellor of Ji'nan, served in the Imperial Secretariat, and was Administrator of Hongnong in 164. As he was on tour, he heard that his old associate the Excellency Huang Qiong had died; he immediately claimed to be ill, abandoned his journey and returned to his yamen. -FSTY 3:22. Ying Shao categorises this as Inappropriate 愆禮, on the grounds that the connection between the two men was too slight for such a show of mourning.

Wu Lan 吳蘭 (d.218). An officer of Liu Bei, in 217 Wu Lan was with Zhang Fei in the north of Yi province. He was defeated by Cao Cao's commander Cao Hong.

In the following year Liu Bei sent Wu Lan and Lei Tong on detachment into Wudu commandery, but they were defeated by Cao Cao's forces and then destroyed by the local Di people. -SGZ 1:50-51, SGZ Shu 2:884, 12:1020.

Wu Liang 吳良 [Dayi 太儀]; Qi. A scholar of the Classic of History according to the Elder Xiahou tradition, about 57 Wu Liang was a clerk in the commandery. When his colleague Wang Wang proposed an effusive toast to the Administrator at an official function, Wu Liang stood up and objected. Impressed by such outspoken honesty, the Administrator presented him with a hundred fine fish. He also invited him to become his Officer of Merit, but Wu Liang felt embarrassed to have gained advancement by such means, and would not accept.

Liu Qing, King of Dongping, General of Agile Cavalry and favoured brother of Emperor Ming, heard of this incident. He invited Wu Liang to join his staff and became increasingly impressed. He recommended Wu Liang to the emperor in the strongest terms, but then Wu Liang spoke out in favour of the official Xu Kuang, who had punished the driver of the imperial relative Yin Jiu when he offended regulations. Emperor Ming pardoned Xu Kuang, but he did not forgive Wu Liang, and sent him to be magistrate of a county in Donghai.

Wu Liang later became Chief Clerk to the Excellency over the Masses, and continued his straight speaking. Predictably, he was dismissed for some fault, but was then appointed as a Consultant. He died in that office. -HHS 27/17:942-44*.

Wu Liang 武梁 [Suizong 綏宗] (78-151); Shanyang. It is said that Wu Liang was able to teach the New Text Han tradition of the Classic of Poetry even before he had taken the cap of manhood, and that he was also an expert on the Book of Changes and on the histories. He refused invitations to local commandery and provincial office on grounds of ill health, and though he held courtesy title as an Attendant Officer he lived in contented and simple seclusion.

After the death of their mother in 145, Wu Liang and his brothers Shigong, Jingxing and Kaiming had a family tomb prepared. The stonework of the pillars cost 150,000 cash, and a pair of stone lions 40,000. The Western Pillar was erected in 147 in honour of the Lady Wu, and carried an additional inscription to Wu Liang's nephew Wu Ban, who had also died in 145. A further tablet was dedicated to Wu Kaiming, who died in 148.

When Wu Liang died in 151, his own three sons and a grandson spent vast amounts of family money to erect a shrine, splendidly decorated in classical style, expressing the disapproval of traditional Confucianist gentry for the perceived corruption at court; the material which has survived to the present day is among the finest examples of Han art. Though members of the family had already been buried in the complex, and others were to follow, the Wu Liang Shrine 武梁祠 is the only one to be fully reconstructed. [There is some debate on the authenticity of the material as it appears at the present day.] -LS 6:13b-15a, LX 6; Ebrey 80:334-335, Wu 89:24-28, Powers 91:247-264 et saepe.

Wu Liang 五梁 [Deshan 德山]; Jianwei. A noted Confucian scholar, in 224 Wu Liang took service under Zhuge Liang and held position at the court of Shu-Han. -SGZ Shu 12:1019-20.

Wu Lin 吳琴 see Wu Chen 吳琴.

Wu Long 伍隆; Kuaiji. A former commandery Officer for Criminals 賊曹, in the early 190s Wu Long was listed by Yu Fan among those who had risked their lives in battle to protect their Administrator. -SGZ Wu 12:1325.

Wu Mian 吳免; Kuaiji. A local leader on the upper Min River in present-day Fujian, Wu Mian and his associates were conquered by He Qi in 203. -SGZ Wu 15:1378.

Wu Ping 吳馮 [Zigao 子高]; Chenliu. Son of Wu Feng, Wu Ping held local office in his commandery and province and was known for his special attention to civic duties with the aged and ill, and those of filial piety. He became chancellor of a county fief in Runan. -HHS 64/54:2102, XC 8:7b.

Wu Pu 吳普; Guangling. A disciple of the celebrated doctor Hua Tuo, Wu Pu used his methods to obtain many remarkable cures. Together with his fellow-student Li Dangzhi, Wu Pu developed the pharmacological work of Hua Tuo, first prepared as the Shen Nong bencao jing 神農本草經. He compiled a collection of Hua Tuo's recipes, and also published his own work, Wushi bencao 吳氏本草. These and other texts provided the basis for the present-day Bencao jing 本草經.

Hua Tuo advised Wu Pu of the importance of physical exercise and Wu Pu followed his prescription. It is claimed that he lived to be over ninety, always in excellent health and condition. -HHS 82/72B:2739-40, SGZ 29:804; Ngo 76:123-126, DeWoskin 86:148-149, Needham 86:246-248.

Wu Qiong 伍瓊 [Deyu 德瑜] (d.190), Runan. Having been a magistrate in Jingzhao about 180, in 189 Wu Qiong was Colonel of the City Gates at Luoyang. As Dong Zhuo took power, Wu Qiong and Zhou Bi encouraged him to reform the government by appointing worthy men for office, and they were commissioned with Zheng Tai and He Yong to make suitable nominations. Though they were trusted by Dong Zhuo, many of the men they recommended raised troops against him and, after they had arranged the appointment of Yuan Shao as Administrator of Bohai, Wu Qiong and Zhou Bi acted as agents for the eastern alliance.

The two men were later appointed as colonels, but in 190 they opposed Dong Zhuo's plan to shift the capital to Chang'an. Having lost his faith in them, he complained of their bad advice and had both of them killed. -SGZ 6:175-76, HHS 72/62:2326-27, HHJ 26:311-12. See also sub Wu Fu.

SGZ 10:321 lists Wu Qiong as a conspirator with Xun You against Dong Zhuo in 192, but this must be an error.

Wu Rong 武榮 [Hanhe 含和] (d.167); Shanyang. Second son of Wu Kaiming, Wu Rong was born in the 120s. Widely read in the classics and histories, he served as a clerk in the offices of Yan province and was also an Investigator, Registrar and Officer of Merit in the commandery. It is likely that he arranged the stele and inscriptions which commemorated his father and his elder brother Wu Ban in the late 140s.

At the age of thirty-six sui, probably in the early 160s, Wu Rong was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, and after probation as a gentleman cadet he became Assistant Bearer of the Mace, responsible for police at the capital. He became ill and died in that office at Luoyang. -LS 12:7b-8b, Nagata 94:160; Wu 89:25-27, HHSJJ 6:269 jiaobu Hou Kang.

Wu Sen 吳琴 see Wu Chen 吳琴.

Wu Sheng 吳勝; Nanyang. Son of Wu Xu, he succeeded to his father's fief with responsibility to maintain sacrifices to his ancestor Wu Han. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu Shi 吳碩 [Zilan 子蘭?] (d.200). A Consultant at Xu city, in 199 Wu Shi joined Dong Cheng's conspiracy against Cao Cao. Early in 200 the plot was discovered and Wu Shi and his family were destroyed. -HHS 72/62:2343.

SGZ Shu 2:875, describes the general Wu Zilan 吳子蘭 as one of the conspirators. It seems likely this refers to the same man, and that Zilan was his style.

Wu Shi 吳碩; Guangling. A refugee south of the Yangzi, Wu Shi was well-treated by Sun Jiao, Sun Quan's commander in the west about 215, and became his devoted officer. He later served Sun Jiao's brother Huan with similar commitment as an aide in command of troops, and after a successful campaign in 226 he was rewarded with a secondary marquissate. -SGZ Wu 6:1207-08.

Wu [Shigong] 五世公. About 140 Wu Shigong became Administrator of Guanghan. Duan Liaoshu, who was Chief Clerk to the Excellency over the Masses, was the same age, and Wu Shigong nominated his son Duan Jiu for office. Though local officers advised him that Duan Jiu had only limited ability and his brother Kun was far more promising, Wu Shigong angrily confirmed his decision, saying that to choose the younger man would harm the family.

Wu Shigong was then transferred to Nanyang, where he nominated the sons of his colleague Cai Boqi, with similar lack of justification. He was reported for his favouritism and was demoted. -FSTY 4:30-31 [the text is not entirely complete or clear].

At the beginning of this entry, FSTY describes Wu Shigong as a man from Nanyang, but then says that he became Administrator of that commandery. According to regulations, a man could not govern his home country. It seems probable that the initial reference to Nanyang should have indicated that he was Administrator there, and Wu Shigong's place of origin is unknown.

Wu [Shigong] 武始公; Shanyang. In 147, following the death of the Lady Wu their mother two years earlier, Wu Shigong and his brothers had a family tomb prepared. -Wu 89:25-27 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu Shu 吳樹; Xiapi. During the 150s Wu Shu was appointed magistrate of Wan, capital of Nanyang commandery. When he paid the obligatory courtesy call on the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, who dominated the government, Liang Ji urged him to protect his clients, who were influential in the territory. Wu Shu, replied that he was disappointed not to hear about virtuous men, but was only asked to favour criminals. As soon as he took office he executed a number of Liang Ji's followers.

Wu Shu was later appointed Inspector of Jing province. When he called on Liang Ji this time, he was given poisoned wine, and died as he left in his carriage. -HHS 34/24:1183; Ch'ü 72:473-474.

Wu Shun 吳順 [Shuhe 叔和]; Jianwei. Wu Shun served his mother with the utmost devotion, and his conduct attracted a flock of magical red birds and a fall of sweet dew 甘露. He was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became Administrator of Yongchang. -HYGZ 10B:157.

Wu Shuo 吳碩 see Wu Shi 吳碩.

Wu Si 吳汜. In 89 Wu Si was a major under Dou Xian in the great campaign against the Northern Xiongnu. After Yan Pan and his western detachment had defeated the Shanyu at Jiluo Mountain, Wu Si and Liang Feng were sent to present him with a gift of gold brocade and an invitation to surrender. The northern chieftain agreed, but as they were returning he heard that the Han troops had withdrawn, and decided to wait in the Altai mountains. -HHS 23/13:817.

Wu Tan 吳恢 Wu Hui 吳恢.

Wu Tang 吳棠/裳 also as Wu Chang 常. General of the Household in 65, Wu Tang was appointed Acting General on the Liao, an office established at this time to maintain the separation of the northern and southern Xiongnu. The headquarters of the new command were set at Manbo in Wuyuan, and his troops came initially from levies of reprieved prisoners; they were later drawn from the Tiger Tooth Camp near Chang'an and from the encampment at Liyang on the Yellow River in Wei commandery. The camp at Liyang had been set up by Emperor Guangwu as a training and recruitment depot for the North China plain, and it became a support base for this major frontier unit.

As trouble continued, Emperor Ming resolved on a major assault against the Northern Shanyu. When the expeditionary force set out in 73, Wu Tang was in the main column led by Zhai Tong. Given false information, they turned back before they had reached the agreed rendezvous in the steppe. Zhai Tong was disgraced and died in prison, while Wu Tang was dismissed and degraded to commoner rank.

In 76 Wu Tang returned to office as Protector of the Qiang. The post had been abolished in 59 after the failure of the diplomats Dou Lin and Guo Xiang, but it was now revived to control the Qiang on either side of the frontier by military means, in the same fashion as the General on the Liao was intended to deal with the Xiongnu. In the following year, as various tribes gathered to join the rebellion led by Miyu, Wu Tang was dismissed once more for his failure to keep control. -HHS 89/79:2949, 23/13:810, 87/77:2881; deC 84. 84-86, 252-260.

Wu Ti 武悌 see sub Wu Zhou 武周.

Wu Tong 吳彤; Nanyang. Son of Wu Wei and nephew of the Grand Marshal Wu Han, after his father's death in battle, Wu Tong was enfeoffed with a county in Runan. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu Tong 吳銅 (d.138); Wu. In 138 Wu Tong joined the local rebellion of the non-Chinese brothers Yang Zhen and Yang She. They were defeated and killed by the Administrator Wang Heng. -HHS 6:267, 101/11:3245.

Wu Wei 吳尉; Nanyang. Elder brother of the Grand Marshal Wu Han, Wu Wei became a general but was killed in battle. In recognition, his son Wu Tong received a county fief. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu [Wenzhang] 吳文章; Taishan. After their parents died when they were young, Wu Wenzhang was separated from his elder brother Bowu. Twenty years later, not recognising one another, they quarrelled in a market in Xiapi. As each attempted to hit the other, he found he could not do so, and they then recognised each other.

Wu Wenzhang became Administrator of Chenliu. -FSTY 3f:104.

Wu Wu 吳五; Kuaiji. A local leader on the upper Min River in present-day Fujian, Wu Wu was conquered by He Qi in 203. -SGZ Wu 15:1378.

Wu Wu 吳武. From Colonel of the City Gates at Luoyang, in 141 Wu Wu was appointed General on the Liao in succession to Ma Xu. -HHS 89/79:2962.

Wu Xi 吳翕; Nanyang. Wu Xi was a younger brother of the Grand Marshal Wu Han. In recognition of his brother's achievements, he received a marquisate of title. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu Xi 五習 or 伍習. In 195, as Emperor Xian was escaping from Chang'an, he stayed at Xinfeng in Jingzhao. Under orders from Guo Si, Wu Xi set fire to the emperor's lodgings.

About 197, after the emperor had reached the east and Guo Si had returned to his base west of Chang'an, Wu Xi killed him. -HHS 9:378, 72/62:2342, SGZ 6:187.

Wu Xin 吳訢; Henan?: see sub Wu Xiong. Son of Wu Xiong, Wu Xin became Minister of Justice like his father before him. -HHS 46/36:1546.

Wu Xiong 吳雄 [Jigao 季高]; Henan? A man of poor family, when his mother died Wu Xiong buried her in an open field, without concern for an auspicious day. The local diviners said this would bring ruin, but Wu Xiong paid no attention.

Having excellent knowledge of the law, Wu Xiong entered the imperial service, and in the early 140s he was Minister of Justice. In 143 he joined Li Gu in urging Emperor Shun to take action on the reports of Zhou Ju and the special commission set up in the previous year.

Wu Xiong was later Minister of the Household under the regency of the Liang family for Emperor Huan, and in 151 he became Excellency over the Masses. In the following year he joined his colleague Zhao Jie to urge repairs to the Temple of Confucius in Lu. He left office in 153.

Despite the prophecies, Wu Xiong's son Xin and grandson Gong also became Ministers of Justice. -HHS 7:297-98, 46/36:1546, 63/53:2082, HQ 1:20a [which says that Wu Xiong was a man from Hejian], LS 21:19a-20a.

Wu Xiu 吳脩 or Wu Xun 循 (d.190). In 190 Wu Xiu held office as Court Architect. He was sent on embassy from Dong Zhuo to make peace with the eastern alliance, but under instructions from Yuan Shao, the Administrator of Henei Wang Kuang killed Wu Xiu and his colleagues. -HHS 9:370, 74/64A:2376, SGZ 6:192.

Wu Xu 吳盱; Nanyang. Wu Xu was a younger son of Wu Cheng and a grandson of Wu Han. After Wu Cheng died in 52 the multi-county fief which had originally been awarded to Wu Han was divided: Wu Xu's elder brother Wu Dan received a fief in Runan, with the duty to maintain sacrifices to the great general, while Wu Xu and his uncle Wu Guo each received a county in Nanyang. When Wu Dan died without sons, his fief was ended. Wu Xu took over the family responsibility for sacrifices; his fief was transferred into Jiangxia in 83. -HHS 18/8:684.

Wu Xuan 武宣. In 133 Wu Xuan was a major in the Northern Army. In a memorial to Emperor Shun, Li Gu complained that he had obtained his position without good cause, evidently on the basis of favouritism at court, and this was a danger to the integrity of the government. -HHS 63/53:2076.

Wu Xun 吳循 see Wu Xiu 吳脩.

Wu Yan 吳惓 see Wu Hui 吳恢.

Wu Yi 吳懿/壹 [Ziyuan 子遠] (d.237); Chenliu. Orphaned when he was young, about 190 Wu Yi went west with his family into Yi province, as his father had been a friend of the Governor Liu Yan. Because a physiognomist foretold that she would rise to high honours, Liu Yan had his son Liu Mao marry Wu Yi's younger sister.

As a General of the Household under Liu Zhang, Wu Yi defended Fu city in Guanghan against the first attack of Liu Bei in 213, but was then forced to surrender. He was swiftly accepted into the new regime, and Liu Bei married his sister the Lady Wu, now the widow of Liu Mao. As Liu Bei took the imperial title in 220, he named the Lady Wu as his empress and enfeoffed Wu Yi as a secondary marquis.

Wu Yi served as an Area Commander and a general under Liu Shan, became a full marquis, and after the death of Zhuge Liang in 234 he held senior office in Hanzhong. -SGZ Shu 15:1083-84; C/C 99:209-210.

Wu You 吳祐/佑 [Jiying 季英]; Chenliu. As a boy, Wu You persuaded his father Wu Hui, Administrator of Nanhai, that it was inappropriate to compile a commentary to the Classic of History in such a distant region. After his father died when he was twenty, Wu You lived as a swineherd in the marshes of his native district, reciting the classics to himself. One of his father's former subordinates criticised him for not following Wu Hui's example of public service, but though Wu You apologised he did not change his ways.

Later, at the age of forty, Wu You accepted appointment as Literary Scholar to the commandery from the Administrator Leng Hong, who then nominated him Filial and Incorrupt. At the farewell ceremony Wu You preferred to spend time with the junior officer Huang Zhen and other friends rather than with the senior officials. The Officer of Merit wanted to punish him, but Leng Hong observed that Wu You was an excellent judge of character and Huang Zhen was evidently a worthy man; no more should be said about it. Huang Zhen was also nominated for office and became celebrated for his moral quality.

Similarly, when Wu You was at the capital, the impoverished student Gongsha Mu came to pound grain for him. When Wu You spoke with him, he was amazed at his quality and they became friends: the phrase 杵臼交 "pestle and mortar together" became a term for close friendship.

At the end of his probationary period Wu You was certified with the Four Types of Virtuous Conduct [simplicity, sincerity, generosity and good conduct] and became a magistrate in Hongnong. He encouraged good behaviour, so that men of bad character left the territory, sweet dew 甘露 fell from heaven and the people sang his praises.

He was then transferred to a county in Beihai, where he befriended Dai Hong, son of his Assistant, who later became a celebrated scholar. In government Wu You emphasised reconciliation and good will, while his officers behaved kindly and did not cheat the people.

The petty officer Sun Xing embezzled a few hundred cash of tax revenue to buy a simple gown for his father, but when his father learnt how he had obtained the money, he was angry that his son had failed to match Wu You's example. He immediately came for punishment, while Sun Xing also went to the court to take the blame himself. Wu You held private audience with them. Noting that Sun Xing had offended the law for the sake of family affection, he cited Confucius's teaching that "By observing a man's faults, one may see his virtues" [Analects IV.7], and ordered only that he make restitution.

On another occasion, the peddler Guanqiu Chang from a neighbouring county, who was travelling with his mother, killed a drunken man who insulted her. Arrested and brought before Wu You, he confessed to open murder, which all agreed was an unpardonable crime even when mitigated by filial respect. Learning that although Guanqiu Chang was married he had no children, Wu You had his wife brought to him in jail and allowed his fetters to be removed so they could couple together. Before the execution was carried out that winter, the woman had become pregnant. In gratitude, as Guanqiu Chang went to his death he bit off his finger and swallowed it to make an oath, that if the child was a boy he should be named after Wu You.

After nine years of peaceful government, Wu You became Chancellor of Qi. He was later called to the capital as Chief Clerk to the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, but in 147 he protested to Ma Rong as he drafted Liang Ji's attack on the Grand Commandant Li Gu. Liang Ji had Wu You sent away as Chancellor of Hejian, from which post he resigned.

Wu You never took office again, but lived in retirement, cultivating his own fruit and vegetables and giving instruction in the classics. He died at the age of ninety-eight. -HHS 64/54:2099-2102*, XC 3:14b-15a, XHS 4:16a-b.

Wu Yu 吳尉 see Wu Wei 吳碩.

Wu Zhi 吳祉 (d.112). Administrator of Dai commandery in 97, Wu Zhi was transferred to replace Shi Chong as Protector of the Qiang. In the following year the Qiang warlord Mitang surrendered. Wu Zhi gave him gold and silk so that he might collect grain, buy cattle and settle peacefully outside the frontier, but Mitang turned to arms again in 100. Wu Zhi, with other senior officers, was then dismissed.

Wu Zhi later became Protector of the Wuhuan, but in 112 he was sent to prison for some offence and died there. -HHS 5:219, 87/77:2883-84.

Wu Zhi 吳質 [Jizhong 季重] (d.230); Jiyin. A man of wide learning, and an old acquaintance of Cao Xiu and Cao Zhen, Wu Zhi joined the suite of Cao Pi, became a close friend and adviser, and supported his claim to the succession against his brother Cao Zhi. On one occasion, at a farewell ceremony for Cao Cao, Cao Zhi spoke most eloquently but Wu Zhi advised Pi not to attempt to emulate his brother but to gain emotional advantage by weeping.

Wu Zhi served as a magistrate in Henei and in Wei, but when Cao Pi came to power he enfeoffed him, gave him military authority over the northeast, and treated him as one of his most trusted officers. One of Wu Zhi's last acts was to recommend Sima Yi to Cao Rui. -SGZ 21:607-10.

In 220 a colonel in the Northern Army, with the personal name Zhi 質 and enfeoffment as a secondary marquis, was a sponsor of a stele commemorating Cao Pi's assumption of the imperial title. Goodman suggests this may have been Wu Zhi. -LS 19:4b; Goodman 98:197.

Wu [Zhongshan] 武仲山; Yingchuan. Though a man of common family, Wu Zhongshan was courteous and generous, treating his kinsmen well and assisting his neighbours with loans and gifts. Refusing offers of local appointment, he died poor, leaving nothing for his two sons. He was buried in a simple coffin, but in 172/173 a stele was set up to honour his fine conduct. -LS 9:3a-4a; Ebrey 80:335.

Wu [Zhongzhang] 武仲章; Shanyang. Son of Wu Liang, in the early 150s Wu Zhongzhang joined his brothers to create a shrine for their late father, now recognised as a masterpiece of Han classical art. -LS 6:14a; Wu 89:25 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu Zhou 武周 [Bonan 伯南]; Pei. As magistrate of Xiapi about 210, Wu Zhou was admired by the Inspector of Xu province Zang Ba, particularly for the firmness with which he punished one of Zang Ba's own subordinates who had offended the law.

A few years later Wu Zhou served as Protector of the Army, responsible for discipline under the general Zhang Liao. The two men quarrelled, but the clerical officer Hu Zhi persuaded Zhang Liao to make his peace with Wu Zhou.

As an Imperial Clerk in 220, Wu Zhou joined Sima Yi and others in urging Cao Pi to take the imperial title. He later became Minister of the Guards and a Household Counsellor. -SGZ 18:537 [mistakenly as Gongwu Zhou 公武周], 27:741-42, 2:66; Goodman 98:111.

XTS 74A:3136 says that Wu Zhou's father Wu Duan 端 was Administrator of Jiujiang and received enfeoffment, and his grandfather Wu Ti 悌 had been Colonel of the Capital Encampment 中壘校尉 and Minister of Ceremonies. The colonelcy, however, had been abolished at the beginning of Later Han [Bn 80:117], so either there is anachronism or, more probably, some generations have been omitted.

Wu Zhu 吳柱. An Academician at the court of Gongsun Shu in 30, he opposed the strategy of Jing Han for a campaign to threaten Emperor Guangwu of Han on the northwest and the south. Citing the classic example of King Wu of Zhou 周武王, Wu Zhu argued, not unreasonably, that Gongsun Shu lacked widespread support and that there were no favourable signs to justify such a risky venture at long range. Other officials agreed, among them Gongsun Shu's brother Guang, so the project was shelved. -HHS 13/3:539-40; Bn 59:186-187.

Wu Zi 吳資 [Yuanyue 元約]; Taishan. In the late 120s Wu Zi was a successful and well-remembered Administrator of Ba commandery. -HYGZ 1:5.

Wu Zi 吳資. Administrator of Jiyin and a supporter of Lü Bu, Wu Zi was defeated by Cao Cao at the beginning of 195. -SGZ 1:12.

Wu [Zilan] 吳子蘭 see Wu Shi 吳碩.

Wu [Ziqiao] 武子儁; Shanyang. A grandson of Wu Liang, in the early 150s Wu Ziqiao joined his father and uncles to create a shrine for him, now recognised as a masterpiece of Han classical art. -LS 6:14a; Wu 89:25-27 and see sub Wu Liang.

Wu [Ziqing] 吳子卿. Wu Ziqing is described as an associate of Yuan Shao, He Yong and Zhang Miao about 170. His personal name is not known. -HHS 74/64A:2374, SGZ 6:188.

Wuche [Boqi] 毋車伯奇 of Le'an became Chancellor of Xiapi. -FSTY 5f:120. We are told that when Wuche Boqi was Chancellor of Xiapi his Registrar was named Bu Shaonan, and people joked about how the Chancellor had no carriage 毋車 and so the Registrar went on foot 步.

Wuchendi 無臣氏 see Nengchendi[zhi] 能臣抵之.

Wucheng Hei 武成黑 is mentioned in FSTY 5f:127.

Wudadihou 烏達鞬侯 (d.46); Xiongnu. Son of the Shanyu Yu, Wudadihou became Worthy King of the Left and was recognised as heir. When his father died in 46 Wudadihou succeeded him, but he died a few months later. Before his death Wudadihou named his younger brother Punu as his heir, with title as Worthy King of the Left, but this arrangement was fiercely resented by their cousin Bi, later Southern Shanyu, and led to the division of the Xiongnu state. -HHS 89/79:2942.

Wuhe 無何; Wuhuan. A chieftain of Yanmen in 109, at the time of the great Qiang rebellion Wuhe joined the Xianbi leader Qiulun and a group of Northern Xiongnu, and with a total of seven thousand men they raided Wuyuan commandery. They defeated the Administrator and killed several senior officers.

The Acting General of Chariots and Cavalry He Xi and the General on the Liao Liang Qin were sent against the raiders with 20,000 men, and in the following year Wuhe and his fellows were thoroughly defeated. While Wuhe asked to surrender, his Xianbi allies and some Wuhuan fled across the frontier. -HHS 90/80:2983; deC 84:390.

Wuheyun 無何允 miswritten for Wuhe 無何. -HHS 90/80:2983 & JJ at 3325.

Wuju 毋丘 [surname] see Wuche 毋丘.

Wujuzhan 烏居戰 (d.96); Xiongnu. A member of the royal house of the Southern Xiongnu, Wujuzhan held office as a secondary king. He was a friend of the Shanyu Anguo, and after Anguo's death in 94 his successor Shizi suspected he might be plotting against him. Shizi ordered Wujuzhan arrested and questioned, but Wujuzhan took a few thousand followers to take refuge in the hill country across the frontier. From there they raided Chinese-controlled territory in the Ordos.

In the autumn of 96 the General on the Liao Pang Fen and his colleague Feng Zhu led a major attack. They killed Wujuzhan and brought his people south to settle in Anding and Beidi commanderies. -HHS 89/79:2956-57; deC 84:282.

Wuke 勿柯; Wuhuan. A chieftain of his people, in 94 Wuke brought a force of cavalry to assist Ren Shang, the Protector of the Wuhuan, in pursuit of the renegade Xiongnu prince Fenghou. Their troops ambushed Fenghou and inflicted a heavy defeat, but the main body of the enemy escaped across the frontier and the imperial army abandoned the chase. -HHS 89/79:2956.

Wuli 烏利; Xiongnu. -XTS 75B:3437 says that Wuli was a son of the Xiongnu king Shili, a grandson of the captured general Liu Jinbo and father of the chieftain Qubi. The story of Liu Jinbo, however, is doubtful: see sub voce.

Wulu 五鹿 [Five Deer] was the sobriquet of a leader among the Black Mountain bandits in the Taihang range in 185. -HHS 71/61:2310, SGZ 8:261.

Wulun 烏倫; Xianbi. In 120 Wulun and his colleague Qizhijian came to offer submission to Deng Zun the General on the Liao. Both received gifts, while Wulun was granted title as a king and Qizhijian was named a marquis. -HHS 90/80:2987.

Wuju 毋丘 [surname] see Guanqiu 毋丘 passim.

Wusi 吾斯 (d.143); Xiongnu. Chief of a clan of the Southern Xiongnu based in Yunzhong and Dingxiang, in the early summer of 140 Wusi and his colleague Che'niu led a rebellion. Moving west against Xihe, they attracted the support of Yiti the Worthy King of the Right, and eight thousand men then raided across the north of the Ordos region, killing officials in Dai and Shuofang and attacking the Shanyu's capital at Meiji in Xihe.

The General on the Liao Ma Xu brought twenty thousand men against the raiders, including Qiang, Wuhuan and Xianbi auxiliaries. The rebels were forced back, but they continued to plunder the countryside, and a few weeks later another rebellion broke out among the Qiang to the south. Under pressure from the official Chen Gui, moreover, the Southern Shanyu Xiuli committed suicide, together with his brother and heir the Worthy King of the Left, leaving the traditional leadership of the Xiongnu in limbo. In the autumn Che'niu claimed the vacant title, though Wusi was evidently dominant in their partnership.

On the arguments of the General-in-Chief Liang Shang, orders were sent that Ma Xu should avoid direct combat but establish defences in the north, seek to divide the rebels and persuade them to surrender individually. Though the Worthy King Yiti returned to his allegiance, this was of small consequence, for the supporters of Wusi and Che'niu were now numbered in the tens of thousands, and they had links with the Qiang and the Wuhuan. Their forces defeated the local troops of Shang commandery and raided south into the Wei valley, while their influence extended from Bing southwest to Liang province, east into You, and even across the Taihang ranges to the North China plain. The Han government was obliged to withdraw the administration of Xihe and Shang commanderies to the south, and to combine Shuofang into Wuyuan, where the remnant civilian regime could be guarded by the garrison under Ma Xu.

In the winter at the end of 140, the Emissary Zhang Dan, aided by militia from You province and Wuhuan auxiliaries, defeated the rebels in Yanmen and forced the surrender of Che'niu and his followers. Wusi escaped with his own party, and obtained the support of some dissident Wuhuan, but early in 141 Ma Xu with five thousand Xianbi defeated him in Xihe.

Once more making escape, Wusi gained further support and continued his depredations in Bing province, though on a smaller scale than before. In 143 he was killed by a member of his own tribe, suborned by the Emissary Ma Shi, and his head was sent to Luoyang.

The Chinese counter-attack in the north was thus comparatively successful, but in the spring of 141 the general Ma Xian had been disastrously defeated by rebel Qiang in Liang province, and with this collapse at the rear the Chinese position in the Ordos was left as little more than a facade. In the autumn of that year the capitals of Beidi and Anding were also shifted to the Wei valley, and none of the displaced commandery governments were restored. From that point of view, the rebellion of Wusi and Che'niu, combined with failure against the Qiang, marked the beginning of the end of imperial power in the north. -HHS 89/79:2960-63.

Wuyan 難樓 (d.207); Wuhuan. Chieftain in You-beiping in the late 160s, commanding eight hundred tribal groups, he styled himself Hanlu King 汗魯王. In 187 he joined the rebellion of Zhang Chun, but later surrendered to the Governor Liu Yu.

In 195 he joined the rising against Gongsun Zan, and [as Hanluwei 汗魯維] was granted title as Shanyu by Yuan Shao.

In 207 Wuyan joined Tadun to support Yuan Shang and Yuan Xi. After the defeat at White Wolf Mountain, he fled with others to Gongsun Kang, who killed them. -HHS 90/80:2984, SGZ 30:834-35; deC 84:396-411. See also sub Nengchendi[zhi].

Wuyang, Lady of 舞陽君, see the Lady Xing 興, mother of the Empress He of Emperor Ling.

Wuyin 舞陰, Princess of, see Liu Yiwang.

X

Xi 郤/郟 [surname] see Chi 郤/郟 passim.

Xi 鐔 [surname] see Tan 鐔 passim.

Xi 習, the Lady; Nan. Sister of Xi Zhen, she married Pang Lin. When Cao Cao took over Jing province in 208, Pang Lin and his elder brother Tong went with Liu Bei to the south, but Pang Lin's family could not follow him and remained in the north. They were separated for almost fifteen years, and the Lady brought up their children alone.

In 222 Pang Lin was with the army under Huang Quan on the northern flank of Liu Bei's expedition against Wu. When the main force was defeated, Huang Quan surrendered, and as Pang Lin went with him into Wei he was reunited with the Lady Xi. Cao Pi congratulated the couple with gifts of bed-clothing and robes of honour. -SGZ Shu 7:956-57.

Xi 歙 [surname unknown]. In 56 Xi was household assistant to the Excellency Zhang Chun. Zhang Chun held a hereditary marquisate but, believing he had failed to carry out the full responsibilities of his office as Excellency, he instructed Xi that the fief should not be maintained. This later caused problems for his son Zhang Fen. -HHS 35/25:1198.

Xi Feng 席封 or Yu Feng 虞封. A major in the service of Dou Rong, in 29 Xi Feng was sent through the hostile territory controlled by Wei Ao to take a letter to Emperor Guangwu, confirming Dou Rong's support of Han. -HHS 23/13:800 [as Xi Feng], DGHJ 10:5a, XHS 2:14a [both as Yu Feng].

Xi Guang 錫光 [Changchong 長沖]; Hanzhong. Towards the end of Former Han, Xi Guang became Inspector of the province of Jiaozhi, and in the time of Wang Mang he was Administrator of Jiaozhi commandery. With his colleague Ren Yan, Administrator of Jiuzhen, he was an energetic sponsor of Confucian values among the native peoples and a founder of Chinese civilisation in the south.

Xi Guang kept out of the civil war which accompanied the fall of Wang Mang, and maintained control within his borders. His local power was recognised by the restored Han government of the Gengshi Emperor and he was confirmed in his position.

In 29 Guangwu's commander in the south, Cen Peng, wrote to urge Xi Guang to accept the new regime and, encouraged by the Governor of Jiaozhi province Deng Rang, Xi Guang sent tribute to Han. He was named a chief general and enfeoffed as a marquis with court privileges. -HHS 17/7:659, 76/66:2462, 86/76:2836, HYGZ 2:18, SGZ Wu 8:1251; Bn 59:157-158, Miyakawa 60:31.

Xi Guang 席廣. A Consultant in 47, he was admired by Yin Xing. As Yin Xing was dying, he recommended Xi Guang to Emperor Guangwu, who promoted him to be Minister of the Household. -HHS 32/22:1131-32.

Xi Jia 郤嘉. An associate of Wang Si and Xue Ti, Xi Jia rose to high office under Wei and was enfeoffed by Cao Pi. -SGZ 22:471.

Xi Jian 郤儉 see Que Jian 卻儉 and also sub Hao Mengjie 郝孟節.

Xi Jian 郤儉 see Hao Mengjie 郝孟節.

Xi Lü 郤慮 see Chi Lü 郤慮.

Xi She 奚涉. Formerly head of the Great Granary at Luoyang, in 44 Xi She was accused of a crime by the Excellency Dai She, but was then found innocent. Dai She and his colleague Dou Rong were dismissed, and Dai She died in prison. -HHS 1B:72; Bn 79:63.

Xi Shou 習授; Nan. When Lou Gui made an unguarded remark about Cao Cao and his sons, Xi Shou accused him of disrespect. Cao Cao had Lou Gui killed. -SGZ 12:374.

Xi Su 襲肅. An officer of Yi province in 208, he came to surrender to Sun Quan. His troops were allocated to Lü Meng, but Lü Meng said that Xi Su was worthy of command and should not suffer such loss. Xi Su's men were restored to him. -SGZ Wu 9:1374.

Xi Xiang 習響 became Chancellor of Chen. -FSTY 6f:137.

Xi Xun 郤巡 or 郤巡 [Zhongxin 仲信]; Chen. A disciple of the scholar Fan Ying, Xi Xun maintained his teachings of the classics and the arts of divination, and later became a Palace Attendant.

It is said that on one occasion when Xi Xun was travelling abroad, Fan Ying learned by his magical skills that he was in danger from bandits and miraculously went to save him. -HHS 82/72A:2724 & JJ at 2995; Ngo 76:104, DeWoskin 83:66.

Xi Yuan 奚延 see Yuan Yan 爰延, -XC 2:13a.

Xi Zhen 習禎 [Wenxiang 文祥]; Nan. Skilled in rhetoric 談論, and regarded as comparable to his brother-in-law Pang Tong, Xi Zhen joined Liu Bei's service. He became a county magistrate and then a commandery Administrator in Yi province. [See also the Lady Xi his sister, wife of Pang Lin.] -SGZ Shu 15:1085 & JJ at 19b.

Xi Zheng 郤正; Henan: see Chi Zheng 郗正.

Xi [Zhongxin] 郤仲信; Chen. An Academician and scholar of the Chunqiu apocrypha, about 150 Xi Zhongxin was teacher to Wei Lang. -HHS 67/57:2201.

Xi Zhicai 戲志才; Yingchuan. Recommended by Xun Yu, Xi Zhicai became a valuable officer to Cao Cao. -HHS 70/60:2284.

Xi [Ziran] 戲子然; Beihai. In 169 Xi Ziran provided lodging for the reformist Zhang Jian as he made his escape across the northern frontier. -HHJ 22:262.

Xia 夏, the Lady; Hejian. The Lady was the wife of Liu Shu and mother of Liu Chang, successive marquises of Jiedu Village. When her grandson Liu Hong, Emperor Ling, was brought to the throne in 168, the Lady was awarded a posthumous imperial title. -HHS 9:328.

Xia Changsi 夏長思 see Xiachang Si 夏長思.

Xia Cheng 夏承 [Zhongyan 中兗] (106/116-170). Member of an official family, Xia Cheng studied the Poetry and the History. He held commandery office as Registrar, Investigator and Officer of Merit, was sent to the capital as Reporting Officer, acted as a county magistrate and then joined the staff of Ji province.

Invited to the offices of the Excellency Hu Guang, Xia Cheng received a high grading and was appointed a magistrate in Beihai. He maintained an excellent and influential government, and evidently died in office. A stele was set up in his honour. -LS 8:9b-11b, 27:27a-b, Nagata 94:184. [LS 8 and LS 27 give his age at death as fifty-six, but Nagata suggests that he was sixty-six; the text is difficult and there is some suspicion of the material transcribed by Nagata.]

Xia Fang 夏方; Jiujiang. In 144 some thousand non-Chinese people of Rinan attacked local government offices, and they were joined by other groups in Jiuzhen commandery. As Inspector of Jiaozhi, Xia Fang made terms with the insurgents by a display of generosity, and they all returned to allegiance. The regent Dowager Liang was impressed by his achievement, and promoted Xia Fang to be Administrator of Guiyang.

After the trouble begun by Zhu Da in Jiuzhen had continued for three years, in 160 Xia Fang was re-appointed Inspector of Jiaozhi. He persuaded the remnant rebels to surrender. -HHS 86/76:2839.

Xia Fang 夏方 [Boyang 伯陽]; Ganling. In 181 Xia Fang was Chief Clerk to Feng Xun, Chancellor of Changshan, and was associated in the setting up of a stele to a ridge of the Taihang Ranges known as Three Excellencies Mountain. It appears that he left his post soon afterwards and was succeeded by Shentu Xiong. -LS 3:17b.

Xia Fu 夏馥 [Zizhi 子治]; Chenliu. A scholar when he was young, Xia Fu was honest and straightforward, and gained local reputation by his refusal to recognise powerful families of his county. At the beginning of Emperor Huan's reign in 147 he was nominated as a man of Direct Speech, but he did not accept.

Xia Fu was numbered among the worthy men in lists compiled by the reformists and students of the University at Luoyang, and though he had no direct contact with the palace eunuchs, they classified him with their known opponents such as Zhang Jian and Fan Pang. At the time of the Second Faction Incident in 169, orders were sent for his arrest but he took refuge in the Taihang ranges, where he shaved off his beard for disguise and became the servant of a family of ironworkers. After a few years of such labour he was so worn out that he was unrecognisable, and when his younger brother Jing came to find him he was able to recognise him only by his voice. Jing had brought presents, but Xia Fu turned him away lest he become involved in his misfortune. He died about 180.

When Xia Fu heard how Zhang Jian had fled in 169, he was angry at a leader who brought others to such disaster: those who had supported him at the time of action; and the families which had given him shelter during his escape and then paid a heavy penalty. -HHS 67/57:2201-02* & 2187, XC 4:6b; deC 89:114-115.

Xia Gong 夏恭 [Jinggong 敬公]; Liang. A scholar of the New Text schools of the Han interpretation of Poetry and the Meng interpretation of the Book of Changes, during the last years of Wang Mang Xia Gong taught great numbers of students. In the time of troubles at the beginning of Later Han there was constant threat from bandits, but the local people defended Xia Gong on account of his previous generosity and good faith, and so no harm came to him.

When Emperor Guangwu took the imperial title in 25, Xia Gong was called up to be a gentleman cadet, and he later became Commandant in Taishan. He treated the people there well and was extremely popular.

Xia Gong was best known, however, for his literary works, which amounted to twenty pian, including rhapsodies, poetry and essays. Widely admired, he died at the age of 49. -HHS 80/70A:2610*.

Xia Jing 夏靜; Chenliu. Younger brother of Xia Fu, Xia Jing took him presents of silk when he was a fugitive in the mountains in the 170s. Xia Fu turned him away lest he be involved in his misfortune. -HHS 67/57:2202.

Xia Jun 夏駿. A major under the general Ma Fang, in the spring of 78 he was sent with five thousand men in a direct advance against the Qiang of Longxi, while his colleagues Ma Peng and Li Tiao led two other columns in oblique approaches to surprise the enemy. Attacking together, they killed or captured over a thousand men and seized more than a hundred thousand cattle and sheep.

As Xia Jun sought to pursue the fleeing Qiang, he was defeated in a rear-guard action, but Ma Fang resumed the advance and by autumn the Qiang were again under control. -HHS 24/14:856.

Xia Kan 夏堪 [Shude 叔德]. Xia Kan was a junior clerk in one of the offices of the Excellencies at Luoyang. It is not known when he died, but a stele was set up to his memory. -LS 12:14b-15b.

Xia Meng 夏猛. About 91 Xia Meng was a staff officer to the Bearer of the Mace Dou Jing, brother of the regent Dowager. As the result of a report by Zheng Ju, Dou Jing was briefly dismissed for misconduct, and when he returned to office he sought vengeance.

Zheng Ju came from Wei commandery, so Dou Jing sent Xia Meng to see the Administrator Zhang Pu. Claiming that Zheng Ju's elder brother, who led local office in the commandery, was behaving badly, he urged Zhang Pu to make an example of him. Zhang Pu was furious at such interference in his government and at the attempt to involve him in a private vendetta. He arrested Xia Meng and imprisoned him, but then reported the matter to Dou Jing's office, claiming he was concerned that Xia Meng might be harmed by members of the Zheng family. Soon afterwards it was ordered that Xia Meng should be released on payment of a fine. -HHS 45/35:1531.

Xia Mi 夏密. Xia Mi was a bandit leader in Jing province during the late 130s, but when the new Inspector Li Gu arrived he and six hundred of his senior followers came with bound hands to surrender.

Li Gu pardoned them and had them travel through the region, urging others to trust in his good will. Within six months the troubles were ended. -HHS 63/53:2080.

Xia Mou 夏牟. A Counsellor Remonstrant in 188, Xia Mou was appointed a colonel of the Western Garden, in the personal army established by Emperor Ling. -HHS 8:356, 74/64A:2374.

Xia Qin 夏勤 [Bozong 伯宗]; Jiujiang. Xia Qin was initially very poor. He made sandals for a living, but if a pair was faulty he would refuse to sell them. On one occasion when he was out his wife sold a bad pair in order to get some rice, but when Xia Qin learnt of this he refused to eat.

A student of the New Text Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu under Fan Shu in the early 60s, Xia Qin later served as a county magistrate in Henan and Nanyang and then became Administrator of Lingling. He was celebrated for his excellent administration.

In the time of Emperor An, Xia Qin became Minister Herald, and in 109 he was named Excellency over the Masses. He left that office in 115. -HHS 5:212, 224, 32/22:1125.

XC 8:10b has a biography of Liu Qin 劉勤 from Jiangxia, also with the style Bozong, and with a similar story about the sandals. HHSJJ 32/22:1188 Hui Dong identifies him with Xia Qin.

Xia Rong 夏榮. When the adept Wang Heping died at Luoyang about 180, his follower Sun Yong buried more than a hundred manuscripts and a quantity of medicines in his tomb. Xia Rong, another disciple of Wang Heping, later claimed that their master had arranged a false death 尸解 and had reached the world of the immortals. Sun Yong then regretted that he had neither read the texts nor taken the potions for his own use. -HHS 82/72B:2751, SGZ 29:805; Ngo 76:146-147, DeWoskin 83:88.

Xia Wen 夏文; Yingchuan. A senior official in Pei, Xia Wen mourned the death of the Attendant Officer Huang Yu and joined in setting up a stele to his memory. -SJZ 24:7b.

Xia Xi 夏熹; Jiangxia. Xia Xi was a leader of bandits about 35. The new Administrator Dong Xuan attacked the group, scattered them, and brought them to surrender. -HHS 77/67:2489.

Xia Ya 夏牙; Liang. Son of Xia Gong, Xia Ya was also admired for his literary work. He was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, but died young, leaving nonetheless some forty pian of rhapsodies, poetry and eulogies. -

HHS 80/70A:2610.

Xia Yu 夏育; Xiapi. During Duan Jiong's many campaigns against the Qiang, Xia Yu and his colleague Tian Yan were among his most trusted and effective officers. In 159 they led a small advance troop to entice an attack from the Qiang of Longxi, leading to Duan Jiong's successful campaign across the frontier, and they took leading roles in his operations to destroy the Eastern Qiang in 168 and 169.

As Administrator of Beidi in 174, aided by a contingent of Xiongnu, Xia Yu defeated a raiding party of the Xianbi. He was then transferred to be Protector of the Wuhuan, with responsibility for both Wuhuan and Xianbi.

In 177 Xia Yu recommended a great offensive against the Xianbi warlord Tanshihuai. Many at court had reservations, and Cai Yong argued strongly against it, but the project was supported by the eunuch Wang Fu, an old ally of Duan Jiong; there is no record of Duan Jiong's own opinion, and he may have been away from Luoyang at the time. In any case, the expedition was approved and Xia Yu, Tian Yan and Zang Min led three columns of provincial levies and auxiliary cavalry from the Xiongnu, a total of some 30,000 men, into Xianbi territory. They were defeated with heavy losses, and the disaster caused critical damage to Chinese prestige and position in the north. Xia Yu and his fellow-commanders were brought back in cage carts, paid a ransom and were reduced to commoner status.

Xia Yu was later restored to office, and in 184 he was appointed Protector of the Qiang in place of Ling Zheng, who had been killed at the outbreak of the rebellion in Liang province. The rebels attacked Xia Yu and besieged him in the yamen of a horse park in Hanyang. A relief force led by He Xun came to grief, but Xia Yu and his men held out successfully.

As a partisan of the general Guo Si in 195, Xia Yu tried unsuccessfully to prevent Emperor Xian from making his escape east from Chang'an. -HHS 90/80: 2990-94, HJJ 28:339; deC 84:127, 137, 160, 338-342.

Xia Yun 夏惲. A eunuch, Xia Yun became a Regular Attendant under Emperor Ling and was enfeoffed as a marquis. A close associate of the Dowager Dong, natural mother of the emperor, he arranged that tax money from the provinces was sent to her residence.

When the maverick eunuch Lü Qiang called for reforms at the time of the Yellow Turban uprising in 184, Xia Yun joined Zhao Zhong and others to accuse him of treason and force him to kill himself.

Xia Yun probably died before the death of Emperor Ling in 189. -HHS 78/68:2533-34; deC 96:5.

Xia Zhangsi 夏長思 see Xiachang Si 夏長思.

Xia Zhao 夏昭. Officers of Gao Gan in 206, Xia Zhao and Deng Sheng were left to guard his base in Shangdang as he sought aid from the Xiongnu. They presumably surrendered to Cao Cao after Gao Gan was taken and killed. -SGZ 6:206, Xia Zhen 夏珍. A eunuch, in 124 Xia Zhen was an officer in the household of the Empress Yan, responsible for medicines. He and others were evidently regarded as supporters of the Heir Liu Bao, for after Emperor An had been persuaded to dismiss Liu Bao they were falsely accused and sent to exile in Shuofang.

At the end of the following year Liu Bao was placed upon the throne by the coup of Sun Cheng; Xia Zhen and his fellows were called back to the capital and made Regular Attendants. -HHS 78/68:2518.

Xiachang Si 夏長思; Beihai. Head of a leading local family, during the period of disorder at the beginning of Later Han Xiachang Si gathered a private army, and about 30 he attacked and captured Guangwu's Administrator Ju Xing. Li Zhang, Administrator of neighbouring Langye, brought a thousand men to attack the rebel stronghold. They killed Xiachang Si and restored Ju Xing to his position. -HHS 77/67:2493.

Xiahou 夏侯, the Lady I. The Lady was married to Huang Yun, but about 172 her husband proposed to divorce her so that he might marry the niece of the Excellency Yuan Wei. She concealed her resentment and arranged a formal ceremony of farewell, but then, before a crowd of his kinsmen and clients she read out a catalogue of his faults, including most intimate matters, then called up her carriage and left. Huang Yun was utterly shamed. -HHS 68/58:2230, HHJ 23:276.

Xiahou 夏侯, the Lady II; Pei. Daughter of Xiahou Yuan, in 200 she was captured from her home by Zhang Fei, who made her his wife. Two of their daughters became empresses to Liu Shan, sovereign of Shu. -SGZ 9:273, SGZ Shu 4:907; Fang 65:61.

Xiahou Ba 夏侯霸 [Zhongquan 仲權]; Pei. Second son of Xiahou Yuan, Xiahou Ba served as a general against Shu-Han, but fled to join the enemy after the fall of Cao Shuang in 249. -SGZ 9:272-73.

Xiahou Bo 夏侯博. An officer under Liu Bei, Xiahou Bo was captured by Cao Cao in 200. -SGZ 1:18.

Xiahou Cheng 夏侯稱 [Shuquan 叔權]; Pei. Son of Xiahou Yuan, he was talented but died young. -SGZ 9:273.

Xiahou Cheng 夏侯承. About 229 Xiahou Cheng held territorial appointment in Jing province for Sun Quan. -SGZ Wu 7:1239.

Xiahou Chong 夏侯充; Pei. Eldest son of Xiahou Dun, he succeeded to his father's fief at his death in 220. -SGZ 9:268.

Xiahou Dun 夏侯惇 [Yuanrang 元讓] (d.220); Pei. According to some sources, Xiahou Dun was a cousin of Cao Cao, as his father was an elder brother of Cao Cao's father Cao Song, who was adopted by the eunuch Cao Teng [SGZ 1:2].

At the age of fourteen Xiahou Dun killed a man for abusing his teacher, and he went to join Cao Cao when he first raised troops in the 180s. When Cao Cao became Governor of Yan in 192, he had Xiahou Dun take his place as Administrator of Dong commandery. Xiahou Dun remained in that office as Cao Cao attacked Tao Qian in Xu province, and when Zhang Miao and Lü Bu attempted to take over Yan province in 194 he was taken prisoner by mutineers. He was rescued by his officer Han Hao, and he was able to save Cao Cao's family, but he lost an eye in the fighting.

In 198 Xiahou Dun was sent to help Liu Bei against Lü Bu, but he was defeated by Lü Bu's general Gao Shun. After Lü Bu was destroyed later that year, he was appointed Administrator of Chenliu and then of Jiying, where he carried out irrigation work and established agriculture. In 202 he commanded an army against Liu Bei in Nanyang, but suffered another defeat, and it appears that his abilities were rather administrative than military; as Cao Cao was engaged in the north, Xiahou Dun had charge of his lines of communication.

Xiahou Dun became Intendant of Henan, and in 213 he was among the senior officials who urged Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei. He later encouraged him also to royal and imperial titles.

Following the campaign against Sun Quan in 217, Xiahou Dun was left in position on the Huai as Area Commander over twenty-six garrisons; this military threat forced Sun Quan to a formal surrender.

Generous and a patron of scholars, Xiahou Dun was one of Cao Cao's closest followers, well-treated and enfeoffed. After Cao Cao's death Cao Pi named him a chief general; he died a few months later. -SGZ 9:267-68*.

884 Xiahou Gong

Xiahou Gong 夏侯慕 see Xiahou Zuan 夏侯纂. -HYGZ 3:37.

Xiahou He 夏侯和 [Yiquan 義權]; Pei. Son of Xiahou Yuan, Xiahou He became a minister under Wei. -SGZ 9:272-73.

Xiahou Heng 夏侯衡; Pei. Eldest son of Xiahou Yuan and a nephew of Cao Cao, Xiahou Heng married the Lady Cao VII, a daughter of Cao Cao's younger brother the late marquis of Haiyang, and was enfeoffed as a marquis. -SGZ 9:272.

Xiahou Hui 夏侯會 [Zhiqian 稚權]; Pei. Son of Xiahou Yuan and a noted scholar, Xiahou Hui held court and provincial office under Wei. -SGZ 9:272-73.

Xiahou Lan 夏侯蘭; Changshan. Though he bore the Xiahou surname, we are told that Xiahou Lan was a man from the same district as Zhao Yun of Changshan; he must have come from a different branch of the clan.

In 202 Xiahou Lan was with Cao Cao's army led by Xiahou Dun. They were defeated in Nanyang by the troops of Liu Bei, and Xiahou Lan was captured by Liu Bei's officer Zhao Yun. Xiahou Lan and Zhao Yun had known and disliked one another long before, but Zhao Yun knew that Xiahou Lan had a good understanding of law. He recommended him to Liu Bei and Xiahou Lan became a legal officer for his army 軍正. -SGZ Shu 6:949.

Xiahou Lian 夏侯廉; Pei. Younger brother of Xiahou Dun, he was enfeoffed by Cao Cao. -SGZ 9:268.

Xiahou Mao 夏侯楙 [Zilin 子林]; Pei. Second son of Xiahou Dun, Xiahou Mao was a boyhood friend of Cao Pi. He married the Lady Cao II, eldest daughter of Cao Cao, received enfeoffment, and held office in the Secretariat of Wei.

When Cao Pi took the imperial title in 220 Xiahou Mao was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele, and he later served as Area Commander in the west. His wife the Lady Cao objected to his adulteries, while his younger brothers were angry at the way he criticised their own conduct, and about 230 they accused him of treason. He was in danger of execution, but then the accusers' motives were questioned and their claims were found to be false. -SGZ 9:268-69, LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:197.

Xiahou Rong 夏侯榮 [Youquan 幼權] (207-219);

Pei. Son of Xiahou Yuan, he was killed in the defeat at Dingjun Mountain in Hanzhong. -SGZ 9:273-74.

Xiahou Ru 夏侯儒 [Junlin 俊林]; Pei. A cousin of Xiahou Shang, he was a major of cavalry under Cao Zhang in the north in 218. He later held command in the northwest and in Jing province, and became a minister of Wei. -SGZ 15:477.

Xiahou Shang 夏侯尚 [Boren 伯仁] (d.225); Pei. Nephew of Xiahou Yuan and a close friend of Cao Pi, he served on Cao Cao's staff and was adviser to Cao Zhang in the north in 218. When Cao Cao died in 220, Xiahou Shang was responsible for the funeral procession from Luoyang to Ye city, and when Cao Pi took the imperial title he was among the sponsors of a commemorative stele.

Cao Pi enfeoffed Xiahou Shang and gave him high court and military appointments. He served as a chief general in Jing province, where he opposed the forces of Sun Quan and of Liu Bei and obtained the allegiance of many non-Chinese people. -SGZ 9:293-94, LS 19:3b; Goodman 98:196.

Xiahou Wei 夏侯威 [Jiquan 季權]; Pei. Son of Xiahou Yuan, Xiahou Wei was a provincial Inspector under Wei. -SGZ 9:272-73.

Xiahou Yuan 夏侯淵 [Miaocai 妙才] (d.219); Pei. A kinsman of Xiahou Dun, Xiahou Yuan joined Cao Cao early in his military ventures and married his sister. He was Administrator in Chenliu and Yingchuan, served as a colonel in the army against Yuan Shao at Guandu in 200, then held charge of food supplies from Yan, Yu and Xu provinces.

In 206 Xiahou Yuan joined Yu Jin to put down the rebel Chang Xi, and he led local commandery troops to deal with the Yellow Turban Xu He in Qing province. In 209 he destroyed the local leader Lei Xu in Lujiang and put down banditry in Taiyuan.

Xiahou Yuan took part in the north-western campaign of 211, and after the victory at Huayin he was left in command at Chang'an. After some set-backs, by 214 Ma Chao had been driven to the south, and Xiahou Yuan then settled the Wei valley, the Xining valley and the Yellow River west of Long Mountain, eliminating Han Sui and Song Jian and pacifying the Qiang and the Di. He was rewarded with enfeoffment.

An energetic but impetuous general, in 215 Xiahou Yuan accompanied Cao Cao to the conquest of Zhang Lu, and was then left in charge of Hanzhong. In 217 Liu Bei came to attack, and early in 219 Xiahou Yuan was defeated and killed at Dingjun Mountain. Hanzhong was thus lost to Cao Cao. -SGZ 9:270-72*. Xiahou Zuan 夏侯纂. As Liu Bei took over Yi province in 214 he named Xiahou Zuan Administrator of Guanghan. Xiahou Zuan invited the scholar recluse Qin Mi to join his staff, but was discountenanced in conversation with him and had no further contact. -SGZ Shu 8:974-75.

Xian, Emperor 獻帝 (reg. 189-220) see Liu Xie 劉協.

Xian 賢 of Suoju [Yarkand] (d.61). Son of King Yan 延 of Suoju in the west of the Tarim basin, Xian succeeded his elder brother Kang in 33. Soon afterwards he attacked and annexed the neighbouring states of Jumi [present-day Yutian] and Xiye [south of present-day Yarkand], placing his nephews, Kang's two sons, on their thrones. It is said that he now dominated all the territory east of the Pamirs.

Yan and Kang had been staunchly pro-Chinese, and at first Xian followed their example. In 38 he joined the state of Shanshan in sending a tribute mission, and in 41 he sent an embassy of his own, asking that a Protector-General be appointed to represent the power of China as in Former Han. On the advice of Dou Rong, and no doubt in accordance with Xian's hopes, Guangwu him Grand Protector-General of the Western Regions 西域大都護.

At this point, however, Pei Zun the Administrator of Dunhuang protested that no barbarian should be given such great authority, and Guangwu changed his mind. Pei Zun intercepted the messenger and forcibly changed the seal for that of a Chief General 大將軍. Predictably angry, Xian reclaimed his brother's title as Grand Chief Commandant 大都尉 and embarked on his own policy of aggrandisement.

In 45 a joint embassy from eighteen states, including Shanshan, Yanqi [Karashar] and Nearer Jushi in Turfan, brought hostages and gifts to Luoyang and asked for a Chinese Protector-General to save them from Xian. Guangwu gave presents in reply, but he had no intention of making an appointment or becoming involved in the region, and he sent the hostages back. The suppliant kings nonetheless asked that the hostages remain at Dunhuang, so it would seem a Protector-General might be sent; Guangwu agreed to this.

Within a few months, Xian had recognised the bluff. He ordered King An of Shanshan to block the road to China, and when he refused he attacked him, drove him away and sacked his city. He then attacked Qiuzi [Kuqa] and annexed that state. The new ruler of Shanshan again appealed to Guangwu, but was told that Han would not intervene and the peoples of central Asia should make their own arrangements. As the would-be hostages then left Dunhuang, Shanshan and the Jushi states sought protection from the Xiongnu.

Despite Xiongnu involvement, Xian maintained his hegemony through the 50s, and extended his authority across the Pamirs to Dayuan [Ferghana] and beyond. His government, however, was erratic: he replaced the rulers of several states, either with his own officers or with other princes, and at one point, becoming suspicious of some of these men's loyalty, he summoned them to his capital and killed them. At the same time, his increasing demands for taxes and tribute turned the people of the subordinate states against him.

In 60 Xian's oppressive local governor at Yutian [Khotan] was assassinated and the local chieftain Xiumoba seized power. Supported by troops from neighbouring Jumi, Xiumoba defeated three armies of Xian and his confederates, then besieged Suoju city. He was killed by an arrow and his troops withdrew, but his successor Guangde returned soon afterwards, this time with support from the Northern Xiongnu. Pressing a marriage alliance and a claim of kinship, Xian persuaded Guangde to withdraw, and he gave hostages to keep peace with the Xiongnu.

There was now discontent within Xian's capital about his harsh and evidently unsuccessful rule, and in 61 Guangde returned with his army. Falsely reassured by his chief minister Juyun, Xian went to negotiate with him and was promptly taken prisoner. The city fell, the state was annexed by Yutian, and Xian was killed a year later. -HHS 88/78:2923-26; Chavannes 07:171-172, 197-198, Bn 67:131-132, Yü 86:413-414.

Xian Luo 先絡, the Lady (103-127); Jianwei. After the Lady's father Xian Nihe was drowned in the Yangzi in the winter at the end of 126, her brother Xian Xian searched for his body without success. Xian Luo wept day and night, and though she had a young son and daughter she could not bear to go on living. Her family kept watch, but on the fifteenth day of the second month she managed to evade them and put out onto the river in a small boat. When she reached the place where her father had disappeared, she jumped overboard and drowned.

That night the Lady appeared to her brother in a dream, and told him to look for her and their father in six days time. At the appointed time the bodies of the Lady and of Xian Nihe both came to the surface. The county office reported this and the Administrator Xie Deng admired such devotion. He informed the court and had a stele with the Lady's portrait erected at the site. -HYGZ 3:40-41, SJZ 33:14a-b.

Fan Ye included a biography of Xian Luo in his Chapter on Worthy Women 列女傳, HHS 84/74:2799-2800, though the surname appears there as Shuxian 叔先 and the personal name as Xiong 雄; this is probably mistaken: see JJ at 3085. A similar story was told about the Lady Huang Bo of the same commandery.

Xian Ni 鮮尼; Ba. Xian Ni was the son of a Lady Jiang, but nothing more is known of him. -HYGZ 12:222.

Xian Nihe 先泥和/尼和 also as Xian Jianghe 江和 and as Xian Shenhe 沈和 (d.126); Jianwei. In the winter of 126 the county magistrate Zhao Zhi sent his Officer of Merit Xian Nihe with a message to Ba commandery. On the way down the Yangzi, his boat overturned in rapids and Xian Nihe was drowned. His body was lost but was later recovered through the self-sacrifice of his daughter Xian Luo. -HYGZ 3:40, 12:238, SJZ 33:14a-b, HHS 84/74:2799-2800 [where the surname appears, probably mistakenly, as Shuxian 叔先].

Xian Xian 先賢; Jianwei. Son of Xian Nihe, after his father was drowned in the Yangzi Xian Xian searched for his body without success. Then his suicidal sister Luo appeared in a dream and told him where and when to look. -HYGZ 3:40-41, SJZ 33:14a-b, HHS 84/74:2800.

Xian Zhi 縣芝 of Ganling is mentioned by FSTY 6f:145.

Xiang 香 [surname unknown]. Minister Coachman and Palace Counsellor, Xiang presented a memorial which proposed a new system of ribbons for imperial officials and nobility, and severe penalties for those who infringed the rules. The regent Dowager approved. [The Dowager is not specifically identified, but was probably the Lady Deng, who governed from 106 to 121]. -HHS 120/30:3675; MBeck 90:265-266, Hulsewé 55:185.

Xiang Bao 向豹 [Boyin 伯尹]; Runan? Administrator of Henei, about 134 Xiang Bao took part in the major project, led by Wang Hui and then by Sima Deng, to dredge and reconstruct the channel of the Yellow River and its tributaries near Rongyang. -SJZ 7:9a.

Xiang [Bonan] 蕪伯南; Dong. Eldest son of Xiang Tuo and brother of Xiang Wuhuan and Xiang Fengzong, Xiang Bonan commenced a promising career as a local officer, but died at the age of only twenty-two. -Nagata 94:118 [this text is of doubtful provenance].

Xiang Chang 向長 or Shang Chang 尚長 [Ziping 子平]; Henei. A scholar of the Book of Changes and Laozi, Xiang Chang was very poor. His followers gave him food, but he would only take enough for one meal, and would return anything left over. He served for a time as Officer of Merit at the end of Former Han, but then retired, and he refused appointment under Wang Mang.

At the beginning of Later Han, after his children were married, Xiang Chang left his family and went on pilgrimage to the five sacred mountains with his friend Qin Qing. He was not seen again. -HHS 83/73:2758-59*.

Xiang Deng 相登; Jianwei. Though Xiang Deng died young, his widow the Lady Zhou Du remained faithful to his memory. -HYGZ 10B:160.

Xiang [Fengzong] 蕪奉宗; Dong. Sons of Xiang Tuo, in 154 Xiang Fengzong and his elder brother Wuhuan had a funerary temple contracted for their father and mother. -Nagata 94:118 [this text is of doubtful provenance].

Xiang Ju 向舉. Successor to a marquisate, following the abdication of Emperor Xian of Han in 220, Xiang Ju joined a petition which cited various works of divination and urged Liu Bei, King of Hanzhong, to claim the imperial title. -SGZ Shu 2:887.

Xiang Kai 襄楷 [Gongzhi 公知]; Pingyuan. Widely read in the classics and histories, Xiang Kai was also expert in astrology, divination and the interpretation of portents.

Under the personal government of Emperor Huan and his eunuch associates, many omens and disasters were reported, and in 166 Xiang Kai came to Luoyang and presented a memorial. He wrote at length on the movements of the planets, but referred also to a smorgasbord of incidents on earth and among men, including the recent fierce winter, flurries of panic among the people at the capital, avalanches, the collapse of the gates at the Imperial University, a dead dragon in Henei and the Yellow River running clear; though the Yellow River ran through Xiang Kai's home territory, and reports of the last two events are recorded in HHS annals, it seems doubtful they are accurate.

On the basis of these phenomena, Xiang Kai pressed the claims of the reformers at court, and spoke particularly in support of Liu Zhi and Cheng Jin, who had been sentenced for their attacks on eunuch pretensions. He also criticised the haste with which executions were carried out, and the size of the imperial harem. Finally, Xiang Kai referred to a sacred book which had earlier been presented to Emperor Shun but which had not met with approval; he now offered to expound its teachings in fuller detail. [On this work, described as an early version of Taiping jing 太平經, see sub Gan/Yu Ji. It is possible that Xiang Kai had been involved in its original presentation to the throne.]

After some days, when no reply had been received to his first memorial, Xiang Kai sent in a second. This time he used the movements of Venus and Mars to foreshadow trouble on the frontier and a secret plot at home, relating it all to the harsh treatment of worthy officials. He urged that Liu Zhi and Cheng Jin be pardoned, and Li Yun and Du Cheng granted posthumous honours for their loyalty.

Still more outspokenly, Xiang Kai again criticised the eunuchs, and even suggested that the emperor's lack of male children was a sympathetic result of his surrounding himself with such emasculated creatures. Finally, he referred to the recent sacrifices which Emperor Huan had held to Huang-Lao 黄老 and the Buddha 浮圖/屠. Showing some knowledge of Buddhist doctrines, he spoke of how the ascetic Buddha despised women as merely "bags of skin, filled with blood;" in contrast, the emperor revelled in beautiful women, with splendid wine and food. How could he expect to equal the sages?

This time the ruler did take notice, and Xiang Kai was ordered to explain himself before the Imperial Secretariat. He repeated his arguments against the eunuchs, linking them again to the ruler's lack of male heirs. The matter was referred to senior officials, who predictably found Xiang Kai's arguments tendentious and false. Emperor Huan, however, intervened on his behalf, noting that he had at least sought to base his discussion upon real portents. So Xiang Kai escaped execution and was sentenced only to two years convict service, one of the lightest penalties in the code of Han.

Two years later, as the reformists dominated the new government of Emperor Ling, the Grand Tutor Chen Fan recommended Xiang Kai as Sincere and Upright. He did not accept, but returned to his own district, where he was treated with honour and visited with respect by each Administrator. In 188 he was invited to the capital as an Academician, but again refused.

Also in 188, it is said that Xiang Kai met with Chen Yi, son of the former Grand Tutor Chen Fan, at the residence of Wang Fen the Inspector of Ji province. From his reading of the stars Xiang Kai foretold that the eunuchs would be destroyed, and Wang Fen, with mistaken enthusiasm, planned to kidnap Emperor Ling and raise a coup d'état. The conspirators were discovered and punished, but Xiang Kai does not appear to have been personally involved. The eunuchs were indeed destroyed in the following year, but Xiang Kai died at home. -HHS 30/20B:1075-85*; deC 76, deC 80:65-67, Vervorm 90:192-193.

Xiang Lang 向朗 [Juda 巨達] (d.247); Nan. A student of Sima Hui, Xiang Lang was a friend of Xu Shu, Han Song and Pang Tong. He became a county magistrate under Liu Biao, and when he died in 208 he transferred allegiance to Liu Bei. Following the victory of the Red Cliffs Xiang Lang was given charge of the counties at the entrance to the Yangzi Gorges.

After Liu Bei took over Yi province in 214 Xiang Lang served as Administrator of Badong, of Zangke, and then of Fangling on the Han River facing Wei. Following the death of Wang Lian about 223 he was appointed senior assistant to the Chancellor Zhuge Liang. He was disgraced for a time, but later became a minister and a general and was enfeoffed. -SGZ Shu 11:1010*.

Xiang Miao 向苗. Chancellor of Pei about 150, Xiang Mao recommended the scholar Huan Luan as Filial and Incorrupt. Huan Luan had rejected previous nominations because he did not wish to be beholden to men of poor quality, but Xiang Miao was a man of good reputation and he accepted his patronage. As Xiang Miao died soon afterwards, Huan Luan immediately resigned his official post in order to attend the funeral, and he carried out three years mourning before returning to his duties. -HHS 37/27:1259.

Xiang Song 項誦 [Shuhe 叔和]; Yuzhang. Xiang Song was Registrar of his commandery when his Administrator suffered false accusation from a subordinate magistrate. Convinced of his master's innocence, Xiang Song went to the prison and beat himself until the blood flowed and his teeth fell out. The Administrator was released. -XC 7:13b [and cf. Che Zhang].

Xiang Tuo 薊他 or Xiang Da (65-154); Dong. Xiang Tuo served as a local officer in the county, commandery and province. He and his wife died within a few months of each other, and their sons Wuhuan and Fengzong honoured their memory with an expensive funerary temple. -Nagata 94:118 [this text is of doubtful provenance].

Xiang Tuo 薊他, wife of (69-154); Dong: see sub Xiang Tuo above.

Xiang Xu 向栩 or Shang Xu 尙翽 [Fuxing 甫興/輔興] (d.184); Henei. A descendant of the celebrated hermit Xiang Chang in the time of Guangwu, Xiang Xu studied the Laotzi and affected the mannerisms of a free spirit. Clothed in rags and with dishevelled hair down to his shoulders, he led a Spartan life of erratic conduct, chanting rather than speaking and hiding when anyone came to call. On occasion he would ride an ass to market and beg, but he might also give everything away to another beggar, and he acquired a number of disciples whom he named after those of Confucius.

People regarded Xiang Xu as a remarkable man, and the commandery authorities treated him courteously. He was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, and also as Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright and as Knowing the Way, and he was invited to the offices of the Excellencies. Though he refused all such requests, he eventually accepted a special summons to become Chancellor of Zhao.

There were great expectations of the good influence Xiang Xu might bring to that region, but the results were disappointing. Rather than paying attention to his duties, he rode about in a carriage with fine horses; there was some suspicion he was a charlatan.

Despite this, by the late 180s Xiang Xu was a Palace Attendant at court, making himself unpopular with aggressive criticisms and simplistic proposals. When the Yellow Turban uprising broke out he sent in a memorial making two points: he blamed the palace eunuchs; and he claimed that the rebellion could be dealt with if a single officer was sent to the banks of the Yellow River to face to the north and read the Book of Filial Piety at the enemy [faced with trouble in Liang province a few months later, the Inspector Song Nie had shown similar faith in the efficacy of this work].

This combination of naivety and aggression reaped its reward. The Regular Attendant Zhang Rang accused Xiang Xu of seeking to delay the military response of the imperial authorities and of supporting the rebels. Xiang Xu was sent to the Northern Prison of the Yellow Gates, controlled by the eunuchs, and was killed there. -HHS 81/71:2693-94*; Vervoorn 90:184.

ZZTJ 58:1867 presents Xiang Xu as a courageous opponent of the eunuchs unfairly slandered and put to death; deC 89:179. Sima Guang, however, cites only his attack on the eunuchs and Zhang Rang's counter. Vervoorn's more cynical interpretation appears more convincing: Xiang Xu was something of a public nuisance, and one may doubt whether many people regretted his disappearance.

Xiang Wu 相烏, the Lady; Guanghan. Married to Yuan Zhi at the age of fifteen, the Lady was widowed five years later. When her parents wanted her to marry again, she killed herself. -HYGZ 10B:154.

Xiang [Wuhuan] 薊無患; Dong. Sons of Xiang Tuo, in 154 Xiang Wuhuan and his brother Fengzong had a funerary temple contracted for their father and mother. -Nagata 94:118 [this text, however, is of doubtful provenance].

Xiang [Zhonghua] 相仲華; Chen. During the troubles of the early 190s Xiang Zhonghua went to Xu province. At first the Inspector Tao Qian treated the refugees well, but he later turned on them and had Xiang Zhonghua and his colleague Shi Jianyuan arrested. -HHJ 27:329.

Xiang Zun 向遵. A magistrate in Guanghan in 187, Xiang Zun had a portrait painted to honour the Lady Yang Jingyang, who had killed her father's murderer Sheng in 142. -HYGZ 10C:178.

Xiang Zun 向存 (d.213). As Liu Bei attacked Liu Zhang in 213, Liu Zhang's generals Xiang Zun and Fu Jin attacked his base at Jiameng in Guanghan. Though heavily out-numbered, the garrison commanded by Huo Jun held out for several months and eventually drove the enemy away with a sortie, killing Xiang Zun. -SGZ Shu 11:1007.

Xiangcheng, Lady of 襄城君 see the Lady Sun Shou 孫壽.

Xiangshancheng 相單程 (d.49?); non-Chinese. A "wise man" 精夫 noted for his cleverness, Xiangshancheng was a leader of the non-Chinese people of Wuling. In 47 he raided Chinese positions in the territory, and the general Liu Shang was sent to deal with him. With ten thousand levies from Nan commandery, Changsha and Wuling, Liu Shang attacked up the Yuan River, tributary of the Dongting Lake, but as they entered the gorges of the Wu Stream Xiangshancheng cut their supply lines, surrounded and destroyed the Han army, and killed Liu Shang.

In the summer of 48 the non-Chinese attacked again, sacking Linyuan by the Dongting Lake. The general Ma Cheng was sent against them, but had no success and resigned, while the non-Chinese evidently occupied the greater part of the commandery.

The elderly general Ma Yuan now volunteered, and he was sent with some 40,000 commandery troops, including convicts released for the occasion. In the spring of 49 Ma Yuan advanced along the south of the Dongting Lake, defeated the tribesmen and occupied Hutou Mountain on the Yuan River. Through summer and autumn his forces held the enemy from his heartland and after seven months Xiangshancheng's people were hungry and distressed and sought to surrender.

Ma Yuan's army had also suffered, and Ma Yuan died before he could take the submission, but in the winter his adjutant Zong Jun took authority to make the settlement.

Zong Jun's biography says that the tribespeople killed the leaders who had brought them to such a pass, but HHS 86/76 seems to suggest that Xiangshancheng survived and held position under the new regime. - HHS 86/76:2831-32, 41/31:1412; Bn 67:68-72.

Xianli 賢栗 [or Huli 扈栗]; non-Chinese. A ruler of the Ailao in the far southwest of China, in 47 Xianli sent an army down the Mekong to raid the Luduo people, who were tributary to China on the frontier of Yizhou commandery. Though the attack was successful, a storm destroyed the Ailao ships and many were drowned. A subsequent attack was defeated by the Luduo, and it is claimed that Xianli was appropriately impressed by the power of the virtue of Emperor Guangwu, patron of the Luduo.

In 51 King Xianli sent messengers of submission to Zheng Hong the Administrator of Yuexi; the number of his people was given as 17,659 individuals. Guangwu formally enfeoffed him as a chieftain, and an annual exchange of tribute and gifts was initiated.

This first contact of the Ailao people with Han, was followed by the massive further accession of Xianli's colleague and successor Liumiao. -HHS 86/76:2848; Bn 67:77.

Xiantang 鮮堂; Xiongnu. In the autumn of 88 the Southern Shanyu Tuntuhe sent a memorial to the Han court with an account of turmoil amongst the Northern Xiongnu and a proposal for a campaign to take over the steppe. In doing so, he cited information obtained from Xiantang, a northern king who had just surrendered, and who told how the Northern people would welcome an army from the South and the opportunity to change allegiance. -HHS 89/79:2952.

Xianyu Bao 鮮于褒 or Xianyu Pou 褒; Shanggu. Recommended for office by Yin Xing, although they did not like one another, Xianyu Bao became Intendant of Jingzhao about 27. Demoted for some fault, he became a magistrate in Pingyuan, but later returned as an Internuncio. On a journey to Chang'an with the court, he commended his former officer Diwu Lun to his successor as Intendant, Yan Xing.

During the 30s Xianyu Bao was Administrator of Zuopingyi. He was not an effective ruler, however, and was again dismissed about 36. The retired general He Yan had to clear up the disorder he left. -HHS 32/22: 1130-31, 41/31:1395-96, HQ 1:4a.

Xianyu Dan 鮮于丹. An officer of Sun Quan, in 215 Xianyu Dan accompanied Lü Meng to seize the southern commanderies of Jing province from Guan Yu and Liu Bei.

During the 220s Xianyu Dan took part in several campaigns north of the Yangzi, and he served under Lu Xun in the defeat of Liu Bei in 222. -SGZ Wu 2:1119.

Xianyu Ding 鮮于定. Having served as Administrator of Guanghan, Xianyu Ding rose to higher office. - HYZG 3:36.

Xianyu Fang 鮮于魴 [Cangjiu 倉九]; Yuyang? In 165 Xianyu Fang gathered subscribers for an inscription in honour of his grandfather Xianyu Huang. -Nagata 94:156-58.

Xianyu Fu 鮮于輔; Yuyang. A former Assistant Officer to Liu Yu the Governor of You province, in 195 Xianyu Fu led a rising against Gongsun Zan. He defeated his army, killed his officials and drove him to refuge in his fortress of Yi in Hejian. Xianyu Fu then took title as Administrator of Yuyang.

After the destruction of Gongsun Zan in 199 Xianyu Fu was persuaded by Tian Yu that he should offer allegiance to distant Cao Cao rather than to the victorious Yuan Shao. Cao Cao gave him general command in the northeast, and in 200 Xianyu Fu joined him at Guandu. He was later enfeoffed and named General Who Crosses the Liao on the Left.

In 205 Xianyu Fu was attacked by Wuhuan allies of the Yuan family, but he held his position. He took part in the campaign to defeat Tadun at White Wolf Mountain in 207, and later maintained diplomacy with the Xianbi and Wuhuan.

In 213 Xianyu Fu was one of the officials who petitioned Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei, and in 220 he was a sponsor of the stele which commemorated Cao Pi's accession to the imperial throne. He achieved high rank at court, and during the 220s he was sent on embassy to Shu-Han. -SGZ 8:243, 247, LS 19:3b; Goodman 98:196.

Xianyu Huang 鮮于璜 [Boqian 伯謙] (d.125); Yuyang? A man of local family, Xianyu Huang was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, served probation as a gentleman cadet, and then became a major under the General on the Liao. He left office when his father died, but was later appointed to the office of the Grand Commandant.

In 106 Xianyu Huang was sent as Commissioner to the Frontier 安邊節使, supervising two northern provinces, and in the following year he became Administrator of Yanmen, where he dealt with some troublesome Wuhuan. Having served there several years, he retired and died at home.

In 165 Xianyu Huang's grandson Xianyu Fang gathered sponsors for a stele in his honour. -Nagata 94:156-158.

Xianyu Ji 鮮于冀; Xihe. Administrator of Qinghe in 26, Xianyu Ji planned to construct a new yamen, but he died before it was finished. It appears he had fallen foul of the new Emperor Guangwu, for his family property was also confiscated.

His successor as Administrator, Zhao Gao, intended to complete the work, but while he estimated the cost at two million cash, his senior assistants Huang Bing and Liu Shang claimed it would be four million. At this point, the ghost of Xianyu Ji appeared, joined in the calculations, and claimed that Huang Bing and Liu Shang were planning to embezzle the funds. In the face of this apparition, Huang Bing and Liu Shang fell to the floor and died.

The ghost also sent a letter to the throne, saying that Zhao Gao was unworthy to succeed him. Though the couriers miraculously disappeared, Zhao Gao reported the matter and the emperor sought to make amends to the angry spirit. Orders were given that all Xianyu Ji's property should be restored to his family. -SJZ 9:27b-28a.

Xianyu Pou 鮮于褒 i.e. Xianyu Bao 鮮于褒. -HHS 32/22:1130.

Xianyu Yin 鮮于銀; Yuyang? About 191 Xianyu Yin was an Assistant Officer to Liu Yu, Governor of You province, who sent him with a report to Chang'an.

In 195, with title as Commandant of Cavalry, Xianyu Yin joined the rising of Xianyu Fu against Gongsun Zan. -HHS 73/63:2355, SGZ 8:243.

Xianyu Zhou 鮮于舟 see Xianyu Dan 鮮于丹.

Xiao 孝 "Filial" was prefixed to the posthumous title of all emperors of Former and Later Han other than the two founders Gao and Guangwu, and the Gengshi Emperor. See sub voce.

Xiao Bao 蕭苞 see sub Xiao Wangzhi.

Xiao Bing 蕭冰 see sub Xiao Wangzhi.

Xiao Chan 蕭闡 see sub Xiao Wangzhi.

Xiao Deng 蕭登. Administrator of Jianwei in 127, Xiao Deng admired the filial devotion of the suicidal Lady Xian Luo. He informed the court of her conduct and had a stele with the Lady's portrait erected at the scene of her death. -HYGZ 3:41.

Xiao Guang 蕭廣. About 26 Xiao Guang was a general under Guangwu stationed at Luoyang. Though his troops were undisciplined and terrorised the people, he took no action. The censorial officer Du Shi arrested Xiao Guang and executed him. -HHS 31/21:1094.

Xiao Hao 蕭皓 see sub Xiao Wangzhi.

Xiao Hong 蕭閔 see sub Xiao Wangzhi.

Xiao Jian 蕭建; Donghai. Xiao Jian and Zhu Zhi served as local officers under the Chancellor Zhao Zi. Later, as Zhao Zi was dying he asked them to arrange a simple funeral. The two men escorted his body home and carried out his wishes, despite the protest of Zhao Zi's son Yin.

In 197 Xiao Jian was head of Langye, with headquarters at Ju city. Lü Bu, who had driven Yuan Shu from Xu province, wrote with thinly-veiled threats to persuade Xiao Jian to acknowledge him, and Xiao Jian sent tribute of five fine horses.

Soon afterwards Zang Ba, the leader of the Taishan bandits, came to attack Xiao Jian, defeated him and captured his treasury and supplies. Lü Bu regarded Xiao Jian as having been under his protection, while it appears that Zang Ba had made some form of an undertaking to turn over the captured goods. Zang Ba, however, refused Lü Bu's demand, and defended himself successfully even when Lü Bu came himself. -HHS 39/29:1314-15, SGZ 7:226; deC 89:220.

Xiao Jiao 蕭矯 see sub Xiao Wangzhi.

Xiao Xiong 蕭熊. When Emperor Zhang went on tour to Chang'an in 82, he had the local officials search for kinsmen of the great ministers of Former Han, Xiao He 蕭何 and Huo Guang 霍光. No-one of the Huo family could be found, but Xiao Xiong, a distant descendant of Xiao He, was enfeoffed as marquis of a county in Nanyang. -HHS 26/16:917.

Xiao Wangzhi 蕭望之. Xiao Wangzhi was a noted statesman of the first century BC [QH:606-608]. XTS 71B:2177, however, says that he was a son of Xiao Hao 皓, son of Xiao Yang 仰, the son of Xiao Zhang 章, who died in 6 AD [QH:609]. XTS is obviously mistaken, and Loewe observes further that, while Xiao Zhang claimed descent from Xiao He, the great minister of the founding Emperor Gao of Former Han, Xiao Wangzhi did not come from that family.

XTS 71B then tells of Xiao Yu 育, son of Xiao Wangzhi and also a man of Former Han, who died in the last years BC [QH:609], and next mentions Xiao Shao 紹, son of Xiao Yu, who became Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk and returned the family from the region of Chang'an to its former homeland in Donghai.

XTS is obviously confused, there appears no independent support for its statements, and one cannot tell whether Xiao Shao was indeed the son of Xiao Yu, or the connection was invented. Since XTS continues with a line of descent, listing individuals who should have lived under Later Han, I give it below:

Xiao Hong 閔, son of Xiao Shao, became Minister of the Household;

Xiao Chan 闡, son of Xiao Hong, was Administrator of Jiyin;

Xiao Bing 冰, son of Xiao Chan, was Administrator of Wu commandery; this must have been after 129, when Wu was separated from Kuaiji;

Xiao Bao 苞, son of Xiao Bing, became Chancellor of Zhongshan;

Xiao Zhou 周, son of Xiao Bao, was an Academician;

Xiao Jiao 矯, son of Xiao Zhou, was a county magistrate, either at the end of Han or under the Wei dynasty.

None of these names appear elsewhere, but the genealogy continues through later dynasties, a tribute to the record-keeping – or the imagination – of the Xiao family of Tang.

Xiao Yuan 蕭援. In 179 the Banshun people of Ba commandery rebelled, and the disturbance spread through the north of Yi province. Xiao Yuan, Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk and head of the Censorate, was sent to take command of the provincial forces against them, but he gained no success and the rebellion continued for several years. -HHS 86/76:2843; deC 89:163.

Xiao Zhou 蕭周 see sub Xiao Wangzhi.

Xiaowei Hui 校尉麾 [Colonel Hui]; Wuhuan. In 94 Ren Shang the Protector of the Wuhuan took part in pursuit of the renegade Southern Xiongnu prince Fenghou. The Wei shu of Wang Shen says that this leader of the Wuhuan gave assistance at that time, and he was rewarded with title as a king.

The appellation Xiaowei hui, however, looks rather like the sobriquet "Colonel Hui", based partly on a [courtesy] Chinese military title and partly on the residual character of a Wuhuan name: cf. Rongzhuhui in the time of Emperor Shun. The full and proper name of this chieftain is uncertain. -SGZ 30:837.

Xiazhang Si 夏長思 see Xiachang Si 夏長思.

Xie 薛 [surname] see Xue 薛 passim.

Xie 謝, the Lady; Kuaiji. Daughter of Xie Jiong, she was married to Sun Quan through the instrumentality of his mother the Lady Wu, and she was at first greatly favoured.

Later, when Sun Quan took the Lady Xu V into his household, he wanted the Lady Xie to give her precedence. The Lady was unwilling, and she died soon afterwards, officially of depression. -SGZ Wu 5: 1196*; C/C 99:124.

Xie 謝 of the Great Yuezhi 大月氏 [Kushans]. A deputy king 副王 of the Yuezhi, based in the north of present-day Afghanistan and Pakistan, in 90 Xie led an army of 70,000 against the Chinese agent Ban Chao in Shule [Kashgar]. Ban Chao, however, defended himself with scorched earth, Xie's lines of communication across the mountains were limited, and his men began to run out of food.

Then Xie sought to purchase supplies from Qiuzi [Kuaq], but Ban Chao laid an ambush, killed the messengers and displayed their heads. Xie now sought only to be allowed to retreat without harassment, and the Yuezhi were subdued hereafter. -HHS 47/37:1580.

Xie An 謝安; Xiapi. In 145, after the major rebel forces of the southeast had been defeated by Teng Fu and the provincial army, the surviving chieftain Xu Feng of Jiujiang fled east into Xiapi with his remnant troops. The local leader Xie An gathered kinsmen and retainers to destroy them, and he was rewarded with enfeoffment. -HHS 38/28:1279.

Xie Bao 謝褒 see Xie Pou 謝裒.

Xie Ben 謝本; Ba. In 201 Xie Ben persuaded the warlord Governor Liu Zhang to set up a Dependent State in the southern part of Ba commandery, his native territory, and to give him charge of it. -HYGZ 1:8.

Xie Bi 謝弼 [Fuxuan 輔宣 or Fuluan 輔鸞] (d.169); Dong. A local leader, celebrated for his honesty, in 169 Xie Bi was nominated as Knowing the Way. He came to court, responded to questions, and was appointed a gentleman cadet.

In the summer of that year there was a great storm which uprooted trees, and a dark snake appeared above the imperial throne. An edict invited officials to send in sealed memorials on the significance of these phenomena. Xie Bi strongly criticised the eunuch-dominated government of Emperor Ling, and urged the rehabilitation of the Dowager Dou and the restoration of Li Ying and other reformists.

Xie Bi's comments were not well received, and he was sent out to be Assistant Administrator of Guangling. He soon resigned from that post, but as he returned to his home country the Administrator Cao Shao, a nephew of the eunuch Wang Jie, took revenge for the political attack. He found a pretext to arrest Xie Bi and had him tortured. To general dismay, Xie Bi died in prison. -HHS 57/47:1858-60*, XC 3:8b; deC 89:105-106.

Xie Bu 解步. A eunuch, in 181 Xie Bu was a Regular Attendant. In the summer of that year a man nine feet tall [210 cm], dressed in plain clothing, appeared in the offices of the Yellow Gates of the Southern Palace. When Xie Bu accosted him, he said that he was a descendant of Liang Boxia [i.e. the late General-in-Chief Liang Shang], and that Heaven had sent him to become emperor. As Xie Bu sought to arrest him, the man disappeared. -HHS 107/17:3347; Bn 76:12 note 186. Cf. sub Huan Jian.

Xie Cheng 謝承 [Weiping 偉平] (fl. 220); Kuaiji. Son of Xie Jiong and younger brother of the Lady Xie, first wife of Sun Quan, Xie Cheng was a General of the Household at the court of Sun Quan about 210. He was later Commandant of the eastern region of Changsha, presumably after the settlement with Liu Bei in 215, and then, following the destruction of Guang Yu and the conquest of Jing province in 219, he became Administrator of Wuling.

Very likely aided by material collected by his father when he was in the Secretariat at Luoyang, Xie Cheng compiled a Hou Han shu in 130 juan. The work survives in 8 juan of fragments, and is cited here as XC. -SGZ Wu 5:1196-97; Bn 54:12-13.

Xie Cheng 謝盛 see Xie Sheng 謝盛.

Xie Du 謝篤 [Jizhou 季周]. Younger brother of Xie Yun, Xie Du benefited from his intrigues in the early 120s and became a Palace Attendant. In 125, however, the regent Dowager Yan and her brother Yan Xian turned against their former allies and accused them of factionalism. As their party was destroyed, Xie Du was exiled to the far south. -HHS 10B:437.

Xie Feng 謝豐 (d.36). An Excellency in the imperial government of Gongsun Shu, in the autumn of 36 he was sent with Yuan Ji to attack the Han forces outside Chengdu. After brief success they were defeated and killed by Wu Han. -HHS 13/3:543, 18/8:682; Bn 59:194.

Xie Gai 謝該 [Wenyi 文儀]; Nanyang. Expert on Chunqiu and Zuo zhuan, Xie Gai was one of the celebrated scholars of his time and attracted hundreds of students. He held appointment as Prefect of the Majors for Official Carriages at the imperial court under Cao Cao in Xu city. About 200 the junior scholar Yue Xiang came to seek his opinion on a number of difficult points, and then compiled Xieshi shi 謝氏釋 "Explanations by Mr Xie," also known as Zuo zhuan wen qishier shi 左傳問七十二事 "Questions on Seventy-two Matters in Zuo zhuan."

Because his parents were growing old, Xie Gai left office on grounds of ill health, but he was unable to return home because of the conflict between Cao Cao and Liu Biao. The minister Kong Chou wrote that such a man added distinction to the court and should not be allowed to leave, so Cao Cao had him recalled and appointed a Consultant. He died of old age. -HHS 79/69B:2584-85*.

Xie Gao 謝髡 or She/Ye Gao 射髡 (d.147). In 147 Xie Gao was Chancellor of the state of Qinghe. The local leader Liu Wen planned a coup to set the king Liu Suan upon the imperial throne in place of the young Emperor Huan. When the conspiracy was discovered, Liu Wen seized Xie Gao and sought to force him to join a last-minute attempt. Xie Gao refused, so Liu Wen killed him. -HHS 55/45:1805-06.

Xie Gong 謝躬 [Zizhang 子張] (d.24); Nanyang. In the spring of 24 Xie Gong was Director of the Imperial Secretariat for the Gengshi Emperor, but despite this notionally clerical appointment he was sent north with a large army to attack the pretender Wang Lang. Liu Xiu the future Emperor Guangwu, then regional commissioner for the Gengshi Emperor, was already moving against Wang Lang's capital at Handan, but a counter-attack by Wang Lang captured his base in Xindu. Xie Gong's troops restored the situation and recaptured Xindu, and in summer the allied forces of Han captured Handan and killed Wang Lang.

There followed a period of joint government in Handan, during which Liu Xiu pretended goodwill but planned against Xie Gong and sought to subvert his officers. Primarily concerned with administrative matters, Xie Gong was apparently unsuspecting, but he later moved his headquarters to Ye city in Wei.

In the autumn of 24 Liu Xiu moved south against the Red Eyebrows and their allies by the Yellow River. It was agreed that if he was successful Xie Gong would attack the Youlai bandits. Liu Xiu was indeed victorious and Xie Gong carried out his promise, but he was heavily defeated.

In the mean time, moreover, Liu Xiu sent his general Wu Han to occupy Ye, claiming that Xie Gong's ill-disciplined troops had plundered the people and aroused resentment. Several of Xie Gong's officers went over to Liu Xiu, and as he returned with a small party he was taken and killed. -HHS 12/2:784, 17/7:655, 18/8:677-78; Bn 59:74-86.

Xie Gong 謝躬, wife of. In 24 the Lady warned her husband that he should not trust Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu. Xie Gong did not accept her advice; he was later trapped and killed. -HHS 18/8:678.

Xie Hong 解閔; Youfufeng. During the troubled period of the mid-20s, at the time of the fall of the Gengshi Emperor and the invasion of the Red Eyebrows, Wang Xin became warlord in his home county of Qian. He and other local leaders in the old capital district were recognised as generals by Gongsun Shu, who had taken the imperial title in Shu. In 27 they were conquered by Emperor Guangwu's general Feng Yi. -HHS 17/7:647.

Xie Hong 謝弘; Guiyang. About 100 Xie Hong failed to care for his parents, but as a result of the teaching of the Administrator Xu Jing his kinsmen objected and killed him. -HHS 76/66:2472.

Xie Huan 謝奐. A senior clerical officer in 213, Xie Huan was one of the petitioners who urged Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei.

After Cao Pi came to the throne in 220 Xie Huan became Minister Steward. He and other loyal officers were granted the right to have one of their sons appointed as a gentleman cadet. -SGZ 1:40, 2:58.

Xie Ji 謝姬, the Lady; Jianwei. Wife of Yi Cheng, when her husband died she was ashamed that she had borne him no children. As his coffin was placed in the tomb, she took poison, and was buried with him.

This affair was reported by the county to the commandery office, then to the Imperial Secretariat, and then to the throne. It was ordered that each time an amnesty was issued the Lady's family should receive a donation of silk and grain. -HYGZ 10B:160-61.

Xie Ji 謝奇 see Xie Qi 謝奇.

Xie Jing 謝旌. In 219 Xie Jing commanded the land forces under Lu Xun in the attack on Liu Bei's positions along the Yangzi. -SGZ Wu 13:1345.

Xie Jiong 謝兕 also as Xie Ying 嬰; Kuaiji. Respected for his moral quality when he was young, towards the end of the second century Xie Jiong became a member of the Imperial Secretariat and was then a county magistrate in Xiapi. He was the father of the Lady Xie, first wife of Sun Quan, and of the historian Xie Cheng. It is possible that he collected imperial archive material when he was in the Secretariat and that this aided his son's work. -SGZ Wu 5:1196-97, XC 8:12b; C/C 99:124.

Xie [Jixiao] 謝季孝; Runan. A neighbour of Dai Liang, he asked him whom he would compare himself to. Dai Liang named Confucius and the sage Emperor Yu 禹. -HHS 83/73:2773.

Xie Lian 謝廉; Runan. Having mastered one of the Confucian classics by the age of twelve, Xie Lian was nominated by Zuo Xiong, Director of the Secretariat, and was named a Junior Gentleman, giving him early entrance to the University and probation for a commissioned post in the civil service. -HHS 61/51:2020-21.

Xie Lu 謝祿 [Ziqi 子奇] (d.27); Donghai. About 15 Xie Lu was head of a group of local bandits in a region which had suffered seriously from flooding of the Yellow River over the previous ten years. He later brought his men to join Fan Chong in the Tai Shan massif and, with other leaders, they formed the confederation known as the Red Eyebrows 赤眉.

The general account of this bandit horde is given sub Fan Chong. Xie Lu and two other men from Donghai, Xu Xuan and Yang Yin, however, evidently maintained an association: in 24 they led the column which went through southern Henan to the Luhun Pass into Hongnong and the capital region, while Fan Chong and his fellow-countryman Pang An took a southern route.

As the Red Eyebrows set up their nominal imperial regime in 25, Xie Lu took title as Grand Marshal on the Right, and when Liu Xuan the Gengshi Emperor surrendered, he was placed in Xie Lu's entourage. Liu Xuan's loyal follower Liu Gong sought to protect him, but Zhang Ang and other former chieftains of the Troops from the Lower Yangzi persuaded Xie Lu to have him killed.

Early in 27, having at last abandoned the capital region, the Red Eyebrows were forced to surrender to Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu. The leaders' lives were spared and they were ordered to settle in the neighbourhood of the new capital, Luoyang, where they could be kept under observation. Xie Lu was soon afterwards killed by Liu Gong, in vengeance for the death of Liu Xuan. -HHS 11/1:478-86.

Xie Mi 謝宓 [Zhongzhou 仲周]. Younger brother of Xie Yun, Xie Mi benefited from his intrigues in the early 120s and became senior assistant to the General-in-Chief Geng Bao. In 125 the regent Dowager Yan and her brother Yan Xian turned against their former allies and accused them of factionalism. As their party was destroyed, Xie Mi escaped death by one degree but was sentenced to convict service. -HHS 10B:437.

Xie Nugu 解奴辜. The magician Xie Nugu and his colleague Zhang Diao could make themselves invisible and could travel through walls. Xie Nugu was also able to change the appearance of things. -HHS 82/72B:2749*; Ngo 76:140, DeWoskin 83:86-87.

Xie Pou 謝褒 or Xie Bao 褒; Jianwei. A teacher, Xie Pou was well served by his student Zhang Qian. -HYGZ 10B:150, 12:230.

Xie Qi 謝奇; Lujiang. An officer of Cao Cao, about 210 Xie Qi was sent to set up military colonies in the region of Qichun, north of the Yangzi opposite the position held for Sun Quan by Lü Meng. From there he made a number of raids southwards, refusing an invitation to surrender from Lü Meng. As Lü Meng then made a surprise attack, Xie Qi was driven away, and several of his lower officers brought their followers and changed sides. -SGZ Wu 9:1275.

Xie Quan 謝泉 [?chao ?朝]; Nanyang. A former county magistrate, in 156 Xie Quan was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Xie Sheng 解勝; Yanmen. In 36 Xie Sheng was a conscript officer under Lu Fang's general Yin You, holding Yanmen commandery against Guangwu's forces under Du Mao. Lu Fang, however, was driven to flight and his position in China collapsed. Xie Sheng then joined his colleagues Huo Kuang and Jia Dan to kill Yin You and surrender to Guangwu's Administrator of Yanmen, Guo Liang. On Guo Liang's recommendation all three men were enfeoffed as marquises. -HHS 22/12:777.

Xie Sheng 謝盛; Ba. A local commandery officer, Xie Sheng was killed by brigands about 150. -HYGZ 1:6.

Xie Wenqing 解文卿. Xie Wenqing was a member of the Secretariat of Gongsun Shu when Emperor Guangwu of Han invited him to surrender. Xie Wenqing and the court officer Zheng Wenbo encouraged him to agree, but Gongsun Shu was furious and sent them to prison. Refusing to change their opinion, they died there; their example discouraged anyone from offering such advice again. -HYGZ 5:69, 10A:138, HYGZJBTZ: 335.

The dating is uncertain. HYGZ says the discussion took place in 35, after Guangwu had begun his final campaign and sent a letter calling on Gongsun Shu to surrender, but the text is corrupt. The incident probably took place in 30, when it appears Lai Xi and Ma Yuan came on an embassy. See also sub Chang Shao.

Xie Xian 謝暹; Zangke. Officer of Merit of the commandery in the middle 20s, Xie Xian persuaded the chieftains of the non-Chinese clans in the south to reject the imperial pretensions of Gongsun Shu, who held dominant authority in Yi province, and to maintain their allegiance to Han. They sent tribute missions by the south-eastern route through present-day Guangdong; Guangwu praised them and granted them ceremonial robes. -HHS 86/76:2845, HYGZ 4: 54.

Xie Yan 謝弁. Brother-in-law to Liu Yan the King of Huaiyang, in 73 Xie Yan was arrested and executed for alleged involvement in a conspiracy of witchcraft with the king. -HHS 42/32:1444.

Xie Yi 謝姬, the Lady: see the Lady Xie Ji 謝姬.

Xie Yi 謝翊 see Liu Yi 劉翊 II [Zixiang 子相]. -XC 6:3b.

Xie Ying 謝嬰 see Xie Jiong 謝嬰. -XC 8:12b.

Xie Yiwu 謝夷吾 [Yaoqing 堯卿]; Kuaiji. As a young man Xie Yiwu studied the art of divination by the wind and the weather. He became a junior commandery officer, and about 55 the Administrator Diwu Lun appointed him as an Investigator. Sent to check the mis-government of a county magistrate, Xie Yiwu took no action, but wept and then reported that the man was indeed corrupt, but he would die a fearful death within a few weeks; there was no point in punishing him. This indeed came to pass.

Xie Yiwu became Registrar of the commandery and the tutor of Diwu Lun's son. He was later nominated as Filial and Incorrupt and became a county magistrate in Dongping. In 72 his magical arts or virtues protected his territory from a plague of locusts.

Transferred to be Inspector of Jing province, Xie Yiwu demonstrated an excellent understanding of men's characters and made accurate decisions in the most complex legal cases. When Emperor Zhang came on tour in 84 he invited Xie Yiwu to join him in deciding some hundreds of local criminal charges, and in each case Xie Yiwu's judgement agreed with that of the emperor. All those present were amazed.

Xie Yiwu then became Administrator of Julu. In each place where he served he had been noted for his generosity to the people and his care of the land, and his old patron Diwu Lun, now Excellency of Works, had the scholar Ban Gu write an encomium for him, pointing out his ability in the most abstruse fields of scholarship while praising his practical achievements in government. The emperor awarded him a carriage, horses and a sword. Xie Yiwu was also a friend of the scholar Wang Chong, whom he recommended to the throne in the warmest tones. Emperor Zhang sent a special summons, but Wang Chong was too ill to travel.

Diwu Lun recommended that Xie Yiwu be appointed to succeed him as Excellency, but soon afterwards Xie Yiwu went on the spring tour of inspection in an open cart with just two attendants. The Inspector of Ji province reported this lack of decorum, and Xie Yiwu was demoted to a county magistracy in Xiapi.

Xie Yiwu foretold the day of his death and also prophesied the disasters of the end of Han. He asked to be buried deep in an unmarked grave, so his bones would not be disturbed in any future turmoil. -HHS 82/72A:2713-15*, XC 6:4a-5a; Ngo 76:87-92, DeWoskin 83:53-56.

Xie Yun 解暉. When the Red Eyebrows occupied Chang'an in 25, Xie Yun was Intendant of Jingzhao. As Liu Gong was escaping to look for the Gengshi Emperor Liu Xuan, Xie Yun told him where to find him. -XC 1:2a-2b.

Xie Yun 謝暉 [Bozhou 伯周] (d.125). Palace Attendants in 124, Xie Yun and Zhou Guang joined Geng Bao and the eunuchs Fan Feng and Li Run in their accusations against the Excellency Yang Zhen, who was dismissed and killed himself. In protest, the minister Lai Li and the Imperial Clerk Yu Xu refused further dealing with them.

As Xie Yun and Zhou Guang continued their association with Geng Bao, Fan Feng and Emperor An's former wet-nurse Wang Sheng, Xie Yun became General of the Household Rapid as a Tiger, while his brothers Xie Mi and Xie Du also held official posts. In 125, however, following the death of Emperor An and the enthronement of the Little Emperor Liu Yi, the Dowager Yan and her brother Yan Xian turned against their former allies and accused them of factionalism. Xie Yun died in prison. -HHS 5:242, 15/5:590.

Xie Zhen 謝甄 [Ziwei 子微]; Runan. Xie Zhen was a close friend of Bian Rang, both celebrated for their brilliant conversation, while Xie Zhen was even more skilled than Guo Tai in judging social conduct. Guo Tai criticised them, however, for a lack of true morality, and Xie Zhen's reputation later suffered through his failure to attend to details. His highest appointment was that of a local officer in Yu province. -HHS 68/58:2230-31; Mather 76:526.

Xie Zhen 謝貞; Kuaiji. Younger brother of Xie Jiong, and uncle of Sun Quan's consort the Lady Xie, Xie Zhen was known for his good conduct and his concern for scholarship. He was recommended Filial and Incorrupt and became a county magistrate, but died in that office. -SGZ Wu 5:1197; C/C 99:124.

Xie Zhu 謝著; Zhongshan? When Xie Zhu was a magistrate in Wei his old friend Zhu Tian received a special invitation to the imperial capital, and as he passed by he attempted to meet him. For some reason, however, Xie Zhu refused to make contact.

Xie Zhu later left his position, but he had acquired a reputation for mean-spirited conduct, and he never held a substantial post again. -FSTY 7:55.

Xie Zong 謝綜; Nanyang. A senior member of staff to the Administrator Lu Nu in 163, Xie Zong was associated with the new temple at the source of the Huai in the mountains to the east of the commandery. -LS 2:12a-14b, Nagata 94:142.

Xieguini 泄歸泥; Xianbi. When Xieguini's father, the chieftain Fuluohan, was murdered by his rival Kebineng at an oath ceremony in 218, Xieguini, presumably under pressure at the time, accepted Kebineng as his chief and brought his people over with him.

Kebineng treated Xieguini extremely well, but his uncle Budugen, brother of Fuluohan, later recalled him to family loyalty, and Xieguini joined him in alliance with the Chinese. In 233, however, Kebineng persuaded Budugen to join him in raiding China. Xieguini followed, but soon afterwards broke with the other two chieftains and returned to Wei. He was given title as a king and resettled in Bing province. -SGZ 30:638; Fang 52:180-181, 404-405.

Xieyang Hong 鮭陽鴻 see Guiyang Hong 鮭陽鴻.

Xiku 犀苦; Qiang. Son of Donghao, in 123 he took over from his elder brother Manu as recognised chief of the Shaodang tribe. Because his predecessors had often caused trouble, Xiku was held hostage at the headquarters of the Protector, Lianju in Jincheng. -HHS 87/77:2892-94.

Xin 尋 [surname] see Xun 尋 passim

Xin 辛, the Lady. Younger sister of Xin Chen, in 27 she was married to Tian Rong. -HHS 17/7:658; Bn 59:156.

Xin 信; Xiongnu. Worthy King of the Left under the Southern Shanyu Chang in 73, Xin was sent with Zhai Tong in the main central column of a great punitive attack on the north. It was intended that they would link up with an eastern column at Zhuoye Mountain. Xin, however, quarrelled with Zhai Tong, and after they had travelled six hundred kilometres from the frontier he indicated the wrong ridge of high ground. As a result Zhai Tong and his men missed the rendezvous and the enemy were able to avoid the attack.

As Worthy King of the Left, Xin was also the heir to the Shanyu, but have no account of his parentage; he evidently died before the Shanyu Chang in 85. -HHS 89/79:2949, 20/10:746; deC 84:260.

Xin [Bozhen] 辛伯眞; Longxi. XTS 73A:2880 says that Xin Bozhen, a descendant of the general Xin Mao of Former Han [QHX:613], was a colonel in the Northern Army. Other kinsmen are listed, but only by name, and the dates are uncertain; I have therefore not provided entries for them.

Xin Can 鐔粲; Guanghan. Described as a youthful friend and colleague of the future Excellency Zhang Hao, this is probably the same person as Xin Xian 鐔顯. -SGZ Shu 15:1073.

Xin Chen 辛臣. Brother-in-law of the warlord Tian Rong of Nan commandery, when Tian Rong's ally Qin Feng was besieged in his fortress of Liqiu by the forces of Emperor Guangwu in 27, Xin Chen urged Tian Rong to make terms with the Han. Drawing a map of the empire, he showed the positions of the rival warlords, and demonstrated the dominant position of the restored regime. Tian Rong agreed and, leaving Xin Chen in charge of his capital Yiling, he went by ship down the Yangzi and up the Han to join the Han army outside Liqiu.

As he did so, however, Xin Chen plundered Tian Rong's treasury and went by the direct land route to surrender first. He then sent a letter urging Tian Rong to join him, but Tian Rong was now concerned at his likely reception and changed his mind. -HHS 17/7:658; Bn 59:156.

Xin Du 辛都; Longxi. Local officers under the Administrator Liu Xu in 56, Xin Du and Li Bao were sent with five thousand men to assist the local forces of Wudu against a raid by the Shenlang tribe of the Qiang. They defeated the enemy, killing their leaders and taking over a thousand heads. The Wudu troops then rallied, also heavily defeating the raiders, and forcing them to surrender. -HHS 87/77:2879.

Xin Ji 辛機. In 220 Xin Ji was named Administrator of Jiuquan, but the local leader Huang Hua refused to allow him into the commandery. After the successes of Su Ze, Xin Ji was able to take up his position. -SGZ 16:492.

Xin Pi 辛毗 [Zuozhi 佐治]; Yingchuan [the family was originally from Longxi, but moved early in Later Han]. Younger brother of Xin Ping, Xin Pi served Yuan Shao and then Yuan Tan. In 203 Yuan Tan was under attack from his brother Shang, and on the advice of Guo Tu he sent Xin Pi to ask aid from Cao Cao. Cao Cao had earlier invited Xin Pi to join him, and though Xin Pi urged him to alliance with Yuan Tan his prime concern was now for Cao Cao's interests. He was at the capture of Ye city in the following year, but failed to prevent Shen Pei murdering the family of Xin Ping.

Xin Pi then became a Consultant, served as a member of staff on campaign in the west in 215, and was later Chief Clerk to Cao Cao as Imperial Chancellor of Han. A confidant of Cao Pi, when he came to the throne Xin Pi took part in the process which brought the abdication of Han in favour of the Wei. He was appointed a Palace Attendant and was enfeoffed.

Always an influential adviser and trusted envoy, Xin Pi became a senior minister. He died about 235. -SGZ 25:695-99*; Mather 76:530-531.

Xin Ping 辛評 [Zhongzhi 仲治]; Yingchuan. An associate of Han Fu, in 191 Xin Ping persuaded him to yield Ji province to Yuan Shao he then became a Counsellor to Yuan Shao. In the early 200s, he and Guo Tu supported the claim of Yuan Tan to succeed his father, and in 203 he urged Tan to fight his brother Shang.

Xin Ping appears to have died about this time, but when his brother Xin Pi went over to Cao Cao Xin Ping's family was arrested, and as Ye city fell in 204 Shen Pei had them killed. -SGZ 6:201-06, 25:695.

Xin Si 辛巳. Administrator of Changsha in the early 140s, Xin Si was commended by the Inspector Li Gu. -HYGZ 10C:165 [surname mistakenly written Zu 卒].

Xin Tao 辛韜; Yingchuan. A cousin of Xun You, and presumably a kinsman of Xin Pi, Xin Tao asked Xun You about the negotiations which accompanied the notional alliance with Yuan Tan in 203 and the subsequent destruction of the Yuan family. Xun You, however, refused to reveal any details of such confidential military planning. -SGZ 10:325.

Xin Tong 辛彤 or Xin Yong 彤 [Dafang 大房]. When Dou Rong was appointed to the northwest of Liang province in 23, he established a good relationship with Xin Tong, Commandant of Dunhuang. As the Gengshi regime collapsed at Chang'an in 25, Xin Tong and his fellows accepted Dou Rong's leadership, and Xin Tong was named Administrator of the commandery.

In 31 Xin Tong's colleague Zhu Zeng left his position as Administrator of Jiuquan and Xin Tong took his place. When Dou Rong brought his army east to assist Emperor Guangwu's attack on Wei Ao in the following year, Xin Tong and his fellows were granted titles as marquises. -HHS 23/13:796-97, 805-06.

Xin [Tongda] 辛通達. Commandant of the Dependent State of Shu commandery, in 164 he was responsible for the construction of an important bridge. -LS 15:4b-7b.

Xin Xian 鐔顯 [Zisong 子誦]; Guanghan. Having studied the Classic of Poetry and the History at Luoyang, Xin Xian became Registrar to the Administrator Chen Chong about 90, and was then recommended Filial and Incorrupt.

Some twenty years later Xin Xian was appointed Inspector of Yu province. There was famine at the time, and banditry was rife, but Xin Xian recognised the desperate straits of the people and pardoned those who were captured. His policy was accepted by the court, and he later became a Household Counsellor, Palace Attendant and Minister of the Guards.

As Commandant of the Guards at the Changle Palace, the apartments of the Dowager Deng, Xin Xian was one of the officials who argued against a forward policy in central Asia in 119. -HHS 76/66:2468-70, 47/37:1588, HYGZ 10B:146. See also Xin Can.

Xin Xianying 辛憲英, the Lady (191-269); Yingchuan. Daughter of Xin Pi, in 217 her father told her of Cao Pi's delight at being named Heir to Cao Cao. She pointed out that when his father died he must take control of the state; with such sad and heavy responsibility waiting, it was no good omen for the dynasty if Cao Pi was pleased at his appointment.

The Lady later married Yang Dan 羊丹 of Taishan, and was noted for the wise advice she gave her kinsmen. -SGZ 25:699-700; Fang 65:52-53.

Xin Yong 辛彤 see Xin Tong 辛彤.

Xin Zeng 辛曾. At the beginning of the great rebellion in Liang province in 184, the Attendant Officers Xin Zeng and Kong Chang were stationed with their colleague He Xun at an outpost in Hanyang. The Inspector Zuo Chang was attacked in the capital of the commandery and called for help. Xin Zeng and Kong Chang were reluctant to respond, but He Xun threatened to execute them by military law if they failed in their duty, so they went with their men and Zuo Chang was saved. -HHS 58/48:1880.

Xing 興, the Lady, see the Lady [He] Xing 何興.

Xing 興 of Jumi [present-day Yutian] (d.129). In 129 King Fangqian of Yutian [Khotan] conquered his neighbouring state of Jumi, killed its king, Xing, and placed one of his own sons on the throne. -HHS 88/78:2915.

Xing Hong 行弘. A General of the Household in 119, Xing Hong supported the proposal of the Excellency Li He that worship of the Sixth Venerable One 六宗 be restored to the rituals at the Altar of Heaven in the south of the capital, as they had been during Former Han.

Later that year, Xing Gong became Chancellor of Rencheng. He urged the dismissal of the king Liu An on account of his erratic and greedy conduct. The proposal was not approved, but Liu An was fined. - HHS 98/8:3184, 42/32:1443.

Xing Ji 邢紀 (d.188). Administrator of Xihe in 187, Xing Ji was killed by the rebel Xiuchuge clan of the Xiongnu. - HHS 8:355.

Xing Ju 邢舉 (d.195). Protector of the Wuhuan, Xing Ju was killed by Yan Rou. - HHS 90/80:2984, SGZ 30: 835.

Xing Mu 邢穆 [Suigong 綏公] (d.73); Nanyang. Administrator of Julu, Xing Mu was appointed Excellency over the Masses in 71, but two years later he was accused of involvement in the alleged witchcraft conspiracy of Liu Yan the King of Huaiyang. He was executed. - HHS 2:118-120.

Xing Qu 興渠. In 125 Xing Qu was a member of the staff of Liu Bao, son of Emperor An and future Emperor Shun, who had at that time been deposed as Heir and was King of Jiyin. In the winter, as the Little Emperor Liu Yi was seriously ill, the eunuch Sun Cheng confided his plans for a coup to restore Liu Bao to the succession, and Xing Qu evidently acted as liaison between the royal court and the eunuchs who took action. Some years later he received a minor marquisate as reward for his role in the affair. - HHS 78/68:2515-18.

Xing Xun 行巡; Tianshui. In 25, as Wei Ao re-established himself in Tianshui after his return from Chang'an, he appointed Xing Xun as a chief general.

In 30, after Wang Yuan had driven the imperial army back from the Long Slope, Wei Ao ordered Xing Xun to join him in a counter-attack towards Chang'an. As Xing Xun advanced on the northern flank, however, Feng Yi concealed his men within a disputed city, took him by surprise and defeated him. Wang Yuan was likewise driven back by Zhai Zun.

As Guangwu renewed his campaign in 32, Xing Xun commanded defences on the Long Slope. As the enemy out-flanked him on the north, Wei Ao's position disintegrated. Many of his officers sought terms from the emperor, and Wei Ao was besieged at Xi city in the south of Longxi, but Xing Xun remained loyal. In the winter he and Zhou Zong came to the rescue with troops from Gongsun Shu brought by Wang Yuan. They broke the siege, escorted Wei Ao to his capital at Ji city, and led a brief revival of his fortunes.

When Wei Ao died at the beginning of 33 Xing Xun and his colleagues proclaimed his son Wei Chun as king in his stead, but at the end of 34, as the Han armies came against them in force, they surrendered to the commander Lai Xi. Xing Xun and other leaders and members of the Wei clan were obliged to settle in Hongnong. - HHS 13/3:522-31.

Xing Yong 邢顛 [Zi'ang 子昂] (d.223); Hejian. During the 190s Xing Yong received nominations and invitations to take office at court, but he refused, changed his name and fled to the north. He later joined Tian Chou in the north, but in 207 he took service with Cao Cao and became an Assistant Officer in Ji province.

Noted for his virtue, Xing Yong held county and commandery posts, and was then head of household to Cao Zhi, who found him, however, too strict. In 217, when Cao Cao thought he might make Cao Zhi his heir rather than Cao Pi, Xing Yong argued against it.

Xing Yong served as Tutor to Cao Pi, and was enfeoffed when he came to the throne. He held several high offices, culminating in a ministry. - SGZ 12:382-83*.

Xing Zhang 姓璋. Minister of the Household in 178, Xing Zhang was described by Cai Yong as being greedy and corrupt. - HHS 60/50B:1999.

HHS TC confirms that Xing was the unusual surname of this man, and refers to a certain Xing Wei 姓偉 of Qi in Former Han [QHX:615]. The matter is confused by the fact that the character xing also means "surname" and one edition of HHS has miswritten the text, while ZZTJ compounds the error by calling this man Wei Zhang 偉璋. Zhou Shouzhang, in HHSJJ 60/50B:2161, discusses and clarifies the problem.

Xing Zhen 邢貞. About 217 Xing Zhen was Commandant of the Capital, formally responsible for military matters relating to Cao Cao's state of Wei. Cheng Yu, who held parallel office as Minister of the Guards, quarrelled with him over precedence and was dismissed.

When Cao Pi assumed the imperial title, Xing Zhen was Minister of Ceremonies, and he was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele. In 221 he was sent on embassy to enfeoff Sun Quan as King of Wu. - SGZ 14:429, 2:78, LS 19:4a; Fang 52. 82.

Xing Zhong 星重; Jibei. A daughter of Xing Zhong married Yang Xu of Taishan. -HHSJJ 31/21:1169 Hui Dong quoting a fragment from a family history of the Yang clan 羊氏家傳; Hui Dong notes that this is the only record of the surname Xing.

Xiong 熊 [personal name unknown; style Zi-? 子?] (146-216). Having held offices under Liu Biao, warlord Governor of Jing province, in 194 he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt to the chaotic court at Chang'an. An imperial letter appointed him a county magistrate in Guiyang, while Liu Biao gave him concurrent title as Colonel Who Comforts the People 綏民校尉.

Since we are told that Xiong held that office for twenty-one years, he evidently served also under Liu Bei, and he probably left his post as Sun Quan took over the territory in 215. He died at the age of seventy-one and was commemorated with a stele. -LS 11:14a-18a.

Xinye, Lady of 新野君 see the Lady Yin 陰 III, mother of the regent Dowager Deng of Emperor He.

Xinzhiben 欽志贄 or Qinzhiben 欽志贄 (d.58); Wuhuan. A leader of the Red Mountain group in Yuyang, Xinzhiben and his followers caused trouble in that commandery and also raided Shanggu. In 58 the Administrator of Liaodong, Zhai Tong, sent his Xianbi ally Pianhe to deal with them. Xinzhiben was killed, his followers submitted, and the borders became peaceful. -HHS 20/10:745, 90/80:2985, SGZ 30:833, 837; deC 84:385.

Xiu 宿 [surname] see Su 宿 passim.

Xiu 修 [personal name, surname unknown]. As Court Astronomer in 179, Xiu advised that the system of the private scholar Wang Han for calculating lunar eclipses was not worth adoption.

In the same year Xiu accepted the method of the officer Feng Xun [or Zhang Xun qq.v.] in that field, and recommended that the recently-established system of Zong Cheng should be abandoned.

Next year, however, in 180, Zong Cheng's elder brother Zheng complained that the bureau had preferred a system which had been shown to be wrong. A ministerial enquiry found Zong Cheng's method was indeed slightly better, and it was restored, but Feng Xun and the brothers Zong were punished for their contumacy. -HHS 92/2:3041-43.

Xiuli 休利 (d.140); Xiongnu. Son of the Southern Shanyu Chang, he succeeded his elder brother Ba in 128, taking the title Qute ruoshijiu 去柁若尸就

Shanyu.

In the summer of 140 the chieftains Wusi and Che'niu led a rising in Yunzhong and Dingxiang. Moving west against Xihe, they attracted the support of the Worthy King of the Right Yiti, then raided across the north of the Ordos region and attacked the Shanyu's capital at Meiji in Xihe. The General on the Liao Ma Xu raised garrison troops, local levies and non-Chinese auxiliaries to force the rebels back, but they continued to plunder the countryside.

The court sent a reprimand to the Shanyu for his failure to maintain order among his people. It seems clear that the elderly Xiuli had no involvement with the rebellion, and the writ of the Shanyu was now of small consequence to his nominal subjects. Xiuli paid a formal visit of apology to the Emissary Liang Bing, but Liang Bing left office soon afterwards and his successor Chen Gui took a stronger line. Presumably seeking to force the Xiongnu leadership to play a more active role against the rebels, he bullied and threatened the Shanyu.

Humiliated, and squeezed between the demands of the Chinese and his own weakness and lack of authority, Xiuli committed suicide, accompanied by his younger brother and heir the Worthy King of the Left. The leadership of the Xiongnu thus fell into limbo, and in autumn the rebel Che'niu claimed the vacant title. -HHS 89/79:2960; deC 84:307-308.

Xiumoba 休莫霸 [or Xiumo the Hegemon] of Yutian [Khotan] (d.60). In 60 the nobleman Dumo and his kinsmen assassinated Junde, the oppressive governor of Yutian who had been appointed by the hegemon King Xian of Suoju [Yarkand]. Soon afterwards the local chieftain Xiumoba, aided by the Chinese Han Rong, killed Dumo and his associates.

Xiumoba now proclaimed himself as king anad, supported by the neighbouring state of Jumi, he defeated an army of Suoju. He then withdrew to defend the city of Yutian against a counter-attack by Xian's eldest son and his chief minister. The confederate army was numbered at twenty thousand, but Xiumoba and his allies heavily defeated them, and they followed this with victory over a still larger force led by Xian himself.

Seeking to take advantage of his success, Xiumoba brought his men forward to besiege the city of Suoju, but he was killed by an arrow and the attack was abandoned. -HHS 88/78:2925.

Xiwei 喜爲; Xiongnu. A follower of the Southern Shanyu Anguo, in 94 Xiwei accompanied his attack on his rival, prince Shizi, at the headquarters of the General on the Liao. They were unsuccessful, and Chinese troops came to the rescue. Xiwei and others then killed Anguo and surrendered. -HHS 89/79:2955.
Xizhi 細致 of Further Jushi, evidently a prince favourable to Han, had been awarded an honorary title. In 96 the Chinese officer Suo Jun planned to depose King Zhuodi and place Xizhi on the throne. Zhuodi, however, then attacked Nearer Jushi, and a large army had to be called up to defeat him. Xizhi is not heard of again. -HHS 88/78:2930.

Xu 鄒 [surname] see Chu 鄒 passim.

Xu 許, the Lady (d.86). Concubine of Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu, she held the rank of Beauty and bore his son Liu Ying, but later lost favour. Liu Ying then became King of Chu, the Lady Xu was named Dowager Queen, and they resided at Pengcheng. Though Liu Ying was accused and disgraced in 70, the Lady was permitted to retain her seal and status, and she was granted funerary honours when she died. -HHS 42/32:1428-29.

Xu 徐, the Lady I. Concubine of Liu Yan the King of Zhongshan, during the funeral assembly after his death in 90 she was seduced by Liu Zheng the King of Donghai. -HHS 42/32:1425.

Xu 徐, the Lady II. Born about 118, in 151 the Lady married Jin Yuan [style Jiben] of Ba, and bore him a son, Jin Gong. Jin Gong died young, and the couple adopted Jin Guangyan. Jin Guangyan married another woman of the same surname [the Lady Xu III below] and had children, but then also died.

The bulk of Jin Yuan's property was transferred to Jin Yongzhi, his son by a concubine, who showed small sympathy or affection for the Lady Xu or for Jin Guangyan's relicts, and who put pressure on the Lady after her husband's death to obtain the rest of the family estate. The Lady Xu was upset at this, because the adopted Jin Guangyan and his wife had treated her and Jin Yuan with true filial piety, but she felt she had no option, and in 178 she set up a stele to say so. -LS 15:10b-13a.

Xu 徐, the Lady III. The Lady married Jin Guangyan of Ba, adoptive son of Jin Yuan and the Lady Xu II [she probably came from the same family as her mother-in-law]. The couple had children, but then Guangyan died. Though he and the Lady had shown great filial piety towards his adoptive parents, the bulk of the family property was transferred to Jin Yongzhi, Jin Yuan's son by a concubine.

Xu 徐, the Lady IV. In 204 the Lady was wife to Sun Yi the Administrator of Danyang. As he was planning a banquet for his officers she divined that there was danger and warned him. Sun Yi was indeed murdered, and Gui Lan and Dai Yuan seized power in the commandery.

Gui Lan also took over Sun Yi's harem, and tried to compel the Lady to marry him. She pretended to agree, but arranged for family loyalists to trap and kill him. As the Sun regained control, the Lady Xu offered the heads of the two rebels at her husband's tomb. -SGZ Wu 6:1214-15; deC 90:232-234.

Xu 徐, the Lady V; Kuaiji. The Lady's grandfather Xu Zhen had been a close friend of Sun Jian and had married his sister, the Lady Sun II; her father Xu Kun was thus a cousin of Sun Quan. The Lady was first married to Lu Shang, but after his death, about 200, she entered the harem of Sun Quan and became his favourite, displacing the Lady Xie. The mother of Sun Quan's first son, Sun Deng, born in 209, was a woman of poor family, so he had the Lady care for him.

The Lady later irritated Sun Quan by her jealousy, so he left her in Wu commandery and took up with the Lady Bu.

When Sun Quan gained the royal title in 221 he appointed Sun Deng as his Heir. Many argued that he should name the Lady Xu as his queen, but he always refused. The Lady probably died in the 230s. -SGZ Wu 5:1197-98*; C/C 99:125-126.

Xu 徐, the Lady VI. A concubine of Cao Pi, she bore him a son, Cao Li 禮. -SGZ 20:590.

Xu/Ying 許/應, the Lady. The Lady was originally the wife of Ying Shun, who was a close friend of Xu Jing 敬, a man of impoverished family. Xu Jing's wife was old and had borne no children, so Ying Shun divorced the Lady and gave her as a second consort to Xu Jing. Presumably through her Xu Jing had his son Xu Xun, born early in the second century. -DGHJ 19:4b.

Xu 許 [personal name unknown]. A magistrate in Chen, his virtues were commemorated with a stele. -SJZ 23:4b.

Xu Aqu 許阿瞿 (167-170); Nanyang. An illustrated stele found in 1973 mourns the death of this boy. -Nagata 94:184.

Xu Bing 許冰 or Xu Yong 永 or Xu Shui 水. Director of Retainers in 178, Xu Bing was recommended to Emperor Ling by Yang Zhi, Director of the Secretariat, as an honest official who was worthy of advancement. -HHS 67/57:2209.

XC 8:5a-b has a biography of Xu Yong 永, recording how he controlled the capital province with a firm hand, so that ill-doers were afraid to meet his eye and eunuch associates who had been ruling as magistrates resigned from their posts. Because of this, he made enemies in high places who laid charges against him. Ordered to attend the Ministry of Justice, he observed to his friends that he was now seventy years old, that he had hitherto served without any complaint against him, but that he saw no good result from the false accusations. He therefore took poison.

Xu Bo 徐伯; Henan. About 80 Xu Bo was engaged in litigation over a land-holding. All parties were intransigent, and neither county nor commandery officials could resolve the dispute. The new magistrate Lu Gong, however, applied such virtue and charm that both sides abandoned their positions and each yielded land to the other. -HHS 25/15:874.

Xu Bo 徐白 see Xu You 徐由. -HHS 101/11:3244.

Xu Can 徐參 or Xu Shen; Xiapi. Xu Can was a brother of the eunuch favourite Xu Huang. He became Administrator of Wu commandery about 160, but was then reported by the Inspector of Yang province, Chen Xiang, for greed and corruption. He was sent to prison. -HHS 67/57:2212.

Xu Chang 許昌. Nephew of Emperor Guangwu's concubine the Beauty Xu, and thus cousin to Liu Ying the King of Chu, in 58 Xu Chang was granted a marquisate in Lujiang as a compliment from Emperor Ming to his half-brother Liu Ying. -HHS 42/32:1428.

Xu Chang 徐常. Protector of the Wuhuan in 121, Xu Chang was besieged in Dai commandery by Xianbi raiders led by Qizhijian. Geng Kui the General on the Liao and the Inspector of You province Pang Can brought troops in two columns, Xu Chang escaped by night to join them, and the siege was broken. -HHS 19/9:719, 90/80:2987-88; deC 84:299-300.

Xu Chang 許昌 (d.174); Kuaiji. In 172 Xu Chang raised a religious rebellion in Kuaiji, styling himself as Emperor of the Brightness of Yang 陽明皇帝. His followers ravaged the commandery, and it required the intervention of provincial forces under Zang Min before they were put down in 174. -SGZ Wu 1:1093-94; deC 90:80-81.

The texts disagree on the leadership of this rebellion. According to the Annals of HHS 8:334, Xu Sheng was the head, but SGZ Wu 1:1093 and Lingdi ji at 1094PC say that the leader was Xu Sheng's son Chang, who gave him the title. DGHJ 3:5b, HHS 58/48:1884 and HHS 102/12:3258 say that the leader was Xu Sheng's son Zhao 昭. SGZ Wu 1:1093 refers to Xu Shao 韶 as a son of Xu Chang, associated with him in the leadership [the position is further confused by the fact that the character Shao 韶 evidently appears in this text in order to avoid taboo on the personal name of Sima Zhao 司馬昭, founder of the Jin dynasty; it was probably written originally as Zhao 昭]. A certain Xu Zhao from this region opposed Sun Ce in the late 190s, but it is doubtful if there was any direct connection: see sub voce.

One may observe that the characters chang and zhao both have the meaning of "brightness", and given the imperial title which Xu Chang is said to have awarded himself it is likely that both were held as personal names by leaders of the rebellion. It is not possible to decide, however, whether Xu Chang and Xu Shao were father and son [as SGZ Wu 1], whether they were both sons of Xu Sheng [as DGHJ, HHS and Lingdi ji], or even whether they are two names for the same man, a single son of Xu Sheng.

We may note in any case that it is probably at this time and in association with this rebel sect that there appeared the prophecy recorded in the apocryphal work Chunqiu zuozhu qi 春秋佐助期 "Helpful Forecasts from the Spring and Autumn Annals" which claimed that the Han dynasty would lose the empire on account of xu chang 許昌. This was later used as a reason for Cao Pi to change the name of his capital from Xu city to Xuchang in 221, soon after he had forced the Han Emperor Xian to abdicate in his favour. See Tjan 49: 117, deC 89:474-475, and Goodman 98:102.

Xu Chao 徐兆 see Xu Xun 許巡.

Xu Chao 徐超 see sub Xu Feng 徐豐. XTS 76B: 3420.

Xu Chen 許耽 see Xu Dan 許耽.

Xu Cheng 徐盛 see Xu Sheng 徐盛.

Xu Chong 徐崇. Younger son of Xu Fang, after the death of their father about 110 his elder brother Heng ceded Xu Chong the succession to the fief. -HHS 44/34:1502.

Xu Heng later received the fief, presumably after the death of Xu Chong; see sub voce. It is unlikely this

902 Xu Chong

Xu Chong is the same as the one below, who held a low-ranking guard post at the capital ten years later.

Xu Chong 許冲; Runan. Son of Xu Shen, in 121 he presented his father's dictionary, Shuowen jiezi 說文解字, to the throne of Emperor An. -HHS 79/69B:2588; Texts:429 [Boltz].

Xu Chong 徐崇. A major at one of the city gates of the capital in 124, Xu Chong joined the demonstration led by Lai Li at the palace Gate of the Vast Capital, protesting the dismissal of the Heir, Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun. Though the demonstrators achieved no success, their support was recognised, and after Liu Bao had been brought to the throne at the end of 125, Xu Chong and his colleagues were rewarded with high office and gained the ren right to nominate their sons as cadet gentlemen. -HHS 15/5:591-93.

Xu Chu 許褚 [Zhongkang 仲康]; Pei. Xu Chu came from the same county as Cao Cao. More than eight feet tall [185 cm] and strongly built, he recruited clansmen and others as a self-defence force to repel bandits, then joined Cao Cao when he took over the region in 197. Cao Cao appointed Xu Chu and his followers to be his personal guard, presumably as replacement for Dian Wei, who had been killed in the beginning of that year.

In 199 Xu Tuo and some others planned to assassinate Cao Cao at a time that Xu Chu was off duty. Feeling uneasy, however, Xu Chu went back. He found Xu Tuo and his fellows and saw from their expressions that they planned some treachery. He killed them.

Xu Chu took part in the campaigns against Zhang Xiu and in the defence of Guandu against Yuan Shao, and after the capture of Ye city in 204 he was granted a fief.

During the manoeuvres leading to the battle of Huayin in 211, Cao Cao met the rebel Ma Chao face-to-face with only Xu Chu as his escort. Ma Chao was going to attack but Xu Chu faced him down and Ma Chao did not dare make a move. Later, Xu Chu commanded the rear-guard which saved Cao Cao from pursuit, and at one point, in a traditional cliché, he chopped the hands of men who tried to climb into Cao Cao's boat to save themselves; the severed fingers filled the bottom of the vessel.

In 215 Xu Chu's troops broke Zhang Lu's defence lines in the confused engagement at the Yangping Pass.

Taciturn and fiercely loyal, Xu Chu was admired by Cao Cao and promoted a general, while his elite Tiger Warriors 虎士 served as Cao Cao's bodyguard and many were honoured and promoted. When Cao Cao died, Xu Chu wept until he vomited blood.

After Cao Pi took the imperial title in 220, Xu Chu was among the sponsors of a commemorative stele. He received further honours from Cao Pi and Cao Rui, and died about 230. -SGZ 18:542-43*, LS 19:4b; Goodman 98:197.

Xu Ci 許慈 [Rendu 仁篤]; Nanyang. A student of Liu Xi, Xu Ci became expert in the teachings of Zheng Xuan, and was widely read in the Confucian classics. During the 190s he took refuge in the far south and about 208 he went with Xu Jing to join Liu Zhang in Yi province.

When Liu Bei took over in 214 he had Xu Ci join a group of scholars to work on ancient texts and establish a set of rituals and procedures which would reform the disordered customs of the region. This was no doubt intended to enhance the new ruler's authority by demonstrating his devotion to scholarship and public morality, but Xu Ci quarrelled bitterly with his maverick colleague Hu Qian, and the project failed completely.

Xu Ci later held charge of the harem of Liu Shan, Later Sovereign of Shu-Han. -SGZ Shu 12:1022-23*.

Xu Dan 許耽; Danyang. In 196 Xu Dan was an officer of Liu Bei, Inspector of Yu province. He had title as a General of the Household and was stationed with the garrison at Liu Bei's headquarters in Xiapi city. After Liu Bei's commander Zhang Fei quarrelled with the Chancellor Cao Bao and killed him, Xu Dan sent his subordinate Zhang Kuang to Lü Bu, inviting him to attack and promising him support. As Lü Bu came forward, Xu Dan's men opened the gates to him. Zhang Fei was driven away, and Lü Bu seized the heart of Liu Bei's position and captured his family. -SGZ 7:223-24.

Xu De 許德; Danyang. In 26 Xu De commanded the garrison at Xiangyi in Chenliu for the pretender Liu Yong. Guangwu's general He Yan attacked, and the city was taken by storm. -HHS 18/8:686-87.

Xu De 許德 [Borao 伯饒]; Hejian. Son of Xu Pi, in the late second century Xu De was Administrator of Anding and of Runan. -XTS 73A:2875 and see Fang 65:32.

Xu Deng 徐登; Kuaiji. A man from Minzhong 閩中, on the edge of the empire in present-day Fujian, Xu Deng was expert in the arts of shamanism. He claimed to have been born a woman but to have changed his sex.

During the time of war and pestilence in the late second century Xu Deng and Zhao Bing agreed to devote themselves to curing illness, and they sealed their bond by a display of spells in the tradition of local Yue magic 越方. Xu Deng halted the flow of a river, and Zhao Bing made a dead tree sprout again.

Xu Deng was older than Zhao Bing, who therefore treated him as his master. They lived extremely simply, so that even their offerings to the spirits were no more than river water and mulberry bark, and they used only chants and spells to treat disease. They were nonetheless very successful. -HHS 82/72B:2741-42*; Ngo 76:127-128, DeWoskin 83:76-77.

Xu Ding 許定; Pei. Elder brother of Xu Chu, he also held command of personal troops for Cao Cao, was enfeoffed and made a general. -SGZ 18:543.

Xu Fang 徐房; Beihai. Friends of Pang Meng and scholars of Yinyang 陰陽, during the troubles of the 20s and 30s Xu Fang and Li Tan cared for some thousand refugees. -HHS 83/73:2760.

Xu Fang 徐防 [Yeqing 謁卿]; Pei. Son of Xu Xian, when he was young Xu Fang followed the teachings of his father and of his grandfather Xu Xuan 宣 on the Book of Changes. During the reign of Emperor Ming he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became a gentleman cadet. A good-looking man with presence, he presented some prognostications which proved correct, and the emperor admired his ability. He arranged for Xu Fang to join the Imperial Secretariat, where he served with distinction under both Emperor Ming and his successor Emperor Zhang.

In the time of Emperor He, Xu Fang was appointed Director of Retainers and then Administrator of Wei commandery. In 98 he became Minister Steward and then Minister of Finance. He was successful in all his appointments and in 102 he became Excellency of Works.

Xu Fang was concerned that the traditional meanings of the Confucian classics were being lost among a plethora of new interpretations, and the confusion was reflected at the Imperial University and its examinations. He urged that more attention should be paid to the literal meaning of the texts, and candidates who failed to follow authority should be penalised. This was agreed and duly ordered. Xu Fang was seeking to entrench the position of the New Text, which had been confirmed by the conference in the White Tiger Hall in 79, but despite its official endorsement the New Text had lost authority among leading scholars, and Xu Fang's policy meant that government scholarship was bound ever more closely to a discredited tradition.

In 104 Xu Fang was transferred to be Excellency over the Masses, and in 105 he joined the Grand Commandant Zhang Yu in recommending the posthumous enfeoffment of Deng Xun, father of the Empress. When Emperor He died in the following year, the Lady Deng, now regent Dowager, appointed Xu Fang as Grand Commandant with control of the Imperial Secretariat, giving formal authority over the government, and granted him gifts and rewards. In 107, after the death of Liu Long and the accession of Emperor An, Xu Fang was enfeoffed for his part in the selection of the new ruler.

That same year, however, because of flooding and outbreaks of banditry Xu Fang was required to leave office and go to his fief in Taishan. This was the first time an Excellency had been dismissed on account of unfavourable omens. -HHS 44/34:1500-02*, XC 2:8a; Loewe 86C:298.

Xu Feng 徐豐 [Zhongdu 仲都]; Xiapi? In a detailed genealogy, XTS 75B:3420 identifies Xu Fang and his brother Xu Ba as sires of the northern and southern Xu clans. None of the people mentioned, however, either ancestors or descendants of Xu Feng, appear in other records. The dating of the generations is thus extremely difficult, while nothing more is mentioned of Xu Ba and his lineage. It would seem that the family was based on Xiapi or Linhuai, but that presumption is made questionable by the fact that two members are said to have been Administrators of that territory [one evidently in Former Han, when it was called Linhuai]. Based on the assumption that the division into two lineages took place at the time of Wang Mang or in early Later Han, I summarise below the information from XTS 76B:

Xu Feng was a clerk in the officer of the Excellency of Works. He begat

Xu Ming, who became a Palace Attendant. He begat

Xu Qian, also a Palace Attendant. He begat

Xu Xuan, who had two sons Xu Lin and Xu Rui.

Xu Rui became Administrator of Xiapi. He had two sons, Xu Mo and Xu Shijian.

Xu Shijian [Shijie] was Intendant of Jingzhao. He had two sons, Xu Shu and Xu Chao.

Xu Zhao was a Cavalier Attendant under Wei.

Xu Feng 徐鳳 (d.145); Jiujiang. In 144, after the initial success of the insurrection led by Fan Rong and Zhou Sheng, Xu Feng and his fellow-countryman Ma Mian also rebelled and ravaged the commandery. Dressed in crimson robes with a black sash, Xu Feng styled himself General Supreme 無上將軍, while Ma Mian called himself the Yellow Emperor.

Despite further successes, in the following year the rebel forces were heavily defeated by Teng Fu and a provincial army. As his colleagues were killed, Xu Feng fled to the east, but he and his remnant followers were destroyed by levies under the local leader Xie An of Xiapi. -HHS 6:276-77, 38/28:1279.

Xu Feng 徐奉 (d.184). Though they were favoured palace eunuchs, the Regular Attendants Xu Feng and Feng Xu became members of the religious sect led by Zhang Jue. In the early 180s they joined Zhang Jue's agent Ma Yuanyi in plans for a coup at the capital to coincide with rebellion throughout the empire.

When the renegade disciple Tang Zhou warned the court, Ma Yuanyi was killed and there was a purge of Zhang Jue's followers in Luoyang. Despite the fury of Emperor Ling at the disloyalty of his attendants, however, Zhang Rang and Wang Fu managed to reconcile him. -HHS 71/61:2299-2300, 78/68:2535.

Xu Fu 徐福 see Xu Shu 徐庶.

Xu Gan 徐幹 [Bozhang 伯張]; Youfufeng. A friend of Ban Gu and Ban Chao, Xu Gan volunteered to assist Ban Chao in the Western Regions, and was sent with reinforcements in 80. He joined the attack on Panchen in Shule [Kashgar] and received tenure as a major. When Ban Chao was named Protector-General in 91, Xu Gan became Chief Clerk in command of the garrison at Shule. -HHS 47/37:1576-81.

Xu Gan 徐幹 [Weichang 偉長] (170-217); Beihai. Writer and philosopher, Xu Gan was noted for his free poetic style. Though he had small interest in official position, he joined Cao Cao's staff, became literary adviser at the court of Cao Pi, and was a friend of Cao Zhi. He died during the epidemic of 217.

Zhong lun 中論 "Discussions of the Mean," a collection of Xu Gan's philosophical essays, is still extant, and in his Lun wen 論文 "Essay on Literature"

Cao Pi honoured Xu Gan as one of the Seven Masters of the Jian'an period. -SGZ 21:599-602*; Texts:88 [Makeham].

Xu Gan 許乾. In 199 Xu Gan was a local gang leader south of the Huai. -SGZ 14:443.

Xu Gong 許貢 (d.200). Xu Gong took over as Administrator of Wu about 193, possibly by force against his predecessor Sheng Xian. In 196 he attempted to resist Sun Ce but was betrayed by his Commandant Zhu Zhi and driven to take refuge with the hills bandit White Tiger Yan.

In 200 Xu Gong joined Cao Cao's agent Chen Deng in an alliance against Sun Ce, but he was defeated and captured. At some stage, probably in 196, Xu Gong had sent a memorial to the Han court claiming that Sun Ce was a threat to the empire and that he should be summoned and kept under control. As a copy of the document came into Sun Ce's hands, he confronted Xu Gong, and killed him when he sought to deny it.

Soon afterwards a group of Xu Gong's retainers ambushed Sun Ce while he was hunting and fatally wounded him. -SGZ Wu 11:1303, 1:1109-11.

Xu Gu 徐顧. An officer of Sun Quan, about 210 Xu Gu was stationed on the frontier of Jing and Yang provinces. He died about this time, and Sun Quan proposed to transfer his troops to Lü Meng, who held a position close by. Lü Meng objected, arguing that Xu Gu had given good service to the state, and his troop should pass to his male heir, even though he was still young. Sun Quan eventually accepted the argument, and Lü Meng sent an officer to guide the young successor in the management of this human inheritance. -SGZ Wu 9:1275.

Xu Guan 徐灌 (d.184). Intendant of Henan, he was arrested and died in prison, possibly on account of some connection to the Yellow Turbans. -HHS 8:350.

Xu Gui 徐珪. Administrator of Kuaiji about 175, Xu Gui nominated Zhu Jun as Filial and Incorrupt. -HHS 71/61:2308.

Xu Han 許邯; Nanyang. A local warlord in Fuyang county, in the autumn of 26 Xu Han was attacked and forced to surrender by Cen Peng, general of Emperor Guangwu. -HHS 17/7:656.

Xu He 徐和 (d.206); Ji'nan. Leader of a group of Yellow Turbans in Qing province, Xu He and his associate Sima Ju attacked a number of cities and killed several officials in his home commandery and in neighbouring Le'an.

Towards the end of 206 Cao Cao sent Xiahou Yuan with a large force of local troops from Taishan, Qi and Pingyuan, supported by Zang Ba and Lü Qian. After several engagements, with fierce fighting and heavy casualties, the rebels were defeated and Xu He was killed. -SGZ 9:270, 18:540, 537.

Xu Heng 徐衡. Elder son of Xu Fang, after his father died about 110, Xu Heng ceded his fief to his younger brother Xu Chong. Later, presumably after the death of his brother, Xu Heng received the marquisate and was sent out to his fief in Taishan. -HHS 44/34:1502.

Xu Huang 徐璜 (d.164); Xiapi. A eunuch, in 159 Xu Huang was a Regular Attendant when Emperor Huan asked Tang Heng who might help him get rid of Liang Ji. Tang Heng recommended Xu Huang and Ju Yuan, for they had spoken privately against the dominance of the Liang family. They accordingly joined the conspiracy with Zuo Guan and Shan Chao, and after the coup was successful [see sub Ju Yuan] the five leaders were granted county marquisates and a donation of cash.

Shan Chao died a few months later, but the four other eunuchs presumed on their favour and influence to live in luxury, building great mansions and taking women of good family as [decorative and titular?] concubines. They adopted unrelated children and even slaves to maintain their lineages, while their kinsmen held high office. Xu Huang's brother Sheng ruled badly in Henei, and his nephew Xu Xuan became notorious.

Despite such scandals, when Xu Huang died he was granted special honours for his funeral and his tomb-ground. -HHS 78/68:2520-22*; Ch'ü 72:476-480, Bn 76:94-95, deC 89:12-14.

Xu Huang 徐晃 [Gongming 公明] (d.227); Hedong. A successful officer under the former bandit Yang Feng, in 195 Xu Huang persuaded him to assist Emperor Xian in his escape to the east. He was rewarded with enfeoffment, and in the following year he again persuaded Yang Feng to accept Cao Cao's advances. When Cao Cao later attacked Yang Feng, Xu Huang went over to join him.

Appointed a major-general, he was sent against bandits and served on the campaigns against Lü Bu and Liu Bei. At Guandu in 200, Xu Huang and Shi Huan defeated Han Meng and destroyed one of Yuan Shao's supply trains.

As Cao Cao attacked the Yuan family at Ye city in 204, he sent Xu Huang against Han Fan, magistrate of Yiyang county in Zhao. He persuaded Han Fan to surrender, then urged Cao Cao to treat him generously so as to encourage others.

In 208 Xu Huang accompanied the army into Jing province, and after the defeat at the Red Cliffs he stayed with Cao Ren to defend Jiangling on the Yangzi, with rank as a general.

Xu Huang later accompanied Xiahou Yuan against bandits in Taiyuan, and in 211 he joined the campaign against the warlords of the northwest. As Cao Cao faced the main force of the enemy at the Tong Pass, he sent Xu Huang and Zhu Ling into Hedong to establish a bridgehead at the Puban Crossing of the Yellow River, opening the way for his oblique attack from the north.

In 215 Xu Huang was with Xiahou Yuan against Liu Bei in Hanzhong, and in 218 he led a force to defend the line of communications against a raid from Liu Bei's officer Chen Shi. In 219, after the defeat of Xiahou Yuan and Cao Cao's withdrawal from Hanzhong, Xu Huang was sent east to relieve Cao Ren, besieged at Fan city on the Han River in Jing province. He drove Guan Yu's advance guard back and moved forward to the perimeter of the siege. Though he was at first not strong enough to break through, he was reinforced from Cao Cao's main army and eventually defeated Guan Yu in open battle. Guan Yu's fleet still isolated Fan city, but he was now attacked from behind and utterly destroyed by Sun Quan's forces under Lü Meng.

Appointed General of the Right by Cao Pi in 220, Xu Huang joined the campaign to drive Liu Feng from Shangyong commandery west of Nanyang. He was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele set up after Cao Pi took the imperial title, and in 222 he commanded an army in the attack on Nan commandery against Sun Quan. At the beginning of the reign of Cao Rui in 227 he faced the Wu general Zhuge Jin in Xiangyang, but left his command due to illness, and died soon afterwards.

Xu Huang was a reserved, careful man of the utmost loyalty. As a commander, he made careful plans, and he was relentless in pursuit. -SGZ 17:527-30*, LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:197.

Xu Hun 許混; Runan. Son of Xun Shao, he accompanied him in seeking refuge in the south about 190, but later returned to the north and became a member of the Secretariat of Wei. -SGZ 23:658.

Xu [Jichang] 許季長. When Xu Jichang was a magistrate in Hongnong, the whole province suffered from locusts, but his county was spared. -XC 7:7a.

Xu Jian 徐儉. Administrator of Lingling, Xu Jian set up a stele at the temple of Shun 舜廟 by Jiuyi Mountain 九疑山. -SJZ 38:5a.

Xu Jing 許荊 [Shaozhang 少張 or Zizhang 子張]; Kuaiji. Xu Jing was a grandson of Xu Wu. After his father died when he was young, the family was poor and Xu Jing cared for his mother, but he later gained appointment in the commandery. When his cousin Xu Shi killed a man in a vendetta, the rival kinsmen came to seek vengeance, but Xu Jing offered his own life instead and the enemies were so impressed that they abandoned the pursuit. Xu Jing's name thus became known, and the Administrator Huang Jing nominated him as Filial and Incorrupt.

In the time of Emperor He, Xu Jing became Administrator of Guiyang. The customs of the region were rude and the people paid small attention to learning, but Xu Jing taught proper conduct and made regulations for marriage and funerals. On one occasion a certain Jiang Jun came to him concerning a dispute with his brothers about property. Xu Jing was ashamed his teaching had had so little effect, and he presented a report seeking punishment for his failure. Jiang Jun and his brothers abandoned their case and asked that they might suffer instead.

On the other hand, when a certain Xie Hong failed to care for his aged parents his brothers killed him, and the example of his fate inspired many others to behave in a more filial fashion.

After twelve years in Guiyang, Xu Jing asked to retire on grounds of illness. He was appointed a Counsellor Remonstrant at the court in Luoyang, and died in that office. The elders of Guiyang praised him with hymns, and a stele and a temple were erected in his honour. Fan Ye classified him as a Benevolent Official 循吏. -HHS 76/66:2471-72*, XC 5:3a; Miyakawa 60:32.

Xu Jing 許敬 [Hongqing 鴻卿]; Runan. A man of humble family but strong morality, Xu Jing was a close friend of Zhou Boling. As Zhou Boling died young, Xu Jing cared for his family.

On one occasion Xu Jing was in attendance on the county magistrate when one of his colleagues presented a false accusation. Xu Jing cut their mat in two, observing that he refused to share with a criminal.

Xu Jing rose to be Minister of the Household, and in 127 he was promoted Excellency over the Masses. He left that office in 129. -HHS 6:254.

Xu Jing 許敬, wives of: see sub the Lady Xu/Ying.

Xu Jing 許靖 [Wenxiu 文休] (d.222); Runan. As young men, Xu Jing and his cousin Xu Shao were noted for their objective judgements of their fellow-countrymen. Later, they fell out, and when Xu Shao became Officer of Merit in the commandery he refused to give Xu Jing any grading. A new Administrator, Liu Yi, nonetheless made Xu Jing his Reporting Officer; he was then nominated Filial and Incorrupt and later joined the Imperial Secretariat.

As Dong Zhuo took power in 189, he had Xu Jing join Zhou Bi and others to recommend men for office, and Xu Jing became Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate. When the new appointees in the provinces formed an alliance against him, however, Dong Zhuo executed Zhou Bi, while Xu Jing took refuge with Kong Zhou the Inspector of Yu province.

Kong Zhou died soon afterwards, and Xu Jing went to Chen Wen in Yang province. After Chen Wen died in 193, Xu Jing went south of the Yangzi, where Xu Gong in Wu commandery and Wang Lang in Kuaiji were old friends. He established a settlement for people in distress and treated them most generously.

As Sun Ce conquered Kuaiji in 196, Xu Jing fled with his people by sea south along the coast to Jiao province: he was admired for the manner in which he waited to ensure all the other refugees were on board before he embarked himself. Welcomed by Shi Xie, Administrator of Jiaozhi and dominant warlord of the south, he was again praised for his generous conduct to the distressed. He was invited to join Cao Cao in the north, but wrote an eloquent and courteous letter to refuse, notably because of the distances and dangers of the journey.

About 208, Xu Jing accepted an invitation from Liu Zhang in Yi province, and he was successively Administrator of Ba, of Guanghan and, in 211, of Shu. When Liu Bei besieged Chengdu in 214, Xu Jing prepared to escape across the wall and join the enemy; Liu Zhang found out, but as he too intended to surrender, he took no action. Liu Bei was not impressed, but Fa Zheng argued that Xu Jing was too well-respected not to be granted some office, even if he did not deserve it. So Xu Jing was appointed Chief Clerk to Liu Bei as General of the Left.

When the kingdom of Hanzhong was proclaimed in 219, Xu Jing was one of the officials listed in the formal memorial to the emperor. He was named Grand Tutor to the kingdom, and was then chief signatory of the memorial urging Liu Bei to take the imperial title. When Liu Bei did this in 221, however, Xu Jing became only Excellency over the Masses in the new regime. The Imperial Chancellor Zhuge Liang, however, always bowed to him in respect.

Xu Jing died in 222, aged over seventy, admired for his generous nature and his delight in Pure Conversation 清談; he had been in regular correspondence with old friends who were now leading scholars and officials at the court of Wei. -SGZ Shu 8:963-67*.

Xu Jiu 徐璆 see Xu Qiu 徐璆.

Xu [Jizhang] 許季長 see Xu Jichang 許季長.

Xu Jun 許峻 [Jishan 季山]; Runan. As a young man About 100, Xu Jun was afflicted by a serious illness, and after three years of suffering he went to Mount Tai to beg the spirits of that sacred place to save his life. He claimed to have met the Taoist sage 道士 Zhang Jujun on that journey, and learnt magical arts from him.

Xu Jun became an expert in divination by the cracks of oracle bones, and he compiled Yi lin 易林 and several other studies of the Book of Changes. His predictions were so numerous and so accurate that he was compared to the great Jing Fang 京房 of Former Han. On one occasion he advised the official Zang Zhongying how to rid himself of a poltergeist. -HHS 82/72B:2731, FSTY 9:73; Ngo 76:111, DeWoskin 83:70, Nylan 83:542-543.

Xu Junran 許君然. A county magistrate in Hedong about 88, when his colleague Kong Xi, head of a neighbouring county, died, Xu Junran urged Kong Xi's young sons Changchan and Jichan to go back to their home country in Lu. The boys refused his advice, and stayed to care for their father's tomb. -HHS 79/69A:2563.

Xu Kuang 徐匡. About 58, Xu Kuang was Prefect of the Coach-houses as Emperor Ming was on tour. When the emperor's uncle Yin Jiu attempted to drive his carriage through the imperial escort, Xu Kuang stopped him. He did not touch Yin Jiu, but had his driver sent to prison.

Emperor Ming was angry and reprimanded Xu Kuang. Xu Kuang duly presented himself for punishment, but the clerical officer Wu Liang spoke in his favour, pointing out that the real fault lay with Yin Jiu's arrogant and unseemly conduct. Though the emperor pardoned Xu Kuang, Wu Liang was sent away as magistrate of a distant county. -HHS 27/17:943-44.

Xu Kun 徐琨 (d.199); Wu. Son of Xu Zhen and Sun Jian's sister the Lady Sun II, Xu Kun held local office and was then a successful commander under his uncle Sun Jian. In 195 he followed his cousin Sun Ce across the Yangzi. On the advice of his mother he proposed hastening the attack by building rafts for the army from rushes and reeds rather than waiting for ships. The plan was carried out, the crossing was successful and, as Wu Jing returned to Yuan Shu, Xu Kun was named Administrator of Danyang.

In 197 Yuan Shu claimed the imperial title and Sun Ce broke off with him. Yuan Shu sent his cousin Yuan Yin as Administrator of Danyang, but Xu Kun drove him away. Sun Ce was becoming concerned about the number of men under Xu Kun's command, and when his uncle Wu Jing left Yuan Shu's service and came back across the Yangzi, he gave Danyang to Wu Jing. Xu Kun continued to command troops, but he now had title as a General of the Household and was probably kept at headquarters.

After Sun Quan came to power in 200, Xu Kun joined the attack which destroyed Li Shu in Lujiang in 200; he was named a general and enfeoffed as a marquis. While fighting Huang Zu, probably in the attack of 203, Xu Kun was shot by an arrow and died.

One of Xu Kun's daughters, the Lady Xu V, became a favoured concubine of Sun Quan. -SGZ Wu 5:1197-98.

Xu Kun 徐混; Runan. Son of Xu Shao, after his father's death in Yuzhang in 195 he went to the north. About 230 he became a member of the Secretariat of Wei. -SGZ 23:658.

Xu Lin 徐琳 see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Ling 徐陵 [Yuanda 元大]; Kuaiji. Having been a magistrate in three counties for Sun Quan, about 220 Xu Ling became Administrator of Lingling. He was a friend of Yu Fan, who recognised his quality and recommended him to Sun Quan for ministerial appointment. -SGZ Wu 12:1323.

Xu Man 許曼 [Ningfang 寧方]; Runan. Grandson of Xu Jun, Xu Man maintained his teachings and made many successful forecasts of the future.

In particular, as Feng Gun took up appointment as Administrator of Longxi in 155, he opened his new seal-case and two red snakes emerged. One went off to the north and the other to the south. Feng Gun had Xu Man cast the omen with yarrow-stalks, and Xu Man reported that after three years Feng Gun would become a general in the northeast, and five years after that he would hold a general's command in the south. This came true. -HHS 82/72B:2731-32*, FSTY 9:75; Ngo 76:111-112, DeWoskin 83:70-71; Nylan 83:548-549.

Xu Meng 徐蒙. Xu Meng was Officer of Merit under the Chancellor of Beihai, Jiang Chong, who sent him throughout the territory as his "eyes and ears." -XC 7:12b.

Xu Miao 徐邈 [Jingshan 景山] (172-249); Guangyang. As Cao Cao took over the north in 205, he called Xu Miao to serve in his Imperial Chancellor's office. Xu Miao was briefly a magistrate, then returned to Cao Cao's staff, and when the state of Wei was established in 213 he joined the Secretariat.

Though wine was forbidden under the sumptuary laws, Xu Miao frequently drank privately, and often became very drunk. The censor Zhao Ta reported him, and Cao Cao was extremely angry, but the general Xianyu Fu spoke on his behalf and though Xu Miao was dismissed he suffered no further penalty.

Xu Miao later became Administrator of Longxi and then of Nan'an commandery, set up in the eastern part of Hanyang. He served Cao Pi also in a series of commanderies and was enfeoffed as a secondary marquis. A successful Governor of Liang province for Cao Rui, he later held ministerial positions at the imperial capital. He declined appointment as an Excellency, but received high posthumous honours.

Noted for his fine morality, about 210 Xu Miao scolded Li Xin, the son of Li Min of Liaodong because, although he had sought his father for twenty years, he had failed to marry and maintain the family line: the young man then performed his true filial duty. -SGZ 27:739-41*, 8:253.

Xu Ming 徐明 [Xuantong 玄通] see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Mo 徐謨 see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Mo 徐邈 see Xu Miao 徐邈.

Xu Pi 許毗; Hejian. XTS 73A:2875 describes Xu Pi as a Palace Attendant and Minister of Ceremonies.

Xu Pu 許普; Kuaiji. Younger brother of Xu Wu, Xu Pu benefited from his generous public relations. -HHS 76/66:2471.

Xu Qian 許虔 [Zizheng 子政]; Runan. Elder brother of Xu Shao, Xu Qian was a man of distinguished appearance. He was admired by Xie Zhen and local people described the brothers as two dragons. When Officer of Merit in the commandery, he was noted for the strictness with which he recommended men for official positions or dismissed those who were unworthy.

Though Xu Qian was initially more admired than Xu Shao, he died at the age of thirty-five sui, and Xu Shao later became celebrated as a judge of character. -HHS 68/58:2235; Mather 76:530.

Xu Qian 徐乾; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Xu Qian was a senior member of the group. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Xu Qian 徐遷 [Shaoqing 少卿] see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Qin 許欽; Runan. Son of Xu Jing, Xu Qin died in the early 200s, before his father. -SGZ Shu 8:967.

Xu Qing 許慶 [Zibo 子伯]. Xu Qing was appointed Investigator of his commandery, but his family was poor he rode in an ox-cart, and was laughed at for doing so. On another occasion, as he was talking with a friend, he beat the ground and wept as he contemplated the failing dynasty of Han; for such Weltschmerz he received another sobriquet, Kushi 哭世. -XC 6:9b-10a.

Xu Qiu 徐璆 or Xu Jiu [Mengyu 孟玉 or Mengben 孟本 or Mengping 孟平]; Guangling. Son of Xu Shu, Xu Qiu was a fine scholar and a man of utmost honesty. Joining the offices of the Excellencies, he was graded First Class and became Inspector of Jing province. Despite pressure from senior eunuchs on behalf of the Dowager Dong, mother of Emperor Ling, he reported on the wealth accumulated by her nephew Zhang Zhong, Administrator of Nanyang, and against local officials.

In 184 Xu Qiu led his provincial troops to support Zhu Jun against the Yellow Turbans in Wan city, capital of Nanyang. Zhang Zhong impeached him, but because of his good work against the rebels he was only dismissed from office. He was later recalled and became Administrator of Runan and of Donghai, governing each with success. In 192 he joined a petition organised by Tao Qian, Inspector of Xu province, urging Zhu Jun to lead an army west to rescue the emperor at Chang'an; nothing came of the proposal.

As Emperor Xian set his court at Xu city under Cao Cao in 196, Xu Qiu was called to be Minister of Justice. As he was on his way there, he was intercepted by Yuan Shu, who offered him high office in his self-proclaimed imperial government. Xu Qiu said he would rather die; Yuan Shu dared not take the matter so far, but he held Xu Qiu at his court.

When Yuan Shu died in 199, Xu Qiu took the imperial Seal of State 傳國璽 which had come into Yuan Shu's possession, and brought it to Luoyang, surrendering also his own seals from Runan and Donglai as token of his shame at having remained in the traitor's company.

Xu Qiu became Minister of the Guards and Minister of Ceremonies, and in 208 he presented Cao Cao with his insignia as Imperial Chancellor. He died in office. -HHS 48/38:1620-22*, SGZ 1:30.

Xu Rong 徐容 (d.42); Ba. In 42 the fighting man Shi Xin mutinied in Chengdu, capital of Shu commandery. He took title as a Grand Marshal and sent out a summons of recruitment. Xu Rong and Yang Wei raised several thousand men in Ba commandery to support him.

Emperor Guangwu's general Wu Han came with ten thousand men, recaptured Chengdu after a three months siege, then went by river to attack Xu Rong and Yang Wei. As their troops scattered in fear, the leaders were executed, and several hundred families were transferred down the Yangzi to Changsha and Nan commandery. -HHS 18/8:683.

Xu Rong 徐榮 (d.192); Liaodong or Xuantu. A General of the Household under Dong Zhuo in 189, Xu Rong recommended his fellow-countryman Gongsun Du as Administrator of Liaodong.

Xu Rong became one of Dong Zhuo's leading commanders against the eastern alliance, defeating Cao Cao at Rongyang in 190 and Sun Jian south of Luoyang in 191.

After the assassination of Dong Zhuo in 192, Xu Rong evidently accepted the new government of Wang Yun. He was sent with Hu Zhen against Li Jue and other former officers of Dong Zhuo, but they were defeated and Xu Rong was killed. -SGZ 8:252, 1:7, SGZ Wu 1:1096, HHS 72/62:2333.

Xu Rui 徐瑞 [Yuanguai 元珪] see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Shao 徐少 [Yiqing 異卿?]; Pingyuan. In 24 Xu Shao was a leader of the Fuping bandits in Pingyuan, by the new course of the Yellow River. At the end of 26 they received some remnants of the Huosuo group from the Shandong peninsula, and in 27 they formed an alliance with Peng Chong.

As the various bandit forces were defeated by Wu Han in 29, Xu Shao and his followers withdrew to their home county, and later that year they surrendered to the Excellency Fu Zhan, former Administrator of Pingyuan, and were sent to Luoyang. [The leader of the Fuping group appears both as Xu Shao and as Xu Yiqing; Yiqing was perhaps his style.] -HHS 1A:16, 18/8:680, 26/16:895; Bn 59:80, 127-131.

Xu Shao 許韶 or Xu Zhao 昭 see sub Xu Chang.

Xu Shao 許劭 [Zijiang 子將] (150-195); Runan. Admired by Xie Zhen, and celebrated for his sense of morality and judgement, as a young man Xu Shao joined his cousin Xu Jing in issuing monthly critiques of local conduct. Never allowing personal feeling to influence their opinions, they gained great authority and could make or destroy reputations.

Xu Shao succeeded his brother Xu Qian as commandery Officer of Merit, but his reputation suffered after he quarrelled with Xu Jing and refused to give him an official grading. He did, however, promote excellent men from obscure or unusual surroundings, and even the arrogant Yuan Shao was embarrassed to display his prestige and wealth before him.

Xu Shao's status as a judge of character came to rival that of Guo Tai in the previous generation, and when he received Cao Cao, then twenty years old, he made him well known. Cao Cao pressed Xu Shao for a judgement, but there are differing accounts of what he said: "a good servant in time of peace, a dangerous chieftain in time of trouble" [SGZ 1:3], or "a rebel against good government, a hero in time of trouble" [HHS 68/58:2234]. Xu Shao may not have intended a compliment, but Cao Cao was pleased.

Xu Shao was kin to the Excellencies Xu Xun and Xu Xiang, but he disapproved of them and rejected all contact, while he likewise refused invitations and recommendations to office, remarking that men of poor quality held control of affairs and trouble was coming.

In the early 190s Xu Shao went to the south. Though he was generously received by Tao Qian, he distrusted him and left, and Tao Qian indeed turned later against the refugee gentlemen. Xu Shao joined Liu Yao, and when Liu Yao was defeated by Sun Ce in 195 he persuaded him not to retreat eastwards into Kuaiji but to go up the Yangzi to Yuzhang. He died soon afterwards, but left a warning for Liu Yao against the treacherous Zhai Rong. -HHS 68/58:2234-35*, XC 4:10b-11a, HHJ 27:329, SGZ 23:658; Mather 76:531.

Xu Shen 徐愼; Guangling. Father of Xu Shu, he travelled to the capital, presumably for some official duty. -XC 2:13b.

Xu Shen 許愼 [Shuzhong 叔重]; Runan. A scholar in the Old Text tradition of Jia Kui, Xu Shen was a man of wide learning, and though somewhat of a maverick he was praised by Ma Rong and his contemporaries as unmatched in his knowledge of the Confucian classics. Having served as Officer of Merit in his commandery, he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, became a Libationer in the offices of the Grand Commandant, and then a county magistrate in Pei. He retired and died at home some time after 120, probably in his nineties.

Xu Shen compiled Wujing yiyi 五經異義 "Different Meanings of the Five Classics," which discussed variant interpretations of the Old Text and New Text, and whose fragments remain an important source for the thought of the period [van Ess 93 and 99], but he is most celebrated for his Shuowen jiezi 說文解字, the first comprehensive dictionary of Chinese.

Based upon the "small seal" 小篆 script attributed to Li Si 李斯 of Qin 秦, the dictionary contained almost ten thousand characters, with more than a thousand variants. Its arrangement by 540 "radicals" 部 marked the first instance of this approach to the Chinese writing system, and Xu Shen's style of classification, later abbreviated to 214 groups, became the foundation for almost all later compilations. The declared intent of the work was to establish understanding of the written language in order to clarify the meaning of the classics and so to assist the government establish moral order. At the same time, Xu Shen's codification reflected the tradition of rationalising and systematisation noted in the Old Text and Qin, and maintained in much of the scientific work of Han.

Shuowen jiezi was completed about 100, but we are told that the government of the time was not interested, possibly because he failed to endorse interpretations of the official New Text, so the work was not offered to the throne until 121, after the beginning of the personal rule of Emperor An. Xu Shen was still alive, but he was old and ill, and his son Xu Chong prepared the memorial of presentation. -HHS 79/69B:2588*, XC 5:10b; Texts:429-442 [Boltz].

Xu Shen 徐參 see Xu Can 徐參.

Xu Sheng 許聖 [non-Chinese] see Xusheng 許聖.

Xu Sheng 許升/昇; Wu. An immoral man and a gambler, Xu Sheng was eventually reformed by his wife the Lady Lü Rong and became a reputable scholar. About 140 he was called to local appointment in the province, but was killed by a brigand on the road. -HHS 84/74:2795; Ch'ü 72:308.

Xu Sheng 許升/昇, wife of, see the Lady Lü Rong.

Xu Sheng 徐盛 or Xu Cheng; Xiapi. A younger brother of the eunuch Xu Huang, Xu Sheng became Administrator of Henei. He governed badly. -HHS 78/68:2521.

Xu Sheng 許生 (d.174); Kuaiji. In 172, with the title King of Yue 越王, Xu Sheng had a leading role in religious rebellion in Kuaiji, ravaging the commandery until 174. -deC 90:80-81. See also sub Xu Chang.

Xu Sheng 徐盛 or Xu Cheng [Wenxiang 文嚮]; Langye. During the troubles of the 190s Xu Sheng moved south to Wu. He became a retainer to a local family, and was known for his courage. When Sun Quan took over in 200 he appointed him a senior major with command of five hundred men. He was then a magistrate in the frontier territory of Yuzhang, on the western flank against Huang Zu, and he defeated a heavy raid down the Yangzi by Huang Zu's son She.

Xu Sheng later became a colonel and a magistrate in Danyang, took part in campaigns against the non-Chinese of the southern hills, and was promoted General of the Household with a colonel's command.

In 215 Xu Sheng accompanied the unfortunate attack on Hefei, and his troops were heavily defeated, but he distinguished himself as Cao Cao attacked Ruxu in 216, defeating the enemy on land after his ship was driven ashore by a storm.

In 222 Xu Sheng was made a general, enfeoffed and given title as Administrator of Lujiang. He joined the defence against Liu Bei in Jing province, then commanded a rear-guard action to hold off Cao Xiu at Ruxu, and in 224 he built false walls to deceive and halt another attack by Cao Pi on Jianye. When he died about 225, his son Kai 楷 succeeded to his fief and to his command of troops. -SGZ Wu 10:1298-99*.

Xu Shi 許世; Kuaiji. A grandson of Xu Wu, Xu Shi killed a man in a vendetta but was saved by the intervention of his cousin Xu Jing. -HHS 76/66:2472.

Xu Shijian 徐師儉 [Shijie 世節] see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Shu 許淑, the Lady; Longxi. Wife of Qin Jia, she had a literary correspondence with her husband; some of her letters were preserved. -Yao Zhenzong:2425.

Xu Shu 許淑 [Huiqing 惠卿]; Wei. A Counsellor at the court of Emperor Guangwu, in 28 Xu Shu argued against the Academician Fan Sheng and in favour of establishing a chair for Zuo zhuan studies at the Imperial University.

In 32 Xu Shu joined the minister Zhu Fu in urging reform of the calendar, which was now incorrect. The emperor felt that the time was premature, however, and took no action. -HHS 36/26:1228, 92/2:3025; Yao Zhenzong:2325, Bn 79:191.

Xu Shu 徐淑 [Bojin 伯進 or Boda 伯達]; Guangling. Son of Xu Shen, Xu Shu was learned in the Confucian classics and a keen musician. He accompanied his father to the capital, where he mastered the Mencius, the Book of Changes, Chunqiu and the Gongyang commentary, Ritual and Zhou li. An ambitious man, he was physically brave and studied military writings.

In 133 Xu Shu received his commandery nomination as Filial and Incorrupt. In the previous year Zuo Xiong, Director of the Imperial Secretariat, had brought in a regulation that required such candidates to be at least forty years old. Though Xu Shu had not yet reached that age, when he was questioned he pointed out that there was exemption for men of extraordinary ability, and that was why he had been chosen. Zuo Xiong challenged Xu Shu to match Confucius' celebrated disciple Yan Hui 顏回, who was said to have been able to hear one idea and understand ten. Xu Shu could make no effective reply, and his candidacy was rejected.

Despite this inauspicious beginning, Xu Shu became a magistrate in Bohai and then Commandant of Langye, where he distinguished himself against the local bandits. Later, as General on the Liao, he was celebrated on the northern frontier. -HHS 48/38:1620-21, 61/51:2020, XC 2:13b.

Xu Shu 徐庶 [Yuanzhi 元直]; Yingchuan. A man of humble family, his original personal name was Fu 福.

When he was young Xu Shu was a fighting man, but about 188 he was involved in a feud and was compelled to flee in disguise. Arrested by a local police officer, he refused to give his name. The officer had him tied to a post set up on a cart in the local market, and beat a drum so that people would come and identify him. No-one dared do so, and Xu Shu's comrades were later able to make a raid and rescue him.

Following this narrow escape Xu Shu abandoned his former ways and took up the pursuit of scholarship. Because of his past, other students would at first have nothing to do with him, but Xu Shu was eventually able to show that he had fully reformed and he acquired several close friends.

During the 190s Xu Shu and his fellow-countryman Shi Tao took refuge in Jing province, where they studied under Sima Hui. Among their fellow-students were Pang Tong and Zhuge Liang, and Sima Hui spoke highly of them to Xu Shu, who was also greatly impressed.

Some time in the early 200s Xu Shu went to call upon Liu Bei, who was at that time in semi-retirement in Nanyang. He was well received and joined his staff. He recommended Zhuge Liang to Liu Bei and arranged their initial meeting.

As Liu Bei fled south to escape from Cao Cao in 208, Xu Shu accompanied him, but when his mother was captured at the Chang Slope he explained sadly to Liu Bei that he could no longer give him good service, and he went back north to join Cao Cao.

Xu Shu became head of the Censorate under Wei. He was always remembered with affection by Zhuge Liang, and when he died a stele was erected in his honour at Pengcheng. -SGZ Shu 5:911-12, 914.

Xu Shu 徐庶, mother of; Yingchuan. The Lady followed her son into Jing province in the 190s. In 208 they accompanied Liu Bei on his flight south from Cao Cao. The Lady was captured, however, in the rout at the Chang Slope.

Apologising and explaining to Liu Bei that he could not give good service when his mother was in the hands of the enemy, Xu Shen went back north to join Cao Cao. -SGZ Shu 5:914; deC 89:135, 382.

Xu Shu 徐述 see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Shui 許水 see Xu Bing 許冰.

Xu [Shulong] 許叔龍; Runan. About 215 Xu Shulong was a well-respected young man in Yi province. Nothing more is heard of him, though he was surely a kinsman of Xu Jing and he may have been the unnamed son who died about that time. -SGZ Shu 14:1060.

Xu [Shutai] 許叔壹; Liang? Sometime a magistrate in Yingchuan, Xu Shutai died about 180. -LS 27:4b.

Xu [Shuzhong] 許叔種; Chen. Formerly a magistrate in Julu, about 180 Xu Shuzhong was commemorated with a stele. -SJZ 23:4b.

Xu Si 許汜. A member of Cao Cao's staff in 194, he joined Zhang Miao and Chen Gong in inviting Lü Bu to seize Yan province, then entered his service.

As Lü Bu was besieged by Cao Cao in Xiapi in 198, Xu Si was sent to Yuan Shu and persuaded him to send assistance. After Lü Bu had been taken and killed, Xu Si fled to Liu Biao in Jing province. -SGZ 7:221-30.

Xu Tuo 徐他 or Xu Ta (d.199). An officer of Cao Cao, Xu Tuo led a group which planned his assassination. They were discovered by his bodyguard Xu Chu, who killed them. -SGZ 18:542.

Xu [Weikang] 許偉康. Formerly a man of low-caste occupation, a butcher or a wine-seller, Xu Weikang was taken up by Guo Tai and became well known and respected. -HHS 68/58:2231.

Xu Wu 許武; Kuaiji. Some time in the 50s Xu Wu was nominated Filial and Incorrupt by the Administrator Diwu Lun, but he was concerned that his two younger brothers, Xu Yan and Xu Pu, had not yet acquired any reputation. He therefore forced an unfair division of the family property, so that he gained the greater part; his brothers became known for their apparent generosity and were duly nominated for office. Xu Wu then revealed his true intentions and gave everything over to his brothers. Those who had formerly criticised him now joined in praise.

Xu Wu rose to become Steward of the Changle Palace, head of household for the Dowager. -HHS 76/66:2471; Ch'ü 72:299.

Xu Xi 徐翕. When Cao Cao was in Yan province in the early 190s he appointed Xu Xi and his colleague Mao Jun as local military officers. As Lü Bu came to take over the province in 194, Xu Xi and Mao Jun changed to support him, and when Cao Cao recaptured the territory in the following year they fled to take refuge with Zang Ba in Langye.

After the destruction of Lü Bu in 198, Zang Ba gave his allegiance to Cao Cao, and Cao Cao sent Liu Bei with a demand that he send him the heads of the two renegades. Zang Ba explained that it was a matter of honour that he should not behave in such a way to men who had come to him as refugees. He felt obliged to obey Cao Cao's orders, but in turn he asked Cao Cao to be magnanimous, as befitted a true national leader. So Cao Cao pardoned the two men, and appointed each of them as commandery administrators. -SGZ 8:537.

Xu Xi 鄱熙 see Chu Xi 鄱熙.

Xu Xian 徐憲; Pei. Son of Xu Xuan 宣, who tutored Wang Mang on the Book of Changes, Xu Xian maintained his father's teaching. -HHS 44/34:1500.

Xu Xian 徐咸 (d.106); Yuyang. In 106 Xu Xian was Officer of Merit to the Administrator Zhang Xian. When several hundred Xianbi horsemen came on a raiding party, Zhang Xian took commandery levies in pursuit beyond the borders. They fell into an ambush, the troops scattered, and as Zhang Xian sought to rally them he was struck by an enemy arrow. Seeing their master's difficulties, Xu Xian and his colleague Wei Fu went to his aid, but all three were killed.

When the regent Dowager Deng heard of this, she issued an edict to honour Xu Xian and his comrades, granted their families 100,000 cash, and ordered that one son of each officer be appointed a gentleman cadet. Though Zhang Xian had been chiefly responsible for the disaster, his family received 600,000 cash and two cadet appointments. -HHS 81/71:2672, 90/80:2986.

Xu Xiang 許相 [Gongbi 公弼] (d.189); Runan. Son of Xu Xun, Xu Xiang was an associate of the eunuchs and became a Palace Attendant. As a Household Counsellor in 185, he paid cash to become Excellency of Works and was enfeoffed. In 187 he was promoted Excellency over the Masses, but left office in the following year.

In 189 Xu Xiang was Minister Steward. When the eunuchs killed He Jin, they named him Intendant of Henan for their attempted new government, but he was killed by Yuan Shao and Yuan Wei. -HHS 8:355, 69/59:2251-52, 78/68:2528.

Xu Xiang 徐詳 [Ziming 子明]; Wu. From about 211 Xu Xiang, Hu Zong and Shi Yi served as Sun Quan's confidential clerks. In 217 Cao Cao left a substantial force in the region of the Huai to threaten Sun Quan's frontier on the Yangzi. Sun Quan sent Xu Xiang to negotiate a formal surrender, and this was agreed.

After Sun Quan became King of Wu he enfeoffed Xu Xiang and appointed him to a special office responsible for the armies' grain supplies, with rank as a lieutenant-general. When he took the imperial title in 230 he named Xu Xiang a Palace Attendant and raised his fief. -SGZ Wu 17:1413, 1419, 19:1434; deC 90:384.

Xu Xiang 徐相 see Xu Xu 徐栩.

Xu Xu 徐栩 also as Xu Xiang 相; Wu. When Xu Xu was a magistrate in Chenliu, a flock of locusts ravaged the commandery but spared his county. Soon afterwards the provincial Inspector came on tour and found fault with his government. Xu Xu left office, but as soon as he did the locusts arrived. The people implored the Inspector to bring Xu Xu back, and the moment he took up residence again the locusts went away.

Xu Xu was later Administrator of Changsha, where he lived very simply. He died in office, leaving nothing except a horse, which was sold to pay for his coffin. -XC 7:11b

Xu Xu 許栩 [Jique 季闕]; Yingchuan. In 163 Xu Xu was promoted from Minister of the Guards to Excellency over the Masses. He left that office in 166, but in 168 he was promoted from Minister Herald to Excellency of Works. He left that office in 169, but was again Excellency over the Masses in 171 and 172. -HHS 7:311-17, 8:327-30 and 333-34.

Xu Xu does not appear elsewhere in the histories, so he had evidently shown no previous distinction. It may be significant that he came from the same county as the eunuch Tang Heng, and his brief periods of tenure were at a time the court was influenced by the eunuchs. -deC 89:460-461.

Xu Xu 許續 [Sigong 嗣公]; Chen. Recommended Worthy and Good, Xu Xu became a Consultant and was then appointed magistrate of Wen in Henei. He evidently died in that office, and a memorial stele was set up in his homeland in 164. -SJJ 23:3a.

Xu Xuan 徐宣 [Qiaozhi 驕稚]; Donghai. Formerly the keeper of a county jail, about 15 Xu Xuan was leader of a group of bandits in a region which had suffered from flooding of the Yellow River for the previous ten years. He later brought his men to join Fan Chong in the Tai Shan massif and with other chieftains they formed the confederation known as the Red Eyebrows 赤眉.

The general account of this bandit horde is given sub Fan Chong. Xu Xuan and two other men from Donghai, Xie Lu and Yang Yin, evidently maintained an association: in 24 they led the column which went through Henan into Hongnong and the capital region, while Fan Chong and his fellow-countryman Pang An took a southern route through Nanyang.

Xu Xuan, who had held minor local office and had some knowledge of the Book of Changes, was one of the few leaders of the Red Eyebrows with any pretensions to literacy, and when they set up their nominal imperial regime in 25, he took title as Chancellor. There was in fact no proper court or government, and the bandits plundered Chang'an and its territory until they had exhausted it.

Early in 27, having at last abandoned the capital region, the Red Eyebrows were compelled to surrender to Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu. The leaders' lives were spared and they were ordered to settle in the neighbourhood of the new capital, Luoyang, where they could be kept under observation. Xu Xuan was later allowed to return to his native district, and he died at home. -HHS 11/1:478-86.

Xu Xuan 徐宣 [Xiujing 休敬] see sub Xu Feng 豐. -XTS 76B:3420.

Xu Xuan 徐宣; Xiapi. Son of an elder brother of the eunuch Xu Huang, about 165 Xu Xuan was magistrate of Xiapi county, where he ruled with the utmost ferocity. He asked to marry the daughter of the former official Li Gao, but Li Gao refused. Xu Xuan led official troops to his house, took the young woman, and shot arrows at her for sport until she died.

Though the county of Xiapi had been the capital of the commandery of that name, we are told that it was currently subject to the authority of Donghai. Huang Fu the Chancellor of Donghai heard of the affair; he arrested Xu Xuan and all his household and had them examined by torture regardless of their age. His officers objected, but Huang Fu replied that Xu Xuan was a public menace. He had Xu Xuan executed and displayed the corpse.

The eunuchs made formal complaint to Emperor Huan, and the case aroused great interest among the reform party at the capital. Despite arguments from the Grand Commandant Chen Fan, Huang Fu was sent to convict labour.

Such incidents are evidence of the general lack of order in the provinces at this time, and they intensified the divisions between the imperial court and the officials of the empire at large. -HHS 78/68:2521-22; deC 89:71-72.

Xu Xuan 徐宣 [Baojian 堅寶] (d.236); Guangling. During the 190s Xu Xuan moved south of the Yangzi to avoid the troubles of the civil war. After Sun Ce took power in that region about 195, he called Xu Xuan to take service with him, but Xu Xuan refused and returned north to his home country. There he became a senior member of the local staff of the Administrator Chen Deng. Xu Xuan was in constant disagreement with his close colleague Chen Jiao, but they were united in their loyalty to Chen Deng and to Cao Cao.

As rebellion broke out in the north of the commandery, home country of Xu Xuan, the local officials were driven away and took refuge with him. Xu Xuan evidently held local authority and had a fortified manor house, for he was able to protect the fugitives and arrange their escape. Cao Cao sent his officer Hu Zhi to deal with the disturbance, but Hu Zhi believed that his men were too few and would not advance. Xu Xuan went in to see him, urged him to action, and advised him of the lie of the land. So Hu Zhi went forward and put down the rebellion.

Cao Cao appointed Xu Xuan to his own staff, then sent him out as a county magistrate. He later became Administrator of Qi commandery, then returned to headquarters to take command of Cao Cao's personal guard. When Cao Cao went to deal with the warlords of the northwest in 211, he left his eldest son Cao Pi in nominal command at Ye city but named Xu Xuan as Protector of the Army on the Left, with authority over military forces there.

In the following year Xu Xuan accompanied the army on campaign to the south. He was appointed to Cao Cao's staff in his capacity as Imperial Chancellor, and then became Administrator of Wei: the capital of the commandery was at Ye city, and its territory had been expanded to serve as Cao Cao's fief.

When Cao Cao died at Luoyang in 220, some officials at Ye proposed that all regional officials should be replaced by men from Qiao and Pei, the home country of the Cao family. Xu Xuan argued strongly against such a plan, which would demoralise all the other loyal followers. The proposal was rejected, and Cao Pi described Xu Xuan as a true servant of the state.

Under Cao Pi, Xu Xuan was enfeoffed as a secondary marquis. He served as head of the Censorate, Director of Retainers and Cavalier Regular Attendant, and was appointed to the Secretariat. Under Cao Rui, he held high court and ministerial office, and while the emperor was on tour in 230 he was entrusted with all state affairs. He died a few years later, aged over seventy, and Cao Rui issued a special edict in his honour. -SGZ 22:645-46*.

Xu Xun 徐巡; Ji'nan. A student of Wei Hong and then of Du Lin, Xu Xun became a leading scholar of the Old Text Classic of History. Though Emperor Guangwu did not endorse the Old Text, Xu Xun became a Consultant. -HHS 27/17:936-37, 79/69B:2576.

Xu Xun 徐循. Prefect of Luoyang about 175, Xu Xun joined in the erection of a stele at the temple of the ancient and worthy hermits Boyi 伯夷 and Shuqi 叔齊 at Shouyang Mountain. -SJZ 5:3a Xu Xun 許訓 [Jishi 季師]; Runan. Son of Xu Jing 敬, he was probably a half-brother of Ying Feng [see sub the Lady Xu/Ying]. During the 140s he accompanied Ying Feng to the capital to present the annual report of the commandery. As he did so he made secret note of every person they met, and when they returned home he tested Ying Feng on his memory. Ying Feng recalled even the name of the non-Chinese slave Lu, owned by a village headman, and asked why Xu Xun appeared to have no record of him.

In 169 Xu Xun was promoted from Minister of Ceremonies to be Excellency over the Masses. He left that office in 171 and became Steward at the Yongle Palace, head of household to the Dowager Dong, natural mother of Emperor Ling. He was Excellency of Works in 174 and Grand Commandant for two months in 176. -HHS 8:330, 48/38:1609.

Xu Yan 許晏; Kuaiji. Younger brother of Xu Wu, Xu Yan benefited from his generous public relations. -HHS 76/66:2471.

Xu Yan 徐儁. Xu Yan was Protector of the Wuhuan in 92, when his predecessor Deng Xun died in the post of Protector of the Qiang. Deng Xun had been extremely popular, and many officers of Xu Yan's command sought leave to attend the mourning for him, so many that some garrison posts would be left unmanned. When the problem was reported to Xu Yan, he expressed his admiration at such display of respect for a man of honour and gave his permission. -HHS 16/6:612.

Xu Yan 徐衍; Xiapi. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates under Emperor Ling, Xu Yan was respected for his honesty and loyalty and for the fact that, unlike Zhang Rang and others, he did not contend for power. -HHS 78/68:2533.

Xu Yang 許楊/陽 [Weijun 偉君]; Runan. As a young man Xu Yang studied magical arts. He was a gentleman cadet at the end of Former Han and became Commandant of Jiuquan during the final regency of Wang Mang about 8 AD. As Wang Mang took the imperial title, Xu Yang left his post. He changed his name and practised as a shaman doctor, returning home and resuming his true identity only after the fall of Wang Mang in 23.

About 10 BC the Imperial Chancellor Zhai Fangjin 翟方進 had persuaded Emperor Cheng of Former Han to destroy the ancient Hongxi/Hongqi dam on the northern tributaries of the Huai. Emperor Guangwu's Administrator of Runan, Deng Chen, now reconsidered the policy and asked the opinion of Xu Yang, who was also known as an expert on water control. Xu Yang strongly urged the reconstruction, and recounted a dream in which the Emperor of Heaven told him of his anger that the dam had been destroyed. Deng Chen put Xu Yang in charge of the program, and he carried it out with a feel for the topography and natural drainage. The dam lasted many years, with great benefit to local agriculture.

In the course of the work, Xu Yang came under pressure from powerful local families which sought to embezzle the funds, and when he refused they slandered him to Deng Chen. Xu Yang was arrested, but as chains were applied they promptly fell off, and the doors of the prison opened to let him out. Suitably impressed, Deng Chen released Xu Yang that night, and a magical light accompanied him as he made his way home.

Xu Yang fell ill and died soon afterwards. Deng Chen had a temple constructed at the commandery capital, decorated with his portrait, and the people held sacrifices in memory of his work. -HHS 82/72A:2710-11*, XC 6:3b-4a; Ngo 76:83-85, DeWoskin 83:49-51. Xu Yang 許瑒; Runan. A cousin of Xu Jing, Xu Yang became Chancellor of Chen and joined Kong Zhuo in the alliance against Dong Zhuo in 190. -SGZ Shu 8: 963.

Xu Ye 徐業; Langye. A noted Confucian, Xu Ye became Administrator of Youfufeng under Emperor Guangwu. When the scholar Zhang Xuan was only an assistant magistrate, Xu Ye knew of his teaching and invited him to call. Vastly impressed, he treated Zhang Xuan with great respect and kept him in conversation all day. -HHS 79/69:1581.

Xu Yi 徐胤. A clerk in the offices of the Grand Commandant Song You in the early 90s, Xu Yi was a partisan of Dou Xian. He warned his rival Zhou Rong that he was in danger from members of the Dou faction, but Zhou Rong defied the threat. -HHS 45/35:1536.

Xu Yi 徐毅. A commandery Investigator in the late second century, Xu Yi was taken ill and the celebrated doctor Hua Tuo went to treat him. He told Hua Tuo that on the previous day the local medical officer Liu Zu had applied acupuncture to his stomach, but he now had a constant cough and could get no rest.

Acupuncture at that time was deep and direct, not the modern sub-cutaneous style. Hua Tuo told Xu Yi that the needle had been inserted in the wrong place and had hit the liver instead of the stomach. There was nothing to be done: he would steadily lose appetite and would be dead in five days. The result was just as he foretold. -SGZ 29:800.

Xu Yi 徐奕 [Jicai 季纜]; Langye. During the 190s Xu Yi took refuge south of the Yangzi, but avoided service with Sun Ce and returned home under a false name. Joining Cao Cao, he accompanied the north-western campaign of 211, stayed in the region to govern Chang'an and later became Inspector of Yong 雍 province.

In 213 Xu Yi entered the Secretariat of the duchy of Wei, but in 216 he was slandered by Ding Yi, who was in Cao Cao's favour but whom Xu Yi had refused to acknowledge. Huan Jie interceded for him and Xu Yi was transferred from the central government to be Administrator of Wei commandery. This was the territory surrounding the important city of Ye, and when Cao Cao went south against Sun Quan later that year he left the city under Xu Yi's command.

After the uprising of Wei Feng in 219, Xu Yi was recommended by Huan Jie as a man of loyalty and was made Commandant of the Capital to the kingdom of Wei. Leaving office because of illness, he was given court rank but died soon afterwards.

As Cao Pi came to the throne in 220, in recognition of his past loyal service a son or grandson of Xu Yi was granted the right to appointment as a gentleman cadet. -SGZ 12:377-78*, 2:59.

Xu Yi 徐揖. Administrator of Jiuquan about 210, Xu Yi attacked and slaughtered the local Huang clan. One member of the family, Huang Ang, escaped the massacre. He raised a thousand men, attacked Xu Yi's capital, and killed him. -SGZ 18:552, 547.

Xu Yin 徐胤 [Jideng 季登]; Yuzhang. Son of Xu Zhi, he was celebrated for his filial piety and care for his family. Though his father lived to be seventy-two, Xu Yin was evidently a child of his old age, for we are told that both his parents died when he was young.

Taking his father's ideals even further, Xu Yin became a hermit in the forest, growing his own food and reading the classics. He refused all offers of charity and rejected official appointment, and when the Administrator Hua Xin sought to meet him, he made excuses of ill health. During the disorders at the end of Han, even the most lawless men respected Xu Yin's fine conduct, and all agreed he should be left in peace. He died about 200. -HHS 53/43:1748; Vervoor 90:193.

Xu Ying 徐英 [Boji 伯濟]; Zuopingyi. Member of a leading local family, and a man of strong principles, Xu Ying became commandery Officer of Merit about 190, and on one occasion he whipped the junior officer Zhang Ji with thirty strokes. Xu Ying later became a magistrate in Hedong.

When Zhang Ji held authority in the region under Cao Cao, he sought always to recommend good men for the imperial service. He wanted to befriend and promote Xu Ying, but Xu Ying regarded his own family background as superior to that of Zhang Ji, and he recalled the earlier occasion when he had beaten him. He refused to respond to Zhang Ji's overtures, and so gained no advancement. Zhang Ji was admired for not holding the old grudge, while Xu Ying was criticised for his intransigence. -SGZ 15:477.

Xu Ying 許嬰 [Yuqing 虞卿]; Chen. Son of a Director of Retainers, Xu Ying joined the offices of the Excellencies and was later a magistrate in Lecheng. He was remembered with a stele in his home country, set up about 170. -SJZ 23:4b, LS 27:5a.

Xu [Yiqing] 徐異卿 see Xu Shao 徐少.

Xu Yong 許詠. During the 160s Xu Yong was an associate of the eunuchs Guan Ba and Su Kang. He became Minister of Ceremonies. -HHS 103/13:3283.

Xu Yong 許永. About 188 Xu Yong was an officer of the guards of the Feathered Forest. Emperor Ling dreamt that his predecessor Emperor Huan upbraided him for causing the deaths of Emperor Huan's brother Liu Kui the King of Bohai and of his own Empress Song. He asked Xu Yong about the meaning of the dream, and Xu Yong replied that both Liu Kui and the Lady Song had been innocent; their spirits would not be at rest until their tombs were changed and were treated with proper respect. This should be done to avoid misfortune.

Emperor Ling rejected this advice; he died soon afterwards. -HHS 10B:448-49; Goodrich 66.

HHSJJ 10B:445-46 jiaobu has a long discussion on the identity of this man, canvassing the possibility that he was the same person as the Minister of Ceremonies Xu Yong 許詠, or the Director of Retainers Xu Yong 許永 [also as Xu Bing 許冰 q.v.], both discussed in entries above. The problem is that neither a minister holding office in the 160s, nor a Director of Retainers of 178, is likely to have been reduced to the rank of a guards officer in 188. It appears, therefore, that this is a third person.

Xu Yong 許永 see also Xu Bing 許冰. -XC 8:5a-b.

Xu You 徐由 or Xu Bo 白. Administrator of Dunhuang in 131, Xu You persuaded the court not to approve the conquest of Jumi [present-day Yutian] by King Fangqian of Yutian [Khotan]. When Fangqian refused to hand back the territory, Xu You had King Chenpan of Shule [Kashgar] attack him. Yutian was defeated and Jumi regained its independence. -HHS 88/78:2915.

Xu You 許攸 [Ziyuan 子遠]; Nanyang. In 188 Xu You approved of Wang Fen's plot to kidnap and depose Emperor Ling, but he wisely avoided any direct involvement.

Xu You was a friend of both Cao Cao and Yuan Shao, but as civil war began in 190 he became an adviser to Yuan Shao. When Yuan Shao moved against Cao Cao in 199, Xu You recommended that he should attack Xu city rather than face Cao Cao at Guandu. His advice was rejected.

During the campaign a member of Xu You's family was arrested by Yuan Shao's officer Shen Pei in Ye city. Angry and resentful, Xu You went over to Cao Cao and told him of the approach of a major supply train. Cao Cao's attack upon the convoy destroyed Yuan Shao's army.

Later, however, Xu You addressed Cao Cao in public by his childhood name. Cao Cao smiled, but soon afterwards had him executed. -SGZ 12:373, HHS 74/64A:2400-01.

Xu You 許攸. A leader of the northwest in 219, he defied Cao Cao with insults. Cao Cao was going to attack him, but was persuaded by Du Xi to treat him generously. Xu You then submitted. -SGZ 23:667.

Xu Yu 許馥郁; Kuaiji. Grandson of Xu Jing, Xu Yu became Minister of Finance and then Minister of the Guards under Emperor Ling. In 181 he became Grand Commandant.

Early in 182 an edict was issued that common songs and rhymes among the people should be checked in order to discover which officials were being criticised for abusing their trust. Xu Yu's colleague Chen Dan tried to make an honest report, but Xu Yu and the other Excellency Zhang Ji were influenced by the palace eunuchs. Taking bribes to protect eunuch relatives, they instead reported unfavourably against twenty-six worthy officials from distant and frontier commanderies. When these men came to the capital to protest, however, Chen Dan supported their claims and they were all appointed as Consultants.

Xu Yu was reprimanded and left office towards the end of that year, but Chen Dan departed even sooner; he was later slandered by the eunuchs and died in prison. -HHS 8:345-47, 57/47:1851, 76/66:2472.

Xu Yu 許馡/郇, wife of: see the Lady Liu IX.

Xu Yuan 許遠; Nan. He Yang, the father of Xu Yuan's wife Shi, was frequently drunk. He would ask Xu Yuan for wine, and when he didn't provide any he was abusive and swore at him. Eventually Xu Yuan told his wife that if her father behaved like that again he would hit him. The Lady argued that since they were married, her father was the same as his own, and that if he hit He Yang she would hit his aunt.

Then Xu Yuan did beat He Yang, and his wife hit his aunt several times. The case came before the Excellency Bao Yu, who found that the Lady had no right to attack an innocent party; she was sentenced to death reduced by one degree. -FSTY 3f:107.

Xu Yuan 徐原; Wu. Xu Yuan moved to Kuaiji about 200, and became mortally ill some years later. Though he had never met Lu Mao, a leading man of Wu, he wrote to ask him to care for his family. Lu Mao took in Xu Yuan's children, and also erected a tomb for him. -SGZ Wu 12:1337.

Xu Yuan 徐元. In 204 Xu Yuan was an officer under Sun Yi, Administrator of Danyang. When Sun Yi was murdered and Gui Lan and Dai Yuan seized power, Sun Yi's widow the Lady Xu IV arranged for Xu Yuan and twenty other loyalists to kill the mutineers and retake control. -SGZ Wu 6:1214; deC 90:232-234.

Xu Yuanxian 徐元賢. At the end of the second century Xu Yuanxian and Xi Jing were refugees in the far south. They attempted to return to the north, but their way was blocked by rebel non-Chinese. Xu Yuanxian was old, and he died at this time. -SGZ Shu 8:964.

Xu Yue 徐岳. Probably a student of Liu Hong 洪, Xu Yue was the author of Shushu ji yi 數術記遺, "Memoir on some Traditions of Mathematical Art" which, despite its title, was largely concerned with magic and divination. In the early 220s he was among the sponsors of the Huangchu 黃初 [Yellow Beginning] calendar, named after the first reign period of the new dynasty. -JS 17:498; Needham 59:29-30 [as Hsü Yo].

Xu Yun 徐惲 (d.28). Palace Counsellor to Emperor Guangwu, Xu Yun killed Liu Du the Administrator of Linhuai without authority, presumably in a private feud. He was executed. -HHS 1A:37; Hulsewé 55:292.

Xu Zeng 徐曾; Xiapi. A brother of the eunuch favourite Xu Huang, Xu Zeng was Chancellor of Pingyuan in the 150s. -HHS 63/53:2283.

Xu Zhang 許章; Runan. In the mid-second century, Xu Zhang was a celebrated judge of character. -HHS 62/52:2050, SGZ 1:31 PC citing the Gaoshi zhuan of Huangfu Mi.

Xu Zhao 許昭 or Xu Shao 韶 see sub Xu Chang 許昌.

Xu Zhao 許昭; Wu. During the early 190s, Xu Zhao established himself as leader of an encampment in the south of Wu commandery near present-day Hangzhou. About 193, through the influence of the scholar Guo Tai, he took the former Administrator Sheng Xian under his protection.

In 197 Xu Zhao gave refuge to the defeated insurgent White Tiger Yan, and Sun Ce's commander Cheng Pu wanted to attack him. Sun Ce observed, however, that Xu Zhao was showing loyalty to his former master Sheng Xian, and to his old friend White Tiger Yan. He left him alone.

It appears likely that Xu Zhao and his group were destroyed by Sun Quan in 200: see sub White Tiger Yan. -SGZ Wu 1:1105, 1109; deC 96:267.

Xu Zhen 徐震. Though he held only probationary appointment as a member of the Suite of the Heir, Xu Zhen was known as an expert on calendrical studies and was evidently attached to the Bureau of Astronomy. In 85, as Jia Kui was preparing his report on the revised Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] calendar for Emperor Zhang, he consulted Xu Zhen. -HHS 92/2:3027.

Xu Zhen 徐真; Wu. A close companion of Sun Jian, Xu Zhen was given his younger sister in marriage. He became the father of Xu Kun. -SGZ Wu 5:1197.

Xu Zhen 徐真, wife of: see the Lady Sun 孫 II.

Xu Zhi 徐稚 [Ruzi 孺子] (97-168); Yuzhang. A man of humble family, Xu Zhi supported himself by farming, and would eat only what he had produced himself. When he was young, he studied under Huang Qiong in Jiangxia, acquired great knowledge of Chunqiu, the Book of Changes and the Classic of History, and became celebrated as a scholar of divination and apocrypha. Repeatedly recommended and invited to office, four times by the commandery, thrice by the province, and five times by ministers at the capital, he refused each time.

When Chen Fan came as Administrator to Yuzhang about 156, before he had even entered his office he insisted on paying respects to Xu Zhi. He invited him to become his Officer of Merit, but though Xu Zhi formally accepted, he attended only once and then returned home. Chen Fan kept a special couch for him, and hung it away when he left: cf. also sub Zhou Qiu.

Later, when Chen Fan was Director of the Imperial Secretariat under the new personal government of Emperor Huan, he recommended Xu Zhi as finest of all recluse scholars. A special carriage was sent to bring him to Luoyang, he was nominated as Knowing the Way and appointed Administrator of Taiyuan. He continued, however, to refuse office.

On the other hand, Xu Zhi felt a personal loyalty to those officials who had recommended him, and he went to pay his respects when they died, no matter how far he had to travel. He would roast a chicken, then wrap it in floss silk steeped in wine and dried in the sun. At the time of each funeral he went to the outer entrance of the tomb, soaked the cloth in water so the fragrance of the wine came out, and left his offering with a measure of rice and some white reeds spread underneath. He made no contact with other mourners.

As scholars gathered to pay their respects at the funeral of Huang Qiong in 164, Xu Zhi came with his offering to his former teacher and patron. At first no-one knew who he was, but then they realised it was Xu Zhi, and Mao Rong, who was known for his skill in conversation, was sent after him. He offered Xu Zhi food, which he accepted, but Xu Zhi would talk only about farming. There was feeling about this, but Guo Tai defended Xu Zhi's policy of withdrawal: he showed courtesy to Mao Rong by eating and speaking with him at all; anything more would be inappropriate.

Later, Xu Zhi became concerned about the risks Guo Tai ran through his opposition to the eunuch favourites of Emperor Huan, and he wrote to him that "When a great tree is about to fall, a single rope will not sustain it. Why scurry about? It is better to remain quiet and at ease." Guo Tai appreciated the warning and admired Xu Zhi as a master, but he could not follow his advice.

In 168, as Chen Fan returned to power at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Ling, the government once more sent gifts and a carriage to invite Xu Zhi to the capital, but he died at this time aged seventy-two. His tomb in Yuzhang was honoured by successive Administrators of the state of Wu and a stele was erected there. -HHS 53/43:1746-48*, HHJ 22:253-54, XC 3:1b-2b, FSTY 3:25; Vervoorn 90:181-183, deC 89:16, 44-45, Mather 76:530.

Xu Zhi 許芝. Skilled in calendrical matters and literary composition, Xu Zhi became Assistant to the Court Astronomer. In 220 he presented a memorial to Cao Pi, King of Wei, with lengthy justification based upon portents and the apocrypha, for Wei to take imperial power from Han.

As Court Astronomer of Wei, Xu Zhi was involved in the adoption of the Huangchu 黃初 [Yellow Beginning] calendar, named after the first reign period of the new dynasty. -SGZ 2:63-66, JS 17:499; Fang 52: 10, 38, Leban.78:328-329, Goodman 98:100-105.

Xu Zhong 徐忠. An officer of Sun Quan, in 215 Xu Zhong went with Lü Meng to seize the south of Jing province from Guan Yu and Liu Bei. -SGZ Wu 2: 1119.

Xu [Zisheng/Zicheng] 徐子盛; Langye A teacher of Chunqiu at the beginning of Later Han, he had hundreds of students. -HHS 27/17:944.

Xuan 宣, the Lady. First married to Deng Xiang, to whom she bore two daughters and a son, she was later widowed and then married Liang Ji/Gi, maternal uncle to the Lady Sun Shou, wife of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji [her new husband was not directly related to the General-in-Chief, and I use the variant transcription Gi to distinguish him].

Xuan and her children by Deng Xiang shared in the prosperity of the imperial relatives by marriage, and they took the surname Liang. In 153 or 154 the Lady Xuan's daughter Mengnü entered the imperial harem. First appointed as a Chosen Woman, lowest of the three ranks of imperial concubines, Mengnü attracted the attention and favours of the emperor, and was swiftly promoted to be an Honoured Lady.

Liang Gi died about 155, so Mengnü's connection with the Liang group was weakened, and when his sister the Empress Liang died in the autumn of 159, Liang Ji no longer had any direct connection to the imperial harem. As a means to regain his influence, he proposed to adopt Mengnü as his daughter and have her established as empress. Though he resented Liang Ji's dominance at court, Emperor Huan had no personal objection, but Xuan wanted to be recognised as imperial mother-in-law, and she and her immediate relatives realised they would lose a great deal if Mengnü came under Liang Ji's control. Xuan therefore refused her consent to the adoption.

Within a few days Liang Ji had sent a group of retainers to kill Xuan's son-in-law Bing Zun, who had encouraged her decision, and when Xuan still refused to change her mind he sent his men against her too. The Lady's mansion in the capital was next door to that of the eunuch Regular Attendant Yuan She, and like other great houses of the time it was surrounded by a high wall. As Liang Ji's men broke into Yuan She's compound seeking entry to Xuan's, Yuan She discovered them, beat on a drum and called out in warning. Xuan fled to the palace and told the emperor.

If Liang Ji could act so directly, Emperor Huan too was now in danger of his life. He had little time before Liang Ji re-established control within the harem, but he made good use of the moment: with a trusted group of eunuchs, he sent a mixed force of eunuchs and palace gentlemen to take their insignia from Liang Ji and Sun Shou, and order them into exile in the far south. Husband and wife committed suicide, and the Liang clan was destroyed.

When her daughter became Empress in September 159, Xuan was enfeoffed as Lady of Chang'an. All the family renounced their connection with the Liang, and the emperor insisted that his new consort adopt the surname Bo 薄 [also as 亳]. We are told that the Lady's cousin Deng Wanshi had been a childhood friend of Emperor Huan, so it may be assumed that her original name was well known: it is possible the Bo surname was chosen because it had been Xuan's maiden name before her marriage to Deng Xiang; more likely that it was a reminder of the good example of the modest Lady Bo 薄, mother of Emperor Wen of Former Han. In 161 senior officials argued that it was inappropriate for the empress to avoid the name of her true father, and an edict restored her surname to Deng.

Deng Xiang was granted posthumous title as a marquis and a chief general, while Xuan was granted the prosperous county of Kunyang in Yingchuan to provide her pension income. She died about 163, and her funeral was carried out with rituals appropriate to the mother of an emperor. Her estate was transferred as a marquisate to her grandson Deng Tong. -HHS 10B: 444-45.

Xuan 宣 (d.88); Xiongnu. Son of the former Southern Shanyu Han, he succeeded his cousin Chang in 85, taking the title Yituyulü di 伊屠於閼鞮 Shanyu. Soon after his accession, Xuan sent a thousand horsemen in a raid towards Zhuoye Mountain, in the Gurvan Sayhan Uul range in the south of Outer Mongolia, which the Northern Xiongnu were attempting to resettle. Encountering a king of the north, they took his head in battle and returned. At the same time, despite an imperial agreement with the Northern Shanyu, the southerners continued to attack traders coming from the north.

In the winter of that year Meng Yun the Administrator of Wuwei, who had negotiated the agreement in the previous year, reported the situation, adding that the northern court was threatening to resume raiding along the borders. After debate, Emperor Zhang ordered that those who had been seized by the southerners should be ransomed and restored to their own people, while blood-money would be paid for any who had been killed. The peace party was thus formally successful, but the supporters of the Southern Xiongnu had long-term advantage, for the ransoms meant their aggression was rewarded.

The Shanyu now sent the energetic king Shizi to harass the caravans, and as the Northern Xiongnu saw how the southerners were tolerated and given tacit support by the Han, thousands more came to the frontier to surrender each year. In 87, the Youliu Shanyu of the Northern Xiongnu was defeated and killed in an attack by the Xianbi from the east. The northern government fell into utter disorder, and almost sixty tribal groups, with a total population of 200,000 including eight thousand fighting men, came to surrender at the frontiers of Wuyuan, Shuofang and Beidi, north and west of the Ordos loop of the Yellow River.

In the following year the Shanyu Xuan died, and it was in the reign of his successor Tuntuhe that the Northern Xiongnu state received its death-blow. -HHS 89/79:2950-51.

Xuan 玄 [personal name, surname unknown]. Court Astronomer under Emperor Zhang, from 85 to 89 he and members of his staff tracked the course of the sun to check the new version of the recently-adopted Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] calendar. -HHS 92/2:3028.

Xuan Bao 宣褒; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Xuan Bao was a member of the group, and it is likely he was a kinsman of Xuan Jing below. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Xuan Biao 宣彪; Zuopingyi. Son of Xuan Bing, when his father died in 30 Emperor Guangwu made him a gentleman cadet. He became Administrator of Xuantu. -HHS 27/17:928.

Xuan Bing 宣秉 [Jugong 巨公] (d.30); Zuopingyi. As a young man at the end of Former Han, Xuan Bing was celebrated in the capital region for his high moral principles. Observing the weakness of Emperors Ai and Bing and the growing power of the Wang family, he took refuge in the mountains. The commandery and provincial governments invited him to office several times, but he refused on plea of ill health.

When the Gengshi Emperor took the throne in 23 Xuan Bing accepted appointment as a Palace Attendant, and at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Guangwu in 25 he became head of the Imperial Censorate. Emphasising their close relationship to the throne, he and the Director of Retainers and the Director of the Secretariat were given separate status at court, and they were known as the Three Special Seats 三獨坐. In 26 Xuan Bing was transferred to be Director of Retainers.

Widely respected for his detailed attention to proper conduct in government, Xuan Bing was a man of strict morality, who wore simple clothes and ate from earthenware dishes. On one occasion the emperor visited his office and residence, admired his manner of life and, remarking that he rivalled the two Gong of Chu 楚國二龔, awarded him silken screens and curtains. [On the hermit scholars and occasional officials Gong Sheng 龔勝 and Gong She 龔舍 in the last years of Former Han, see Vervorn 90:123, and QHX:119.]

In 28 Xuan Bing became Guardian of Honesty, a censorial post under the Excellency over the Masses. He used all his salary to support his kinsmen, shared his landed property with those who were orphaned or weak, and kept nothing for himself. When he died in office Emperor Guangwu mourned him, and he appointed his son Xuan Biao as a gentleman cadet. -HHS 27/17:927-28*; Vervorn 90:133, Bn 79:70, deC 81:68.

Xuan Bo 宣播 see Xuan Fan 宣璠.

Xuan Du 宣度; Dunhuang. A staff officer under a General-in-Chief [He Jin?], when his former teacher Zhang Wenming died Xuan Du bore a mourning staff in his honour. -FSTY 3:21; Ying Shao categorises this as Inappropriate 愆禮, arguing that such behaviour denigrates the true loyalty owed to one's own family, and is no more than an ostentatious attempt to curry political favour and advancement.

[Wenming 文明 is possibly a miswriting for Ranming 然明, the style of Zhang Huan, who retired as Minister of Ceremonies and died in 181. There was no General-in-Chief at this time, however, until He Jin was appointed in 184, so there is a problem with dates.]

Xuan Fan 宣璠 or Xuan Bo 播 (d.195). Director of Retainers under the regime of Dong Zhuo at Luoyang in 190, Xuan Fan was sent with orders for the dismissal of the Excellencies Yang Biao and Huang Wan.

As Minister of the Household in 191, Xuan Fan bore the Staff of Authority from the court at Chang'an to award Dong Zhuo, then at Luoyang, the exceptional title of Grand Master 太師.

Minister of Justice in 195, Xuan Fan accompanied the emperor in his flight from Chang'an, but was killed by Li Jue's troops during one of the battles along the road. -HHS 9:378, 54/44:1787, 72/62:2329.

Xuan Feng 宣豐; Kuaiji. About the middle of the second century Xuan Feng was Minister of the Guards. There was a vacancy for the position of an Excellency, and he was interested in the promotion, but withdrew in embarrassment when Chen Qian, influential head of the Censorate, observed that anyone ambitious for such a responsible post was in fact unworthy of it. -XC 7:12a-b.

Xuan Feng 宣豐 [Boying 伯應]; Runan. In the autumn of 166 Xuan Feng was promoted Minister of the Household, and three months later he was named Excellency of Works and was granted a fief. In the summer of 168, after the death of Emperor Huan and the accession of Emperor Ling under the regency of the Dou family, he left office. -HHS 7:318, 8:328.

In FSTY 2:19 Ying Shao describes how, when he was appointed as a magistrate in Pei in the mid-180s, he called upon Xuan Feng in his retirement; Nylan 83:407.

Xuan He 玆何, the Lady: see the Lady He Xuan 何玆. -HYGZ 10A:140.

Xuan He 玄賀 [Wenhe 文和 or Wenhong 文宏]; Ba. An assistant officer in his district about 65, Xuan He was brought to notice by the county magistrate Diwu Lun and rose to be Administrator of Jiujiang and of Pei. Praised for his honesty and excellent influence, he later became Minister of Finance. -HHS 41/31:1397; HYGZ 12:218, DGHJ 18:6a.

Xuan He 軒和 was a Counsellor Remonstrant. -FSTY 5f:133.

Xuan Jing 宣靖; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Xuan Jing was a member of the group, and it is likely he was a kinsman of Xuan Bao above. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210, ZF:16a [in SGZ 6:211 PC]; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Xuan Meng 宣孟; Shanyang. Xuan Meng was a friend of Feng Yan 馮衍, who wrote to him in the 50s about his family troubles. -HHS 28/18B:1004-05.

Xuan Zhong 宣仲. As magistrate of a county in Anding, it is said that Xuan Zhong was so popular among his people that they refused to allow him to leave his post. In a play upon his personal name, they styled themselves the "Rightful People" 宜民. -XC 8:5b.

Xubu 須卜 [personal name unknown] (d.189); Xiongnu. In 188 the Xiuchuge group and the Xiluo clan of the Southern Xiongnu combined to kill the Shanyu Qiangqu, who was a supporter of Han. Qiangqu's son Yufuluo inherited the title, but the same faction drove him from his territory and set up a marquis of the collateral Xubu clan to take his place.

When the pretender died in the following year, the dissidents did not replace him. They named an elderly king to hold the nominal headship of the state, without the authority which the title Shanyu might imply. -HHS 89/79:2965; deC 84:347.

Xuchen 須沈 see Xushen 須沈.

Xue 薛, the Lady; Shanyang. About 160 the Lady Xue became the wife of Shi Bi, who was at that time Administrator of Shanyang. The San-hu 三互 regulations provided that men could not hold office in a province to which they were connected by marriage, so Shi Bi sent in a report asking for transfer. He was appointed Chancellor of Pingyuan. -HHS 60/50B:1991; XC 4:1b.

Xue 薛 [personal name unknown] (d.163). A magistrate in Runan, he died in office and was commemorated with a stele. -LS 24:20b-21a, LX 1:2b-4b.

Xue 薛 [personal name unknown]. Formerly Inspector of Yi province and Chancellor of Zhongshan, he was honoured with a stele set up jointly with a former Minister of the Imperial Clan. Most of the inscription is lost. -LX 1:9b-10b, LS 26:9b.

Xue An 薛安. In the time of Emperor Huan, Xue An was an Assistant Officer under Ouyang Can, Inspector of Jing province. He was sent to investigate a charge of embezzlement in Kuaiji, but as the commandery officer Dai Jiu maintained his innocence despite ferocious torture, Xue An cleared the charges. -HHS 81/71:2691.

Xue Anqi 薛安期; Huaiyang. XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Anqi, son of Xue Biao, became an Imperial Clerk.

Xue Bao 薛包/苞 [Mengchang 孟嘗/常]; Runan. Xue Bao became known for the great piety with which he mourned his mother, defying his father and his step-mother, and later for the generosity and tolerance with which he treated his kinsmen.

In 121, as Emperor An came to authority after the death of the Dowager Deng, he sent an official carriage to bring Xue Bao to court. He was appointed a Palace Attendant, but claimed to be ill and remained in seclusion. He was eventually permitted to return home, accompanied by generous gifts, and he died aged over eighty.

As a "hermit at court," it was hoped that Xue Bao would add prestige to the regime, but in a letter to Huang Qiong in 127 Lu Gu observed that he had achieved little of note. -HHS 39/29:1294-95; Vervoorn 90:162.

Xue Biao 薛彪 [Fuguo 輔國]; Huaiyang. XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Biao, son of Xue Han, became a senior clerk in the offices of the Excellency over the Masses.

Xue Cheng 薛丞 [Junzhuo 君卓]; Nanyang. A clerk officer in the commandery office about 160, when his colleague Liu Zu refused to serve as charioteer in an official ceremony because it was beneath his dignity, Xue Cheng volunteered to take his place. The Administrator Gongsun Qing was grateful, and nominated him Filial and Incorrupt.

Xue Cheng later became a colonel of cavalry. -FSTY 5:39; Nylan 83:471-472.

Xue Dun 薛惇 [Zili 子禮]; Runan. Though he was chief assistant to the Administrator of Beihai, Xie Dun's family lived very poorly. When his wife complained, he destroyed a seating mat to show his contempt for such possessions. -XC 7:11b.

Xue Dun 薛敦; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Xue Dun was a member of the group, and it is likely that he was a kinsman of Xue Lan and Xue Yu below. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Xue Fang 薛方; Dong. A local clan leader in 184, he helped Cheng Yu defeat the rebel Wang Du. -SGZ 14:425.

Xue Gongzu 薛公祖. About 160, when Guo Tai visited Runan he stayed only briefly with Yuan Lang but several days with Huang Xian. Xue Gongzu asked him why, and Guo Tai explained that Yuan Lang's quality was pure, but ultimately superficial, while the capacity of Huang Xian was vast and unfathomable. -HHS 53/43:1744-45.

Xue Gu 薛固; Chen>Shanyang. XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Gu, son of Xue Shantu, became Administrator of Shanyang. As Xie Gu's great-grandson Lan is identified as a native of Shanyang, it seems the family shifted residence there about this time.

Xue Han 薛漢 [Gongzi 公子]; Huaiyang. Member of a scholarly family specialising in the Han school of the Classic of Poetry according to the New Text tradition, Xue Han followed his father from the time he was young, and acquired particular expertise in portents and in the apocryphal books. [XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Han's father was named Fangqiu 方丘, and the family claimed a long lineage.]

At first Xue Han taught privately, with several hundred students, but Emperor Guangwu was impressed by the apocryphal works, and early in his reign he made Xue Han an Academician at the University. Respected as the senior scholar of the Han tradition of Poetry, Xue Han compiled a commentary to that work, and he also undertook a new edition of the apocrypha after his colleague Yin Min refused the commission.

During the reign of Emperor Ming Xue Han served with distinction as Administrator of Qiansheng, but about 71 he was accused of involvement in the crimes of Liu Ying the King of Chu, and died in prison.

Among Xue Han's students, Du Fu, Tantai Jingbo and Han Bogao became most celebrated, but Lian Fan was the only one who came to care for his corpse after his disgrace and death. -HHS 79/69B:2573*; Tjan 49:15, Bn 79:188, 197.

Xue Hao 薛嶠. Court Architect in 124, Xue Hao joined the demonstration led by Lai Li to the palace Gate of the Vast Capital, protesting the dismissal of the Heir, Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun. When Emperor An sent a senior eunuch to claim that this was a matter between father and son, and ordering the protesters to withdraw, Xue Hao bowed to the authority of the edict and urged his colleagues to obey. Lai Li turned on him in anger and publicly criticised his lack of will, but the group gradually dispersed.

Though the demonstrators achieved no success, after Liu Bao was brought to the throne at the end of 125 many were rewarded with high office and gained the ren right to nominate their sons as cadet gentlemen. It is uncertain whether Xue Hao shared in this favour. -HHS 15/5:591-93.

Xue Hong 薛鴻. Administrator of Guanghan, Xue Hong had a portrait of the worthy widow Yin Jipei painted on a wall of his court. -HYGZ 10B:153.

Xue Hong 薛洪. Xue Hong was a senior staff officer under Zhang Yang the Administrator of Henei. When Zhang Yang was killed in 198, Xue Hong and Miao Shang formally took over his command, but the sometime bandit Sui Gu, who had been a military officer under Zhang Yang, held effective power in the region.

An old enemy of Cao Cao, in the following year Sui Gu left Xue Hong and Miao Shang to hold Shequan city while he went north to seek help from Yuan Shao. He was defeated and killed by Cao Cao's forces, however, and Cao Cao then besieged Shequan. Before any assault was launched, Cao Cao's agent Dong Zhao persuaded Xue Hong and Miao Shang to surrender, and both men were rewarded with enfeoffment.

In 213 Xue Hong was among the petitioners who urged Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei. -SGZ 1:17, 40, 14:438.

Xue [Jixiang] 薛季像; Hedong. Having served probation as a cadet gentleman, Xue Jixiang became a magistrate in Kuaiji, where sweet dew 甘露 fell in the courtyard of his residence. In 175 he was appointed Inspector of Yan province, and in the following year there was a further manifestation of this auspicious sign. His officers Feng Xun and Hua Cao set up a stele in his honour. -SJZ 8:22a.

Xue Lan 薛蘭 (d.195); Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Xue Lan was a senior member of the group, and it is likely that he was a kinsman of Xue Dun above and Xue Yu below. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription.

As Lü Bu seized Yan province from Cao Cao in 194, Li Feng and Xue Lan joined him. They captured Cao Cao's officer Li Qian, killing him when he refused to change sides, but in the following year they were attacked by Cao Cao. Lü Bu could not assist them, and both men were killed. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210, SGZ 18:533, 1:12; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Lan came from a long lineage; his father was Yan.

Xue Li 薛禮. Chancellor of Pengcheng driven out by Tao Qian, he joined Liu Yao south of the Yangzi. In 195 he was defeated by Sun Ce at Moling, present-day Nanjing, and he was later killed by Zhai Rong. -SGZ Wu 14:1185.

Xue Qin 薛勤 [Zigong 子恭 or Gongzu 恭祖]; Runan. A friend of Chen Fan's father, about 104 Xue Qin visited Chen Fan's grandfather, who was Administrator of Hedong. He spoke with the youthful Chen Fan and was deeply impressed.

In 130 the marquis Ban Shi murdered his adulterous wife, who was an aunt of Emperor Shun. The emperor had Ban Shi cut in two at the waist, and he wanted to exterminate the family by killing his brothers and sisters. Xue Qin, however, was able to arrange remission of the latter decision.

Xue Qin was Administrator of Shanyang when his wife died. He did not weep for her, but as he stood by her coffin he observed in classical Taoist style that this was the natural end of humankind, there was no reason to resent the fates, and he was only glad that they had shared forty years together and that she had lived to see her children grown up.

Ying Shao criticised Xue Qin's failure to show proper respect to the woman who was his equal 齊 and who was essential to the life of the family. -HHS 66/56:2159, HHSJJ 47/37:1704 Hui Dong quoting Runan xianxian zhuan, SGZ 21:597, FSTY 3:1b-2a [style as Gongzu 恭祖]; Nylan 83:24-25.

Xue Shantu 薛山塗; Chen. XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Shantu, son of Xue Xiu, was a local commandant.

Xue Ti 薛悌 [Xiaowei 孝娥]; Dong. In 194 Xue Ti was an Assistant Officer of Yan province for Cao Cao. As Lü Bu attacked the territory, Xue Ti joined Cheng Yu and Xun Yu in maintaining a defence.

As Cao Cao took over Ji province in 205, Xue Ti became a senior clerical officer there. His loyalty and honesty were recognised, and he was appointed Administrator of Taishan. Distinguished for his Confucian virtues, he ruled by example rather than by action. [Wei-Jin shiyu, quoted by SGZ 22:645 PC, says that Xue Ti was only twenty-two when he was appointed to Taishan. Given his active role more than ten years earlier in Yan province, this does not appear possible.]

In 215 Xue Ti was Protector of the Army in Jiujiang, responsible for discipline, when Sun Quan attacked the fortress city of Hefei. Cao Cao had sent instructions that he should not engage in combat, but Zhang Liao and other generals should oppose the enemy. The defence was completely successful.

Before this, while Xue Ti was Administrator in Taishan, Chen Jiao, Officer of Merit under Chen Deng the Administrator of Guangling, had been sent on several missions to Cao Cao, and as his way led past Taishan the two men met and became close friends. Xue Ti joked about their difference in rank, but forecast that Chen Jiao would match him. In later years Chen Jiao became Administrator of Wei commandery and Director of the Secretariat, and he was succeeded in each of those offices by Xue Ti.

Xue Ti was enfeoffed by Cao Pi. -SGZ 22:645, 14:427, 15:471, 17:518.

Xue [Wenbo] 薛文伯; Shanyang. XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Wenbo, son of Gu, became a county magistrate.

Xue Xia 薛夏 [Xuansheng 宣聲]; Hanyang. In Xue Xia's home commandery there were four leading families, the Jiang 姜, the Yan 閻, the Ren 任 and the Zhao 趙, which had long been dominant. Though Xue Xia was only a commoner, he was a talented man of wide learning and he refused to submit to their authority. The great families planned to deal with him, but he left about 200 and went east to the imperial capital where Cao Cao controlled the government.

Cao Cao had heard of Xue Xia's reputation, and received him with courtesy, but his enemies in Hanyang sent after him, and they had Xue Xia arrested and held in prison in Yingchuan. Cao Cao was at that time in Ji province, but when he heard of the affair he sent orders that Xue Xia be released, then appointed him to his own staff.

Xue Xia was appointed to the staff of the imperial library by Cao Pi, who admired his academic ability. He died in the 230s, leaving instructions to his son that he should never go back to Hanyang.

Yu Huan, compiler of Wei lue, identified Xue Xia as one of seven Confucian Exemplars 儒宗 who maintained the tradition of Han scholarship in time of disorder. -SGZ 13:421-22; Fang 52:170-171.

Xue Xiu 薛脩/修; Huaiyang. In 60 the Grand Commandant Zhao Xi was dismissed for having failed to fully investigate [坐考... 事不實] the affair of Xue Xiu, Chancellor of Zhongshan, which was the kingdom held by Emperor Ming's half-brother Liu Yan 焉. No further details are given of the incident. -HHS 26/16:915.

XTS 73B:2990 mentions Xue Xiu as the son of Xue Anqi and the father of Xue Shantu.

Xue Yan 薛衍; Shanyang. XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Yan, son of Wenbo, was Attendant Officer of Yan province.

Xue Yin 薛愔. A protégé of Yin Shi, brother-in-law of Emperor Guangwu, Xue Yin rose to high rank. -HHS 32/22:1130.

Xue Yong 薛永 [Maoshang 茂長]; Shanyang. XTS 73B:2990 says that Xue Yong, son of Lan, followed Liu Bei into Yi province and became Administrator of Shu commandery.

Xue Yu 薛郁; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Xue Yu was a member of the group, and it is likely that he was a kinsman of Xue Dun and Xue Lan above. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210, ZF:16a [in SGZ 6:211 PC]; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Xue Zhao 薛昭 (d.70). Intendant of Henan under Emperor Ming, he was sent to prison for some fault and died there. -HHS 2:116.

Xue Zhou 薛州 see Xuezhou 薛州.

Xue Zong 薛綜 [Jingwen 敬文] (d.243); Pei. Of an old local family, when he was a young man in the 190s Xue Zong went with kinsmen to take refuge in the far south, studying there under Liu Xi.

About 211, after Shi Xie acknowledged Sun Quan and his Inspector of Jiao province Bu Zhi, Xue Zong was called north and appointed a General of the Household. He was sent back to the south as Administrator of Hepu and then of Jiaozhi, and he took part in Lü Dai's conquest of Vietnam from 226.

Returning to the north, Xue Zong served as Supervisor of Internuncios and then joined the royal Secretariat. He was noted for his sensible advice and his skill in debate and composition; it is claimed that on one occasion he left an envoy from Shu-Han speechless with his riddling ability. He died as a Tutor to the Heir, leaving a large collection of poems, rhapsodies and scholarly works.

In 231, when Lü Dai was called back from Jiao province, Xue Zong had been concerned that Sun Quan might not appreciate the problems of the region. He presented a long memorial on the customs of the people and on its early and recent history, giving examples of Chinese officials who had behaved well or badly and met varying fortunes, and he argued strongly for encouraging the reform of sexual mores and the extension of education. -SGZ Wu 8:1250-54*; Miyakawa 60:31-32.

Xuezhou 薛州; Guangling. A pirate on the coast about 197, with thousands of followers, he was brought to surrender by the good government of Chen Deng. -SGZ 7:230.

Xun 郇 [personal name unknown] (d.36); Yanmen. As Guangwu's Administrator Guo Liang took over Yanmen commandery after the flight of the northern pretender Lu Fang, he executed this man, head of a powerful local family, together with his retainers. -HHS 22/12:777.

Xun 巡 [surname unknown]. Court Astronomer in 90, he endorsed the calendrical calculations of the private scholar Zong Gan. -HHS 92/2:3040.

Xun Cai 荀采 [Nüxun 女荀], the Lady; Yingchuan. A daughter of Xun Shuang, intelligent and accomplished, at the age of seventeen the Lady was married to Yin Yu of Nanyang and bore him a daughter two years later. Yin Yu died soon afterwards.

The Lady was still young and suitable for remarriage, but she strongly opposed the idea, and she kept away from her family because she was afraid they would try to force her into another union.

Her father Xun Shuang had promised her to Guo Yi, and in order to get her to come home he pretended to be ill. The Lady was morally obliged to answer his call, and though she carried a knife at her bosom to defend her virtue, her father had his slaves disarm her, then took her into his carriage. Still concerned at her attitude, he ordered she be closely guarded.

As she was taken to Guo Yi's house, the Lady pretended to accept her fate and to have given up the idea of being buried with her husband. Dressing herself in her richest finery, she invited Guo Yi to visit her, but then talked interminably. Guo Yi was too embarrassed to make any sexual advances, and eventually left. Then the Lady had her attendants prepare a bath, and when it was ready, she told them to leave her. Once she was alone she began to write with powder on the door of the bath: "Corpse to be returned to the Yin [family]." Before she had completed the character Yin, she thought she heard someone coming, so she hanged herself with the sash of her dress, and by the time her attendants reached her she was dead. [Another account says that the Lady actually entered the marriage bed, but got up in the middle of the night, arranged four lamps, composed herself and died.]

People of the time felt sorry for her, and Fan Ye included her biography in his Chapter on Worthy Women 列女傳. -HHS 84/74:2798-99; Ch'ü 72:309-310.

HHS 84/74 TC identifies the Guo Yi of this story with Guo Yi the son of Guo Jia (170-207), but that Guo Yi can only have been available for marriage about 210. Xun Shuang, on the other hand, was born in 128 and died in 190. Modern commentators therefore reject the identification with Guo Yi.

Chen Jingyun in HHSJJ 84/74:3083, moreover, noting that Xun Shuang was a scholar-official of high moral reputation, questions whether he would have behaved in such a way, and suggests that both identifications, of Guo Jia and of Xun Shuang, are wrong. [In Xun Shuang's memorial of 166 he describes the relationship between husband and wife as the basis of morality: see HHS 62/52:2052, JJ at 2229.]

Xun Can 荀粲 [Fengqing 奉倩]; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Yu 彧, he was an associate of He Yan. -SGZ 10:319-20.

Xun Chen 荀諝 see Xun Shen 荀諝.

Xun Fei 荀敷; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Shuang, Xun Fei became a colonel in the Northern Army. -JS 39:1152.

Xun Fu 荀敷 of Yingchuan was the eighth son of Xun Shu. -HHS 62/52:2049.

Xun Gun 荀緝 see Xun Kun 荀緝.

Xun Hong 荀闕 [Zhongmao 仲茂]; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Shen, Xun Hong became a member of the suite of Cao Pi. -SGZ 10:316.

Xun Ji 荀緝; Yingchuan. Son of Xun You, he died young. -SGZ 10:325.

Xun Jian 荀儉; Yingchuan. Eldest son of Xun Shu, he died young. -HHS 62/52:2058.

Xun Jing 荀靖 [Shici 叔慈]; Yingchuan. Third son of Xun Shu, he was admired for his learning and conduct. Though nominated as Extremely Filial, he lived in retirement.

When Xun Jing died in his fifties he was widely mourned by scholars, and twenty-eight men composed eulogies for him. The local magistrate Qiu Zhen and the Administrator Wang Huai both awarded him posthumous titles of honour. -HHS 62/52:2050; Mather 76:531.

Xun [Jubo] 荀巨伯. SSXY has the story that in the time of Emperor Huan Xun Jubo was visiting a sick friend when there was a raid by non-Chinese. Though his friend urged him to escape, Xun Jubo refused to leave. Impressed by this display of loyalty, the raiders abandoned their attack. -Mather 76:6.

Xun Kun 荀緄 [Boshu 伯儵]; Yingchuan. Second son of Xun Shu, Xun Kun became an Assistant Officer to Zhou Jing, Inspector of Yu province, and later joined the Imperial Secretariat. He was respected for his clear thinking and honesty, and at the time of the First Faction Incident in 166/167 he was commended to Emperor Huan by Dou Wu.

It is said that Xun Kun was awed by the power of the eunuchs, and married his infant son Yu 彧 to an adoptive daughter of Tang Heng. As Tang Heng died in 164, however, and Xun Yu was born only in 163, there is some doubt over the story.

Xun Kun became Chancellor of Ji'nan -HHS 69/59:2240, XC 3:12a, SGZ 10:309, SGZ Wu 9:1259.

Xun Liang 荀梁. In 29 Xun Liang was an officer under Geng Yan in the attack on the warlord Zhang Bu. He objected to Geng Yan's plan to attack the important city of Linzi in Qi, rather than the smaller Xi'an. Geng Yan explained that Xi'an was strongly garrisoned, while the capture of Linzi would force the enemy to withdraw; his strategy was successful. -HHS 19/9:710; Bn 59:148.

Xun Liang 郇涼 see Guo Liang 郭涼/涼: the variant surname appears in one version of HHS 22/12.

Xun Mu 尋穆. A member of the Imperial Secretariat during the 160s, Xun Mu was an associate of the palace eunuchs Guan Ba and Su Kang. -HHS 103/13:3283.

Xun Nen 荀恁 see Xun Ren 荀恁.

Xun Pei 荀裴 of Yingchuan was a son of Xun Shuang.

Xun Qi 荀祈 [Boqi 伯旗]; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Qu, he became Administrator of Jiyin. He discussed the castration penalty with Kong Rong. -SGZ 10:321.

Xun Qi 荀緄 see Xun Ji 荀緄.

Xun Qian 荀遷. In 121 Xun Qian was Minister Steward under Emperor An. -HHS 39/29:1308.

Xun Qu 荀衢 of Yingchuan was a son of Xun Tan. -SGZ 10:321.

Xun Ren 郇/荀恁 [Junda 君大]; Taiyuan. Son of the distinguished scholar Xun Yue 越, Xun Ren was known as a man of high moral principles. It is said that his household was wealthy, but Xun Ren gave all his property to his kinsmen after his father's death. HS 72:3095; QHX:629-630, however, says that it was Xun Yue who had given the property away, and that he then lived as a recluse. Han shu has the surname as 郇, Hou Han shu as 荀; the personal name is sometimes miswritten as 任.

During the last years of Wang Mang there were raids from the Xiongnu, but the barbarians knew of Xun Ren's qualities and spared the family estates. Xun Ren was invited to office by Emperor Guangwu but excused himself on grounds of ill health.

At the beginning of the reign of Emperor Ming, Zhongli Yi of the Imperial Secretariat put forward the names of Xun Ren and other gentlemen aged over seventy who had great influence for good in their local communities, and the emperor's brother Liu Cang summoned him to court. When Emperor Ming asked why he had come now, and not previously for his father, Xun Ren explained unkindly that Guangwu had been kind and virtuous, so he had been able to refuse; Liu Cang had used the force of law, so he was obliged to accept.

Xun Ren left office a few days later. He died at home. -HHS 53/43:1740-41, 39/29:1297; Vervorn 90:147.

Xun Shao 荀紹; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Yan, Xun Shao held ministerial office under Han/Wei. -SGZ 10:316.

Xun Shen 荀諶 [Youruo 攸若]; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Kun and an elder brother of Xun Yu, in 191 he persuaded Han Fu to yield his position in Ji province to Yuan Shao, and he became an adviser in the new regime. -HHS 74/64A:2377, SGZ 6:191, 195; deC 96:71-72.

Xun Shi 荀適; Yingchuan. Son of Xun You, he succeeded to his father's fief but died young. -SGZ 10:325.

Xun Shu 荀淑 [Jihe 季和] (83-149 or c.100-c.167?); Yingchuan. Claiming distant descent from the philosopher Xun Qing 荀卿, author of Xunzi 荀子, Xun Shu was a local magnate and one of the leaders of his commandery. He was known for scholarship, but had no interest in traditional detailed commentaries; many orthodox Confucianists disapproved of him.

Probably about 120, Xun Shu became a gentleman cadet and then served as a county magistrate in Jiujiang. He retired home, but was nonetheless celebrated as a worthy man comparable to Li Gu and Li Ying. About 150, as the regent Dowager Liang was concerned at a combination of eclipse and earthquakes, the ministers Du Qiao and Fang Zhi nominated Xun Shu as Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright; his political comments, however, were not well received by the General-in-Chief Liang Ji.

Xun Shu was re-appointed to a county magistracy in Runan. Zhang Fan says that he died in that office, while HHS 62/62 says that he retired but died soon afterwards at the age of sixty-seven. Ch'en 75:185 discusses the confusion over the dates of his birth and death: HHS 62/52 says that he died in 149, but since we are told that he was an associate of Li Ying and Chen Shi, the latter being born in 104, the later pair of approximate dates above appears more likely.

Xun Shu was a man of wide reputation, and despite his comparatively short service it is said that both the counties he had ruled set up shrines in his honour. All his eight sons were men of ability. They were known as the Eight Dragons 八龍, and the local magistrate Yuan Kang changed the name of the family village to Gaoyang 高陽, after a legendary sage who also had eight talented sons. -HHS 62/52:2049*, ZF:8b-9a, SGZ 10:307; Ch'en 75, Mather 76:532.

Xun Shuang 荀爽 or Xun Xu 諝 [Ciming 慈明] (128-190); Yingchuan. Sixth son of Xun Shu, Xun Shuang was distinguished for his learning when still young: by the age of twelve he had mastered the Analects and Chunqiu and was also knowledgeable on the Book of Changes. He studied under Chen Shi, was praised by the Excellencies Qiao Xuan and Du Qiao, and was received by Li Ying. He was considered the best of all his brothers.

Having earlier refused invitations to office, in 166 Xun Shuang was nominated as Extremely Filial. He became a gentleman cadet, but after presenting a substantial memorial against corruption at court and the numbers of the imperial harem, he left the court in the following year.

During the Great Proscription from 169 to 184 Xun Shuang lived in voluntary exile, first by the sea and later in the Han valley. As the Yellow Turban rebellion broke out in 184, and the Proscription was ended, Xun Shuang joined the staff of Wang Yun, and later received several invitations to office, notably from the Excellency Yuan Feng, who nominated him as Knowing the Way. He refused all of them, but when Yuan Feng died he carried out three years mourning for him.

In 188 an official carriage was sent to bring Xun Shuang to the capital as Palace Attendant and a senior staff officer to the General-in-Chief He Jin, but he left after He Jin's assassination in 189. Later that year he was called to office in the new regime of Dong Zhuo: though reluctant, he was forced to accept. First named Chancellor of Pingyuan, while still on the road he was named Minister of the Household, and three days later he became Excellency of Works.

Xun Shuang accompanied the court in the move from Luoyang to Chang'an. He supported Wang Yun's plans to overthrow Dong Zhuo, but died some time before the coup in 192.

Xun Shuang composed commentaries to the Changes, History, Poetry, Chunqiu and Ritual, together with Han yu 漢語, a collection of moral tales from the history of the dynasty, and an essay of advice for women 女誡 Nü jie. His total work, known as Xin shu 新書, amounted to over a hundred pian, but much was lost soon after his death. -HHS 62/52:2050-57*; Ch'en 75, Mather 76:532.

In his moral teachings, Xun Shuang emphasised personal and family values against the evils of government. For an anecdote of doubtful authenticity concerning him, see sub the Lady Xun Cai.

Xun Su 荀肅 of Yingchuan was the seventh son of Xun Shu. -HHS 62/52:2049.

Xun Sui 荀遂 of Yingchuan was the father of Xun Shu. -Ch'en 75:24.

Xun Tan 荀曇 [Yuanzhi 元智]; Yingchuan. Younger brother of Xun Yu 昱, Yuan Tan became Administrator of Guangling, where he firmly repressed groups of family retainers or partisans. A strong opponent of the eunuch party, Xun Tan was proscribed from office in 169. -HHS 62/52:2050.

Xun Tao 荀燾 of Yingchuan was the fourth son of Xun Shu. -HHS 62/52:2049.

Xun Wang 荀汪 of Yingchuan was the fifth son of Xun Shu. -HHS 62/52:2049.

Xun Wei 荀緯 [Gonggao 公高] (182-223); Henei. A man of literary ability, Xun Wei served on Cao Cao's staff and later joined the suite of the Heir Cao Pi. He was the author of a number of books, including Jizhou ji 冀州記, a local history of Ji province.

In 220, as Cao Pi took the imperial throne, he gave orders for the compilation of Huang lan 皇覽 "Imperial Readings," a comprehensive edition of the classics and their commentaries. With title as a Cavalier Regular Attendant and a colonel in the Northern Army, Xun Wei assisted his colleague and fellow-countryman Wang Xiang to work on this massive project in the Imperial library. In 222 he joined Wang Xiang in unsuccessful pleading for the disgraced Administrator of Nanyang, Yang Jun. -SGZ 21:604, 23:664.

Xun Wu 荀僕 [Shuqing 叔情]; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Yu 彧, he was a senior officer of the Censorate under Han/Wei, but died young. -SGZ 10:319.

Xun Xian 荀詵 miswritten for Xun Wang 荀汪, the son of Xun Shu. -SGZ 10:307.

Xun Xian 荀詵 [Manqing 曼情]; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Yu 彧, in 228 he assisted in redrafting the legal code of Wei. -SGZ 21:618.

Xun Xu 荀諝 see Xun Shuang 荀爽.

Xun Yan 荀衍 [Xiuruo 休若]; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Kun, in 205 he was a colonel guarding Ye while Cao Cao was in the north. Gao Gan sent men to surprise the city, but Xun Yan caught and killed them. He was enfeoffed. -SGZ 10:316.

Xun Yi 荀顛. In the time of Emperor Shun, Xun Yi addressed a memorial to the throne about rainfall. -ZF:17a.

Xun Yi 荀彝; Yingchuan. Son of Xun Tan, he became a local officer in Ji province, but died young. -SGZ 10:321.

Xun Yi 荀翊/翌 see Xun Yu 荀昱.

Xun Yi 荀顛 [Jingqing 景情] (d.274); Yingchuan. Son of Xun Yu 彧, he became an Excellency of the Jin dynasty. -SGZ 10:320-21, JS 39:1150-52.

Xun Yin 荀愔; Yingchuan. A cousin of Xun Qu and Xun Yi, Xun Yin held office at the court of Cao Cao. He debated the qualities of a sage with Kong Rong. -SGZ 10:321.

Xun You 荀攸 [Gongda 公達] (157-214); Yingchuan. Son of Xun Yi 彝, as a child Xun You showed intelligence and character. He was one of a group recruited to the imperial government by He Jin in 189, and became a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates.

In 192 Xun You joined the conspiracy of Zheng Tai and others against Dong Zhuo. The plot was discovered and Xun You was arrested, but he was released after Dong Zhuo was assassinated. He was restored to office, but left Chang'an and took refuge in Jing province.

As Cao Cao brought the imperial court to Xu city in 196, Xun Yu persuaded him to invite Xun You, and he appointed him Master of the Army, in which position he accompanied him on his campaigns. Xun You advised Cao Cao against Zhang Xiu and Lü Bu, and took an active role in the campaign at Guandu in 200: it was on his recommendation that Cao Cao attacked Yuan Shao's supply trains, while Xun You defended the base-camp against the enemy's assault. In 202 he followed the campaign against Yuan Shao's sons in Ji province, and when Yuan Tan sought help in 203 he urged Cao Cao to take advantage of the family quarrel. After the final victory he was rewarded with enfeoffment.

In 213 Xun You was among the senior officials who urged Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei, and he became Director of the Secretariat for the new state. He died while accompanying the campaign against Sun Quan. -SGZ 10:321-25*.

Xun Yu 荀昱 also as Xun Yi 翊/翌 [Botiao 伯條 mistakenly also as Boxiu 修 and Boyou 儵] (d.169); Yingchuan. Son of an elder brother of Xun Shu, Xun Yu became Chancellor of Pei and then Administrator of Yuexi. He was a strict ruler, putting down local groups of family retainers or partisans.

During the 160s Xun Yu was also known as a fierce opponent of the eunuchs at court. He was listed by the reformist students at the University as one of the Eight Heroes 俊, second rank of their ideal hierarchy, and the General-in-Chief Dou Wu appointed him to his staff. After Dou Wu and Chen Fan were destroyed in 169, Xun Yu was killed. -HHS 62/52:2050, 67/57:2187-88, 69/59:2242.

HHS 62/52 gives the style of Xun Yu as Botiao 伯條, but other texts suggest Boxiu 修 and Boyou 儵. Botiao is confirmed, however, by a seven-character couplet recorded as having been chanted by students at the Imperial University, where the rhyming line ends with 交 jiao.

Xun Yu 荀彧/郁 [Wenruo 文若] (163-212); Yingchuan. Xun Yu was a son of Xun Kun, who may have married him as an infant to a [presumably adoptive] daughter of the palace eunuch Tang Heng [see sub Xun Kun].

A handsome man, in 189 Xun Yu was nominated Filial and Incorrupt by the Administrator Yin Xiu. He took a clerical appointment at the capital and was then a county magistrate in Liang. As Dong Zhuo seized power at Luoyang, Xun Yu left his post and returned to Yingchuan, warning his kinsmen of the threat from civil war. Most were unwilling to leave their homes, but about this time Xun Yu was invited by Han Fu, Governor of Ji province, and he took his family with him; many of those who stayed behind were killed by Dong Zhuo's troops on a raid against the rebels of the east.

Soon after Xun Yu arrived in Ji province, Han Fu was compelled to cede his position to Yuan Shao. Yuan Shao treated Xun Yu well, but when Cao Cao took over Dong commandery in 191, Xun Yu saw him as the more likely victor in a civil war. In the following year, therefore, he went over to Cao Cao and became one of his chief advisers.

As Cao Cao attacked Tao Qian in 194, he left Xun Yu in charge of his headquarters at Juancheng city in Jiyin, and when Lü Bu invaded Yan province Xun Yu took command of the defence and held three cities for Cao Cao. There was a famine, and Cao Cao planned to renew the attack on Xu province, but Xun Yu urged him to concentrate his forces against Lü Bu. Cao Cao accepted his advice, gathered grain, and recovered Yan province.

In 196 Xun Yu encouraged Cao Cao to bring the emperor to Xu city, and he became Palace Attendant and Director of the nominal Imperial Secretariat at the puppet Han court. He remained one of Cao Cao's most influential and trusted counsellors, and the men he recommended for office, such as Zhong Yao, Guo Jia and Sima Yi, served Cao Cao with distinction. He advised him on strategy, notably that he should deal with Lü Bu in the southeast before turning against Yuan Shao in the north, and later, after the defeat of Yuan Shao, that he should complete the conquest of the north before turning south against Liu Biao.

During Yuan Shao's great offensive in 199 and 200, Xun Yu was in charge at Xu city, ensuring the loyalty or neutrality of leaders on the south and west, and encouraging Cao Cao to hold his defence line. Cao Cao later linked their families by marrying one of his daughters to Xun Yu's eldest son Xun Yun, and Xun Yu was awarded a marquisate. The fief was later advanced in value, but when it was proposed that he should rank with the Excellencies Xun Yu firmly refused.

In 212, however, when it was proposed that Cao Cao should be raised in fief as a Duke and receive the Nine Distinctions, Xun Yu argued that the time was not ripe. Cao Cao became resentful and suspicious. He ordered Xun Yu to join him on campaign to the south and kept him under close control. Humiliated and anxious for his family, as the army came to Shouchun in Jiujiang Xun Yu either died of illness or killed himself. He was mourned by both Cao Cao and by Emperor Xian, but in the following year Cao Cao took the ducal title and the Distinctions.

Xun Yu was honoured as a loyalist of Han, and there is question as to whether he gave his chief concern to Cao Cao or to the dying dynasty. Cao Cao, however, remained grateful for his services, and remarked that "The two Directors Xun [Xun Yu, Director of the Imperial Secretariat of Han and Xun You, Director of the Imperial Secretariat of Wei] grew ever more reliable in their judgement of men. As long as I live I shall never forget them." -HHS 70/60:2280-90*, SGZ 10:307-19*; Ch'en 75, Mather 76:533, deC 2002.

Xun Yue 荀悅 [Zhongyu 仲豫] (148-209); Yingchuan. Son of Xun Jian, Xun Yue may have been brought up by his uncle Xun Shuang. Though the family was locally influential, it is claimed that it was poor and had few books, so Xun Yue had difficulty gaining access; he was nonetheless able to grasp the meaning of a text at a single reading, and by the age of twelve he was particularly skilled in Chunqiu: this appears very much as a traditional cliché.

As the eunuchs dominated the court of Emperor Ling, Xun Yue pleaded illness and took no official position, but in 196, as Cao Cao brought the emperor to Yingchuan, Xun Yue was appointed to his staff. Soon afterwards he joined the imperial court in Xu city as a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates, and then became Custodian of the Private Library. Emperor Xian was interested in scholarship, and Xun Yue, with his cousin Xun Yu 彧 and the scholar Kong Rong, had permission to enter the private apartments day and night, where they held many academic discussions. On the other hand, though Xun Yue may have sought to advise the emperor on more general matters of politics, the court was firmly under Cao Cao's control and his ideas were ignored.

In 198 Xun Yue was commissioned to prepare a chronicle of Former Han, Hanji 漢紀. He had evidently been working privately on the project for some time, for he completed and presented the work in 200. As well as being a study of history, Hanji sought to demonstrate how imperial virtue had accumulated over generations: it is implied that the process had continued under Later Han, and that one should look to a restoration of the dynasty rather than usurpation by a subject, no matter how powerful.

In 205, moreover, Xun Yue presented Shenjian 申監 "Extended Reflections" to the throne. Among other matters, he discussed the importance of teaching and custom, of the balance of rewards and punishment, and the requirements of social justice – including a proposal for the restoration of the legendary but egalitarian "well-field system" and opposing the excesses of local magnates. More generally, Xun Yue sought to defend the tradition of Han, even in its time of weakness, by arguing that ideals of government should be preserved and striven for, despite the reality of human failing, and as he urged the need to rely upon good officials rather than the vagaries of individual rulers, he may almost be seen as approaching a view of constitutional monarchy: certainly he endorsed the ideal of the ruler who sits with hands folded, concentrating upon etiquette and propriety, while the world is at peace around him. Ch'en Ch'i-yün describes Xun Yue as "Confucianist in his approach to scholarship, Taoist in his relativistic view of reality, and Legalist in his pragmatic approach towards politics."

Xun Yue compiled a number of other works of philosophy and scholarship, amounting to several dozen pian. He died in 209 at the age of sixty-two. -HHS 62/52:2058-63*; Ch'en 75 & 80, Vervoorn 90: 166-167, deC 96:344-346, MBeck 86:354, Nishijima 86:558, Ch'en 86:804-806.

Xun Yun 荀惲 [Changqing 長倩]; Yingchuan. Eldest son of Xun Yu 彧, he inherited his father's fief and was married to the Princess of Anyang, a daughter of Cao Cao. He was a close friend of Cao Zhi, and Cao Pi resented this. He died comparatively young. -SGZ 10: 319.

Xun Zhi 荀緝 see Xun Ji 荀緝.

Xuqu 虛渠; Xiongnu. In the autumn of 88 the Southern Shanyu Tuntuhe sent a memorial to the Han court with an account of turmoil among the Northern Xiongnu and a proposal for a campaign to take over the steppe. In doing so, he cited information from Xuqu, a northern chieftain who had lately surrendered, telling how the Shanyu had withdrawn to the west and a group of nobles had set up one of his half-brothers as a rival claimant to the throne. -HHS 89/79:2952.

Xushen 須沈; Xiongnu. A king of the Xiongnu, in 116 Xushen accompanied the Southern Shanyu Tan in an expedition led by the General on the Liao Deng Zun against the rebel Qiang in Beidi. They raided the headquarters to the Qiang leader Lianchang, at Lingzhou by the Yellow River, and killed eight hundred of his people. Xushen was rewarded with the Chinese title Marquis Who Destroys the Qiang 破羌侯, with a gold seal and purple ribbon, while his followers received gold and silk. -HHS 87/77:2890. [We are told that the same title was also awarded to the Qiang tribesman Yugui.]

Xusheng 許聖; non-Chinese. In the time of Emperor He Xusheng and other tribesmen in Nan commandery by the Yangzi Gorges became angry at the unfairness of the local taxation and levies, and in 101 they formed self-defence groups to defy the government.

In the following year a provincial army of ten thousand men was sent against the dissidents, but they withdrew into the wilderness and defied attacks. Then a number of different forces were sent by different routes from each direction, including downstream from Ba commandery. As the tribespeople scattered and fled, a number of their leaders were killed.

Following up this success, the Han forces defeated Xusheng and forced his submission, and he and his followers were then shifted east into Jiangxia. -HHS 86/76:2841.

Xuzi 須訾; Xiongnu. A member of the Huyan 呼衍 clan, in 88 Xuzi was a king of the Southern Xiongnu. In the autumn of that year the Southern Shanyu Tuntuhe sent a memorial to the Han court with an account of turmoil among the Northern Xiongnu. He put forward plans for a joint campaign with China to take over the steppe, and proposed that Xuzi and the prince Shizi should lead a force of ten thousand horsemen out from the Shuofang frontier on the northwest of the Ordos.

In 89 Shizi and Xuzi did indeed accompany the western expedition led by Yan Pan, Geng Kui and Geng Tan which defeated the Northern Shanyu at Jiluo Mountain. -HHS 89/79:2952, 23/13:814.

Y

Yan 嚴 [surname] see also Zhuang 莊. The original surname Zhuang was replaced by Yan in many texts in order to avoid taboo on the adopted personal name of Emperor Ming of Later Han: e.g. Bn 59:112 note.

Yan 閼, Empress of Emperor An, see the Lady Yan Ji.

Yan 閼, the Lady I; Henan. Younger sister of Yan Zhang, she was an Honoured Lady of Emperor Ming. -HHS 10B:435.

Yan 閼, the Lady II; Henan. Younger sister of Yan Zhang, she was an Honoured Lady of Emperor Ming.

-HHS 10B:435.

Yan 嬖, the Lady, mother of Emperor Huan, see the Lady Yan Ming.

Yan Bao 延褒; Yingchuan. A local bandit, Yan Bao joined the general uprising in 32 and captured the county city held by Feng Fang.

When the imperial army arrived soon afterwards, Yan Bao and his fellows cut off their hair to surrender and returned the property they had stolen. Through the good offices of Feng Fang, even the leaders of the insurgents received a pardon, and Yan Bao encouraged others to submit. -HHS 33/23:1148.

Yan Bao 嚴苞 [Wentong 文通]; Zuopingyi. About 200 Yan Bao was a member of the provincial staff under the Director of Retainers Zhong Yao. Among all the local officers only he and Jia Hong were scholars of any quality.

Having acted as magistrate in two counties, Yan Bao was appointed to the staff of the imperial library under Cao Pi, whom he impressed with his literary work. He was then sent to the west as an Administrator, but died in office about 225. -SGZ 13:421.

Yan Ben 嚴本 see Zhuang Ben 莊本.

Yan Bin 燕邠 [Yuanhou 元侯] (d.188); Hanzhong. In 188 Yan Bin was an Assistant Officer under Que Jian the Inspector of Yi province. With two other officers, Dong Fu and Zhang Yin, he was on detachment in Guanghan when Que Jian was killed by Yellow Turbans at his headquarters nearby.

Yan Bin sought to persuade his colleagues that they should turn against the enemy, but Dong Fu and Zhang Yin refused. Claiming there was no purpose to life if his master was dead, Yan Bin faced the rebels and was killed. When Liu Yan arrived as Governor he executed Dong Fu and Zhang Yin for their cowardice, and recognised Yan Bin's heroism by having his portrait displayed on the walls of all local schools. -HYGZ 10C:170.

Yan Cai 嚴才. About 216 Yan Cai raised an unsuccessful mutiny against Cao Cao in Ye city. -SGZ 11:347.

Yan Cen 延岑 [Shuya 叔牙] (d.36); Nanyang. His family background is unknown, but Yan Cen became one of the most energetic soldiers of fortune in the troubled period at the beginning of Later Han.

In 23, as the Han rose against Wang Mang, Yan Cen rebelled in his homeland, the southwest of Nanyang. Defeated by Liu Jia, general of Liu Xuan the Gengshi Emperor, he paid homage to the new regime, but soon rebelled again, probably in the following year, and moved west into Hanzhong.

In 26, as the Gengshi regime at Chang'an collapsed, Yan Cen attacked Liu Jia, now King of Hanzhong. Capturing his capital Nanzheng, he took the local title for himself and pursued Liu Jia into Wudu. Li Bao, an officer of the Gengshi Emperor, came to Liu Jia's aid, and Yan Cen was defeated; he retreated north across the Qin Ling mountains into Tianshui. In the mean time Gongsun Shu's general Hou Dan had occupied Hanzhong, and when Liu Jia and Liu Bao tried to regain the territory they were driven back into Wudu.

Yan Cen took the opportunity to return, but Liu Jia attacked him again, and he was forced to flee once more over the mountains to the north, this time into Youfufeng. Liu Jia pursued him and defeated him again, but then went north of the Wei. Taking occasion to plunder the tomb of Emperor Wu at Maoling, west of Chang'an, Yan Cen then camped in Duling, to the southeast.

At the end of autumn, the Red Eyebrows leader Pang/Feng An brought a large army against him. Defeated in a first engagement, Yan Cen recovered to rout the enemy [cf. sub Li Bao], then also occupied Lantian county, where he drove off an attack from Guangwu's general Deng Yu.

Hoping to establish a position in the region, he named various subordinates as provincial governors and commandery administrators, but after the Red Eyebrows surrendered to Emperor Guangwu early in 27 the imperial general Feng Yi was sent to establish authority in the territory of Chang'an. In the summer Yan Cen combined with local warlords to attack him, but they were heavily defeated and he was compelled to abandon his territory.

Retiring southeast into Hongnong, Yan Cen was again defeated by Feng Yi's subordinate generals Deng Ye and Yu Kuang, and was driven back across the Wu pass into his home commandery of Nanyang. He gained initial success, capturing a number of cities and receiving support from the local leader Du Hong, but was then defeated by the imperial general Geng Yan.

Yan Cen now joined Zhang Cheng, an officer of the local warlord Qin Feng, but their army was destroyed by Guangwu's general Zhu You. Zhang Cheng was killed and Yan Cen's treasury was taken, but he escaped again to join Qin Feng and married one of his daughters. The imperial armies next turned against Qin Feng, driving him back to his home district in Nan commandery, where he was besieged until his surrender in the summer of 29. Yan Cen and others maintained resistance outside, but early in 28 Yan Cen was defeated by a major army under Deng Yu, and his remnant following was eliminated.

Yan Cen and a fellow-fugitive, Tian Rong, now joined Gongsun Shu, who welcomed them with title as kings. He appointed Yan Cen as his Grand Marshal and gave him his younger sister in marriage: this was at least the second time Yan Cen had allied himself to a patron in this way.

In 30 Gongsun Shu's adviser Jing Han suggested that Yan Cen should be sent to seize the upper Wei valley while Tian Rong moved down the Yangzi. Yan Cen pressed for the opportunity, but Gongsun Shu remained on the defensive. In the summer, Guangwu's general Li Tong was sent with a strong force west from Nanyang into Hanzhong. Gongsun Shu sent Yan Cen to bring assistance, but he was defeated, and although the Han troops withdrew they established military colonies to hold the line.

In the summer of 35, as Guangwu's forces advanced through the Yangzi Gorges and up the Fu River, Yan Cen and other generals were sent to guard Guanghan commandery. The Han general Zang Gong, however, destroyed their army in battle outside Guanghan city and Yan Cen fled to Gongsun Shu's capital Chengdu. In the winter the city came under siege from Guangwu's forces commanded by Zang Gong and Wu Han. In counter-attack, Yan Cen led a force of five thousand volunteers, all of whom had been rewarded in advance from the treasury: he attracted Wu Han's attention, then sent a separate force to take the enemy in the rear. Wu Han was defeated and almost drowned.

Despite such success, and the difficulties faced by the Han troops in obtaining supplies, the siege was maintained for over a month until, on 24 December, Gongsun Shu and Yan Cen embarked on a sortie. Yan Cen defeated Zang Gong in three engagements, but after half a day's fighting his men were hungry and exhausted. At the critical moment Wu Han sent in a reserve troop and Gongsun Shu's men were thrown into confusion. Gongsun Shu himself was wounded and died that night.

On 25 December Yan Cen surrendered the city. Two days later, as Wu Han let his soldiers loose to loot, Yan Cen and his family were killed. -HHS 13/3: 537, 14/4:568, 17/7:647, 22/12:770, HYGZ 5:68-69 [miswritten as Yan Ya 牙]; Bn 59:117, 154-157, 183-196.

Yan Chang 閻暢 (d.117); Henan. Son of Yan Zhang, Yan Chang was the father of the Lady Yan Yi, who became an Honoured Lady to Emperor An in 114. When she was made empress in 115 Yan Chang was appointed as a Palace Attendant, and in 116 he became a colonel of the Northern Army and received a marquissate. He died in the following year. -HHS 10B: 435.

Yan Chang 閻暢, wife of: see the Lady Yan Zong 閻宗.

Yan Cheng 晏稱. When Yan Cheng was Director of Retainers in 100, the Grand Commandant Zhang Pu remarked to him privately that many of the clerks in the offices of the Excellencies were unworthy of their positions [非其人 fei qiren]. Yan Cheng proposed a check on the suitability of these officers.

Zhang Pu was annoyed that his casual comment had been taken up with such energy, and he upbraided Yan Cheng in a public gathering. When Yan Cheng answered back, Zhang Pu took the matter to court, and each accused the other of abusive and improper conduct. Since Zhang Pu was a most senior minister, and had been Tutor to his predecessor, Emperor He called a full court assembly to resolve the affair.

The Excellency Lü Gai argued that just because he was a minister of such experience, Zhang Pu should have known better than to attack the Director of Retainers, who was fully entitled to carry out an investigation: he had set a poor example to the empire. Zhang Pu was dismissed. -HHS 45/35, 1533.

Yan Chong 嚴崇 or Yan Song 嵩. In 84 the officer of the pitchpipes 律 Yin Tong reported that no-one in the office knew how to tune the sacred instruments. The former officer Yan Chong was said to have known the art and to have taught it to his son Xuan, and Emperor Zhang agreed that Yan Xuan should be given a trial. His method proved quite unsuccessful and he was dismissed. -HHS 91/1:3015.

Yan Chong 閻崇 (d.125?); Henan? Presumably a kinsman of the Dowager Yan and her brothers, in 125 Yan Chong commanded the palace guards Rapid as Tigers. As Sun Cheng led a coup against the Yan, Yan Xian called Yan Chong and the colonel Feng Shi to support them against the insurgents. Feng Shi, however, deserted and went back to his own camp, and Yan Xian and Yan Chong took no further action. On the following day Yan Xian was arrested and killed, and it is likely Yan Chong shared his fate. -HHS 78/68: 2515.

Yan Chun 嚴春 see Zhuang Chun 莊春.

Yan Du 延篤 [Shujian 叔堅 or Shugu 叔固] (d.167); Nanyang. When he was young, Yan Du studied Zuo zhuan, amazing his teacher by the speed with which he learnt the text; it is probable that his teacher was Jia Bosheng q.v. He then went to Ma Rong for a broad education in the classics, the histories and the various schools of philosophy. Skilled in composing detailed commentaries, he acquired a reputation at the capital.

Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Yan Du became chancellor of a county marquisate in Shanyang, where he set up a stele and altar for worship at the tomb of the local worthy Gong Sui 龔遂 of Former Han, and established an estate for his descendants. He resigned in mourning for the death of one of his teachers, and though he was invited to office by the General-in-Chief Liang Ji and all the Excellencies at the capital, he refused them.

About 151 Yan Du received an imperial summons as a scholar and was appointed a Consultant. Through the 150s and early 160s he worked on the third instalment of the official history of Later Han, later known as Dongguan Hanji. The compilation included annals, tables of marquises and officials, accounts of the Xiongnu and the Qiang, with biographies of empresses and other individuals, including the eunuchs Cai Lun and Sun Cheng.

Appointed a Palace Attendant, Yan Du was frequently consulted by Emperor Huan on questions of government, and his advice was always based upon morality and good precedent. He was later Administrator of Zuopingyi and then Intendant of Jingzhao, ruling humanely in each place, making special use of local elders and encouraging agriculture. All about Chang'an admired his rule, and it is said that population increased through migration to this pleasant country, while a local proverb joined him and his predecessor Bian Feng with the finest rulers of the region in the time of Former Han.

Later Yan Du killed a retainer of Liang Ji who was seeking to obtain a monopoly of cow bezoar 牛黃 or gall-stones, a medicine required for one of the emperor's children. Senior officials launched an investigation, but Yan Du appears to have been protected from Liang Ji's full revenge by his connection to the eunuch Zhou Fu: in 156 he was a leading sponsor of Zhou Fu's funerary stele. Yan Du nonetheless left office on grounds of ill health and returned to his former teaching of classical morality. An essay on the relationship of humanity [仁 ren] and filial piety [孝 xiao] is preserved in HHS 64/54, and a letter to his friend Li Wende, who had argued that he should be recalled to office, extols the pleasures of private life and scholarship.

In 166 Yan Du was implicated in the First Faction Incident and was proscribed from office. When he died at home in 167, the people of his district painted his portrait upon the wall of the local temple to Qu Yuan 屈原, the legendary loyal but unappreciated servant of ancient Chu 楚.

Yan Du compiled twenty pian of discussions, commentaries and text criticisms to classics and histories, including the Shi ji 史記 of Sima Qian 司馬遷, together with poetry, essays, inscriptions and other compositions. Much of his work on the classics was summarised and edited by Fu Qian and other scholars. -HHS 64/54:2103-08*, XC 4:1a-b, YSS:15b; Bn 54: 11.

Yan Fa 嚴發; Pengcheng? A private gentleman 處士, after his death Yan Fa was honoured by his friends with a stele. -LX 1:11a-12b.

Yan Fang 顏方. A man of letters in the late first century, Yan Fang was praised by Wang Chong. -Lun heng 37; Forke 07:469.

Yan Fei 顏斐 [Wenlin 文林]; Jibei. Initially a member of the suite of Cao Pi as Heir, when Cao Pi took the imperial title Yan Fei was named a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates, and then Administrator of Jingzhao, where he restored good and popular government after the turmoil of civil war. Chen Shou names him as one of the creditable Administrators of Wei -SGZ 16:513-14.

Yan Feng 嚴豐 [Menghou 孟侯]; Yuzhang. In 23 the Administrator Jia Meng was proposing to join the rebels against Wang Mang. As he led out his army, however, a swarm of bees settled on the yoke of his chariot. His Registrar Yan Feng warned him that this was an ill omen, and though Jia Meng paid no attention, he was indeed killed. -XC 6:9b. Neither HS nor HHS have any mention of this man, while the details of Jia Meng's activities for or against Wang Mang are confused: see QHX:185.

Yan Fu 閻符; Runan. Yan Fu was an Assistant Officer of Yu province when Han Yan the Administrator of Danyang was arrested and sent to the capital. Unperturbed by such disgrace, Yan Fu went to welcome Han Yan, released his bonds and provided him with official lodgings. -FSTY 7:56.

Yan Fu 閻甫 see Yan Pu 閻圃.

Yan Gan 嚴幹 [Gongzhong 公仲]; Zuopingyi. Yan Gan and his colleague Li Yi came from the east of the commandery, which had never produced an imperial official, but although they were commoners they were generous men of high ability. At the end of the 180s, when both were about twenty years old, Yan Gan was known to the leading clans of the region for his skill in swordsmanship, while Li Yi was celebrated for his knowledge of ritual.

Many people fled when the capital region fell into disorder in the 190s, but Yan Gan and Li Yi stayed behind and maintained a self-defence group for those who were otherwise lost. In the late 190s, as a measure of control was restored under Cao Cao's Director of Retainers Zhong Yao, the western part of the commandery was separated from the east to form Zuoneishi 左内史; the east remained as Zuopingyi. Li Yi's home country was in the west, but because of their close association he stayed with Yan Gan in the east, and both men rose to high local rank in the new commandery.

Yan Gan was invited to join the provincial administration, but did not go. He was then recommended Filial and Incorrupt by the commandery and appointed a magistrate in Hedong. He left that office on account of ill health, but was again recommended and became an officer of the guard at the imperial palace, then a Consultant, before returning to his home province as an adviser.

In 202 Yan Gan took part in the campaign which destroyed Guo Yuan in Henei, and in 206 he advised on the strategy which brought the capture and death of the Yuan clan commander Gao Gan. He was awarded a district marquisate and appointed Administrator of Hongnong. When the warlord Ma Chao turned fully against Cao Cao in 211, Hongnong contained a number of his sympathisers and was troublesome and unruly, but after Ma Chao had finally been driven off in 214, Yan Gan was transferred further west again to be Administrator of Hanyang.

Despite his background as a fighting man, Yan Gan was fond of learning and he was particularly enthusiastic about the Gongyang commentary of Chunqiu. His sometime patron Zhong Yao, former Director of Retainers, was a devotee of Zuo zhuan, and the two men would often amuse themselves with fierce academic debate.

Yan Gan was later named Inspector of Yi province, but after 219 it was impossible to establish an administration there, so the title was rather a statement of intent than of reality. Yan Gan held offices at the capital under Cao Pi and Cao Rui, and he died about 230. -SGZ 23:674-75.

Yan Gang 嚴綱 (d.192). Named as Inspector of Ji province by Gongsun Zan in 191, Yan Gang was killed in battle by Yuan Shao's general Qu Yi at the Jie Bridge on the Qing River in the following year. -SGZ 8:242, 6:193.

Yan Gao 炎高. Known as the Master of Huali 華里先生, Yan Gao was a teacher of the diviner Yang Tong, and foretold his importance as an interpreter of the apocrypha. -HYGZ 10B, 143.

Yan Gu 延固; Nanyang. In the mid-second century Yan Gu was sponsored by the palace eunuch Cao Teng and became well known. -HHS 78/68:2419.

Yan Guang 嚴光 or Yan Zun 遵 [Ziling 子陵]. HHS 83/73 says that Yang Guang came from Kuaiji, but the biography of Ren Yan in HHS 76/66:2461 mentions Yan Ziling as a scholar from the north who had avoided the civil war and taken refuge in the southeast, and another source suggests that he came from Xinye in Nanyang [HHSJJ 83/73:2042-43].

We are told that Yan Guang was already well known when he was young, that he studied at Chang'an at the same time as Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, and that the two men were friends. [This seems slightly more likely if they came from the same commandery: see above.] Yan Guang was evidently older than Liu Xiu: it is said that he died at the age of eighty while Liu Xiu was still alive, and Liu Xiu was just over sixty at the time of his death; it appears, moreover, that Yan Guang refused appointment in the time of Wang Mang: see sub Yan Zun 2 below.

As Guangwu took the imperial title in 25, Yan Guang changed his name and went into hiding, but the new ruler circulated his description, and in 30 the government of Qi identified him. After repeated invitations, he came to court in an official carriage, but despite appeals from his old friend Hou Ba, now an Excellency, and even from the emperor himself, he refused to involve himself in government.

Guangwu accepted Yan Guang's refusal and continued to treat him in most friendly fashion. On one occasion he invited him to the palace to talk of old times, and as the two men fell asleep Yan Guang rested his feet on the emperor's stomach. Next day the Court Astronomer reported that a "guest star" 客星 [a nova: Needham 59:425] had appeared in the imperial constellation, but Guangwu laughed and explained that it was just his old friend making himself comfortable. Vervoorn suggests the incident may be true, demonstrating the ruler's informality with close companions, and the disapproval of more staid officialdom. On the other hand, surviving astronomical records of the period have no mention of a "guest star" in that area of the sky until the eve of Guangwu's death many years later.

Refusing an advisory position at court, Yan Guang retired to farm in the south of Kuaiji near present-day Hangzhou, where people named the place after him. Though invited again to court in 41, he would not go, and he died at home at the age of eighty. Guangwu mourned him and made a donation to his memory. - HHS 83/73:2763-64*, Anon.:1a-b; Vervoorn 90:146-147, 283, 285.

Yan Guang 燕廣. A member of staff of Liu Ying, King of Chu, in 70 Yan Guang reported that the king and his associates Wang Ping and Yan Zhong had cast omens and were planning rebellion. Liu Ying was deposed and killed himself, and there followed a long persecution of the alleged conspirators, with many deaths. Yan Guang was enfeoffed as Marquis Who Cuts Off Treason 折姦侯. - HHS 42/32:1428-29; Bn 67:33.

Yan Hao 嚴皓. A Han agent in Further Jushi in 153, he quarrelled with King Aluoduo, who then attacked the Chinese military colony. - HHS 88/78:2931.

Yan Ji 閻姬, the Lady (d.126); Henan: Empress of Emperor An. A daughter of Yan Chang, the Lady was brought into the harem of Emperor An by common selection in 114. Talented and good-looking, she attracted the emperor's favour, was appointed an Honoured Lady, and became empress in 115. Jealously defending her position, Yan Yi poisoned her rival the Lady Li, who had given birth to the imperial son Liu Bao in that same year.

Following the death of the regent Dowager Deng in 121, Emperor An established his personal rule, but he was strongly influenced by the Lady Yan, while her brothers, led by Yan Xian, acquired ministerial and military posts, commanded the palace guards, and dominated the court and the government. In 124, moreover, aided by the eunuchs Jiang Jing and Fan Feng, Yan Yi slandered Liu Bao, and towards the end of the year he was dismissed as Heir. The decision was fiercely opposed by the Minister Coachman Lai Li and many of the senior officials, who came in a noted demonstration before the gates of the palace.

Six months later, in the spring of 125, as Emperor An was on tour to the south he was taken seriously ill. The cortège returned in haste, for the Yan group were anxious to forestall any move at the capital to restore Liu Bao to the succession, and when the emperor did die in Nanyang, his demise was concealed until the invalid's carriage had reached the palace. Only then was it announced that the ruler was dead.

Liu Bao was held under close guard, and within a few days the Empress, now Dowager, and her brother Yan Xian had selected the five-year-old Liu Yi, Marquis of Beixiang, as emperor. Brought to the throne on 18 May, it was planned that he should serve as a minority ruler for several years while the Dowager held power as regent. Within a short time the Yan group had eliminated their short-term allies the General-in-Chief Geng Bao, the eunuchs Fan Feng and others, and the Lady Wang Sheng. About the same time, however, soon after his accession, the young emperor became ill, and it was increasingly clear that the problem was serious. Though it had been proposed that other members of the imperial lineage be brought to the capital for a further selection, nothing had been done before Liu Yi died on 10 December 125.

The Lady Yan and her brothers attempted once more to keep the death a secret and carry out a new appointment, but despite their official positions they had no decisive authority over the military forces at the capital. On 14 December a group of eunuchs led by Sun Cheng swore an oath against the Yan, and on 16 December they carried out a successful coup. Liu Bao, Emperor Shun, was placed upon the throne, while the Yan brothers and their eunuch allies were killed. The Dowager was placed under arrest and the remnants of her family were exiled to the far south.

It was proposed at court that the Dowager should be removed to separate quarters and no longer received in audience, on grounds that she had failed to show proper respect for her role as titular mother to the Heir. The Excellency Li He was persuaded by his officer Zhou Ju that the proposal showed comparable lack of respect for the responsibility of son to mother, and it could affect the moral authority of the new ruler if the Lady Yan suffered ill-treatment. Early in 126, therefore, the Lady was received in audience.

The Dowager died a few weeks later, aged about twenty-five. Her death was convenient, and perhaps not due to natural causes. She was buried at the tomb of Emperor An, and two days later Zhu Chang, former Steward of her household, was promoted to be an Excellency. -HHS 10B:435-38*.

Yan [Jihou] 嚴季后. A scholar and teacher, Yan Jihou became Commandant of a frontier county in Shu commandery. -HYGZ 10A:137.

Yan Jing 閻景 (d.125); Henan. Second son of Yan Chang, Yan Jing was a brother of Yan Yi the Empress of Emperor An. As the emperor took up personal rule following the death of the Dowager Deng in 121, he and his brothers Xian, Yao and Yan received high ministerial and military appointments, commanded palace guards, and dominated the court and the government. After the death of Emperor An in 125 and the overthrow of Geng Bao and his associates, Yan Jing became Minister of the Guards in the regency government of his sister, now Dowager.

After the Little Emperor Liu Yi died in the winter of that year, on 16 December the eunuch Sun Cheng led a coup to restore Emperor An's son Liu Bao to the succession. Yan Jing sought to bring palace guards against the insurgents, but Sun Cheng had already placed Liu Bao upon the throne, and he had the Imperial Secretariat issue orders for Yan Jing's arrest. Yan Jing was captured by guards of the Feathered Forest under the command of Guo Zhen, and he was executed that night at the Ministry of Justice. -HHS 10B:436-437, 78/68:2515-16.

Yan Jiu 嚴就; Ba. Local officers under the Administrator Dan Wang, in 154 Yan Jiu and his colleagues persuaded him to send in a report describing the difficulty of maintaining control over the great area of the commandery, and recommending that the territory be divided into smaller commanderies. The court did not agree. -HYGZ 1:5.

Yan Ju 嚴舉 (d.164); Ba. Adopted son of Yan Zishun, Yan Ju showed him the greatest filial respect, and when he died the local officials and people set up a stele in his honour. -LX 11:4b-8a.

Yan Jun 嚴峻. A eunuch at court in the early third century, he went to the adept Zuo Ce to seek instruction in the arts of long life, but was told that they were not suitable for a person of his condition. -SGZ 29:805.

Yan Jun 嚴峻 [Mancai 曼才]; Pengcheng. An honest, generous man, Yan Jun studied the Poetry, the History and Ritual, and he was also expert in the Shuowen 說文 dictionary of Xu Shen. During the civil war at the end of Han he went as a refugee south of the Yangzi, where he became a close friend of Zhuge Jin and Bu Zhi. Recommended to Sun Quan by his minister Zhang Zhao, Yan Jun became a senior member of his staff.

When Lu Su died in 216, Sun Quan wanted Yan Jun to succeed him in command in the west. Yan Jun pleaded with tears that he had no training in military matters, and confirmed his demurrals by repeatedly falling off his horse. He was admired for his honesty and modesty.

Minister of the Guards under the kingdom and empire of Wu, Yan Jun went on embassy to Shu-Han and greatly impressed Zhuge Liang. He was briefly dismissed, but then became Director of the Secretariat. He died at the age of seventy-eight, leaving a discussion of the Book of Filial Piety and Chaoshui lun 潮水論, an account of the Chao River in south China. He also collaborated with Pei Xuan and Zhang Cheng in studying the works of Confucius' disciple Jilu 季路 [i.e. Zhong You 仲由 or Zilu 子路] and the ancient minister Guanzi 管子 [Guan Zhong 管仲]. -SGZ Wu 8:1247-48*.

Yan Jun 顏俊 (d.219); Wuwei. Local warlord and self-styled general, in 219 Yan Jun sent his wife and children as hostages to Cao Cao and asked for support. On the advice of Zhang Ji, Cao Cao refused to intervene in that distant region. Later that year, Yan Jun was killed by his rival He Luan of Zhangye. -SGZ 15:474.

Yan Kuang 嚴匡. In 218 Yan Kuang was Cao Cao's Commissioner for Agriculture, responsible for colonies about Xu city. Jin Yi and others attempted to seize the city, but the officer in charge Wang Bi managed to escape. Next morning Yan Kuang brought reinforcements from the troops of his command and the rebels were defeated. -SGZ 1:50.

Yan Lian 顏連; Wu. About 212 a no-man's land was developing along the Yangzi between armies of Cao Cao and the southern warlord Sun Quan. Sun Yu, Administrator of Danyang for Sun Quan, sent his officers Yan Lian and Rao Zhu to act as magistrates of counties in Lujiang, just north of the Yangzi, and they attracted many people from the territory that Cao Cao controlled. -SGZ Wu 6:1206.

Yan Liang 顏良 (d.200). A leading general of Yuan Shao, brave but impetuous, in 200 Yan Liang was sent against Dong commandery. Cao Cao's general Guan Yu cut Yan Liang down under his own standard and his army withdrew. -SGZ 1:19, 6:195, SGZ Shu 6:939.

Yan Lin 嚴麟; Lujiang. As a junior officer in the commandery, Yan Lin was sent to Luoyang to present official condolences after the death of Emperor Zhang in 88. On the road, Yan Lin's horse died and he could not move his carriage. The former official Lian Fan passed by, and he ordered one of his mounted escort to get down from his horse and give it to Yan Lin, then went on his way without giving his name.

When Yan Lin had presented his message he wanted to return the horse but did not know whose it was. On making enquiries, he was told that Lian Fan was the sort of man who would act in such a way, and he had been in the area at the time. Yan Lin had also heard of Lian Fan's reputation, and he duly returned the horse. -HHS 31/21:1104.

Yan Long 閻龔 miswriting for Yan Pan 閻磐.

Yan Ming 婁明, the Lady (d.152); Hejian. A concubine of Liu Yi, Marquis of Liwu, the Lady was the mother of Liu Zhi, future Emperor Huan, of his twin brother Liu Kui, and probably of a third son, Liu Shi qq.v. After Liu Zhi was brought to the imperial throne in 146 the Lady was named an Honoured Lady to attend the tomb of her late consort.

In 150, after the death of the Dowager Liang Na, the Lady Yan was given title as an empress and was brought to Luoyang, where her apartments in the Northern Palace were styled the Yongle Palace 永樂宮 [Palace of Perpetual Joy]. Her household establishment was comparable to that of a Dowager and she received a pension from the tax revenues of nine counties in Julu, but she played no part in politics.

When the Lady died in 152 her body was returned to Hejian for burial with Liu Yi. The extravagant cortège was escorted by high officials, while kings, marquises and senior officials of the region were ordered to attend the last rites. -HHS 7:287-88, 297, 10B:441-42*.

Yan Mu 閻穆; Henan? XTS 73B:2986 says that Yan Mu, son of Yang Xian, went to Baxi commandery to take refuge from the troubles at the end of Han. His son Yan Fu 甫 was later granted a district fief by Cao Cao.

Yan Pu 圃 of Baxi was indeed granted a fief by Cao Cao. There may have been a family connection, but it is most unlikely that Yan Mu was a son of Yan Xian, who was killed in 125.

Yan Pan 閻盤/槃/磐. In 89 Yan Pan was a senior colonel under Dou Xian in the great campaign against the Northern Xiongnu. When the army had gathered at Zhuoye Mountain in the south of Outer Mongolia, Yan Pan was sent northwest with Geng Kui and Geng Tan, accompanied by two troops of Southern Xiongnu cavalry under by the chieftain Shizi, to make a direct attack on the Northern Shanyu. They caught and defeated the Shanyu at Jiluo Mountain and pursued him into the Altai ranges. It is said that they captured a million head of horses, cattle, sheep and camels, killed over thirteen thousand of the enemy, and induced the surrender of two hundred thousand people from eighty-one tribal groups of the Northern Xiongnu.

In the following year Yan Pan was sent to occupy the region of Yiwu, by present-day Hami. -HHS 4:170 [as Yan Pan 磐, sometimes miswritten as Yan Long 龔], 23/13:814 [盤], 88/78:2910 [槃]; deC 84:271.

Yan Pi 嚴丕 see Zhuang Ben 莊本.

Yan Ping 嚴平 see Zhuang Ben 莊本.

Yan Pu/Fu 閻圃/甫; Ba/Baxi [see also sub Yan Mu above]. In 201 Yan Pu was a senior staff officer to Zhang Lu in Hanzhong. Some people claimed to have found a jade seal, and wanted Zhang Lu to proclaim himself as a king, but Yan Pu persuaded him not to.

In 215, Cao Cao attacked Hanzhong and Zhang Lu planned to surrender. Yan Pu urged him to ally himself with the local non-Chinese people and maintain a show of resistance as a means to obtain better terms. When Zhang Lu did submit, Cao Cao enfeoffed Yan Pu and gave him the Lady Dong V, former consort of Ma Chao, as wife.

In 221 Yan Pu was a signatory to the stele commemorating the accession of Cao Pi to the imperial throne. He died about 230. -SGZ 8:264-65; Goodman 98:197, 215.

Yan Pu 閻圃, wife of: see the Lady Dong 董 V.

Yan Qiao 燕喬 (d.162). Internuncio in charge of the Camp at Liyang in Wei commandery, in 162 Yan Qiao was found guilty of corruption and suffered public execution. -HHS 102/12:3256; MBeck 90.

Yan Rou 閻柔; Guangyang. As a child Yan Rou lived among the Xianbi and the Wuhuan, and he was known and trusted by them. In 195 he brought Xianbi to support the rising of Xianyu Fu against Gongsun Zan. Styling himself Major of the Wuhuan, he raised a mixed force of Chinese and non-Chinese to defeat and kill Zou Dan, Gongsun Zan's Administrator of Yuyang.

Yan Rou and his followers then joined Xianyu Fu for the main attack on Gongsun Zan, and at some stage he killed the Protector of the Wuhuan, Xing Ju, and took his title. Yuan Shao confirmed Yan Rou in that office and for several years he kept the northern frontier at peace.

In 205, after Cao Cao had driven the Yuan from Ji province, Yan Rou brought a number of Xianbi and Wuhuan to submit to him. Cao Cao confirmed him once more as Protector. In 207 Yan Rou took part in the campaign which destroyed the Wuhuan and the Yuan brothers at White Wolf Mountain. He was enfeoffed as a secondary marquis.

A personal favourite of Cao Cao and a close friend of Cao Pi, Yan Rou was later raised in fief, and as General on the Liao he was actively engaged in diplomacy on the frontier. He was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele set up after Cao Pi took the imperial title. -HHS 90/80:2984, SGZ 8:243, 247, 30:835-39, LS 19:3a; Goodman 98:196.

Yan Shou 嚴授 (d.106); Yuyang. In 106 Yan Shou was a local officer in the commandery responsible for military affairs. When several hundred Xianbi horsemen came on a raiding party, the Administrator Zhang Xian took levies in pursuit beyond the borders, and as he saw the fires of the raiders' camp he prepared to attack. Yan Shou urged him to wait in case there was a trap, but Zhang Xian ordered an immediate assault. There was indeed an ambush; Yan Shou killed several of the enemy but was wounded a dozen times and died in the front line, while Zhang Xian and two senior clerks were also killed.

When the regent Dowager Deng heard of this, she issued an edict in honour of Yan Shou and his comrades, granted their families 100,000 cash, and had one of each officer's sons appointed as a gentleman cadet. The family of Zhang Xian, who had been responsible for the disaster, received 600,000 cash and two cadet appointments. -HHS 81/71:2672, 90/80:2986.

Yan Shuo 嚴說 see sub Cen Peng and also Yan You

II.

Yan Song 嚴嵩 see Yan Chong 嚴崇.

Yan Wei 嚴鮪 see Liu Wei 劉鮪. -HHS 43/33:1462.

Yan Wen 閻溫 [Bojian 伯儉] (d.213); Hanyang. Attendant Officer to the Inspector of Liang province, Wei Kang, in 213 Yan Wen was appointed brevet magistrate of Shanggui county, just east of Ji city, which was the capital of the commandery and the province.

When Ma Chao attacked Hanyang, he came to Shanggui, and though Yan Wen sought to hold his position he was betrayed by his men and compelled to escape to Ji. As Ma Chao's army surrounded the city, Wei Kang sent Yan Wen to seek help from Xiahou Yuan, Cao Cao's commander in the region. Yan Wen, however, was captured, and Ma Chao then brought him before the walls and ordered him to tell the defenders there was no help to be found. Yan Wen, however, called out that relief was just three days away; the people of the city were suitably encouraged.

Ma Chao pressed him to change his statement, but Yan Wen refused: "When a man serves a lord, he can die for him only once. I am old, and you want me to say something dishonourable?" Ma Chao killed him. -SGZ 18:550.*

Yan, White Tiger 嚴白虎; Wu. During the 190s this local leader commanded a band in the hills. When Sun Ce came to Wu commandery in 195 he gave refuge to the deposed Administrator Xu Gong, but though they threatened his flank as he advanced against Kuaiji in the following year, Sun Ce paid them no concern. On his return, he dealt with various gentry opponents but did not attend to White Tiger Yan.

In 197 Cao Cao's agent Chen Yu encouraged Yan to stir up trouble. Sun Ce sent Lü Fan to drive Chen Yu away and went himself to attack Yan. Defeating his forces, he drove him to refuge with Xu Zhao in the south of the commandery. He did not press the matter further, and Yan probably died soon afterwards.

In 200 remnants of White Tiger Yan's band joined Xu Gong in alliance with Cao Cao's agent Chen Deng to cause trouble behind Sun Ce as he moved against Huang Zu in the west. Sun Ce came back and defeated them, killing Xu Gong, but was then ambushed and killed by his late enemy's followers. -SGZ Wu 1:1104, 1111.

Yan Wu 嚴武 [Ziqing 子卿]; Pengcheng. A nephew of Yan Jun, Yan Wu was an expert in "surrounding chess" 圍棊 [Japanese Go] and an ornament to the court of Sun Quan. -SGZ Wu 18:1425-26.

Yan Xian 閻憲 [Mengdu 孟度]; Hanzhong. As a county magistrate in Guanghan about 100, Yan Xian governed with great courtesy, and so influenced his citizens that none would offend him. When a man found a valuable roll of cloth he returned it to its owner, remarking that he could not let Yan Xian down.

Yan Xian was later transferred to Shu commandery, and thousands of people came weeping to see him off. -HYZ 10C:168.

Yan Xian 閻顯 (d.125); Henan. Son of Yan Chang and elder brother of Yan Yi, Empress of Emperor An, Yan Xian succeeded to his father's marquisate in 117. When Emperor An established his personal rule following the death of the Dowager Deng in 121, Yan Xian became Bearer of the Mace, while his brothers Jing, Yao and Yan also received high appointments. In 122 Yan Xian was granted a new and more valuable fief, while his young sons and nephews received junior appointments as Gentlemen at the Yellow Gates.

In 124 Yan Xian took Geng Bao's place as Minister Herald, and the Yan group and its allies now dominated the court and commanded the palace guards. When Emperor An died on a progress to Nanyang in the following year, Yan Xian aided his sister the empress to conceal the death. When it was announced and she took title as Dowager, Yan Xian was named General of Chariots and Cavalry, ranking with the Excellencies, and he was involved in the selection of the Little Emperor Liu Yi. Soon afterwards, he arranged an accusation of faction against Geng Bao, General-in-Chief, Acting Grand Commandant, and former ally of the Yan. Dismissed and degraded to a village fief, Geng Bao committed suicide, while his eunuch and other associates were killed or exiled.

Soon after his accession, the Little Emperor became ill, and it was increasingly clear that the problem was serious. The eunuch Jiang Jing urged Yan Xian to bring imperial descendants of the kings of Jibei and Hejian to the capital in order to make a further selection, while Yan Xian's officers Cui Yuan and Chen Shan wanted him to take the lead in restoring Liu Bao to the succession and his rightful throne. Yan Xian, however, continually drunk, took no action of any kind.

When Liu Yi died on 10 December 125, the Lady Yan and her brothers sought to conceal the death and arrange a new selection. Despite their official positions, they had no firm command of the military forces at the capital, and the regular officials supported the claims of Liu Bao.

On 14 December a group of eunuchs led by Sun Cheng swore an oath against the Yan, and on 16 December they carried out a coup to place Liu Bao upon the throne. Yan Xian called up the regiments of the Northern Army, but when the colonel Feng Sui deserted he undertook no further action. Yan Jing attempted a counter-attack, but was captured and killed, and on the following day imperial clerks were sent to take the seals of Yan Xian and his surviving brothers. They were all arrested and executed. -HHS 10B:436-437.

Yan Xiang 閻詳. In 153 King Aluoduo of Further Jushi quarrelled with the Chinese and fled to the Xiongnu, and the Chinese placed the former hostage prince Beijun upon the throne.

Aluoduo returned and fought with increasing success to regain his position. Rather than suffer further disruption, the Wu Colonel in the Western Regions Yan Xiang accepted his formal submission and had Beijun's insignia withdrawn. -HHS 88/78:2931, but cf. Cai 1:1, which ascribes a leading role in the arrangement to Qiao Xuan, then Inspector of Liang province.

Yan Xiang 嚴像/象 [Wenzi 文則] (163-200); Jingzhao. A man of literary ability, Yan Xiang became a member of the Imperial Secretariat.

In 197 the Han government under Cao Cao sent Yan Xiang, as an officer of the Censorate with military command, to deal with Yuan Shu. When Yuan Shu died in 199 Yan Xiang became Inspector of Yang province. On Cao Cao's instructions, he nominated Sun Quan as Abundant Talent, but he was soon afterwards killed by Li Shu, an officer of the Sun group. -SGZ 21:603, 10:312, 15:463, SGZ Wu 1:1104.

Despite the fact that the characters of the name are written differently in the texts, it may be that this is the same man as Yan Xiang below; and HHS has a mistaken variant. We would need to assume that Yan Xiang left Yuan Shu's service in protest at his assumption of the imperial title, and promptly joined Cao Cao. His appointment in 197 may have been less significant than his contacts within Yuan Shu's regime and the possibility of encouraging other defections.

Yan Xiang 閻象; Jingzhao. A senior member of the staff of the warlord Yuan Shu in 196, Yan Xiang objected to his plan to take the imperial title. -HHS

75/65:2439. [The characters of the name are written differently, but this may be the same man as Yan Xiang above.]

Yan Xin 嚴昕; Guangling. In the late second century, Yan Xin and a group of friends went to call upon the doctor Hua Tuo. As soon as he saw him, Hua Tuo warned Yan Xin that his face showed the signs of serious illness and he should not drink wine. On his way home Yan Xin suddenly became dizzy and fell from his carriage. His companions brought him to his home, but he died that night. -SGZ 29:800.

Yan Xin 嚴訢 [Shaotong 少通] (82-150); Xiapi. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Yan Xin served as Assistant or Commandant, and then as full magistrate of several counties in the southeast, concluding his career as chancellor of a marquisate in Donglai, on the northern coast of the Shandong peninsula. He was commemorated with a mourning stele. -LS 24:11a-b, LX 3:5a-7a.

Yan Xing 閻興. In the spring of 37 Yan Xing and Liu Na were sent as Commandants of Cavalry under the general Ma Wu to guard the valley of the Hutuo River, a gateway to the North China plain, against raiding by the Xiongnu.

Yan Xing later became Intendant of Jingzhao. On the recommendation of Xianyu Bao he appointed Diwu Lun to a clerical position in his office. -HHS 100/10: 3221, 41/31:1396; Bn 67:111-112.

Yan Xing 閻行 or Yan Yan 豔 [Yanming 彥明]; Jincheng. As a young man, Yan Xing was known for his strength. He became a junior military officer, then a follower of the north-western chieftain Han Sui. As Han Sui engaged Ma Teng about 197, Yan Xing fought hand-to-hand with Ma Teng's son Ma Chao, wounded him and nearly killed him.

In 209 Han Sui sent Yan Xing as an envoy to Cao Cao, who received him most generously and named him Administrator of Jianwei; this territory, in the southern part of Yi province, was well outside the area of Cao Cao's control and there was no likelihood that Yan Xing could ever gain access. Cao Cao also sent an encouraging message to Han Sui, and Yan Xing persuaded Han Sui to send one of his sons as a hostage. For his part, Yan Xing arranged for his father and mother to also go east too.

Soon afterwards Han Sui went on campaign against Zhang Meng in Wuwei, leaving Yan Xing in command of his base territory in Jincheng. Ma Chao now sought rapprochement with Han Sui, and though Yan Xing protested Han Sui accepted the alliance and its potential for opposition to Cao Cao.

As the north-western warlords faced Cao Cao at Huayin in 211, Han Sui went out to meet him. Yan Xing was in his entourage, and when Cao Cao saw him there he reminded him of his filial duties: the fact that he was in the opposing army meant that his hostage father and mother were now at risk. After the battle, however, though Cao Cao killed Han Sui's children and grand-children, he recognised Yan Xing's attempt to avoid the conflict, and spared his parents.

Han Sui noted the special treatment, and in an attempt to bind Yan Xing to him more closely he gave him his youngest daughter in marriage. Yan Xing was obliged to accept, and Cao Cao indeed became concerned about his ultimate loyalty. Then, however, Han Sui gave Yan Xing an independent command, and Yan Xing was able to gather troops to make a surprise attack against him by night. The enterprise was unsuccessful, and Han Sui gradually restored his position with support from the Qiang and other non-Chinese. Though Cao Cao's general Xiahou Yuan took over Han Sui's forward positions in Hanyang, in 214 Yan Xing was obliged to abandon his campaign and bring his people east to join Cao Cao. He was enfeoffed as a marquis. -SGZ 15:476.

Yan Xu 嚴勗. In 85 Yan Xu was a clerk in the offices of the Excellency over the Masses. Known as an expert on the calendar, he was consulted by Jia Kui when he prepared his report on the revised Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] system for Emperor Zhang. -HHS 92/2:3027.

Yan Xuan 嚴宣. In 24 Yan Xuan was Commandant of Yuyang. The Administrator Peng Chong sent him with Wu Han to assist Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, who was at that time commissioner in the northeast for the Gengshi Emperor, against the pretender Wang Lang. Joining with troops from Shanggu, they destroyed Wang Lang's position in the north, killing hundreds of his officials and taking more than twenty counties, then relieved Liu Xiu in July.

Yan Xuan was named a lieutenant-general and given title as a marquis, but he is not heard of again. -HHS 18/8:685; Bn 59:73.

Yan Xuan 嚴宣. In 84 the officer of the pitchpipes 律 Yin Tong reported that no-one in the office knew how to tune the sacred instruments. The former officer Yan Chong was said to have known the art and to have taught it to his son Xuan, and Emperor Zhang agreed that Yan Xuan should be given a trial. His method, however, proved quite unsuccessful and he was dismissed. -HHS 91/1:3015.

Yan Xuan 閻宣 see Que Xuan 閻宣.

Yan Ya 延牙 see Yan Cen 延岑. -HYGZ 5:68-69.

Yan Yan 閻晏 (d.125); Henan. Fourth son of Yan Chang, Yan Yan was a brother of the Lady Yan Yi, Empress of Emperor An. As the emperor took up personal rule following the death of the Dowager Deng in 121, Yan Yan and his brothers Xian, Jing and Yao received high ministerial and military appointments, commanded palace guards, and dominated the court and the government.

After the death of Emperor An early in 125, the succession of the Little Emperor Liu Yi and the overthrow of Geng Bao and his associates, Yan Yan became Bearer of the Mace, in charge of police about the capital. The Little Emperor died that winter, however, and on 16 December the eunuch Sun Cheng led a coup to restore Emperor An's son Liu Bao to the succession. Despite his nominal authority, Yan Yan could offer no opposition to the insurgents. Yan Jing did attempt a counter-attack, but was captured and killed, and Liu Bao was placed upon the throne.

On the following day Yan Yan and his surviving brothers were executed by the new imperial authority. -HHS 10B:436-437.

Yan Yan 嚴延 [Ciqing 次卿]. When Yan Yan was Intendant of Henan, he had all the criminals from the counties under his jurisdiction brought to his offices on a particular day in winter, so they could be punished together. Blood flowed for several li, and the people named him "Butcher Boy" 屠伯. -XHS 5:18a-b.

Yan Yan 嚴顏; Ba. In 211 Yan Yan was Administrator of his home commandery, Ba, in the service of Liu Zhang, with his headquarters at Jiangzhou, present-day Chongqing. When Liu Zhang invited Liu Bei into the province Yan Yan observed sadly that the decision was like a man on a hill letting a tiger loose in the hope it will defend him.

In 213 Liu Bei turned against Liu Zhang and attacked him from the north, while Zhuge Liang and Zhang Fei brought an army up the Gorges in support. Zhang Fei attacked Jiangzhou, and in 214 he captured the city and took Yan Yan captive. He swore at Yan Yan for having failed to surrender when a great army arrived, but Yan Yan replied that "Our province has generals who cut off heads, not generals who surrender." Zhang Fei ordered he be taken out and beheaded, but Yan Yan observed that "Beheading is beheading; why make such a fuss about it?" Recognising his courage, Zhang Fei kept him as a guest, but Yan Yan is not heard of again. -SGZ Shu 6:943, HYGZ 5:72-74, 12:221.

Yan Yan 閻豔 see Yan Xing 閻行. At some stage in his career this man changed his personal name; the histories refer to him as Yan Xing. -SGZ 15:476.

Yan Yang 閻陽/楊. Formerly a magistrate in Henan, Yan Yang was noted for criticism and satire. The Excellency Huo Ba recommended him to Guangwu, but the emperor disliked him and was for a time suspicious of Huo Ba on this account. -HHS 26/16:910, 83/73:2782. Yan Yang was also recorded by Huangfu Mi of the third century in his Gaoshi zhuan.

Yan Yao 閻耀 (d.125); Henan. Third son of Yan Chang, he was a brother of Yan Yi, Empress of Emperor An. As the emperor took up personal rule following the death of the Dowager Deng in 121, Yan Yao and his brothers Xian, Jing and Yan received high ministerial and military appointments, commanded palace guards, and dominated the court and the government.

After the death of Emperor An early in 125, the succession of the Little Emperor Liu Yi and the overthrow of Geng Bao and his associates, Yan Yao became Colonel of the City Gates. That winter the Little Emperor died, and on 16 December the eunuch Sun Cheng led a coup to restore Emperor An's son Liu Bao to the succession. Despite his nominal authority, Yan Yao could offer no opposition to the insurgents. Yan Jing did attempt a counter-attack, but was captured and killed, and Liu Bao was placed upon the throne.

On the following day Yan Yao and his surviving brothers were executed. -HHS 10B:436-437.

Yan Yi 閻姬, the Lady: see the Lady Yan Ji 閻姬, Empress of Emperor An.

Yan Yi 嚴翊. When Yan Yi was Administrator of Yingchuan, if any of his subordinates committed a fault, he would retire into his office and blame himself. -XC 7:2b.

Yan Yin 閻尹 i.e. Yan Xian 閻憲. -HYGZ 10C:168.

Yan Yong 嚴永; Ba. Known as a filial son, Yan Yong was recommended by the Administrator Wang Tang about 120, and he rose to high office. -HYGZ 1:5, 10B:145.

Yan You 嚴尤 I see Zhuang You 莊尤.

Yan You 嚴尤 II. DGHJ 9:11a mentions a certain Yan

You, Assistant Administrator for Wang Mang, in the defence of Wan city against the Han rebels in 23. HHS 17/7:653, however, has the name as Yan Shuo 嚴說. See sub Cen Peng, and Bn 54:118.

This person must be distinguished from the Yan You cited above, who was a man of higher rank; it is probable that the personal name was indeed Shuo. The surname Yan may also have been changed in the history to avoid taboo on the character Zhuang 莊: see the note on the surname above.

Yan Yu 嚴羽 [Ziyi 子翼]; Ba. Son of Yan Zun, Inspector of Yang province, Yan Yu became Inspector of Xu province. When his father died, the people of Yang province offered a million cash for his funeral. Yan Yu did not want to accept such a gift, but he likewise did not wish to upset the donors, so he had the money distributed among family dependents. The Administrator Ying Jixian celebrated this in a poem. -HYGZ 1:4, 12:218.

Yan Yu 嚴興 (d.197); Wu. A younger brother of the local chieftain White Tiger Yan, as Sun Ce came to attack in 197 Yan Yu was sent to parley with him. They met face-to-face, but when Sun Ce drew a sword Yan Yu jumped in fright; Sun Ce promptly killed him.

Yan Yu had held a reputation for bravery, so his followers were now frightened and were easily defeated. -SGZ Wu 1:1105.

Yan Yuan 燕瑗. Evidently an associate of the eunuchs at court, in 163 Yan Yuan was Emissary to the Xiongnu. Impeached for misconduct by the Excellency Yang Bing, he was either dismissed or, more probably, executed. -HHS 54/44:1772.

Yan Zhang 閻章; Henan. A member of the Imperial Secretariat in the time of Emperor Ming, Yan Zhang was recognised for his knowledge of legal precedent. It was argued that he was worthy of high office, but the emperor explained that two of Yan Zhang's sisters were Honoured Ladies in his harem, and he did not wish to confuse the affairs of the inner and the outer court. So Yan Zhang was appointed only as a colonel in the Northern Army.

In 65 Yan Zhang was a colonel under the newly-appointed Acting General on the Liao Wu Tang. -HHS 10B:435, 89/79:2949.

Yan Zhi 閻芝 (d.228). In 222 Yan Zhi was Administrator in Ba for Liu Bei, and sent him reinforcements after his defeat by Wu in 222. He died on service with Zhuge Liang in Hanzhong. -SGZ Shu 13:1048, 5:923.

Yan [Zhizhang] 彥之章; Taishan. In the early second century Yan Zhizhang was a scholar and a teacher of astronomy and astrology. -HYGZ 10B:148.

Yan Zhong 嚴終; Yingchuan. Leader of bandits, Yan Zhong and his colleague Zhao Dun were defeated by Guangwu's general Feng Yi early in 26, and were driven to the north of the commandery, where they joined Jia Qi of Henan. Soon afterwards, Kou Xun was sent as Administrator, assisted by the general Hou Jin. The disturbance was settled, Jia Qi was captured and executed, and the others were pacified. -HHS 17/7: 645, 16/6:623.

Yan Zhong 顏忠 (d.71); Yuyang. Associates of Liu Ying the King of Chu, in 70 Yan Zhong and Wang Ping were denounced by Yan Guang for casting omens and planning rebellion. When they were arrested they implicated others, and the alleged conspiracy claimed thousands of lives throughout the empire. Yan Zhong was executed. -HHS 42/32:1428; Bn 67:33.

Yan Zhong 晏忠 was an Imperial Clerk in the Censorate. -FSTY 5f:133.

Yan Zhong 閻忠 (d.189); Hanyang. A noted judge of character, Yan Zhong became a county magistrate in Anping. After the defeat of the Yellow Turbans in 184, when the prestige of the general Huangfu Song was at its height, Yan Zhong urged him to take over government from the corrupt and disorganised court. Huangfu Song refused, and Yan Zhong fled back to his home country.

After the death of Wang Guo in 189, the Liang province rebels compelled Yan Zhong to take nominal command of their insurrection, with title as General of Chariots and Cavalry. He died soon afterwards. -HHS 71/61:2304-05, 72/62:2321-22, SGZ 10:326-27.

Yan Zi 嚴孳 (d.114); Hanzhong. Well-respected locally, Yan Zi joined the staff of the Administrator Zheng Qin. After he was killed by rebel Qiang in 110, Yan Zi joined Cheng Xin and other officers in an oath of vengeance, and when the Qiang came again four years later they all fought against them. The army was successful, but the oath-bearers were killed. [On the date of the campaign see sub Cheng Xin.]

In 118 an imperial letter ordered a grant of grain to the families of the heroic band. -HYGZ 2:16, 10C: 169.

Yan [Ziling] 嚴子陵; Kuaiji. A local leader in the early 20s, Yan Ziling gathered a group of followers from the refugees who had come south of the Yangzi to avoid the troubles which accompanied the fall of Wang Mang. The Commandant Ren Yan persuaded Yan Ziling and his people to lay down their arms and develop farming. -HHS 76/66:2461.

Yan [Zishun] 嚴子順; Ba. A man of official rank, Yan Zishun had only three daughters. In order to maintain his lineage, he adopted Yan Ju, who showed him the greatest filial respect. -LX 11:4b-8a.

Yan Zong 閻宗, the Lady; Yingchuan? Wife of Yan Chang, she was the mother of the Lady Yan Yi, who became Empress to Emperor An. In 122 she was posthumously honoured as Lady of Rongyang 榮陽君; that county in Yingchuan was perhaps her birthplace. -HHS 10B:436.

Yan Zun 嚴遵/尊. Four men of the Han period were known as Yan Zun: see HHSJJ 83/73:3042; Vervoorn 90:285.

1. Zhuang Zun 莊遵/尊 [Junping 君平]; Shu. This man was a well-known scholar and diviner in the time of Emperor Cheng of Former Han: QHX:749. The original surname Zhuang is replaced by Yan in many texts, however, to avoid taboo on the personal name of Emperor Ming of Later Han.

2. Zun 遵 was an alternative personal name of Yan Guang 嚴光 q.v.: HHS 83/73:2763. SGZ Wu 11:1326 says that Yan Zun [i.e. Yan Guang] refused to serve under Wang Mang; Vervoorn 90:283.

3. Yan Zun 嚴遵/尊 [Wangsi 王思]; Ba. Inspector of Yang province in the time of Emperor He, he became so popular that the people refused to let him leave, and when he died in office after eighteen years they offered a million cash for his funeral: HYGZ 1:4.

4. Yan Zun 嚴尊; Shu. At some time Yan Zun was a local officer of his commandery: HYGZ 10B:156.

XC 8:3b mentions a man of fine quality named Yan Zun; this may refer to 3. above.

Yang [surname] may vary between 楊 and 揚 in different texts.

Yang 楊, the Lady (d.213?); Longxi? In 213 Ma Chao had taken Ji city, capital of Hanyang, but Zhao Ang was plotting against him. Ma Chao's wife the Lady Yang admired the Lady Wang Yi, wife of Zhao Ang, and convinced her husband to put (mistaken) trust in his loyalty.

When Zhao Ang and others rebelled, Ma Chao was cut off from Ji city; his wife fell into the hands of the enemy and was killed. -SGZ 25:703.

Yang 楊 [personal name unknown]; Yingchuan. A county officer, he suspected Chen Shi of murder. He had him arrested and tortured, but when he found no evidence he released him. Chen Shi later became an Investigator, and recommended Yang most favourably. All who heard of the affair were impressed. -HHS 62/52:2065.

Yang 楊 [personal name unknown]; (125-175); Hongnong. This man was the subject of a commemorative stele whose text is preserved in LS 9:12b-14b. The inscription does not mention his personal name, but he is identified as Yang Fu 楊馥 q.v.

Yang 楊 [personal name unknown]. A eunuch Regular Attendant, he adopted Yang Dang, who became Prefect of Chang'an but maintained a greedy and corrupt administration. In 188 He Xun the new Intendant of Jingzhao reported Yang Dang to the throne, and despite protests from imperial relatives and pressure from the eunuchs both he and his father were prosecuted and punished. -HHS 58/48:1882.

Yang Ang 楊昂 or Yang Bo 楊帛 (d.195). A subordinate of Yang Feng, who was a commander under Li Jue at Chang'an, in 195 Yang Ang and his colleague Song Ye became the agents of a plot to assassinate Li Jue and free Emperor Xian. Li Jue killed Yang Ang for some unrelated reason before they could take action, but Yang Feng then set himself up as an independent general and Li Jue lost much of his power. -HHS 54/44:1768 [昂], HHJ 28:337 [帛] and see sub Song Ye.

Yang Ang 楊昂 (d.215?); Hanzhong? A senior commander under Zhang Lu, in 213 Yang Ang was sent to assist Ma Chao in his attack on Hanyang. When the Administrator and the Inspector of Liang province surrendered Ji city, Ma Chao had Yang Ang kill them.

In 215 Yang Ang defended the Yangping Pass against Cao Cao. His troops were defeated and he is not heard of again. -SGZ 25:701, 1:45.

Yang A'ruo 楊阿若: original name of Yang Feng 楊豐 of Jiuquan. -SGZ 18:552.

Yang Ban 楊班 [Zhonghuan 仲桓]; Shu. Students of He Chang, in the late second century Yang Ban and his colleague Luo Heng became celebrated for their fine administration as county magistrates. -HYGZ 10A:136.

Yang Bao 楊寶 (d.25). In 25 Yang Bao was Administrator of Hedong for the Gengshi Emperor. In the summer Deng Yu defeated the army of Wang Kuang and took over the commandery. He captured Yang Bao and killed him. -HHS 16/6:601.

Yang Bao 楊寶 [Zhiyuan 稭淵]; Hongnong. Descended from a distinguished lineage of Former Han, Yang Bao was a scholar of the Classic of History in the New Text Ouyang tradition. He lived and taught in seclusion, and when invited to office by the regent government of Wang Mang he went into hiding. Emperor Guangwu also invited him to court, but by this time Yang Bao was old and ill and again did not go. He died at home.

There was a story that when Yang Bao was a child he rescued a yellow bird in the wilderness. A man in yellow robes then appeared to him in a dream, identified himself both as the bird he had saved and as an envoy from the Queen Mother of the West, and promised fortune to Yang Bao's descendants. His son Yang Zhen became the first in a line of Excellencies of Later Han.

It is notable that Yang Zhen died in 124, aged over seventy; he was therefore born in the early 50s. Emperor Guangwu died in 57, and we are told that when Yang Bao was called to his court he was already old: since he was mature enough to have been eligible for official appointment in the time of the last rulers of Former Han, he must have been about seventy. Despite being too frail to take office, he was evidently able to father two sons, Yang Zhen and Yang Heng. It is possible that Yang Bao was in fact their grandfather, but there is no reference to an intermediate generation. -HHS 54/44:1759, XTS 71B:2347; QHX:632, Verboom 90:132.

Yang Bi 羊弼. Evidently a disciple of Li Yu of Youfufeng, he became an Academician at the Imperial University for the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu. About 150 he taught the scholar He Xiu, who later maintained his teachings. -HHS 79/69:1583.

Yang Bi 楊弼 [Yingbo 顓伯]. Grandson of Yang Huan and younger brother of Yang Huai/Zhun, Yang Bi was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became a county magistrate in Jiangxia. He left that office when his aunt died, but he was later nominated again, served in the Imperial Secretariat and was then Inspector of Ji province. After returning to the capital as Court Physician, he became Chancellor of Xiapi.

In 173 their fellow-countryman Bian Yu passed by the tombs of Yang Bi and Yang Huai, and set up a stele in their honour. -LX 11:11a-b.

Yang Bi 羊祜; Taishan. Son of Yang Xu, as an Imperial Clerk in 220 he was one of those who encouraged Cao Pi to take the imperial title. -HHS 31/21:1110, SGZ 2:

66; Goodman 98:111.

Yang Biao 楊彪 [Wenxian 文先] (142-225); Hongnong. Son of Yang Ci and a noted scholar, Yang Biao refused all offers of nomination and appointment until about 177 when he received a special summons. He then came to the capital as a Consultant and joined the group of scholars commissioned to prepare a fourth instalment of the official dynastic history "Record of Han" 漢記.

Other colleagues in the project were Ma Midi, Cai Yong, Han Yue and Lu Zhi, and their work included annals for emperors An and Shun, for the infants Chong and Zhi and for Emperor Huan, with biographies updated to the end of the reign of Emperor Huan in 168. It was at this time that the history acquired the name of Dongguan Hanji 東觀漢記, from the Eastern Pavilion 東觀 of the Southern Palace, where the library and workrooms were located.

Yang Biao later became a Palace Attendant, and in 179 he was Intendant of Jingzhao. He presented a report and complaint that retainers of the eunuch Wang Fu had set up a private toll-post on his borders, and the Director of Retainers Yang Qiu used this as an excuse to destroy Wang Fu and his party. Yang Biao then held a series of court, commandery and ministerial appointments.

As Dong Zhuo took power in 189 he made Yang Biao an Excellency, but dismissed him and his colleague Huang Wan when they spoke against the move of the capital in 190. The two men apologised and made their peace, and they accompanied the court to Chang'an as Household Counsellors. Yang Biao again became an Excellency under Li Jue in 192, was dismissed in 193, but was named Grand Commandant in 194. Leader of the senior officials, he protested Li Jue's seizure of the emperor in 195, and when he was soon afterwards taken hostage by Guo Si he was nearly killed when he remonstrated again.

Yang Biao accompanied the emperor on his escape to the east in 195, and he guaranteed the good faith of the general Duan Wei in Hongnong. When Li Le proposed that the imperial fugitives should escape down the Yellow River through the Sanmen Gorges, Yang Biao and Liu Ai argued from local knowledge that the passage was dangerous, with many rapids, and there were now no good boatmen [cf. Needham 71:277]. The party therefore crossed the River into Hedong.

Though Yang Biao accompanied the sovereign to Xu city, he was no friend of Cao Cao, and in 197 he was sent to prison because his wife was a sister of the false emperor Yuan Shu. Defended by Kong Rong and Xun Yu, he was eventually saved by Man Chong and returned to office as Minister of Ceremonies at the puppet court of Han. On the other hand, it is said Yang Biao also had an old quarrel with Yuan Shao; he wanted Cao Cao to kill him, but this time Cao Cao refused.

In 205 Yang Biao was dismissed, and in the following year the family marquissate was abolished, together with all the other fiefs which had been awarded by grace and favour of the emperors of Han. Seeing no hope for the dynasty, Yang Biao claimed ill health and retired from political life. When his son Yang Xiu was executed for treason in 119, Cao Cao confronted his father for showing sorrow, but Yang Biao confirmed his regret and affection.

As Cao Pi received the abdication of Han, he invited Yang Biao to become Grand Commandant, but Yang Biao refused, explaining that as a senior official he had failed the former dynasty. He was nonetheless granted special honours, with precedence next only to the Excellencies, and during the last years of his life he worked on completing the history Dongguan Hanji up to the end of the fallen dynasty. -HHS 54/44:1786-90*, XHS 4:2b-3b, XC 3:6b; Bn 54:11, MBeck 90:25, deC 89.

The tomb complex of Yang Zhen and six of his descendants, including Yang Biao, has been identified in present-day Tongguan county in Shenxi: WW 61/1, KG 63/1 [Wang Zhongshu].

Yang Biao 楊彪, wife of: see the Lady Yuan 袁 III.

Yang Bin 楊斌; Guanghan. About 110 Yang Bin was commended for his fine conduct by the Administrator Dai Feng. -HYGZ 10B:150.

Yang Bing 楊秉 [Shujie 叔節 or perhaps Shuqing 叔卿] (94-167); Hongnong. Son of Yang Zhen, evidently the third, he followed his father's tradition of scholarship. Widely read, and expert in the Jing Fang interpretation of the Changes, he maintained private teaching.

At the age of forty, Yang Bing accepted an invitation to an Excellency's office. He then joined the Censorate, served as Inspector in four provinces, and was appointed Chancellor of Rencheng. He was noted for refusing all bribes and gifts.

When Emperor Huan came to the throne in 145, Yang Bing was summoned to court on account of his knowledge of the Classic of History, and he served as a Palace Counsellor, General of the Household, Palace Attendant and then in the Secretariat.

During the 150s the emperor frequently left the palace incognito, and during one such excursion a great storm uprooted trees. Yang Bing used the occasion to protest the sovereign's lack of propriety and the failings of government, and when his advice was rejected he asked to retire. Instead, Liang Ji had him appointed Administrator of Youfufeng. Concerned at this loss to the court, the minister Huang Qiong arranged for Yang Bing to return as a Household Counsellor, but Yang Bing was worried about Liang Ji's increasing power, and he pleaded ill health and retired.

After Liang Ji was destroyed by Emperor Huan and his eunuch allies in 159, Yang Bing returned to the capital as Minister Coachman and then Minister of Ceremonies. When he sought leniency for the presumptuous magistrate Li Yun, he was dismissed and returned home, but at the end of that year he was made Intendant of Henan.

Ren Fang, a retainer of Shan Kuang, nephew of the eunuch Shan Chao, attempted to kill Wei Yu, Assistant Officer of to the Director of Retainers. He was arrested and sent to prison at the capital. Concerned that Yang Bing would make a full investigation, Shan Kuang arranged for Ren Fang to dig his way out and escape. Though Yang Bing sought to accuse Shan Kuang, he was found responsible and was sentenced to convict service. He was released soon afterwards on account of a prolonged drought.

At the time of an eclipse Huangfu Gui and others wrote to praise Yang Bing's loyalty and honesty and urge his re-employment, but when an invitation was sent he refused it. Some senior officials charged Yang Bing and the recluse Wei Zhu with Disrespect, but Zhao Jing, Director of the Secretariat, and his officer Bian Shao argued their cause, and when a second invitation was sent to Yang Bing he accepted. He was again appointed Minister of Ceremonies, and in the winter of 162 he became Grand Commandant.

In 163, joined by Zhou Jing who was now also an Excellency, Yang Bing presented a memorial attacking the appointment of eunuch associates to substantive office, protesting their abuse of power and seeking investigation. This was approved, and more than fifty officials were either dismissed or killed. Everyone was impressed. Yang Bing then urged the emperor to end the system, established in 102, by which Reporting Officers from commanderies and kingdoms could be kept at the capital as gentleman cadets for future high office. He argued that the additional recruitment was a waste of resources and it encouraged unwarranted expectations among men of limited ability. Emperor Huan agreed, but the appointments were renewed after his death a few years later.

In 164 Yang Bing was ordered to accompany the imperial tour to the south. The Administrator of Nanyang, Zhang Biao, was an old friend of the emperor and used his influence to his own advantage, while various attendants had taken bribes to arrange official appointments. Yang Bing complained of this and the emperor became less generous.

In the following year Yang Bing impeached Hou Can, brother of the eunuch Hou Lan, for cruelty and extortion as Inspector of Yi province. Hou Can killed himself, and Yang Bing then attacked Hou Lan and his colleague Ju Yuan. The Secretariat claimed that he was acting ultra vires, but Yang Bing argued that the whole of government was within the concern of an Excellency. Hou Lan was dismissed from the palace and Ju Yuan suffered a reduction in his fief. Seeing how the emperor's old allies had been weakened, other officials joined the attack, and the power and wealth of the eunuchs were curbed.

A few months later, Yang Bing died in office at the age of seventy-four.

Yang Bing never drank wine, and after his wife died when he was young he took no interest in the opposite sex. On one occasion he observed that "There are three things that do not concern me: wine, women and wealth." -HHS 54/44:1769-75*, XC 3:5b-6a, Cai 3:1; deC 89.

Yang Bo 楊博 [Zhongda 仲達]; Guanghan. Yang Bo was the son of Yang Hou by his first wife. After Yang Bo's mother died his step-mother disliked him and treated him badly. Her own son, however, Yang Bo's half-brother Yang Hou, though only nine years old, was concerned at the rift within the family. He pretended to be ill until his mother treated Yang Bo more kindly.

Yang Bo was later a Household Counsellor. -HHS 30/20A:1048.

Yang Bo 楊昂 see Yang Ang 楊昂 (d.195).

Yang Bo 楊昂. As Liu Bei attacked Liu Zhang in 213, he left Huo Jun to guard his base camp in Guanghan. Zhang Lu's general Yang Bo offered to "assist" him, but Huo Jun firmly refused. -SGZ Shu 11:1007, HYGZ 2:22. [This is surely the same man as in the entry below.]

Yang Bo 楊白. A general under Zhang Lu, Yang Bo was jealous of the favour shown to Ma Chao. As Ma Chao failed in a second attempt to conquer Liang province in 214, Yang Bo argued that he was incapable and persuaded Zhang Lu to withdraw his support. -SGZ Shu 6:946. [This is surely the same man as in the entry above.]

Yang [Bopi] 陽/楊伯邳. Nephew of the Lady Yang Ji, Yang Bopi became Director of Retainers. -HYGZ 10B:159.

Yang [Bohou] 陽/楊伯侯; Shu. Head of a powerful local family about 150, Yang Bohou caused trouble, but was brought under control by the magistrate Liu Chong. -HYGZ 3:35.

Yang Cen 楊岑. In 62 Yang Cen was an officer of the Bureau of Astronomy. At that time the Taichu 太初 [Grand Beginning] calendar had been in use since 104 BC, slightly adjusted by the Santong 三統 [Three Sequences] system of Liu Xin 劉歆 in the time of Wang Mang. Yang Cen reported to the throne that it was quite inaccurate, so that the months were out of kilter with the phases of the moon. Emperor Ming set him in charge of a special Office for the Phases and Eclipses of the Moon 弦望月食官, but at the same time he had Yang Cen's colleagues Zhang Sheng, Jing Fang and Bao Ye compare his calculations with the old Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] calendar. That proved more accurate than Yang Cen's system, and in 69 Zhang Sheng and Jing Bao took Yang Cen's place at the Office for the Moon. -HHS 92/2:3025.

Yang Cen 楊岑 (d.145). After Deng Xian the Administrator of Jiujiang was killed fighting rebels in 144, Yang Cen was appointed in his stead. The Commandant Teng Fu defeated the main force of the rebels in the summer of the following year, but the bandit leader Hua Meng attacked Hefei, capital of the commandery, and Yang Cen was killed.

Since Deng Xian's predecessor Qiu Sheng had been executed for bad government at the beginning of the insurrection, Yang Cen was the third Administrator to die in that troubled commandery within twelve months. -HHS 6:279, 38/28:1279-80.

Yang Chang 羊昌 or Qian Chang 芊昌. About 150 Yang Chang was a favourite of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. He became Chancellor of Chen, but ruled corruptly. The local officer Qiao Xuan knew this and obtained authority to investigate him from the Inspector Zhou Jing. Despite pressure from Liang Ji, Qiao Xuan took the case to a conclusion and Yang Chang was arrested and dismissed. -HHS 51/41:1965.

Yang Chong 楊充 [Shengguo 盛國]; Guanghan. When Yang Chong was young he travelled to Luoyang and studied with a variety of teachers. He became expert in the classics, and was a friend of Li Ying, Xun Shuang and Wang Chang. Having returned to teach privately in his home country, he was later nominated as Filial and Incorrupt and became a cadet gentleman. He died in that probationary office.

A rationalist, Yang Chong considered the apocrypha valueless, and doubted they represented the teachings of the sages. -HYGZ 10C:174.

Yang Chou 楊醜 (d.198). In 198 Yang Chou was an officer of Zhang Yang, warlord Administrator of Henei. Zhang Yang wanted to aid Lü Bu against Cao Cao, but Yang Chou had an old quarrel with Lü Bu, so he killed Zhang Yang and attempted to join Cao Cao. He was killed in turn by his colleague Sui Gu, who favoured Yuan Shao. -SGZ 1:17, 8:251.

Yang Chunqing 楊春卿 (d.36); Guanghan. Yang Chunqing was a son of Yang Zhongxu [or Zhongji] 仲續/仲績, a scholar official who had migrated from Hedong into the southwest, where he maintained teaching on the Classic of History according to the Xiahou interpretations. He was also an expert in divination and the apocrypha.

Yang Chunqing became a military officer in the service of the pretender Gongsun Shu, and when Gongsun Shu was destroyed Yang Chunqing killed himself.

Yang Chunqing had a portfolio of black silk, containing secret writings passed down through the family. He entrusted this to his son Yang Tong, and suggested that the papers could be of value to the restored house of Han. -HHS 30/20A:1047, HYGZ, 12: 223.

Though Chunqing is also the style of Yang Guang 楊廣, an officer of Wei Ao, it is unlikely they were the same man.

Yang Ci 楊賜 [Boyou 伯猷 or Boxian 伯獻? or Ziyou 子猷?] (d.185); Hongnong. Son of Yang Bing, when he was young Yang Ci maintained the family tradition of scholarship, teaching privately and refusing invitations to local office. He later joined the offices of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, but disapproved of his conduct. He was appointed a county magistrate in Youfufeng, but left office on grounds of ill health and thereafter refused a number of invitations. Eventually nominated First Class by an Excellency, he became a Palace Attendant and a colonel in the Northern Army.

At the beginning of the reign of Emperor Ling, Yang Ci was chosen to lecture the young emperor on the Classic of History, and he became Minister Steward and then Minister of the Household. When a dark snake appeared above the imperial throne the emperor asked Yang Ci for his opinion, and he replied with a warning against the influence of the eunuchs and the ruler's excessive interest in his harem women. [This apparition may be dated to 169 or to 172: deC 89:429-430].

In 173 Yang Ci was appointed Excellency of Works. He left office soon afterwards because of unfavourable omens, but then became a Household Counsellor with an enhanced salary. In 176 he was named Excellency over the Masses, and sent in a memorial criticising the emperor's habit of journeying abroad informally, and linking it to the lack of good order and propriety at court. Late in the following year he was dismissed for having appointed one of the Proscribed Party to office, and again became a Household Counsellor. During this period, with his son Yang Biao and other scholars including Cai Yong, he was apparently involved in the editing of the Stone Classics project.

In the summer and autumn of 178 there was a series of portents, including an earthquake, a hen changing into a cock, a black mist in the appearance of a dragon and a dark rainbow. When the emperor asked advice from a group of scholar-officials Yang Ci and Cai Yong criticised the eunuchs' power and the new School at the Gate of the Vast Capital, which gave opportunities to its graduates at the expense of regular scholar-officials. The eunuchs turned their master against these opinions, but while Cai Yong was sent to exile in the north Yang Ci, as the ruler's former teacher, suffered only dismissal; that same winter he was honoured as Thrice Venerable at the imperial ceremony of Serving the Aged in the Hall of the Circular Moat.

Restored to office as Minister Steward and again Minister of the Household, at the end of 179 he was again appointed Excellency over the Masses.

In 180 Yang Ci protested the emperor's plans to build the Jade Sceptre and Spiritual Jade parks on the south of the city, arguing that there were already a great number of such parks and that the new ones would deprive the people of valuable farmland. The ruler's favourites Yue Song and Ren Zhi, however, claimed that he would be "sharing them with the people" in the same fashion as the legendary King Wen of Zhou 周文王, and Emperor Ling was happy to proceed.

In 181 Yang Ci left office on grounds of illness, but he was promptly appointed Minister of Ceremonies, with special robes and insignia, and in the following year he became Grand Commandant.

For some years Yang Ci had been concerned at the development of the Yellow Turban movement as a potential threat to good order and about 180, on the advice of his clerical officer Liu Tao he presented a warning. In particular, he urged that local officials should be ordered to settle the wandering people, who provided a breeding-ground of support for Zhang Jue's sect: they should be returned to their homes in order to break up the movement. Yang Ci left office soon afterwards and though Liu Tao sent in a follow-up warning in 183 no attention was given to the matter. When rebellion broke out in 184 the emperor asked Yang Ci's opinion, but his reply was so critical of the eunuchs and their associates that he was forced to resign soon afterwards, as scapegoat for the troubles. Some time later, Emperor Ling found Yang Ci's document among some files, and he granted him a county fief. Yang Ci asked to share the reward with his former colleagues Liu Kuan and Zhang Ji and the emperor, admiring his generosity, gave additional fiefs.

Yang Ci was then made Director of the Secretariat, though he begged off appointment as Minister of Justice. He was named instead as Specially Advanced and granted residence at the capital. In the autumn of 185 he was once more Excellency of Works, but died in office a few days later. The court was closed for three days, his funeral was honoured by special insignia and an imperial escort, and further ceremonies were held on the first anniversaries of his death. -HHS 54/44: 1775-85*, XC 3:6a-b, Cai 3:2, 3:3, 3:4, 3:5; deC 89, Bn 76:81.

Yang Ci 楊賜, wife of: see the Lady Huan 桓 II.

Yang Dang 楊黨. Adopted son of a leading eunuch, Yang Dang was Prefect of Chang'an but maintained a greedy and corrupt administration. When He Xun was appointed Intendant of Jingzhao in 188 he reported Yang Dang to the throne, and despite protests from imperial relatives and pressure from the eunuchs both Yang Dang and his father were prosecuted and punished. -HHS 58/48:1882.

Yang Dao 羊衡 (d.232); Taishan. Son of Yang Xu, Yang Dao married a daughter of Cai Yong. In 179 he and his kinsmen helped Cai Yong to escape from the capital and take refuge in the southeast from his enemies at court.

Yang Dao became Administrator of Shangdang under Wei, and his daughter married Sima Shi 司馬帥 (208-255), one of the founders of the Jin 晉 dynasty. -JS 34:1013.

Yang Di 羊迪 or 揚迪. In 133 Yang Di was a captain at one of the gates of Luoyang. In a memorial to Emperor Shun Li Gu complained that he had obtained his position without good cause, evidently on the basis of favouritism at court, and that this was a danger to the integrity of the government. -HHS 63/53:2076.

Yang Ding 羊定 [Shide 德世]. Officer of Merit in his commandery, Yang Ding became extremely ill, but refused all offers of help and died on duty. -XC 7:13b.

Yang Ding 楊陽定 (d.139?). In 139 Yang Ding was a eunuch Regular Attendant to Emperor Shun. Concerned at the growing power of the Liang family of the empress, Yang Ding, Zhang Kui, Qu Zheng and others claimed that the empress's father, Liang Shang, together with their rival eunuchs Cao Teng and Meng Ben, planned to bring princes of the imperial house to the capital and choose a replacement for the emperor. As Emperor Shun doubted the story, they followed up by issuing unauthorised instructions that Cao Teng and Meng Ben should be arrested and held within the palace.

The emperor was furious. He ordered the eunuch Li Xi to release the prisoners and arrest the conspirators. They all died. -HHS 6:268, 43/24:1175-76, 101/11:3245 [where the surname appears as 陽; this last, moreover, says that some committed suicide and others escaped].

Yang Ding 楊定 [Zhengxiu 整脩?]. An associate of Li Jue and Guo Si in the ramshackle government at Chang'an after the death of Dong Zhuo, Yang Ding was named a general in 194, with administrative offices. He and Guo Si planned to take the emperor into their control, but Li Jue forestalled them.

In 195, after Emperor Xian had left Chang'an, Yang Ding joined Dong Cheng and Yang Feng to force Guo Si away and escort the imperial party east. As they arrived at the border with Hongnong, south of the junction of the Wei with the Yellow River, where the local ruler Duan Wei was an old enemy, Yang Ding attempted to get the emperor to himself. He was not successful, and as Li Jue and Guo Si approached he fled into Jing province. -HHS 72/62:2338-39.

In HHSJJ 72/62:2557 Hui Dong suggests that Yang Zhengxiu 揚整脩 q.v. was the same person as Yang Ding, and that Zhengxiu was Yang Ding's style. The identification seems doubtful, however, for the surnames are written differently, and Yang Zhengxiu appears to have been a great deal less active.

Yang Fang 楊放. Probably about 110 Yang Fang was a county Assistant in Guanghan. He was captured by raiders but his subordinate Zhang Shou eventually secured his release. -HYGZ 10C:175.

Yang Fen 養奮 [Shugao 叔高]; Yulin. About 100, concerned and puzzled by contradictions in portentous phenomena, with alternating droughts and floods, Emperor He issued a general enquiry. Among those who replied, the commoner Yang Fen claimed that gross variations between the forces of Yin and Yang indicated the government was badly run and the people were distrustful and disloyal. -HHS 105/15:3309.

Yang Feng 楊鳳; Shu. Elder brother of the noted scholar Yang Zhong, Yang Feng was a local officer in the commandery. During the 80s, as the Administrator Lian Fan was under investigation by the provincial inspectorate, he sent Yang Feng to ask Yang Zhong to intervene on his behalf. -HHS 48/38:1600.

Yang Feng 楊鳳. A junior officer of the Secretariat, in 126-127 Yang Feng was accused of conspiring with the eunuch Zhang Fang, the Prefect Gaotang Zhi and other members of the Secretariat, and a number of frontier officials. Two officers of the Secretariat were executed, but Yang Feng and others managed to purchase relief. -HHS 101/11:3243 and cf. sub Zhang Fang 張防.

Yang Feng 楊奉 [Jishu 季叔?]; Hongnong. Youngest son of Yang Zhen, Yang Feng was known for his personal qualities. He became a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates and maintained the private fortune of the family. -HHS 54/44:1769, XTS 71B:2360, LS 12:2a.

Yang Feng 楊奉. A stele of 173 from the region of Shu commandery tells how Yang Feng, Zhang Pu and four other Libationers of the Rice Magicians 米巫祭酒 received a mysterious text. These men were evidently members of an early form of the Rice Sect which was later led by Zhang Lu. -LX 3:8a-9a.

Yang Feng 楊鳳. In 185 Yang Feng was a leader of the Black Mountain bandits in the Taihang range. Unable to put down these groups, the government named him Colonel of the Black Mountains 黑山校尉, with authority to nominate candidates for office like the administrator of a commandery [see also Zhang Yan]. -HHS 71/61:2310, SGZ 8:262.

Yang Feng 楊奉 (d.197); Hedong? Sometime leader of the Bobo bandit group, originally based in Xihe but later moving south, Yang Feng joined Li Jue at Chang'an. As Li Jue quarrelled with Guo Si in 195, Yang Feng joined a plot by which his subordinate officers Yang Bo and Song Ye would kill Li Jue and free Emperor Xian from his captivity. When this proved unsuccessful, Yang Feng led a mutiny and took title as a general.

In 196, amid quarrels and skirmishes with his colleagues, and occasional pitched battles against Li Jue and Guo Si, Yang Feng escorted the emperor to Luoyang. In camp south of the capital, he was approached by Dong Zhao on behalf of Cao Cao and agreed, first to recognise Cao Cao, then to let the emperor travel to Xu city. Yang Feng was nonetheless an uneasy ally, and he later sought to interfere in the move; Cao Cao then attacked and drove him south.

In 197 Yang Feng and Han Xian joined Yuan Shu against Lü Bu in Xiapi, but were persuaded to change sides: they attacked and routed Yuan Shu's men, then supported Lü Bu in his advance to the Huai. They raided Xu and Yang provinces, but by the end of the year they were short of supplies. Lü Bu was now unsympathetic, and as Han Xian went back to the north Yang Feng sought alliance with Liu Bei. Liu Bei invited him to a banquet, but then had him bound and killed.

Yang Feng 楊豐 or Yang A'ruo 阿若 [Boyang 伯陽]; Jiuquan. As a young man Yang Feng acted as a knight-errant, taking part in quarrels all over the commandery.

About 210 the local leader Huang Ang raised troops to attack the Administrator Xu Yi who had slaughtered his family. Believing Huang Ang was in the wrong, Yang Feng went to Xu Yi and undertook to lead his family to refuge in neighbouring Zhangye. As they reached Zhangye, however, there was another rebellion and the Administrator there was killed. By this time, moreover, Huang Ang had captured the capital of Jiuquan and killed Xu Yi. Angry that Yang Feng had opposed him, he asked the new rulers of Zhangye to send him back.

950 Yang Fenggui

Yang Feng fled to Wuwei, where the Administrator Zhang Meng gave him acting appointment as Commandant, approved his intention to take vengeance on Huang Ang, and sent him back with a commission to raise troops. Yang Feng recruited a thousand horsemen from the Qiang and entered Jiuquan from the southern hills. As they approached the capital of the commandery he ordered his men to dismount and drag branches behind them to raise the dust. Believing that a major force was approaching, the defenders abandoned their positions and fled. Huang Ang was captured and Yang Feng killed him.

Huang Hua, however, evidently another member of the clan, had established himself as a warlord in the east of Jiuquan, and Yang Feng, unwilling to face him, went west into Dunhuang.

In 220, when the government of Cao Pi obtained control of the west and Huang Hua surrendered, Yang Feng returned to Jiuquan. He was recommended Filial and Incorrupt by his commandery, and was praised by the provincial authorities for his loyalty and courage. An edict appointed him Commandant of Attendant Cavalry. He died about 240. -SGZ 18:552-53.

Yang Fenggui 楊鳳珪; Jianwei. Husband of the Lady Chen Zhu, he died young but left children. -HYGZ 10A:140.

Yang Fu 楊孚 [Xiaoyuan 孝元]; Nanhai. A Consultant at the imperial court, Yang Fu compiled Yiwu zhi 異物志 and Jiaozhou yiwu zhi 交州異物志, the one evidently a general collectanea of strange matters, and the other related particularly to his native south China. -Sui shu 33:983, 984; Yao Zhenzong:2377.

Yang Fu 楊敷; Hongnong. Son of Yang Feng 奉 and grandson of Yang Zhen, Yang Fu was also known for his personal qualities, but lived privately and died young. -HHS 54/44:1769.

Yang Fu 羊傅. Minister of Finance in the early 150s, Yang Fu and his colleague He Bao recommended Cui Shi for appointment at court. -HHS 52/42:1730. [This is surely the same person as Yang Pu 溥.]

Yang Fu 楊馥 (125-175); Hongnong. Son of Yang Mu and grandson of the Excellency Yang Zhen, Yang Fu served for a time as a local officer in his home commandery, then received appointment as a gentleman cadet and became a commander of guards about the palace. Transferred to be a county magistrate in Wei commandery, he died in that office and was remembered with a stele. -LS 9:12b-18a, 20:5b-6a, XTS 71B:2347.

A tomb complex of the Yang family has been identified in present-day Tongguan county in Shenxi, and Yang Fu is believed to have been one of the occupants: KG 63/1 [Wang Zhongshu].

Yang Fu 楊扶; Kuaiji. Son of Yang Mao, who moved the family residence from Hedong, Yang Fu became Inspector of Jiaozhi. -HHS 38/28:1287.

Yang Fu 楊阜 [Yishan 義山]; Hanyang/Tianshui. About 199 Yang Fu was a member of staff to the Governor of Liang province Wei Duan, and was sent to Xu city to observe Cao Cao's government. He was given title as Chief Clerk of Anding, and when he returned he forecast that Cao Cao would defeat Yuan Shao and become dominant in the empire.

Yang Fu later served Wei Duan's son and successor Wei Kang, and about 208 he was recommended by Cao Cao's agent Zhang Ji. Appointed to Cao Cao's headquarters, after the victory at Huayin in 211 he became Adviser to the Army for Liang province. He urged Cao Cao to complete the conquest of the region before he returned to the east, and particularly to deal with Ma Chao in the upper Wei valley.

Distracted by the rebellion of Su Bo in the east, Cao Cao failed to take this advice, and in 213 Ma Chao led an army into Hanyang. Yang Fu brought family troops to help Wei Kang defend Ji city, which was the capital of both the commandery and the province. After a long siege, despite Yang Fu's objections, Wei Kang surrendered. Ma Chao killed both Wei Kang and the Administrator of Hanyang.

About this time Yang Fu's wife died, and he gained permission from Ma Chao to leave Ji city for the funeral. He planned a rising with his kinsman Jiang Xu, and in the autumn they joined Zhao Ang and other local leaders to attack Ma Chao. Yang Fu was wounded and several of his family were killed, but Ma Chao was driven south across the Qin Ling into Hanzhong.

Yang Fu was rewarded with enfeoffment, and when Cao Cao took Hanzhong in 215 he appointed him Inspector of Yi province and then Administrator of Wudu. After Liu Bei captured Hanzhong in 219, Cao Cao ordered that Wudu commandery should be abandoned and the population withdrawn to the Wei valley. Because of his acceptance among the Chinese and the Di, Yang Fu was able to bring several thousand households north, and he set up an administration in exile in Youfufeng.

About 226, shortly before the death of Cao Pi, Emperor Wen of Wei, Yang Fu was brought to the court, and he held ministerial appointment under Cao Pi's son and successor Cao Rui. A strong moralist, he criticised Cao Rui's extravagance in clothing, building and affection for women. His erudite memorials were received with courtesy, but had little effect. He died about 235. -SGZ 25:700-08*.

Yang Gao 楊高 [Shengjian 聖建] see Yang Qiao 楊喬 [Shengda 聖達].

Yang Gong 楊恭; Jianwei. As Yang Gong died young, he entrusted his children to his friend Zhang Yi, who cared for them like his own. -SGZ Shu 11:1012.

Yang Guang 楊廣 [Chunqing 春卿] (d.32); Tianshui. A local leader, in 23 Yang Guang joined Wei Cui in rebellion against Wang Mang, seizing the commandery capital and killing the Administrator. The insurgents chose Wei Cui's nephew Wei Ao as their leader, and despite the potential influence of his kinsmen, Wei Ao established his own support.

In the summer, as Wei Ao gathered his followers to swear allegiance to the house of Han, Yang Guang was styled General on the Right. When Wei Ao was called to Chang'an by the Gengshi Emperor early in the following year, he received that same title; we do not know what arrangements were made for Yang Guang.

Yang Guang evidently remained in Tianshui, but he rejoined Wei Ao after his escape from the capital in the autumn and was named a chief general. In 25 he defeated an invasion of Red Eyebrows up the Long Slope, then pursued them and drove them from Anding.

In 31 Yang Guang was approached by Ma Yuan on behalf of Emperor Guangwu, but though many of his colleagues changed sides he remained loyal to Wei Ao and held Xi county, in the hills to the south of Longxi, as a refuge for him and his family. He died in 32, just as the city came under siege by Guangwu's forces. -HHS 13/3:513-30.

Yang Guang's style Chunqing is the same as the personal name of a man from Guanghan who was an officer in the service of Gongsun Shu in 36. It does not appear, however, that they can have been the same man. Though dates of death can be confused in the records, the two men are said to have come from different commanderies, and Yang Chunqing of Guanghan had a recognised lineage in that region.

Yang Guang 楊光. Prefect of Luoyang in 87, Yang Guang was an ally of Dou Xian, brother of the empress of Emperor Zhang. The Grand Commandant Zheng Hong accused him of improper association, but friends of Yang Guang warned him of the attack. He turned to Dou Xian for support, and Dou Xian accused Zheng Hong of slander. Zheng Hong was forced to offer his resignation, and died soon afterwards. -HHS 33/23: 1156-57.

Yang Hao 楊皓 (d.139). Chancellor of Anping in 139, Yang Hao was implicated in the plotting of the eunuch attendants Zhang Kui and his fellows against the Liang clan. He was sent to prison and died there. -HHS 6:268.

Yang Heng 楊衡; Hongnong. Son of Yang Bao, Yang Heng was younger brother of Yang Zhen. -XTS 71B: 2347.

Yang Hong 楊紘 see Yang Zhong 楊陽終.

Yang Hong 楊弘. Chief clerk to Yuan Shu, after his death in 199 Yang Hong and the general Zhang Xun led Yuan Shu's family and followers from Shouchun. They planned to go south to Sun Ce, but were intercepted by Liu Xun, Administrator of Lujiang, and compelled to join him [Cf. sub Yuan Yin]. -SGZ Wu 1:1104.

Yang Hong 楊洪 [Jixiu 季休] (d.228); Jianwei. Having served in various commandery posts in the time of Liu Zhang, when Liu Bei took over Yi province in 214 Yang Hong became Officer of Merit to the new Administrator Li Yan. Though they had disagreements, and Yang Hong wished to resign, Li Yan recommended him and he became Assistant Officer of the province responsible for Shu commandery. Though not a scholarly man, Yang Hong was loyal and honest, and he impressed Zhuge Liang, who had him appointed first acting and then tenured Administrator of Shu.

Yang Hong later became Headquarters Officer of the province. Following the abdication of Emperor Xian of Han in 220 he joined a petition which cited various works of divination and urged Liu Bei to claim the imperial title. He was later enfeoffed, re-appointed Administrator of Shu, and named a general. -SGZ Shu 11:1013-14, HYZ 10B:158.

Yang Hou 楊厚/后 or Yang Xu 序 [Zhonghuan 仲桓]

(72-153); Guanghan. Son of Yang Tong, when Yang Hou was nine years old he observed how unkindly his mother was treating his elder half-brother Yang Bo. Concerned for the morality of the family, he pretended to be ill, refused food and took to his bed until his mother changed her conduct.

Yang Hou maintained his father's scholarship. In 109 the planet Venus appeared in the Dipper and there was flooding at Luoyang and in many of the provinces. Yang Tong was asked to explain the omens, but he claimed to be too old and blind to see the stars, and had Yang Hou interpret the portents. A traditional interpretation would have said that such phenomena were inspired by the female rule of the regent Dowager Deng, but Yang Hou suggested that it was because there were too many princes of the imperial Liu family at the capital. When the Dowager sent them out to their estates the signs disappeared.

Yang Hou then became a gentleman cadet, and the Dowager showed further interest in his skill at divination. When he failed to find astrological endorsement for a plan to promote her brother Deng Zhi, however, he was dismissed and returned to his home country.

Yang Hou later went to the wilderness of Jianwei, where he took up farming and practiced his arts, but refused invitations and nominations from the provincial and commandery governments. As Emperor An began his personal reign in 121 the Excellency Yang Zhen recommended Yang Hou and a special carriage was sent for him, but again he would not go; he likewise rejected overtures from the Inspector Jiao Can.

In 127 Yang Hou felt obliged to accept an invitation from the new Emperor Shun. As he came by Chang'an he fell ill, but sent in a long memorial warning of the dangers to the dynasty as Han approached 350 years, and recommending various reforms. The emperor sent his physician and a gift of wine and meat, and Yang Hou eventually recovered and arrived at the capital. Appointed a Consultant and later a Palace Attendant, he received great favour. In 129 he forecast plague and locusts, which indeed came to pass, and he also cautioned against a proposed imperial tour to the west; a few years later, in 134, the Qiang disturbances were renewed. Similar warnings were given in subsequent years, relating both to court intrigue, to flood and fire, and to more distant rebellions.

The General-in-Chief Liang Ji and his younger brother Liang Buyi sought to influence Yang Hou with gifts of a carriage and horses and jewellery, but Yang Hou asked to retire on grounds of ill health. Emperor Shun granted his request, and he returned home with further presents of carriages and horses, money and silk.

Yang Hou now practiced and taught the doctrines of Huang-Lao, with thousands of students, while the local people called him "Literary Father" 文父.

The senior official Li Gu continued to sponsor Yang Hou, and during the brief reign of Emperor Zhi in 146 the regent Dowager Liang sent a special carriage to invite him. Yang Hou pleaded age and ill health. The invitation was repeated in 149 and for several years thereafter, but he would never accept. When he died in his early eighties a special message was issued by the court. His disciples built a temple for him, and officers of the commandery held ceremonies there each spring and autumn.

Despite Li Gu's support for Yang Hou, we are told that there was general disappointment at his performance in office, and Li Gu himself observed that Yang Hou and colleagues such as Fan Ying had not proved outstanding. He nonetheless argued that they brought prestige to the court; and indeed Yang Hou appears to have been as active a soothsayer and counsellor as anyone could expect. -HHS 30/20A:1047-50*, HYGZ 10B:144 [as 序]; Vervoorn 90:157, 163, 186, XC 7:15a-b.

Yang Huai 楊淮 or Yang Zhun 準 [Bopi 伯邳]; Jianwei. A grandson of Yang Huan and a man of good official family, Yang Huai was nominated Filial and Incorrupt. In 142 he was recommended by Li Gu and joined the Imperial Secretariat. He became Prefect of Luoyang, and was then Administrator in several commanderies. He returned to the capital as Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate, then rejoined the Imperial Secretariat and became its Director.

An energetic censor, Yang Huai reported several Administrators for abusing their position, including Sun Xun, a nephew of Sun Shou, wife of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. Despite such attacks on the dominant family, Yang Huai became Intendant of Henan and then Director of Retainers; in the latter office he reported Liang Zhong, a kinsman of the General-in-Chief, for failing to attend the New Year court [cf. sub Yang Xiong].

Yang Huai was later Court Architect, and he was noted for the fine quality and successful careers of the men that he recommended for office.

In 173 their fellow-countryman Bian Yu passed by the tombs of Yang Huai and his brother Yang Bi and set up a stele in their honour. -HYGZ 10B:155-56 [as 準], LX 11:11a-b, Nagata 94:200 [both as 淮].

Yang Huai 楊懷 (d.212). In 212 Yang Huai was a general of Liu Zhang in Ba commandery. As Liu Bei prepared to turn against Liu Zhang he arrested Yang Huai and his colleague Gao Pei, charged them with a lack of courtesy, and killed them. -SGZ Shu 2:882, Shu 7:955.

Yang Huan 楊渙 [Mengwen 孟文]; Jianwei. Known for his fine qualities, during the time of Emperor Shun Yang Huan became a member of the Imperial Secretariat and was later Director of Retainers. He urged that repairs be carried out on the Baoye Road through the Qin Ling ranges, which had been damaged during the rebellion of the Qiang. His fellow-countryman Wang Sheng the Administrator of Hanzhong had the work carried out and set up a stele with an inscription in Yang Huan's honour in 148. -HYGZ 10B:155, LS 4:3b-5a.

Yang Hui 楊會; Hanyang. In 187 Yang Hui was Registrar of the commandery when it was attacked by rebels from Liang province. The Administrator Fu Xie was killed in battle, but Yang Hui led his son Fu Gan to safety. -HHS 58/48:1878-79.

Yang Huizong 楊會宗. Son of Yang Yun, Yang Huizong inherited his marquisate, but was later found to have had unauthorised communications with the secretarial offices at the capital. He was stripped of his fief and was sent to exile in Jiuquan with all his household. -XC 8:3b.

Yang Hun 楊混 or Yang Kun 昆; Guanghan: see sub Yang Kuan.

Yang Ji 陽/楊姬, the Lady; Jianwei. [Editions of HYGZ differ as to whether the Lady's surname was 陽 or 楊. Simply because 陽 is the more unusual, I suspect it may be correct.]

The Lady's father, a man of humble family, was imprisoned for some fault. At that time the local gentleman Yang Huan had just been appointed to the Imperial Secretariat, and he was widely admired. The Lady stopped his horse on the road and implored him with tears to intercede for her father. Yang Huan spoke to the commandery and county officials, and the Lady's father was freed. Impressed by her conduct, Yang Huan arranged for the Lady to marry his son Wenfang, and with this fine connection her two brothers received official appointments and the family fortune was made.

Yang Wenfang became Administrator of Hanzhong. He admired Zhao Xuan, and intended to nominate him as Filial and Incorrupt, but became ill and died. The Lady his widow, however, concealed his death until the nomination had been processed, and Zhao Xuan went on to a successful career.

The Lady's eldest son, Yingbo, became Inspector of Ji province, and her second son, Kui, was a high official. Her nephew Yang Bopi, Director of Retainers, had her live at his residence and asked her advice on policy. On one occasion she persuaded him to nominate Wu Fang as Abundant Talent. She lived to see both her protégés, Zhao Xuan and Wu Fang, become Administrators. -HYGZ 10B:159-60.

Yang Ji 羊朞 [Zhongyu 仲魚]; Guanghan. When Yang Ji's father Yang Shen 甚, Inspector of Jiaozhi under Former Han, died in that office, Yang Ji went to bring his body home and was scrupulous to take nothing from the official residence. Having refused several offers of nomination and appointment, Yang Ji later served as Officer of Merit to Cai Mao and other Administrators, and was eventually a magistrate in Henei. -HYGZ 10B:149, 12:225.

Yang Ji 楊奇 see Yang Qi 楊琦/奇.

Yang Ji 楊期 see Yang Qi 楊期.

Yang Jin 楊進, the Lady; Jianwei. Wife of Wang Bo, she showed great respect for her husband's step-mother the Lady Wen Ji, and their women's quarters were a model of harmony. The two women, together with the Lady Zhang Shuji, wife of Yang Jin's son Zun, were all known for their excellent teaching.

When the Lady Wen died she instructed her children to respect the Lady Yang as the senior of the clan. -HYGZ 10B:159, 10C:177.

Yang Jin 楊瑾; Chenliu. LS 27:1b lists a stele to this man as a chief general.

Yang Jin 羊浸/稜 or Yang Qin 侵; Taishan. Member of an old official family, Yang Jin was sponsored by Deng Zhi, brother of the regent Dowager, and became Director of Retainers. -HHS 16/6:614, 31/21:1109.

Yang Jingyang 楊敬楊 or Yang Jing, the Lady; Guanghan. The Lady was the daughter of Yang Wen. Her mother died giving birth and when she was about eight her father was killed by a man whose given name was Sheng. The Lady was brought up by her mother's father Zheng Xing, and at the age of seventeen she was married to Guo Meng.

Guo Meng was a friend of Sheng, who frequently visited the family. The Lady warned her husband that she could not accept this, and that she was obliged to avenge her father. The men disregarded this, but in 142 the Lady killed Sheng as he came to call.

She then intended to kill herself, but Guo Meng persuaded her instead to run away with him. The local magistrate Shuang Sheng began a pursuit, but when he learnt of the circumstances he called it off and the couple soon afterwards benefited from an amnesty.

In 187 the magistrate Xiang Zun celebrated the Lady with a portrait. -HYGZ 10C:177-178.

Yang Ju 楊矩; Hanzhong. Yang Ju was the father of four sons. He died young, but his widow the Lady Liu Taiying brought up the boys, and all rose to substantial office. -HYGZ 10C:170, 12:237.

Yang Jun 楊俊 [Jicai 季才] (d.222); Henei. Yang Jun was a student of Bian Rang, who had great admiration for his ability. As civil war broke out in the early 190s, Yang Jun recognised that Henei could become a cockpit for conflict, and he went with his clans-folk and dependents across the Yellow River to take refuge in the hill country to the south of Henan. More than a hundred families came to join the group, and Yang Jun took charge and care of them, according to their needs and regardless of rank. He met at that time with Sima Lang, Sima Yi and Sima Zhi, and admired their varying qualities.

Some time later Yang Jun led his people back to the north, this time into Bing province. There he met his fellow-countryman Wang Xiang. Orphaned and poor, Wang Xiang had become a servant, and he was flogged for reading books while he was herding sheep. Yang Jun admired him, purchased him from the family which owned him, arranged a marriage for him, and set him up with a house.

In 206, with other leaders of the region, Yang Jun was recommended to Cao Cao by his Inspector of Bing province, Liang Xi, and he was appointed a county magistrate in Wei commandery. He came to the capital as a member of Cao Cao's Imperial Chancellor's staff, was once more a magistrate, this time in Youfufeng, and then Administrator of the important commandery of Nanyang. He paid particular attention to honest administration, established numbers of schools, and he was widely praised by the people.

Yang Jun was later transferred to command of the armies on the south, and when Cao Cao established his kingdom of Wei in 216 he named Yang Zhen as Commandant of the Capital, formally responsible for military matters of the royal fief.

In 219, after the rebellion of Wei Feng and his associates in Ye city had been put down, Yang Jun took over the investigation, determined penalties, then presented a report to the Heir, Cao Pi. Annoyed that Yang Jun had taken such authority upon himself, Cao Pi reviewed the cases, made his own decisions, rather more harshly, and recommended that Yang Jun be demoted to Administrator of Pingyuan. This was done, but he was soon afterwards re-appointed to Nanyang.

Yang Jun was an effective patron of potential talent: two of his protégés were Shen Gu and Wei Xun, both of whom had been common soldiers and both of whom rose to substantial rank; another, Wang Xiang, wrote an encomium to his administration.

On the other hand, Yang Jun had long been a friend of Cao Zhi, the third son of Cao Cao who had at one time rivalled Cao Pi for the succession. Though he did not formally express an opinion, he obviously admired Cao Zhi, and Cao Pi resented it. In 222, now Emperor of Wei, Cao Pi came on progress to Wan city, capital of Nanyang. Because the local market failed to produce some medicine he wanted, he became angry and had Yang Jun arrested. Sima Yi, Wang Xiang and Xun Wei all pleaded on his behalf, kowtowing until the blood ran from their foreheads, but Cao Pi refused to be moved. Observing simply that "I know what I did wrong," Yang Jun killed himself. It is said that all the people mourned for him. -SGZ 23:663-64*.

Yang Kuan 楊寬 [Shuzhong 叔仲]; Guanghan. When a certain Ma Run revealed a private conversation with the Administrator Wu Fang, the local officer Yang Kuan and his brother Kun/Hun spoke on his behalf. Ma Run later repeated his offence, however, and Yang Kuan then told of his private affairs.

When Yang Kuan's friend Ru Kun was killed by Zhang Ming, Yang Kuan caught and bound the murderer, then sent him to Ru Kun's household to confess. -HYGZ 10B:150.

Yang Kuang 楊匡 or Yang Zhang 章 [Shukang 叔康]; Chenliu. A former student of Du Qiao, Yang Kuang became head of the guard at a city gate. When Du Qiao and Li Gu were executed in 147, the General-in-Chief Liang Ji had their corpses displayed and ordered that anyone who approached them would be killed. Li Gu's student Guo Liang carried out mourning rituals, and though Yang Kuang initially sneered at him, he was persuaded to join him; see, however, below.

The two men were arrested and interrogated, but the regent Dowager Liang ordered they should not be punished and granted permission for them to take their masters' remains back to their home countries. Both were widely admired.

After some time teaching in the wilderness of his home commandery, Yang Kuang became a county magistrate in Pei and then transferred to the chief county of Pingyuan. Xu Zeng, Chancellor of that state, was a brother of the court eunuch Xu Huang and Yang Kuang was ashamed to be associated with him. He claimed to be ill and went to herd pigs. -HHS 63/53:2094.

A similar story of the loyal student is told also of Dong Ban, but XC 3:14b and XHS 4:16a have somewhat different accounts. According to their versions, Yang Zhang had become a magistrate in Pei through Du Qiao's good offices, but when Du Qiao died in prison he left that office and returned to his home. Hearing that the bodies of Li Gu and Du Qiao had been left unattended, Yang Zhang went to care for them, dressing them in silk and removing flies and maggots. Yang Zhang evidently acted without extra persuasion, his loyalty was recognised, and permission was granted for the bodies to be properly treated.

XC 3 gives the personal name as Zhang 章; a brief entry in YSS:15a says that Zhang was an alternative personal name.

Yang Kui 楊頰; Jianwei. Son of Yang Wenfang and the Lady Yang Yi, Yang Kui rose to high office. -HYZ 10B:159.

Yang Kui 陽逵; Jincheng. In 215 Yang Kui and Tian Yue took Han Sui's head to Cao Cao and were rewarded with secondary marquisates. Cf., however, sub Han Sui. -SGZ 11:350.

Yang Kun 楊昆 or Yang Hun 混 of Guanghan was the elder brother of Yang Kuan q.v.

Yang Li 楊里; Hongnong. In HHSJJ 54/44:1903, Hui Dong notes that the main text attributes five sons to the Excellency Yang Zhen, and cites XTS 71B:2347 naming Yang Li as the second of these. LS 12:2a, transcribing the stele dedicated at the death of Yang Zhen in 124, mentions only four sons, so Hui Dong suggests that Yang Li died before his father, without holding office.

Yang Liang 羊亮. Evidently an associate of the eunuchs at court, in 163 Yang Liang was Inspector of Qing province. Impeached for misconduct by the Excellency Yang Bing, he was dismissed and very likely executed. -HHS 54/44:1772.

Yang Liang 楊亮; Hongnong. Yang Liang was a son of Yang Qi. When Emperor Xian reached Xu city in 196 he enfeoffed Yang Liang in recognition of his late father's assistance in the escape from Liu Jue and Guo Si at Chang'an. -HHS 54/44:1768.

Yang Ligui 楊禮珪, the Lady; Hanzhong. Daughter of Yang Yuanzhen, the Lady married Chen Sheng. A virtuous woman, she personally carried out the seasonal sacrifices, seeing them as her most honourable duty.

The Lady bore Chen Sheng two sons, of whom the elder married the Lady Zhang Huiying and the younger a woman of the Xun 荀 clan. Both her daughters-in-law came of wealthy families, with several maid-servants, but the Lady Yang admonished them to treat their people well so as to gain their best work. They respected her advice, and in time of trouble later the members of the household showed their loyalty.

The Lady Yang died at the age of eighty-nine. -HYZ 10C:171.

Yang Lin 楊琳. When Yang Lin was a magistrate in Youfufeng, a horde of locusts came past, but did not touch his county. -XHS 5:19b.

Yang Lu 楊魯. A celebrated calligrapher in the time of Emperor Ling, Yang Lu's portrait was painted on the wall of the newly-established School at the Gate of the Vast Capital. -Lidai minghua ji.

Yang Lun 楊倫 [Zhongli 仲理 or Zhonghuan 仲桓?: see below]; Chenliu. A keen scholar when he was young, Yang Lun studied the Ouyang interpretation of the New Text Classic of History with Ding Hong, and became Literary Scholar in his home commandery. He became disillusioned, however, and retired to live in marshlands, where he maintained a private academy of a thousand students.

During the later years of the reign of Emperor An Yang Lun was repeatedly encouraged to take office by the commandery and officials at the capital, and in 121 a carriage was sent by the imperial court. He refused all such invitations on the grounds of ill health, but then he received special nomination from the Minister of Ceremonies Yang Zhen as Understanding the Classics, and he accepted a position as Academician at the University in Luoyang.

In 125 Yang Lun became Tutor to Liu Yanping the King of Qinghe, but when Emperor An died later that year he went to attend the funeral and wept noisily before the imperial palace. Because he had left his post without permission the government of the regent Dowager Yan sent him to prison, but he was released a few months later when Emperor Shun came to the throne. He continued to maintain mourning at the tomb of Emperor An until the end of the ritual period, and was then appointed a Palace Attendant.

Ren Jia had been a corrupt and extortionate county magistrate in Runan. He was transferred to be Administrator of Wuwei, but was later impeached and sent to prison. Over a hundred other senior officials were involved, and Yang Lun sent in a letter urging the emperor to examine and punish all those who had recommended Ren Jia in the past. Citing the cases of the magistrates Zhang Die and Si Xian, and the Inspector Liu Fu, who had also been executed but whose example had not deterred their corrupt colleagues, Yang Lun argued that it was not enough to punish individual wrong-doers. To cut out the roots of corruption those who promoted such men must be held responsible.

When the memorial was presented, senior officials agreed that it was honest and well-intentioned, but questioned whether it was insubordinate. The matter was referred to the Imperial Secretariat, which held that Yang Lun's argument relied upon privy affairs of state. Found guilty of Disrespect, he was sentenced to three years convict service, but because of his long record of loyal advice, a special edict was issued to exempt him. He was dismissed and allowed to return to his home.

In 133 Yang Lun returned as a Palace Counsellor, and in the early 140s the General-in-Chief Liang Ji made him his Chief Clerk. They disagreed about Liang Ji's conduct of government, and Yang Lun was sent out from the capital to become Tutor to Liu Yi the King of Changshan. When he pleaded illness and did not take up the post, the Director of Retainers was instructed to pursue him. Halting in Henei, Yang Lun wrote to justify himself, and though he was again ordered to prison he once more received a pardon.

Yang Lun had now taken up office three times, and on each occasion he had been dismissed and imprisoned for his outspoken criticism. He now returned to scholarship and took no further part in public life. Li Gu recommended him for office once more in 143, but when the carriage came to Yang Lun's gate he made a courteous refusal. He died at home. - HHS 79/69A:2564-65*, XC 3:5a; Tjan 49:147.

HHS 79/69A gives the style of Yang Lun as Zhongli 仲理. The biography of Yang Zhen at HHS 54/44:1761 says that as Minister of Ceremonies about 120 he recommended Yang Lun of Chenliu and four other men as Understanding the Classics; all became Academicians. Commentary to that passage quotes XC 3:5a, which says that Yang Zhen recommended Yang Zhonghuan 仲桓 and four other men. The characters 理 and 桓 have evidently been confused in transmission. Yang Mang 楊莽 [Wengjun 翁君]; Jianwei. Yang Mang was Officer of Merit in his commandery when a new Inspector, Wang Zun VII, arrived. Wang Zun had given instructions that the commanderies should not send anyone to greet him, but Jianwei sent Yang Mang and Shu sent two other officers. Wang Zun was angry, but Yang Mang explained that, just as it was right for him not to ask for special notice, so it was also right for the commanderies to pay him courtesy.

Wang Zun was impressed, and recommended Yang Mang as Abundant Talent. He later became Inspector of Yang province. -HYGZ 10B:158.

Yang Mao 楊茂; Hedong. During the civil war at the beginning of Later Han, Yang Mao became a general under Emperor Guangwu and was enfeoffed as a district marquis in Kuaiji. He transferred there with his family, though the fief was later ended on account of some wrong-doing. -HHS 38/28:1287.

Yang Mao 羊茂 [Shubao 叔寶 or Jibao 季寶]; Yuzhang. As Administrator of Dong commandery, Yang Mao lived austerely and did not allow his wife and children to live in the official residence. -XC 6:11a, XHS 5:18b.

Yang [Mengyuan] 楊孟元 (d.86); Xihe. In 86 a stele was erected to mark the tomb of Yang Mengyuan, who had been a brevet magistrate and Acting Chief Clerk to the Administrator of Xihe. -Nagata 94:34.

Yang Mi 楊密. In 195 Yang Mi was a General of the Household at the captive imperial court in Chang'an. In the course of his quarrel with Li Jue, Guo Si took several senior officials hostage. The Excellency Yang Biao criticised him to his face, and Guo Si was going to kill him, but Yang Mi and others protested and dissuaded him. -SGZ 6:184.

Yang Mou 楊茂 see Yang Mao 楊茂.

Yang Mou 羊茂 see Yang Mao 羊茂.

Yang Mu 羊牧; Jiangxia. A local rebel in 20, Yang Mu is described as an early associate of Wang Kuang. -Dubs 55:402-403, Bn 54:134.

Yang Mu 楊穆 (d.121); Yunzhong. Officer of Merit in 121, Yang Mu accompanied the Administrator Cheng Yan to oppose a Xianbi raid led by the chieftain Qizhijian. As the commandery troops were defeated, Yang Miao sought to shield Cheng Yan with his own body. Both men were killed. -HHS 90/80:1987.

Yang Mu 楊牧 [Menghou 孟侯 or Mengxin 孟信?]; Hongnong. Eldest son of the Excellency Yang Zhen, Yang Mu became Inspector of Jing province and chancellor of a county marquissate in Runan. -HHS 54/44:1768, XTS 71B:2347.

HHS 54/44 mentions only Yang Qi 奇, grandson of Yang Mu, but XTS ascribes two sons to Yang Mu, Yang Tong and Yang Fu.

A tomb complex of the Yang family has been identified in present-day Tongguan county in Shenxi, and Yang Mu is believed to have been one of the occupants: KG 63/1 [Wang Zhongshu].

Yang Pei 楊沛 [Kongqu 孔渠]; Zuopingyi. About 192 Yang Pei held a clerical position in the offices at Chang'an, and was then sent out as a magistrate in Henan. By 195 the region was gripped by famine, and Yang Pei encouraged the people to glean wild roots and dried mulberry fruit, and he organised an even distribution of any surplus food. When Cao Cao came to receive Emperor Xian in 196, he passed through Yang Pei's territory and was grateful when Yang Pei was able to provide his followers with mulberry fruit.

Joining Cao Cao's service, Yang Pei was appointed a magistrate in Yingchuan. When some of Cao Hong's retainers refused to obey the law, Yang Pei punished them, first by beating their feet, then by execution. Recognising his ability, Cao Cao appointed him successively as Administrator of Jiujiang, Dongping and Le'an.

Though Yang Pei was noted for good civil administration, he quarrelled with one of the military commanders and was sentenced to five years convict service. Before his term was ended, in 209 Cao Cao went on campaign to the southeast. He was concerned at unrest in the region about Ye city, so he summoned

Yang Pei from his convict gang and appointed him magistrate there. Even before Yang Pei had arrived, his reputation was sufficient for Cao Hong and Liu Xun, whose men had been causing the most trouble, to send warning that they must change their ways.

Yang Pei was later transferred to be Protector of the Qiang, and he accompanied the army as Cao Cao attacked the north-western warlords in 211. Placed in command at Mengjin on the Yellow River, he arrested and ill-treated an officer of the court who attempted to make an unauthorised crossing: the official complained to Cao Cao, but Cao Cao remarked only that he was lucky to have escaped alive.

After the conquest of the northwest, Yang Pei succeeded Zhang Ji as Intendant of Jingzhao. He held that office until the time of Cao Pi, when he was recalled to the capital as a Consultant.

Yang Pei always lived very frugally, taking nothing for himself and maintaining a minimal household. He later retired to Henan, where he lived in a simple hut while his wife and children went hungry and cold. -SGZ 15:486.

Yang [Pianzu] 羊翩祖 see Yang Zhi 羊陟. FSTY 3:23 refers to Yang Pianzu as Intendant of Henan. It seems likely that Pianzu has been miswritten for Sizu 嗣祖, the style of Yang Zhi, who held that office about 178.

Yang Pu 羊溥. Minister of Ceremonies in 151, Yang Pu endorsed a proposal to grant Liang Ji extraordinary honours, but the Excellency Huang Qiong put an end to the idea. -HHS 61/51:2035. This is surely the same person as Yang Fu 傅.

Yang Qi 楊期; Chenliu. LS 27:1b lists a stele to this man, sometime magistrate in Runan.

Yang Qi 楊琦/奇 [Gongting 公挺 or Gongwei 公偉]; Hongnong. Grandson of Yang Mu, Yang Qi was learned in the classics and became a Palace Attendant under Emperor Ling. On one occasion he angered the emperor when he compared him to his predecessor Emperor Huan; the ruler observed that he was a true descendant of the Excellency Yang Zhen, and would also attract strange birds to his tomb [see sub Yang Zhen].

Yang Qi later became Administrator of Runan, but returned to the capital in 189 as Minister of the Guards and Palace Attendant to the new Emperor Xian, now under the control of Dong Zhuo. He accompanied the court west to Chang'an, and remained there with the emperor.

In 195, as Li Jue and Guo Si quarrelled, Yang Qi dissuaded the emperor from showing his resentment of Li Jue, but then joined Zhong Yao and others in a plot with Liu Jue's officer Yang Feng to kill Li Jue. The plan was unsuccessful but Yang Feng set himself up independently and Li Jue was weakened.

Yang Qi attended the emperor as he made his escape from Chang'an later that year, but died soon afterwards, probably on the troubled journey back to the east. After Emperor Xian reached Xu city in 196 he enfeoffed Yang Qi's son Liang, in gratitude for his father's service. -HHS 54/44:1768, SGZ 6:184-86, HHJ 28:336-37, XC 3:5a-b.

Yang Qiao 楊喬 [Shengda 聖達]; Kuaiji. Son of Yang Fu 扶, in the late 160s Yang Qiao was an officer of the Imperial Secretariat. A good-looking man of great ability, he presented several policies to the court and was praised by Dou Wu. Emperor Huan wanted him to marry an imperial princess, but he firmly refused; he went back home, closed his gates and starved himself to death. -HHS 38/28:1287, 69/59:2240, XC 5:4a-4b; deC 89:83-86. [One text of XC has the personal name miswritten as Gao 高 and the style as Shengjian 聖建.]

Yang Qiao was later cited by Yu Fan as a worthy man of Kuaiji. -SGZ Wu 12:1325.

Yang Qin 羊侵 see Yang Jin 羊浸/侵.

Yang Qiu 陽球 [Fangzheng 方正] (d.179); Yuyang. A man of good official family, Yang Qiu was arrogant, skilled in arms and a student of the Legalist tradition. He acquired an early reputation by gathering a gang of young men to kill a local officer who had insulted his mother. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, he joined the Imperial Secretariat, where he became known for his knowledge of precedent, and then became a county magistrate in Pingyuan. The Chancellor of the state arrested him for excessive cruelty, but an amnesty soon afterwards brought his release.

Yang Qiu was then recruited into the offices of the Excellencies, graded First Class, and sent as Administrator of Jiujiang to deal with trouble amongst the non-Chinese people of the hills. He put down the rebellion and executed several local officials for corruption. Returning to Pingyuan as state Chancellor about 176, he issued a proclamation recalling his record at county level: all became quiet. As a drought developed, however, harsh officials were dismissed to placate the elements. Yang Qiu, who was particularly fierce, was summonsed to the Ministry of Justice, but Emperor Ling recalled his good work in Jiujiang, and had him appointed to a holding office as Consultant.

Yang Qiu then became Court Architect, an office which entailed the supervision of convict labourers. He had a quarrel with the minister Cai Zhi and in 178, when Cai Zhi's nephew Cai Yong lost favour at court for his criticism of the eunuchs, Yang Qiu sought to kill both men. He was unsuccessful and was later dismissed, but was then made Director of the Secretariat. He sent in a memorial against the School at the Gate of the Vast Capital, favoured project of Emperor Ling, but it was predictably not accepted.

Yang Qiu had taken the adoptive daughter of the senior eunuch Cheng Huang as his secondary wife 小妻, and he was an ally of Cheng Huang against the Cai family. He bitterly disapproved of the corruption and misrule of Wang Fu, Cao Jie and their fellows, however, and he spoke many times of how much he wanted to be made Director of Retainers so that he might deal with them. In the summer of 179 he gained his wish, and immediately presented memorials against Wang Fu, his sons and many of their associates, including the Grand Commandant Duan Jiong. All were arrested and tortured to death; and Yang Qiu himself took part in the exercise.

Yang Qiu intended to deal next with Cao Jie, but Cao Jie had the emperor transfer him to be Minister of the Guards. Yang Qiu protested unavailingly, but other enemies of the eunuchs still hoped to reinstate him as Director of Retainers, and in the winter Chen Qiu, Liu He and Liu Na agreed to recommend him. Yang Qiu's wife the Lady Cheng, however, told her father the eunuch Cheng Huang, and Cao Jie found out. He accused the group of treasonable faction, and they were arrested and killed.

Fan Ye classified Yang Qiu as a Stern Official 酷吏. -HHS 77/67:2498-2501*, 56/46:1834, XC 5:8a; deC 89:155-157, 162-163.

Yang Qiu 陽球, wife of: see the Lady Cheng, adopted daughter of the eunuch Cheng Huang 程璜 II.

Yang Qiu 楊秋; Anding. In 211 Yang Qiu was one of the north-western allies opposed to Cao Cao. Defeated at the battle of Huayin, he retreated to his home country. Cao Cao pursued him and forced him to surrender, but then allowed him to continue in power and granted him the title of a general. He later took part in campaigns against non-Chinese rebels and received enfeoffment.

When Cao Pi took the imperial title, Yang Qiu was among the sponsors of a commemorative stele. -SGZ 1:34-36, 26:734, Shu 6:946, LS 19:3b; Goodman 98:196.

Yang Rang 楊讓; Hongnong. Son of Yang Zhen, Yang Rang became chancellor of Zhao and of Changshan. -LS 12:2a. A tomb complex of the Yang family has been identified in present-day Tongguan county in Shenxi, and Yang Rang is believed to have been one of the occupants: KG 63/1 [Wang Zhongshu].

Yang Ren 楊仁 [Wenyi 文義]; Ba. During the reign of Emperor Guangwu Yang Ren travelled to Luoyang to study the Classic of Poetry according to the Han school of the New Text. After some years he returned home to teach privately, but later became Officer of Merit in his commandery and was then nominated Filial and Incorrupt. He became a gentleman cadet, and was recommended by the Minister of Ceremonies to be an Academician, but since he had not reached the age of fifty, as required by the old regulations, he declined the appointment.

Emperor Ming chose Yang Ren as an officer of the guards in the Northern Palace, and gave him audience to seek his opinions on policy. Yang Ren presented a series of recommendations, notably on the need to recruit worthy men and to restrain imperial relatives by marriage. The emperor was impressed and presented him with cash and silk cloth.

When Emperor Ming died, the Ma family of the new Dowager came to power. Various relatives sought to enter the palace, but Yang Ren kept them back by force, and insisted on controlled access. After Emperor Zhang had taken the throne, the Ma laid accusations against him, but the emperor admired his loyalty.

Yang Ren became a magistrate in Guanghan, where he was known for encouraging scholarship and opening new farmland. He left office in mourning for his elder brother, but returned during the 80s as a clerk in the offices of the Excellency Huan Yu. He disapproved so strongly of the poor conduct of his colleague Song Zhang that he would not speak with him or share his mat; it is said that people admired his principles.

Yang Ren later became magistrate of his home county in Ba commandery. He died in that office. -HHS 79/69B:2574*, HYGZ 12:219.

Yang Ren 楊任. Father or grandfather of Yang Xin, Yang Ren was Administrator of Chenliu about 100. -LS 18:4a-5a.

Yang Ru 羊儒; Taishan. Son of Yang Jin/Qin, Yang Ru became Minister of Ceremonies under Emperor Huan. -HHS 31/21:1109.

Yang Ru 楊儒; Hongnong. In 188, as the Liang province rebels under Wang Guo approached Chang'an, the Intendant He Xun persuaded Emperor Ling to commission private troops. Yang Ru was one of five leaders of local gentry who received title as commandants, to raise their own regiments and join the imperial forces under He Xun's command. -HHS 58/48:1883.

Yang Shan 楊禪 or Yang Chan [Wenjie 文節]; Liang. Yang Shan was some time a member of the Imperial Secretariat. About 180 he and his brother Yang Yan had stele erected in their honour. -SJZ 24:2b.

Yang Shang 楊上; Hanzhong. Yang Shang was a prospective husband for the widow Du Ci, but she refused to marry again. -HYGZ 10C:177.

Yang She 羊葉 see Yang Ye 羊葉.

Yang Shen 陽沈; Hongnong. A local leader who had taken title as a general, Yang Shen surrendered to Emperor Guangwu's officer Feng Yi in 26. -DGHJ 9:3b.

Yang [Shugong] 楊叔恭; Youfufeng. In 171, members of the staff of Yan province subscribed to a stele in honour of their former Inspector Yang Shugong, which was set up by the provincial headquarters at Changyi in Shanyang. -SJZ 8:22a, Nagata 94:190.

Yang Shun 楊舜. Administrator of Chenliu about 110, Yang Shun observed the filial piety of Gao Shi and recommended him for office. -SGZ 24:683.

Yang Song 楊竦 [Zigong 子恭] (d.119); Shu. An Assistant Officer of Yi province, in 119 Yang Song was chosen by the Inspector Zhang Qiao to take command of operations against the rebel non-Chinese in the south and west led by Fengli. At first the enemy were too numerous to attack, but an imperial letter gave Yang Song authority to raise troops from three commanderies. He did this both by impressment and by generous rewards, then heavily defeated the rebels, killing great numbers, taking some prisoners, and acquiring quantities of booty. Rewarding his men, he received the surrender of Fengli and the remaining enemy chieftains, then reported against ninety officials who had forced the people into rebellion by their oppression and extortion: they were sentenced to commuted execution.

Yang Song now became ill and died from wounds. Though his achievements were known within the province, they had not been reported to the throne. Zhang Qiao mourned him deeply; he had a stele carved with Yang Song's likeness and an inscription in his memory, and his portrait was displayed in the Eastern Pavilion at Luoyang -HHS 86/76:2853-54, HYGZ 10A:136.

Yang Sun 羊孫 see Yangsun 羊孫.

Yang Tiao 楊調 [Junju 君舉]; Yingchuan. As Commandant of Chengyang county in Jiyin in 172, Yang Tiao was involved in the restoration of the Spiritual Terrace 靈臺 associated with the temple of the sage Emperor Yao 堯. -LS 1:8a-10a.

Yang Tong 楊統 [Zhongtong 仲通]; Guanghan. Son of Yang Chunqing, when his father killed himself in 36 he entrusted Yang Tong with a portfolio of black silk containing secret writings, which he suggested might be useful to the new regime of Han. Yang Tong studied under Zhou Xun in Jianwei, under Zheng Boshan of his own commandery and under Yan Gao. He became skilled in astrology, and in divination according to the Diagrams from the Yellow River and the Book from the Luo, Hetu Luoshu 河圖洛書.

During the reign of Emperor Ming Yang Tong received provincial recommendation as Sincere and Upright and was selected into the offices at the capital. HYGZ says that Yang Tong was on the staff of the Excellency over the Masses Lu Gong, and worked with him on the lore of the pitchpipes 音律. He may indeed have worked with Lu Gong, but Lu Gong was Excellency over the Masses only from 101 to 104 and from 107 to 109, so the reference to his high office at this early time is an anachronism.

Early in the reign of Emperor Zhang, Yang Tong was magistrate of Pengcheng county. His administration was generous, wind and rain came at the appropriate times, auspicious grain 嘉禾 sprouted in the courtyard of his yamen, and the people praised his spiritual powers. As a severe drought affected the region, Yang Tong called the forces of Yin and Yang to bring rain to his territory, and when the Administrator Zong Zhan had him perform the same ritual for the whole commandery the drought was broken.

Appointed to court as a Household Counsellor and a Palace Attendant, Yang Tong was consulted about any ominous portent. He served as Thrice Venerable of the State at the annual ceremony of Serving the Aged, and died at the age of ninety.

Yang Tong presented a handbook and commentary to his school of thought 家法章句 to the throne, and an explanation of the Nei chan 內讖 apocrypha, but HYGZ observes that the text remains obscure. -HHS 30/20A:1047, HYGZ 10B:143-44.

Yang Tong 楊統 (113-168); Hongnong. Elder son of Yang Mu and a grandson of the Excellency Yang Zhen, Yang Tong acquired a local reputation for virtue, and as Emperor Shun was on progress to the west in 137 he received a special summons for appointment as a gentleman cadet. He served as Assistant in Changshan and in Jianwei, was nominated as Abundant Talent, became a county magistrate in Runan and was then Administrator of Jincheng, where his government was evidently celebrated with a stele [LS 27:4a]. Returning to the capital as a senior assistant to the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, he was later a Consultant and a General of the Household.

Yang Tong died as Chancellor of Pei, and at the instigation of his students and clients a stele was set up to commemorate the achievements of his family and kinsmen. -LS 7:15b-17b, 20:4a-b, 23:2a; XTS 71B: 2347.

A tomb complex of the Yang family has been identified in present-day Tongguan county in Shenxi, and Yang Tong is believed to have been one of the occupants: KG 63/1 [Wang Zhongshu].

Yang Tong 楊統; Shu. Son of Yang Song, Yang Tong became a high official but was later forced from office. -HYGZ 12:214.

Yang Taibo 楊太白; Pingyuan. A scholar of the Confucian classics, during the late 20s Yang Taibo had Ma Yan as a student. Though he is described as a man of Pingyuan, it seems likely that he had taken refuge in the northwest from the disturbances of the Red Eyebrows and other bandits in the eastern plain. -HHS 24/14:859.

Yang Tuo 楊佗. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates in 125, Yang Tuo took part in the coup led by Sun Cheng which destroyed the Yan clan and placed Liu Bao, Emperor Shun, upon the throne. He was rewarded with a county marquissate in Nan commandery.

After Sun Cheng had forced the disgrace of the emperor's favourite Zhang Fang in 127, he and Yang Tuo and their colleagues were all sent out to their fiefs, but in the following year the emperor recalled their good work and they were permitted to return to the capital.

Yang Tuo was later one of a group of eunuchs associated with the former wet-nurse Song E. Found guilty in 137 of corruption and making false accusations, they were sent away to their fiefs and their pensions were reduced by a quarter. -HHS 78/68:2516-18.

Yang Wei 楊偉 (d.42); Ba. In 42 the military officer Shi Xin mutinied in Chengdu, capital of Shu commandery. He took title as Grand Marshal and sent out a summons of recruitment. Yang Wei and Xu Rong raised several thousand men in Ba commandery to support him.

Emperor Guangwu's general Wu Han came with ten thousand men to deal with the rebellion. He took Chengdu after a three months siege, then sailed down the river to attack Yang Wei and Xu Rong. Their troops scattered, the leaders were executed, and several hundred followers and their families were transferred down the Yangzi to Changsha and Nan commandery. -HHS 18/8:683.

Yang Wen 楊文; Guanghan. After Yang Wen's first wife died giving birth to his daughter Yang Jingyang, Yang Wen married again. His second wife, Li Ping, bore him a son and another daughter, but soon afterwards Yang Wen was killed by a man whose given name was Sheng. Yang Wen was later avenged by his daughter Yang Jingyang. -HYZ 10B:153, 10C:177.

Yang Wen 楊文, second wife of: see the Lady Li Ping 李平.

Yang Wenfang 楊文方; Jianwei. Son of Yang Huan, he married the Lady Yang Ji. He became Administrator of Hanzhong and died in that office. -HYZ 10B:159.

Yang Xi 楊翕. In 35 the Han commander Cen Peng was moving up the Fu River into Guanghan, approaching Gongsun Shu's capital Chengdu from the east. A substantial body of his army comprised surrendered troops who had changed allegiance and, despite initial success, the new recruits became unsettled.

Cen Peng led his own men back, in order to move up the Min River directly against Chengdu from the south; he left Zang Gong to face Gongsun Shu's defences under Yan Cen, with Yang Xi as Protector of the Army to maintain order. Zang Gong later obtained further reinforcements and achieved a crushing victory, so it appears that Yang Xi's disciplinary program was successful. -HHS 17/7:662.

Yang Xi 羊喜; Longxi. In 35 Yang Xi was Officer of Merit to the Administrator Ma Yuan. The Registrar was Niu Chong, and people joked about the three animals which held power: the horse 馬, the ox 牛 and the sheep 羊. -FSTY 5f:120 and HHSJJ 24/14:883.

Yang Xi 楊熹/熙. Inspector of You province in the late 170s, Yang Xi was praised in memorials presented by Yang Zhi and by Cai Yong. -HHS 60/50B:1995 [熹], 67/57:2209 [熙].

Yang Xi 楊戲/羲 [Wenran 文然] (d.261); Jianwei. Born about 210, Yang Xi was an officer of Shu-Han respected for his honesty. He served under Zhuge Liang and Jiang Wei, though he was later dismissed and died a commoner. -SGZ Shu 15:1077-78*.

In 241 Yang Xi published Ji-Han fuchen zan 季漢輔臣贊 "Praises of Ministers Who have Supported Junior Han;" the collection was later quoted extensively and annotated by Chen Shou. SGZ Shu 15:1080-90.

Yang Xian 楊賢. In 30, after the death of his brother Du Cheng, the Confucianist Du Lin obtained permission from the warlord Wei Ao of Tianshui to return to the east. Soon afterwards, Wei Ao regretted he had given approval and sent his retainer Yang Xian to kill Du Lin. When he caught up, however, Yang Xian saw Du Lin hauling a small cart and mourning his brother. Unable to kill such a worthy man, he turned away. -HHS 27/17:936.

Yang [Xiaozu] 楊孝祖 Runan. Recommended for office by the judge of character Xu Shao, Yang Xiaozu became celebrated for his quality. -SGZ 23:658.

Yang Xin 楊信 Bohe 伯和) (79-150). A gentleman of good official family, whose ancestors had migrated into Yi province, Yang Xin was honoured as Thrice Venerable of his county and a stele was set up when he died. -LS 18:4a-5a.

Yang Xiong 楊雄. As Director of Retainers about 140, Yang Xiong reported the Bearer of the Mace Liang Ji for having failed to attend the New Year court assembly on a false excuse of illness. Liang Ji was fined. -XC 8:12a.

The fragmentary biography of Liang Ji in XC 1: 13b has an identical entry, but HYZ 10B:156 tells how the Director of Retainers Yang Huai 淮 [or Zhun 準] reported Liang Ji's kinsman Liang Zhong for the same offence some years later. It is probable that XC is referring to the same incident, and in this instance I regard the HYZ account as more likely.

Assuming that the personal name of this man is indeed written as 雄, he must be distinguished from his near-namesake 楊揚雄 (53 BC-15 AD), the celebrated scholar and composer of rhapsodies of Former Han: QHX:637-639.

Yang Xiu 楊脩 [Dezu 德祖] (175?-219); Hongnong. Yang Xiu was a son of Yang Biao by his wife the Lady Yuan, a sister of Yuan Shu.

During the 200s Yang Xiu was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became Registrar to Cao Cao as Imperial Chancellor. With close understanding of his master and wide knowledge of military and civil affairs, he had influence throughout the government and court.

A friend of Cao Zhi, Yang Xiu supported his claim for succession against Cao Pi, but he was later involved in scandal when Cao Zhi rode through the imperial gate at Ye city. Still more serious, it was found that Yang Xiu had revealed to Cao Zhi what matters would be discussed in council, so that he might prepare arguments in advance to impress his father [for a variant on this story, see Mather 76:292]. It was now recalled that Yang Xiu was related to the false emperor Yuan Shu, and in 219 he was put to death as a traitor.

A man of scholarship and literary skill, also known as an artist, Yang Xiu left a quantity of work, including poems, rhapsodies, official documents and letters, none of which have survived. Given his political history, it is not surprising that Cao Pi did not rank him with the Seven Masters of the Jian'an period. -HHS 54/44:1789-90*, SGZ 19:558-60*; Yao Zhenzong:2409, Mather 76:602.

Yang Xu 楊序 i.e. Yang Hou 楊厚. -HYGZ 10B:146.

Yang Xu 羊續 [Xingzu 興祖] (142-189); Taishan. Son of Yang Ru, Yang Xu was made a gentleman cadet on account of his family's long service, then entered the offices of the General-in-Chief Dou Wu. When Dou Wu was destroyed in 168 Yang Xu was proscribed from office.

After the end of proscription in 184, Yang Xu returned to the offices of the Excellencies and then became Administrator of Lujiang. Yellow Turbans attacked the capital, Shu city, burning the suburbs and outworks, but Yang Xu called able-bodied citizens to defend the wall, had the old and weak carry water against the fire, and gathered men to drive the enemy away. He then put down a rising in the hills, killing many of insurgents, forced the remainder to surrender and turned them to farming. The commandery was peaceful.

In 186 Yang Xu was made Administrator of Nanyang, replacing Qin Jie who had been killed by mutineers under Zhao Ci. He first went there in secret, to study the customs, hear the songs, and ascertain the quality of the magistrates and the people; when he formally entered the commandery he acted accordingly, impressing everyone with his knowledge. Raising troops in combination with the provincial army, he killed Zhao Ci and received submission from all other rebels.

Yang Xu objected to the extravagances of powerful men, his clothing and equipment were plain and simple, and he refused all gifts. In 189 he was offered appointment as Grand Commandant, but it was expected that a fine should be paid for that office. When the imperial messenger came, Yang Xu displayed his humble circumstances and explained that he could not afford to offer anything. Emperor Ling was quite displeased. Yang Xu was named Minister of Ceremonies, but died before he could take the post.

Yang Xu left no property, but according to regulations a million cash in funerary expenses were to be paid for an officer of senior rank who died in office. Yang Xu had asked this not be taken from the treasury of Nanyang, and an edict instructed his home commandery of Taishan to pay his family. -HHS 31/21:1109-11*, XC 1:9a-10a.

Yang Xuan 楊璇/璇 [Jiping 機平]; Kuaiji. Son of Yang Fu 扶 and younger brother of Yang Qiao, Yang Xuan was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, and in the time of Emperor Ling he became Administrator of Lingling. In 180 there was a major rising in the south of Jing province, and the rebels laid siege to his headquarters. Yang Xuan surprised the enemy by rolling fire-carts against them, and they were heavily defeated.

Yang Xuan reported his success, but the Inspector Zhao Kai, who had allies at court, accused him of making false claims. Though Yang Xuan sent in a memorial to defend himself, he was brought to Luoyang in a cage cart. There, he bit his arm till he drew blood, then used it to write a true account on his clothing, and had one of his kinsmen present it in secret at the palace. An imperial edict dismissed the charges, Zhao Kai was punished, and Yang Xuan returned to office.

Yang Xuan served with distinction in three more commanderies, but left office in Bohai. He was later recommended by Zhang Wen, Director of the Imperial Secretariat, and became his Deputy. He retired on grounds of ill health and died at home. -HHS 38/28: 1287-88*, XC 2:3b-4a, XHS 3:12a-b; deC 89:165-166.

Yang Xun 楊訓; Julu. A protégé of Cui Yan, in 216 he wrote a eulogy of Cao Cao which was criticised for excessive flattery. Cui Yan wrote to reassure him, but the letter was misunderstood as an indication of disloyalty, and Cui Yan died in prison. -SGZ 12:369; deC 96:502-503.

Yang Yan 楊彥; Liang. Yang Yan served as a county magistrate in Taishan. About 180 he and his brother Yang Shan had stele erected in their honour. -SJZ 24: 2b.

Yang Ye 羊葉 or Yang She (d.138); Wu. A man of non-Chinese [Yue 越] origin, in 138 Yang Ye held command of local auxiliaries. He joined his brother Yang Zhen, who was acting Commandery Assistant, in a mutiny and general uprising, but they were defeated and killed by the Administrator Wang Heng. -HHS 6: 267, 101/11:3245.

Yang Yi 楊/陽姬, the Lady: see the Lady Yang Ji 楊/陽姬.

Yang Yi 楊異; Hedong. About 26 Yang Yi was a local leader of bandits. Guangwu's government sent Du Shi to attack him, and Yang Yi planned to escape across the Yellow River. Du Shi sent a raiding party to burn the boats, then conscripted commandery troops and led a surprise attack of horsemen against the enemy. Yang Yi was killed and his following destroyed. -HHS 31/21:1094.

Yang Yi 楊邑; Lelang. About 25 the local leader Wang Tiao killed the Administrator appointed by the Gengshi Emperor and took the title for himself. Yang Yi became a local officer to deal with crime under the new regime.

In 30 Emperor Guangwu named Wang Zun as Administrator of Lelang, and sent him with an army against Wang Tiao. Before he arrived, Yang Yi joined the local gentleman Wang Hong to kill Wang Tiao and welcome the Han forces. He was rewarded with enfeoffment. -HHS 76/66:2464.

Yang Yi 陽儀; Liaodong. In 190 Yang Yi was a close confidant of Gongsun Du. -SGZ 8:252.

Yang Yi 楊懿; Hongnong. Intendant of Henan for Dong Zhuo in 191, Yang Yi was driven away by Zhu Jun. -HHS 71/61:2312.

Yang Yi 楊儀 [Weigong 威公] (d.235); Nan. About 210 Yang Yi was Registrar to Cao Cao's Inspector of Jing province Fu Qun, but he went over to Guan Yu, who appointed him Officer of Merit. He later met Liu Bei in Yi province, who was impressed by his strategic thinking and took him onto his staff.

In 219 Yang Yi became a member of the Secretariat for Liu Bei's newly-proclaimed kingdom of Han, but he quarrelled with the Director, Liu Ba, and was demoted to be Administrator of Hongnong, a territory outside the state's area of control.

In 225 Zhuge Liang took Yang Yi onto his staff, where he did well and achieved high rank. He was a bitter enemy of the general Wei Yan, and though Zhuge Liang was able to use both men, after his death in 234 Yang Yi destroyed Wei Yan. He had expected to take Zhuge Lang's place, but Jiang Wan was given the senior position. Yang Yi complained, but was instead forced to kill himself. -SGZ Shu 10:1004-05*.

Yang Yi 楊義 miswritten for Yang Xi 楊戲/義.

Yang Yin 楊音; Donghai. About 15 Yang Yin was chief of a large group of local bandits in a region which had suffered seriously from flooding of the Yellow River over the previous ten years. He later brought his men to join Fan Chong in the Tai Shan massif and, with other leaders, they formed the confederation known as the Red Eyebrows 赤眉.

The general account of this bandit horde is given sub Fan Chong, but Yang Yin and two other men from Donghai, Xie Lu and Xu Xuan, evidently maintained an association: in 24 they led the column which went through southern Henan into Hongnong and the capital region, while Fan Chong and his fellow-countryman Pang An took a southern route through Nanyang.

As the Red Eyebrows set up their nominal imperial regime in 25, Yang Yin took title as Minister of Agriculture. There was no proper court or government, and the bandits plundered Chang'an and its territory until they had exhausted it. Yang Yin protested furiously to his colleagues about their conduct and, in contrast to Xie Lu, who had Liu Xuan the former Gengshi Emperor killed, he used his authority to protect Liu Liang, uncle of Liu Xiu Emperor Guangwu, who had also been taken captive.

Early in 27, having at last abandoned the old capital region, the Red Eyebrows were forced to surrender to Guangwu. The leaders' lives were spared and they were ordered to settle in the neighbourhood of the new capital, Luoyang, where they could be kept under observation. Soon afterwards Yang Yin was rewarded for his generous treatment of Liu Liang by enfeoffment as a secondary marquis; he was later allowed to return to his native district, and he died at home of old age. -HHS 11/1:478-86, 103/13:3268.

Yang Yin 楊殷. A magistrate in Ba commandery, about 150 Yang Yin was attacked by bandits. -HYGZ 1:6.

Yang [Yingbo] 楊穎伯; Jianwei. Son of Yang Wenfang and the Lady Yang Yi, Yang Yingbo became Inspector of Ji province. -HYGZ 10B:159.

Yang Yong 楊雍. Early in 185 Yang Yong succeeded Song Nie as Inspector of Liang, but he could do little to deal with the uprising in that province. -HHS 58/48:1881; deC 84:149.

Yang Yong 楊顥 [Zizhao 子昭] (d.235); Nan. A kinsman of Yang Yi, Yang Yong followed him to join Liu Bei in Yi province. He was appointed Administrator of Ba Commandery, and later joined the staff of Zhuge Liang, who respected his opinions. He died about 230. -SGZ Shu 15:1083.

Yang You 楊由 [Aihou 哀侯]; Shu. As a young man Yang Yu studied the Book of Changes, and he became expert on divination by the planets, by wind and weather, and by the force of qi 氣. As Literary Scholar of the commandery under the Administrator Lian Fan in the early 80s, he interpreted a flock of magpies gathered on the armoury as indicating trouble on the frontier, he used a gust of wind to foretell the arrival of messengers bringing oranges, and he saw a fuss amongst pigeons as the sign of an approaching quarrel and murder. Many of his predictions came true, and Lian Fan was suitably impressed.

Yang You compiled a book entitled Qiping 其平 in more than ten pian, and he also possessed a work entitled Bingyun tu 兵雲圖, being a table for predicting the course of warfare from the appearance of clouds. As Dou Xian prepared to attack the Xiongnu in the late 80s he asked the Administrator Gao An to send him a copy. Yang You objected on the grounds that Dou Xian lacked virtue and would come to a bad end. Gao An probably sent the book, but Dou Xian was indeed later destroyed. -HHS 82/72A:2716*, HYGZ 10A:134; Ngo 76:92-94, DeWoskin 83:56-57.

Yang Yu 楊豫. Son of Yang Huizong, after his father was disgraced, Yang Yu went with the rest of his household to exile in Jiuquan. He later sought permission to return to his home country inside China. His petition cited the good service of his grandfather Yang Yun, who had been rewarded with enfeoffment.

-XC 8:3b.

Yang Yu 陽譽; Ba. As a local officer in 154, Yang Yu joined his colleagues in urging the Administrator Dan Wang to send in a report describing the difficulty of maintaining control over the great area of the commandery, and recommending that the territory be divided into smaller commanderies. The court did not agree. -HYGZ 1:5.

Yang Yuan 楊原. At the beginning of 190, as armies approached from the east of China to oppose Dong Zhuo in Luoyang, Yang Yuan was magistrate of Zhongmou, in the east of Henan. As the county was on the main line of the invaders' approach, Yang Yuan wanted to abandon his office and run away, but the local leader Ren Jun persuaded him to take over his neighbouring counties and raise troops. Yang Yuan named Ren Jun as his Registrar, and Ren Jun put in a formal claim to have Yang Yuan recognised as Acting Intendant of Henan 表行尹事.

In fact, Ren Jun's recommendation was meaningless, for the current Intendant, Zhu Jun, was still in the capital under the government controlled by Dong Zhuo; he did not rebel against Dong Zhuo until 191, and he kept the title when he did. It does appear, however, that Yang Yuan controlled the eastern part of the commandery for a time, and he may well have laid a claim.

Soon afterwards Cao Cao made a sortie into Henan. Ren Jun arranged for him to take control of the territory, but Cao Cao was defeated at Rongyang, further to the west, and was forced to withdraw. Yang Yuan is not heard of again. -SGZ 16:489.

Yang Yuan 羊元 see Chen Yuan 陳元 of Chenliu. -XC 5:5a.

Yang Yuanqun 羊元羣; Henan. Member of a powerful local family, Yang Yuanqun held appointment in Beihai. He was extremely corrupt, with a passion for luxury: he even equipped the lavatories in the official residence with strange devices, which he took with him when he left.

About 164, Li Ying the Intendant of Henan reported on his crimes, but Yang Yuanqun was able to bribe the palace eunuchs and they made accusations against Li Ying. Li Ying was dismissed and sentenced to convict service. -HHS 67/57:2192.

Yang Yuanzhen 楊元珍; Hanzhong. Yang Yuanzhen was the eldest son of Yang Ju. As his father died when he was young, Yang Yuanzhen began to drink to excess.

His mother the Lady Liu Taiying admonished him, asking how he could care for his brothers and sisters in such a fashion. Yang Yuanzhen apologised and mended his ways, and he and his brothers all became noted gentlemen and rose to substantial office.

Yang Yuanzhen was the father of the Lady Yang Ligu, who married Chen Sheng. -HYZ 10C:171.

Yang Yue 楊岳; Hanyang. A younger cousin of Yang Fu, in 213 he brought family troops to defend Ji city against Ma Chao. When the city surrendered Yang Yue was imprisoned, but a few weeks later, in a coup arranged by Yang Fu, the city was taken from Ma Chao and Yang Yue was released. -SGZ 25:701-02.

Yang Yun 楊暉 was enfeoffed as a marquis. -XC 8:3b.

Yang Zan 楊贊/瓚. In 185 the Excellency Cui Lie argued that Liang province was in such a state of rebellion the territory should be abandoned. Fu Xie, at that time a Consultant, remarked that Cui Lie himself was the major problem, and should be executed. Yang Zan 贊 was in attendance as a junior officer of the Imperial Secretariat. He protested against such abuse of a senior minister in open court, and Fu Xie was required to justify himself.

In 191, after the move of the capital to Chang'an, Wang Yun was planning to kill Dong Zhuo, who was still near Luoyang. Yang Zan 瓚 was Protector of the Qiang, and Wang Yun arranged for him to act as General of the Left and go east with an army. Pretending to attack Yuan Shu in Nanyang, he would then turn against Dong Zhuo. Dong Zhuo became suspicious and ordered the troops to stay at Chang'an, so the scheme was abandoned.

Yang Zan 瓚 later returned to the Secretariat, and he was peripherally involved in the successful assassination of Dong Zhuo in 192. -HHS 58/48:1875, 66/56:2175. [The personal names are written slightly differently, but these items surely refer to the same man.]

Yang Zhang 楊章; Henan. About 91 Yang Zhang was an officer of police under the Intendant of Henan, Zhang Pu, when members of the household of the Bearer of the Mace Dou Jing, a brother of the regent Dowager, attacked the guards at the market-place in Luoyang. They were arrested, but Dou Jing then sent five hundred of his official guards, under the command of Hou Hai, to attack the offices of the market. Yang Zhang and his officers investigated the affair, arrested Hou Hai, and had him exiled to Shuofang.

Dou Jing was furious, and he gave orders for Yang Zhang and five of his fellows be transferred from the Henan administration to his own command, so that he could punish them too with banishment. Yang Zhang and the others asked Zhang Pu for help, Zhang Pu reported the matter to the throne, and the Dowager Dou gave orders to protect the men. -HHS 45/35:1531.

Yang Zhang 楊章; Chenliu: see Yang Kuang 楊匡.

Yang Zhen 楊震 [Boqi 伯起] (d.124); Hongnong. Yang Zhen was a son of Yang Bao, who died when he was young. Following his father's example, he studied the Classic of History according to the New Text Ouyang tradition under Huan Yu, and also the apocrypha. Immensely learned in the classics, he became known as the "Confucius west of the Passes" 關西孔子, but he lived with his widowed mother and worked as a tenant farmer, while the many students who came for instruction also joined in the work of the fields.

Having refused all offers of appointment for more than twenty years, at the age of fifty Yang Zhen accepted local office in his commandery and then in the province, and about 110 he was nominated Abundant Talent by the General-in-Chief Deng Zhi. He became Inspector of Jing province, then Administrator of Donglai and Zhuo commanderies, and was always noted for strict morality and honesty. On one occasion his former nominee Wang Mi, now a county magistrate, wanted to give him some gold and argued that no-one would know. Yang Zhen replied that the two of them would know, and also Heaven and the spirits; Wang Mi went away ashamed.

In 117 Yang Zhen became Minister Coachman at the capital, then Minister of Ceremonies. In the latter office he reformed the selection for the Imperial University, while his appointment of the learned Yang Lun enhanced the standard of scholarship and received the approval of all Confucians. In 120 he replaced Liu Kai as Excellency over the Masses.

As Emperor An took full power following the death of the Dowager Deng in 121, his favourites of the inner court began to extend and display their influence. Yang Zhen sent in a strong memorial against the conduct and pretensions of the Lady Wang Sheng, former wet-nurse to the emperor, and her daughter Yong [or Borong]. The emperor showed the document to his intimates, and they recognised Yang Zhen as their enemy. He protested again when Liu Gui, married to Wang Yong, obtained a fief and court rank to which he was not entitled, but his comments were ignored as before.

Despite this lack of acceptance, in 122 Yang Zhen was appointed Grand Commandant, again in succession to Liu Kai. Geng Bao, Minister Herald and uncle to the emperor, recommended a brother of the eunuch Li Run for office, but Yang Zhen refused to agree, and he also rejected a nominee of the empress's brother Yan Xian; both men were swiftly appointed by the Excellency of Works Liu Shou.

Yang Zhen continued his attacks on the imperial favourites, particularly Wang Sheng and her eunuch associates Fan Feng, Zhou Guang and Xie Yun. His remonstrances were ignored, and though his reputation was so high that they dared not act against him, his enemies' conduct grew bolder. The Lady Wang received approval to construct a great mansion at the capital, but Fan Feng and his associates embezzled materials and cash for their own constructions, and created false authorities to do so. Early in 124 Yang Zhen's officer Gao Shu obtained the incriminating documents. Yang Zhen prepared a memorial, but he could not present it immediately, for the emperor was at that time on a progress to the east.

As Emperor An was returning to Luoyang, Fan Feng and his allies made accusations against Yang Zhen, noting that he was a former protégé of the Deng family and claiming he had resented the death of Zhao Teng, who had come to offer protest some time before. As the cortège came to the capital the astronomers reported unfavourable signs, so the emperor halted outside the city to await a suitable day. At the same time, and before Yang Zhen could bring his charges, messengers were sent to take back his insignia of office.

Yang Zhen promptly retired to his private residence and dismissed his personal followers, but his enemies now enlisted the aid of Geng Bao, who presented a memorial claiming that he still showed discontent and resentment. Ordered back to Hongnong, Yang Zhen he took poison and died on the road; he was aged over seventy.

Yang Zhen had urged such students as followed him that they should carry out his funeral in the simplest fashion, but as they travelled to his home country the Administrator Yi Liang, knowing of Fan Feng's hostility, claimed that the imperial post was being misused. He sent officers to intercept the cortège and throw the coffin, open, on the side of the road. Weeping, the attendants escorted the corpse on an ox-cart.

When Emperor Shun came to the throne at the end of 125, Fan Feng and his associates were killed, and Yang Zhen's former students Yu Fang and Chen Yi petitioned for his recognition as a loyal official. This was approved, two of his sons were made gentlemen cadets, there was a donation of a million cash, a ceremony was held to transfer his burial to a new tomb, and an imperial edict ordered the commandery to offer sacrifices.

Before Yang Zhen began his career a flock of cranes had brought him fish, symbols of his future ascension, and after his death a great bird came to mourn him. Now a fine stele was set up at his grave, with a stone statue of the bird of omen.

In 168, moreover, following the death of Yang Zhen's grandson Yang Tong, Chancellor of Pei, and at the instigation of Yang Tong's protégé Chen Shi, another stele was set up at the family tomb, praising Yang Zhen and listing his worthy descendants. It was sponsored by more than ninety gentlemen. -HHS 54/44:1759-68*, XC 3:4b-5a, XHS 4:1b-2b, HQ 1:23b, LS 12:1a-6a, Nagata 94:174.

The tomb complex of Yang Zhen and six of his descendants, including his great-grandson Yang Biao, has been identified in present-day Tongguan county in Shenxi: KG 63/1 [Wang Zhongshu].

Yang Zhen 羊珍 (d.138); Wu. A man of non-Chinese [Yue 越] origin, in 138 Yang Zhen was acting Commandery Assistant in Wu. He and his brother Yang Ye mutinied and led a general rebellion, but they were defeated and killed by the Administrator Wang Heng. -HHS 6:267, 101/11:3245.

Yang Zheng 楊政 [Zixing 子行]; Jingzhao. Fond of learning when he was young, Yang Zheng studied the Book of Changes under the Academician Fan Sheng. Celebrated at the capital for his ability to explain the classics, he had hundreds of students.

Later, Fan Sheng's divorced third wife accused her former husband of a crime and he was arrested and imprisoned. Yang Zheng went to the side of the road where Emperor Guangwu was to pass, tore off his clothes and put plant-stalks in his ears. He took Fan Sheng's son with him, and as the emperor came by he kowtowed then shouted that this was Fan Sheng's only boy from three marriages, and he should not be left an orphan. Even when he was threatened by imperial guards, Yang Zheng stood his ground and maintained his protest. Guangwu then ordered an enquiry and Fan Sheng was released.

Though a man of honour, Yang Zheng was fond of wine, inclined to boast, and he often behaved erratically. Admired by Liang Song and Yin Jiu, he became friendly with them, and he and his mother would visit on terms of the closest acquaintance. After a false start due to his impertinence, through Yin Jiu's intervention he also established contact with Ma Wu; in this way he was at the centre of the faction formed by the Dou clan and the family of the Empress Yin.

Despite the favour he received, Yang Zheng's informal manner evidently told against him, and he never became an Academician at the University. Late in life under Emperor Zhang, however, he was a General of the Household. -HHS 79/69A:2551-52*, DGHJ 17:5a [and cf. Yang Zheng 正 immediately below]; Bn 79:141, 106.

Yang Zheng 楊正; Jingzhao. Officer of Merit in his commandery during the late 50s, this man has a fragmentary biography in DGHJ 16:10b, separate to that of Yang Zheng 政 above. In HHSJJ 79/69A:2815 jiaobu, Hou Kang suggests that the two men were the same.

Yang [Zhengxiu] 揚整脩. After the assassination of Dong Zhuo at Chang'an by Wang Yun and Lü Bu in 192, Hu Wencai and Yang Zhengxiu, who had influence in Liang province, were sent to Hongnong to reassure Li Jue and other former officers of Dong Zhuo. The two men had not been treated well by Wang Yun, so they in fact made no approach to the potential rebels, but gathered their followers and went back to the northwest. -SGZ 6:181-82 PC quoting Jiuzhou chunqiu.

Though the surnames are written with different radicals, in HHSJJ 72/62:2557 Hui Dong accepts that Zhengxiu was the style of Yang Ding 楊定, a later associate of Li Jue. This seems doubtful. See also sub Hu Wencai.

Yang Zhi 羊陟 [Sizu 嗣祖]; Taishan. A man of old official family, Yang Zhi was known for his moral standards and scholarship. He was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, served in the offices of the Grand Commandant Li Gu, graded First Class and entered the Censorate. Following the fall of Li Gu in 147, Yang Zhi was proscribed from office as a former subordinate.

After some years, Yang Zhi was again graded First Class and became Inspector of Ji province, where he reported a number of corrupt officials. He was numbered among the worthy men in lists compiled by the reformists and students of the University, but did not play an active role and was not involved in the Faction Incidents nor in the Great Proscription. He was later a General of the Household and then Colonel of the City Gates.

In 178 Yang Zhi was Director of the Imperial Secretariat, and from this position he memorialised that the Grand Commandant Zhang Hao and the ministers Guo Fang, Cao Ling and Feng Fang were in corrupt alliance with the palace eunuchs. He asked that they be dismissed and punished, but this was not approved. At the same time Yang Zhi commended the fine qualities of the former Grand Commandant Liu Chong, the Director of Retainers Xu Bing, and the Inspectors Yang Xi, Liu Gong and Pang Ai. It is said that the emperor was impressed, but Yang Zhi was transferred from the Secretariat to be Intendant of Henan.

In that office Yang Zhi made a show of frugality, eating simple meals. He brought the powerful families under control, and was respected and feared by all the people, but he was soon afterwards charged with faction, dismissed and proscribed; it appears that his fellow-countryman Humu Ban was also forced from office.

Yang Zhi was connected by marriage to the minister Cai Zhi and his nephew the Consultant Cai Yong, and in the latter part of 178 a group associated with the eunuch Cheng Huang and the minister Liu He accused Cai Yong and his uncle of seeking personal favours and of conspiracy. The accusation evidently involved Yang Zhi and Humu Ban, and the Secretariat – which Yang Zhi had recently commanded – now questioned Cai Yong. In his statement of defence, presumably responding to the allegations, Cai Yong denied any corruption, but he and his uncle were sentenced to death, later commuted.

The disgrace of Yang Zhi, and the charges against Cai Yong and Cai Zhi, may be seen as a counter-attack by a group of eunuchs and their allies in the bureaucracy against their critics; we are told that Cai Zhi and Cai Yong were later helped to escape from Luoyang by their kinsmen of the Yang family.

Yang Zhi died in retirement at home. -HHS 67/57: 2209* & 2187, 60/50B:2001.

Yang Zhi 羊陟 miswritten for Yang Mao 羊茂.

Yang Zhong 楊終 [Zishan 子山]; Shu. At the age of thirteen Yang Zhong held junior office in the commandery. Admiring his skill in literary composition, the Administrator sent him to study at the University in Luoyang, and Yang Zhong became an expert on Chunqiu. When the Ailao people made formal surrender in 69 Yang Zhong was sent to the capital as Reporting Officer. He found that the records of these people kept at the capital were faulty, and after his return to the southwest he presented Ailao zhuan 哀牢傳, an Account of the new tributaries, to Emperor Ming.

On the recommendation of the Palace Attendant Jia Kui, Yang Zhong was appointed as an editor in the library of the Orchid Terrace. According to Wang Chong, when a flock of strange birds appeared at the imperial palace, the emperor ordered his officials to present hymns to the magical creatures, but only those of Jia Kui, Ban Gu, Fu Yi, Yang Chong and Hou Li were of high quality [Lun heng 25; Forke 11:274]. It was perhaps on this basis that Yang Zhong was selected.

At the beginning of the reign of Emperor Zhang in 76, Yang Zhong took the occasion of a drought to urge more humane treatment for convicts sent from the southeast to settle the distant frontier territory of the north. In debate at court Yang Zhong was supported by the Excellency Diwu Lun, but was opposed by the conservative Excellencies Mou Rong and Bao Yu and by his own colleague Ban Gu. In a supplementary memorial Yang Zhong answered their arguments, and Emperor Zhang ended the program of long-distance exile.

There was increasing tension at this time between the Academicians of the New Text and the reviving Old Text which was favoured by Emperor Zhang. In 79, therefore, Yang Zhong recommended that a formal conference on the Confucian classics be held, and at the end of the year the emperor convened the discussions in the White Tiger Hall. Yang Zhong had been sent to prison for some offence, but Zhao Bo, Ban Gu, Jia Kui and others pressed his claims as an authority on Chunqiu, so he was released to take part in the debates.

He later received an imperial commission to revise and re-edit the Shi ji of Sima Qian, extending the work for a total of more than a hundred thousand characters.

Yang Zhong was a close friend of Ma Liao, who was elder brother of the Dowager Ma and Minister of the Guards. Ma Liao was restrained in his conduct, but did not keep firm control of his children. Yang Zhong warned him of this, but Ma Liao did not accept the advice, and he was later brought down by the ill-considered conduct of his son Ma Yu.

Some time in the 80s Lian Fan, Administrator of Yang Zhong's home commandery, came under investigation from the provincial authorities. Yang Zhong's brother Yang Feng was a local officer, and Lian Fan had him ask Yang Zhong to speak on his behalf. When Yang Zhong did so, however, he was punished and exiled to the north. His mother died while he was there, and he composed the mourning poem Chenfeng shi 晨風詩. More practically, as Emperor Zhang was on a tour to the east a phoenix and a dragon were reported, and Yang Zhong presented a long paean, Jiadian song 嘉瑞頌, in honour of these auspicious apparitions. As a result, he was permitted to return to his home in Shu. He compiled Chunqiu waizhuan 春秋外傳, a new detailed commentary to the classic in 150,000 characters, and Feng-Shan shu 封禪書, a treatise on the Feng and Shan sacrifices.

Yang Zhong was recalled to court in 100, but then became ill and died. The imperial government made a donation for his funeral. -HHS 48/38:1597-1601*, HYGZ 10A:133, Lun heng 25 & 37; Forke 07:273 & 11: 469, Tjan 49:157, Yao Zhenzong:2376.

Yang Zhong 楊/陽終 (d.187). Administrator of Liaodong in 187, Yang Zhong was killed by rebels under Zhang Chun and Zhang Ju, aided by Wuhuan and Xianbi. -HHS 8:354, 73/63:2353.

Yang Zhong 楊眾; Hongnong. Son of Yang Fu 馥, and great-grandson of the Excellency Yang Zhen, as Supervisor of Internuncios in 190 Yang Zhong accompanied the court to Chang'an.

As Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate, Yang Zhong accompanied Emperor Xian in his escape to the east in 195. When the imperial party was defeated in Hongnong and the emperor fled north across the Yellow River, Yang Zhong gathered some of the officials who had been left behind and brought them also to Hedong.

Yang Zhong became a Palace Attendant, and as the remnant court came under Cao Cao's control, he was enfeoffed and named a commandery Administrator. [HHS 72/62 TC quotes HHJ 29:344 as saying that he was appointed to Dong commandery, but the present-day text of HHJ says it was Donglai. Since Dong commandery was at the heart of Cao Cao's power, Yang Zhong was more likely granted a notional position in distant Donglai, on the north of the Shandong peninsula.] -HHS 54/44:1769, 72/62:2342, HHJ 29:344.

Yang [Zhongying] 楊仲穎; Jianwei. Son of Yang Wenfang and the Lady Yang Yi, Yang Zhongying rose to high rank. -HYGZ 12:229.

Yang [Zhongzhen] 楊仲珍; Hanzhong. Yang Zhongzhen was the second son of Yang Ju. His father died when he was young, and his mother the Lady Liu Taiying brought up Yang Zhongzhen and his brothers.

On one occasion Yang Zhongzhen had his mother invite a friend home, but he proved quite unsuitable. The Lady Yang admonished him, and thereafter Yang Zhongzhen dealt only with worthy men.

Yang Zhongzhen and his brothers all became noted gentlemen and rose to substantial office. -HYGZ 10C: 171.

Yang Zhou 楊周; Youfufeng. During the troubled period of the mid-20s, at the time of the fall of the Gengshi Emperor and the invasion of the Red Eyebrows, Yang Zhou became warlord in his home county. He and other leaders in the old capital district were recognised as generals by Gongsun Shu, who had taken the imperial title in Shu, but in 27 they were conquered by Emperor Guangwu's general Feng Yi. -HHS 17/7:647.

Yang Zhu 楊著 (116-168); Hongnong. Son of Yang Rang and a grandson of the Excellency Yang Zhen, Yang Zhu was a local officer at his commandery headquarters, then joined the provincial staff of the Director of Retainers. Following appointment to the offices of the Grand Commandant, he became a county magistrate in Runan and in Hejian.

Yang Zhu was evidently very close to his cousin Yang Tong, and when Yang Tong died in 168 he grieved and followed him soon afterwards. -LS 11:19b-22b, 12:2a, 20:6a-b, Nagata 94:172.

A tomb complex of the Yang family has been identified in present-day Tongguan county in Shenxi, and Yang Zhu is believed to have been one of the occupants: KG 63/1 [Wang Zhongshu].

Yang Zhu's funerary stele says that he took part in editing the Confucian classics and held office as a Consultant while doing so. If he died in 168, however, his editorial work cannot have been part of the celebrated Stone Classics of Emperor Ling, for that project took place in the late 170s and early 180s. It is possible some earlier editing was commissioned by Emperor Huan. See HHSJJ 60/50B:2149-50 Hang Shijun.

Yang Zhun 楊準 see Yang Huai 楊淮. -HYGZ 10B: 155-56.

Yang Zong 楊宗 [Dezhong 德仲]; Guanghan. Formerly an Administrator of Yizhou commandery, Yang Zong had a tomb in his homeland. -LS 13:5b, Nagata 94:316.

Yangfeng 楊封; Qiang. A chieftain of the Qiang, in 36 Yangfeng acted as envoy for Ma Yuan. He persuaded several leaders outside the frontier to submit to Han. -HHS 24/14:836.

Yangpu 楊僕; Di. A king of the Di people of Wudu, in 220 Yangpu led his people to surrender to Wei. They were settled in Hanyang. -SGZ 2:60.

Yangsun 羊孫; non-Chinese. Tribesmen of the hill county in the west of Wuling, in 116 Yangsun and his colleague Chentang took over an indigenous rebellion which had begun the year before. Styling themselves generals and adopting red caps as a uniform, they destroyed government offices and plundered the people. The provincial authorities called up auxiliaries from tribes which had stayed loyal, and the trouble was put down. -HHS 86/76:2833.

Yanliu 延留 of Dayuan [Ferghana]. King of Dayuan about 50, Yanliu was expected to send tribute to King Xian of Suoju [Yarkand], who had established dominance over the region. When the amount proved insufficient, Xian took an army of ten thousand men and Yanliu surrendered.

Xian brought Yanliu back to Suoju, and sent Qiaosaiti the King of Jumi [present-day Yutian] to rule in his stead. Qiaosaiti, however, suffered repeated attacks from Kangju [Sogdiana] in the west, and after a year he abandoned his position. Xian sent Yanliu back, and the tribute system was restored. -HHS 88/78: 2925.

Yanliyang 燕荔陽; Xianbi. A tribal chieftain, about 110 Yanliyang came to pay tribute to the court at Luoyang. The regent Dowager Deng granted him title as a king, presented him with a red carriage and a team of horses, and allowed his people to trade at the markets of the Protector of the Wuhuan in Shanggu.

This represents the first formal submission by a Xianbi leader to Han, but it was followed by others, and special lodging houses were built for the hostage children sent by the various tribes. On the other hand, different groups of the Xianbi continued to raid the frontier and the situation remained uncertain. -HHS 90/80:2986.

Yanliyou 宴荔游; Xianbi. During the 170s Yanliyou was a commander in the west under Tanshihuai. -SGZ 30:838.

Yanyou 延優 [Korean: Yon-u] see sub Yiyimo of Gaogouli [Koguryo].

Yao 曜 [various surnames]. The personal name Zhao 昭 frequently appears in the texts as Yao 曜; the change was made to avoid taboo on the name of Sima Zhao 司馬昭 (211-265), a founder of the Jin dynasty in the third century.

Yao 姚, the Lady; Guanghan. Mother of Ren An, the Lady encouraged his Confucian scholarship, and when he established his own academy she cared for his students so generously that great numbers gathered to attend his teaching. -HYZ 10B:153.

Yao Bi 姚妣, the Lady; Shu. In the early 80s Yao Bi and her sister Yao Rao, both unmarried, were with their father Yao Chao, a magistrate in their home commandery, when he was killed by raiding Qiang. The two women were captured and were told to herd sheep; when they refused, they were bound together at the waist and thrown into a river where they drowned.

Their spirits then appeared to their brother Wei in a dream, in which they told him where to look for their bodies. Yao Wei followed their instructions and duly found them. The commandery and the county placed portraits of the two on the walls of their yamen. -HYZ 10A:141.

Yao Cai 姚蔡; Yingchuan. Son of Yao Yu, he succeeded to the family fief. -HHS 20/10:734.

Yao Chao 姚超. A magistrate in his home commandery in the early 80s, Yao Chao was killed by Qiang raiders. -HYZ 10A:134, 141.

Yao Chong 姚崇. An officer of the Bureau of Astronomy about 90, Yao Chong was consulted by the commissioner Jia Kui on Fu An's introduction of an ecliptic ring for the armillary sphere. -HHS 92/2:3029.

Yao Dan 姚丹; Yingchuan. Elder son of Yao Qi, in 34

he succeeded to his fief. -HHS 20/10:734.

Yao Dang 姚當; Shu. Son of Yao Jing q.v., Yao Dang found the bodies of his abducted sisters. -SJZ 33:4a.

Yao Fu 姚敷; Wu. XTS 74B:3169 says that during the civil war which followed the fall of Wang Mang Yao Hui 恢 took refuge in the south and changed the family surname to Gui 媯. His descendant Yao Fu changed it back.

Yao Gong 姚貢. When Gongsun Zan declared war against Yuan Shao in 191, he sent a memorial to the court listing his enemy's wrongdoings. One allegation was that Yuan Shao had killed Yao Gong, a former Chancellor of Ganling, and Gao Yan the former Administrator of Shanggu, because he was greedy for their property. -HHS 73/63:2360.

Yao Guang 姚光 (d.121). After the surrender of Qiuzi [Kuqa] in central Asia in 91, the previous ruler Youliduo was deposed. The Han court had Yao Guang escort the former hostage prince Boba to take his place and he then brought Youliduo back to Luoyang.

Yao Guang was later Administrator of Xuantu. The commandery was raided by troops of King Gong of Gaogouli [Koguryo], and early in 121 Yao Guang joined the Inspector, Feng Huan, and the Administrator of Liaodong, Cai Feng, in a punitive expedition. They killed several chieftains of the Hui and Mo people, and captured quantities of weapons, horses and treasure.

King Gong then sent his Heir Suicheng and two thousand followers in a pretended surrender, and Yao Guang believed him. Suicheng had his men occupy the best defence points to oppose the main Han army, and sent another three thousand Hui and Mo to infiltrate Xuantu and Liaodong. Burning Chinese settlements, they killed or wounded over two thousand people. The Chinese brought an army from the west of the province, but by the time it arrived the raiders had gone.

Following this debacle, local enemies of Yao Guang and Feng Huan forged an edict for their arrest and execution, and the Commandant of Liaodong, Pang Fen, killed Yao Guang and arrested Feng Huan. Feng Huan died in prison, but he had time to complain to the throne and the forgery was discovered. The emperor gave posthumous grants of money to both victims, and their sons were made gentlemen cadets.

The date of death of Yao Guang and Feng Huan is somewhat confused, notably by HHS 85/75:2815, which says that when King Gong died towards the end of 121, Yao Guang asked permission to attack the enemy during their period of mourning. Chen Zhong of the Imperial Secretariat opposed the plan on moral grounds, so the emperor sent a message of condolence and the new King Suicheng then made a genuine surrender.

In fact, Yao Guang and Feng Huan had been defeated and then killed earlier that year. From the summer through the winter of 121 Gaogouli was on the offensive, and at the time of Gong's death his men were attacking the capital of Xuantu commandery; they were soon afterwards driven back with the aid of tribesmen from Fuyu.

If Yao Guang had been alive when Gong died, he would have been under heavy siege and in no position to propose an attack, but the success of Gaogouli in the latter part of the year, and the death of King Gong, followed the defeat and death of Yao Guang and Feng Huan. -HHS 5:233, 47/37:1581, 38/28:1280, 85/75:2814-15; Gardiner 69B:171-182, and see sub Feng Huan.

Yao Ji 姚期 see Yao Qi 姚期.

Yao Jing 姚精; Shu. Yao Jing was killed by rebel non-Chinese and his two daughters were kidnapped. Some time later the young women's elder brother Yao Dang had a dream in which they showed the place they had been drowned in a river. Yao Dang went to look, and found the bodies. The local authorities reported this strange occurrence to the throne and a stele was set up to commemorate it. -SJZ 33:4a.

Yao Jun 姚俊 was intelligent and could make good plans. -XC 8:9a.

Yao Qi 姚期 [Zikuang 次況] (d.34); Yingchuan. Eight feet two inches tall [190 cm], Yao Qi was handsome, with a natural air of authority. His father Meng 猛 had been Administrator of Guiyang, and when he died Yao Qi maintained full three years mourning, much to the admiration of his neighbours.

When Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, came into Yingchuan in 23, he chose Feng Yi as his Registrar, and Feng Yi recommended Yao Qi and other members of the local gentry. Appointed a para-military officer, Yao Qi accompanied Liu Xiu on his commission to the north.

Early in 24, after Wang Lang had declared his cause and issued a call to arms, Liu Xiu was in Ji city in Guangyang, surrounded by adherents of the enemy. He attempted to leave, but at first could not get through. Lance in hand, Yao Qi spurred his horse forward, shouted at those who sought to block the road, and cleared a way. The city gates had been closed, but Yao Qi and his followers forced them open and enabled the party to escape.

As Liu Xiu arrived at his base in Xindu he named Yao Qi a major-general and placed him with Fu Kuan and Lü Yan under the command of Deng Yu. Deng Yu regarded Yao Qi as the most able, so when they raised more troops he promoted him to be a lieutenant-general with two thousand men, and set Fu Kuan and Lü Yan under his command with two hundred soldiers each. Deng Yu reported this to Liu Xiu, who endorsed the change and sent Yao Qi with a detached force into Zhending and Changshan.

Yao Qi returned for the attack on Julu. As Wang Lang's officers Ni Hong and Liu Feng brought an army to relieve the city, Yao Qi went to break the opposing lines and killed more than fifty of the enemy. He was wounded in the forehead, but returned to the final successful attack.

In the summer, after the destruction of Wang Lang in Handan, Yao Qi was named a chief general, and at this time, arguing that the Gengshi regime had lost its authority, he urged Liu Xiu to take the imperial title. For the time being, Liu Xiu only joked about the idea.

Yao Qi then joined the campaign against the Bronze Horse and other bandit groups in Qinghe and Dong commanderies. They fought several times without success, and Yao Qi's troops, caught with a river behind them, suffered heavy casualties until Liu Xiu himself came to the rescue. The enemy were then defeated, pursued to exhaustion and forced to surrender.

Yao Qi took part in the great victory over the Red Eyebrows, Green Calves and others at Shequan in Henei. The bandits surprised his baggage train, but Yao Qi counter-attacked. Thrice wounded in hand-to-hand fighting, he killed or disabled several dozen opponents and drove the enemy away.

As Liu Xiu took the imperial title in 25, he granted Yao Qi a county fief in Runan with revenue from five thousand households. The leading clans of Wei commandery were unruly, and Zhuo Jing, an officer of the Gengshi Emperor, was attempting to bring them into alliance with the Tanxiang and Five Towers bandit groups. Yao Qi was named Administrator of Wei commandery with acting appointment as a chief general, authorised to operate outside the borders of his commandery. He raised local levies to attack and defeat Zhuo Jing, killing six hundred of the enemy in the first engagement, then pursued him west into the hills, killing dozens of his officers and capturing his wife and children. Turning south, he defeated local opposition and settled the rest of the commandery. Noted for not allowing his troops to plunder, Yao Qi also gained great credit for his sympathetic treatment of his officer Li Xiong and his renegade brother Li Lu.

As Emperor Guangwu came to Wei commandery in 29, he appointed Yao Qi a Palace Counsellor. Yao Qi then went to Luoyang and became Minister of the Guards. In 30 he was sent west as an envoy with presents to Wei Ao, but on the road the party was attacked by robbers and all the treasure was lost. Combined with the death of Wei Ao's envoy Zhou You, this caused a breakdown in communication and negotiations.

The only man of the Yingchuan group to reach ministerial rank, Yao Qi was loyal, had a strong sense of honour, and was a stickler for the proprieties: on one occasion he persuaded Guangwu to turn back from a projected jaunt because he was not being escorted in full ceremonial style. During his last illness in 34 Guangwu sent medicines, enquired after him constantly, and personally attended his funeral.

Yao Qi's mother had asked which of his sons should be granted the succession to his marquisate, but Yao Qi replied that he had received greater rewards from the state than he could repay, and he did not expect enfeoffment for his sons. The emperor was deeply impressed, and granted fiefs to both Yao Qi's sons.

Recognising Yao Qi as one of the great assistants of the founding emperor, Guangwu's son and successor Emperor Ming had his portrait painted on the walls of the Cloud Terrace in the Southern Palace at Luoyang. -HHS 20/10:732-33*, XC 1:4a; Bn 54:70-71, 79, 82, 107, Bn 76:26, Bn 79:82.

Yao Qiong 姚瓊; Hanyang. A local leader, in 213 Yao Qiong joined Jiang Xu and Zhao Ang to attack Ma Chao and drive him from the commandery. -SGZ 25:701.

Yao Rao 姚饒, the Lady; Shu. Younger sister of the Lady Yao Bi, she shared her fate. -HYGZ 10A:141.

Yao Shu 鈔舒; Yingchuan. Son of Yao Dan, he succeeded to his fief. -HHS 20/10:734.

Yao Tong 鈔統; Yingchuan. Younger son of Yao Qi, when his elder brother Dan succeeded to their father's marquisate Yao Tong was granted a county fief in Pei, later transferred to Runan. -HHS 20/10:734.

Yao Wei 徯/搖偉 also as Yin Wei 淫偉. A general of the Gengshi regime, in 23 he was sent to the southeast under the command of Zhang Ang to confirm control of the region of Huaiyang. Yao Wei rebelled, attacked Zhang Ang and drove him to flight, but the Commandant Cen Peng defeated Yao Wei and restored the situation. -HHS 17/7:653.

Yao Wei 姚慰; Shu. Elder brother of Yao Bi and Yao Rao, he received his sisters' message in a dream and found their bodies. -HYGZ 10A:141.

Yao Yan 繇延; Runan. During the 30s Yao Yan was a commandery Investigator. He was strongly recommended by local Confucianists, and the Administrator Ouyang Xi proposed to reward him and recommend him to the court. At the official banquet, however, the Officer of Merit Zhi Yun stood up and objected that Yao Yan was greedy and weak and did not deserve such honour. After an embarrassing confrontation Ouyang Xi withdrew his proposal, and the ceremony broke up in confusion.

Some months later Ouyang Xi again called up Yao Yan, and Zhi Yun left office in disgust. -HHS 29/19:1027-29.

Yao Yu 鈔羽; Yingchuan. Son of Yao Shu, he succeeded to the family fief. -HHS 20/10:734.

Yao Zhou 姚祐 [Zixu 子緒] (d.242); Ba. When Liu Bei took over Yi province Yao Zhou held local position as Officer of Merit. In 223 he became Administrator of Guanghan, but later joined the headquarters of Zhuge Liang, who praised his ability to recommend good men for both civil and military affairs. After Zhuge Liang's death Yao Zhou served in the Secretariat of Shu-Han. -SGZ Shu 15:1087; Fang 52:227-228.

Ye Feng 鄴風 was a county magistrate in Henan. -FSTY 6f:146.

Ye Gao 射髡 see Xie Gao 謝髡.

Ye Huan 謁煥/浼 or Ye Qiong 瓊; Ba. Ye Huan studied the Confucian classics with the recluse Liao Fu. Later, during the reign of Emperor Shun, he was appointed Administrator of Runan, Liao Fu's native commandery. He approached Liao Fu with the courtesy of a student calling upon his teacher, and offered to assist his family, but Liao Fu would not accept anything. -HHS 82/72A:2720, HYGZ 12:219; Ngo 76:100, DeWoskin 86:62.

Ye Long 夜龍; Henan. A commoner of Luoyang, about 184 Ye Long was short of money for the La 臘 New Year festival. He asked his elder brother Ye Yang for a loan, but was given only a thousand cash. Angry and distressed, and evidently somewhat demented, he shot arrows at one of the gates of the Southern Palace. He may have intended to involve his brother in the crime, but he was arrested, tortured and executed alone.

This "shooting omen" 射妖 was later seen as foretelling the attack on the palace and massacre of the eunuchs five years later. -HHS 107/17:3343, FSTY 4f: 113-14; Bodde 75:64-65, Bn 76:32.

Ye Qiong 謁瓊: Qiong was the alternative personal name of Ye Huan 謁煥/浼. -FSTY 6f:146.

Ye Qu 謁屈 was a junior official. -FSTY 6f:146.

Ye Yang 夜陽 see sub Ye Long.

Yellow Dragon 黃龍 see Huanglong 黃龍.

Yellow Dragon Luo 黃龍羅 see Huanglong Luo 黃龍羅.

Yellow Tiger 黃虎; Jiujiang. A subordinate chieftain under the rebel Ma Mian, in 144 he was sent with a detached force to attack Hefei, capital of the commandery. Since Ma Mian styled himself Yellow Emperor 黃帝, the phrase 黃虎 may be understood as "Yellow Tiger", not as a surname Huang and personal name Hu. -HHS 38/28:1279.

Yellow Warfare 黃武 see Huang Wu 黃武. -HHS 7: 309.

Yewang, Two Old Men of 野王二老者, see Old Men of Yewang 野王老者.

Yewang, Lady of 野王君 see the Lady Wang Sheng.

Yi 詣 [surname unknown]. As a member of the Imperial Secretariat in 171, he took part in the enthronement ceremony of the Empress Song of Emperor Ling. -HHS 95/5:3121.

Yi Changgong 夷長公. A bandit during the troubles at the beginning of Later Han, Yi Changgong took pity on Wei Tan and released him and his fellow-prisoners, who would otherwise have been eaten. -HHS 39/29:1300.

Yi Cheng 儀成; Jianwei. Yi Cheng was the husband of the Lady Xie Ji q.v.

Yi Li 伊立 [Yuanjie 元節], who had been an Assistant Officer of his province, was commemorated with a stele. -LS 22:2b.

Yi Liang 移良. In 124, as the body of the disgraced Grand Commandant Yang Zhen was being brought back to his home country, Yi Liang was Administrator of Hongnong. Knowing the hostility which the eunuch Fan Feng and his associates had for Yang Zhen, Yi Liang claimed that the imperial post had been misused; he sent officers to intercept the cortège and throw the opened coffin on the side of the road,. -HHS 54/44: 1767.

Yi Liao 夷廖. An officer under Zhang Jin the Governor of Jiao province in the early 200s, in 211 he took similar service with the new Inspector Bu Zhi. -SGZ Wu 8:1252.

Yi Pou 錡衰. According to HYGZ 10B:150, Yi Pou was a magistrate in Guanghan who was killed in 188 by rebels led by Ma Xiang [see sub Han Kui]. HYGZ 5:70 and SGZ Shu 1:866, however, both give the name of the unfortunate official as Li Sheng.

Yi Ren 錡任; Nanyang. A eunuch, during the time of Emperor Shun Yi Ren became a Regular Attendant. -LS 17:14a.

Yi Shi 乙世 became Administrator of Nan commandery. -FSTY 5f:117.

Yi Xi 益善, the Lady. A servant of the official Zang Zhongying, she was found to have been possessed by a poltergeist. As soon as she was sent back home, the manifestations ceased. -FSTY 9:73; Nylan 83:543.

Yi Ying 乙瑛 [Zhongqing 仲卿 also as Shaoqing 少卿]; Pingyuan. As Chancellor of Lu in the early 150s, Yi Ying requested the court to appoint an official to supervise ceremonies at the Temple of Confucius. An edict of 153 gave approval, and a commemorative stele was erected. This Yi Ying bei 乙瑛碑 is recognised as an important example of formal Han calligraphy. -LS 1:14b-17b, Nagata 94:114; Ch'en 66:44, 13a.

Yi Zi [or style: Yizi 邑子?]; Chenliu. Probably in the 170s, the clerical officer Yi Zi was questioned by Cai Yong and confirmed the remarkable mourning behaviour of the youthful Cheng Wei. -Cai 8:2.

Yifu 遺腹 of Shule [Kashgar]. The term yifu indicates a posthumous son, so it may here be a description rather than a real personal name. He was a son of a full younger brother of the exiled prince Chenpan and a maternal cousin of King Anguo of Shule. Anguo had no sons. When he died his mother became regent, and she planned that Yifu should become king.

Chenpan, however, who was senior in the lineage, gained the support of the Great Yuezhi and received popular acclaim within the state. He took the throne and granted Yifu a marquissate. -HHS 88/78:2915.

Yilang 抑狼 miswritten for Liumiao 柳貌.

Yimozi [wang] 伊莫訾王; Xiongnu. A senior officer of the Northern Shanyu, with the title Da juqu 大且渠, in 84 he led an embassy to Meng Yu the Administrator of Wuwei, confirming an agreement for trade across the frontier. [Though Da juqu is the title of an office, it is not possible to tell whether Yimozi was the personal name of a king 王 of the Xiongnu or, more probably, the title of his fief.] -HHS 89/79:2950.

Yin 殷 [surname] see also Duan 段 passim: the characters are sometimes confused.

Yin 鐔 [surname] see Xin 鐔 passim.

Yin 陰, Empress of Emperor Guangwu: see the Lady Yin Lihua.

Yin 陰, Empress of Emperor He: see the Lady Yin IV.

Yin 陰, the Lady I; Nanyang. Elder sister of Yin Lihua, concubine and later empress of Emperor Guangwu, she married Deng Rang, who became Governor of the province of Jiaozhi for the Gengshi Emperor.

In 29 the general Cen Peng took control of the middle Yangzi for Guangwu. An old friend of Deng Rang, he invited him to submit to the new imperial regime. The marriage connection encouraged Deng Rang to do so. -HHS 17/7:659; Bn 59:157.

Yin 陰, the Lady II; Nanyang. Honoured Lady of Emperor Ming, she was a favourite of the emperor and became the mother of Liu Chang 暢. -HHS 50/40:1675.

Yin 陰, the Lady III (d.110); Nanyang. A cousin of the Lady Yin Lihua, empress of Emperor Guangwu, she married Deng Xun and bore him several sons and also the Lady Deng Sui, future regent Dowager.

In 92 Deng Sui was received into the harem of Emperor He, and in 102 she was named empress. In 107, after she had taken over the government as regent Dowager for the young Emperor An, she enfeoffed her mother as Lady of Xinye, with revenue from 10,000 households.

In 110 the Lady became ill, and the Dowager's brothers Deng Zhi and others all sought to leave their official positions in order to care for her. Deng Chang was the youngest and showed particular filial piety, so he was granted permission. Then the Lady died, and after many further requests her sons were permitted to leave the court and escort the cortège back for burial in her home country. -HHS 10A:422, 16/6:615.

Yin 陰, the Lady IV (d.102); Nanyang: Empress of Emperor He. Daughter of Yin Gang, she was intelligent and scholarly. In 92 she was selected into the harem of Emperor He, and was given rank as an Honoured Lady in recognition of her connection to Yin Lihua, former consort of Guangwu, who was her great-great-aunt. She received the emperor's favour and on 4 May 96 she was made empress.

The Lady Yin bore no children, however, and she gradually lost favour to her distant cousin the Honoured Lady Deng Sui. She showed her feelings, and in 102 it was alleged that she and her maternal grandmother Deng Zhu had engaged in witchcraft 巫蠱道: it may have been a slander for political purposes, but it is possible they had sought magical aid to regain the emperor's affections and to conceive an heir. Emperor He ordered an investigation, and the empress's brothers and other relatives confessed and implicated one another.

On 24 July the Lady was stripped of her imperial position and sent to the Drying House, where she "died of grief" 以憂死 soon afterwards. Her father, one brother and two sons of Deng Zhu also died, while other kinsmen were exiled to the far south. The Honoured Lady Deng became empress a few months later. -HHS 10A:417*; Bielenstein 76:53.

Yin 陰, the Lady V (d.136); Nanyang. A daughter of Yin Gui, whose family had intermarried with the imperial house and produced two empresses, the Lady Yin married Liang Shang. She became the mother of Liang Na, consort to Emperor Shun, and of Liang Ji. When she died, she was granted posthumous title as Lady of Kaifeng 開封君. -HHS 34/24:1175.

Yin 尹, the Lady. The Lady first married a son of He Jin, and bore him a son, He Yan. She later she became a senior concubine of Cao Cao, bearing him a son, Cao Ju 矩, and a daughter who became Princess of Jinxiang 金鄉. He Yan later married the princess his half-sister. -SGZ 20:579, 9:292.

Yin 陰, the Lady VI. Concubine of Cao Pi, the favour which she and others received about 220 caused the Lady Zhen, his senior consort, to become fatally jealous. -SGZ 5:160; C/C 99.97.

Yin, Mr 尹公 see Yin Gong 尹公.

Yin 尹 [personal name unknown]; non-Chinese of Zangke. Head of the clan of that name in the middle 20s, he and other leaders supported the Chinese Xie Xian, Officer of Merit of the commandery, in maintaining allegiance to Han rather than accepting the imperial claim of Gongsun Shu. They sent messengers by a south-eastern route through present-day Guangdong, and Guangwu rewarded them with ceremonial robes. -HHS 86/76:2845, HYZG 4:54.

Yin 陰 [personal name unknown]. Inspector of Yu province, he was blamed for the death of his officer Huang Yu. -SJZ 24:7b.

Yin 陰 [personal name unknown]; Nanyang. Administrator of Jiyin about 130, he nominated Zhong Ding as Filial and Incorrupt; Zhong Ding did not accept. -LS 25:5b.

Yin Bao 尹苞 [Yanbo 延博]; Chenliu. When they were young men, Yin Bao and his close friend Fan Dan were so poor that they had only one good costume between them. When they called upon some patron, Yin Bao as the elder went in first, but then came out and gave Fan Dan his turn with the clothing.

A conscientious scholar of the classics, Yin Bao later became a Consultant. -XC 7:5b.

Yin Bao 隱褒 became Administrator of Hejian. -FSTY 6b.147.

Yin Bo 陰博; Nanyang. Second son of Yin Xing, in 58 Yin Bo was made a marquis in recognition of his father. In the time of Emperor Ming it was felt necessary to maintain constant watch lest Yin Bo, his cousin Yin Dang, and Deng Die, also connected to the throne by a female line, presumed upon their position. -HHS 32/22:1132, 23/13:812.

Yin Can 殷參 or Yin Shen [Zhisun 知/智孫?]; Shu. A man of humble background, Yin Can was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became a gentleman cadet. About 163 he was recommended by the General of the Household Huang Wan, head of his corps of cadets, and the Minister of the Household Chen Fan nominated him Abundant Talent so that he could take substantive office.

Though HHS says no more of Yin Can's career, and HYGZ has no mention of the name, HYGZ 10A:134 and HYGZ 12:214 record a certain Yin Zhisun, a colleague and friend of Liu Zong who became Administrator of a commandery. It seems likely that Zhisun was the style of Yan Can. -HHS 61/51:2040 & JJ at 2212 Hui Dong.

Yin Chang 陰敞; Nanyang. Son of Yin Gang, he was a brother of the Empress Yin of Emperor He, and became a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates. In 102, when the Empress Yin was accused of witchcraft, Yin Chang and his brothers Yi and Fu were arrested and tortured. Their confessions implicated one another and also their cousins Deng Feng and Deng Yi. The empress was deposed and other members of the family died, including Yin Fu, while Yin Chang, Yin Yi and other relatives were sent to exile in the far south.

In 106 the new regent Dowager Deng ordered that the exiles should be allowed to return to their home countries and have their great properties restored to them. -HHS 10A:417, 423, 32/22:1130.

Yin Changsheng 陰長生; Nanyang. Apparently a member of the same clan as Empress Yin of Emperor He, Yin Changsheng sought enlightenment from the adept Ma Mingsheng in Shu. Ma Mingsheng demanded that his would-be disciples should not only take part in conversations, but should also work in the fields. After more than ten years, only Yin Changsheng had been able to last the course. Ma Mingsheng then took him into the mountains and showed him alchemical and mystical techniques.

Yin Changsheng returned to write down his esoteric knowledge, then himself became an immortal 仙人; he is also known as Yin Zhenren 真人 or Zhenjun 真君 "the Perfect Man." -Shenxian zhuan 4; Yao Zhenzong: 2443.

Yin Cheng 殷盛 see Yin Sheng 殷盛.

Yin Chu 尹初; Hejian. Elder brother of the murderer Yin Ci, he volunteered to be executed in his stead. -HHS 48/38:1610.

Yin Chun 殷純. In 220 Yin Chun was a junior officer under the Chancellor of Shu-Han, Zhuge Liang. When news came of the abdication of Emperor Xian of Han in favour of Cao Pi of Wei, Yin Chun joined a petition which cited various works of divination and urged Liu Bei, King of Hanzhong, to claim the imperial title. -SGZ Shu 2:887.

Yin Ci 尹次; Hejian. About 120 Yin Ci was found guilty of murder. His elder brother Chu went to the prison, asked to take his place, and was duly strangled. The senior legal authority Chen Zhong agreed that Yin Ci should be spared the death penalty, but many years later his decision was criticised by the commentator Ying Shao. -HHS 48/38:1610.

Yin Cun 尹存; Henan. Recommended by Li Gu in 143, Yin Cun was invited to office but is not heard of again. -HHS 63/53:2081.

Yin Dan 陰丹; Nanyang. Son of Yin Xing, in 58 he was made a gentleman cadet in recognition of his father. -HHS 32/22:1132.

Yin Dan 殷丹. Administrator of Kuaiji about 150, Yin Dan accepted the advice of Meng Chang on the wrongful execution of an innocent woman. -HHS 76/66:2473.

Yin Dang 陰黨; Nanyang. A member of the clan of the Empress Yin of Emperor Guangwu; in the time of Emperor Ming it was felt necessary to maintain constant watch lest Yin Dang, his cousin Yin Bo, and Deng Die, also connected to the throne by a female line, presume upon their position to act wrongfully. -HHS 23/13:812.

Yin De 陰德. Chancellor of Langye in 192, Yin De joined a petition organised by Tao Qian, Inspector of Xu province, urging Zhu Jun to lead an army west to rescue the emperor at Chang'an. Nothing came of the proposal. -HHS 71/61:2312.

Yin Deng 殷登; Wei. In 176 a yellow dragon appeared in the region of Qiao in Pei commandery. The Counsellor Qiao Xuan asked the opinion of Dan Yang, a member of the Imperial Secretariat who was known for his skill in prognostication. Dan Yang observed that the territory was producing a ruler, and that within fifty years the dragon would appear again. Yin Deng took part in the conversation and recorded the prophecy.

Qiao was the birth-place of Cao Cao, who was at that time twenty years old. Forty-five years later, in 220, as Cao Cao's son Cao Pi succeeded his father as King of Wei, a yellow dragon was again reported from Pei. Yin Deng told Cao Pi of Dan Yang's interpretation of the earlier portent, and he was thanked and rewarded. Later that year Cao Pi took the imperial title, claiming to rule under the power of yellow Earth, taking over from the red Fire of Han. -HHS 82/72B:2733, SGZ 2:58; Ngo 76:114, DeWoskin 83:72-73.

Yin Duan 尹端. A major under the command of Zhang Huan in 167, Yin Duan was sent with Dong Zhuo to attack the Qiang west of Chang'an. They killed the enemy leaders and forced their followers to surrender.

When Xu Chang rebelled in 172, Yin Duan was Administrator of Kuaiji. He was reported by the province for failing to suppress the insurgents, and was liable to execution, but his Registrar Zhu Jun went to Luoyang and bribed his way to amend the letter. Yin Duan suffered only convict service, and Zhu Jun never revealed his role. -HHS 71/61:2308; deC 89:87.

Yin Fang 尹方; Wei. About 115 the Administrator of Wei commandery Wang Mu recommended Yin Fang as suitable to be an Excellency. Zhang Jun of the Imperial Secretariat was ordered to examine the case, but he did not agree. -HYZ 10C:178-79.

Yin Feng 陰豐 (d.59); Nanyang. Son of Yin Jiu, he married the Princess Liu Shou, daughter of Emperor Guangwu. The Lady was spoilt and jealous, and in 59 Yin Feng killed her. He was executed and his family was also punished. -HHS 2:104, 10B:458.

Yin Feng 陰鳳; Nanyang. Son of Yin Yong, Yin Feng was an uncle of the Empress Yin of Emperor He. After she was brought to the throne in 96, he was appointed a gentleman cadet. -HHJ 14:171.

Yin Feng 尹奉 [Zizeng 次曾]; Hanyang. A respected man of family, and formerly a local officer of Liang province, in 213 he joined with Jiang Xu and Zhao Ang to attack Ma Chao and drive him from the commandery. He was enfeoffed for his good work.

In 220 Yin Feng was named Administrator of Dunhuang commandery. Local rebels sought to keep him out, but he took his place with the aid of the local leader Zhang Gong and the successful campaign of Su Ze. He was there almost ten years, but could do little more than hold his position. -SGZ 25:701, 18:551, 16:513.

Yin Fu 陰輔 (d.102); Nanyang. Son of Yin Gang, he was a brother of the Empress Yin of Emperor He, and became a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates. In 102, however, when the empress was accused of witchcraft, Yin Fu and his brothers Yi and Chang were arrested and tortured. Their confessions implicated one another and also their cousins Deng Feng and Deng Yi. As the empress was deposed, Yin Fu and the Deng brothers died in prison, and others of the family were exiled. -HHS 10A:417, 32/22:1130.

Yin Gang 陰綱 (d.102); Nanyang. Son of Yin Yong, he was the father of the Empress Yin of Emperor He. When his daughter became empress in 96, Yin Gang was a colonel in the Northern Army. He was enfeoffed and given position as Specially Advanced.

In 102 the Lady Yin was accused of witchcraft, dismissed and died. Yin Gang killed himself. -HHS 10A:417, HHS 32/22:1130, HHJ 13:169.

Yin Gong 尹公 or Mr Yin 尹公 (d.23). [It is uncertain whether Gong is a name or a courtesy title.] During the time of Wang Mang, Yin Gong was a provisional magistrate in Youfufeng. When a slave of the local strongman Yuan She wounded someone, Yin Gong sought to arrest him or, failing that, to punish Yuan She, but Yuan She's supporters persuaded him to accept a show of apology.

As Wang Mang's regime was destroyed in 23, Yin Gong was a senior staff officer of the Gengshi general Shentu Jian, while Yuan She was a leader of the local insurgents about Chang'an. They were supposed to cooperate to settle the territory, but Yuan She killed Yin Gong. Shentu Jian executed Yuan She. -HS 92:3717-18; QHX:664-665, Ch'ü 72:449-454.

Yin Gong 尹貢; Zangke. Known for his virtues, Yin Gong became Prefect of Chang'an and then Chancellor of Pengcheng. -HYGZ 4:54, 12:205, HYGZJBTZ:260.

Yin Gong 陰躬; Nanyang. Son of Yin Shi, he succeeded to his father's fief and became Bearer of the Mace. -HHS 32/22:1130.

Yin Guan 殷觀 [Kongxiu 孔休]. Registrar to Liu Bei as Governor of Jing province about 209, Yin Guan urged him not to accept Sun Quan's proposal for a joint expedition against Liu Zhang in Yi province, arguing that the best policy was to consolidate his position on the middle Yangzi and refuse Sun Quan access to the region. -SGZ Shu 2:880, 15:1085.

Yin Gui 陰桂; Nanyang. Son of Yin Wanquan, he succeeded to his fief. -HHS 32/22:1132.

Yin Hu 尹胡. In the early third century Yin Hu, a master singer of hymns for state sacrifices and at the Imperial Ancestral Temple, was a member of the orchestra at the puppet court of Han under Cao Cao. -SGZ 29:806.

Yin Hua 殷華 [Shushi 叔時] (d.178); Shang. Yin Hua's father had been Court Architect. He himself was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, and after serving probation as a gentleman cadet he became Assistant in Zuopingyi. Nominated Abundant Talent by the province, he became a county magistrate and then Administrator of Jincheng, where he dealt successfully with the local Qiang people. He died in office, and his officers, including the future rebels Bian Zhang and Han Sui, set up a stele in his honour. -Guwen yuan 19:6b-8b.

Yin Huang 陰璜 (d.113); Nanyang. Son of Yin Gong, he succeeded to his father's marquissate but was murdered by one of his slaves. He left no heir and the fief was ended. -HHS 32/22:1130.

Yin Ji 殷濟. Administrator of Hanyang about 145, Yin Ji established a stele at the tomb of the historian Sima Qian 司馬遷. -SJZ 4:5b.

Yin Ji 尹籍 [Jibo 機伯]; Shanyang. A fellow-countryman of Liu Biao, he joined his staff. When Liu Bei came to Jing province in 201, Yin Ji went to visit him several times, and after Liu Biao died in 208 Yin Ji went with Liu Bei on his flight to the south from Cao Cao.

Yin Ji accompanied Liu Bei into Yi province in 211, and when the territory was settled in 214 he took a senior appointment on his headquarters staff. He received favour and trust comparable to that of Mi Zhu and Jian Yong, and when he was sent on embassy to Wu he impressed Sun Quan with his skill at repartee.

Yin Ji was later given title as a general, and he worked with Zhuge Liang, Fa Zheng, Liu Ba and Li Yan to compile the administrative code Shu ke 屬科. -SGZ Shu 8:971*.

Yin Jia 尹嘉; Hanyang. In 179 Yin Jia was a magistrate in Jiuquan when the Lady Zhao E, who had killed her father's murderer Li Shou, came with her enemy's head to acknowledge her crime. Rather than punish her, Yin Jia resigned his office. -SGZ 18:548-49

Yin Jian 尹儉 of Nanyang was a former magistrate of a county in Hedong. His richly landscaped tomb was constructed in 187 and became a noted feature of northern Nanyang. Like the shrine of Wu Liang, the complex included stele, columns, a stone temple and two stone lions. -SJZ 31:3b.

Yin Jipei 殷紀配, the Lady; Guanghan. At the age of sixteen the Lady married Liao Bo, but he died soon afterwards. Realising that she was good-looking and that other men would want to marry her, she composed poetry expressing her determination to remain a widow. She had many suitors nonetheless, and her parents were willing to accept offers, but she cared for her children and maintained her position with utmost devotion. The Administrator Xue Hong had her portrait painted on the walls of his court. -HYGZ 10B:153.

Yin Jiu 陰就 (d.59); Nanyang. Son of Yin Lu/Mu and younger brother of the Lady Yin Lihua, future empress of Guangwu, in 33 Yin Jiu was made a marquis, succeeding to the fief which had been awarded posthumously to his father. A brilliant conversationalist but a hard and arrogant man, he was not popular at court.

When his nephew Emperor Ming came to the throne in 57, Yin Jiu was appointed Minister Steward, but in 59 his son Yin Feng killed his wife the Princess Liu Shou. Yin Jiu and his wife were compelled to commit suicide and his fief was abolished, though because of the family's proximity to the throne. Emperor Ming did not apply the full force of the law. -HHS 32/22:1132.

Yin Jiu 尹就 (d.127). In 115 Yin Jiu was sent as a General of the Household to replace Tang Xi in operations against rebel Qiang in the north of Yi province. Leading troops from Nanyang, Yin Jiu achieved early success by the assassination of the enemy chieftain Lü Shudu and established a reputation for ruthless dealing, so much so that the Chinese people feared him more than they did the Qiang. As the troubles continued, and the Qiang attacked Ba commandery, Yin Jiu was recalled in disgrace, though he was able to expiate punishment with a fine.

In 126 Yin Jiu was a member of the Imperial Secretariat. He was accused of conspiring with colleagues, including the Director, Gaotang Zhi, and with the eunuch Zhang Fang and several frontier officials. Most of the group were able to purchase relief, but Yin Jiu and Jiang Shu were executed [cf. Bao Jiu]. -HHS 5:222, 87/77:2889-91, 101/11:3243.

HHSJJ 101/11:3655 Hui Dong suggests that the General of the Household Yin Jiu in 115 was a different man to the officer of the Secretariat of the same name in 126.

Yin Ju 陰居; Nanyang. Uncle of Yin Song, Yin Ju cared for him when his parents died. They lived a modest and retiring life, and when rebellion against Wang Mang broke out in the early 20s they went south to Cangwu.

Yin Song later held office at the court of Emperor Guangwu, but some time in the 40s he left his position to mourn Yin Ju. -HHSJJ 32/22:1186 Hui Dong quoting Chuguo xianxian zhuan.

Yin Kai 尹楷; In 204 Yin Kai was a county magistrate in Wei for Yuan Shang, responsible for the supply route between Ye city and Shangdang in the west. Cao Cao attacked and defeated him. -SGZ 1:25.

Yin Kui 殷墟 or 夔?; Liaodong. In the time of Emperor Huan Yin Kui was an expert on astrology. When a yellow star appeared in the constellations related to the southeast of the empire he foretold that fifty years later a Perfect Man 真人 would appear from that region, and none would be able to resist him. When Cao Cao defeated Yuan Shao at Guandu in 200 it was held that he represented the fulfilment of the prophecy. -SGZ 1:22.

Yao Zhenzong:2401 cites a reference to a manual on the clepsydra, Louke fa 漏刻法, by Yin Kui 夔, and suggests that this was the same man. On clepsydras, see also sub Huo Rong.

Yin Kui 陰夔. A former Inspector of Yu province, in 204 Yin Kui was sent by Yuan Shang on an unsuccessful embassy to seek terms from Cao Cao. -SGZ 1:25.

Yin Kun 尹焜; Runan. Yin Kun was Officer of Merit in his county. When a new magistrate arrived he asked whether the leaves of the mulberry tree in the yamen courtyard were good for his silkworms. He was favourably impressed, however, when Yin Kun replied that this should not be a top priority for his government.

Yin Kun later joined the offices of the Excellencies at Luoyang, served as an Imperial Clerk, and became Deputy Director of the Secretariat. -XC 7:5a.

Yin Li 尹禮; Donghai? Leader of a bandit or clan self-defence group in the region of Mount Tai, he had the nickname of Lu'er 盧兒 "Black Boy." Cf. Wu Dun, who was known as "Black Slave 黠奴."

About 194 Yin Li and the other leaders of groups in the region acceded to the general authority of Zang Ba. They accompanied Zang Ba in his attempt to aid Lü Bu against Cao Cao in 198, but then followed his lead once more and accepted service under Cao Cao. Yin Li and his fellows were named as administrators of a series of small commanderies about Mount Tai. Yin Li's territory was either Dongguan or Changlu; both had hitherto been counties in Donghai, and may have been his native place.

Yin Li accompanied Zang Ba on his subsequent campaigns, guarding the east front against Yuan Shao in 199 and 200, defeating Yuan Tan in Bohai in 205, and then settling the region of present-day Shandong. He and his colleagues were rewarded with junior enfeoffment, but there is no detailed account of Yin Li's subsequent career. -SGZ 18:537-38.

Yin Li 殷禮 [Desi 德嗣]; Wu. A man of humble status, Yin Li was neither physically strong nor a lover of action, but he was quiet and thoughtful and became a noted Confucian scholar. Befriended by Gu Shao, son of Gu Yong and a noted judge of character, he held junior office in the commandery and was later an assistant magistrate.

Yin Li was called to court when Sun Quan became king in 221, and he took part in an embassy to Shu-Han, where he was admired by Zhuge Liang. He was soon afterwards appointed Administrator of Lingling, and died in that office. -SGZ Wu 7:1229.

Yin Liang 伊良; Jiujiang. A local bandit early in the first century, Yin Liang was captured by the provincial officer Shen Rong. -XTS 74A:3146.

Yin Liang 殷亮. An Academician at the Imperial University, Yin Liang won several competitions for knowledge of the classics; in each case the prize was a mat: cf. sub Dai Ping. -XC 8:1a.

Yin Lihua 陰麗華, the Lady (5 AD-64); Nanyang: Empress of Emperor Guangwu. Daughter of Yin Lu 陸 [or Mu 睦], a man of wealthy and powerful local family, she was admired by Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, and in 23 he took her formally as his concubine.

Later that year Liu Xiu went to Luoyang, leaving the Lady Yin at her family home in Xinye county, north of the commandery capital Wan. As the authority of the Gengshi Emperor declined and the region fell into disorder, her brother Yin Shi escorted her south to stay with Deng Feng.

When Liu Xiu took the imperial title in 25 he sent his officer Fu Jun to bring the Lady to join him in Luoyang; she travelled with Yin Shi and with Guangwu's sisters Huang and Boji. She was appointed an Honoured Lady, but the Lady Guo Shengtong, who had already borne children and was a valued connection to leading families in the north of the empire, was named empress.

The Lady Yin later had five sons, of whom the eldest, Liu Yang (later Liu Zhuang), future Emperor Ming, was born in 28 as the Lady accompanied Guangwu on campaign against Peng Chong. In 33, when her mother and a brother were killed by bandits, Guangwu awarded posthumous fiefs to her late father Lu/Mu and her dead brother Xin, while another brother, Yin Jiu, was granted succession to Yin Lu/Mu's fief. This was not the first mark of favour to her family, but it may be seen as a sign that the emperor was thinking of raising her status.

In 41 the Empress Guo was dismissed and the Lady Yin took her place. Bielenstein notes that there had been increasing pressure by Guangwu's kinsmen and associates from Nanyang for him to remove the northern-based Lady Guo, and that by 40, with the end of insurgency in the north, she was of no further political value. The Lady Yin, mother of Guangwu's other sons, was the logical successor, and two years later her son Liu Yang/Zhuang replaced his half-brother Liu Qiang, son of the Lady Guo, as Heir.

As Liu Zhuang, Emperor Ming, came to the throne in 57 the Lady Yin was named Dowager. In 60 she accompanied the emperor to her home country in Nanyang, where celebrations were held and donations made to her kinsmen of the Yin and Deng families.

She died four years later, and was buried at the tomb of Emperor Guangwu, with posthumous title as Guanglie 光烈 Empress. -HHS 10A:405-07*; Bn 67:20-21, Bn 79:114-117.

Yin Lu 陰陸 or Yin Mu 睦 [Junmeng 君孟] (d.11); Nanyang. A man of local family, Yin Lu married a woman of the Deng clan and became the father of the Lady Yin, future concubine and then empress of Guangwu; he had sired Yin Shi by an earlier wife. In 33 Yin Lu was awarded posthumous title as a marquis. -HHS 10A:406, 32/22:1129.

Yin Lu/Mu 陰陸, second wife of: see the Lady Deng 鄧 (d.33) of Nanyang.

Yin Mao 尹茂 [Boju 伯舉]; Yingchuan. Assistant Magistrate of Chengyang in Jiyin in 172, Yin Mao was involved in restoration of the Spiritual Terrace associated with the temple of the sage Emperor Yao 堯. -LS 1:8a-10a.

Yin Min 尹敏 [Youji 幼季 or Gongji 功季]; Nanyang. A committed scholar when he was young, Yin Min first studied the Classic of History according to the New Text school of Ouyang and the Guliang commentary to Chunqiu. He later took up the Old Text tradition, becoming expert in Zuo zhuan and in the Classic of Poetry according to the Mao interpretation. In 26 he presented to the throne an account of the means by which the Hong fan 洪範 chapter of the History might be used to avert calamities. Emperor Guangwu was heavily engaged in the civil war, but he sent a carriage to bring Yin Min to the capital, appointed him a gentleman cadet and then as a clerical officer under the Excellency of Works.

Later, because of Yin Min's wide knowledge of the classics, Guangwu ordered him to edit the apocryphal texts, eliminating the omens which had been interpreted by Cui Fa 崔發 in 9 AD to support Wang Mang's claim to the throne [Dubs 55:249-251]. Yin Min refused the assignment, observing that the apocryphal books had not been composed by the sages, they contained such vulgarities as split characters, and they served only to confuse. Guangwu was angry, and though he did not punish Yin Min he gave him no further appointment. The editing was carried out by the Academician Xue Han.

Probably after the accession of Emperor Ming, Yin Min held some minor offices and became a magistrate in Jingzhao. In 62 an imperial edict ordered the arrest of the commoner Zhou Lü, a man of some reputation who had become a personal friend of Yin Min; Yin Min was implicated in the affair and was dismissed. [XHS 5 says that he resigned because of problems with the local granary.]

In 68 Yin Min was again appointed a gentleman cadet, then a Counsellor Remonstrant.

Yin Min had been a close friend of the historian Ban Biao, their affection being described in terms of the legendary comradeships of the past. With Ban Biao's son Ban Gu, Yin Min was one of the historians commissioned in 72 to compile annals of the reign of Emperor Guangwu 世祖本紀; this work, initially known as the "Diary of the Jianwu Period" 建武注記, became the first part of Dongguan Han ji.

As Bielenstein observes at 79:121, the committee was politically sensitive and delicately balanced: Ban Gu and no doubt Yin Min were members of the Dou faction which had been instrumental in the disgrace of Ma Yuan in 49, but Ma Yuan's daughter was now empress and Ma Yan and Meng Ji represented that interest. The other two scholars, Du Fu and Chen Zong, were probably neutral.

Yin Min later retired and died at home. -HHS 79/69A:2558-59*, XC 5:9b, XHS 5:14a-b; Tjan 49: 149-151, Bn 79:187-197.

Yin Mo 殷謨 [Junchang 君長]; Yanmen. A man of principle, Yin Mo refused to take office under Wang Mang. When the Han dynasty was restored under Guangwu he was invited to take appointment but again would not accept. -HHS 83/73:2762.

Yin Mo 殷模. A man from north of the Yangzi, Yin Mo became a colonel under Sun Quan. On one occasion Sun Quan was furiously angry with him, but his adviser Zhuge Jin persuaded him to pardon Yin Mo. -SGZ Wu 7:1232.

Yin Mo 尹默 [Siqian 思潛]; Guanghan. A keen scholar, Yin Mo recognised that while his colleagues in Yi province admired the New Text interpretations of the classics, they did not pay sufficient attention to detailed commentaries. He therefore travelled to Nanyang, to study under Song Zhong and Sima Hui. He acquired great knowledge of the classics and histories, with special ability in Zuo zhuan.

When Liu Bei took over Yi province in 214 he appointed Yin Mo as an Assistant Officer for Education 勸學從事. In 220, after news came of the abdication of Emperor Xian of Han in favour of Cao Pi of Wei, Yin Mo joined a petition which cited various works of divination and urged Liu Bei, King of Hanzhong, to claim the imperial title. He was appointed tutor on Zuo zhuan to the Heir, Liu Shan.

Yin Mo held court office under Liu Shan and also served on the staff of Zhuge Liang. He died about 240. -SGZ Shu 12:1026*, HYGZ 10B:176.

Yin Mou 尹茂 see Yin Mao 尹茂.

Yin Mu 尹睦 [Boshi 伯師] (d.93); Henan. Having served as Administrator of Guanghan, Yin Mu became Minister of Agriculture. In 88 he joined the Excellency Yuan An and other senior officials in their unsuccessful protest against the plan to send Dou Xian, brother of the regent Dowager, on the grand campaign to destroy the Northern Xiongnu. In 91 he also argued against Dou Xian's proposal to establish a separate puppet Shanyu for the north.

In the autumn of 92, after the destruction of Dou Xian by the young Emperor He and his eunuch allies, the Grand Commandant Song You was forced to kill himself on account of his collusion with the Dou group. Yin Mu took his place, with control of the Imperial Secretariat. He died in office in the winter of 93. -HHS 4:174-77.

Yin Mu's grandson Yin Song became Excellency over the Masses in the time of Emperor Huan, and his great-nephew Yin Xun later played a leading role against the Liang clan and then against the eunuchs. The biography of Yin Xun in HHS 67/57 at 2208 describes Yin Mu as Yin Xun's uncle and a former Excellency over the Masses, while Song is referred to as Yin Xun's elder brother and a former Grand Commandant. This, however, is a corruption in the text or a confusion of the historian; the Secondary Biography of Yin Xun, at HHS 57/47:1857, has the relationship and the offices correctly.

Yin Mu 陰睦 see Yin Lu 陰陸. -HHS 32/22:1129.

Yin Pu 陰溥; Henei. As Cao Cao entered Jing province in 208, Liu Zhang sent his officer Yin Pu as an envoy to offer terms of alliance. -SGZ Shu 1:868.

Yin Qi 尹齊. In the early third century Yin Qi and his colleague Deng Jing, expert vocalists of formal music 雅樂, were members of the orchestra at the puppet court of Han under Cao Cao. -SGZ 29:806.

Yin Qin 陰琴; Nanyang. Son of Yin Qing, he succeeded to his fief. -HHS 32/22:1132.

Yin Qin 尹勤 [Shuliang 叔梁]; Nanyang. A keen scholar, Yin Qin lived in seclusion and people admired his virtue.

Yin Qin later took office, became Minister of Ceremonies, and in 106 he was appointed Excellency of Works. As Emperor An was brought to the throne, Yin Qin was enfeoffed for his contribution, but in the following year he was obliged to leave office because heavy rain had damaged crops and there had been several outbreaks of banditry. He died without heirs, and the marquise was ended. -HHS 46/36:1555.

Yin Qing 陰慶; Nanyang. Eldest son of Yin Xing, in 58 Yin Qing was enfeoffed in recognition of his father. He later gave property to support his younger brothers Yuan and Dan. Admiring his generosity, Emperor Ming appointed him as a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates. -HHS 32/22:1132.

Yin Rong 尹融. Minister Herald under Gongsun Shu, about 30 Yin Rong was sent to the scholar recluse Li Ye of Guanghan, taking a dose of poison and instructions that Li Ye should either accept high office or take the potion. He urged Li Ye to accept appointment, arguing that it was meaningless to stay loyal to the fallen dynasty of Han, and he should think of his family. Li Ye nonetheless drank the poison. -HHS 81/71:2669-70, HYZ 10B:173.

Yin Shen 殷參 see Yin Can 殷參.

Yin Sheng 殷盛; Chenliu. Probably in the 170s, the clerical officer Yin Sheng was questioned by Cai Yong and confirmed the remarkable mourning behaviour of the youthful Cheng Wei. -Cai 8:2.

Yin Shi 陰識 or Yin Zhi [Zibo 次伯] (d.59); Nanyang. Son of Yin Lu/Mu and elder half-brother of the Lady Yin, future empress of Guangwu, Yin Shi was a student at Chang'an when Liu Bosheng raised his rebellion against Wang Mang in 22. Returning to his home country, he collected over a thousand kinsmen, clients and retainers to join the enterprise, and became a colonel under Deng Feng, a local leader and kinsman of his stepmother.

As a lieutenant-general in 23, Yin Shi took part in the attack on Wan city, then led a separate column to take over five counties to the south. In 24 he became a marquis and an acting chief general under the Gengshi Emperor, but the regime collapsed soon afterwards, and Nanyang fell into disorder. Yin Shi's sister had entered the harem of Liu Xiu in 23, but she had stayed at her family home as he went to the north, and Yin Shi now accompanied her to refuge at the base of his former leader Deng Feng, south of Wan.

In 25 Guangwu sent messengers to call the Lady

Yin, and Yin Shi went with her to join him. He was appointed a Commandant of Cavalry and his fief was changed from the one he had held from the Gengshi Emperor. In the following year he joined Wu Han against the Tanxiang bandits in Wei commandery. Guangwu wanted to add to his fief on account of his achievement in the wars, but Yin Shi refused, arguing that he would appear to be gaining favour beyond his worth because of his sister's position. Guangwu admired his restraint but, as Bielenstein 79:104 and 118, observes, the Yin group had joined later than other leaders from Nanyang, their political position was less well established, and Yin Shi and his half-brothers needed to be cautious.

Yin Shi then became Commandant in charge of the Hangu Pass west of Luoyang, and was named Specially Advanced. He resigned on account of the death of his mother, but in 39 he was enfeoffed as marquis of a county in Runan. When his nephew Liu Zhuang, future Emperor Ming, was named Heir in 43, Yin Shi was made acting Bearer of the Mace, and he was left in charge of security at the capital when Guangwu went on tour in the provinces. The emperor admired his confidentiality about affairs of state, and noted him as an example for any imperial relative by marriage.

Though he was not appointed Tutor, Yin Shi was recognised as a mentor to the future ruler, and when Emperor Ming came to the throne in 57 he confirmed him as Bearer of the Mace and again named him Specially Advanced. When Yin Shi died two years later he received posthumous honours. -HHS 32/22:1129-30*.

Yin Shi 尹世. A local commandery officer in the late second century, Yin Shi suffered pain in his limbs, a dry throat and deafness. The doctor Hua Tuo gave him a draught, saying that if he sweated he would be cured, but if not he would die in three days. He did not sweat, and died on schedule. -SGZ 29:800.

Yin Shu 陰淑; Nanyang. Son of Yin Gong, in 120 the Dowager Deng granted him the succession to the marquise which had been ended at the death of his elder brother Huang in 113. -HHS 32/22:1130.

Yin Shu 殷署. A general in Cao Cao's service, in 215 he was given command of five thousand men who had formerly served the north-western warlords Han Sui and Ma Chao. He was to take them to join the defence of the newly-conquered Hanzhong, but as they approached the ranges and the road to the south, they mutinied. The trouble was eventually put down by Yin Shu's colleague Zhao Yan, but it was agreed that none of the men were suitable for service on the Hanzhong frontier, and they were transferred instead to the east.

In 219 Yin Shu joined Xu Huang in successful counter-attack against Liu Bei's general Guan Yu outside Fan city in Nan. -SGZ 23:667, 17:529; deC 96:499, 545.

Yin Song 陰嵩 [Wenyu 文玉]; Nanyang. A senior cousin of the Empress Yin of Guangwu and her brother Yin Xing, he was orphaned when young and was cared for by his uncle Yin Ju. They lived a modest and retiring life, and when rebellion against Wang Mang broke out in the early 20s they went south to Cangwu.

Yin Song was later an Internuncio, but left office in mourning for Yin Ju. Though he had never got on well with his influential cousin Yin Xing, it appears that Yin Xing had respected his ability, and as he was on his deathbed in 47 he recommended Yin Song to Emperor Guangwu. Appointed as a General of the Household. Yin Song was admired for his conduct, and in 57 Emperor Ming appointed him Commandant of the Guards at the Changle Palace of his mother the Empress Yin, now Dowager. He was later Bearer of the Mace. -HHS 32/22:1131-32.

Yin Song 陰嵩. Administrator of Jincheng in the early 130s, Yin Song invited the local worthy Zhao Kuan to appointment and named him a Thrice Venerable. -Nagata 94:226.

Yin Song 尹頌訟 [Gongsun 公孫] (d.157); Henan. A grandson of Yin Mu, in 154 Yin Song was promoted from Minister of the Household to be Excellency over the Masses, and received enfeoffment. He died in office in the winter of 157. -HHS 7:300-02.

The biography of Yin Xun, at HHS 67/57:2208 describes Yin Song as his elder brother and says that he was Grand Commandant. This is wrong: it was Yin Song's grandfather Yin Mu who was a Grand Commandant. The Secondary Biography of Yin Xun, at HHS 57/47:1857, has the relationship and the office correctly.

Yin Su 殷肅 also as Duan Su 段肅; Hongnong. A scholar of the Guliang interpretation to Chunqiu, Yin Su became commandery Officer of Merit. He was praised by Ban Gu. -HHS 40/30A:1332; Hou Kang: 2112, Yao Zhenzong:2331.

Yin Sui 尹綏; Julu. In 24 Yin Sui was an officer under the Administrator Pi Tong. When Wang Lang claimed the imperial title a great part of the region accepted him, but Pi Tong sent Yin Sui and Zhang Wan with two troops of cavalry to Xindu city to join his colleague Ren Guang and assist Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, against the pretender.

At an early stage of the campaign which followed, Pi Tong sent Yin Sui and Zhang Wan into the enemy-held city of Tangyang in Julu. They probably had family connections, for they were able to persuade the people to change sides and open the gates to Liu Xiu.

Both men took part in later campaigns and rose to become lieutenant-generals, and Yin Sui was enfeoffed as a marquis in Changshan. -HHS 21/11:758-59.

Yin Tai 尹臺; Chenliu. During the 170s Fan Dan was proscribed from office. Quite destitute, he sent his son Xiang to glean. Yin Tai, presumably a son or brother of Yin Bao, gave him a single dou [2 litres] of grain and told him not to let his father know. Fan Xiang, however, felt obliged to tell, and Fan Dan sent him back with six dou. -YSS:20a.

Yin Tang 陰棠; Nanyang. Brother of the Honoured Lady Yin of Emperor Ming, in 77 Yin Tang was granted a county marquise in Jiangxia by Emperor Zhang. -HHS 50/40:1675.

Yin Tao 殷陶 [Zhongcai 仲才 or Zhongzi 仲子]; Runan. Yin Tao acquired a reputation for filial piety at the age of twelve, notably for defying a great snake which sought to block the entrance to his father's tomb.

In 167, as the local hero Fan Pang returned from prison at Luoyang after the First Faction Incident, he was met by a crowd of local gentry, and Yin Tao and Huang Mu acted as his escorts and attendants. Warning them, however, that their good intentions only added to his danger, Fan Pang went into strict retirement.

At some time the Administrator Jing Yu wanted to nominate Huang Mu as Filial and Incorrupt, but Huang Mu insisted that Yin Tao was more suitable and must take precedence. -HHS 67/57:2206 & JJ at 2415.

Yin Tong 殷彤. In 84 Yin Tong was an Expectant Appointee Watcher of the Zhong Pitchpipe 待詔候鍾律 at the Spiritual Terrace observatory under the Minister of Ceremonies. He reported that no member of staff knew how to tune the sacred instruments, but that a former officer, Yan Chong, was said to have known the art and to have passed it to his son Xuan. Emperor Zhang agreed that Yan Xuan should be given opportunity to show his ability, but he was not successful. -HHS 91/1:3015.

Yin Wanquan 陰萬全; Nanyang. Son of Yin Qin, he succeeded to his fief. -HHS 32/22:1132.

Yin Wei 淫偉 see Yao Wei 徭偉.

Yin Wei 陰鮪; Nanyang. Son of Yin Shu, he succeeded to his fief. -HHS 32/22:1130.

Yin Xin 陰訢 (d.33); Nanyang. Son of Yin Lu/Mu and a younger brother of the Lady Yin, future empress of Guangwu, Yin Xin was killed by bandits. An edict awarded him posthumous enfeoffment. -HHS 10A:405-06.

Yin Xing 陰興 [Junling 君陵] (9-47); Nanyang. Son of Yin Lu/Mu and younger brother of the Empress Yin of Emperor Guangwu, in 26 Yin Xing was appointed a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates and commanded the imperial bodyguard with a troop of cavalry. He escorted the emperor everywhere, always bearing an umbrella to shield the ruler from wind, dust and mud, and he checked the security of each place he stayed.

Though he was held in the utmost confidence, Yin Xing did not allow private interest to affect his conduct. He enjoyed having clients and retainers, but used none of them in the imperial bodyguard; he disliked Zhang Zong and Xianyu Bao, but recognised their abilities and recommended them; and though he was fond of Zhang Fan and Du Qin, he considered them superficial and would not speak on their behalf.

When his mother the Lady Deng was killed in 33, his father and his brother Xin received posthumous titles, while Yin Xing was made a Palace Attendant and enfeoffed as a secondary marquis. Guangwu later offered him a full marquise but, like his half-brother Yin Shi, he refused on grounds that his achievements in the civil war were limited and it would be wrong for his family to be too greatly honoured. It is said that he gave the same cautious advice to his sister, and the Lady Yin never pressed Guangwu for favours.

In 43 Yin Xing's nephew Liu Zhuang was named Heir and Yin Xing was appointed Minister of the Guards. He and Yin Shi, Bearer of the Mace, were recognised as mentors to the future ruler, and they controlled substantial troops about the imperial palace. When Guangwu was seriously ill with jaundice in the summer of 44, he entrusted Yin Xing with his testament. Recovered, he offered Yin Xing the office of Grand Marshal to replace Wu Han, but Yin Xing refused.

In 47, as Yin Xing himself lay dying, Guangwu came to visit him, and asked his opinion on various officials. Yin Xing recommended the Consultant Xi Guang and his own cousin Yin Song; he had never got on well with Yin Song, but had always admired his quality. Both men were promoted.

In 58 Emperor Ming issued an edict praising Yin Xing, granting fiefs to his sons Qing and Bo, and appointing their younger brothers Yuan and Dan as gentlemen cadets. When Yin Xing's widow died in 80, Emperor Zhang sent an escort for her funeral and awarded Yin Xing a posthumous title. -HHS 32/22:1130-32*; Bn 79:118-120.

Yin Xing 尹興. Administrator of Kuaiji in 70, his name appeared on a list of conspirators associated with Liu Ying, King of Chu. With five hundred members of his staff, Yin Xing was arrested and brought to prison in Luoyang. Most of those imprisoned died under torture, until the remarkable filial piety shown by the clerk Lu Xu was reported to Emperor Ming and brought the pardon of the remainder.

Yin Xing and his associates were proscribed from office for life, but were allowed to return home. -HHS 81/71:2682-83.

Yin Xiu 陰脩 or Yin Xun 循 [Yuanji 元基] (d.190); Nanyang. Administrator of Yingchuan in the 180s, Yin Xun paid great attention to recruiting and recommending good men for office. His nominees included Zhong Yao, Xun Yu, Xun You and Guo Tu, all of whom had distinguished careers.

Yin Xiu later became Minister Steward. In 190 he was sent as an ambassador from Dong Zhuo to make peace with the eastern alliance, but he was killed by Yuan Shu. -HHS 9:370, 74/64A:2376, XC 8:8b, SGZ 6:192.

Yin Xun 尹尋. A county magistrate in Ba commandery, Yin Xun was killed by brigands about 150. -HYGZ 1:6.

Yin Xun 尹勳 [Boyuan 伯元] (d.168); Henan. Yin Xun was a man of good official family: his great-uncle Yin Mu had been Grand Commandant and his cousin Yin Song became an Excellency. Yin Xun, however, took no advantage of the prosperity and honour which his family had gained, but lived simply and, from wide reading, resolved to act as a loyal and honourable officer of the state.

He was offered appointment by the commandery and provincial administrations, nominated Filial and Incorrupt, and invited to office at the capital, but rejected all these because he disapproved the moral tenor of the government. Eventually he received a special summons as Knowing the Way and became county magistrate in the capital of Zhao. His rule was excellent, he was graded Number One in the empire, and after further transfers he was appointed Director of the Imperial Secretariat.

Yin Xun, the Deputy Director Huo Xu and some other members of the Secretariat were among the few officials who resisted the power of Liang Ji and his family, and when Emperor Huan and his eunuch allies attacked the Liang in 159 Yin Xun led the defence of the Secretariat while his subordinates prepared the documents. He was rewarded with enfeoffment, but when Ju Yuan and Zuo Guan were disgraced in 165 and some eunuch favourites were demoted, Yin Xun and his colleagues had their fiefs taken away altogether.

Administrator of Runan at the time of the First Faction Incident in 166/167, Yin Xun wrote to the court urging that Fan Pang, Yuan Zhong and others be released from proscription, while Dou Wu praised him to Emperor Huan as one of the finest officials of the empire. Soon afterwards Yin Xun returned to the capital as Court Architect and then became Minister of Agriculture. Praised by the reformists and students of the University he was numbered among the popular heroes in the lists compiled during the late 160s.

Under the regency for the new Emperor Ling in 168, Yin Xun was a close associate of the General-in-Chief Dou Wu. As Chen Fan prepared to attack the eunuch group led by Cao Jie, he consulted with Yin Xun and had him appointed once more as Director of the Secretariat, the same post he had held during the coup of 159.

In the autumn the eunuch Shan Bing, a supporter of Dou Wu, made accusations against Zheng Li. Yin Xun was ordered to take part in the examination of Zheng Li at the Northern Prison of the Yellow Gates, and on the basis of his extorted confession they recommended the arrest of Cao Jie and Wang Fu.

The letter was intercepted, however, and Cao Jie and Wang Fu struck first. They took the young Emperor with them, and in a reversal of the situation of 159 they forced the Secretariat to draw up a warrant for the arrest of Yin Xun and Shan Ping. Shan Bing attempted to resist and was killed; Yin Xun was either killed at the prison or was arrested and forced to commit suicide. -HHS 67/57:2208* & 2187, 57/47:1857-58, 69/59:2243; deC 89.98-99, Ch'ü 72:485-488.

Yin Xun 陰循 see Yin Xiu 陰脩.

Yin Xun 殷訓 see Duan Xun 段訓.

Yin Yao 陰耀/耀 (d.144). Inspector of Yang province about 140, Yin Yao invited the scholar Xu Sheng to appointment in his office, but Xu Sheng was killed on the road by a brigand. When the murderer was captured soon afterwards, Yin Yao allowed Xu Sheng's widow, the Lady Lü Rong, to cut off his head and present it as an offering to the victim's spirit.

As the rebellion of Fan Rong and Zhou Sheng broke out in Jiujiang in 144, Yin Yao brought provincial levies to join Feng Gun in an attack on the rebels. His men were defeated and Yin Yao was killed. -HHS 6: 275, 38/28:1279, 84/74:2795; Ch'ü 72:308.

Yin Ye 尹業. At the beginning of the reign of Emperor Zhang in 75, the head of the Censorate Ma Yan complained that many provincial officials lacked concern for their duties. In particular, he accused Yin Ye the Inspector of Liang province of recommending men of poor quality for office. Yin Ye and two other inspectors were dismissed. [The accusations may not necessarily have been justified: see sub Zhu Fu.] -HHS 24/14:860.

Yin Yi 陰軼; Nanyang. Son of Yin Gang, Yin Yi was a brother of the Empress Yin of Emperor He, and became a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates. When the Empress was accused of witchcraft in 102, Yin Yi and his brothers Fu and Chang were arrested and tortured. Their confessions implicated one another, and also their cousins Deng Feng and Deng Yi. The empress was deposed, some of the family died, while Yin Yi, Yin Chang and other relatives were sent to exile in the far south.

In 106 the new regent Dowager Deng ordered that the exiles should be allowed to return to their home countries and have their great properties restored to them. -HHS 10A:417, 423, 32/22:1130.

Yin Yi 尹益; Hanyang. An Investigator under the Administrator Qiao Xuan, Yin Yi was ordered to invite the local hermit Jiang Qi to office. Yin Yi warned that Jiang Qi would not come, and Jiang Qi indeed refused, even under threat. Qiao Xuan had Yin Yi flogged. As he still continued to protest, and other officials objected too, Qiao Xuan eventually gave up the idea. -HHS 51/41:1695.

Yin Yi 尹異. General of the Household to Sun Quan, in 211 Yin Yi was sent with Lü Dai to Zhang Lu in Hanzhong, asking him to move east down the Han against Cao Cao's positions in Jing province. Zhang Lu felt the distance was too great and the terrain too difficult, so nothing came of the venture. -SGZ Wu 15: 1384.

Yin Yong 陰永; Nanyang. Son of Yin Shi, in the time of Emperor Ming he was Specially Advanced. -HHJ 13:169.

Yin You 尹由 (d.36). General in the service of Lu Fang, in 33 he defended Yanmen commandery against Guangwu's forces under Du Mao. As Lu Fang's position collapsed three years later, Yin You was killed by his officers Jia Dan and others, and they surrendered to Han. -HHS 22/12:777; Bn 67:108-110.

Yin Yu 陰瑜; Nanyang. Married to the young Lady Xun Cai q.v., he had a daughter by her but died soon afterwards. -HHS 84/74:2799.

Yin Yuan 陰員 Nanyang. Son of Yin Xing, in 58 he was made a gentleman cadet in recognition of his late father. -HHS 32/22:1132.

Yin Zhen 尹珍 [Daozhen 道真]; Zangke. Emerging from the obscurity of his isolated territory, Yin Zhen claimed that he had spent his life in the wilderness and had no knowledge of classical or other learning. It is said that he received tuition in the classics from Xu Shen, and in the apocrypha and arts of divination from Ying Feng, and when his studies were complete he returned to teach his fellow-countrymen. As a result of Yin Zhen's initiative this region of the south first became educated in proper fashion.

Selected for office on account of his scholarship, Yin Zhen served in the Imperial Secretariat and was later Inspector of Jing province. -HHS 86/76:2845, HYGZ 4:54; Miyakawa 60:28.

There is a problem about the dating of Yin Zhen: HHS says that he appeared in the time of Emperor Huan, but HYGZ says that it was during the reigns of Emperors Ming and Zhang. Xu Shen, moreover, died about 120, and Ying Feng some fifty years later. The contradiction is not easily resolved.

Yin Zhenren 陰真人 or Zhenjun 真君 see Yin Changsheng 陰長生.

Yin Zhi 陰識 see Yin Shi.

Yin Zhi 殷志 i.e. Duan Zhi 段志. -HHJ 12:84.

Yin [Zhisun] 殷知/智孫 see sub Yin Can 殷參.

Yin [Zhongrang] 尹仲讓; Jianwei. Towards the end of the second century, Yin Zhongrang was the husband of the Lady Han Jiang. He died when she was only twenty years old, but even after the mourning period was over, his widow rejected an offer of marriage from the gentleman Dong Tai. -HYGZ 10B:160.

Yin [Zhongsun] 殷仲孫; Shu. Yin Zhongsun married the Lady Chang Michang. He conceived a child with her, but died in an epidemic soon afterwards. -HYGZ 10A:140.

Yin Zhou 尹宙 [Zhouan 周南] (116-177); Yingchuan. A man of family, Yin Shou studied the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu and also the histories. He became an Investigator and a senior member of the central staff in the commandery, and also an Assistant Officer of Yu province. A stele was erected in his memory. -Nagata 94:224.

Yin [Zizheng] 殷子徵; Runan. Close friends of Zhang Shao, Yin Zizheng and Zhi Junzhang cared for him in his last illness. Zhang Shao told them, however, that he regretted not seeing Fan Shi of Shanyang, whom he described as his "death friend" 死友; they, by contrast, were his "life friends" 生友. -HHS 81/71:2677, XC 5: 13b [surname as Shang 商].

Yin Zun 尹尊/遵. Probably an associate of the gentry clique from Nanyang, Yin Zun was at Chang'an in 24, and was enfeoffed by the Gengshi Emperor as king of a county in Nanyang.

In 26 Yin Zun was leader of a group of remnant officers of the late Gengshi Emperor in Nanyang. In the spring Guangwu sent his general Jia Fu against his city and in the summer, after one month's siege, Yin Zun surrendered. -HHS 11/1:470, 17/7:666; Bn 59:54, 152.

Ying 營 [surname] see sub Rong He 榮郃.

Ying, Dame 應嫗; Runan. During the time of Emperor Guangwu the Lady Ying, a widow with four sons, saw a spiritual radiance at a local shrine 祖. When she went to look closer, she found gold, and her sons and their descendants became celebrated officials and scholars for several generations.

In fact, the first recorded descendant of the Lady was her grandson Ying Shun, who held influence at court at the end of the first century, and it would appear to have been him, rather than the legendary Dame, who founded the fortunes of the family. -HHS 48/38:1615.

Ying 盈, the Lady. Concubine of Fu Wan, the Lady was the mother of Fu Shou, empress of Emperor Xian. When Cao Cao destroyed the empress and her family in 214, the Lady Ying and her kinsmen were exiled to Zhuo commandery. -HHS 10B:454.

Ying/Xu 應許, the Lady, wife of Ying Shun and then consort of Xu Jing; see the Lady Xu/Ying 許/應.

Ying Bin 應彬 miswritten for Ying Chen 應彬.

Ying Cao 應操. About 160 Ying Cao was a county magistrate in Taiyuan. Guo Tai approached him on behalf of Jia Shu, who had been sentenced to death for murder in a vendetta but had now shown the utmost remorse. Even though there had been an amnesty, Ying Cao would not relent, but Guo Tai appealed to the commandery office and obtained Jia Shu's release. -XC 4:10a-b.

Ying Chang 應瑒 [Delian 德璉] (d.217); Runan. Son of Ying Xun and nephew of the celebrated scholar Ying Shao, Ying Chang became a member of Cao Cao's staff, joined the suite of Cao Zhi, and was later a literary adviser to Cao Pi. He died during the great epidemic of 217.

Scholar, essayist and poet, Ying Chang also composed a treatise on the art of chess 弈勢 Yishi; this relates to "surrounding chess" 圍碁 [Japanese Go]. In his Lun wen 論文 "Essay on Literature" Cao Pi honoured him as one of the Seven Masters of the Jian'an period. -SGZ 21:599-602*; Yao Zhenzong:2412.

Ying Chen 應郴; Runan. Son of Ying Die, Ying Chen served as a county magistrate in Henan and became Administrator of Wuling. -HHS 48/38:1607.

Ying Cheng 應承. Administrator of Ba commandery about 147, Ying Cheng joined the Inspector of Yi province Chong Gao to attack the religious rebel Fu Zhi. They were defeated. The two men were then impeached by Liang Ji, but through support of Li Gu and the Dowager Liang, they suffered only dismissal. -HHS 56/46:1827-28.

Ying Die 應璩; Runan. Son of Ying Shun and a man of scholarly talent, Ying Die became Administrator of Jiangxia. -HHS 48/38:1607.

Ying Feng 應奉 [Shishu 世叔]; Runan. Son of Ying Chen, Ying Feng understood both standard and unorthodox Confucian texts and had an extraordinary memory for names and faces [see sub Xu Xun]. He was also an accomplished historian, compiling Han shi 漢事 and a Han shu houxu 漢書後序 "Postscript to the History of Han."

Having distinguished himself as Officer for Legal Matters 決曹 in his commandery, during the 140s Ying Feng was sent to Luoyang as Reporting Officer and was nominated Abundant Talent by the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. In 153 he became Administrator of Wuling, where his father had served earlier. Having settled a rising of local tribesmen, he set up a program for education and cultural control.

Ying Feng was later dismissed, presumably when his former patron Liang Ji was destroyed in 159. In 162, however, as serious rebellion broke out in the south, Ying Feng was made a senior adviser to the general Feng Gun. After a successful campaign, Ying Feng was consulted on the situation and was generously rewarded.

Appointed Director of Retainers on Feng Gun's nomination, Ying Feng gained a reputation for strict and fearless impartiality, though he was one of the officials whom Kou Rong, in his memorial of apologia, accused of making false accusations. About 165, as Feng Gun, Li Ying and Liu You were in convict service because of their opposition to the eunuch group, Ying Feng argued for them and obtained their release. He also opposed Emperor Huan's wish to make his favourite the Lady Tian, a woman of poor family, empress. The Lady Dou was appointed instead.

For a short period Ying Feng was replaced as Director by Li Ying, but later returned to that office, resigning on grounds of ill health at the time of the First Faction Incident in 166-167. In retirement he composed Gan sao 感騷, a long elegy for the legendary Qu Yuan 屈原. He died about 170. -HHS 48/38:1606-09*, XC 2:12a-13a.

Ying He 營郤 see sub Rong He 榮郤.

Ying [Jixian] 應季先; Runan. Administrator of Ba commandery in the time of Emperor He, Ying Jixian admired the manner in which Yan Yu dealt with the gifts offered for his father's funeral, and he wrote a poem in praise. -HYGZ 1:5.

Ying Mu 應募; Shu. In 115 Ying Mu joined Chen Sheng and Luo Heng to assassinate Lü Shudu, leader of rebel Qiang who came to attack Yi province. -HHS 87/77:2889.

Ying Qu 應璩 [Xiulian 休璩]; Runan. Son of Ying Xun, he was known for literary ability, but was not so admired as his brother Chang. He held office at the Han court under Cao Cao. -HHS 48/38:1615, SGZ 21:604.

Ying Rong 應融 [Yigao 義高]; Runan. Son of Ying Shun, he became a magistrate in Henei. As Zhu Tian was travelling to the capital for appointment, he was taken ill on the road and Ying Rong arranged for his care and treatment in most generous fashion.

Ying Rong became Administrator of Lujiang, but after eight years in that office he left on account of the death of his mother. About 150s, however, as Zhu Tian became Director of Retainers, he arranged for Ying Rong to return to high office; he served in five commanderies, and gained an excellent reputation throughout the empire. -FSTY 7:55, also HHSJJ 48/38: 1731 Hong Liangji quoting the gazetteer Luzhou fu zhi 廬州府志.

Ying Rong 穎/穎容 [Ziyan 子嚴]; Chen. A student of the Excellency Yang Ci, Ying Rong was a man of wide learning. He was particularly skilled in Zuo zhuan, and compiled a study of the classic, Chunqiu Zuo zhuan tiao li 春秋左氏條例, in more than fifty thousand characters.

Nominated for office by the commandery and provincial governments, Ying Rong was also invited by the Excellencies, but refused all of them. As civil war broke out in 190, he took refuge in Jing province, where he gathered over a thousand students. The warlord Governor Liu Biao named Ying Rong as Administrator of Wuling, but he was unwilling to accept. He died about 200. -HHS 79/69B:2584*.

Ying Shao 應劭 [Zhongyuan 仲瑗/仲遠/仲援]; Runan. Son of Ying Feng, Ying Shao was one of the most distinguished scholars of Later Han. Having served in his commandery office, he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt. He became a clerk in the office of He Miao, General of Chariots and Cavalry and brother of the Empress, and then served under the Grand Commandant Deng Sheng. In 185, when the general Huangfu Song proposed recruiting Wuhuan for service against the rebels of Liang province, other advisers suggested that Xianbi would be more effective, but Ying Shao spoke firmly against the very idea of using such unreliable and/or inherently hostile people. As a majority at court was convinced and agreed with him, the idea was dropped.

Graded First Class in 186, Ying Shao served as a magistrate in Pei and then held various other positions before he was appointed Administrator of Taishan in 189. In 191 he led his people to defeat an invasion of Yellow Turbans, capturing their dependents and their goods, and in 192 he joined a petition organised by Tao Qian, Inspector of Xu province, urging Zhu Jun to lead an army west to rescue the emperor at Chang'an. Nothing came of the proposal.

In 194 Ying Shao was required by Cao Cao to welcome his father Cao Song. He sent an escort, but Cao Song was robbed and killed by troops of Tao Qian operating within Taishan. Fearful of Cao Cao's anger, Ying Shao fled to Yuan Shao and became an adviser on his staff.

During this time, Ying Shao compiled Han yi 漢議, a compendium of legal cases and precedents in two hundred and fifty pian, with thirty pian more of dissenting opinions, Boyi 駁議, including many of his own; as Emperor Xian returned to the east in 196, he sent this material to the new capital at Xu city. Realising how much had been lost in the troubles caused by Dong Zhuo, moreover, Ying Shao also presented a quantity of material on the conduct of the court, gathered from his own notes and recollections. These compilations included Hanguan yi 漢官儀 "Ceremonial of Han Offices," Hanguan zhu 注 "Notes on Han Offices," and Hanguan liyi gushi 漢官禮儀故事 "Ceremonial Precedents for Han Offices," and he may have been the original author of the Treatise on the Bureaucracy 百官志 of the Xu Han shu of Sima Biao, later incorporated into Hou Han shu. In Fengsu tongyi 風俗通義 "A Compendium of Popular Customs," moreover, compiled in the late 190s, Ying Shao collected and discussed legends, anecdotes, ritual conduct, popular beliefs and other memorabilia, with comments urging reform, restraint and proper conduct; again the list of omens and portents which he prepared [now only in fragments] was a major source for Sima Biao's Treatise of the Five Powers 五行志. He also compiled a commentary to Han shu. Ying Shao's works were influential in their own time and remain an important source of information on Later Han.

Ying Shao died at Ye city about 200. -HHS 48/38: 1609-14*; MBeck 90:47-49, 85, Nylan 83.

Ying Shen 應慎 see Ying Shun 應順.

Ying Shun 應順 [Huazhong 華中]; Runan. Known for his honest conduct as a local officer, Ying Shun was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, joined the Imperial Secretariat, and then became Inspector of Ji province and Chancellor of Dongping, where he was noted for his strict control of his subordinates.

As Dou Xian returned from his victory over the Northern Xiongnu in 92, all officials were instructed to send congratulations and gifts, but Ying Shun and his colleagues Chen Chong and Zhang Lin refused to join the flattery. Dou Xian was destroyed by Emperor

He soon afterwards, and the recusants were rewarded: Ying Shun became Administrator of Zuopingyi, then Intendant of Henan and later Court Architect.

With considerable influence in the government of Emperor He, Ying Shun had special lodging houses 邸 constructed for the Reporting Officers sent in by the commanderies each year, arguing that these men were of great value to the ruler in understanding the empire. A few years later Reporting Officers were appointed probationary gentleman cadets in the same fashion as Filial and Incorrupt nominees. -HHS 48/38:1607, 46/36:1554.

Ying Shun 應順, wives of: see the Lady Xu/Ying 許/應 [later the second consort of Xu Jing] and the Lady Li 李 IV [first married to Deng Yuanyi].

Ying Si 應嗣; Runan. Appointed to his senior staff and then recommended for office by the Administrator Wang Tang, Ying Si later became Director of Retainers. -HHS 31/21:1106, HYGZ 10B:145.

Ying Xun 應珣 [Jiyu 季瑜]; Runan. Son of Ying Feng and younger brother of Ying Shao, Ying Xun became a clerk in the offices at the capital. -SGZ 21:601.

Ying Yang 應瑒 see Ying Chang 應瑒.

Ying Yu 應嫗; Runan: see Dame Ying 應嫗.

Ying Yu 應余 [Zizheng 子正] (d.218); Nanyang. In 218 Ying Yu was commandery Officer of Merit when the local officer Hou Yin led a mutiny, seized the capital, Wan city, and called people from the hills to support him. Ying Yu assisted the Administrator Dongli Gun [or Dongli Bao] to escape from the city, but Hou Yin sent men in chase of them and they were caught a few kilometres outside. As the enemy shot at them, Ying Yu shielded Dongli Gun with his own body. He was wounded seven times, and the fugitives were taken prisoner.

Ying Yu warned his captors that Cao Cao's army would certainly come and destroy Hou Yin, and their only hope of survival was to care for Dongli Gun. Impressed by his loyalty, the rebel troops indeed spared Dongli Gun, but Ying Yu died of wounds soon afterwards.

When Cao Cao heard of this, he was deeply impressed and awarded quantities of grain to Ying Yu's family. Many years later, moreover, in 258, the government of Cao Mao 曹髦 under the control of Sima Zhao 司馬昭 issued an edict ordering official appointment for his grandson Ying Lun 應倫, in commemoration of his heroic conduct. -SGZ 4:141.

Ying Zhi 應志 [Zhongjie 仲節]; Runan. A great-grandson of Ying Shun, Ying Zhi became Inspector of Xu province; in 138 he obtained the surrender of the bandit Cai Boliu. -HHS 6:267.

Ying Zi 贏咨 or Lei Zi 贏咨; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Ying Zi was a member of the group. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, however, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Yilang 抑狼 see Liumiao 柳貌/邈. -HYGZJBTZ:285.

Yiti 抑鞮; Xiongnu. In the summer of 140, as the chieftains Che'niu and Wusi rebelled in Yunzhong and Dingxiang, Yiti the Worthy King of the Right joined them. Their combined forces attacked the capital of the Shanyu Xiuli in Xihe, and though the General on the Liao Ma Xu forced them to withdraw, they continued to plunder the countryside, while pressure from the official Chen Gui drove Xiuli and his younger brother the heir to commit suicide.

Ma Xu was now ordered to avoid combat and seek to persuade the rebels to surrender. Yiti and his followers did return to allegiance, but Wusi and Che'niu expanded their incursions. Che'niu claimed title as Shanyu, and though he was forced to surrender late in 140, and Wusi was killed in 143, the traditional leadership of the Xiongnu had fallen into limbo.

Yiti could have been next in line for the chief position, but his rebel past no doubt told against him. He was passed over, and in 143 the hostage prince Toulouchu was proclaimed Shanyu at Luoyang. -HHS 89/79:2960-61; deC 84:306-315.

Yiyimo 伊夷模 [Korean: Iimo] or Yanyou 延優 [Korean: Yon-u] of Gaogouli [Koguryo]. According to SGZ 30:845, Yiyimo was a son of King Bogu [Korean: Paekke] of Gaogouli, and the younger brother of Baqi/Faqi [Korean: Palgi]. When Bogu died about 190, Baqi was considered unworthy and the succession was granted to Yiyimo. Gongsun Kang, the Chinese warlord of Manchuria, then attacked Gaogouli, seized some of its territory and set up Baqi under his protection. Yiyimo was forced to withdraw his capital to the east, and he died about 230.

According to Samguk-sagi 三國史記, however, a Korean chronicle of the twelfth century based upon older material, Baqi [cited as Faqi i.e. Pakgi] and Yiyimo [cited as Yanyou: i.e. Yon-u] were brothers of King Nanwu [Korean Nannu]. This ruler is not mentioned in early Chinese records, but Gardiner argues that he may have reigned for some ten years between about 195 and 205, and was possibly the father rather than an elder brother of the two princes.

Samguk-sagi tells how Nanwu's widowed queen quarrelled with Baqi and arranged to have Yiyimo set upon the throne. Baqi later attempted a coup, but was driven out and sought help from Gongsun Kang, thus triggering the invasion. It is then claimed that the Chinese were defeated and Baqi was killed, but this is probably not correct: see sub Jixu].

Despite the claims of Korean historians, it appears in fact that Gongsun Kang took advantage of a succession dispute to attack some time after 208; he gained substantial territory and Yiyimo's state was substantially weakened. -Gardiner 69A:32-33, 72A:84-89.

Yizi 邑子 see Yi Zi 邑子.

Yon-u [Korean] i.e. Yanyou 延優 of Gaogouli [Koguryo], also known as Yiyimo q.v.

Yong 雝 [surname] i.e. Yong 雍 passim.

Yong Ba 雍霸. About 75 Yong Ba was a county magistrate in Nanyang, but governed badly. Zhao Qin was sent as Investigator by the Administrator Huan Yu, and Yong Ba was persuaded to resign his post. -DGHJ 18:8a.

Yong Dou 雍竇 [Bozhu 伯著]; Hanzhong. During the first century Yong Dou was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and was then a magistrate in Henan. He was later a member of the Imperial Secretariat, and then became Administrator of Jiujiang. -LS 12:12a.

Yong Guan 雍觀 see Yong Quan 雍勸.

Yong Kai 雍闔 (d.225); Yizhou. Leader of a powerful clan, about 215 Yong Kai killed the Administrator Zheng Ang and made contact, through Shi Xie in Jiaozhi, with Bu Zhi, Inspector in Sun Quan's service. Establishing a general hegemony in the south, about 223 Yong Kai captured Liu Bei's Administrator Zhang Yi and sent him to Sun Quan. Sun Quan gave Yong Kai title as Administrator of Yongchang, but actually ordered his officers to keep him from that territory.

In 225, as Zhuge Liang began his southern expedition, Yong Kai was killed by Gaoding 高定, a non-Chinese chieftain of Yuxi.

The surname of Yong Kai may indicate a relationship to the royal family of the state of Tan/Shan: see sub Yongyoutiao below. -SGZ Wu 7:1237, SGZ Shu 11:1011, 13:1046; Fang 52:160, 194-195.

Yong Lang 雍朗 [Zhongning 仲寧]; Hanzhong. Son of Yong Wang, Yong Lang was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, served as a county magistrate in Hongnong, and was then Administrator of Wudu. -LS 12:12b.

Yong Mao 雍茂. Registrar to Liu Bei in 221, Yong Mao argued against his intention to take the imperial title. His protests were rejected, and he was executed soon afterwards on some other charge. It is said that as a result many men of quality were discouraged from coming to join Liu Bei's service. -SGZ Shu 9.982.

Yong Mou 雍茂 see Yong Mou 雍茂.

Yong Quan 雍勸 or Yong Guan 觀; Hanzhong. Son of Yong Wang, Yong Quan was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, became a magistrate in Henan, and then served as Chancellor of Zhao, dying in that office.

The Yong family tomb later suffered damage, but as a former officer under Yong Quan, surnamed Handan, became Administrator of Hanzhong, he repaired it and set up a stele. -LS 12:12a-13b.

Yong Wang 雍望 or Yong Yi 翌 [Bohuan 伯桓]; Hanzhong. A descendant of Yong Du, Yong Wang became an officer in charge of convict labourers under the Court Architect. -LS 12:12b.

Yong Yi 雍翌 see Yong Wang 雍望. -HHSJJ 86/76:3148 Hui Dong.

Yong Youtiao 雍由調 see Yongyoutiao 雍由調.

Yong Yu 雍煜; Hanzhong. Son of Yong Quan, Yong Yu was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, served as a county magistrate in Jianwei and was later a commandery Commandant. -LS 12:12b.

Yong Zhi 雍陟; Hanzhong. Eldest son of Yong Wang, Yong Zhi was nominated Filial and Incorrupt. He became a county magistrate in Ba commandery and then Administrator of Yizhou.

In 176 the non-Chinese of Yizhou rebelled and took Yong Zhi prisoner. Li Yong was sent in his place, defeated the rebels and freed him. -LS 12:12b, HHS 86/76:2847.

Yongkai 雍闔 see Yong Kai 雍闔.

Yongqutiao 雍曲調 see Yongyoutiao 雍由調.

Yongtian 雍田 see Yongyoutiao 雍由調.

Yongyoutiao 雍由調; non-Chinese. Ruler of a state beyond the imperial frontier in the far southwest, Yongyoutiao sent at least two embassies to the imperial court of Han. The name of the kingdom appears both as 撣 and as 擅, and pronunciation is given by the commentaries variously as Shan and as Tan. This is presumably an early reference to the Shan people of present-day Burma/Myanmar.

In 97 Yongyoutiao sent an embassy to the court of Emperor He. Speaking through a series of interpreters, as there was no-one who knew both the Shan language and Chinese, they presented valuable gifts. Emperor He awarded Yongyoutiao a gold seal and purple ribbon, insignia of the highest nobility, and granted other seals and silken cloth to the lesser officials.

In 120 Yongyoutiao sent another tribute embassy to the court of Emperor An. On this occasion the envoys said that their country was connected on the southwest to the state of Daqin 大秦; they presumably referred to the sea route across the Indian Ocean. The group included musicians, conjurers, jugglers and people who could swallow fire; they performed at the court assembly held on New Year's Day of 121. Yongyoutiao was sent a seal as Grand Chief Commandant for Han 漢大都尉, and seals of gold and silver were awarded to the emissaries according to their rank.

In 131 a third embassy from Shan came to the court of Emperor Shun, and the king was again presented with a golden seal and purple ribbon. On this occasion HHS omits the name of the ruler, but DGHJ has it as Yongtian 雍田: this may be a corruption of Yongyoutiao, or perhaps refers to his successor. -HHS 4:183, 5:231, 6:258, 86/76:2851, DGHJ 3:3a; Yü 67: 115.

You 攸, the Lady [or Liu You 劉攸: it is uncertain whether You was her given name or maiden surname]. Wife to Liu Pu and mother of Liu Ye, as she was dying she warned their sons of their father's weaknesses - SGZ 14:442-43.

You Chu 游楚 [Zhongyun 仲允]; Zuopingyi. Son of You Yin, as a child he was entrusted by his father to the young official Zhang Ji, who reluctantly accepted.

You Chu later became a magistrate in Hedong. When Cao Cao conquered the region about Chang'an in 211 he appointed Zhang Ji as Intendant of Jingzhao. On Zhang Ji's recommendation, You Chu was appointed Administrator of Hanxing commandery, in the western part of Sili, and later transferred to Longxi.

Noted for his humane government, You Chu hated executions, and when Zhuge Liang of Shu attacked in 228, he rallied his people for a successful defence. He died in office in Beidi aged over seventy. -SGZ 15:473-74.

You Gong 由恭 see Tian Gong 田恭.

You Guang 有光 became Minister of the Household. -FSTY 5f:122.

You Shilang 右師郎 see Gushi Lang 古師郎.

You Tongqi 友通期 or Zhi Tongqi 支通期, the Lady. Presented to the harem of Emperor Shun by the General-in-Chief Liang Shang, the Lady You was appointed a Beauty, second grade of concubine, but was later dismissed for some minor fault and sent back to Liang Shang. Not daring to keep for himself a woman who had belonged to the imperial household, Liang Shang arranged for the Lady to be given away in marriage. Liang Shang's son Liang Ji, however, sent retainers to abduct her, then took her as his mistress.

Liang Shang died about this time, but while he was still in formal mourning Liang Ji established the Lady You in a house west of the capital. Liang Ji's wife Sun Shou sent slaves to follow him, and found the Lady's residence. She was taken and beaten, her hair was cut off and her face slashed. Sun Shou also intended to report the lese-majesty to the court, but Liang Ji went to his mother-in-law, kowtowed, and through her persuaded Sun Shou to avoid such a scandal.

Liang Ji continued to visit the Lady You, and she bore him a son, Liang Boyu. Sun Shou, however, eventually had her son Liang Yin destroy the You family. -HHS 34/24:1180.

You Tu 尤突 (d.216); Yuzhang. A commoner of the Poyang region, You Tu was sent a seal by Cao Cao to raise the people against Sun Quan. He was attacked and destroyed by He Qi and Lu Xun. -SGZ Wu 15:1380.

You Yin 游殷; Zuopingyi. Commandery Officer of Merit about 190, You Yin examined Zhang Ji, was impressed by him, and invited him to his house. You Yin's wife thought he was making too much of a young man, but You Yin insisted that Zhang Ji should serve as a guardian/sponsor of his son You Chu, and Zhang Ji reluctantly accepted.

You Yin quarrelled with the Director of Retainers Hu Zhen, and Hu Zhen had him put to death on a false charge. A few months later Hu Zhen himself died, exclaiming as he did so that he had been at fault and You Yin's spirit had come for him. -SGZ 15:473.

Yougutunu 優孤塗奴; Southern Xiongnu. Nephew of the Shanyu Tan by an elder brother, in 111 Yougutunu aided the general Liang Qin in the forced evacuation of Chinese settlers and citizens from Anding, Beidi and Shang commanderies. At the conclusion of the operation, Liang Qin granted Yougutunu the seal of a marquis, but the court found that he had presumed upon his authority by issuing such insignia; he was recalled and imprisoned. -HHS 47/37:1593.

Youhu Chi'er 友胡赤兒 see 赤兒 Chi'er.

Youhuan 尤還 of Shanshan. In 120 Youhuan was King of Shanshan. His maternal lineage was Chinese, so he was a natural ally of Han, and when the official Suo Ban established a military colony he readily paid his respects.

King Junjiu of Further Jushi and his Xiongnu allies soon afterwards destroyed Suo Ban, and Youhuan sought help from China. This was not at first forthcoming, but it appears Youhuan managed to hold his position until 124, when the Chief Clerk for the Western Regions Ban Yong brought an allied army to defeat the Xiongnu and capture Further Jushi. -HHS 47/37:1587-88.

Youliduo 尤利多 of Qiuzi [Kuqa]. Youliduo succeeded King Jian as King of Qiuzi about 80, and maintained his predecessor's opposition to Han: see sub Ban Chao. By 91, however, the authority of Ban Chao in the Western Regions was so great that Youliduo was obliged to submit. The former hostage prince Boba was placed on the throne and Youliduo was exiled to Luoyang. -HHS 47/37:1574-81.

Youliu Shanyu 優留單于 [personal name unknown] (d.87); Xiongnu. Though Chinese sources provide no details of this man's lineage, he was a descendant of the Northern Shanyu Punu, and succeeded to his title. During his reign the Northern Xiongnu were weak and disorganised, subject to pressure from all sides, notably their rivals of the Southern Xiongnu, allies and subjects of Han, and the erratic tribes of the Xianbi in the east. Unable to maintain his position, the Shanyu withdrew to distant defences.

In 84 the Shanyu sent emissaries to Meng Yun the Administrator of Wuwei, seeking permission to trade along the frontier. Meng Yun referred the matter to the court at Luoyang, and an agreement was confirmed by the visit of a senior minister from the northern court.

Raiding parties of the Southern Xiongnu, however, plundered and kidnapped the traders, and in 85 the Northern Shanyu threatened to resume raids along the borders. There was fierce debate at the Han court between those who supported their old allies of the south and those who believed that the agreement with the north should be honoured. Eventually the emperor ordered that prisoners taken by the southerners should be ransomed and restored to their own people. In the longer term, the Southern Xiongnu had the advantage, for the ransoms indicated that aggression would be rewarded, and over following years, as the Northern Xiongnu became weaker, the attacks on their caravans continued.

In 87 an army of the Xianbi attacked the Northern Xiongnu, defeated the Youliu Shanyu and killed him. The Xianbi stripped his skin and those of his followers, then returned to the east with their grisly trophies. As the state fell into disarray, numbers of tribespeople sought refuge within the imperial borders or acceded to the Southern Shanyu.

No personal name or dynastic title are recorded for the successor to the Youliu Shanyu, and the disorder and troubles were compounded by a plague of locusts. In 88, moreover, a dissident group of nobles set up the Worthy King of the Right, an elder half-brother of the new Shanyu, as a rival to his title.

The Southern Shanyu urged a final attack against the disintegrating state, and at the end of the year Dou Xian, brother of the regent Dowager of Han, received permission for a campaign of conquest. He embarked upon the project in 89, and by 91 the Northern Xiongnu state was in ruins and the Shanyu had disappeared. He was succeeded by his younger brother Yuchujian, who ruled briefly as a puppet of Han. -HHS 89/79:2950-54, 45/35:1518; deC 84:262-275.

Young Emperor [Emperor Shang] 殤帝 (reg. 106) see Liu Long 劉隆.

Young Prince, the 孺子 See Liu Ying.

Youshi Lang 右師郎 see Gushi Lang 古師郎.

Yu 虞, the Lady (d.179). Daughter of Yu Shi, a man of respectable family 良家, the Lady was selected into the harem of Emperor Shun about 135 at the age of thirteen sui and was appointed a Beauty, one of the second-ranking concubines. Receiving the emperor's favour, she first bore him a daughter, Liu Sheng, and then, in 143, his only son the infant Liu Bing.

In 144 Liu Bing was proclaimed as Heir, and a few months Emperor Shun died. In accordance with the constitution of Han, the Dowager Liang, formal consort of the late ruler, held formal position as regent for his infant successor, and the Lady Yu had no role at court. Despite the birth of her son, she had not been granted any special status before the death of Emperor Shun, and she now received only the empty style of "Aunt" [大家 Dajia (also apparently sounded in this context as Dagu 大姑); and see sub Ban Zhao]. When Liu Bing, Emperor Chong, died in the following year, the Lady disappeared into obscurity.

In 175 the eunuch Zhao You and the Consultant Bi Zheng presented a memorial urging that proper recognition be given to the Lady Yu as the mother of an emperor, and also to the Lady Chen, natural mother of Liu Zuan, the late Emperor Zhi. Emperor Ling approved, and the Lady Yu was named Honoured Lady in attendance at the tomb of Emperor Shun. She died a few years later. -HHS 10B:440-41, 77/67:2500.

Yu 興 (d.46); Xiongnu. Son of the Huhaxie Shanyu 呼韓邪單于, who had reigned from 59/58 to 31 BC, Yu was a younger half-brother of Nangzhiyasi 囊知牙斯, who later adopted the name Zhi 知 in accordance with Chinese custom and pressure. When Nangzhiyasi came to the throne as Wuzhuliu 烏珠留 Shanyu in 8 BC, Yu was appointed Worthy King of the Right. He and other members of the family surely had Xiongnu names, but most are known only by their adopted Chinese nomenclature.

When the Wuzhuliu Shanyu Zhi died in 13 AD, Yu was the eldest surviving son of the Huhaxie Shanyu, and if the principle established by his father had been followed he would have succeeded to the throne. The Lady Yun 云, however, born to the second marriage of the Chinese Lady Wang Zhaojun 王昭君, former concubine of the Huhaxie Shanyu, had married Xubu Dang 須卜當, member of a leading noble clan, and she and her kinsmen were anxious to maintain good relations with China. Through their influence Yu was passed over in favour of his younger half-brother Xian 咸, who became Wulei 烏累 Shanyu. Yu was appointed Worthy King of the Left, the title held by the heir-apparent.

The Shanyu Xian had a complex and difficult relationship with Wang Mang. In 11 AD he and two of his sons had been given title as Shanyu by Wang Mang in rivalry to the Wuzhuliu Shanyu Zhi, but Xian was soon forced to submit and received a lowly post at the Xiongnu court, and in the following year Wang Mang killed Xian's son Deng 登 at Chang'an.

Xian learned of the execution only after he had become Shanyu, and he promptly authorised raids along the frontier. In 15 a Chinese embassy came to escort Deng's body home and present apologies, and Xian reverted to his former allegiance to the Chinese court, accepting even that the name of his people be changed from Xiongnu to Gongnu 恭奴 "Respectful Slaves." He was, however, unable or unwilling to halt the border raiding.

When Xian died in 18, the Xiongnu court was divided between the pro-Chinese party and their opponents, but Yu appears to have succeeded his brother without difficulty; he took the dynastic or regnal title of Huduershidaogao 呼都而尸道皋 Shanyu.

Early in his reign Yu sent an embassy to the Chinese court, but soon afterwards Xubu Dang and his wife the Lady Yun went to the border, from where they were taken to Chang'an, either voluntarily or against their will. In 19, moreover, Wang Mang set up Xubu Dang as a rival Shanyu, stationed a great army on the frontier, and declared Yu to be an unpardonable rebel.

As Xubu Dang died a short time later, Wang Mang ceased to press his family's claim, and the expeditionary force never set out. The massive commitment of troops to the north, however, reduced Wang Mang's ability to deal with the Han rebels led by the Liu clan of Nanyang, and the Lady Yun and her son Xubu She 奢 died at the fall of Chang'an in 23.

Either as a cause or a consequence of the defection of the Xubu group, the Shanyu Yu killed his half-brother Yituzhiyasi 伊屠智牙師, son of the Huhaxie Shanyu by the Lady Wang: as the surviving male of his generation he had been next in line to the throne and would no doubt have returned the Xiongnu court to the Chinese allegiance. In 24, after the Gengshi Emperor had set his government in Chang'an, he sent an embassy to the Xiongnu with a seal in the same form as under Former Han. Yu observed, however, that whereas Han had assisted the Huhaxie Shanyu in his time of trouble, he had himself brought armies to face Wang Mang and had thus aided the restoration; it was therefore appropriate for the new emperor to pay him respect. The Chinese envoys argued the case, but circumstances were against them, and soon after their return in the summer of 25 the Gengshi Emperor was destroyed.

In the years of civil war which followed, the Xiongnu received no further threats or demands, while through the 20s and 30s the Shanyu exercised influence in favour of one warlord or another.

His first ally was Peng Chong, Administrator of Yuyang, who turned against Guangwu in 26 and married his daughter to the Shanyu in the following year. In 28, however, a Xiongnu army was defeated by Guangwu's forces, while Peng Chong was killed by household slaves in 29.

More successful was the association with Lu Fang, pretender to the throne of Han, in the region of the Ordos. Having acquired support among the local Chinese gentry and the Xiongnu during the 20s, he was recognised as emperor by the Shanyu about 26. In 28 the Shanyu sent envoys to gather support for Lu Fang in the border country, and in 29 he sponsored Lu Fang as he set up court on Chinese soil in Wuyuan.

In 30 Emperor Guangwu of Han exchanged embassies with Shanyu Yu, but negotiations for peace came to nothing. The Xiongnu remained loyal to their protégé, attacks by Han forces had small success, and by 35, after a series of defeats, the imperial troops had been forced to withdraw from Shuofang, Dingxiang and Yanmen and were on the defensive across all the north.

In 37 Lu Fang was heavily defeated in an attempt to seize Yunzhong. He was forced to take refuge at the Shanyu's court and played no major role thereafter in Chinese affairs. On the other hand, though Yanmen was briefly re-occupied by Han, the Chinese were soon once more on the defensive, and by the early 40s the frontier had been pressed back to the Sanggan River and the south of the Ordos, while the territory of the northern loop of the Yellow River was abandoned. Further to the northeast, in the region of present-day Beijing, the empire was under pressure from Xianbi and Wuhuan tribes.

The Chinese built walls to guard their new lines of defence, but the situation was not secure, and in the summer of 44 Xiongnu raiding parties reached as far south as Tianshui and Youfufeng on the Wei River west of Chang'an, and Shangdang to the north of Luoyang. In the winter of 44/45 the general Ma Yuan took command of defences in the north, with headquarters in Zhao, but a preliminary sortie was defeated, and in the following winter a Xiongnu raid broke the lines in Shanggu and drove into Zhongshan. By the middle 40s, the territory dominated by the Shanyu Yu rivalled that of the great Modun 冒頓 at the beginning of Former Han, and the restored dynasty of Han had proved unable to establish a strategy to control the raiders.

At this point, in 46, the Shanyu Yu died. He was aged about eighty, he had reigned for almost thirty years, he had extended the territories of his people across great areas of fertile ground in the north of China proper, and he left mature sons to succeed him. Within a few years, however, the Xiongnu state was divided by a succession conflict between Yu's son Punu and his cousin Bi, founder of the puppet state of the Southern Xiongnu. -HS 94B:3810-29, HS 99C:4156, 4181; Bn 67:100-116, deC 84:210-227

Yu Bao 虞褒; Kuaiji. During the 190s Yu Bao came to take refuge with the Inspector of Jiaozhi province, his fellow-countryman Zhu Fu. Zhu Fu made him a local officer, but Yu Bao and his colleagues behaved so oppressively that rebellion broke out and Zhu Fu was driven away. -SGZ Wu 8:1252.

Yu Cheng 虞承 [Shuming 叔明]. A Counsellor Remonstrant, Yu Cheng was known for his honesty in debates at court, and for the generosity with which he gave his salary to his students. -XC 7:11a.

Yu Cheng 虞成; Kuaiji. Son of Yu Guang, Yu Cheng was a county magistrate in Runan and transferred his father's scholarship in the Book of Changes to his son Yu Feng. -SGZ Wu 12:1322.

Yu Cheng 庾乘 [Shiyou 世遊]; Yingchuan. As a young man Yu Cheng was indentured to be a servant in the county office. Guo Tai saw his potential, and urged him to study. So Yu Cheng became a servant to the students there.

Later Yu Cheng was able to take part in class discussions, but because of his humble rank he sat always in the lowest place. The teacher and the other students would question him on difficult problems, and his answers were so good that the lowest seat became the most honoured in the academy.

Yu Cheng was invited to clerical office at the capital but always refused; like Huang Xian and Jiang Gong, he was known as a "Summoned Lord" 徵君. His descendants held office under Wei and Jin. -HHS 68/58:2229, JS 50:1391.

Yu Chong 遇冲 became Administrator of Henei. -FSTY 6f:141.

Yu Dang 玉當. A slave in the household of Dou Xian, brother of the Dowager Dou, when the power of the family was destroyed in 91 by Emperor He and his eunuch allies, Yu Dang sought to escape their fate. He asked the minister Ma Guang to help him, but was rejected and felt bitterly resentful.

On account of his own association with the fallen faction, Ma Guang was sent to his estates. Government officers then captured Yu Dang, and he claimed that Ma Guang had taken an active part in a treasonous plot with Dou Xian. Unable to disprove the allegations, Ma Guang killed himself.

Guo Hu, another former slave of Dou Xian, later gave evidence which posthumously exonerated Ma Guang. -DGHJ 12:4b, HHS 24/14:858.

Yu Di 于弟/予弟 see Zhu Di 朱弟.

Yu Digen 于氏根/甄根 (d.193). Probably named for his quantities of hair, in 185 Yu Digen was a leader among the Black Mountain bandits in the Taihang range. He was killed by Yuan Shao in 193. -HHS 71/61:2310, 74/64A:2381-82, SGZ 8:262, 6:194; deC 89:567.

Yu Du 于毒 [Poison Yu] (d.193). A leader among the Black Mountain bandits in the Taihang range in 185, Yu Du was defeated by Cao Cao in Dong commandery in 191. In 193 he joined a group of mutineers to capture Ye city in Wei commandery, but Yuan Shao drove him away, followed him into Henei and killed him. -HHS 71/61:2310, 74/64A:2381-82, SGZ 8:262, 6:194.

Yu Fan 虞翻 [Zhongxiang 仲翔] (d.233); Kuaiji. Yu Fan was a son of Yu Xin, whose family had held commissioned rank in the imperial civil service for several generations, and also maintained a substantial scholarly tradition in the Book of Changes. Precocious but arrogant, known for his quick wit and his skill in debate, during the early 190s Yu Fan became Officer of Merit to the Administrator Wang Lang. In a tradition developing at that time, Wang Lang asked Yu Fan about leading men from the region in the past, and their conversation was recorded as an early form of local history.

As Sun Ce became an apparent threat, Yu Fan was sent on embassy to Hua Xin, Administrator of Yuzhang, to suggest an alliance, but in 196, before any arrangement was made, Sun Ce moved against Kuaiji. Yu Fan's father had just died, but Yu Fan took off his mourning garb to support Wang Lang. He urged him not to give battle, but Wang Lang did; he was heavily defeated, and fled south by sea to the out-lying region of present-day Fuzhou. Yu Fan went with him, but Wang Lang told him to go back and look after his family. So Yu Fan surrendered to Sun Ce.

Sun Ce treated Yu Fan with respect, re-appointed him as Officer of Merit and made him a close personal adviser. It is said that he several times urged Sun Ce to be careful of hunting or travelling without an escort, but this may be historical prescience.

In 200 Yu Fan acted as Sun Ce's envoy to persuade Hua Xin to surrender Yuzhang. Sun Ce wanted to send him as ambassador to the imperial court under Cao Cao's control, but Yu Fan was concerned at the potential conflict of interest and asked to return home. Sun Ce appointed him magistrate of Fuchun, the original home of his own family. When Sun Ce was killed soon afterwards, many local officials planned to pay respects at the funeral, but Yu Fan insisted that they hold their positions to guard against trouble from the hills. It appears that Sun Quan's elder cousin Sun Song [or Gao] thought of making a claim to succeed Sun Ce, but Yu Fan warned him against such ambition.

Though Yu Fan was offered nomination and appointment at the imperial capital, he always refused, but he did have active scholarly correspondence with Kong Rong, who wrote most favourably of Yu Fan's commentary to the Book of Changes; Zhang Hong also admired his spirit and character. Sun Quan appointed him a Commandant of Cavalry at his court, but he came to resent the many times that Yu Fan contradicted him, so he sent him away to Danyang. Lü Meng, on the other hand, admired Yu Fan, and had him recalled for the campaign to seize Jing province in 219. He gave good advice, and sent an eloquent letter persuading the garrison commander Shi Ren to surrender, but showed intense dislike for the captive Yu Jin of Wei, and contempt for the turn-coat general Mi Fang.

Yu Fan appears to have become increasingly aggressive, and he was several times drunk and contrary. At the celebratory banquet when Sun Quan became King of Wu in 221 Yu Fan failed to respond to his toast. Sun Quan wanted to kill him, remarking that "If Cao Cao could kill Kong Rong, why can't I kill Yu Fan?" He was dissuaded with difficulty, and when Yu Fan later jeered at him and Zhang Zhao as they were discussing spirits and immortals, Sun Quan sent him to exile in Jiao province.

Yu Fan maintained his teaching in the south, with several hundred students at a time, and besides his work on the Book of Changes he compiled several scholarly works, including commentaries to Analects, to Laozi and to Guo yu. He presented these to Sun Quan, and he also wrote a memorial when he took the imperial title in 229, but he died in exile.

Yu Fan had attempted to warn Sun Quan against his plans for alliance with the Gongsun family in Liaodong, urging him to concentrate on the various peoples within his own territory who had not yet submitted. When the expedition proved a failure, Sun Quan recalled his advice and ordered his recall. Yu Fan was already dead, but his family was brought back, he was buried in his home country, and his sons were given office.

Despite Yu Fan's personal political difficulties, he was known as one of the leading scholars of his day, and his family survived and prospered. He had eleven sons, several of whom held high positions in the government of Wu, and the Yu were recognised as one of the four great families of the state. Their fortune continued under Jin. -SGZ Wu 12:1317-24*; deC 90:500-502, Knechtges 82:398-399.

Yu Fang 虞放 [Zizhong 子仲 or Ziqing 子卿] (d.169); Chenliu. A great-grandson or great-great-nephew of Yu Yan, Yu Fang studied under the Grand Commandant Yang Zhen. Yang Zhen was slandered and committed suicide in 124, but after Emperor Shun was brought to the throne at the end of the following year Yu Fang and his colleague Chen Yi obtained his rehabilitation as a loyal official. The two men gained a fine reputation.

In the time of Emperor Huan, Yu Fang became a member of the Imperial Secretariat, and he was enfeoffed for his role in the overthrow of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji in 159. He then became Minister Coachman and then Minister of Ceremonies, and at the end of 160 he was made Excellency of Works; after some unfavourable portents he left office in the next year. When the emperor's former favourites Zuo Guan and Ju Yuan were disgraced in 165, Yu Fang and others who had been rewarded in 159 were deprived of their fiefs.

Though he had been a protégé of the eunuch Cao Teng, Yu Fang became a committed enemy of the eunuchs and an associate of Li Ying. He was executed in the Second Faction Incident at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Ling. -HHS 33/23:1154, 57/47:1858, 67/57:2188, Cai 5:3.

Yu Feng 虞封 see Xi Feng 席封. -DGHJ 10:5a, XHS 2:14a.

Yu Feng 虞鳳; Kuaiji. Son of Yu Cheng, Yu Feng maintained the family tradition of scholarship on the Book of Changes, and also served as a county magistrate in Runan. -SGZ Wu 12:1322.

Yu Gong 虞恭; Chen. Son of Yu Xu, in 143 Yu Gong was Court Astronomer when Bian Shao, a member of the Imperial Secretariat, presented a paper arguing that the current Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] calendar followed the wrong base year (Sivin 69:59: "working epoch") and did not accord with the apocrypha. Yu Gong and Zong Xin claimed that while the calendar was not perfect, it was basically satisfactory and should not be changed. Emperor Shun agreed.

Yu Gong was later Administrator of Shangdang. -HHS 58/48:1873, 92/2:3036-37.

Yu Guang 虞光; Kuaiji. During the first century Yu Guang was Administrator of Lingling. He established a family tradition of study in the Meng interpretation of the Book of Changes. -SGZ Wu 12:1322.

Yu Gui 于圭; Taishan. Son of Yu Jin, he succeeded to his father's village fief after his death in 221. -SGZ 17:524.

Yu He 俞河 see Sun He 孫河.

Yu Heng 虞衡. A man of family, in the time of Emperor An, Yu Heng was a colonel in the Northern Army at Luoyang. His granddaughter the Lady Yu was later concubine to Emperor Shun and bore his only son, Liu Bing, Emperor Chong. -HHS 10B:441.

Yu Ji 于吉 see Gan Ji 干吉.

Yu Jin 于禁 [Wenze 文則] (d.221); Taishan. Some time in the 180s, as the local leader Bao Xin was raising troops, Yu Jin went to take service under him. In 192 Bao Xin arranged for Cao Cao to take over Yan province, but he was killed in action against the Yellow Turbans soon afterwards. Yu Jin then joined Cao Cao's officer Wang Lang, who recommended him to Cao Cao as a man of real military talent, worthy of high command. Cao Cao interviewed Yu Jin and appointed him as a major.

When Cao Cao attacked Tao Qian in Xu province in 193 Yu Jin held command of a troop. He captured a county city in Pengcheng and was named as its commandant. He then accompanied Cao Cao back into Yan province to deal with Lü Bu. In an independent operation he destroyed two camps of Lü Bu outside his stronghold of Puyang, then defeated Lü Bu's officer Gao Ya in Dongping. Returning to the main army, Yu Jin took part in the recapture of several counties and in the siege of Zhang Chao at Yongqiu city in Chenliu.

In 196 Yu Jin accompanied Cao Cao's campaign against the Yellow Turbans of Runan and Yingchuan.

One night the enemy made a surprise attack on the camp, but Yu Jin brought his men to repel the assault. They killed the chieftain Huang Shao and the other rebels surrendered. Yu Jin was appointed a colonel and continued to serve in the main army

At the beginning of 197 Cao Cao and his men were taken by surprise when the surrendered commander Zhang Xiu suddenly turned against him. As the army fell into confusion, Yu Jin was the only officer who managed to keep his men together and make an orderly retreat. As he withdrew he learned that some Qingzhou troops 青州兵 were engaged in plunder. The Qingzhou troops were former Yellow Turbans who had surrendered and served as auxiliaries. Cao Cao had always treated them leniently, but Yu Jin attacked them as bandits, and they ran away to complain. When Cao Cao summoned Yu Jin to his presence, Yu Jin made sure that his men had prepared firm defence positions before he went. Cao Cao accepted his explanation, fully endorsed his conduct, and enfeoffed him as a village marquis in recognition of his recent and earlier achievements.

Later that year Yu Jin took part in operations against Yuan Shu, and in 198 he joined a further attack on Zhang Xiu, followed by the final destruction of Lü Bu in Xiapi. In 199 he went with Shi Huan and Cao Ren to destroy Yuan Shao's ally Sui Gu north of the Yellow River in Henei.

As Cao Cao prepared for war with Yuan Shao, Yu Jin was anxious to play a leading role, and Cao Cao stationed him with two thousand men at Liyang in Wei commandery, on the northern bank of the Yellow River. In that position he blocked Yuan Shao's direct approach over the Yan Crossing towards Cao Cao's main defence lines at Guandu. Early in 200 Cao Cao left Guandu to deal with Liu Bei in his south, but Yu Jin was able to hold his ground long enough to prevent Yuan Shao taking advantage of the opportunity. [Note that this is the account in Yu Jin's biography, SGZ 17. SGZ 1 and HHS 74/64A, followed by ZZTJ 64:2024; deC 89:271, ascribe the delay simply to Yuan Shao's procrastination. They make no mention of an attack on Liyang, though it may well be that Yu Jin's resistance did delay Yuan Shao's advance and make him more cautious.]

As Yuan Shao's army advanced, Yu Jin and Yue Jin were sent with five thousand men to attack enemy positions up and down the Yellow River. They burnt some thirty camps, killed or captured several thousand men, and forced the surrender of over twenty of Yuan Shao's officers. A separate raid by Yu Jin destroyed a detached camp of the enemy at the extreme flank of Cao Cao's position in Henan. He was promoted to be a major-general.

In 206, after the capture of the former Yuan territory in Ji province, Yu Jin was sent to deal with Chang Xi, a rebel of the Mount Tai region who had caused similar trouble and surrendered before. Chang Xi surrendered after a short siege. He was an old acquaintance of Yu Jin, and Yu Jin's officers proposed that he be sent as a prisoner to Cao Cao, but Yu Jin pointed out Cao Cao's rule: no pardon for an enemy who surrenders only after he has been surrounded. Despite their past connection, he wept and gave orders to kill Chang Xi. When Cao Cao heard of this he sighed in admiration and admired Yu Jin even more. As the east was largely pacified, Yu Jin was promoted to be a full general.

In 208 Yu Jin, Yue Jin and Zhang Liao were stationed on the frontier against Liu Biao in Jing province. The three could not co-operate and Cao Cao was obliged to send his Registrar Zhao Yan to enforce agreement. Soon afterwards Yu Jin accompanied Cao Cao as he invaded Jing province and received the surrender of Liu Biao's son Liu Zong, and he then took command of one of seven divisions in Nanyang under Zhao Yan, now Area Commander.

In 209 Yu Jin was sent with Zhang Liao and others to attack Mei Cheng and Chen Lan, bandits of Lujiang who had connections to Sun Quan, south of the Yangzi. Mei Cheng came with three thousand men to surrender to Yu Jin, but when Yu Jin withdrew he brought his men to join Chen Lan and the combined force took refuge in the hills. While Zhang Liao pursued them into the wilderness, Yu Jin guarded his supply lines. Zhang Liao then defeated the bandits and killed their leaders.

Yu Jin was rewarded by an increase of two hundred households to his fief, for a total of 1,200 households. At this time he ranked with Zhang Liao, Yue Jin, Zhang He and Xu Huang as the leading generals under Cao Cao's command. Since he kept no booty for himself he was able to grant generous rewards to his men, but because of his strict discipline he was never truly popular.

About this time Cao Cao became angry at his officer Zhu Ling, and he sent Yu Jin with a small escort and orders to take over his troops. Though Zhu Ling's men had been personally attached to him, Yu Jin's own authority was so great that they accepted the change without difficulty. Yu Jin was appointed General on the Left with the Staff of Authority, and a part of his fief was taken to provide a marquissate for one of his sons.

As Liu Bei's general Guan Yu attacked up the Han River in 219, Yu Jin was sent to assist Cao Ren in Fan city, by present-day Xiangfan. In the autumn, as he was stationed outside the city with seven divisions under his command, there were heavy rains and massive flooding along the river. Yu Jin and his troops took refuge on isolated patches of high ground, but Guan Yu and his men attacked them by ship. His colleague Pang De maintained a heroic defence until he was captured and killed, but Yu Jin and the rest of his army were compelled to surrender. When Cao Cao heard the news he was saddened at the humiliation of his old friend and the way in which he had been shown inferior to Pang De.

Soon afterwards, as Sun Quan's general Lü Meng attacked Guan Yu from behind and destroyed him, Yu Jin came into the hands of Wu.

In 221 Sun Quan made formal submission to Cao Pi, now proclaimed as Emperor of Wei, and he sent Yu Jin back to the north as sign of goodwill. Now in his fifties, Yu Jin was haggard and worn, with white hair and moustache, and he wept and made the kowtow as he came to audience with Cao Pi. Cao Pi spoke sympathetically of other men in the past, who had avenged previous defeats by later successes, and he re-appointed Yu Ji as a general, to be an ambassador to Wu.

Before he was due to depart, however, Cao Pi told Yu Jin to visit Cao Cao's tomb at Ye city. There, on the walls of the tomb, he had a series of pictures painted, showing the siege of Fan and notably the heroism of Pang De and the humiliating surrender of Yu Jin. Bitterly ashamed, Yu Jin took ill and died. - SGZ 17:522-24*.

Sima Guang comment that "[Cao Pi's] conduct was unworthy of a sovereign" 斯章不君也: ZZTJ 69:2193; Fang 52:55.

Yu Jing 虞經; Chen. A legal officer in the state government for sixty years, Yu Jing was just and sympathetic to those who were condemned. Despite his own humble career, he hoped that his grandson Yu Xu might rise to high office in the same way as Yu Dingguo 于定國 of Former Han, so he gave him the style Shengqing 升卿 "Rising to a Ministry." -HHS 58/48:1865.

Yu Kuang 于匡; Hongnong. In the autumn of 23 Yu Kuang joined his fellow-countryman Deng Ye in a rising against Wang Mang on behalf of the Han. The two men were evidently close friends and comrades, for Yu Kuang's name is always linked to that of Deng Ye, and their achievements were gained together: details are therefore given sub Deng Ye.

Having gathered troops in western Nanyang, they returned to Hongnong and stormed two cities. Yu Kuang took title as General Who Supports Han 輔漢, and he and Deng Ye seized the Wu Pass, south-eastern gateway to the capital region. They invited the Gengshi Emperor to send an army, but continued to advance without waiting for such reinforcements. Killing Wang Mang's Administrator of Hongnong, they turned north to Huayin and defeated Wang Mang's last field army, commanded by the Nine Tiger generals: as Deng Ye faced and held the enemy, Yu Kuang made a flanking march south and took the enemy by surprise from the rear.

By this time the main army of Han had arrived, and the combined force attacked the Capital Granary in Huayin county. Held by a tenacious defence, and reluctant to go further with the enemy across their line of communications, the army halted at Huayin while two detachments under Wang Xian and Han Chen captured Chang'an and killed Wang Mang.

The Gengshi Emperor appointed Deng Ye as Bearer of the Mace, chief of police at the capital and a position equivalent to ministerial rank, but Yu Kuang evidently received only confirmation of his general's rank. Neither was granted a royal fief nor any other distinction or reward.

As the Red Eyebrows entered Chang'an in 25, Deng Ye and Yu Kuang escaped, and at the beginning of 26 they came to Luoyang and submitted to Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu. They were confirmed in their rank as generals and were sent under the command of Feng Yi to bring control over the region about Chang'an.

In 27 Yu Kuang and Deng Ye attacked the warlord Yan Cen, then based in Hongnong, and drove him back into Nanyang. Transferred to that region, at the beginning of 28 they joined Deng Yu to defeat Yan Cen once more, forcing him to refuge in Hanzhong. Neither Yu Kuang nor Deng Ye appear again in the records. -HHS 1A:27, 17/7:647, 16/6:604-05; Dubs 55:456-466, Bn 54:127-132.

Yu Kuang 玉况 see Su Kuang 王况.

Yu Lai 余來 (d.145); Danyang. Chieftains of bandits and pirates, during the early 140s Yu Lai and Lu Gong ravaged the counties of Danyang along the lower Yangzi. Eventually, the Administrator Jiang Han raised and trained a local militia, and in 145 he defeated the raiders and killed their leaders. -XC 8:11a, HHS 6:278.

Yu Mi 于麋. An officer of Liu Yao based upon Niuzhu, in Danyang south of the Yangzi, in 195 Yu Mi was attacked and defeated by Sun Ce. -SGZ Wu 1:1102-03; deC 90:161-165.

Yu, Poison 于毒 see Yu Du 于毒.

Yu Qi 虞祁. As Dou Wu and Chen Fan prepared to destroy the palace eunuchs in 168, they appointed Yu Qi Prefect of Luoyang. -HHS 69/59:2243.

Yu Qing 虞卿. In 25 Yu Qing was acting Administrator of Kuaiji. In a fight with bandits, he was saved by his junior officer Meng Zheng. -XC 8:11a.

Yu Sheng 庾乘 see Yu Cheng 庾乘.

Yu Shi 虞詩. Son of Yu Heng, Yu Shi became a cadet gentleman. His daughter the Lady Yu was chosen for the harem of Emperor Shun about 135, and in 143 she gave birth to the emperor's only son, Liu Bing. In 144 the infant Liu Bing succeeded to the throne, but he died in the following year. Since the regent Dowager Liang Na and her family controlled the court, neither the Lady Yu nor her father gained any advancement from their connection to the throne. -HHS 10B:441.

Yu [Shuya] 虞叔雅; Dongping. In the early second century Yu Shuya was known as an expert in divination and magical arts. He was received by Duan Gong in Yi province, and his students included Zhe Xiang and Feng Hao, also from the far west. -HYGZ 10B:145, 148-49.

Yu Su 于肅 miswritten for Ding Su 丁肅. -HYGZ 10B:421.

Yu Ting 虞廷 miswritten for Yu Yan 虞延. -HHS 32/22:1130.

Yu Xian 虞顯; Ba. Yu Xian married the Lady Du Ci, but died young. -HYGZ 10C:177.

Yu Xin 虞歆 [Wenxiu 文繡] (d.196); Kuaiji. Son of Yu Feng and a man of substantial background, Yu Xin served as Administrator of Rinan. He maintained the scholarly tradition of his family and passed it on to his son Yu Fan. -SGZ Wu 12:1322.

Yu Xiu 虞休. Junior commanders under the eastern warlord Dong Xian, Yu Xiu and Peng Feng operated in Lu commandery in 26 and 27. Though Guangwu's Administrator Bao Yong forced several such groups to surrender, Peng Feng and Yu Xiu took title as generals and remained independent. They were eventually tricked into attending a ceremony, and they were arrested and killed. -HHS 29/19:1019.

Yu Xu 虞詡 [Shengqing 升卿 and Ding'an 定安]; Chen. Yu Xu had two styles: Shengqing "Rising to a Ministry" was given him by his grandfather Yu Jing in the hope that he would reach high office.

Yu Xu mastered the Classic of History by the age of twelve. He was orphaned when he was still young, and acquired local reputation for the filial service he showed his grandmother. Recommended by his county, he was offered a post in the headquarters of Chen kingdom, but declined because the ninety-year-old lady was dependent on him. After her death, he accepted appointment in the office of the Grand Commandant Li Xiu at the capital and then became a gentleman cadet.

In 111, as the rebellion of the Qiang people in the northwest reached a peak, Pang Can argued that the empire should withdraw from Liang province and the people should be resettled in the lower valley of the Wei. The proposal was endorsed by the General-in-Chief Deng Zhi, who had achieved no success in his campaigns, but Yu Xu pressed Li Xiu to oppose it, on the grounds that it would expose Chang'an to the troubles of the west. Convinced by his argument, Li Xiu obtained support from the other Excellencies, and the plan for withdrawal was rejected; for the time being, nonetheless, Liang province was effectively abandoned to the enemy.

The court had been reluctant to formally abandon the territory, and Yu Xu's role as a junior official may have been no more than marginal. Deng Zhi and his family, however, had been embarrassed by his interference, and they arranged that he was sent out as magistrate of Chaoge in Henei, where the bandit Ning Ji dominated the county and defied the commandery and provincial forces. Yu Xu's friends at the capital, and the Administrator Ma Leng, were all concerned for his life, but Yu Xu recruited a hundred local thugs and thieves, gave them a feast, pardoned their crimes, and sent them against the enemy. Several hundred bandits were murdered. He also had some poor people hire themselves out to make clothing for the bandits; as they did so, they sewed in distinctive red threads, so when members of the group appeared in public they were immediately identified and arrested. Demoralised and confused, the enemy scattered and fled.

Yu Xu was then promoted to the commandery capital, but he maintained his interest in the problems of the frontier. About 115 he recommended to the general Ren Shang that, rather than taking conscripts from the people, he should charge scutage at one-twentieth the cost of a horse; he could then develop a mobile force to deal with the mounted Qiang. Ren Shang accepted this, and it is likely that the later Chinese successes were obtained through the change in their way of warfare.

Yu Xu's abilities were recognised, and when the Qiang attacked Wudu he was named Administrator. In contrast to his earlier appointment to Chaoge, he was granted a special audience with the Dowager Deng as he left for his new post.

On the road through Youfufeng, Yu Xu was faced by a strong force of rebels. Halting his troops, he announced that he was sending for reinforcements. When the Qiang believed him and departed for easier prey, he advanced by forced marches and had each of his men maintain two camp-fires. Seeing such a number, the Qiang dared not attack.

As he arrived in the commandery, he and his three thousand men were besieged by a far greater force of rebels. Holding his strong cross-bowmen in reserve, Yu Xu had the initial defence maintained by lighter-armed archers. Believing they could withstand such missiles, the Qiang attacked en masse, but were then devastated by the full force of his armament. As they fled in disorder, Yu Xu's men pursued them and inflicted heavy losses. Marching his men in and out of various gates of the fortress, he again deceived them as to his numbers, and as the demoralised enemy withdrew he trapped them in an ambush at a river crossing. The rebels fled south into Yi province, and Yu Xu built a line of forts to guard against their return.

With the commandery at peace, Yu Xu established a program of resettlement and relief, and restored the roads and waterways. In particular, he constructed a canal from his capital, Xiabian, to the upper Han River, opening a route to Hanzhong and the east. It is said that the region became so secure the population rose four-fold, while grain and salt production multiplied ten times and their prices fell accordingly.

Despite his success, Yu Xu was forced from office for some infringement of the law, possibly associated with the political struggle which followed the death of the Dowager Deng, the personal rule of Emperor An, and the ambitions of the Yan family. In 126, however, at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Shun, he became Director of Retainers at Luoyang, and a few months later he impeached the Grand Tutor Feng Shi, the Grand Commandant Liu Xi, and several eunuchs. All had been associated with the Yan family's attempt to keep Liu Bao from the throne. [FSTY 5:40-41 says that he also attacked the Excellency Zhu Chang, who had opposed the Yan group, but in that case he was quite unsuccessful.]

There was considerable opposition, and senior officials complained that Yu Xu had gone too far and brought harm to honourable men, who had sought only to serve the government of the day. In reply, Yu Xu argued that too many officials were anxious to pass responsibility on to their inferiors, and reform should begin from the top. The young emperor accepted his argument: the Excellency Tao Dun, who had impeached Yu Xu for excess of zeal, was dismissed, while Feng Shi and Liu Xi also left office.

Later that year Yu Xu turned against Zhang Fang, a leading eunuch with contacts in the Imperial Secretariat and in the provinces, accusing him of corruption and conspiracy. This was a more difficult attack, for Zhang Fang had not been an ally of the Yan family and he was a close favourite of the emperor. When the charges were initially rejected, Yu Xu dramatised the case by having himself bound and reporting to the Ministry of Justice. Taking advantage of this, Zhang Fang persuaded the emperor to sentence Yu Xu for slander. In the space of two days he suffered interrogation in four different jails.

At this point, Yu Xu received support from the eunuch Sun Cheng, hero of the coup which had set Emperor Shun upon the throne. Sun Cheng forced Zhang Fang to leave his place beside the throne and face the charges in open court, and though Zhang Fang was supported by Jia Lang of the Secretariat, another eunuch, Gao Fan, also turned against him. In the aftermath, early in 127 Zhang Fang and his group, including Gaotang Zhi the Director of the Secretariat, were disgraced. Zhang Fang was exiled, two members of the Secretariat were executed, while other associates, including a number of provincial and frontier officials, were permitted to ransom themselves with a fine.

Emperor Shun resented the disgrace of his favourite, and Yu Xu's eunuch supporters, Sun Cheng and his colleagues, were sent away to their fiefs. Before they left, however, Sun Cheng successfully argued for Yu Xu to be released from prison and given office. Yu Xu became a Consultant and was then appointed Deputy Director of the Secretariat.

Though Yu Xu's first impeachments had been directed against former associates of the Yan group, his second, centred on Zhang Fang, can be seen as a straight drive for power, albeit at personal risk. One man forced from office was the Court Architect Zhai Fu, a respected official who was no friend of the old regime: his association with Zhang Fang was not necessarily criminal. And while Yu Xu strongly supported the minister and Excellency Pang Can, whose policy of withdrawal from the northwest he had opposed in 111, several frontier officials who suffered disgrace were also men of achievement. They included Zhang Guo the Emissary to the Xiongnu and Zhang Lang, who was a colleague of Ban Yong in the Western Regions: a list of those affected is given sub Zhang Fang.

In his political struggle, Yu Xu found allies among eunuchs opposed to Zhang Fang, so the conflict was primarily a rivalry of factions. Yu Xu's manoeuvrings brought him considerable power: the attack on Gaotang Zhi and others had purged the Secretariat, while his own senior appointment there provided a base for further action. About 127 Yu Xu ceded the position of Deputy Director to Huang Qiong, but he remained in the Secretariat and for more than ten years, in close association with Huang Qiong and Zuo Xiong, he kept influence in government. On one occasion he was able to save the life of a county Registrar, who had attempted to lodge a complaint against his magistrate but had not been heard for seven years. The man sent a presumptuous letter direct to the emperor, who was furious and intended to execute him. Yu Xu persuaded his sovereign that the delay was the fault of his ministers, and the officer was too petty to be concerned with: he escaped with a flogging.

Yu Xu's frequent attacks on corruption were often accepted by the emperor, but many in high position were offended. Refusing to submit to pressure, he was reprimanded nine times and punished three times. In 136 he became Director of the Secretariat, but left office soon afterwards. No detailed reason is given, but it is likely it was associated with the rise of the Liang family: the new empress had been proclaimed in 132, and her father Liang Shang was made General-in-Chief in 135. We are told that Yu Xu's loyal service was recognised and that he was invited to a new appointment, but died before he could take it up.

During his period of influence, Yu Xu maintained his concern with the frontier. Since the end of the Qiang revolt in 118, resettlement of the northwest had been slow, but in 129 Xu Yu presented an eloquent and somewhat exaggerated argument that the Chinese should re-occupy the lands of their ancestors. The move was largely symbolic, and it achieved no lasting result: following the outbreak of the second great rebellion twelve years later, the territories were again abandoned, this time permanently.

In 136, the Administrator of Wuling recommended that since the non-Chinese people of the hills had been quiet for many years, it was possible to raise their taxes. Though Yu Xu protested that this would bring trouble, Emperor Shun approved the plan. There was indeed a major insurgency.

The political situation which allowed Yu Xu and his associates to operate from the mid-120s to the mid-130s was exceptional. The emperor was young, still in his teens, but there was no consort family with regency power and the palace eunuchs were divided. As a result, Yu Xu and his associates had an opportunity to reform the administration from their base in the Secretariat. While Yu Xu was chiefly concerned with specific instances of corruption, Zuo Xiong sought to establish a general Confucian dominance in the recruitment and control of the bureaucracy for the longer term.

In the longer term, their ambitions came to naught. Yu Xu first had come to prominence through his censorial authority as Director of Retainers and through the willingness of some leaders at court to support him. In the same way, just like eunuchs and consort families, the Secretariat gained influence from its association with the ruler, while other members of the regular bureaucracy could play no effective role. Ultimately, the government of Han was based on the imperial will, and as he grew up Emperor Shun was chiefly concerned with his personal relationships: favourites, eunuchs and the consort Liang family. He was little interested in the abstract notion of formal, impartial government, and without his support Yu Xu and his followers, such as Zuo Xiong, Zhou Ju and Huang Qiang, had small opportunity to maintain the standards they had hoped for. -HHS 58/48:1865-73*, XC 3:8b-9a, XHS 4:7b-9a [but see also sub Yu Xu], SJZ 23:3a-b; deC 84:102, 115-116, 124, Yü 86:432, Loewe 86C:302-310.

Yu Xu 虞誦, mother of: see the Lady Liu 劉 IX.

Yu Xu 虞續 (d.145). Administrator of Yuzhang, in 145 Yu Xu was found guilty of corruption and died in prison. -HHS 6:277.

Yu Xun 虞遜. In its biography of Yu Xu 誦 of Chen, XHS 4:7b says that Yu Xun was a cousin of Yu Xu, that he went as a migrant to Changsha and that Yu Xu welcomed him there. As they were sailing on a river, their boat capsized, and Yu Xun was in danger of drowning. Yu Xu leapt in after him, and both were in difficulties, but then found a sand-bar and were saved.

The text appears slightly corrupt, and the incident fits not at all with the career of Yu Xu described above. It is either totally false, or relates to another man of the same name.

Yu [Weigao] 虞偉高. Yu Weigao's father was killed in a vendetta, but before he could take revenge he became mortally ill. His friend He Yong came to visit him, and when Yu Weigao told of his distress He Yong carried out the reciprocal murder on his behalf and brought his enemy's head to his tomb. -HHS 67/57:2217.

Yu [Wenshu] 魚翁叔 was a man from Chang'an. - FSTY 6f:137.

Yu Yan 虞延 [Zida 子大] (d.71); Chenliu. When Yu Yan was born he had a remarkable physiognomy, and he grew to be eight feet six inches tall [200 cm], solidly built and very strong. As a young man, he became chief of a village. The local Wei 魏 family, connected by marriage to Wang Mang, dominated the territory, but Yu Yan took a posse to break into their household and arrest them. With enemies in high places, however, he gained no advancement.

During the disorders of the early 20s, Yu Yan led an armed self-defence force of his kinsmen. When one of his female kin [a sister-in-law or a cousin] abandoned her baby daughter in a ditch because she could not feed it, Yu Yan rescued the infant and cared for her until she was married. [XC 1 says that her husband was a member of the Wang clan.]

As Emperor Guangwu claimed the throne, Yu Yan took office under the Bearer of the Mace, chief of police at the capital. He was then a county magistrate in Runan, popular among the people for his generous conduct, particularly by allowing prisoners to return to their homes on festival days: the men invariably returned on the due date; one man, taken ill at home, was determined to do his duty but dropped dead as he was on his way.

Yu Yan resigned his post and returned home, but the Administrator Fu Zong knew his reputation and appointed him Officer of Merit. He criticised Fu Zong for disregarding the sumptuary laws, and when Fu Zong resented this Yu Yan resigned his post. Fu Zong was later arrested for his extravagance, and as he was led to execution he spoke of his regret that he had not taken Yu Yan's advice. Emperor Guangwu heard of this and was impressed.

Yu Yan became a commandery Investigator, and when the emperor came on tour in 44 he was summoned to audience. Showing no undue awe, Yu Yan reported in detail on the imperial tomb park under his authority, and he was ordered to accompany the cortège to Lu. On the return journey it was found that a city gate was too low to admit the imperial carriage. Guangwu was angry, and blamed one of his censorial officials, who should have checked the route in advance. Yu Yan, however, took the blame upon himself, as the responsible local officer. He was richly rewarded for his honesty, and though he returned home once more his name was now widely known.

In 47 Yu Yan joined the offices of the Excellency over the Masses Su Kuang. Recognising him at a court assembly, Guangwu promptly promoted him to be Prefect of the Majors for Official Carriages, and in the following year he made him Prefect of Luoyang. When Yu Yan arrested and flogged the troublemaker Ma Cheng, a client of the Yin family of the empress, the empress's brother Yin Jiu accused Yu Yan of corruption. Guangwu reviewed the case, then supported Yu Yan and ordered Ma Cheng's execution.

In the late 50s the new Emperor Ming, admiring his distaff kinsman Deng Yan, insisted he be given local office in Nanyang, then appointed him to a post at the capital. Yu Yan had objected to this, and when Deng Yan failed to carry out proper mourning for his father, the emperor was disillusioned and respected Yu Yan's prescience.

Yu Yan became Administrator of the important commandery of Nanyang, and in 60 he was named Grand Commandant, highest office in the imperial bureaucracy. In 65 he transferred to be Excellency over the Masses, but in the early 70s the Yin clan of the Dowager, still resentful of the Ma Cheng affair years earlier, prepared evidence involving him in the alleged plot of Liu Ying the King of Chu. An imperial reprimand was sent, and Yu Yan killed himself.

Despite his long tenure of high office, Yu Yan's family was left in poverty. -HHS 33/23:1150-54*, XC 1:11a-b; Bn 67:16, 18, 34, Bn 79:44-45, 141-142.

Yu Yi 虞顛; Chen. In 126 the Director of Retainers Yu Xu was threatened with impeachment for having accused the imperial favourite Zhang Fang. Yu Xu's son Yu Yi led a deputation of a hundred of Yu Xu's students to the eunuch Gao Fan, assuring him of his father's innocence. Gao Fan intervened in the case, and Yu Xu charges were accepted. -HHS 58/48:1871.

Yu [Yongxian] 虞永賢; Runan. A herd-boy, he was recommended for office by the judge of character Xu Shao, and WAS later celebrated for his quality. -SGZ 23:658.

Yusi 吾斯 see Wusi 吾斯.

Yuan 阮 [surname] see Ruan 阮.

Yuan 袁, the Lady I; Runan. Daughter of Yuan Wei, probably by his wife the Lady Ma Lun, she married the hermit Zhang Feng and came to share his ideals. -XC 7:15b; Vervoorn 90:302.

Yuan 袁, the Lady II; Runan. The Lady was a niece of Yuan Wei. About 172 her uncle considered giving her in marriage to Huang Yun. -HHS 68/58:2230.

Yuan 袁, the Lady III; Runan. A sister of Yuan Shu, she became the wife of Yang Biao and mother of Yang Xiu.

Yuan 袁, the Lady IV; Runan. Daughter of Yuan Shu, she became the wife of Huang Yi. This may be the same person as the Lady V below.

Yuan 袁, the Lady V; Runan. Daughter of Yuan Shu, after his death in 199 she went for refuge to Liu Xun in Lujiang. Later that year Lujiang was taken by Sun Ce, and his brother Sun Quan took the Lady Yuan into his harem. The Lady had no children by Sun Quan, but she was entrusted with the care of others.

In 238, after the death of the Lady Bu, Sun Quan wanted to appoint the Lady Yuan as his formal wife, but she refused because of her childlessness. She was later slandered by the Empress Pan 潘, and died about 243. -HHS 75/65:2444, SGZ 6:210, SGZ Wu 5:1199-1200; C/C 99:129. This may be the same person as the Lady IV above.

Yuan 袁, the Lady VI; Runan. Daughter of Yuan Tan, in 203 she was married to Cao Cao's son Zheng. As the alliance was broken in the following year, she was sent back. -SGZ 1:24-26.

Yuan 袁 [personal name unknown]; Yingchuan? SSXY tells how about 140, when Chen Ji was eleven years old, he visited this man, who had formerly been magistrate of Ye county in Wei. -Mather 76:81-82.

Yuan 袁 [personal name unknown]; Runan. About 195 Yuan Shao, adoptive son of Yuan Cheng, arranged for his own eldest son Yuan Tan to succeed to the inheritance of his [i.e. Yuan Shao's] elder brother 以譚繼兄.

No name or further identification is given for this elder brother of Yuan Shao, but the commentary of Hu Sanxing to ZZTJ 64:2044 suggests that he was a son of Yuan Cheng, who had died young. Since there is no record of any elder sibling among Yuan Shao's full- or half-brothers from his father Yuan Feng [Yuan Shu being his younger half-brother], Hu Sanxing's suggestion seems plausible.

Regardless of the niceties of lineage and ancestor worship, the chief purpose of this move by Yuan Shao was to make it more difficult for Yuan Tan to inherit his own position, and to improve the status of Shao's favourite son Shang.

Yuan An 袁安 [Shaogong 邵公] (d.92); Runan. XTS 74B:3164 says that Yuan An was the son of Yuan Chang 昌, but HHS 45/35 mentions only his grandfather Yuan Liang I.

When Yuan An was young he followed Yuan Liang's scholarly tradition in the Book of Changes. An imposing man, with an air of authority, he was respected in his neighbourhood and became Officer of Merit in the commandery. On one occasion he was sent with a message to an Assistant Officer of the province, who then asked him to take a letter back to a local magistrate. Yuan An replied stiffly that if the letter dealt with public matters he should use the imperial postal service; if it was private, then it was not appropriate for an Officer of Merit to serve as a messenger-boy.

Nominated Filial and Incorrupt in 60, Yuan An served eighteen months probation as a gentleman cadet and then became an Internuncio. A few months later, in 62, he was appointed a county magistrate in Donghai, where in time of famine he insisted that he and his officials should share the hardships of the people by eating roots rather than grain. Five years later he was transferred to a county in Rencheng, and in the winter of 70/71 he was appointed Administrator of Chu commandery. The King of Chu, Liu Ying, had been disgraced earlier that year, the people of his former fief were disturbed, and the Excellencies recommended Yuan An as a man to deal with the troubles.

By this time thousands of people had been implicated in the alleged crimes of Liu Ying, and Emperor Ming personally concerned himself with the matter. The local officials had therefore pressed their cases hard, and a great many people were tortured into false confession and then killed.

As soon as Yuan An arrived in the territory, even before he entered his yamen, he went to the prison, reviewed all the cases which had not yet been confirmed, and ordered the accused be released. His subordinates protested, for if it was found that a culprit had been wrongfully let go, the officer responsible would be punished in his stead. Yuan An reassured them that he took all responsibility upon himself. He sent in a report to argue the cases, and the emperor was impressed and approved. Some four hundred families were thus spared, and the people set up a stele in his honour.

After three years in Chu, Yuan An became Intendant of Henan, where he maintained a firm government without being harsh. He acquired a great reputation at the capital and in 83 he was appointed Minister Coachman at the court of Emperor Zhang.

In 84, on the recommendation of Meng Yun the Administrator of Wuwei, the court approved trade with the Northern Xiongnu across the frontier, but in the winter of 85 Meng Yun reported that the Southern Shanyu, dependent ally of Han, had sent raiding parties against the northern caravans; the Northern Shanyu had protested, and threatened to resume raids along the borders. A majority of the court believed the southerners should be allowed to keep their booty, but Yuan An argued that the moral authority of the empire required the agreement for peaceful trade be honoured. He obtained the support of the Excellency Huan Yu, and after fierce and acrimonious debate the emperor decided that the government would purchase the prisoners from the southern court, restore them to their own people, and pay blood-money for any who had been killed.

Yuan An and the peace party were thus largely successful, but in the longer term the war-like supporters of the Southern Xiongnu had the advantage. Even the agreement to pay ransom meant that aggression had been rewarded, and in following years, as the Northern Xiongnu became weaker the attacks on their trade-routes continued.

In 86 Yuan An was promoted Excellency of Works, and in 87 he became Excellency over the Masses. On the death of Emperor Zhang in 88, his Dowager Dou took the regency, and her brother Dou Xian proposed a great expedition against the Northern Xiongnu. With the Grand Commandant Song You, the Excellency of Works Ren Wei, and all the nine ministers, Yuan An came to the court to protest. They argued that the Northern Xiongnu had made no attack upon the frontiers of the empire, and that it would be a waste of resources to mount such a campaign; even if it were successful, there was no advantage to be gained. The petition was rejected and, as Song You became concerned that the Dowager would become angry, he withdrew his support and took others with him. Yuan An and Ren Wei continued to object, and though the Dowager refused to listen and other ministers were frightened, Yuan An kept his composure.

Then Dou Xian departed on campaign and left his brothers Dou Du and Dou Jing in control, the one as minister in command of guards, the other as chief of police. Their retainers robbed people in the streets, and they brought cavalry from the borders to form a private army under Jing's command. Other officials were intimidated, but Yuan An accused the Director of Retainers Zheng Ju and the Intendant of Henan Cao Song for their failure to maintain order. His memorials received no response, and when he and Ren Wei arranged a petition of senior provincial officials, the Dowager became angry and dismissed forty of them. Yuan An and Ren Wei, however, had such reputation and support that she could take no direct action against them.

In 91, after the final defeat and disappearance of the current Northern Shanyu, Dou Xian proposed to establish the subordinate king Atong as ruler, controlled by a Chinese resident in the same fashion as the Southern Xiongnu court. Many ministers agreed with him, but Yuan An and Ren Wei argued that Emperor Guangwu had recognised the Southern Shanyu as rightful heir to the whole of the Xiongnu state. His residence within the frontier of the empire had been intended only as a temporary expedient, and the time was ripe for the southern court to take over a re-united people on the steppe. Dou Xian's policy, they argued, would break the agreement made by the former emperors, and cause other barbarian rulers to be distrustful of Han. The court, moreover, would be responsible for two weak Xiongnu states, faced by powerful enemies in the Wuhuan and the Xianbi, and the costs of subsidy and support would be enormous. Far better to establish one strong government under the Southern Shanyu, but keep him tied in loyalty to Han.

After fierce and repeated debate Dou Xian did get his way, but he was obliged to abandon his first candidate Atong and recognise Yuchujian, brother of the former Shanyu, with a supervised court near present-day Hami in Xinjiang.

The history remarks that Yuan An's forebodings were justified by events, but it is doubtful if his own policy would have been more successful. The problem was essentially insoluble, for the power vacuum in the north which had been created by Dou Xian's triumph could be filled neither by a second puppet regime, nor by the southern government, which had behaved brutally towards the people of the north and was unlikely to attract their loyalty. In many respects, the critical mistake had been made when Dou Xian embarked on his campaign, and though Yuan An was firm, cautious and courageous, one may feel that his arguments were to some extent influenced by a general concern to oppose the Dou family on all occasions.

At the same time, the debate between Dou Xian and Yuan An, and their respective supporters at court, demonstrates a real political division. The "forward" or war party, whose background was in the north, was concerned with the prestige of the empire and the interests of the frontier. Their opponents, a more conservative group represented by Yuan An and his colleagues, came from the interior of China and were interested rather in the prosperity of their home-lands than in the splendours of conquest. One may see here the contradiction of "Modernist" and "Reformist" described generally by Loewe 74:11-13, and discussed in this context by deC 84:268.

Though frustrated by the policies of the regent Dowager and her family, Yuan An had maintained his positions against their opposition, and he was admired and trusted by his colleagues and by the young Emperor He. He died in office in the spring of 92, and was mourned by all the court. When the power of the Dou family was destroyed by Emperor He and eunuch allies a few months later, Yuan An's son Shang was made a gentleman cadet.

Yuan An's father died when he was young, and there was a story that when his mother sent him to look for a place for burial he encountered three strange men. As he told them of his search, they pointed to a particular place and promised that if he set the tomb there his family would hold high office for generations. Then they disappeared. Yuan An followed their advice, and so came the prosperity of his family. -HHS 45/35: 1517-22*; deC 84:263-274, Ch'ü 72:461-462. A funerary stele found near Luoyang in 1929 gives a remarkably detailed chronology of Yuan An's career: Nagata 94:52.

Yuan Ba 袁霸; Chen. A younger cousin of Yuan Huan, Yuan Ba was a senior clerical officer in 213, when he joined the petition urging Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei.

Minister of Finance in 220, Yuan Ba was one of the sponsors of a stele which commemorated Cao Pi's accession to the imperial throne in 220. -SGZ 1:40, 11: 336, LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:197.

Yuan Bao 袁苞 [Jingbo 景伯]; Nanyang. A former Investigator of the commandery, in 156 Yuan Bao was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:17a.

Yuan Bi 袁祕 [Yongning 永甯] (d.184); Runan. Son of Yuan Zhong, Yuan Bi served on the local staff of the Administrator Zhao Qian. When Yellow Turbans rebelled in 184, Zhao Jian led the militia to attack them, but was defeated. Yuan Bi and six other officers shielded Zhao Qian with their own bodies, and though they were all killed Zhao Qian escaped.

An edict ordered that the gates of each of the officers' homes should be inscribed in honour of the "Seven Heroes" 七賢. -HHS 45/35:1527.

Yuan Bo 袁博 [Jizhi 季智]. Yuan Bo is mentioned in a fragmentary inscription. -Beitu 42.

Yuan Chang 袁昌; Runan. XTS 74B:3164 says that Yuan Chang was one of two sons of Yuan Liang I and the father of Yuan An. It also says that he was magistrate of a county in Ji'nan, but HHS 45/35:1517 attributes that office to his father.

Yuan Chang 袁敞 [Shuping 叔平] (d.117); Runan.

Son of Yuan An, Yuan Chang was a student of the Book of Changes. Because of his father's position as Intendant of Henan, about 80 he received entry to the imperial service by appointment to the Suite of the Heir, and was later appointed a gentleman cadet. He became a colonel in the Northern Army and was a Counsellor and a Palace Attendant under Emperor He. In 106 he became Court Architect, and then went out as Administrator of Dong commandery.

During the reign of Emperor An, Yuan Chang returned to the capital as Minister Coachman and Minister of the Household under the regency government of the Dowager Deng, and in 116 he became Excellency of Works. In the following year, Zhang Jun of the Imperial Secretariat was found to have engaged in private correspondence with his son Yuan Xu, and it was claimed he had divulged matters which should have remained secret within the palace. Believing that Yuan Chang was implicated in the affair, the Dowager lost confidence in him and Yuan Chang killed himself.

Later, Zhang Jun appealed for justice against the accusation, and he was spared the death penalty. Yuan Xu was enabled to continue as an imperial official, and Yuan Chang was posthumously rehabilitated. His office was formally restored and his funerary rites carried out in the style appropriate to an Excellency. -HHS 45/35:1524-25*, Nagata 94:54.

Yuan Cheng 袁成 [Wenkai 文開]; Runan. Second son of Yuan Tang, he succeeded to his father's fief. [HHS 45/35 describes Yuan Cheng as the eldest son of Yuan Tang, but SGZ 6 mentions Yuan Ping, who was Yuan Cheng's senior.] As a General of the Household he became a trusted adviser to Liang Ji.

Yuan Cheng died young, leaving no sons to succeed him: on a putative son who predeceased him, see sub Yuan [personal name unknown] above. The marquise went to his brother Yuan Feng, while Yuan Feng's son Yuan Shao was transferred to maintain his lineage. -HHS 45/35:1523, 74/64A:2373, SGZ 6:188.

Yuan Chunqing 袁春卿; Runan. Son of Yuan Yuanchang, in 204 Yuan Chunqing was Administrator of Wei commandery for his kinsman Yuan Shang, and was at the defence of Ye city against Cao Cao. His father Yuan Yuanchang was at this time in Yang province; Cao Cao brought him to court, then had his agent Dong Zhao write an elegant letter to Yuan Chunqing, urging him to obey the dictates of filial piety and change his allegiance. The city surrendered, though this was due as much to Cao Cao's military operations as to negotiations with Yuan Chunqing. Neither father nor son are heard of again. -SGZ 14:438.

Yuan Di 袁迪; Guangling. Son of Yuan Sui, he crossed the Yangzi as a refugee scholar and joined the entourage of Lu Mao, who treated him well. -SGZ Wu 12:1336-37.

Yuan Feng 袁逢 [Zhouyang 周陽]; Runan. Third son of Yuan Tang, Yuan Feng inherited his father's fief at the death of his elder brother Yuan Cheng, while his son by a concubine, Yuan Shao, was transferred to maintain Yuan Cheng's lineage.

Descended from three generations of Excellencies, and himself generous and a man of honour, Yuan Feng was widely respected. Because of a notional kinship with the eunuch Yuan She, moreover, he and his family received great favour and became extremely prosperous.

Administrator of Hongnong in the early 160s, Yuan Feng had work carried out on a temple to Mount Hua, and he set up a stele in 165. transferred to be Intendant of Jingzhao, he took part in the investigation of the eunuch Hou Lan and his brother Hou Can. in 168 he was Minister Coachman.

As Emperor Ling was brought to the throne Yuan Feng received an augmentation to his fief on account of his contribution to the succession, and he acted as Thrice Venerable in the ceremony of Serving the Aged.

In 178 Yuan Feng was raised from a colonelcy in the Northern Army to be Excellency of Works. He left that office in the following year and became Bearer of the Mace, but died soon afterwards. His funeral was attended by extraordinary honours and regalia, including the insignia of a General of Chariots and Cavalry. -HHS 45/35:1523, LS 2:1a-4a.

Yuan Fu 垣副; Guanghan. In the early 20s Yuan Fu was a bandit chieftain associated with Zong Cheng and Wang Cen. -HYGZ 5:67.

Yuan Fu 袁福, the Lady; Guanghan. Wife of Wang Shang, she bore him two sons. He died, and her parents wanted her to marry again, but she preferred to kill herself. -HYGZ 10B:154.

Yuan Gong 袁貢. A Consultant in 183, Yuan Gong joined Liu Tao and Yue Song in a memorial to warn about the growing threat of rebellion from Zhang Jue and his sect of Yellow Turbans. -HHS 57/47:1849.

Yuan Guang 袁光; Chen. Eldest son of Yuan Liang II, during the late 120s Yuan Guang was a county magistrate in Dong commandery. -LS 6:6a.

Yuan He 袁賀 [Yuanfu 元服] (b.109); Runan. Son of Yuan Peng, Yuan He became Chancellor of Pengcheng and died in that office. -HHS 45/35:1525.

There are two stories about the significance of Yuan He's style. HHS 45/35 says that both his personal name and his style were chosen by his grandfather Yuan Jing because he was born at the time of the ceremonies for the capping of Emperor An: the term for capping is 加元服. On the other hand, FSTY 2:19; Nylan 83:403-408 records a popular rumour that the child was conceived during a period of mourning. His father was old, and he believed it important to take any opportunity to maintain the lineage, but in order to acknowledge the fault, he gave his son the style fu "[mourning] garment." Although he repeats it, Ying Shao discounts the story, and copulation during mourning was certainly taboo: see sub Zhao Xuan.

Yuan He 元賀 see Xuan He 玄賀.

Yuan Hong 袁閔 [Xiafu 夏輔] (128-184); Runan. Eldest son of Yuan He, Yuan Hong was celebrated for his strict morality and rigid personal control. When his father was Chancellor of Pengcheng, he went to visit him, but gave a false name, waited outside the residence for several days without being allowed in, and was only admitted when his former wet-nurse came out and found him.

When his father died in office at Pengcheng, Yuan Hong and his brothers brought the body home in a notable display of grief. Refusing all gifts for funerary expenses, they carried the coffin, clad in mourning garments of coarse hemp, braving the road in freezing cold until their hands and feet ran with blood.

When the mourning period was over Yuan Hong received many invitations to office, but rejected them all. In 159, as Chen Fan became Director of the Imperial Secretariat under the personal government of Emperor Huan, he recommended Yuan Hong as one of the five most worthy men of the empire. A special carriage was sent, but Yuan Hong refused this too.

Yuan Hong lived simply in the country, supporting himself by farming and maintaining his studies. Though his uncles Yuan Feng and Yuan Wei sent provisions he would not accept them, but was ashamed of the fact that his family had achieved prosperity and success as the state and society of Han were falling into ruin.

When the Faction affairs broke out in the late 160s, Yuan Hong wanted to withdraw into the wilderness, but felt he could not leave his aged mother. He built an earthen hut in the courtyard of the family home, with no door but only a window through which he received food and paid respects to his mother each day. His brothers, wife and children were not permitted to see him. When his mother died, he held no mourning for her but retreated into complete isolation, and some believed that he was mad. [Ying Shao strongly disapproved of his failure to carry out proper rituals at his mother's death: FSTY 3:24.]

Eighteen years later, as the Yellow Turbans arose and people scattered before them, Yuan Hong still kept to his study of the classics. The rebels agreed not to trouble him, and all who took refuge with him were saved. Yuan Hong died soon afterwards, instructing his sons not to prepare a coffin but to leave his body shrouded in a simple tomb. -HHS 45/35:1525-26*, XC 2:9b-10a; Vervoorn 90:181, 298.

It is confusing that the personal name of this man has the same modern transcription as that of his brother Yuan Hong 弘, whose entry appears immediately below. Some texts also confuse Yuan Hong 閔 with his more distant kinsman Yuan Lang 袁閔: see the text criticism at HHS 53/43:1756, the discussion at HHSJJ 53/43:1878-79, and XHS 3:21a.

Yuan Hong 袁弘 [Shaofu 邵輔]; Runan. Son of Yuan He, he was not so rigid in his conduct as his elder brother Hong 閔, though he was similarly ashamed of his fine family position in such a time of trouble for the state.

Yuan Hong attended the Imperial University at Luoyang, but when his senior cousin the Grand Commandant Yuan Feng invited him to dinner he left because he disapproved of the music being played. He likewise had no contact with his cousins Yuan Shao and Yuan Shu.

Refusing all offers of appointment, Yuan Hong changed his name and went to live with his teacher. -HHS 45/35:1526, XC 2:10a; Vervoorn 90:298.

This man must be distinguished not only from his elder brother Yuan Hong 袁閔 above, but also from the later historian Yuan Hong 袁宏 (328-396) who compiled a Hou Han ji 後漢紀.

Yuan Huan 袁渙/煥 [Yaoqing 曜卿]; Chen. Though his father Yuan Pang was a high official in the 170s, and many young men of rank behaved arrogantly, Yuan Huan was noted for his courtesy and restraint, and when he became Officer of Merit in his commandery bad officials hastened to resign. Joining the offices of the Excellencies at the capital, he was graded First Class and joined the Imperial Censorate, but he refused a magistrate's position in Pei.

When Liu Bei was in Yu province in 194, he nominated Yuan Huan as Abundant Talent, but Yuan Huan soon afterwards went south to escape the local disturbances. He briefly served Yuan Shu, then went over to Lü Bu, though he refused to write an insulting letter for him to Liu Bei. When Cao Cao destroyed Lü Bu in 198 Yuan Huan joined him and was appointed Commandant for the south of Pei.

At this time Cao Cao was attempting to force people into agricultural colonies, and many resisted or deserted. Yuan Huan urged him to ease the pressure, and the situation improved. He was appointed Chancellor of Liang, where he ruled gently but firmly, but retired due to illness.

Yuan Huan later served on Cao Cao's staff. In 212 he was among those who encouraged him to accept the Nine Distinctions, he was one of the petitioners who urged him to take title as Duke of Wei in the following year, and when the kingdom of Wei was declared in 216, he held ministerial office at court.

Noted for his honesty and generosity, Yuan Huan gave away all the gifts he received and kept nothing for himself. On one occasion it was reported that Liu Bei was dead, but while others congratulated Cao Cao, Yuan Huan refused to celebrate the alleged misfortune of his old patron.

Yuan Huan died about 218, leaving a collection of literary and scholarly works. Cao Cao mourned him, and when Cao Pi came to the throne in 220, a son or grandson of Yuan Huan was granted the right to appointment as a gentleman cadet in recognition of his past loyal service. -SGZ 11:333-35*, 2:58.

Yuan Hui 袁徽; Chen. Brother of Yuan Ba and a cousin of Yuan Huan, during the troubles of the end of Han Yuan Hui took refuge in Jiao province. He was offered appointment by Cao Cao about 200, but preferred to remain in the south. He wrote to Xun Yu praising the scholarly patronage of Shi Xie and the generosity of Xu Jing. -SGZ 11:336, SGZ Wu.1191-92, SGZ Shu 8:964.

Yuan Ji 袁吉 (d.36). Bearer of the Mace at the court of Gongsun Shu, in the autumn of 36 Yuan Ji was sent with the Excellency Xie Feng to attack the Han troops outside Chengdu. After brief success, they were defeated and killed by the Han general Wu Han. -HHS 13/3:543, 18/8:682; Bn 59:194.

Yuan Ji 爱驥; Chenliu. Son of Yuan Yan, Yuan Ji was also a noted scholar. He became a county magistrate in Dong commandery. -HHS 48/38:1620, but see also sub Yuan Xing 爱興.

Yuan Ji 袁基 (d.190); Runan. Son of Yuan Feng and elder brother of Yuan Shu, Yuan Ji succeeded to his father's fief, and in 190 he was Minister Coachman under the regime of Dong Zhuo. Angry at the rebellion in the east led by Yuan Shu and Yuan Shao, Dong Zhuo killed Yuan Ji, his uncle Yuan Wei, and all their kinsmen at Luoyang. -HHS 45/35:1523.

Yuan Jing 袁京 [Zhongyu 仲譽]; Runan. Son of the Excellency Yuan An, he studied the New Text Book of Changes according to the Meng interpretation and compiled Nan ji 難記, "Record of Problems," in 300,000 words. He became a Palace Attendant and was Administrator of Shu commandery. -HHS 45/35:1522; Tjan 49:148. [FSTY 2:19 has Yuan Jing's personal name as Yuan 原, but this is a miswriting.]

Yuan Kang 袁康. A doubtful tradition suggests Yuan Kang was the author of the history Yue jue shu 越絕書. -Texts:491 [Schuessler and Loewe].

Yuan Kang 苑康 [Zhongzhen 中真], Bohai. As a young man Yuan Kang attended the Imperial University and became a close associate of Guo Tai. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, he became a county magistrate in Yingchuan, where he honoured Xun Shu and his eight talented sons by changing the name of their village.

As Administrator of Taishan Yuan Kang brought powerful local families to order, and in 166, when clients of the eunuch Hou Lan sought refuge from the attacks of Zhang Jian in Shanyang, he treated them equally firmly. In revenge, Hou Lan had Yuan Kang arrested for making false claims of success against bandits, and he was exiled to Rinan. Petitions from his former subjects secured his release, and he died at home.

In the late 160s Yuan Kang was numbered among the popular heroes in the lists compiled by the reformist students of the University, while Dou Wu commended him to Emperor Huan. -HHS 67/57:2214* & 2187, 62/52:2050, 69/59:2240, SGZ 6:211.

Yuan Kui 袁隗 see Yuan Wei 袁隗.

Yuan Lang 袁闓 [Fenggao 奉高]; Runan. Presumably a kinsman of the Excellency Yuan Tang and his family, Yuan Lang was a gentleman of quality, but was not noted for exceptional conduct, and Guo Tai found him comparatively superficial. He refused appointment at the capital, but was a well-respected Officer of Merit in the commandery. An early patron of Huang Xian, he guided the Administrator Wang Gong in his dealings with both Huang Xian and Chen Fan.

In particular, when Wang Gong first came to the commandery he failed to invite Chen Fan to visit him. Chen Fan was resentful, and when he was summoned later he declined on grounds of ill health. Wang Gong was angry, but Yuan Lang persuaded him to apologise for the initial slight and Chen Fan then accepted the call. So Wang Gong gained local respect. -HHS 53/43: 1744, 56/46:1820; Vervoorn 90:298.

Yuan Lang is sometimes confused in the texts with Yuan Hong 袁閔 q.v.

Yuan Lang 袁朗 see Yuan She 袁赦.

Yuan Liang 袁良 I; Runan. A scholar of the Book of Changes according to the Meng interpretation, during the reign of Emperor Ping of Former Han Yuan Liang was recommended as Understanding the Classics and became a member of the Suite of the Heir. When Emperor Guangwu first restored the dynasty Yuan Liang served as a magistrate in Yan province. -HHS 45/35:1517.

Yuan Liang 袁良 II [Houqing 厚卿] (47-131); Chen. Yuan Liang claimed descent from Yuan Gan 幹 and Yuan Shan 山 [QHJ:663-664], who had held a secondary marquissate under Former Han which had been ended by Wang Mang.

Yuan Liang himself was learned in the Book of Changes, in the Classic of Poetry, in ritual and in music. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, after probation as a gentleman cadet he was appointed an Internuncio, became Assistant to the Court Architect, and later served as a magistrate in several counties. Towards 120 he became Administrator of Guangling, where he dealt successfully with a group of pirates on the lower Yangzi led by Zhang Lu. He then retired on grounds of ill health; he was at that time aged over seventy.

As Emperor Shun came to the throne in 126, Yuan Liang was again invited to office by the three Excellencies, and after appointment to a holding post as Consultant he became Prefect of Insignia and Credentials. At this time, while Yuan Liang's eldest son Guang was a county magistrate, his second son Teng was a member of the Secretariat and the youngest son Zhang was an Internuncio: between them the father and his two younger sons thus held office in each of the so-called Three Terraces 三臺 [though other enumerations of the Terraces include the Censorate, with the Imperial Clerks, instead of the Office of Insignia]. This happy coincidence was recognised by honouring Yuan Liang as Thrice Venerable of the State at the annual imperial ceremony of Serving the Aged [Bodde 75:361-372], while he was also named Chancellor of Liang.

Yuan Liang died in Liang at the age of eighty-five. He had revived the official fortunes of the family, and about 170 his grandson Yuan Pang, a future Excellency, arranged for a stele to be inscribed and set up in his honour. -LS 6:5a-9a, HHSJJ 8:319 Hui Dong. See also sub Yuan Chang citing XTS 74B:3164.

SJZ 19:29a, quoted by LS 20:12a, mentions a fragmentary stele to Yuan Liang of Chen. In some texts the personal name appears as 梁, but this is surely a miswriting for 良.

Yuan Long 袁龍 (d.215). An officer under Guan Yu in Jing province in 215, when Sun Quan took over Changsha, Yuan Long remained loyal and soon rebelled against the new regime. He was attacked by Lü Dai, captured and killed. -SGZ Wu 15:1384.

Yuan Mai 袁買 (d.207); Runan. A nephew [or, according to another source, a younger brother] of Yuan Shang, he fled with him to Liaodong in 207, and was presumably also killed there by Gongsun Kang. -SGZ 6:207.

Yuan [Manlai] 袁滿來; Runan. Son of Yuan Wei, he died at the age of fifteen, probably in the 160s. A stele inscription composed by Cai Yong describes him as a student of the Book of Changes and a young man of quick wit. -Cai 6:3, HHSJJ 45/35:1631 Hou Kang.

Yuan Mi 袁祕 see Yuan Bi 袁祕.

Yuan Min 袁敏; Chen. Younger brother of Yuan Ba and Yuan Hui, about 220 Yuan Min was at the court of Emperor Xian, who discussed with him his cousin Yuan Huan.

Skilled in military affairs and particularly interested in hydrology, Yuan Min became Internuncio for Control of the Yellow River. -SGZ 11:335-36.

Yuan Pang 袁滂 [Gongxi 公喜/熙]; Chen. Son of Yuan Zhang II, Yuan Pang was Minister of the Guards in the early 170s, and he arranged a stele to honour his grandfather Yuan Liang II. He later became Minister of the Household, and early in 178 he was promoted Excellency over the Masses, leaving that office twelve months later.

Bearer of the Mace in 185, Yuan Pang was named second-in-command to Zhang Wen for operations against the rebels of Liang province. -HHS 8:340-42, 72/62:2320, LS 6:7b, 20:12b.

Yuan Pei 袁沛. In 196 Yuan Pei accompanied Xu Jing in flight from Kuaiji to Jiao province in the far south. They later attempted to return to the north, but the way was blocked by rebel non-Chinese, and it appears that Yuan Pei died at this time. -SGZ Shu 8:964.

Yuan Peng 袁彭 [Bochu 伯楚]; Runan. Son of Yuan Jing, he followed his father's scholarly interests, then served as Administrator of Guanghan and of Nanyang.

At the beginning of the reign of Emperor Shun Yuan Peng was Minister of the Household, but he died as a Consultant. Scrupulously honest as an official, he wore only a rough gown and ate coarse food. When his wife died comparatively young, he refused to marry again, but he also ordered that he should be buried next to his father, so that he could care for him in the after-life, and his wife's coffin should not lie near his own.

Hu Guang and others recommended Yuan Peng for posthumous honours in the same style as the frugal officials Gong Yu 貢禹 under Emperor Yuan of Former Han [QHX:121-122], or Diwu Lun early in Later Han. This was not approved, and his former colleagues were disappointed. -HHS 45/35:1522.

FSTY 2:19; Nylan 83:403-408 reports but then discounts a story that Yuan Peng sired his son Yuan He during a period of mourning; see sub Yuan He.

Yuan Ping 袁平 [Wenkai 袁成]; Runan. Eldest son of Yuan Tang, he died young. -SGZ 6:188.

Yuan [Renda] 袁仁達 (d.190?); Runan. Son of Yuan Wei, he probably died when Dong Zhuo slaughtered the family at the capital. -HHSJJ 45/35:1631 Hou Kang.

Yuan Shang 袁賞; Runan. Eldest son of Yuan An, after Emperor He and his eunuch allies had overthrown the power of the Dou family of the Dowager, the emperor recognised the loyalty of the late Excellency by appointing Yuan Shang as a gentleman cadet. -HHS 45/35:1522.

Yuan Shang 袁尚 [Xianfu 顯甫] (d.207); Runan. Youngest son of Yuan Shao, Yuan Shang was good-looking and a favourite of his father and of Yuan Shao's later wife, the Lady Liu XV. The Lady argued that he should be given the succession, the advisers Pang Ji and Shen Pei supported the idea, and Yuan Shao agreed. When he died in 202, therefore, Yuan Shang became Governor of Ji province in despite of his eldest brother Yuan Tan.

In the autumn of that year Cao Cao attacked their territory. Yuan Shang had restricted Yuan Tan's supplies and Yuan Tan was soon in difficulties. Yuan Shang went to assist him and they achieved some initial success, but by the summer of 203 the brothers had been defeated and driven back to Ye city.

At this point, Cao Cao withdrew and, as he had expected, Yuan Tan and Yuan Shang came to open conflict. Many of Yuan Tan's officers turned to Yuan Shang, and Yuan Tan fled to the northeast. Liu Biao wrote to criticise the brothers for their enmity, but in 204 Yuan Shang made a further attack on Yuan Tan and besieged him in Pingyuan.

Yuan Tan now made an alliance with Cao Cao, and Cao Cao attacked Ye. Yuan Shang left Pingyuan and came with a relief force, but he also attempted to make terms. Cao Cao rejected his overtures, and as many of his men changed sides or deserted, Yuan Shang abandoned his family, his possessions and insignia and went north into Zhongshan. Yuan Tan attacked him there, and he fled to his brother Yuan Xi in You province. Soon afterwards Cao Cao turned on Yuan Tan and destroyed him.

In 205 Yuan Shang and Yuan Xi were driven from their territory by a mutiny. They turned to the Wuhuan led by Tadun, but in 207 their combined forces were defeated by Cao Cao at White Wolf Mountain in Liaodong. Yuan Shang fled with Yuan Xi and the surviving Wuhuan chieftains to Liaodong, where Gongsun Kang killed them, possibly because they presented a threat to his authority.

Gongsun Kang sent the heads to Cao Cao, who put them on display at Ye city. -HHS 74/64B:2409-18*, SGZ 6:201-07*.

Yuan Shao 袁紹 [Benchu 本初] (d.202); Runan. A grandson of Yuan Tang, Yuan Shao was probably a son of Yuan Feng by a concubine, adopted to maintain the lineage of his uncle Cheng: YYS 19b. There is confusion, however, about Yuan Shao's status in the family, and particularly his relationship to Yuan Shu. As the son of Yuan Feng by his chief wife, Yuan Shu was the senior legitimate member of the clan in that generation, while Yuan Shao, son of a concubine of Yuan Feng, was his half-brother. On the other hand, when Yuan Shao was adopted into the lineage of Yuan Cheng he became the representative of Yuan Feng's elder brother, and thus a senior cousin to Yuan Shu. Yuan Shao is always described as the elder brother/cousin and Yuan Shu as the younger, but we are told that Yuan Shu, envious of Yuan Shao's greater prestige and popularity, referred to him on one occasion as "our family slave" 吾家奴, while in a letter to Gongsun Zan he claimed that Shao was not a true member of the Yuan clan 非袁氏子: HHS 75/65:2439.

1010 Yuan Shao (continued)

Yuan Shao was handsome, with an air of authority. He was a leader among young men of family at Luoyang, but was disliked and distrusted by the palace eunuchs. When the reformist party was persecuted by the eunuchs in the late 160s Yuan Shao, then in his twenties, joined He Yong and others to create a network for escape, and he made several secret journeys to rescue men under threat or in prison.

From appointment as a cadet gentleman, Yuan Shao became a county magistrate in Dong commandery. He left office for six years, first in mourning for his titular mother, the wife of his adoptive father Yuan Cheng, then retrospectively for Yuan Cheng himself. Returning to Luoyang, he joined the staff of the General-in-Chief He Jin, served in the Imperial Censorate and was then a General of the Household. In 188 he was one of the colonels in the new imperial corps of the Western Garden.

Following the death of Emperor Ling in 189, Yuan Shao urged He Jin to destroy the eunuchs, and he was appointed Director of Retainers with the Staff of Authority. He Jin was assassinated, and Yuan Shao led a massacre of the palace eunuchs, but as Dong Zhuo took over at the capital he was compelled to submit to the new military power.

Then Dong Zhuo planned to force the young emperor to abdicate, and Yuan Shao escaped to the east. Dong Zhuo offered him enfeoffment and appointment as Administrator of Bohai, but Yuan Shao raised troops and gathered allies. Elected leader of the covenant of "loyal rebels," he took title as General of Chariots and Cavalry and Director of Retainers. Dong Zhuo sent a number of distinguished men such as Humu Ban on an embassy to offer some settlement with the rebels, but Yuan Shao ordered they should all be killed. In response, Dong Zhuo had members of the Yuan family killed at Luoyang, including Yuan Shao's natural mother, the former concubine of Yuan Feng; this mutual massacre removed any hope of avoiding a most vicious civil war.

Based on Suanzao in Chenliu, north of the Yellow River, the allied army gained no success against Dong Zhuo's defences through 190, and in 191 Yuan Shao took over Ji province from the former Governor Han Fu. As the alliance dissolved amongst the rivalries of its leaders, Yuan Shao sent troops against Yuan Shu's general Sun Jian in Yingchuan, but was himself attacked by Gongsun Zan from the north. In 192 his troops defeated Gongsun Zan at the Jie Bridge between Julu and Qinghe, and in the following year the respected elder statesman Zhao Qi arranged a truce.

Setting his capital at Ye city in Wei, Yuan Shao now consolidated his position in Ji province and the region north of the Yellow River, and he sent troops to sweep the Taihang ranges and break the Black Mountain bandits. When Emperor Xian fled Chang'an in 195 some advisers suggested Yuan Shao should receive the court and use the imperial authority to enhance his own, but he was persuaded to keep his independence and not involve himself. As the court came under Cao Cao's control in Xu city in 196 Yuan Shao was named Grand Commandant and granted a county fief. Annoyed that his status was lower than Cao Cao, who was styled General-in-Chief, he formally refused the office; in some consternation, Cao Cao hastily ceded him the title.

In 198 Yuan Shao made a final attack on Gongsun Zan. He destroyed him at the beginning of the following year, and then gained the allegiance of the Wuhuan on the northern frontier. He now regretted his failure to bring the imperial government under his control, and made a number of unsuccessful efforts to alter the arrangement. When Cao Cao refused, Yuan Shao turned against him, and in the summer of 199 he embarked on an offensive to the south. Though it could appear that he was attacking the emperor himself, he justified his actions in a long proclamation of abuse and criticism of Cao Cao.

As Cao Cao faced problems with Liu Bei in the southeast, Yuan Shao was urged to take the opportunity to attack, but he was reluctant to act so swiftly. His great army advanced only slowly, and only in the autumn of 200 did it come to grips with Cao Cao's main defence line by Guandu, on the Bian Canal about present-day Zhongmou in Henan. Cao Cao was heavily outnumbered, and Yuan Shao had Liu Bei cause trouble again behind him, but in the early winter Cao Cao arranged sorties which destroyed two of Yuan Shao's supply trains. His army disintegrated, and the scattered troops fled back across the Yellow River.

Though he had suffered heavy losses, Yuan Shao had small difficulty in confirming his power in the north. He became ill, however, and died two years later. His inheritance was lost in succession squabbles between his sons.

Despite uncertainty over his position in the family, many people regarded Yuan Shao as representing the tradition of the great gentry and official clans of Later Han. He was personally popular, and his rise to power was aided by the support of clients and protégés who recognised past patronage from the Yuan. As chief rival to Cao Cao, however, he was not well matched, for he was neither a good judge of politics nor a brilliant general, while the favour that he showed to his youngest son Shang brought the destruction of his family. -HHS 74/64A*, XC 5:1b-2b, SGZ 6:188-201*; Mather 76:611, deC 96.

Yuan Shao 袁紹, later wife of: see the Lady Liu 劉 XV.

Yuan She 袁涉 [Juxian 巨先] (d.23); Youfufeng. A man of distinguished gentry and official family, Yuan She became a powerful local leader, with a great number of retainers and conduct varying between generosity and thuggery.

As Wang Mang's government faced its final crisis, Yuan She was forgiven his previous crimes and appointed Administrator of Tianshui, west of Chang'an. Wang Mang was destroyed before he could take up the appointment, and Yuan She became a leader of local rebels about Chang'an.

The Gengshi general Shentu Jian was prepared to co-operate with Yuan She to settle the territory, but then Yuan She killed Yin Gong [or Mr Yin], who was an old enemy but was now a senior member of Shentu Jian's staff. Faced with this blow to his prestige, Shentu Jian pretended that he still wanted Yuan She's assistance, but asked him to come to prison as a formal sign of apology. When Yuan She did so, Shentu Jian sent troops to scatter his followers and seize him. He then cut off Yuan She's head and displayed it in the market-place of Chang'an. -HS 92:2714-19; QHX:664-665, Ch'ü 72:449-454.

Yuan She 袁赦 (d.179). In 159 Yuan She was a eunuch Regular Attendant with a mansion next to that of the Lady Xuan, mother of the future Empress Deng of Emperor Huan. Liang Ji sent men to kill her, and they sought to make their way through Yuan She's grounds. They were discovered there, and Yuan She had a drum beaten in warning. The Lady escaped and told the emperor.

After Emperor Huan had destroyed Liang Ji and his party, Yuan She became favoured and powerful. Claiming kinship with Yuan Feng and Yuan Wei, and seeking their support, he arranged that they were honoured and prosperous. In 179, however, he was impeached with Wang Fu and others by the Director of Retainers Yang Qiu. They were tortured and died in prison. -HHS 34/24:1186, 77/67:2499-50.

Yuan Shu 袁術 [Gonglu 公路] (d.199); Runan. Son of Yuan Feng and a younger brother of Yuan Ji, Yuan Shu was a member of a most distinguished official family. On the relationship with his half-brother or cousin Yuan Shao see sub voce.

As a young man Yuan Shu acquired a reputation for gallantry and for hunting and falconry. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, he later became Intendant of Henan and then General of the Household Rapid as a Tiger.

In 189 Yuan Shu and his cousin/half-brother Yuan Shao urged He Jin into the confrontation with the eunuchs which led to massacre and disorder at Luoyang and the seizure of power by Dong Zhuo. Dong Zhuo named Yuan Shu General of the Rear, but he fled to Nanyang and gathered troops, notably reinforced by the contingent brought by Sun Jian, Administrator of Changsha. He then joined the alliance against Dong Zhuo. In revenge, in 190 Dong Zhuo killed Yuan Shu's father Yuan Wei and his elder brother Ji. Yuan Shu could now claim to be the senior representative of his family, though Yuan Shao was elected leader of the alliance.

Under Sun Jian's field command, Yuan Shu's army advanced on Luoyang from the south, and in 191 Sun Jian drove Dong Zhuo west and captured the former capital. In the mean time, the warlords of the east had turned on one another. As Sun Jian returned from Luoyang, Yuan Shao sent Zhou Ang to attack him, and while Yuan Shu made alliance with Gongsun Zan in the north, Yuan Shao joined Liu Biao in the south. Sun

1012 Yuan Shu

Jian was accordingly sent against Liu Biao, but he was killed in a skirmish. Yuan Shu had lost his best general, he was not a good administrator, and his extravagant regime in Nanyang cost him popular support. He withdrew east to Chenliu, and in 192 he extended his influence into Yang province.

In 193, Cao Cao attacked Yuan Shu and drove him south to the Huai. Setting his new headquarters at Shouchun in Jiujiang, he removed Chen Wen the Inspector of Yang province and took title for himself. He also laid claim to be Lord 伯 of Xu province, while the ramshackle imperial government of Li Jue and his colleagues at Chang'an named him General of the Left and granted him enfeoffment and the Staff of Authority.

In 194 Yuan Shu sent troops under Wu Jing, brother-in-law of Sun Jian, across the Yangzi into Danyang to oppose the rival Governor of Yang province, Liu Yao, and in 195 Sun Jian's son Sun Ce joined the attack and achieved remarkable success. Further north Yuan Shu was engaged in a three-way contest for Xu province with Lü Bu and Liu Bei. In 196 he received Lü Bu's aid to defeat Liu Bei, but then Lü Bu changed sides and Yuan Shu was driven back to Shouchun, from where he made occasional sorties.

At the beginning of 197 Yuan Shu proclaimed himself emperor of the new Zhong 仲 dynasty [the title also appears as Chong 冲, but Zhong was probably chosen to show his intended succession as a younger brother to the Han]. Yuan Shu was inspired partly by the humiliation of the Han emperor, who had fled Chang'an only to fall into the hands of Cao Cao, but chiefly by his own sense of importance as senior member of one of the great official families in the empire.

At this time Yuan Shu formally controlled Yang province and was contending for Xu, and he bolstered his claim by reference to portents and prophecies, and to the fact that he held the imperial Seal of State 傳國璽 which had been recovered by Sun Jian at Luoyang in 191. Yuan Shu's pretensions were nonetheless inappropriate: the prosperity of his lineage had come from the favour of Han, to which he should have remained loyal, and he was a man of small military capacity and less administrative skill. He received no support and was immediately declared a rebel by rival warlords. Sun Ce, south of the Yangzi, turned from him, and in the autumn Cao Cao seized his holdings north of the Huai. Yuan Shu's remnant territory suffered drought and a bad harvest, and his power steadily declined.

By 199 Yuan Shu's political weakness and personal extravagance had brought his regime to ruin. He tried to escape east to the Dabie hills or north into Qing province, but was driven back towards Shouchun, and in the sixth month he died outside that city. His family and followers, said to number thirty thousand, took refuge with Liu Xun in Lujiang, and soon afterwards came into the hands of Sun Ce. -HHS 75/65:2438-43*, SGZ 6:207-10*.

Yuan Shu 袁術, concubine of: see the Lady Feng 馮 III.

Yuan [Shuzhi] 袁叔釋; Chenliu. During the 150s Yuan Shuzhi was a local officer at commandery headquarters. As he committed some minor offence, the Administrator Guo Cong was angry and intended to punish him. The Registrar Zhu Zhen pointed out that Yuan Shuzhi's grandfather Yuan Zhen was a member of the Censorate, and it was not appropriate to treat him in such a fashion. So Yuan Shuzhi was set free. -XC 4:4b.

Yuan Si 袁嗣. Yuan Si was named Chancellor of Chen by Yuan Shu, but in 196 he surrendered to Cao Cao. -SGZ 1:13.

Yuan Sui 袁綏; Guangling. Having served as a clerk in the offices of the Grand Tutor at the capital, Yuan Sui returned to his home commandery. When the Administrator Zhang Zhao went to join the alliance against Dong Zhuo in 190, he left Yuan Sui in charge. -SGZ Wu 12:1337.

Yuan [Taibo] 袁太伯; Linhuai. In the first century Yuan Taibo compiled a detailed commentary to the Book of Changes. He was admired by Wang Chong. -Lun heng 37; Forke 07:469, Hou Kang:2105, Yao Zhenzong:2309-10.

Yuan Tan 袁譚 [Xiansi 顯思] (d.205); Runan. Eldest son of Yuan Shao, in 193 Yuan Tan was named Inspector of Qing province against Gongsun Zan's officer Tian Kai. After fierce fighting, both sides were exhausted and declared a truce, each retaining some share of the territory. In 196 Yuan Tan seized Beihai from Kong Rong, and in 200 he was with Yuan Shao at Guandu.

Though a man of generous nature, Yuan Tan does not appear to have governed particularly well, and under the influence of his wife the Lady Liu XV, supported by Pang Ji and Shen Pei, Yuan Shao gave preference to his younger son Shang. He sent Yuan Tan out again to Qing province and had him adopted into the lineage of Yuan Shao's nominal elder brother, the long-dead son of Yuan Cheng: see sub Yuan [personal name unknown] above. Though Yuan Shao himself had been adopted in this way, in the present case the arrangement served to prevent Yuan Tan from succeeding to his natural father's position.

When Yuan Shao died in 202, Yuan Shang indeed became Governor of Ji province and chief of the clan. Yuan Tan went south to camp by the Yellow River, but Yuan Shang restricted the number of his troops. When Cao Cao attacked in the autumn Yuan Tan called for help and Yuan Shang came with an army, but in the spring of 203 they were defeated and driven back to Ye city.

As Cao Cao relieved the pressure by withdrawing to the south, the brothers resumed their quarrel. Yuan Tan attacked Ye city, but was forced away to the northeast. Many of his officers turned against him, and as Yuan Shang besieged him in Pingyuan Yuan Tan sent Xin Pi to seek aid from Cao Cao. Cao Cao agreed that his son Cao Zheng should betroth a daughter of Yuan Tan, and in the winter he returned to the north; but he had no intention of trusting Yuan Tan nor of maintaining his alliance.

In 204 as Cao Cao attacked Ye city and defeated Yuan Shang, Yuan Tan expanded his position and took over some of Shang's troops. Cao Cao accused him of double dealing, cancelled the alliance, and attacked Yuan Tan's base at Nanpi in Bohai. In the spring of 205 Yuan Tan attempted a sortie, but he was defeated and killed as he fled; his family was likewise destroyed. -HHS 74/64B:2409-17*, SGZ 6:201-07*.

Yuan Tang 袁湯 [Zhonghe 仲河]; Runan. Son of Yuan Jing and younger brother of Yuan Peng, Yuan Tang followed the family tradition of scholarship. He had twelve sons and was admired for his Confucian virtues. Appointed Administrator of Chenliu, he encouraged Juan Cheng's compilation of local history, Chenliu qijiu zhuan 陳留耆舊傳 "Venerable Men and Ancient Affairs of Chenliu," as a means to encourage local morality. This became the model for a genre widespread in the last years of Han.

As Director of the Imperial Secretariat in the time of Emperor Shun, Yuan Tang was a close associate of the General-in-Chief Liang Shang. The Administrator of Chenliu Wang Tang failed to pay them special respect and they were annoyed. Soon afterwards Wang Tang defeated some bandits who raided his territory, but then pursued them outside his commandery. Despite his success, Liang Shan and Yuan Tang took the opportunity to impeach him for this breach of regulations.

Minister Coachman in 146, after the fall of Li Gu Yuan Tang became Excellency of Works in the regency government for the child Emperor Huan, and he was enfeoffed for his nominal role in the accession and for his compliance with the wishes of the Liang family. In the following year he was promoted Excellency over the Masses, and in 149 he was made Grand Commandant. He left office in 153 on account of unfavourable portents, and died some two years later at the age of eighty-six. -HHS 45/35:1522, 31/21:1106.

Yuan Tang 袁湯, wife of: see the Lady Ma 馬 V.

Yuan Teng 袁騰; Chen. Second son of Yuan Liang II, during the late 120s he was a member of the Imperial Secretariat and later became Administrator of Shu. -LS 6:6a, 20:12b. [The name is the same, but it is unlikely this is the man in the entry below.]

Yuan Teng 袁騰. In the early 160s Yuan Teng the Prefect of Luoyang was accused by Kou Rong of having made false accusations against him. -HHS 16/6:629. [The name is the same, but it is unlikely this is the man in the entry above.]

Yuan Wei 袁隗 [Ciyang 次陽] (d.190); Runan. Son of Yuan Tang, Yuan Wei was a younger brother of Yuan Cheng and Yuan Feng. On account of a notional kinship with the eunuch Yuan She, Yuan Feng and Yuan Wei were treated with great favour, had distinguished official careers and became very prosperous. From Minister Herald in 172, Yuan Wei became Excellency of Works. Leaving that office in 176, he became Minister of Ceremonies, and was again Excellency of Works from 182 to 185.

In 189 Yuan Wei held title as General of the Rear, but when the Little Emperor Liu Bian was placed upon the throne he was named Grand Tutor with control of the Imperial Secretariat, giving formal authority in government, with the General-in-Chief He Jin. When He Jin was killed by the eunuchs in the crisis later that year, they sought to name Fan Ling and Xu Xiang as Director of Retainers and Intendant of Henan. Yuan Wei and Yuan Shao, however, prepared false orders to summon the two men, and when they arrived they were executed.

1014 Yuan Wei

When Dong Zhuo took power at Luoyang and intended to depose Liu Bian in favour of his half-brother Liu Xie, he formally consulted Yuan Wei, who gave his approval. In 190, however, following the flight and rebellion of Yuan Shao and Yuan Shu, Dong Zhuo killed Yuan Wei and all his kinsmen at Luoyang, as many as fifty men, women, children and infants. - HHS 45/35:1523.

Yuan Wei 袁隗, wife of, see the Lady Ma Lun 馬倫.

Yuan [Wenshu] 袁文術; Linhuai. Presumably a kinsman of Yuan Taibo, in the first century Yuan Wenshu composed Zhen ling 箴銘 "Admonitions Engraved in Stone." He was admired by Wang Chong. - Lun heng 37; Forke 07:469, Yao Zhenzong:2418.

Yuan Xi 袁熙 [Xianyong 顯雍 or Xianyi 顯奕] (d.207); Runan. Yuan Xi was the middle son of Yuan Shao, who named him Inspector of You province, probably in the late 190s. After Yuan Shao died in 202, Yuan Xi played no role in the quarrel between his brothers Tan and Shang nor in the fighting with Cao Cao, but he received Yuan Shang when he fled north in 204.

In the following year Yuan Xi was driven out by a mutiny and the brothers went to join the Wuhuan leader Tadun. In 207 their forces were defeated by Cao Cao at White Wolf Mountain. Yuan Xi, Yuan Shang and the remnant Wuhuan chieftains fled to Liaodong, where they were killed by Gongsun Du. - HHS 74/64B:2409-18, SGZ 6; Mather 76:610.

Yuan Xi 袁熙, wife of: see the Lady Zhen 甄.

Yuan Xing 袁興; Chenliu. HHS 48/38:1620 says that the son of Yuan Yan was Yuan Ji 驥 q.v., but commentary to that passage says his personal name was Xing and his style was Ji [presumably accompanied by another character].

Yuan Xiong 袁雄. About 195 Lü Meng, future general of Sun Quan but at that time a trooper under Deng Dang in Sun Ce's forces, killed a man. He took refuge for a time with the colonel Yuan Xiong. - SGZ Wu 9:1273.

Yuan Xu 袁盱; Runan. Son of the Excellency Yuan Chang, in 117 Yuan Xu was found to have engaged in private correspondence with Zhang Jun of the Imperial Secretariat, and it was alleged that Zhang Jun had divulged matters which were confidential. Yuan Xu resigned his office, but the Dowager Deng believed Yuan Chang was also implicated. She lost confidence in him and Yuan Chang killed himself.

Zhang Jun later appealed against the wrongful accusation. He was spared the death penalty, and Yuan Xu was enabled to continue as an imperial official, while Yuan Chang was posthumously rehabilitated.

Minister of the Household in 159, Yuan Xu and the Minister of Justice Handan Yi were the only senior officials who would not submit to the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. When Emperor Huan and his eunuch allies arranged the coup to destroy the Liang clan, Yuan Xu was given the Staff of Authority to strip Liang Ji of his seal and insignia of office. - HHS 45/35:1524-25.

Yuan Xu 袁敍; Runan. A cousin of Yuan Shao, Yuan Xu was sometime Administrator of Jiyin. Following his defeat of Yuan Shao at Guandu in 200, Cao Cao claimed that Yuan Xu had written to Yuan Shao urging him to claim the imperial title. - SGZ 1:22.

Yuan Yan 袁延 or Xi Yuan 奚延 [Jiping 季平]; Chenliu. A scholar of wide learning, Yuan Yan taught the Confucian classics. He was a man of few words but was known for his virtue. The county magistrate Niu Shu appointed him as a legal officer, and then as head of his district, and he acquired great influence for good. He was invited to office in the province, but would not accept.

During the late 150s Yuan Yan was appointed an Academician. Recommended further, he became a Palace Attendant and was evidently a confidant of the ruler. On one occasion Emperor Huan invited his opinion. Yuan Yan replied that he was only among the middling rank of the rulers of Han: when he followed the advice of worthy men like Chen Fan, he was good; when he accepted the influence of the eunuchs he was bad. The emperor tolerated and accepted his rebuke.

As a Consultant, Yuan Yan was sent to Donghai to pray for rain in time of drought; his prayers were answered. He then held office as a General of the Household and later became a colonel in the Northern Army. Having gone out as Administrator of Wei commandery, he returned to the capital as Minister Herald.

Emperor Huan always treated Yuan Yan as a friend, and when the astrologers reported a comet in an imperial constellation he again asked his opinion. This time Yuan Yan criticised the favouritism he showed to his old friend Deng Wanshi, brother of his empress. As the emperor would not change, Yuan Yan pleaded ill health and retired from office.

In the time of Emperor Ling Yuan Yan was invited to court once more, but he declined and died at home. -HHS 48/38:1618-19*, XC 2:13a-b [as Xi Yuan 奚延]; deC 89:23-24, 304-305.

Yuan Yang 袁陽 miswritten for Yuan Tang 袁湯. -HQ 1:19a.

Yuan Yao 袁耀/曜; Runan. Son of Yuan Shu, after his father's death in 199 Yuan Yao fled to Liu Xun in Lujiang, and soon afterwards came into the hands of Sun Ce. He later held place at the court of Sun Quan, and his daughter married Sun Quan's son Fen 奮. -HHS 75/65:2444, SGZ 6:210.

Yuan [Yaoqing] 袁曜卿. Yuan Yaoqing was a cousin of the mother of Cai Yong. -HHSJJ 60/50B:2140 Hui Dong citing Xianxian xingzhuang.

Yuan Yi 袁遺 [Boye 伯業] (d.192); Runan. A cousin of Yuan Shu and Yuan Shao, Yuan Yi became Prefect of Chang'an. He was admired by Zhang Chao and by Cao Cao.

Administrator of Shanyang in 190, Yuan Yi joined the alliance against Dong Zhuo. In 193 Yuan Shao sent him to take over Yang province, but he was defeated by Yuan Shu and then killed by his own men. -SGZ 1: 6-7, 6:208, 12:378.

Yuan [Yida] 袁懿達; Runan. Son of Yuan Wei, he probably died when Dong Zhuo slaughtered the family at the capital. -HHSJJ 45/35:1631 Hou Kang.

Yuan Yin 袁胤; Runan. A younger cousin of Yuan Shu, Yuan Yin was named as his Administrator of Danyang in 195, but was driven away by Sun Ce after Yuan Shu took the imperial title in 197.

When Yuan Shu died in 199, Yuan Yin led his family and followers to refuge with Liu Xun, Administrator of Lujiang, at Huan city: cf. sub Zhang Xun. They later came into the hands of Sun Ce. -SGZ Wu 5:1197, Wu 1:1108.

Yuan Yu 苑御; Kuaiji. A local leader on the upper Min River in present-day Fujian, he and his allies were conquered by He Qi in 203. -SGZ Wu 15:1378.

Yuan Yuan 袁原 see Yuan Jing 袁京. -FSTY 2:19.

Yuan [Yuanchang] 袁元長; Runan. A kinsman of Yuan Shao, in 204 Yuan Yuanchang's son Yuan Chunqing was Administrator of Wei commandery for Yuan Shang, and was at the defence of Ye city against Cao Cao.

Yuan Yuanchang was at that time in Yang province, probably having taken refuge there after the fall of Yuan Shu. Cao Cao had him brought to court, and his agent Dong Zhao wrote a most elegant letter to Yuan Chunqing, urging him to obey the dictates of filial piety and change his political allegiance. The city duly surrendered, though this may have owed as much to Cao Cao's military operations as to any negotiations with Yuan Chunqing. Neither father nor son are heard of again. -SGZ 14:438.

Yuan Yue 袁約 or Ren Yue 任約; non-Chinese. A chieftain of the Banshun people of Ba commandery, in the autumn of 215 he went with his associates Duhu and Fuhu to submit to Cao Cao. They were received at Luoyang, enfeoffed as marquises, and sent back as administrators. The other two leaders were given the east and west, while Yuan Yue was awarded the rump of Ba commandery.

Towards the end of that year, their combined forces were defeated by Huang Quan, officer in the service of Liu Bei, and the various groups fled north to Cao Cao's territory in the Wei valley. -HYGZ 6:83; deC 96:496-498.

Yuan Zeng 爰曾 [Zilu 子路] (d.23); Dongping. During the disorders which accompanied the fall of Wang Mang in 23, Yuan Zeng and Liu Xu of Taishan raised local troops. At one time Yuan Zeng stood on the wall of a city in Taishan to address his followers or recruit more men, so he was commonly known from his style as "Zilu on the City Wall" 城頭子路. Yuan Zeng took title as Chief Assistant Officer 都從事, while Liu Xu called himself Colonel Thrice Venerable 校三老; in this they reflected the pattern of the Red Eyebrows [see sub Fan Chong]. Their forces ravaged the lower reaches of the Yellow River in present-day northern Shandong.

When the Gengshi Emperor established his government in 23, Yuan Zeng and Liu Xu sent messages of submission. Yuan Zeng was named Administrator of Donglai and an acting chief general, while Liu Xu received similar recognition. They continued to act as independent warlords, but in that same year Yuan Zeng was killed by his own officers; he was replaced by Liu Xu. -HHS 21/11:752; Bn 59:41.

Yuan Zhan 原展 (d.110); Hanzhong. Well-respected locally, Yuan Zhan was appointed to the local staff of the Administrator Zheng Qin. When rebel Qiang attacked in 110, Zheng Qin led the commandery militia against them but was heavily defeated. Yuan Zhan and other officers fought to protect their master, but all of them were killed.

In 118 an imperial letter ordered a grant of grain to the families of Yuan Zhan and his comrades. -HHS 87/77:2887, HYGZ 10C:169.

1016 Yuan Zhang

Yuan Zhang 袁璋 I; Runan. XTS 74B:2164 says that Yuan Zhang was a son of Yuan Liang I and an uncle of the Excellency Yuan An.

Yuan Zhang 袁璋 II; Chen. Third son of Yuan Liang II, Yuan Zhang was an Internuncio in the late 120s. He was the father of the Excellency Yuan Pang. -LS 6:6a, HHSJJ 8:319 Hui Dong.

Yuan Zhen 袁珍; Chenliu. During the 150s Yuan Zhen was a member of the Imperial Censorate. -XC 4:4b and see sub Yuan Shuzhi.

Yuan Zhen 苑鎮 [Zhonggong 仲弓]; Nanyang. A stele was set up to the memory of Yuan Zhen, formerly an Assistant Officer in Jing province. -LS 12:6a-7b.

Yuan Zhi 袁稚; Guanghan. Husband of the Lady Xiang Wu, Yuan Zhi died young. -HYGZ 10B:154.

Yuan Zhong 袁忠 [Zhengfu 正輔] (d.197); Runan. Son of Yuan He, Yuan Zhong was less reserved and less strict than his eldest brother Hong 閔. A friend of Fan Pang, he was implicated in the First Faction Incident of 166-167, was imprisoned and proscribed, and held no office for twenty years.

About 190 Yuan Zhong was appointed Chancellor of Pei, where he was praised for his plainness and honesty. In 192 he joined a petition organised by Tao Qian, Inspector of Xu province, urging Zhu Jun to lead an army west to rescue the emperor at Chang'an. Nothing came of the proposal, and as civil war spread Yuan Zhong left his office and took refuge in Kuaiji. Disapproving of the extravagance of the Administrator Wang Lang and his entourage, he pretended to be ill and kept his distance.

When Sun Ce attacked the commandery in 196, Yuan Zhong fled by sea to the far south. He was called to take a ministerial position in the puppet court of Emperor Xian, just established at Xu city under Cao Cao, but died on the journey. -HHS 45/35:1526.

Another account says that when Yuan Zhong was in Pei he attempted to punish Cao Cao for some crime, and he was a friend of Bian Rang, who had also spoken against Cao Cao. Cao Cao therefore sent messengers to Shi Xie, warlord of the far south, that he should kill him. -SGZ 1:55, XC 2:10b.

Yuan Zhu 袁著; Runan. In the early 150s, Yuan Zhu was a nineteen-year-old gentleman cadet, assessed in the first class 甲科. Perhaps inspired by this, and in any case indignant to the manner in which the General-in-Chief Liang Ji dominated the government, he presented a memorial against him. When Liang Ji sent men to look for him, Yuan Zhu pretended that he had been taken ill and died. He had a false funeral carried out, then changed his name, but Liang Ji still found out. He caught Yuan Zhu and had him beaten to death. -HHS 34/24:1184; Ch'ü 72:474.

[Yuanbin (style)] 元賓 [surname and personal name unknown] (112-159). Member of an official family, he held various local posts, was an Assistant Officer of the province and was then called up as a Consultant. He died at the capital at the age of forty-eight. -LS 6:19b-21a, 24:17a-18a.

Yuancheng 緣城 see Sili Yuancheng 司隸緣城.

Yuanmeng 元孟 of Yanqi [Karashar]. An officer under King Guang in 94, Yuanmeng had been a hostage in China. When the Protector-General Ban Chao came to Yanqi, Yuanmeng warned him that Guang was planning to maintain resistance in the hills. Ban Chao forced Guang to surrender and then executed him. Having plundered the city, he put Yuanmeng in his place.

Thirty years later, Yuanmeng was still on the throne, but was now reluctant to submit to Han. In 127 Ban Chao's son Ban Yong was going to attack him, but Zhang Lang the Administrator of Dunhuang arrived first. After one preliminary engagement Yuanmeng and the neighbouring rulers of Weili and Weixu sent hostages and tribute to Luoyang. -HHS 47/37:1581-82, 1590, 88/78:2928.

Yuanzai 掾哉 see Sili Yuanzai 司隸掾哉/Sili Yuancheng 司隸緣城.

Yuchouben 於仇賁; Xianbi. In 54 the Xianbi chieftain and his colleague Mantou came to present tribute to the imperial court. Yuchouben received title as a king, and Mantou was named a marquis. -HHS 90/80:2985; deC 84:291.

Yuchujian 於除鞮 (d.93); Xiongnu. Yuchujian was the son of the Youliu Northern Shanyu, who was killed by the Xianbi in 87, and younger brother of his successor, whose name is unknown, who was defeated by the Chinese armies under Dou Xian and disappeared in 91 [see sub Youliu Shanyu]. Hitherto a king, Yuchujian now proclaimed himself Shanyu in his brother's stead. Setting his capital at Yiwu, near present-day Hami in Xinjiang, he sought to surrender to Han.

The Chinese commander Dou Xian wanted to set up Yuchujian's senior colleague Atong as puppet Shanyu, but his proposal brought intense debate at the imperial court, for Yuan An and other ministers argued that the Xiongnu should be reunited under the Southern Shanyu, old ally of Han. Dou Xian got his way and the northern state was maintained, but he was obliged to abandon Atong and accept the closer heir.

Having agreed to Yuchujian's claim, the Han court set up a similar structure to that provided for the Southern Shanyu, with government supervised by a resident General of the Household Emissary to the Xiongnu. The first Emissary, Geng Kui, was dismissed when Dou Xian was destroyed by Emperor He; he was replaced by Ren Shang.

In the autumn of 93 Yuchujian attempted to escape once more to the north but Ren Shang, aided by the officer Wang Fu, chased him and persuaded him to return. On the road back Yuchujian died, perhaps forcibly. -HHS 4:173-77, 45/35:1520-21, 89/79:2954.

Yue Gan 樂乾; Jingzhao>Nanyang. XTS 73B:2944 says that Yue Gan was a son of Yue Hui, An officer of the Feathered Forest guards, he moved the family residence to Nanyang.

Yue [Hedang] 樂何當. A travelling merchant, in the mid-190s Yue Hedang became a favourite of the north-western warlord Gongsun Zan, who treated him like a brother. -SGZ 8:245.

Yue Hui 樂恢 [Boji 伯奇]; Jingzhao. When Yue Hui was eleven, his father Yue Qin was arrested by the local magistrate, who intended to put him to death. Yue Hui stood outside the yamen and wept, and the magistrate then had pity and led Yue Qin go free.

A keen Confucian scholar, Yue Hui studied under the Academician Jiao Kuang. As Jiao Kuang became Administrator of Hedong, Yue Hui accompanied him, but he lived privately and took no interest in politics. When Jiao Kuang was implicated in the alleged plotting of Liu Ying the King of Chu in 70, Yue Hui was the only one of his former students not to be arrested [but cf. Zheng Hong].

Yue Hui then joined the local staff of the Intendant Zhang Xun, who was later executed for some crime. Among his former officers, Yue Hui was the only one to carry out mourning for him, and he was punished too.

When he was able to return to his commandery Yue Hui was appointed Officer of Merit. As some of his nominations for appointment were not approved he asked to resign, but this was not allowed. On the other hand, he was admired for recommending an old enemy, Yang Zheng, as Filial and Incorrupt.

Yue Hui was then appointed to the offices of the Excellency Mou Rong, but in 75 Diwu Lun became the Excellency, and because he came from the same commandery Yue Hui resigned his position. He was widely admired for this circumspection, and received offers from the other Excellencies. We are told that he did not accept, but it appears that at some time he served successfully as a county magistrate.

As a Consultant in the late 80s, Yue Hui argued strongly against the proposal of Dou Xian to attack the Northern Xiongnu. Recognised nonetheless for his public spirit, he was appointed Deputy Director of the Imperial Secretariat. He still refused overtures from Dou Xiang, and he presented memorials criticising the Director of Retainers, the Intendant of Henan and the Prefect of Luoyang, all partisans of the Dou family, for their failure to maintain order at the capital. When his wife protested at the high profile he was taking, Yue Hui resigned his office with an eloquent memorial, but it was evidently too late: despite his return to private life the Dou faction pursued him and Yue Hui took poison.

Hundreds of disciples and other followers wore mourning for Yue Hui, and after the destruction of the Dou clan in 92, his students He Rong and Zhao Mu presented a memorial to Emperor He recalling his loyal conduct. Yue Hui's son Ji was appointed a gentleman cadet. -HHS 43/33:1477-79*; Ebrey 86:633.

Yue Ji 樂己 [Bowen 伯文]; Jingzhao. Son of Yue Hui, about 92 Yue Ji was appointed a gentleman cadet on account of his late father's loyalty against the Dou faction. Disapproving of official life, he resigned his position. -HHS 43/33. 1479.

Yue Ji 樂季 (d.161); Nanyang. In 161 Yue Ji, Huang Wu and Hui De were joint leaders of a heterodox cult with branches across three counties. They were arrested and executed. -HHS 7:309.

Yue Jin 樂進 [Wenqian 文謙] (d.218); Dong. A short, lightly-built man, Yue Jin joined Cao Cao in search of adventure and became a member of his personal guard. Sent back to his home country to collect soldiers, he returned with a thousand men. He was appointed a major and later a commandant. In Yan province in 194 against Lü Bu, at Yongqiu in 195 against Zhang Zhao, and at Hu city in 197 against Qiao Rui, Yue Jin distinguished himself in the vanguard of the attack. He was enfeoffed as a village marquis.

In 198 Yue Jin took part in the campaign against Zhang Xiu and in the final attack on Liu Bei at Xiapi, where he defeated some detached forces of the enemy. In the following year Yue Jin joined the attacks on Sui Gu in Henei and against Liu Bei in Pei, and he was then appointed as a colonel.

As Yuan Shao's army came south in 200, Yue Jin and his colleague Yu Jin were sent with five thousand men to attack enemy positions up and down the Yellow River. They burnt some thirty camps, killed or captured several thousand men, and forced twenty of Yuan Shao's commanders to surrender. Yue Jin then returned to join the defence of Guandu, and he took part in the raid which captured the enemy supply train and brought the disintegration of Yuan Shao's army.

In 203 Yue Jin joined Cao Cao's attack on Yuan Shang and Yuan Tan, and he took the head of the enemy officer Yan Jing. He was sent east with an independent command against the Yellow Turbans, and settled the territory of Le'an. He returned for the final attack on Ye city and the assault on Yuan Tan's base at Nanpi in Bohai, where he scaled the city wall and opened a gate for the main attack. He then took a detached force northwards to establish a position in Yuyang.

In 205 Yue Jun was sent with Li Dian against Gao Gan in Shangdang, and in the following year, after Gao Gan was driven to flight by the main army, he was sent east with Li Dian to deal with the pirate Guan Cheng in Beihai. They defeated him and drove him off-shore.

In 206 Yue Jin, Yu Jin and Zhang Liao were given special commissions as generals, and in 208 the three men were stationed on the frontier against Liu Biao in Jing province. As they could not co-operate, Cao Cao was obliged to send his Registrar Zhao Yan to enforce agreement. Soon afterwards Yue Jin accompanied Cao Cao as he invaded Jing province and received the surrender of Liu Biao's son Liu Zong. He then held command of one of seven divisions in Nanyang under Zhao Yan, now Area Commander. After the defeat at the Red Cliffs, Yue Jin was left at Xiangyang to hold the line of the Han against Liu Bei's general Guan Yu. He forced the submission of the non-Chinese people in the hill country to the west, and he drove back the northern-most outposts of Guan Yu in Nan commandery.

As Cao Cao embarked on his offensive against Sun Quan across the Huai in 217, he granted Yue Jin the Staff of Authority and called him to the main army.

When he withdrew from that campaign, he left Yue Jin with other generals under the command of Xiahou Dun, with Zhang Liao and a number of other divisional officers. The threat of their established garrisons was sufficient to persuade Sun Quan for a formal surrender and submission to Wei.

Cao Cao now recognised Yue Jin's long service by adding to the value of his fief, he allowed one of his sons to hold a separate marquisate, and he named Yue Jin as General on the Right. Yue Jin died a short time later. -SGZ 17:521*.

Yue Jiu 樂就 (d.197). A general under Yuan Shu, in 197 Yue Jiu was posted with Qiao Rui at Hu city in Chen against the advance of Cao Cao. Cao Cao stormed the city and slaughtered the defenders. -SGZ 1:15.

Yue Jun 樂俊. In 34 Yue Jun was magistrate of Junyi county in western Chenliu. Zhang Si, a magistrate in Henan, memorialised that the dykes on the Yellow River, which had been broken since the last years of Former Han, should be repaired. Yue Jun argued that the matter was not urgent, for many people had left, and the territory which was not flooded was adequate for those who remained. A major engineering project would misuse resources at a time when the empire was not yet settled. Emperor Guangwu agreed and the work was not carried out.

When the Yellow River and Vast Canal works were eventually brought under control in the late 60s, the Junyi Trench was one of the first projects in the program. See sub Wang Wu. -HHS 76/66:2464; Bn 54: 148 [as Lo/Le Jun].

Yue Lin 樂琳 (d.257); Dong. Son of Yue Jin, he succeeded to his fief in 218. He was of similar energetic temperament, served as a general, and became Inspector of Yang province. In 257 Zhuge Dan 諸葛誕, a loyalist opposed to the dominance and ambitions of the Sima clan, prepared to rebel against them. He was doubtful whether he could rely upon Yue Lin, so he killed him. -SGZ 17:521-22; Fang 65:258-260.

Yue Mao 樂茂; Nanyang. A senior member of staff to the Administrator Lu Nu in 163, Yue Mao was associated with the construction of a new temple at the source of the Huai in the mountains to the east of the commandery. -LS 2:12a-14b, Nagata 94:142.

Yue Mou 樂茂 see Yue Mao 樂茂.

Yue Ping 樂平; Nanyang. XTS 73B:2944 says that Yue Ping, a son of Yue Ren, was Administrator of Qinghe;

this was perhaps under Wei.

Yue Pu 樂普. Holder of a small fief in Ba commandery, Yue Pu was attacked by bandits about 150. -HYGZ 1: 6.

Yue Qin 樂親; Jingzhao. A local officer in his county about 60, Yue Qin offended the magistrate, who intended to put him to death. Yue Qin's son Hui stood outside the yamen and wept, so the magistrate had pity and set Yue Qin free. -HHS 43/33. 1477.

Yue Ren 樂仁; Nanyang. XTS 73B:2944 says that Yue Ren, a grandson of Yue Gan, was Administrator of Wuling; this would be in the second century.

Yue Song 樂崧; Henei. Honest and loyal, Yue Song entered the Imperial Secretariat. His family was poor, so Yue Song slept at the office with no bedding, and ate only husks of grain. Emperor Ming visited one night, found out about this, and ordered that in future such junior officers should be provided with food morning and evening, and with clothing and bedding.

On another occasion Yue Song offended Emperor Ming, who took up a staff to beat him. As Yue Song took refuge under a couch, the sovereign shouted furiously, "Come out! Come out!" Yue Song replied that he had never heard of a ruler personally chastising his subjects, and the emperor pardoned him.

Yue Song later became Administrator of Nanyang. -HHS 41/31:1409, 1411, HQ 1:16b-17a.

Yue Song 樂松. Having studied composition and calligraphy, Yue Song became a favourite of Emperor Ling. In 177 he was a Libationer of the Palace Attendants, and when the School at the Gate of the Vast Capital was established in 178, his portrait was painted on a wall as an inspiration to the students.

Though he was criticised by Yang Qiu, Cai Yong and other scholar-officials as a man of mean family, with frivolous skills, leader of a gang of sycophants, Yue Song remained a trusted adviser. In 180, against protests from senior ministers, he urged Emperor Ling to build two luxurious parks.

As Commandant of the Equipage in 183, Yue Song joined Liu Tao and Yuan Gong in a memorial to warn about the growing threat of rebellion from Zhang Jue and his sect of Yellow Turbans.

HHS 54/44 describes Yue Song as a Regular Attendant 中常侍, which was a eunuch office, but HHJ 24:289 has him as a Palace Attendant 侍中 and a colleague of Ren Zhi. He was probably a full man associated with the eunuch group. -HHS 77/67:2499,

60/50B:1992, 54/44:1780, 1783, 57/47:1849.

Yue Wei 樂闡. An officer under the Minister of the Guards, in 124 Yue Wei joined the demonstration led by Lai Li at the palace Gate of the Vast Capital, protesting the dismissal of the Heir, Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun. The demonstrators achieved no success, but their support was recognised, and after Liu Bao was brought to the throne at the end of 125 they were rewarded with high office and gained the ren right to nominate their sons as cadet gentlemen. -HHS 15/5:591-93.

Yue Xiang 樂詳 [Wenzai 文載]; Hedong. Born in the mid-160s, Yue Xiang was a committed scholar who took refuge with Liu Biao in Jing province at the time of the civil war. About 200 he went on foot to visit Xie Gai, senior expert on the Zuo zhuan, who was then at Xu city under Cao Cao. He sought his opinion on a number of difficult points, and from his answers he compiled "Questions on Seventy-two Matters in Zuo zhuan" 左傳問七十二事.

Yue Xiang returned to his home country some time after 205. The Administrator Du Ji was concerned with education and appointed Yue Xiang as his senior officer for that field 文學祭酒. He received many students, notably from Hongnong, for the Administrator Linghu Shao sent his best young men to him for training.

As Cao Pi re-established the Imperial University in 224, Yue Xiang was one of the first Academicians. He later held court rank as a Commandant of Cavalry, but retired on grounds of age in the 240s. In 257, now more than ninety, he memorialised on the achievements of his former patron Du Ji.

Yu Huan, compiler of Wei lue, named Yue Xiang as one of seven Confucian Exemplars 儒宗 who maintained the tradition of Han scholarship in times of disorder. -SGZ 16:507; Fang 52:170-171.

Yue Xuan 樂玄. In 26 Yue Xuan was a subordinate of the bandit leader Sun Deng, who was proclaimed Son of Heaven in Shang commandery in 26 by a combination of the Bronze Horse, Green Calf and Youlai groups. Yue Xuan promptly killed Sun Deng, then brought the whole band of fifty thousand men to surrender to Emperor Guangwu. -HHS 1A:31.

Yue Yangzi 樂羊子; Henan: see immediately below.

Yue Yangzi 樂羊子, wife of. The parentage of the Lady is unknown, but she was a moral tutor to both her husband and to her mother-in-law.

When Yue Yangzi found a piece of gold on the road and brought it home, the Lady objected to his seeking profit from things that had been lost. Yue Yangzi, ashamed, threw the gold away.

He then went far off to study, but returned after one year, explaining that he was homesick and wanted to see her. The Lady rebuked him for interrupting his work, in similar fashion to the mother of the philosopher Mencius. So Yue Yangzi went back, and he stayed away for seven years until his course was complete.

During his absence the family was poor, but when her mother-in-law cooked a neighbour's chicken that had wandered into their property, the Lady wept, explaining she was sad that their poverty required them to resort to such meanness. The mother-in-law then threw the chicken away.

Finally, a man came and wanted to rape her, but he first seized her mother-in-law and swore to kill her unless the Lady did his bidding. Instead, the Lady cut her own throat. The assailant let Yue Yangzi's mother go; he was later caught and killed. The commandery Administrator gave a grant of cloth for the Lady's funeral, and awarded her title as Pure and Honourable 貞義.

The Lady's biography appears in Fan Ye's Chapter on Worthy Women 列女傳. -HHS 84/74:2792-93*; Ch'ü 72:289-290.

Yue Yin 樂隱 (d.189); Anping. A scholar and teacher, Yue Yin became Chief Clerk to the General of Chariots and Cavalry He Miao at Luoyang. As He Miao was killed in 189, Yue Yin shared his fate. -SGZ 26:730.

Yun 允 [surname unknown] [Ziyou 子游] (d.115); Wei. Nominated as Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright, he became an Inspector and an Administrator and was commemorated with a stele at his death. -Nagata 94:50.

Yunqi Yao 運期耀 [Houguang 侯光] was a pseudonym adopted by Liang Hong when taking refuge from Emperor Zhang in 80. The surname and personal name may be rendered as "Splendour of the Age" and the style, reading 候 for 侯, as "Awaiting the Light;" both reflect the names of Liang Hong's wife the Lady Meng Guang 孟光, styled Deyao 德曜 "Virtuous Splendour." -HHS 83/73:2767.

Yufuluo 於夫羅 (d.195); Xiongnu. Elder son of the Southern Shanyu Qiangqu, in 184 he was sent by his father with a contingent of horsemen to assist the Han against the Yellow Turban rebels.

After Qiangqu was killed in 188, Yufuluo inherited his position, with the title Zhizhi shizuhou 持至尸逐侯 Shanyu. He was tainted by his father's policy of support for China, and the Xiuchuge clan and its allies, the same faction as had killed Qiangqu, drove Yufuluo from his territory. They set up a marquis of the collateral Xubu clan in his place, and when the pretender died in the following year, they named an elderly king to hold the nominal headship of the state, without the authority which the title Shanyu might imply.

Yufuluo took refuge at the court of Han, and sought help to regain his position, but after the death of Emperor Ling in 189 the government fell into complete disorder and no-one was concerned with the problems of the Xiongnu. Yufuluo moved north into Henei, where he attempted to support himself and his followers by plunder, and though it is likely that his father had aided the Chinese authorities against the Bobo bandits of Xihe, Yufuluo made alliance with that group. The people of the region, however, had largely gathered into self-defence units, and Yufuluo was obliged to withdraw to Pingyang on the Fen River in northern Hedong.

In 191 Yufuluo joined the Chinese leader Zhang Yang in an association with Yuan Shao, leader of the eastern rebellion against Dong Zhuo, but soon afterwards he took control of Zhang Yang and led their combined forces to oppose Yuan Shao in Wei commandery. They were driven back south of Ye city, but then defeated the General on the Liao Geng Zhi at his base in Liyang and took over territory

As Zhang Yang regained his independence and returned to Henei soon afterwards, Yufuluo continued to operate in Wei commandery in association with the Black Mountain bandit Sui Gu. Heavily defeated by a raid from Cao Cao in Yan province, Yufuluo moved south into Chenliu to join Yuan Shu. In the following year Cao Cao drove Yuan Shu away to the Huai, and Yufuluo was obliged to return to Hedong.

Yufuluo's career as an unsuccessful soldier of fortune ended with his death in 195, and his claim as Shanyu fell to his younger brother Huchuan. More than a hundred years later, the Xiongnu chieftain Liu Yuanhai 劉元海 [or Liu Yuan], founder of the short-lived state which he named as Han, captured Luoyang from the Chinese Jin 晉 dynasty in 311. Liu Yuan claimed to be a son of Bao 豹, who was a son of Yufuluo. -HHS 89/79:2965, JS 101:2644-45; deC 84: 347-349.

Yugui 榆鬼; Qiang. A member of the Dangdian tribe, in 117 Yugui and four companions were sent by the Chinese commander Ren Shang to assassinate the renegade Chinese leader Du Jigong. For his success Yugui was rewarded with the title Marquis Who Destroys the Qiang 破羌侯. -HHS 87/77:2891.

We may note that the Xiongnu leader Xushen was also named Marquis Who Destroys the Qiang about this time. The award to Yugui seems a little surprising, does he was himself a Qiang, but the Chinese were not always known for their tact.

Yule 疏勒 see sub King Zhong 忠 of Shule 疏勒 [Kashgar].

Yulin 榆林 of Yutian [Khotan]. King of Yutian in the 50s, Yulin was transferred by the regional hegemon King Xian of Suoju to be ruler of neighbouring Ligui, while his younger brother Weishi took his place in their home state. -HHS 88/78:2925.

Yuqiu Bing 余丘炳 was an Imperial Clerk in the Censorate. -FSTY 5f:123.

Yuyan 育延; Xianbi. A chieftain of his people, he led a number of raids against China, but about 210 he came with five thousand horsemen and asked Liang Xi the Inspector of Bing province for opportunity to trade. Believing there would be serious trouble if he refused, Liang Xi agreed, and a market was established outside his headquarters city.

Before the end of the arrangement, the market officers had occasion to arrest one of the non-Chinese people. Others became angry, mounted their horses and surrounded Liang Xi. Though his subordinates were frightened, Liang Xi called up the market officers and confirmed that the prisoner had indeed robbed someone. He sent a messenger to summons Yuyan, abused him for the unlawful and threatening conduct of his men, and had him executed.

Yuyan's followers were so startled that they took no action, and they did not come raiding any more. -SGZ 15:470.

Yuzhiju 於秩屠; Wuhuan. A chieftain of Liaodong loyal to Han, Yuzhiju was a personal enemy of the Xianbi leader Lianxiu. As Lianxiu attacked Chinese positions on the frontier in 117, Yuzhiju joined the commandery troops to pursue and defeat the raiders, and they took 1300 heads. -HHS 90/80:2987; deC 84: 391.

Yuqiuben 於仇賁 see Yuchouben 於仇賁.

Yuqitai/Yuqiuzhi 尉仇台/治 see Weiqitai 尉仇台.

Z

Zai Chao 宰曷. In the time of Emperor Guangwu Zai Chao was a Commandant of Kuaiji, acting as Administrator. He intended to kill a county prison officer for some minor fault, and when the clerical officer Zhongli Yi protested he sentenced him too. The Officer of Merit Peng Xiu dissuaded him with flattery. -HHS 81/71:2674.

Zai Xuan 宰宣; Hongnong. In 150, wishing to gain favour with the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, Zai Xuan sent in a memorial comparing him to the legendary Duke of Zhou 周公, and urged that his wife Sun Shou should be enfeoffed. An edict duly granted Sun Shou an estate and honours comparable to those of an imperial princess. -HHS 34/24:1179.

Zang 臧, the Lady; Zangke. Wife of Li Yi, who died in 173, she was honoured with a stele. -LS 12:16a-17b.

Zang Ba 臧霸 [Xuangao 宣高]; Taishan. Zang Ba was the son of Zang Jie. About 180, when he was aged eighteen, Zang Jie was arrested and sent to the commandery capital to be punished for disobeying the Administrator. Zang Ba gathered retainers to rescue him. They escaped together to Donghai, and Zang Ba became known for his strength and courage.

About 185 Zang Ba fought under the new Inspector Tao Qian against the local Yellow Turbans. He was appointed a Commandant of Cavalry.

Tao Qian's government deteriorated, and in 193 he was attacked by Cao Cao and repeatedly defeated. Zang Ba then established himself at the head of the Mount Tai bandit groups led by Wu Dun, Yin Li, and the brothers Sun Guan and Sun Kang. He set his base at Kaiyang city in the north of Langye, formerly the capital of the commandery or kingdom. It was probably about this time that he acquired the nickname of Nukou 奴寇 "Outlaw Slave."

Zang Ba entered a loose alliance with Lü Bu, who was operating in Xu province further to the west, and in 197 he attacked Xiao Jian the Administrator of Langye, whose headquarters were at Ju city. He defeated him and captured his treasury and supplies. Lü Bu expected him to turn over the booty, but Zang Ba did not do so, and when Lü Bu came in person to make the claim Zang Ba and his associates defended themselves and drove him away. As Lü Bu was attacked by Cao Cao in 198, however, Zang Ba led the chieftains from Mount Tai to his support.

When Lü Bu was captured and killed Zang Ba tried to hide, but Cao Cao captured him. He spoke with him and was impressed, so he took him into his service and sent him to bring over his bandit colleagues. He named Zang Ba Administrator of Langye and awarded equivalent titles to the other leaders, establishing a series of small commanderies in the region about Mount Tai, with Zang Ba holding authority over Qing and Xu provinces.

Then Cao Cao sent Liu Bei with a demand that Zang Ba sent him the heads of Mao Jun and Xu Xi, renegades from Yan province who had supported Lü Bu and had since fled to take refuge with Zang Ba. Zang Ba explained that the reason he had been able to establish his position in the past was because he did not behave in such a way to men who had come to him for shelter. He felt obliged to obey Cao Cao's orders, but he asked him to be magnanimous, as befitted a true national leader. Comparing Zang Ba's code of conduct to that of the heroes of old, Cao Cao indeed pardoned Mao Jun and Xu Xi, and he appointed them as commandery administrators.

Though the east of China was still in turmoil, Zang Ba was able to prevent the region from being unduly unruly and troublesome, and as Cao Cao faced Yuan Shao in 199 and 200, Zang Ba and his men secured his eastern flank along the lower reaches of the Yellow River. In 205, after Cao Cao had attacked and killed Yuan Tan in Bohai, Zang Ba and his associates came for the celebratory assembly. Zang Ba offered to send members of his family as hostages to Cao Cao's headquarters in Ye city, but Cao Cao expressed complete confidence and trust, and refused the offer; it appears that the kinsmen of other leaders took up residence in Ye.

Zang Ba and his associates now restored order in the east, and they were rewarded with enfeoffments: Zang Ba became marquis of a chief village and was named as a general. In the autumn of 206 he joined Yu Jin to destroy Chang Xi in Donghai, and soon afterwards he accompanied Xiahou Yuan in his attack on Yellow Turbans in Ji'nan and Le'an by the mouth of the Yellow River. Once again distinguishing himself, he was given formal appointment as Inspector of Xu province.

In 209 Zang Ba led a contingent to join Cao Cao's army as he advanced across the Huai to attack Sun Quan north of the Yangzi. Zang Ba was a leader in the capture of Juchao in Lujiang, and was then sent with Zhang Liao against the local leaders Chen Lan and Mei Cheng. These two men had a form of alliance with Sun Quan, and Zhang Liao was concerned he might send them support. Zang Ba, therefore, was sent to oppose Sun Quan's officer Han Dang in Huan city, to ensure no reinforcements could be sent from the south. He was driven back by Han Dang and forced to take refuge in She city, north of Juchao.

Sun Quan did send several thousand men on ships to assist Chen Lan and Mei Cheng. He put covering troops to observe Zang Ba, but Zang Ba left his defences, made a forced march by night, and launched a dawn attack on the main relief force. The surprise was so complete that many of the enemy were unable to regain their ships and were drowned in rivers, lakes or marshland. So Chen Lan and Mei Cheng were isolated, and they were destroyed by Zhang Liao.

In 216 and 217, Zang Ba again took part in an offensive against Sun Quan, and he joined Zhang Liao in the advance guard. They met heavy rain and flooding, were isolated from the main army and under threat from Sun Quan's ships. The troops were anxious and Zhang Liao wanted to withdraw, but Zang Ba persuaded him to hold on until he received orders from Cao Cao. Zhang Liao then reported Zang Ba's loyal conduct, and Cao Cao appointed Zang Ba as a full general with the Staff of Authority, still holding title as Inspector of Xu province. Cao Cao withdrew soon afterwards, but he left Zhang Liao, Zang Ba and several other commanders in position under the command of Xiaohou Dun, and under this pressure Sun Quan offered a form of submission; the garrisons were withdrawn in 219, after Sun Quan aided the Wei by destroying Guan Yu in the Han valley.

Presumably because of his bandit background, Zang Ba's command included the Qingzhou Troops, remnants of the Yellow Turbans who had surrendered to Cao Cao in the early 190s. When Cao Cao died at Luoyang in 220, these men rioted, beating drums and leaving their barracks. They were brought under control, partly through the work of Jia Kui, but they were not regarded as fully reliable. Cao Pi nonetheless raised Zang Ba's fief to county level, and gave him general command over military affairs in Qing province. As he took the imperial title, he awarded Zang Ba two further advancements in fief, and Zang Ba was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele.

After Sun Quan withdrew his allegiance in 222, Zang Ba joined the attack by Cao Xiu across the Huai, and made a gallant but unsuccessful attempt to establish a bridgehead across the Yangzi. Recalled to court, he did not hold command again, but he was regularly consulted on military affairs.

Cao Rui added to the value of Zang Ba's fief, and when he died about 230 his achievements were further recognised by the award of enfeoffment to four of his sons. -SGZ 18:536-38*, LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:197.

Zang Gong 臧宮 [Junweng 君翁] (d.58); Yingchuan. As a young man Zang Gong held local office as head of his village and then of his district. Later, however, he led his personal followers to join the Troops from the Lower Yangzi, and took title as colonel in this bandit force.

When the Troops joined the Han rebels led by Liu Bosheng, Zang Gong became an officer under Liu Bosheng's brother Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, who admired him and appointed him a lieutenant-general. A taciturn man, Zang Gong was known for his courage, and on several occasions in the campaigns of the north he commanded the strike force which broke the enemy line. As Liu Xiu took the imperial title in 25, he named Zang Gong as a Palace Attendant and Commandant of Cavalry, and in 26 he enfeoffed him as marquis of a county in his home commandery of Yingchuan.

That year Zang Gong accompanied the general Zhai Zun in operations against bandits in Hongnong, and in 27 he commanded a strike force of cavalry against Zuo Fang and Wei Yan, officers of the late Gengshi Emperor in Nanyang. Both men surrendered, and Zang Gong then accompanied Cen Peng to drive the warlord Qin Feng from Nanyang.

In 29, as Cen Peng called the commanderies of the south to accede to the new Han regime, Zang Gong was sent into Jiangxia, where he forced the surrender of several localities and obtained the submission of the Gengshi Administrator Hou Deng. Guangwu sent an envoy to award him insignia as a full general. In 31 Zang Gong's fief was transferred to a county in Runan, and in that year he led his men to pacify Liang and Jiyin on the North China plain.

In 33 Zang Gong was sent to Nan commandery to support the chief general Cen Peng in his attack up the Yangzi against Gongsun Shu. The non-Chinese people in the hill country between the Han and the Yangzi were inclined to support Gongsun Shu, and Zang Gong's troops were too few to bring them under control. As the various counties of the region sent supplies for the army, Zang Gong had the wooden sill at the base of the city gate sawn away, then had every cart driven repeatedly in and out during the night. The tribesmen believed he was receiving great numbers of reinforcements, and their leaders came to offer meat and wine. This was in fact an excuse to spy out the situation, so Zang Gong drew up his men in their best array and welcomed the visitors with a feast of his own. The tribesmen were suitably impressed and kept the peace thereafter.

When the main offensive began in 35 Zang Gong and his men accompanied Cen Peng up the Yangzi. At Jiangzhou, present-day Chongqing, Zang Gong was reinforced with surrendered troops who had changed allegiance, and he accompanied Cen Peng up the Fu River into Guanghan, approaching Gongsun Shu's capital Chengdu from the east. The new recruits became unsettled, and Yan Cen and other generals of Gongsun Shu had defences in depth further upstream, so Cen Peng left Zang Gong to hold that front while he took his own men back to the Yangzi to advance up the Min River directly against Chengdu.

Though the problems with the troops were overcome, Zang Gong's supplies began to run low. He considered withdrawing, but then learnt of a convoy of reinforcements on its way to Cen Peng. Forging the necessary orders, Zang Gong commandeered the men and horses and pressed the advance. As he approached Yan Cen's defences at Guanghan city, he spread flags and banners to emphasise his strength, set his horsemen on the left bank, foot-soldiers on the right and sent the boats upstream. Unaware that the Han forces were so close, Yan Cen was taken completely by surprise and was defeated with thousands of casualties, so many that the river is said to have run red.

As Yan Cen fled west over the watershed to Chengdu, his surviving troops surrendered and Zang Gong seized his weapons and treasure; the emperor rewarded him with six thousand bales of silk. Continuing up the Fu River, Zang Gong received the surrender of Wang Yuan, another of Gongsun Shu's commanders, then turned west to Mianzhu, north of Chengdu, arriving there early in 36. His success isolated Gongsun Shu from the east, and Zang Gong continued to eliminate local resistance, with sorties northeast to destroy Gongsun Hui and west to encircle Chengdu. It is said that he took the seals of almost two thousand of Gongsun Shu's officials.

Cen Peng had been assassinated in the winter of 35, disrupting the advance of the main army. The offensive was eventually resumed under the Grand Marshal Wu Han, who approached Chengdu in the latter part of 36. Zang Gong led his troops to meet him, marching in full array past the gates of Chengdu. Wu Han received him with a banquet, but warned against repeating such a vulnerable manoeuvre; Zang Gong nonetheless returned in the same fashion to his camp north of the city, and the defenders dared not attack him.

It does not appear that Zang Gong and his men were directly involved in the fighting which brought the death of Gongsun Shu and the fall of Chengdu, but at the end of 36 he was made Administrator of Guanghan to establish control after the conquest. In the following year his fief was increased in value.

In 39 Zang Gong was recalled to the capital. His fief was finally transferred to a county in Runan, but he was granted the title Servant at Court, excusing him from the requirement to reside there, and in 42 he was named a Palace Counsellor.

In 43 Zang Gong was recalled from this semi-retirement to deal with a group of religious rebels led by Dan Chen, who had seized the county city of Yuanwu in the east of Henan. His command included troops from the Northern Army, the strategic reserve of the empire, and recruits from the eastern base camp at Liyang on the Yellow River, but the rebels were well entrenched, and initial assaults gained nothing but casualties. On the suggestion of his son Liu Zhuang, future Emperor Ming, Emperor Guangwu sent instructions for Zang Gong to ease the pressure, and the rebels saw a chance to escape from the siege. As they broke from their lines, they were defeated in detail and their leaders were killed.

Returning to the capital, Zang Gong was named Colonel of the City Gates and then General of the Household on the Left.

He was later sent to deal with raiding against Nan commandery by the non-Chinese people of the hills west of Wuling. He drove them back, but the tribesmen were not seriously affected: they raided widely in Wuling and in 48 they destroyed the army of the general Liu Shang.

In 46 the Xiongnu of the northern frontier were seriously affected by drought and their state began to show signs of weakness. As Guangwu asked Zang Gong's advice, he promptly volunteered to lead a cavalry raid to take advantage of their difficulties; the emperor laughed and delayed. In 51, after the establishment of the puppet Southern Xiongnu state, the Northern Shanyu Punu sent messengers to seek a treaty. Again advised by his son Liu Zhuang, Emperor Guangwu refused to accept the contact and sent the envoys back. Zang Gong and his colleague Ma Wu urged a full-scale attack to destroy the northern state, but their ambitious plan was firmly rejected, and the imperial government contented itself with a divided neighbour. For debate on this policy, compare Bn 67: 126-126 and deC 84:247-250, 430.

When Zang Gong died in 58 he was awarded a posthumous title, and when Emperor Ming had portraits of his father's great servants painted on the Cloud Terrace of the Southern Palace at Luoyang, Zang Gong was among those honoured. -HHS 18/8:692-98*; Bn 59:188-196, 222, 67:117-126, Bn 76:26, Bn 79:82.

Zang Hao 臧昊 is a miswriting for Zang Min 臧旻.

Zang Hong 臧洪 [Ziyuan 子源] (d.195); Guangling. Son of Zang Min, Zang Hong was extremely good looking. At the age of fifteen, on account of his father's achievements he was made a Junior Gentleman and attended the Imperial University. Distinguishing himself by his knowledge of the classics, he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt by his commandery and became a county magistrate in Langye.

In 189 Zang Hong left office to return home. The Administrator Zhang Chao invited him to become his Officer of Merit, and Zang Hong persuaded Zhang Chao to join the forces gathered at Chenliu to oppose Dong Zhuo. He became a close friend of Zhang Chao's brother Zhang Miao and of the Inspectors Liu Dai and Kong Zhou. Admired by all the leaders, Zang Hong was chosen to proclaim their oath of alliance.

Soon afterwards Zhang Chao sent him north to consult Liu Yu about action against Gongsun Zan, but as fighting had already broken out he could not get through. Yuan Shao admired him and appointed him his Inspector of Qing province; Zang Hong restored order after the disturbances which had troubled his predecessor Jiao He. Two years later Yuan Shao transferred him to be Administrator of Dong commandery, where his capital at Dongwuyang faced Cao Cao's territory south of the Yellow River.

In 194 Zhang Chao joined his brother Zhang Miao in a plot against Cao Cao, but Cao Cao recovered his position and in the following year he attacked Zhang Chao in Yongqiu city of Chenliu, two hundred kilometres southwest of Dongwuyang. Zang Hong begged to lead troops to aid his former master, but Yuan Shao, unwilling to quarrel with Cao Cao, refused permission. Then Yongqiu fell and Zhang Chao died with his family.

Zang Hong, furious and ashamed, broke with Yuan Shao and defied him in Dongwuyang. Seeking to regain his loyalty, Yuan Shao had Chen Lin, a man of literary talent from Zang Gong's homeland, write to him, but Zang Hong replied with eloquent fervour, criticising Yuan Shao for failing to support his allies and the cause of Han, and concluding with imprecation to Chen Lin: "Seek advantage where you will. You say I shall die and my name will be lost; yet I laugh at you, living in ignominy."

As the besiegers starved the city, Zang Hong's followers remained loyal, and it is said that he killed his favourite concubine to provide meat for his officers. Despite such fierce defence, the place was taken and Zang Hong was captured. He still refused allegiance, with great reluctance Yuan Shao killed him, and he also killed Zang Hong's country-man Chen Rong when he criticised the deed.

Zang Hong and Chen Rong were celebrated for their loyalty, while Yuan Shao's reputation suffered considerably. -HHS 58/48:1884-92*, SGZ 7:231-36*, XC 3:10a; deC 96:178-182.

Zang Jie 臧戒; Taishan. About 180 Zang Jie was prison officer in his county. For some reason of his own, the commandery Administrator ordered a prisoner to be killed, but Zang Jie considered it unlawful and refused to carry out the instruction. Furious, the Administrator had Zang Jie arrested and sent under escort to the commandery capital. Zang Jie's son Ba gathered a group of retainers to waylay the convoy. They set Zang Jie free and escaped with him to Donghai. -SGZ 18: 536-37.

Zang Min 臧旻; Guangling. First appointed as an Assistant Officer in Xu province, Zang Min joined the offices of the Excellencies at Luoyang and then became a county magistrate in Zhongshan. He did well in all posts, and was noted for his eloquent submission asking pardon for the disgraced Diwu Zhong.

In 172 Zang Min was appointed Inspector of Yang province to coordinate operations against the religious leader Xu Chang of Kuaiji. After three years the rebellion was put down, and Zang Min was promoted to be Administrator of Danyang.

Soon afterwards Zang Min was made Emissary to the Xiongnu, and in 177 he took command of one of the three columns of Xiongnu cavalry and local levies in the great attack on the Xianbi led by Xia Yu. The expedition was disastrously defeated, and the unsuccessful generals were brought back in cage-carts, paid ransoms and were reduced to commoner status.

Zang Min was nonetheless noted as an expert on non-Chinese affairs, and he compiled a detailed report on the Western Regions, which the Excellency Yuan Feng compared favourably to the relevant chapter in the Han shu of Ban Gu. He later returned to office as a Consultant and as a colonel in the Northern Army, and was later Administrator in Taiyuan and Zhongshan. - HHS 58/48:1884, SGZ 7:231, XC 3:9b-10a; deC 84: 340.

Zang Song 臧松; Yingchuan. Elder son of Zang Zhen, he succeeded to the family marquise. In 117 he was found guilty of committing incest with his mother; the fief was ended. -HHS 18/8:696.

Zang Xin 臧信; Yingchuan. Son of Zang Gong, in 58 he succeeded to his fief. In 71, at the time of the alleged conspiracy involving Liu Ying the King of Chu, Zang Xin and other marquises were implicated by the confessions of Yan Zhong and Wang Ping. They were liable to execution, but the censorial officer Han Lang persuaded Emperor Ming to doubt the accusations. - HHS 18/8:696, 41/31:1417, HHJ 10:123.

Zang Xuan 臧宣. In the early 200s Zang Xuan was Chancellor of Langye. At the request of Sun Quan's minister Zhang Hong he looked for the remnants of the family of Zhao Yu, who had been killed ten years earlier by Zhai Rong. A five-year-old boy was found, able to perform the ancestral sacrifices. -SGZ Wu 8: 1244.

Zang You 臧由; Yingchuan. A descendant of Zang Gong, general under Guangwu, Zang You was a son of Zang Zhen and younger brother of Zang Song. The family marquise was abolished in 117 because of Zang Song's wrongdoing, but in 120 the regent Dowager Deng restored the fief in favour of Zang You. -HHS 18/8:696.

1026 Zao Chuzhong

Zao Chuzhong 棗處中; Yingchuan. Son of Zao Zhi, about 220 Cao Cao granted him enfeoffment in recognition of the contribution his father had made to the prosperity and success of the state. -SGZ 16:490.

Zao Zhi 棗祗; Yingchuan. The original family surname was Ji 棘, but it was changed by one of Zao Zhi's forebears to avoid some trouble, either with the law or on account of a private vendetta.

Sometime Administrator of Chenliu, in 190 Zao Zhi joined the levy of troops to oppose Dong Zhuo. Yuan Shao invited him to enter his service, but he committed himself to Cao Cao, and in 194 he was magistrate of Dong'a in Dong commandery. When Lü Bu attempted to take over Yan province, Dong'a was one of only three counties which held out for Cao Cao, and Zao Zhi provided essential supplies for Cao Cao's army in the field. He was later named a General of the Household.

Early in 196, with his base at Xu city in Yingchuan, Cao Cao defeated a large group of Yellow Turbans from that commandery and Runan, and he also acquired the tools and agricultural equipment which they carried with them. Zao Zhi proposed these people be placed in agricultural colonies 屯田 in the area of Xu city. He wanted the settlers' contributions to be assessed according to the land that they held. Cao Cao's adviser Hou Sheng argued that payments should be based upon the number of oxen they leased, calculating that a land-based assessment would benefit the government but disadvantage the tenants. Zao Zhi argued that if payments were based upon oxen there would be no increase to the state in good years, while in bad years the government would be obliged to grant exemptions on grounds of hardship.

Cao Cao accepted Zao Zhi's arguments, and appointed him Commandant of the Colonies, subject to the broader supervision of his trusted officer Ren Jun, whom he named Commissioner for Agriculture. The experiment at Xu city was successful, and the program was extended in several further areas, notably on the frontier against Sun Quan along the Huai after 200 [see sub Liu Fu]. Cao Cao was thus able to rely upon regular supplies and stock-piles of grain, and the historians observed that "the prosperity of the army and the state began with Zao Zhi and was accomplished by Ren Jun."

Zao Zhi died a few years later, but about 220 Cao Cao recalled his contribution and granted enfeoffment to his son Chuzhong. -SGZ 16:490, JS 26:783-84; Yang 63:163, Hsü 80:319, deC 96:204-205.

Zang [Zhongying] 臧仲英; Youfufeng. When Zang Zhongying was an Imperial Clerk, he and his family were plagued by a poltergeist. The diviner Xu Jun told them that it was caused by the spirit of a black dog which had possessed their maid-servant Yi Xi. When they sent Yi Xi away, the trouble ended.

Zang Zhongying became Chief Clerk to the Grand Commandant and was later Chancellor of Lu. -FSTY 9:73; Nylan 83:542-543.

Zeng Jing 曾旌 or Zeng Yu 於; Kuaiji. In 132 Zeng Jing and a band of pirates ravaged the southern coast of Hangzhou Bay, destroying three county seats and killing the magistrates. -HHS 6:259 [as Zeng Jing 旌], 101/11:3244 [as Zeng Yu 於].

Zeng Yu 曾於 see Zeng Jing 曾旌.

Zhai Can 祭參 or Zhai Shen (d.97); Yingchuan. Zhai Can was the son of Zhai Tong, who died in 73. In the following year Zhai Can went with Dou Gu on his expedition to the Western Regions. They obtained submission from the kingdoms of Jushi in Turfan, and Zhai Can was recognised for his role in the success. He was appointed Administrator of Liaodong, the same post that his father had held.

In 97 a thousand Xianbi horsemen came to raid the commandery, and though Zhai Can fought them he gained no success. Found guilty of "allowing himself to be defeated" 坐沮敗, he was died in prison. [This raid of 97 is the first recorded occasion that the former allies of Han, who were now taking over the territory of the Xiongnu on the steppe, turned against China.] -HHS 4:183, 20/10:746, 90/80:2986; G/deC 77:5.

Zhai Chao 翟超 (d.169). Administrator of Shanyang in 165, Zhai Chao appointed Zhang Jian as Investigator for the eastern division of the commandery. The powerful eunuch Hou Lan and his mother bullied and oppressed the people of their home country, and when his mother died Hou Lan raised a vast tomb for her. Reports were sent to the capital, but Hou Lan had agents intercept them. Then Zhang Jian destroyed Hou Lan's extravagant constructions and confiscated his property; he reported again, but the message still did not get through.

About the same time, Huang Fu the Chancellor of Donghai arrested and executed the eunuch relative Xu Xuan, and the eunuchs now reported against both him and Zhai Chao. The two men were dismissed and sentenced to convict service. The Grand Commandant Chen Fan wrote an eloquent appeal for Zhai Chao and Huang Fu, and also, more particularly for Cheng Jin and Liu Zhi, whose cases developed at the same time and who were later executed.

Celebrated for their opposition to the eunuchs, Zhai Chao and Zhang Jian were numbered among the popular heroes in the lists compiled by the reformist students of the University. In the Second Faction Incident of 169, however, Zhai Chao was arrested and died in prison. -HHS 67/57:2210 & 2187-88, 66/56:2164; deC 89:71-73, Ch'ü 72:481-482.

Zhai Deng 翟登. Former students of Chang Qia, after his death near Chang'an in 195 Zhai Deng and Zhang Shun took his body home to Shu. -HYGZ 10A:140.

Zhai Feng 祭逢; Yingchuan. Zhai Feng was a son of Zhai Tong, who died in 73 after being blamed for the failure of an expedition against the Northern Xiongnu. In a last testament, Zhai Tong told Zhai Feng to distribute his treasure among the soldiers in camp, as token of his regret for having received rewards from the state without being able to perform his duties. Zhai Feng reported his father's instructions, and everyone admired them. Zhai Feng himself is not heard of again. -HHS 20/10:746.

Zhai Fu 翟輔 or Zhai Pu 輔 [Zizhao 子超]; Guangan. Member of a family with a long tradition of scholarship of the Classic of Poetry, when he was young Zhai Fu served an apprenticeship under Duan Yi, an expert on the Book of Changes and divination by wind. Zhai Fu studied Chunqiu under Zhang Ba, he knew the Laozi, and he was skilled in the trigrams, apocryphal texts, astrology and the calendar.

Having killed a man in vendetta to avenge his uncle, Zhai Fu was threatened with exile to the far south, but escaped to Chang'an. He made a living there as a fortune-teller and physiognomist, and was later a sheep-herder in the northwest.

Following an amnesty, Zhai Fu was able to return to his home country and he held local office in the commandery. He was invited to the capital as a Consultant and then became a Palace Attendant.

Soon afterwards there was a vacancy in the Imperial Secretariat, and an examination was offered to middle-range officials in government affairs, Taoist arts 道術 and astronomy 天文; the man who scored highest would be given the position. Though confident of his own abilities, Zhai Fu was concerned that the former Court Astronomer Sun Yi 孫懿 might be a rival. He warned Sun Yi of a prophecy that a man named Sun Deng 登 would prove to be a wicked official, and would be killed by the eunuchs of the court who resented his ability. The surname was the same, the personal name included half the character of Sun Yi's, and Zhai Fu, weeping, added that Sun Yi's physical appearance matched the omen. Sun Yi was frightened, and withdrew from the examination. Zhai Fu came first and received the appointment.

At this time, 121, Emperor An had taken over the government after the death of the Dowager Deng. He gave posthumous honours and granted fiefs to the family of his grandmother the Honoured Lady Song of Emperor Zhang, and he allowed great power to his nominal uncle Geng Bao and the Yan family of his empress. Zhai Fu presented a long memorial criticising this policy of favouritism, and citing portents to warn against it. No action was taken, but he was now seen as an enemy by the faction of relatives by marriage.

In 124 Zhai Fu was sent out as Administrator of Jiuquan, where he defeated an attack by rebel Qiang from Dunhuang, inflicting heavy losses, and acquired an awesome reputation on the frontier. He was then Intendant of Jingzhao, and when Emperor Shun came to the throne in 125 he returned to the capital as Palace Counsellor and then Court Architect.

In the following year, when Li He was dismissed as an Excellency, Zhai Fu told Emperor Shun how Li He had planned to attack the Yan group and restore him to power; the plot had been forestalled by the coup of the eunuch Sun Cheng and his colleagues, and the court had not heard of it. The emperor offered Li He a marquise.

As Architect, Zhai Fu heavily reduced costs, while he made use of portents to encourage more general reform. One achievement was his successful proposal for the restoration of the University at Luoyang, which had been neglected for many years and was in serious disrepair. The work did not begin until 131, long after Zhai Fu had left office, but although he was not directly responsible, a stele was set up in his honour at the new complex.

As a consequence of his influence, Zhai Fu had powerful enemies. In 126-127 he was involved in an accusation of conspiracy with the eunuch Zhang Fang, Gaotang Zhi and other members of the Secretariat, and several provincial officials. Some of those accused were executed, but Zhai Fu and others were permitted to purchase a pardon.

Zhai Fu returned to his home country, but a further allegation claimed that he had plotted treason with Zhang Kai, and he was ordered to report to the office of the Minister of Justice for investigation. The local scholar Du Zhen presented a petition on his behalf, and though Zhai Fu was flogged he was eventually found innocent. He retired and died at home, leaving two works of commentary on the apocrypha to the Book of Filial Piety. -HHS 48/38:1602-05* [輔], XC 2:12a [輔], HYGZ 10B:145-46 [輔]; Bn 76:69.

Zhai [Jingbo] 翟敬伯; Nanyang. In the time of Emperor Ming Zhai Jingbo was a colleague of Deng Biao in local office. With three other young men, all of whom were talented and ambitious and had the character bo in their styles, they were known locally as "the five elder brothers" 五伯. -DGJH 18:2a.

Zhai Pu 翟輔 see Zhai Fu 翟輔.

Zhai Rong 笮融 (d.195); Danyang. About 191 Zhai Rong brought a few hundred men to join his fellow-countryman Tao Qian, Inspector of Xu province, who appointed him Chancellor of Xiapi and put him in charge of the transport of tax grain for Guangling, Xiapi and Pengcheng. Zhai Rong, however, took the grain for himself and used the proceeds to build a vast temple to the Buddha 浮屠祠 and establish a monastery with five thousand devotees, all of whom were exempted from corvée. He also held lavish public festivals: at the ceremony of Washing the Buddha 浴佛, wine and food and seating mats were set out along the roads and thousands came to enjoy the spectacle and hospitality.

When Cao Cao attacked Tao Qian in 193, Zhai Rong fled south with a following of more than ten thousand. He betrayed and killed the Administrator Zhao Yu of Guangling, then moved across the Yangzi to take service with Liu Yao.

In 195 Zhai Rong's forces were defeated by Sun Ce. Murdering his ally Xue Li, he went west to Yuzhang, killed the Administrator Zhu Hao and sought to take the territory for himself. Liu Yao then came against him, and after an initial set-back he drove Zhai Rong into the hill country, where he was killed by the people there.

Not surprisingly, despite his status as an early follower of the faith in China, Zhai Rong is little celebrated by Buddhists. -HHS 73/63:2638, SGZ Wu 4:1185*; Zürcher 59:27-28 & 327-328; deC 89:175-177, deC 90:162-164.

Zhai Shen 祭參 see Zhai Can 祭參.

Zhai Tong 祭彤 or Zhai Yong 彤 [Zisun 次孫] (d.73); Yingchuan. Zhai Tong was a younger cousin of Zhai Zun. His parents died when he was young, but he became known for his filial piety. As the empire fell into disorder at the end of the reign of Wang Mang, he took refuge in the wilderness; even bandits admired him for his virtue and pitied his youth and his sad condition.

As Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu, established his government, Zhai Tong was appointed a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates on account of his cousin Zhai Zun, and he was regularly in the imperial presence. When Zhai Zun died without children in 33, Guangwu made Zhai Tong a magistrate in Henan so that he would be able to present seasonal offerings at Zhai Zun's tomb. Zhai Tong proved thoroughly competent, and within five years he had eliminated banditry in the county. Graded Number One, he was transferred to a magistracy in Donghai.

Though the major civil war was now over, the empire was by no means peaceful, and in Zhai Tong's county there were criminals carrying out their depredations in broad daylight. Zhai Tong attacked and executed the chiefs and eliminated their associates, and within a few years the territory was calm and peaceful. He received an imperial letter of commendation, with an increase of rank/salary and a donation of silk.

In the early 40s the Xiongnu, Xianbi and Red Mountain group of Wuhuan formed an alliance to raid along the frontier. Concerned about this, the court increased troop levies and ordered that each commandery should raise several thousand men to be stationed in camps on the borders. Recognising his ability, in 41 Emperor Guangwu appointed Zhai Tong Administrator of Liaodong. He immediately began military preparations, including the training of troops and the establishment of watch-posts. A man of uncommon courage and strength, he could draw a bow of three hundred pounds tension, and in later years this mighty engine was preserved at the capital. Each time raiders appeared, Zhai Tong led his men against them, and they drove back many local incursions.

In the autumn of 45, ten thousand Xianbi came to attack Liaodong. Zhai Tong brought a few thousand men to face them and dressed in full armour to break the enemy line. The Xianbi fled, and half of them were drowned as they sought to cross a river. As Zhai Tong maintained the pursuit across the frontier, in their haste to get away the raiders abandoned their arms and scattered naked before him. He took three thousand heads and several thousand horses, and thereafter the Xianbi were afraid to enter the commandery.

On the other hand, noting that the alliance of the Xianbi, Wuhuan and Xiongnu was a constant threat to the empire, Zhai Tong resolved to break it. In 49, therefore, taking advantage of the disruption within the Xiongnu caused by the secession of the Southern Shanyu Bi, he sent messengers with gifts to the Xianbi. The chieftain Pianhe sent a return party with tribute, and Zhai Tong entered negotiations. Aided by further substantial gifts, they established long-term peace and allegiance.

In similar fashion, a tribe of the Xianbi, and the people of Gaogouli [Koguryo], who had formerly raided as far as Youbeiping, Yuyang, Shanggu and Taiyuan, well to the west of You province, came with tribute of sable fur and fine horses. Through Zhai Tong, the emperor responded with gifts twice the value of those he received. The Gaogouli ceased their incursions, while Pianhe and other Xianbi chieftains came to offer their services to the Han.

As earnest of their good faith, Zhai Tong proposed that his new allies attack the Xiongnu and send him the heads of the enemy they killed. Pianhe and his comrades responded with enthusiasm, and their first campaign produced two thousand such grisly trophies. From this time on the Xianbi attacked the Xiongnu year after year, and the Chinese paid a bounty for each head they received.

In 58 Zhai Tong likewise directed Pianhe against the Red Mountain Wuhuan who were troubling Shanggu and Yuyang. The enemy leaders were killed, their followers submitted, and all the borders were peaceful.

The situation in the north had been vastly improved by the secession of the Southern Shanyu Bi and the consequent division of the Xiongnu state, but Zhai Tong's diplomacy, noted for honest and generous dealing, also eased the situation in the east, and the alliance with the Xianbi and Wuhuan and the peace with Gaogouli held good for half a century.

We should note that during this period of peace the two provinces of Qing and Xu, extending south of the frontier You province, were responsible for an annual payment of 270 million cash to the Xianbi. More than two and a half times the subsidy paid to the Southern Xiongnu, this was evidently a local tax and not a responsibility of the central government of the empire. It may have represented commutation for military service from the men of the two provinces who might otherwise have been conscripted to the frontier, and some of the money probably went as payment to the Xianbi for their services against the Xiongnu. In any case, the amount of this Danegeld indicates both the importance of the Xianbi and the real level of "generosity" ascribed to Zhai Tong.

After almost thirty years in the northeast, in 69 Zhai Tong was called to the capital to become Minister Coachman. As he returned, he was still dressed in plain clothing, and Emperor Ming admired his honesty and lack of greed. On the day he was appointed minister, Zhai Tong was awarded a million cash, three fine horses, robes and swords, and everything required for his official residence. The emperor held him in the highest esteem, and on one occasion compared him to Confucius' disciple Zilu 子路, a brave man who had acquired learning [e.g. Legge CC I:115].

In 73 Zhai Tong was given command of the main central column for a punitive expedition against the Northern Xiongnu. He was accompanied by the General on the Liao Wu Tang and the Worthy King of the Left Xin of the Southern Xiongnu, and they were to meet at Zhuoye Mountain with an eastern force under Lai Miao. Xin, however, quarrelled with Zhai Tong, and six hundred kilometres from the frontier he identified the wrong ridge of high ground as Zhuoye Mountain. So Zhai Tong and his men missed the rendezvous, and the enemy were able to avoid them.

On the return of the expedition, Zhai Tong was accused of "delay and lack of zeal" 逗留畏懦 and was sent to prison. Though soon released, he was bitter at the disgrace, and a few days later he vomited blood and died. In a final testament he expressed his regret at having received favour and rewards without being able to perform his duty to the empire, and instructed his son Feng to take his treasure and distribute it among the troops in camp. Zhai Feng reported this wish, and the emperor, the court and all the people sighed with admiration.

The people of Liaodong erected a shrine and held seasonal worship in Zhai Tong's honour, and the Xianbi and Wuhuan likewise remembered him: every embassy to Luoyang would visit Zhai Tong's tomb and pay respects with tears. -HHS 20/10:744-46*, 85/75:2814, 90/80:2985, SGZ 30:833; Bn 79:83, deC 84:260, 291-292; G/deC 77:4.

Zhai Wu 祭午; Yingchuan. Elder brother of Zhai Zun, Zhai Wu became Administrator of Jiuquan. -HHS 20/10:744.

Zhai Yong 祭彤 see Zhai Tong 祭彤.

Zhai Zun 祭遵 [Disun 弟孫] (d.33); Yingchuan. Nothing is known of Zhai Zun's ancestry, but his family was well-to-do. Having studied the classics when he was young, he was frugal in his conduct and he and his wife both dressed in simple clothing. His neighbours considered him a weakling, but when a local official was discourteous Zhai Zun gathered retainers and killed him.

As Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, came to Yingchuan in 23, Zhai Zun went with a number of county officers to see him and Liu Xiu, impressed by his bearing, appointed him to his personal guard. He accompanied Liu Xiu on his commission to the north, and he was put in charge of the army markets. When a boy of Liu Xiu's household acted wrongly, Zhai Zun executed him. Liu Xiu was furious and had him arrested, but the Registrar Chen Fu persuaded him that such attention to the law was valuable to a new regime. Zhai Zun was pardoned and became an inspector in the army, and Liu Xiu warned his officers of his strictness, which applied even to his own close attendants.

Soon afterwards Zhai Zun was made a lieutenant-general. He took part in the campaigns on the North China plain, was enfeoffed for his good work, and in the spring of 26 he received a county marquisate in his home commandery of Yingchuan. Promoted also to be a general, Zhai Zun was sent under the chief general Jing Dan west into Hedong and then south to attack bandits in Hongnong. During one engagement he was badly wounded in the mouth by a cross-bow bolt. His troops began to waver, but he raised his collar to conceal the injury, and though the blood showed through he urged his men on. They fought with increased determination and gained the victory.

Jing Dan then returned to the imperial army north of the Yellow River, while Zhai Zun was left to besiege the local rebel Zhang Man in the hill country south of Luoyang. He cut supplies to Zhang Man's base, and though the rebels made several attempts to break out, while other groups sought to come to their aid, Zhai Zun held the encirclement. After twelve months the defenders were starving, the stronghold was taken by storm, and Zhang Man was captured and executed.

Following that success, early in 27 Zhai Zun defeated and killed Deng Zhong, younger brother of the renegade Deng Feng. He was then sent against Zuo Fang and Wei Yan, officers of the Gengshi Emperor in Nanyang; both men surrendered.

In the summer of 28 Zhai Cun was sent north with Liu Xi against Zhang Feng the Administrator of Zhuo commandery, who had joined the rebel Peng Chong of Yuyang. Within a few weeks Zhang Feng was taken and executed, and the two generals then attacked Peng Chong. Though Peng Chong tried a counter-offensive, a column of his Xiongnu auxiliaries was routed, and as Geng Shu and his father Geng Kuang attacked from Shanggu, Zhai Cun and Liu Xi advanced from the south. In the spring of 29 Peng Chong was killed by his own slaves.

Having established control over Zhuo commandery, in 30 Zhai Zun returned to Luoyang to command the van in the great army which was to advance through the Wei valley and attack Gongsun Shu in present-day Sichuan. The warlord Wei Ao was ordered to support the campaign, but he refused. When the emperor called a council, the majority held that they should not attack Wei Ao at once, but should seek to subvert his officers by offering rewards for changing sides. Zhai Zun argued that it was important to move before Wei Ao was fully prepared and could obtain support from Gongsun Shu. Guangwu agreed, and the Han troops went forward.

Zhai Zun and his vanguard gained initial success, but the main army was dramatically defeated on the Long Slope and forced to retreat. Wei Ao's men attacked towards Chang'an, but Zhai Zun drove back Wei Ao's commander Wang Yuan, and further north Feng Yi defeated the enemy general Xing Xun.

Zhai Zun remained on guard until the spring of 32, when he was again given command of the van for a renewed campaign. He was taken ill and forced to retire, but gave his best troops to his junior colleague Lai Xi, who invaded Tianshui and laid the foundations for success. As Guangwu returned east to deal with rebellion in Yingchuan in the autumn, he visited Zhai Zun and showed him favour and ceremony.

Zhai Zun died a few months later, at the beginning of 33. He was granted honours comparable to those of the great minister Huo Guang 霍光 of Former Han, including a great sacrifice, a ranking escort for his funerary cortège, and a special edict of mourning. He left no sons, and his fief was ended, but his elder brother Wu was a commandery Administrator, and his cousin Zhai Tong gained renewed honour for the family.

Recognising Zhai Zun as one of the great assistants of the founding emperor, Guangwu's son and successor Emperor Ming had his portrait painted on the walls of the Cloud Terrace in the Southern Palace at Luoyang. -HHS 20/10:738-44*, 22/12:789-91, DGHJ 9:4b-5b, XC 1:4a; Bn 76:26, Bn 79:83.

Zhan Qian 棧潛 [Yanhuang 彥皇]; Rencheng. Having served as a county magistrate, and held command at Ye city, about 217 Zhan Qian joined the household of Cao Pi, Heir of Wei. His remonstrances about Cao Pi's love of hunting had some effect, but they were not well received, and he held a low-ranking position at court under the new imperial government. In 222 he presented an eloquent but unsuccessful memorial against the proposal to appoint the Lady Guo, a woman of lowly family, as Empress, and in the time of Cao Rui he protested against the level of corvée services. Transferred to an outlying kingdom, he pleaded ill-health and indeed died soon afterwards. -SGZ 25:718-19*; C/C 99:106-107.

Zhan Qiang 詹彊; Kuaiji. A local leader of Houguan by present-day Fuzhou, Zhan Qiang joined the magistrate Shang Sheng to raise troops in support of Wang Lang, Administrator of Kuaiji, against Sun Ce. After Wang Lang was defeated, Shang Sheng was going to surrender to Sun Ce's officer He Qi, but Zhan Qiang and his associate Zhang Ya killed him and maintained resistance, while Zhan Qiang took the title of Administrator of Kuaiji for himself. Taking advantage of such quarrels among the enemy, He Qi defeated them and forced them to surrender. -SGZ Wu 15:1377-78.

Zhan Shan 詹山 see Zhanshan 詹山.

Zhan Zhong 湛重 [Wendie 文疊]. Although Zhan Zhong served as Minister of Finance, his household was poor and his family ate only simple food. -XC 6:12b.

Zhan Yan 詹晏 (d.219). An officer of Liu Bei stationed by the Yangzi Gorges in Jing province, Zhan Yan was attacked and destroyed by Lu Xun's forces in 219. -SGZ Wu 13:1345.

Zhang, Emperor 章帝 (reg. 75-88) see Liu Da 劉烜.

Zhang 長; Xiongnu, see Chang 長.

Zhang 張, the Lady I; Shu. The Lady was the wife of Gongcheng Hui, who died young. The couple had no children, and the Lady's aunt and brothers wanted the young widow to marry again. The Lady refused, and as they continued to press her she cut her hair and chopped off her ears. She then stayed with the family to care for her aunt and her nephews and nieces. -HYZ 10A:140.

Zhang 張, the Lady II; Nanyang. A younger sister of the Lady He, Empress and then Dowager of Emperor Ling, the Lady married an adopted son of the eunuch Zhang Rang. In 189, under the influence of her half-brother He Jin, the Dowager dismissed the eunuchs from the palace. Zhang Rang pleaded with his daughter-in-law that he might return, the Lady spoke to her mother Xing, and Xing persuaded the Dowager to allow the eunuchs back. -HHS 69/59:2251.

Zhang 張, the Lady III (d.200). Wife of the religious leader Zhang Heng, who died some time in the 180s, the Lady was herself an adept of popular religion. About 190 she acquired influence over Liu Yan the new Governor of Yi province, and as a result Liu Yan appointed her son Zhang Lu as a major in the provincial army and sent him with Zhang Xiu, another religious leader, to overthrow Su Gu the Administrator of Hanzhong. After Su Gu had been overthrown and killed the two chieftains set up their own regime and cut the roads to the north.

Despite the fact that he had thus lost control of Hanzhong, Liu Yan took no action against the "rebels," but kept the Lady Zhang and other members of her family at his court, no doubt as hostages for the good conduct of Zhang Lu, who soon afterwards killed Zhang Xiu and took all power in Hanzhong.

This situation continued for several years, but in 200 Liu Yan's son and successor Liu Zhang evidently attempted to apply pressure on Zhang Lu through his mother and brothers. Zhang Lu refused to submit, and Liu Zhang killed the Lady and her kinsmen. -HHS 75/65:2432-33, SGZ Shu 1:867-68; deC 96:83-84, 297.

Zhang 張, the Lady IV; Yanmen. Mother of Zhang

Liao, her husband was originally of the Nie 聶 surname, but the family name was changed in Zhang Liao's generation on account of a vendetta.

After his succession as King of Wei in 220, Cao Pi paid honour to Zhang Liao for his military achievements, and the favour extended to his family, including his mother. He granted the Lady, who must have been about eighty at this time, a special carriage and escort and an apartment in the imperial palace at Luoyang. -SGZ 17:520.

Zhang 張, the Lady V (d.227); Changshan. Wife of Zhen Yi of Zhongshan, she bore him three sons and five daughters, including the Lady Zhen, consort of Cao Pi, Emperor Wen of Wei. Her grandson Cao Rui, Emperor Ming, attended her funeral in person and granted her posthumous enfeoffment. -SGZ 5:159; C/C 99.96.

Zhang 張, the Lady VI; Wuwei. Daughter of Zhang Xiu, in 199 she was married to Cao Cao's son Jun 均. -SGZ 8:262.

Zhang 張, the Lady VII. A concubine of Cao Pi, she bore him a son, Cao Gong 貢. -SGZ 20:590.

Zhang 張, the Lady VIII (d.237); Pei. Eldest daughter of Zhang Fei by the Lady Xiahou, she became empress to Liu Shan, Later Sovereign of Shu. -SGZ 9:273, SGZ Shu 4:907; C/C 99:118.

Zhang 張, the Lady IX; Pei. Daughter of Zhang Fei by the Lady Xiahou, she succeeded her elder sister as empress to Liu Shan, Later Sovereign of Shu. -SGZ 9:273, SGZ Shu 4:907; C/C 99:118.

Zhang 張 [personal name unknown]; Runan. Though Zhang Pu rose to the office of Grand Commandant, his father stayed at home, coming to the capital only as his son received some further appointment. When he died, the emperor sent messengers with oxen and wine as special offerings for his funeral. -HHS 54/35:1532-33.

Zhang 張 [personal name unknown]; Hongnong. Formerly Chancellor of Qinghe, he was commemorated with a stele. -LS 13:5b.

Zhang 張 [personal name unknown: style ?long ?龍] (d.123). Formerly Assistant Magistrate in Fuchun county in Wu commandery, he was remembered with a stele at his homeland in Yi province. -LS 17:3a-4b.

Zhang 張 [personal name unknown] (d.166); Henei. Son of Zhang Cheng, an expert at divination by the wind, he was advised by his father that there would soon be an amnesty, and now was the time to kill an enemy of the family. When the deed was done, the Director of Retainers Li Ying ordered his arrest, but then the amnesty came and he had to let him go. Angry and suspicious, Li Ying made further investigation and found out about Zhang Cheng's fore-knowledge – which came more likely from friends at court rather than such esoteric means as divination by the wind. Zhang Cheng's son was executed. -HHS 67/57:2187.

Zhang 張 [personal name unknown]. Formerly a county magistrate in Zuopingyi, he died in the early third century. He was commemorated with a stele; only a fragment survives. -Nagata 94:284.

Zhang An 張安 (d.190). A member of the alliance against Dong Zhuo, Zhang An was captured and then boiled alive. In a somewhat macabre couplet, he and Li Min are said to have remarked to one another: "We were not born [生 sheng] on the same day, but we shall be boiled [烹 peng] on the same day." -HHSJJ 72/62:2550 Hui Dong quoting Yingxiang ji.

Zhang Ang 張印 or Zhang Yin 印 (d.25); Jiangxia. Early in the 20s Zhang Ang joined the bandits led by Wang Feng and Wang Kuang. When the group divided under the impact of disease and privation in 22, Zhang Ang, Wang Chang and Cheng Dan led a separate party west into Nan commandery. They were known as the Troops from the Lower Yangzi. The name may reflect only that they came from the region of Jiangxia, downstream from Nan commandery, but it may also indicate the presence of a number of refugees who had come to the lands of the middle Yangzi after disastrous flooding of the Yellow River over more than ten years: many of those driven south from the plain would have migrated gradually south across the Huai and then upstream along the Yangzi south of the Dabie Shan. See Bn 54:152 and sub Wang Kuang and Fan Chong.

As Wang Mang's government sent Zhuang You and Chen Mao with an army against them, Zhang Ang and his fellows were defeated. Regrouping, they resumed their career of plunder, and soon afterwards had regained sufficient strength to defeat the local levies of Jing province. They then moved north into Nanyang and, following negotiations conducted by Wang Chang, joined the Han rebels led by Liu Bosheng. With such reinforcements, Liu Bosheng destroyed the army of Zhen Fu and Liangqiu Ci, followed by that of Zhuang You and Chen Mao, who had also come north into Nanyang.

In the spring of 23, as the rebel army laid siege to Wan city, capital of Nanyang commandery, the leaders of the allied Troops held a caucus meeting and chose Liu Xuan, the Gengshi Emperor, to be the imperial candidate against Wang Mang. Liu Bosheng, hitherto leader of the rebellion, was deliberately passed over, and when he sought to argue the case Zhang Ang was a vociferous and decisive opponent.

Under the new regime, Zhang Ang was named Minister of the Guards and given honorary title as a king. He was then sent east to Huaiyang to confirm control of the region after an initial attack by Zhu Wei. Zhang Ang's subordinate general Yao Wei rebelled, attacked him and drove him to flight, but the situation was rescued by the Commandant Cen Peng.

As the Gengshi Emperor established his court at Chang'an in 24, Zhang Ang was confirmed as King of Huaiyang. Unlike most of his colleagues, his fief was a full commandery, but he was dissatisfied with the allocation of positions and power at the court, and he and Wang Kuang ravaged the commanderies about the capital.

In the summer of 25 the chieftains attacked Liu Xiu's commander Deng Yu in Hedong, but they were heavily defeated and fled back to Chang'an. There Zhang Ang and Liao Zhan sought to persuade the Gengshi Emperor that they should abandon imperial pretensions, plunder the city, then fight their way back to Nanyang. When this project of banditry was rejected they made plans with the gentry leaders Wei Ao and Shentu Jian to rob their master and make their escape regardless. The plot was discovered and the emperor attempted to trap and kill the leaders, but his only victim was Shentu Jian.

Zhang Ang, Liao Zhan and Hu Yin then plundered the markets, attacked the palace and drove the Gengshi emperor out of the city. They were joined by Wang Kuang, but after a month of fighting they were in turn forced out of Chang'an by the loyalists Li Song and Zhao Meng. In the winter, as the Red Eyebrows came to the city, the chieftains went to join them; and when the Gengshi Emperor surrendered they persuaded the victors to have him killed.

At the end of the year, having now fallen out with the newcomers, Zhang Ang, Wang Kuang and Hu Yin surrendered to Guangwu's officer Zong Guang. They were taken under escort to the east, but "died while attempting to escape" before the party reached Luoyang. -HHS 11/1:467-74, 17/7:653; Bn 54:106-136, Bn 59:53, 60, 92-102.

Zhang Ba 張霸; Nan. A local rebel in 20, Zhang Ba was an early leader of the Troops from the Lower Yangzi, and an associate of Wang Kuang. -Dubs 55: 402-403, Bn 54:134.

Zhang Ba 張霸 [Borao 伯饒]; Shu. Known when still very young for his filial piety and courtesy, by the age of seven Zhang Ba had read the Chunqiu, and he then studied the classical corpus under Fan Shu, with particular emphasis on the Gongyang commentary; he was recognised as outstanding among his colleagues.

Considering the text of the Fan Shu's detailed commentary to the classic, the "Study of the Marquis Fan" 樊侯學 to be too cumbersome, Zhang Ba later abbreviated it to 200,000 characters, and this work was known as "Mr Zhang's Study" 張氏學.

Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Zhang Ba was made a senior assistant to the Minister of the Household, responsible for checking all probationary officials. During the 90s he served for ten years as Administrator of Kuaiji; his moral, scholarly government settled endemic local disorders in that frontier territory, and there were stories how storms were raised and calmed again as he went to deal with local pirates. The men he nominated for office, moreover, Gu Feng, Gongsun Song and others, achieved distinguished careers, while the whole territory, inspired by their example, turned to study: "on every road and in every street, the only sound to be heard was the chanting of the classics."

Zhang Ba then held posts at the capital, and became a Palace Attendant. Soon after 100 he was due to be honoured as Quintuply Experienced 五更 at the ceremony of Serving the Aged [Bodde 75:361-364], but he died at that time aged seventy. He was given the honorary title Wenfu 文父 "Father of Literature."

Zhang Ba's testament ordered that his body should not be returned to Shu, but be buried in Henan, near the capital, but his second wife and widow, the Lady Sima/Ma Jingsi, went back to Shu with their children. -HHS 36/26:1241-42*, XC 2:1a, HYGZ 10A:133; Tjan 49:149, Miyakawa 60:33.

Zhang Bao 張寶 (d.184); Julu. A brother of the religious leader Zhang Jue, when the Yellow Turban rebellion broke out in 184 Zhang Bao took title as Lord of Earth General 地公將軍 beside Zhang Jue, who styled himself Lord of Heaven, and their brother Liang, Lord of Man.

Zhang Jue may have held command of the initial rebellion, but he evidently fell ill soon afterwards, and

1034 Zhang Bao

Zhang Liang maintained the defence of Guangzong city in Julu until the tenth month. When Huangfu Song stormed the city, Zhang Liang was killed and Zhang Jue was already dead. Zhang Bao led the remnants of their forces to Xiaquyang in the north of the commandery, but they were pursued by Huangfu Song and finally defeated. Zhang Bao died in the slaughter. -HHS 71/61:2300-02; deC 89:177-186.

Zhang Bao 張苞; Shanyang. An Investigator in the commandery in the late 180s, Zhang Bao was greedy and corrupt and disrupted the government. The magistrate Man Chong, head of his native county, waited until Zhang Bao came to stay, then arrested him, examined him and reported his crimes. -SGZ 26:721.

Zhang Bao 張苞. In 195 Zhang Bao was in the service of Li Jue, who had quarrelled with Guo Si and taken Emperor Xian hostage in Chang'an. Zhang Bao and his colleague Zhang Long changed sides and let Guo Si's men into the camp. The attack was unsuccessful, but an arrow came into the emperor's tent and wounded Li Jue in the ear. -HHS 72/62:2337.

Zhang Bao 張苞; Zhuo. Eldest son of Zhang Fei, Zhang Bao died young. -SGZ Shu 6:944.

Zhang Biao 章表. Zhang Biao was magistrate of a county in Shu commandery when there was an attack by non-Chinese. Zhang Biao was taken by surprise and fled. His Registrar Li Qing offered himself to the enemy in his stead, and Zhang Biao was able to escape. -HYZ 10A:137.

Zhang Biao 張表 [Gongyi 公儀]; Henan. Younger brother of Zhang Feng, Zhang Biao shared his ideals and also lived as a hermit. -XC 7:15b; Vervoorn 90:302.

Zhang Biao 張表 [Yuanyi 元異] (105-168). Having served as an Investigator and later as Registrar of his commandery, Zhang Biao became an Assistant Officer in Ji province. A funerary stele was erected in his honour. -LS 8:4a-5b; Ebreys 80:334.

Zhang Biao 張表; Nanyang. Son of Zhang Feng, when his father died he mourned so deeply that he was unable to see or to hear for more than a year, and even after that he would burst into tears when he sought to play the lute, or saw wine and food. -DGHJ 19:7b.

Zhang Biao 張彪. Director of Retainers at the time of Emperor Huan's coup in 159, Zhang Biao commanded the group of guards which surrounded Liang Ji and forced him to surrender his seals of office. He became Administrator of Runan and was enfeoffed as a marquis.

Zhang Biao was later Administrator of Nanyang. He used his favour at court for private gain, but as Emperor Huan came on tour in 164, the Excellency Yang Bing had Zhang Biao investigated and put a halt to his intrigues. -HHS 34/24:1186, 54/44:1773.

Zhang Biao 張表 [Yuanlao 元老]; Henan. In 183 Zhang Biao was Commandant of the Capital in the kingdom of Dongping. -Nagata 94:236.

Zhang Bin 張稟. In the early 160s Zhang Bin was sent as an Imperial Clerk in command of troops against the rebel Qiang of the northwest. A number of them surrendered, but he killed them nonetheless. When Huangfu Gui came into Liang province in 162 he impeached Zhang Bin; he was dismissed and may have been executed. -HHS 65/55:2133-34.

Zhang Bing 張秉 [Zhongjie 仲節]; Wu. A man of common birth, Zhang Bing was developed and befriended by Gu Shao, son of Gu Yong and a noted judge of character, who showed him particular consideration at the time of his father's funeral. Zhang Bing became an Administrator in the service of Sun Quan. -SGZ Wu 7:1229.

Zhang [Bin'gong] 張賓公. In 77 the tomb-site of Zhang Bin'gong, his wife and his family, was commemorated with a stele. -LS 13:9b-10a.

Zhang Bo 張帛, the Lady; see the Lady Huang Bo 黃帛. -HYZ 3:41.

Zhang Bo 張伯; Liang. About 65 Zhang Bo found seven jade bi-rings 璧. He kept one of them and handed the others to the Chancellor Zhongli Yi. Zhongli Yi later had a bowl which had been left by Confucius opened, it contained a message that Zhang Bo had kept one of the rings. He was obliged to give that in also, and the rings were placed in the local Confucian temple. -HHS 41/31:1410.

Zhang Bo 張博; Wei. In 181 the commoner Zhang Bo was one of a party bringing equipment to the office of the Court Provisioner at Luoyang. While he was there, he climbed into the palace and caused a commotion in the harem apartments by his shouts. Arrested and interrogated, he could not explain his conduct. -HHS 107/17:3347-48.

Zhang Bo 張伯 (d.184). A leader of Yellow Turbans in the region of Yingchuan, Zhang Bo was defeated and killed by a troop of Huangfu Song's army led by Fu Xie. -HHS 58/48:1875.

Zhang [Boda] 張伯大; Nanyang. Having travelled to Henan and established a private academy close to Luoyang, Zhang Boda acquired a notable reputation. He later became a Consultant and was then Administrator of Yizhou. -FSTY 3:24: Ying Shao criticises Zhang Boda and his colleague Deng Zijing for proselytising personal opinions in the neighbourhood of the imperial capital.

Zhang [Bojie] 張伯階/階; Chenliu or Chen. The wife of Zhang Bojie's brother Zhongjie mistook him for her husband twice in a single day. -FSTY 3f:106.

Zhang Bolu 張伯路; Bohai. A pirate, with a troop of three thousand men he plundered the coast of the Gulf of Zhili from the Shandong peninsula to present-day Manchuria. In a crimson cap and robes of red silk, Zhang Bolu took title as a general and put to death all the imperial officials he could capture.

In 109 the Imperial Clerk Pang Xiong was sent to deal with him, with authority over all local troops of Qing, Ji and You provinces. Zhang Bolu surrendered.

In 110, however, Zhang Bolu rebelled again, this time in alliance with the bandit leaders Liu Wenhe and Zhou Wenguang, who called themselves "messengers" 使者. Capturing several cities in Pingyuan, they killed officials, burnt government offices and freed prisoners. As his followers increased in number, local leaders rose in support and paid him homage, and Zhang Bolu awarded himself an even more splendid cap and an official seal and ribbon.

The court now sent the Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk Wang Zong, head of the Censorate, and he took general command of the provincial and commandery troops, for a combined force of several tens of thousands. They defeated the enemy in a series of engagements, killed the old and weak, drove the remainder to flight, and captured great quantities of their goods and treasure.

Imperial orders arrived for a local amnesty, but it was only partially carried out, and when the bandits attempted to surrender in Donglai on the tip of the Shandong peninsula, they found hostile troops waiting for them. They escaped to islands off the coast.

Next year, short of food, Zhang Bolu and his followers returned to raid Donglai, but they were defeated by local forces under Fa Xiong the Inspector of Qing province. Fleeing once more across the sea to Liaodong, the last remnants of the group were killed and pacified by the local leader Li Jiu. -HHS 5:213-14, 38/28:1277.

Zhang [Boying] 張伯英 see Zhang Zhi 張芝.

Zhang Bu 張步 [Zibing 文公] (d.32); Langye. At the time of the Han loyalist rebellion against Wang Mang in 22, Zhang Bu and his brothers raised troops to seize their own and neighbouring counties, and Zhang Bu took title as a general. As the Gengshi Emperor set up government at Luoyang in 23 he named Zhang Bu as Chief General Who Supports Han 輔漢大將軍 and gave military and civil titles to his brothers Hong, Lan and Shou. When the central government sent Wang Hong as Administrator of Langye, however, Zhang Bu refused to accept him.

The Zhang now extended their power north across present-day Shandong, from Langye through Qi and Taishan to Donglai and Beihai, and in 24 Liu Yong, appointed King of Liang by the Gengshi regime, sought their association. He confirmed their titles and granted Zhang Bu enfeoffment as a marquis, with authority over Qing and Xu provinces: in practice Zhang Bu held independent control of twelve commanderies, and he had the support of the local gentry in Taishan and probably in much of the rest of his territory.

Following the defeat of Liu Yong at the end of 26, Guangwu's agent Fu Long persuaded Zhang Bu to pay allegiance to Luoyang. He was, however, named only as Administrator of the distant commandery of Donglai, and had no reason to feel secure in the longer term. In 27, moreover, Liu Yong regained some ground and offered Zhang Bu title as King of Qi. Zhang Bu agreed and killed Fu Long, but later that year Liu Yong was finally destroyed.

In 28 Guangwu turned to deal with Zhang Pu and the other warlords of the east. In the first year Taishan fell, and Zhang Bu was heavily defeated by Guangwu's Administrator Chen Jun. In 29 Guangwu's general Geng Yan took overall command, crossed the Yellow River in Pingyuan, eliminated Zhang Bu's flanking posts in Ji'nan, and drove back his advance defences in Qi. With his brothers Lan, Hong and Shou, and supported by auxiliaries from the Youlai and Datong bandits, Zhang Bu led his main army in a counter-attack. After a two-day battle, his troops were defeated and scattered, and Geng Yan moved against his headquarters at Ju city.

Zhang Bu fled east into Beihai, where he was joined by Su Mao, but imperial envoys urged each to kill the other. Zhang Bu struck first and came with his brothers to surrender. He was rewarded with title as a marquis, and the whole family was brought to Luoyang.

In 32, however, taking advantage of troubles in Yingchuan and Guangwu's absence in the west against Dou Rong, Zhang Bu and his brothers Hong and Lan fled the capital. They hoped to re-establish a position in their former territory, but they were intercepted by Chen Jun, now Administrator of Langye, and the whole party was executed. -HHS 12/2:498-500, 19/9:709-12; Bn 59:58-59, 135-149.

Zhang Can 張參 or Zhang Shen; Zhao. A leader of local gentry, in 23 he joined Liu Lin and Li Yu in support of the claim of Wang Lang to the imperial title, and as Wang Lang took the throne at Handan in the winter of that year Zhang Can was named a chief general. In the summer, however, Wang Lang was destroyed and Zhang Can is not heard of again. -HHS 12/2:491-92.

Zhang Can 張參 or Zhang Shen; Chen. When Cao Pi came to the throne in 220 he appointed Zhang Can, son of Zhang Fan, to his court. -SGZ 11:338.

Zhang Chang 張昌; Guanghan. In the time of Emperor Shun Zhang Chang, a student at the Imperial University, was murdered by the local bully Lü Tiao. He was avenged by his friends Ning Shu and Wang Yan. -HYGZ 10B:150, 10C:175.

Zhang Chang 張敞. In 162 Zhang Chang was an officer under the general Feng Gun on his campaign against rebels in the south. After the army returned, Zhang Chang accused Feng Gun of having taken two female slaves with him in military garb, and of having a stele set up by the Yangzi with an inscription boasting of his achievements. The Director of the Imperial Secretariat Huang Jun, however, found that the offences were not specified by the codes and there was no call for a formal enquiry. -HHS 38/28:1281. [It is possible this is the same person as in the entry below.]

Zhang Chang 張敞; Nanyang. A younger brother of the future Grand Commandant Zhang Wen, Zhang Chang became commandery Officer of Merit. In 165 the newly-appointed Administrator Wang Chang was angry that his predecessors had acted subserviently to the great families and imperial kinsmen, and he began to govern with the utmost firmness. Zhang Chang protested that this was a region of distinguished men, and it was appropriate to apply a generous and courteous regime. Wang Chang accepted his advice and achieved great influence and respect.

In 168 Zhang Chang was a clerk in the offices of the General-in-Chief Dou Wu. When Dou Wu was destroyed, the victorious eunuchs instigated a tight search for his infant grandson Dou Fu. Zhang Chang and his colleague Hu Teng spread a false report of the child's death, then took him to refuge in the south. -HHS 56/66:1823, 69/59:2244-45; deC 89:63, 102.

The Kyoto index lists the commandery officer in 165 separately to the clerk in 168, but there seems no strong reason to regard them as different people.

Zhang Chang 張昶 [Wenshu 文舒]; Dunhuang> Hongnong: see sub Zhang Huan. Son of Zhang Huan, like his brother Zhi he was well-known for calligraphy in the informal cao shu 草書 "Grass Style", and he was regarded as superior to all Zhang Zhi's students. -HHS 65/55:2144, SGZ 1:54, JS 36:1065.

Zhang Chang 張敞. About 210, after the north-eastern warlord Gongsun Kang defeated Gaogouli and took some of its territory [see sub Yiyimo], he sent his officers Zhang Chang and Gongsun Mo down the coast of Korea to restore Chinese control of the region of Lelang. They gathered sufficient support among remnant settlers to defeat the local non-Chinese and establish the new commandery of Daifang, based at the estuary of the Han River near present-day Seoul. -SGZ 30:851; Gardiner 72A:89-90.

Zhang [Changzhong] 張長仲 (d.77). Son of Zhang Bin'gong and brother of Zhang Weibo, he died at the same time as his younger son Shuyuan. His elder son Yuanyi placed their bodies in the family tomb. -LS 13: 9b-10a.

Zhang Chao 張超 [Bozai 伯載]; Nanyang. An officer of the Imperial Secretariat, in 156 Zhang Chao was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhang Chao 張超 [Zibing 子並]; Hejian. Claiming descent from the great minister Zhang Liang at the beginning of Former Han, Zhang Chao was a man of great literary ability and was skilled in the informal cao shu 草書 "Grass Style" of calligraphy. His collected works amounted to nineteen pian of rhapsodies, hymns, inscriptions, proclamations and letters.

In 184 Zhang Chao was a senior major under the general Zhu Jun in operations against the Yellow Turbans of Nanyang. -HHS 80/70B:2652*, 71/61:2309, JS 36:1065.

Zhang Chao 張超 (d.195); Dongping. Administrator of Guangling in 190, Zhang Chao joined the eastern allies against Dong Zhuo.

In 194 Zhang Zhao joined his elder brother Zhang Miao in alliance with Lü Bu against Cao Cao in Yan province. Their campaign was unsuccessful, and in 195 Zhang Chao was besieged at Yongqiu in Chenliu. As Cao Cao captured the city Zhang Chao committed suicide and all his family was killed. -HHS 58/48:1885-87, SGZ 7:221-22.

Zhang Chen 張惲; Runan. In 92 Zhang Chen was Chancellor of Zhongshan. When Dou Xian returned from his triumph over the Northern Xiongnu all officials were instructed to send congratulations and gifts, but Zhang Chen and his colleagues Chen Chong and Ying Shun refused. Dou Xian was destroyed by Emperor He soon afterwards, and the three men were rewarded. Zhang Chen became Minister Herald. -HHS 46/36:1554.

HHS 42/32:1449 tells how in 72 the unnamed Chancellor of Zhongshan reported King Liu Yan for the murder of his concubine, the Lady Han. In JJ at 1547 Hui Dong identifies Zhang Chen as this officer. It is unlikely, however, that Zhang Chen held the same office for twenty years.

Zhang Chen 張惲; Anding. In 155 Zhang Zhen was Registrar to Zhang Huan, Commandant of the Dependent State of Anding. When leaders of the Qiang came with presents, Zhang Huan ordered Zhang Chen to prepare a reception for them. -XHS 4:19a.

Zhang Cheng 張成 (d.27). An officer of the warlord Qin Feng, in the summer of 27 his army, though reinforced by Yan Cen, was destroyed by Guangwu's general Zhu You. Zhang Cheng was captured and killed. -HHS 22/12:770.

Zhang Cheng 張成; Shanyang. Father of Zhang Jian, about the middle of the second century he was Administrator of Jiangxia. -HHS 67/57:2210.

Zhang Cheng 張成 (d.166); Henei. Expert on divination by the wind, Zhang Cheng was a favourite of the palace eunuchs and his techniques interested Emperor Huan. Early in 165 he discovered that there would soon be an amnesty, so he told his son to kill an enemy of the family. The young man was arrested, but was released under the amnesty.

In 166 Li Ying as Director of Retainers revisited the case and learned of Zhang Cheng's foreknowledge, which came more likely from friends at court rather than by reading of the winds. Li Ying had Zhang Cheng's son executed, and Zhang Cheng probably shared his fate.

Following this, the palace eunuchs arranged for Zhang Cheng's disciple Lao Xiu to accuse Li Ying and his colleague reformists of protecting unruly students of the University and seeking support throughout the empire for their own interests. Emperor Huan, furious, he had Li Ying and his associates dismissed and imprisoned. This was the beginning of the First Faction Incident. -HHS 67/57:2187.

Zhang Cheng 張承 [Gongxian 公先] (d.215); Henei. Son of the former Grand Commandant Zhang Yan, Zhang Cheng was a younger brother of the hermit scholar Zhang Fan. Having served as a Consultant at Luoyang, in he became a Commandant at Yique, south of Luoyang and one of the eight passes which guarded the capital. When Dong Zhuo seized power, Zhang Cheng wanted to join the loyal rebellion against him, but was dissuaded by his brother Zhang Zhao. He left his post and returned to his home country.

During the 190s Zhang Cheng and Zhang Fan moved south to avoid the civil war, and in 196 Zhang Fan was invited to the court of the warlord Yuan Shu in Jiujiang. He would not go, but sent Zhang Cheng instead. Yuan Shu discussed his intention to claim the imperial throne, but Zhang Cheng warned him that virtue and agreement to the will of the people were more important than rank and ambition. Yuan Shu was not pleased, and Zhang Cheng left.

In the early 200s Cao Cao invited Zhang Fan, but he again sent Zhang Cheng in his place, and Zhang Cheng became a Counsellor Remonstrant and a senior member of Cao Cao's personal staff. In 212 he was among those who urged him to accept the Nine Distinctions, and in the following year he was one of the petitioners who urged Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei.

Zhang Cheng served with success as Administrator of Zhao, but died at Chang'an as he accompanied Cao Cao on his campaign to the west in 215. -SGZ 11:337-38, HHS 75/65:2439; deC 96:192.

Zhang Cheng 張晟 alias White Rider 白騎 (d.205); Henei. A brigand who came to prominence after the Yellow Turban disturbances of 184, Zhang Cheng acquired his sobriquet because he always rode a white horse. By 205 he was operating in Hongnong, south of the Yellow River, and claimed ten thousand men under arms. He had contacts with Liu Biao in Jing province and also within his home commandery of Hedong, where Gao Gan of the defeated Yuan party was still active.

1038 Zhang Cheng

Cao Cao appointed Du Ji as his Administrator of Henei and, with aid from the western warlord Ma Teng, Du Ji defeated Gao Gan and drove Zhang Cheng out of the commandery. Soon afterwards Cao Cao arranged for Ma Teng to attack Zhang Cheng directly; he was defeated and killed. -HHS 71/61:2310-11, SGZ 15:472, 16:494, 18:545; deC 89:340-343.

Zhang Cheng 張承 [Zhongsi 仲嗣] (178-244); Pengcheng. Son of Zhang Zhao, minister of Sun Quan, Zhang Cheng was known as a scholar and was a friend of Bu Zhi, Zhuge Jin and Yan Jun. In 209 he became a Commandant in Changsha, where he attacked the hills people and gathered fifteen thousand good soldiers. He then commanded the fortress garrison at Ruxu on the Yangzi, and later became a general and was enfeoffed. -SGZ Wu 7:1224.

Zhang Cheng 張盛 see Zhang Sheng 張盛.

Zhang Chi 張赤; Runan. About 208 Zhang Chi was chieftain of some five thousand families in the hills of the Dabie Shan. Described as a bandit, he was destroyed by Li Tong. -SGZ 18:535.

Zhang Chong 張充; Runan. A scholar of the Classic of History, Zhang Chong was a classmate of the young Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, at Chang'an during the time of Wang Mang. When Liu Xiu took the throne he looked for him, but Zhang Tong was already dead. -HHS 45/35:1528. [Another man of the same name was executed for his part in an attempted rising against Wang Mang in 9 AD: Dubs 55:253, QHX:678.]

Zhang Chong 張充 [Bochun 伯春]; Shu. About 65 Zhang Chong became Headquarters Officer of Yi province. The Inspector showed lack of respect for his officers by the informal manner in which he received them, but Zhang Chong refused to attend him, and he changed his ways. Zhang Chong also criticised his superior's reliance upon powerful local families and his appointing their representatives to office. -HYGZ 10A:136.

Zhang Chong 張种. Minister Herald in 141, Zhang Chong attended a banquet where the General-in-Chief Liang Shang and his companions got drunk and sang maudlin songs. When he told Liang Shang's staff officer Zhou Ju, who had not been at the function, Zhou Ju sighed at the ill omen. A few months later, Liang Shang was dead. -HHS 61/51:2028.

Zhang Chong 張寵; Henan. Administrator of Jiyin in 175, Zhang Chong led a group of local gentlemen to set up a stele at the temple of the sage Emperor Yao 堯. -LS 1:5a-7b.

Zhang Chong 張种. After the assassination of Dong Zhuo in 192 Wang Yun, head of the new government, sent Zhang Chong as an envoy to make peace with the rebels in the east of the empire. -HHS 9:372.

Zhang Chu 章初; Lecheng/Bohai. A commoner, Zhang Chu married Ai Zhi, who was formerly a woman of the imperial palace. Liu Dang the King of Lecheng had her come to his residence and had intercourse with her. As Zhang Chu intended to make an official complaint, Liu Dang became frightened and bribed Ai Zhi's younger sister Jiao to kill him. -HHS 50/40:1672.

Zhang Chun 張純 [Boren 伯仁] (d.56); Jingzhao. Zhang Chun's family had held high rank since the time that his great-great-grandfather Tang 湯 and Tang's son Anshi 安世: both became Excellencies, Zhang Anshi was enfeoffed and Zhang Chun's father Fang 放 was a close favourite of Emperor Cheng. On this earlier history of the family, see QHX sub voce.

Zhang Chun inherited the family fief while he was still young, served as a Palace Attendant to Emperors Ai and Ping, and became a minister under Wang Mang. Most Han marquisates were abolished by the new Xin dynasty, but Zhang Chun was permitted to retain his, though it was reduced from a county fief to a district. After Emperor Guangwu took the imperial title, Zhang Chun came to join him, and the value of his accession was sufficiently great that he was again restored to his fief.

As Palace Counsellor in 29, Zhang Chun was sent with a strike force of cavalry from Yingchuan to take control in Xu, Yang and Jing provinces, with authority over all military units in the region, and he later brought troops to establish military colonies in Nanyang. He then returned to Luoyang as a General of the Household, and in that office he had frequent contact with the emperor. About 35 it was proposed by senior ministers that enfeoffments should be withdrawn from all but members of the imperial house. Noting that Zhang Chun had served him as a guard for over ten years, Guangwu exempted him from the ban; he did, however, transfer the fief to another, half its value.

Recognised as an authority on the customs and traditions of Former Han, Zhang Chun was regularly consulted on matters of ceremonial, including state sacrifices, capping, marriage and funerary rites; there were occasions that Guangwu received him in audience as often as four times in a day. At the beginning of 43 Zhang Chun joined the minister Zhu Fu in urging a court conference to consider procedures for imperial ancestral worship. They argued that the emperor should carry out sacrifices to his predecessors of Former Han, but it was not proper for him to maintain ceremonies for his own, non-imperial, blood lineage.

The Excellencies Dai She and Dou Rong presented a variation of this argument, and this was accepted: the emperor in person should sacrifice to the Former Han rulers Yuan and Xuan; senior ministers should make offerings to emperors Cheng, Ai and Ping; ceremonies for Guangwu's own direct ancestors were to be carried out by local officials.

In the following year Zhang Chun took over from Zhu Fu as Minister Coachman, and in 47 he became Excellency of Works. He followed the model of Cao Shen/Can 曹參 of Former Han, making no major policy changes [無為 wuwei], but paid particular attention to recruiting respected Confucian scholars of high quality as clerks in his office, a gateway to the commissioned civil service. In 48, moreover, he was responsible for the completion and imperial opening of the Yang Canal, which ran parallel to the last, unnavigable, reaches of the Luo and brought supplies upstream from the Yellow River.

In 50 Zhang Chun was invited to comment on the timing of the Di 禘 and Xia 禘 sacrifices to the imperial ancestors and ancient predecessors, and his proposal for three- and five-year frequencies was approved [Bn 79:170]. About the same time, since peace had lately been achieved with the Southern Xiongnu and the Wuhuan, Zhang Chun urged the establishment of a Bright Hall and a Hall of the Circular Moat. His proposal may have been anticipated by the Academician, later Minister of Ceremonies, Huan Rong, but the project was in any case endorsed by a court conference. Work began in 56 and the buildings were inaugurated by Emperor Ming in 59.

In 54, basing his argument on the emperor's achievement in restoring the dynasty and its good government, and accompanied by reference to the classics and apocrypha, Zhang Chun urged Guangwu to carry out the Feng and Shan ceremonies. He was one of several officials who put forward this proposal, which sought to take advantage of a planned imperial progress to the east. The emperor at first rejected the idea, on the ground that bad omens continued, so the ceremony was an unjustified extravagance. When he was eventually persuaded, Zhang Chun was among those who gave advice on procedure, and he played a leading role in the occasion, held in the spring of 56, and in the composition of the commemorative stele.

Within a month, perhaps exhausted by the strains of the journey, the climb of Mount Tai and the descent, Zhang Chun died. He was granted a posthumous honorific title, but as he lay on his deathbed, believing that he had failed to carry out the full responsibilities of his office as Excellency, he instructed his household assistant Xi that his fief should be ended. -HHS 35/25: 1193-97*, SJZ 16:15b; Bn 76:16, Bn 79:169-173.

Zhang Chun 張純 (d.189); Yuyang. A former Chancellor of Zhongshan, in 187 Zhang Chun was passed over for the command of a troop of Wuhuan to serve against the rebels in Liang province. He was resentful at this and in the summer, after a mutiny broke out among the levies, Zhang Chun brought his fellow-countryman Zhang Ju and the Wuhuan chieftain Qiuliju to raise rebellion in the northeast. Joined by Xianbi, they plundered the frontier.

The insurgents were initially very successful, aided by a parallel rebellion and mutiny among the Xiongnu immediately to the west. Zhang Ju took the imperial title in Liaoxi, and Zhang Chun styled himself King and General. With forces numbered at a hundred thousand, they killed the Protector Gongqi Chou and the Administrators of Youbeiping and Liaodong, then sent raiding parties to the south and messengers to seek support.

In 188 Zhang Chun and Zhang Ju were thoroughly defeated by Gongsun Zan and fled across the frontier. In the following year the new Governor Liu Yu offered a reward for the renegades' heads, and Zhang Chun was killed by one of his own retainers. -HHS 73/63:2353-54, 90/80:2984; deC 84:398-401.

Zhang Chunhua 張春華, the Lady (189-247); Henei. Daughter of Zhang Wang, the Lady married Sima Yi and bore him Sima Shi, Sima Zhao and other children.

In 202, when Sima Yi was first summoned to office under Cao Cao, he tried to avoid the call by pleading that he was ill with rheumatism. As a sudden shower of rain came, Sima Yi forgot that he was supposed to be paralysed and got up to rescue some books which were exposed to the storm. They had only one maid-servant in their household, but she saw him. The Lady Zhang was afraid the woman might tell of the incident and bring disaster on the family. She was still only in her teens, but she killed the servant with her own hand and thereafter did the cooking herself. Sima Yi was very impressed – though we are not told whether it was his wife's readiness to kill or her willingness to do the housework that touched him most deeply.

1040 Zhang Cun

Sima Yi later acquired another concubine and rejected the Lady Zhang, but she refused to eat and her children joined in the hunger strike; Sima Yi apologised.

Almost twenty years after the Lady's death, as her grandson Sima Yan took the imperial title in 265, he awarded her posthumous title as an empress. -JS 31: 948-49.

Zhang Cun 張存 [Churen 處仁] (d.214); Nanyang. About 208 Zhang Cun became an Assistant Officer under Liu Bei in Jing province, and later followed him to the west, where he was named Administrator of Guanghan.

Zhang Cun had never liked Liu Bei's adviser Pang Tong. When Pang Tong was killed in battle in 214, Liu Bei wept for him, but Zhang Cun made his opinion known. Liu Bei was furious and dismissed him. Zhang Cun took ill and died soon afterwards. -SGZ Shu 15:1085.

Zhang Cun 張筭 see Zhang Zun 張遵.

Zhang Da 張達. In 221 Zhang Da was an officer of the guard with Zhang Fei at Langzhong on the Jialing River. Zhang Fei was notorious for his cruelty, and Zhang Da and his colleague Fan Qiang evidently suffered harsh treatment. As Zhang Fei was about to go south to join Liu Bei's expedition down the Yangzi against Sun Quan, Zhang Da and Fan Qiang killed him. Taking his head, they sailed down the river to the junction with the Yangzi, avoided Liu Bei's men, and went with their booty to join Sun Quan. -SGZ Shu 6: 944.

Zhang Dan 張耽. In 140 Zhang Dan was Emissary to the court of the Southern Xiongnu based at Meiji in Xihe. Since the suicide of Xiuli, the position of Shanyu was empty, and rebels led by the Xiongnu chieftains Wusi and Che'niu extended their ravages across all the northern frontier.

In the winter Zhang Dan put together a combined force of militia from You province and Wuhuan auxiliaries, and he defeated the rebels in Yanmen. They killed three thousand, captured quantities of supplies and plunder, and forced the surrender of Che'niu and his followers. Though Wusi and his men escaped, they were defeated by Ma Xu early in 141 and Wusi was later assassinated.

In that year Zhang Dan also defeated Wusi's Wuhuan allies, killing their leaders Ajian and Qiangqu. He freed a number of Chinese whom they had held captive, and again collected quantities of animals and other booty.

As a military commander, Zhang Dan was brave and fierce, but he cared for his men so well that they had no hesitation in following his orders. -HHS 89/79:2962, 90/80:2983.

Zhang Dang 張璠. In the early 120s Zhang Dang was Administrator of Dunhuang. His territory and that of his neighbours suffered constant raiding from the Xiongnu and their allies among the states of central Asia. In 123 he presented three plans to the court for dealing with the Western Regions: send two thousand men to destroy the Xiongnu position near Lake Barkol; establish and support a military colony of five hundred men in Nearer Jushi; or withdraw the people of Shanshan and other allied states within the frontiers of China – this last was obviously a counsel of despair.

Faced with such choices, the court of Emperor An appointed Ban Yong as Chief Clerk for the Western Regions and sent him with five hundred men to establish a military colony. -HHS 88/78:2911.

Zhang Dao 張導 [Jingming 景明]; Henei. Administrator of Julu in 149, Zhang Dao planned and executed a major project of water control on the Zhang River. An altar was set up to commemorate the achievement. -SJZ 10:17a.

Zhang Daoling 張道陵 see Zhang Ling 張陵.

Zhang De 張德 [Boya 伯雅]; Henan. Formerly Administrator of Hongnong, Zhang De had an impressive tomb complex. It was enclosed by a stone wall, had a temple, stele and columns, and an avenue of stone-carved men and animals. There was also an artificial lake, with fountains in the form of toads, which were supplied by the flow of the neighbouring river. -SJZ 22:11b-12a.

Zhang Diao 張韶. The magician Zhang Diao and his colleague Xie Nugu could make themselves invisible and could travel through walls. -HHS 82/72B:2749*;

Ngo 76:140, DeWoskin 83:86-87.

Zhang [Dibo] 張弟伯; Nanyang. In the time of Emperor Ming Zhang Dibo was a colleague of Deng Biao in local office. Together with three other young men, all of whom were talented and ambitious and had the character bo in their styles, they were known locally as "the five elder brothers" 五伯. -DGHJ 18:2a.

Zhang Die 張疊. A county magistrate in Shanyang, Zhang Die was executed for corruption about 120. -HHS 79/69A:2564.

Zhang Du 張篤. Administrator of Jincheng in 126/127, Zhang Du was accused of conspiring with the eunuch Zhang Fang, with Gaotang Zhi and members of the Imperial Secretariat, and several provincial officers. Two men were executed, but Zhang Du and others were allowed to purchase relief. -HHS 101/11:3243 and cf. sub Zhang Fang 張防.

Zhang Duliao 張度遼: i.e. Zhang the General on the Liao: see Zhang Huan and sub the Lady Zhang Huiying.

Zhang Dun 張惇; Dunhuang. Administrator of Hanyang, probably during the reign of Emperor Shun, Zhang Dun became the father of Zhang Huan. -HHS 65/55:2138.

Zhang Dun 張敦. In 126 Zhang Dun was Deputy Director of the Imperial Secretariat. With the Director Gaotang Zhi and other staff, he was accused of involvement in conspiracy with the eunuch Zhang Fang and several provincial officials. Two members of the Secretariat were executed, but Zhang Dun, Gaotang Zhi and others were allowed to purchase relief. -HHS 101/11:3243 and cf. sub Zhang Fang 張防.

Zhang Dun 張敦 [Shufang 叔方]; Wu. A moral man of considerable presence, Zhang Dun was a fine composer of literary works. He served on Sun Quan's staff from about 208, and later became a magistrate in Yuzhang, where he settled the people by generous treatment. He died at the age of thirty-two sui. -SGZ Wu 7:1229.

Zhang Duo 張多. In 199 Zhang Duo was a local gang leader south of the Huai. -SGZ 14:443.

Zhang Fan 張汜. Zhang Fan's friend Yin Xing was a confidant of Emperor Guangwu. Despite his affection for him, Yin Xing believed Zhang Fan to possess only superficial ability, and he would not recommend him for office. -HHS 32/22:1131. [This may be the same person as Zhang Si 汜 the magistrate in Henan.]

Zhang Fan 張蕃; Runan. Son of Zhang Pu, in 93

Zhang Fan was a gentleman cadet when his father was named Grand Commandant. Zhang Pu sought to refuse on grounds of ill health, but Emperor He had his eunuchs apply pressure to Zhang Fan, and Zhang Pu felt compelled to accept the appointment. -HHS 45/35: 1532-34.

Zhang Fan 張汎/汜 [Zijin 子禁] (d.165); Nanyang. A wealthy merchant of Wan city, capital of the commandery, Zhang Fan traded in trinkets and objects of art. Relying on his close connection to the imperial harem and household at Luoyang, he acted arrogantly and unlawfully in the local community.

In 165, at the instigation of his officers Cen Zhi and Zhang Mu, the Administrator Cheng Jin arrested Zhang Fan and his associates. An amnesty was current at the time, but Cheng Jin had Zhang Fan killed, together with two hundred of his kinsmen, clients and retainers. Only after the event did he report the case to the throne.

The eunuch Hou Lan had Zhang Fan's wife send a letter of complaint to the emperor. Cheng Jin was arrested, and after considerable debate at court he died in prison. -HHS 67/57:2212, XC 4:3b-4a, 8b; deC 89: 70.

Zhang Fan 張範 [Gongyi 公儀] (d.212); Henei. Son of the former Grand Commandant Zhang Yan, who had been killed at the instigation of the palace eunuchs, Zhang Fan lived in retirement. During the 190s he moved south into Pengcheng to avoid the civil war, and in 196 he was invited to the court of the warlord Yuan Shu in Jiujiang. He would not go, but sent his younger brother Zhang Cheng instead.

In the early 200s Zhang Fan was invited by Cao Cao, but again sent Zhang Cheng in his place. Soon afterwards his son and his nephew were taken by bandits. Zhang Fan went to plead for them, and was given his own son Zhang Ling. He asked, however, that if only one was to be freed it should be his nephew Jian. Impressed by such generosity, the kidnappers returned both children.

When Cao Cao returned north after the defeat at the Red Cliffs in 208, Zhang Fan did go to him. He was appointed a Consultant and became a member of his staff, but still lived most frugally. He was treated with great respect, and when Cao Cao was on campaign he left Zhang Fan at headquarters as guardian for his sons. -SGZ 11:336-38*, HHS 75/65:2439.

Zhang Fan 張汎; Yanmen. Elder brother of Zhang

1042 Zhang Fang

Liao, when Cao Pi succeeded his father as King of Wei in 220 he enfeoffed Zhang Fan as a marquis in honour of his brother's achievements. -SGZ 17:520.

Zhang Fang 張魴; Yingchuan. Son of Zhang Xing, Zhang Fang maintained his scholarship of the Liangqiu interpretation of the Book of Changes, but does not appear to have achieved any official post in that regard. He held office as Commandant of the Dependent State of Zhangye, on the north-western frontier. -HHS 79/69A:2553.

Zhang Fang 張防 or 昉?: see the entry below. A eunuch Regular Attendant, at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Shun Zhang Fang held great favour and influence, but in 126 the Director of Retainers Yu Xu accused him of extortion and conspiracy. The eunuchs Sun Cheng, Zhang Xian and others, leaders of the coup which had set the emperor on the throne two years earlier, supported Yu Xu's allegations, and Sun Cheng obliged Zhang Fang to descend from his place beside the throne to face the charges in the body of the court. Emperor Shun referred the matter to the Imperial Secretariat, and Jia Lang, an old associate of Zhang Fang, reported in his favour.

When Gao Fan, another eunuch, was persuaded to add his voice to the accusations, Zhang Fang was banished to the frontier, while his associates were variously executed, sentenced to convict service, or dismissed. We may note that though Yu Xu was successful and rose to high position in the Secretariat, he had at one time been imprisoned and tortured, while even after the affair was resolved against Zhang Fang the emperor was angry at Sun Cheng and his fellows and banished them to their fiefs outside the capital.

Another report of a conspiracy involving Zhang Fang appears in the Treatise of Astronomy, HHS 101/11. There it is said that Guo Fan was an associate of Zhang Fang, and that two members of the Secretariat were executed, but there is no mention of Jia Lang. Though Zhang Fang may have been restored to favour [see sub Zhang Fang 張昉 below], it is unlikely it would have happened so swiftly, nor that he would immediately become involved in a second conspiracy, this time with his former enemy Guo Fan. The record in the Treatise is surely confused.

On the other hand, while the biography of Yu Xu in HHS 58/48 refers only to Jia Lang and five other people being punished, the Treatise lists ten men besides Guo Fan and Zhang Fang, including a number of provincial officers. I accept that information, noting that the affair probably began in 126, with repercussions continuing well into 127. See sub Zhai Fu, Gaotang Zhi, Zhang Dun, Yin Jiu, Jiang Shu, Yang Feng, Bao Jiu, Zhang Guo, Zhang Du, Zhang Lang. -HHS 58/48:1870-71, 101/11:3243.

Zhang Fang 張昉. The Treatise of the Five Powers, HHS 106/16:3330, refers to Zhang Fang 張昉 in 128 and in 137 as a eunuch Regular Attendant closely associated with Song E, former wet-nurse of Emperor Shun. This may be a variant writing of Zhang Fang 張防, discussed above.

HHS 58/48:1870-71 and HHS 78/68:2517 tell how Zhang Fang 防 was disgraced and exiled in 126/127, despite support from Song E and the favour of the emperor, who was angry at his accusers, notably the eunuch group led by Sun Cheng. Zhang Fang 防 may later have returned to the capital, but there is no further reference to him under that name.

Zhang Fang 張方 [Gongshi 公始]; Jianwei. Son of Zhang Gang, he became Inspector of Yu province. -HYZ 10B:157, 12:229.

Zhang Fang 張昉 [Shaoyou 少游]; Henan. In 165 Zhang Fang was Assistant to Zhu Jie the Magistrate of Huayin in Hongnong. They were ordered by the Administrator Sun Qiu to complete work on the temple at Mount Hua commenced by Sun Qiu's predecessor Yuan Feng. -LS 2:3a.

Zhang Fang 張方; Changshan. Son of Zhang Yan/Feiyan, he succeeded to his father's fief. -SGZ 8:261.

Zhang Fei 張飛 [Yide 益德] (d.221); Zhuo. Zhang Fei and Guan Yu took Liu Bei as their leader when they were young, and Zhang Fei, some years junior to Guan Yu, treated him as an elder brother. There are anecdotes describing Zhang Fei as a man of literary taste who composed verse in the midst of battle, but he is more generally known as arrogant, impetuous and brutal. While Guan Yu was said to be harsh towards men of the gentry but treated his soldiers well, Zhang Fei was courteous towards his betters but cruel to his rank and file. The two men were nonetheless regarded as the finest fighting men of their time.

In 196 Liu Bei left Zhang Fei in command of his base city, Xiapi, against Lü Bu. He quarrelled with the Chancellor Cao Bao and killed him, there was rioting in the city, and when Lü Bu appeared the gates of the city were opened to him. Liu Bei's position was destroyed, his army scattered, and his family was captured by Lü Bu.

After the destruction of Lü Bu in 198 Liu Bei accompanied Cao Cao to his base at Xu city, and Zhang Fei was appointed a Gentleman of the Household at the Han court under Cao Cao's control. He accompanied Liu Bei on his various escapes and travels to support Yuan Shao and then take refuge with Liu Biao. Zhang Fei and Guan Yu were initially jealous of the intimacy Liu Bei granted to his new counsellor Zhuge Liang, but Liu Bei insisted that he needed Zhuge Liang's advice and assistance and his two old companions gave way.

When Cao Cao came into Jing province in 208 Liu Bei fled south with a large following, but he was caught at the Chang Slope in Nan commandery and heavily defeated. As he abandoned his family and fled, he sent Zhang Fei with a few horsemen to hold off the enemy advance. Armed with a long lance, Zhang Fei broke down a bridge over the river and defied Cao Cao's men; none dared to approach.

As Liu Bei established himself south of the Yangzi after the victory at the Red Cliffs, he named Zhang Fei Administrator of Yidu, a new commandery based on the county of that name by the mouth of the Gorges, with title as a general and enfeoffment as a village marquis. When Sun Quan proposed to attack Liu Zhang in Yi province, Zhang Fei commanded one of the troops that blocked the way along the Yangzi.

Zhang Fei was later named Administrator of Nan commandery. As Liu Bei went to Yi province in 211, his wife the Lady Sun III, sister of Sun Quan, attempted to return to the east and take Liu Bei's young son Liu Shan with her. Zhang Fei and Zhao Yun intercepted her and brought the boy back.

When Liu Bei turned against Liu Zhang in 212, Zhang Fei and Zhuge Liang came through the Gorges and took over the south of Yi province. After Cao Cao defeated Zhang Lu in 215 and occupied Hanzhong, Liu Bei named Zhang Fei Administrator of Baxi commandery to defend the vulnerable frontier from further incursion. After a two months campaign Zhang Fei brought his men by side-roads to catch Cao Cao's officer Zhang He in a surprise attack. Zhang He withdrew to the Han valley, while Zhang Fei established himself at Langzhong on the upper Jialing River.

In 217 Zhang Fei was involved in a preliminary attack on Hanzhong through the hill country of Wudu, but was compelled to retreat when his associate Wu Lan was defeated by Cao Hong. In 219, Liu Bei conquered the territory, and as he proclaimed himself King of Hanzhong in the autumn Zhang Fei was one of the officials listed in the formal memorial to the emperor. He was named General of the Right, and when Liu Bei took the imperial title in 221 he appointed him General of Chariots and Cavalry and Director of Retainers, and raised his fief to a district marquisate.

Later that year, while Liu Bei prepared the great offensive against Sun Quan to recapture Jing province and avenge the betrayal of Guan Yu, he sent orders for Zhang Fei to come south and join him at Jiangzhou. Just as Zhang Fei was about to leave, two of his subordinate commanders, Zhang Da and Fan Qiang, who had evidently suffered ill treatment at his hands, cut off his head and went to join Sun Quan.

The officer in charge at Langzhong sent a message to Liu Bei with the news, but as soon as he heard the courier had arrived Liu Bei knew Zhang Fei was dead. He granted him posthumous title as a full marquis. - SGZ Shu 6:943-44*.

Two of Zhang Fei's daughters became consorts of Liu Bei's son Liu Shan and empresses of Shu-Han: when the elder died, the younger succeeded her [C/C 99:49].

Zhang Fei 張飛, wife of: see the Lady Xiahou 夏侯 II.

Zhang Feiyan 張飛燕 [Flying Swallow Zhang] see Zhang Yan 張燕.

Zhang Fen 張奮 [Zhitong 稚通] (d.102); Jingzhao. When Zhang Chun died in 56, his elder son Gen was sickly, and Emperor Guangwu proposed to pass the succession of the family marquisate to Gen's younger brother, Zhang Fen.

Zhang Chun, feeling that he had failed to achieve the full responsibilities of his office as Excellency of Works, had left deathbed instructions that the fief should not be maintained, so Zhang Fen sought to refuse the inheritance. The emperor, however, had Zhang Fen imprisoned for his failure to obey an imperial command, so he was obliged to accept the title. In 61, after the accession of Emperor Ming, he left the capital for his estates in Wei commandery.

Fond of learning when he was young, Zhang Fen was a man of high moral quality with a strong sense of honour. He divided his income and revenues with his kinsmen, even to the last of his resources. In 74 the non-Chinese people of Dan'er on Hainan island sent tribute to the imperial capital, and Zhang Fen came to court for the ceremony of congratulations. Noticed and admired by the emperor, he was named a Marquis Attending Sacrifices, an honorary position which permitted him to remain at the capital rather than returning to his fief.

1044 Zhang Fen

Under Emperor Zhang, from 81 Zhang Fen commanded two different corps of the Gentlemen of the Household, was transferred to be a colonel in the Northern Army, and became Court Architect in 83. He was dismissed from that office in 87, but two years later, in the reign of Emperor He, he was appointed Colonel of the City Gates.

After the power of the former regent Dowager Dou and her family was overthrown by Emperor He in 92, Zhang Fen was made Commandant of the Guards at the Changle Palace, the apartments of the Dowager; he was evidently responsible for holding her under house arrest. In the following year he became Minister of Ceremonies, and in 94 he was appointed Excellency of Works, the same office that his father had held.

There was a serious drought that year, and in the autumn Zhang Fen presented a memorial urging a review of those held in jail. Accompanied by the Excellencies, the emperor went to Luoyang Prison, released all those wrongfully held, and ordered the arrest of the Prefect Chen Xin. There followed immediately three days of heavy rain.

Zhang Fen held his position with honour but without notable incident. Forced to resign on account of ill health in 99, he wrote expressing regret that good order was still not achieved, despite the fact that his family had held high position since the time of his great-great-great-grandfather Zhang Tang 湯. In particular, Zhang Fen urged the establishment of an official system of rites and music 禮樂 to consolidate the authority of government; in this he echoed the opinions of Cao Bao and others at that time.

Invited to return to office as Minister of Ceremonies in 101, Zhang Fen renewed arguments for a consolidation of ritual, to be determined by the emperor and senior officials. Though Emperor He is said to have thought this an excellent idea, the objections evidently remained the same as in the time of his father: the process would be controversial, divisive and ultimately fruitless [see sub Cao Bao]. In the winter, Zhang Fen retired once more on grounds of illness, and he died in the following year. -HHS 35/25:

1198-1200*.

Zhang Fen 張奮; Henan. As Cao Cao came into Henan on a sortie from the east against Dong Zhuo in 190, Zhang Fen and the gentry leader Ren Jun persuaded the people to accept him. -SGZ 16:489.

Zhang Fen 張奮; Pengcheng. A nephew of Zhang Zhao, at the age of twelve Zhang Fen designed a war chariot to serve as a siege engine. Though Zhang Zhao disapproved of his precocity, he was recommended for a commission by Bu Zhi and later rose to high military rank and enfeoffment. -SGZ Wu 7:1224*.

Zhang Feng 張豐 (d.28). Administrator of Zhuo commandery for the restored Han dynasty, Zhang Feng was persuaded by a soothsayer that he would become emperor. The man tied a five-coloured bag with a stone inside to Zhang Feng's arm, and told him that the stone contained an imperial seal. Publicising this prophecy and using it to gather support, at the end of 27 Zhang Feng took title as a general and joined Peng Chong of neighbouring Yuyang.

In the summer of 28 an imperial army under Zhai Cun and Liu Xi came against him, and after an initial attack Zhang Feng was seized by his officer Meng Gong and taken to the enemy camp. There he was executed, but not before his talisman had been broken open and shown to be false. -HHS 20/10:739-40.

Zhang Feng 張封. In 75 Zhang Feng was a major under the Wu Colonel Geng Gong in Further Jushi, east of present-day Urumqi. Their small force was attacked by a great army of the Xiongnu, and Geng Gong and his troops defended themselves with utmost courage for a year. Early in 76 the remnant garrison was relieved, though only thirteen men returned alive to Dunhuang: in a campaign during which hundreds of lower ranks perished, the commander and two of his majors, the next senior officers, survived.

The gallant defence was widely admired, but the heroes were not treated with great generosity: Zhang Feng was appointed as a major, the same rank he had held before, in the Camp at Yong in Youfufeng. -HHS 19/9:723.

Zhang Feng 張奉 [Gongxian 公先]; Henan. Towards the end of the second century Zhang Feng and his brother Biao were men of high standards, who lived as hermits with poor food and clothing. The Excellency Yuan Wei admired Zhang Feng and gave him his daughter to wife. She arrived splendidly dressed with an entourage of a hundred maid-servants, but only when she adopted his ideals of asceticism was he prepared to accept her. -XC 7:15b; Vervoornt 90:302.

Zhang Feng 張奉, wife of: see the Lady Yuan 袁 I.

Zhang Feng 張奉; Nanyang. Admiring the reputation held by Mao Yi for filial piety, Zhang Feng went to call upon him. Just as they met, Mao Yi received an imperial letter giving him provisional appointment as a county magistrate. With every sign of pleasure, he went into his private apartments to tell his mother. Zhang Feng was offended and went away.

Later, when Mao Yi's mother died, he left office and refused all further invitations. Zhang Feng found his admiration restored. -HHS 39/29:1294; XC 7:14b.

Zhang Feng 張鳳 (d.139). In 139 Zhang Feng was Administrator of Hongnong. He was implicated in the plot of the eunuch attendant Zhang Kui against the Liang clan, was sent to prison and died there. -HHS 6:268.

Zhang Feng 張鳳. In 162 the frontier commander Huangfu Gui was slandered by palace eunuchs for his alleged bribery of Qiang rebels to surrender, and was sent to prison on the grounds that rebellion in the northwest was still continuing. Though he was only a student at the Imperial University, Zhang Fang joined the Excellencies in leading several hundred people to the gates of the palace in protest on Huangfu Gui's behalf. Soon afterwards there was a general amnesty and Huangfu Gui was released. -HHS 65/55:2135-36.

Zhang Feng 張奉; Changshan. A eunuch, Zhang Feng became a Regular Attendant under Emperor Ling. In 178 his brother Zhang Hao was appointed Grand Commandant. -XHS 1:6b, SGZ 6:179 PC.

Zhang Flying Swallow 張飛燕 see Zhang Yan 張燕.

Zhang Fu 張甫; Jingzhao. Son of Zhang Fen, he inherited the family fief at his father's death in 102. Zhang Fu himself, however, rose in office no higher than the captaincy of a gate on the city wall at Luoyang. -HHS 35/25:1200.

Zhang Fu 張浮 of Guanghan was a celebrated scholar of his day. -HYGZ 10B:144.

Zhang Fu 張富; Shu. Eldest son of the theocratic warlord Zhang Lu, when his father surrendered Hanzhong to Cao Cao in 215 Zhang Fu was enfeoffed with his brothers. When Zhang Lu died in the following year, Zhang Fu inherited his larger marquisate. -SGZ 8:265.

Zhang Gang 張綱 [Wenji 文紀] (109-144); Jianwei. Son of Zhang Hao, Zhang Gang was a keen scholar of the classics and celebrated as an author, but though he was the son of an Excellency he lived extremely simply. He refused commandery nomination, but later joined the offices of the Excellency over the Masses, graded First Class and was recruited to the Imperial Censorate.

Emperor Shun was influenced by the eunuchs who had arranged his succession to the throne, and in 135 he granted them the right to adopt heirs and thus transmit their honours and privileges. Very likely inspired by this new policy, Zhang Gang sent in a memorial of protest against their power, but his strictures were predictably ignored.

In 142 a special commission of eight, whose members were chosen for their reputation as Confucianists, were sent to make a tour of inspection across the empire. Despite his youth, Zhang Gang, now a Household Counsellor, was one of their number.

There are two accounts of Zhang Gang's actions and their effect. According to his biographies in HHS, XHS and XC, while his colleagues left the capital Zhang Gang remained at Luoyang, for he believed the root of the trouble was at the centre. He presented an indignant report on the excessive favour shown to the Liang family of the empress, headed by her brother the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. Though the emperor appreciated his honesty, nothing was done.

According to HYGZ, however, Zhang Gang impeached the Excellencies Huan Yuan and Liu Shou for their failure to take action, and they were dismissed soon afterwards. He then turned on the Director of Retainers Zhao Jun, the Intendant of Henan Liang Buyi, brother of Liang Ji, and the Administrator of Runan Liang Gan: Zhao Jun was dismissed and the others were reprimanded and degraded. Finally, he reported against Kou Yi the Chancellor of Lu; Kou Yi killed himself.

So HYGZ claims that Zhang Gang's efforts brought a vast improvement of conduct among the administrators and the people, but HHS says that none of the commissioners, including Zhang Gang, achieved significant results. While it is true that Huan Yuan and Liu Shou left office soon after the despatch of the commission, HYGZ is contradicted by the record of the Annals, HHS 6:272, that the Director of Retainers Zhao Jun, far from being dismissed, took Huan Yuan's place as Grand Commandant. There is no reference to Kou Yi nor to Liang Gan at this time in HHS, but it is known that Liang Buyi continued to serve as Intendant and later became a minister.

1046 Zhang Gen

Based upon the career of Zhao Jun, therefore, it appears that HYGZ has exaggerated Zhang Gang's achievements: he may have had an effect upon the unfortunate Kou Yi and possibly on Liang Gan, but it is unlikely his strictures were permitted to interfere with the security of the Liang clan and their allies.

Zhang Gang had nonetheless made enemies by his reports, and in the following year, 143, Liang Ji had him sent out as Administrator to Guangling. The rebel Zhang Ying had ravaged the lower Yangzi and the Huai for more than ten years, killing an Administrator of Guangling and a provincial Inspector. When he reached the territory, Zhang Gang went with a small escort to the bandit camp, asked about grievances and promised pardon. Zhang Ying came to meet him, apologised for his crimes and was duly reassured. On the following day a great feast was held, Zhang Ying brought all his people and their families to surrender, and Zhang Gang gave local office to any of the former rebels who wished to enter the imperial service.

As a result of this settlement, the whole of the southeast became peaceful. Many people argued that Zhang Gang should receive enfeoffment, but the Liang group prevented it.

After Zhang Gang had been in the commandery for a year he was recalled to the capital for another appointment. Zhang Ying and the others sent a petition for him to remain, but he took ill and died at this time. Zhang Ying and five hundred others, including many former rebels and bandits, escorted his body home to Jianwei for burial, an edict praised his fine service, and his son Zhang Xu was awarded a million cash and appointment as a gentleman cadet. Zhang Ying, however, soon reverted to his old ways. *-HHS 56/46: 1816-19, HYGZ 10B:157, XC 3:6b, XHS 4:4a-6a, also cited in SGZ Shu 15:1074 PC, XTS 72C:2707.

Zhang Gen 張根; Jingzhao. Son of the Excellency Zhang Chun, Zhang Gen suffered a serious illness when he was young. He should have inherited his father's fief in 57, but because of his poor health Emperor Guangwu ordered that it be transferred to Zhang Gen's younger brother Fen. -HHS 35/25:1198.

Zhang Gen 張根; Runan. When the former Excellency Zhang Ji died in 184 he was given posthumous title as a secondary marquis. Such fiefs could not be inherited, so later that year, at the request of Zhang Ji's former colleague Yang Ci, Emperor Ling awarded Zhang Ji's son Zhang Gen a village marquise. -HHS 45/35: 1534.

Zhang Gong 張躬. Administrator of Yuzhang during the 90s, Zhang Gong carried out major works of flood control on the Gan River. -SJZ 39:16a.

Zhang Gong 張貢 (d.155). As Administrator of Hanyang in 143, Zhang Gong joined the Protector of the Qiang Zhao Chong in an attack on the rebel Shaohe tribe of the Qiang, who were at that time in Anding commandery. They killed 1500 men and captured 180,000 head of animals.

When Zhao Chong died in 144 Zhang Gong became Protector in his stead. He held that office until his death ten years later. -HHS 6:273, 87/77:2896-97.

Zhang Gong 張恭. A eunuch, Zhang Gong was a Regular Attendant during the 180s. -HHS 78/68:2534.

Zhang Gong 張恭; Dunhuang. A man of learning, about 220 Zhang Gong was Officer of Merit in the commandery when the Administrator Ma Ai died. Chosen by the people to govern the territory as Chief Clerk, he sent his son Zhang Jiu to the capital to ask for a new Administrator.

A group of Chinese and non-Chinese, led by Zhang Jin of Zhangye and Huang Hua of Jiuquan, sought Zhang Gong's support, and they took Zhang Jiu hostage. Father and son resisted the pressure, and Zhang Gong led troops against Huang Hua while the Han/Wei general Su Ze attacked Zhang Jin. Pinned down by Zhang Gong's offensive, Huang Hua was unable to support Zhang Jin. He was compelled to surrender to Su Ze, and Zhang Jin was defeated and killed.

The court's appointee Yin Feng was then installed as Administrator in Dunhuang, while Zhang Gong was rewarded with enfeoffment and named Wu and Ji Colonel for the Western Regions. When he retired after many years service his son Zhang Jiu succeeded him, and when Zhang Gong died about 230 he was posthumously honoured as Bearer of the Mace. *-SGZ 18:550-51; Fang 52:6-7.

Zhang Gongzu 張恭祖; Dong. During the 150s Zhang Gongzu was the teacher of Zheng Xuan. His eclectic studies included Zhou li, Ritual, Zuo zhuan according to the Old Text tradition, the New Text Han interpretation of the Classic of Poetry, and the Old Text Classic of History. -HHS 35/25:1207.

Zhang Gu 張固. A county magistrate in Hongnong in 218, Zhang Gu was ordered to conscript troops for a campaign in Hanzhong, but faced a rebellion led by Sun Lang. With advice from Hu Zhao, he restored the situation and drove Sun Lang and his fellows south to Guan Yu in Jing province. -SGZ 11:362.

Zhang Guang 張光. In 177 Zhang Guang held probationary appointment as a member of the Suite of the Heir, but was attached to the Bureau of Astronomy and responsible for the sacred pitchpipes 律 which were used in the ceremony of Watching for the Ethers. He and his colleagues attempted to tune the ash-filled pipes with a stringed instrument designed by the expert Jing Fang 京房 of Former Han, but as the relevant music had been lost there was no means to judge the tension required for the strings. The experiment was quite unsuccessful. -HHS 91/1:3015; MBeck 90:59.

Zhang Guang 張廣 [Sizong 嗣宗]; Shu. Zhang Guang was a son of the theocratic warlord Zhang Lu. When their father surrendered Hanzhong to Cao Cao in 215, Zhang Guang and his brothers were enfeoffed. -SGZ 8:265 & JJ 48a.

Zhang Guangchao 張光超; Shu. Zhang Guangchao was a son of Zhang Ba and his wife the Lady Sima/Ma Jingsi, and younger half-brother to Zhang Kai. He benefited from his mother's moral teaching and example, and became a scholar and teacher. -HYZ 10A:139.

Zhang Gui 長貴 "Headman Gui" see Ren Gui 任貴.

Zhang Guo 張國 I. In 65 Zhang Guo was a colonel on garrison in Wuyuan under the newly-appointed General on the Liao Wu Tang. -HHS 89/79:2949.

This may be the same man as Zhang Guo II below, for both men operated on the northern frontier, but the gap of sixty years between the two records makes it unlikely.

Zhang Guo 張國 II. Emissary to the Xiongnu in 127, Zhang Guo sent one of his senior officers with the Southern Shanyu on a punitive expedition against the Xianbi. Defeating one group of Xianbi, they returned with some treasure, and the enterprise may have had a deterrent effect.

Soon afterwards Zhang Guo was accused of having entered as conspiracy with the eunuch Zhang Fang, with Gaotang Zhi and members of the Imperial Secretariat, and several provincial officers. Two men were executed, but Zhang Guo and others were allowed to purchase relief. -HHS 90/80:2988, 101/11:3243 and cf. sub Zhang Fang 張防; deC 84:302. See also Zhang

Guo I above.

Zhang Han 張邯; Jingzhao. During the troubled period of the mid-20s, at the time of the fall of the Gengshi Emperor and the invasion of the Red Eyebrows, Zhang Han acted as a warlord. He and other local leaders in the old capital district were recognised as generals by Gongsun Shu, who had taken the imperial title in Yi province.

When Emperor Guangwu's general Feng Yi came to take control in the region in 27, Zhang Han joined the condottiere Yan Cen to attack him. As their army was defeated, Zhang Han and his colleagues Lü Wei and Jiang Zhen asked Gongsun Shu for help. Gongsun Shu sent an army under his officer Cheng Wu, but Feng Yi again defeated the allied force, and Zhang Han is not heard of again. -HHS 17/7:647; Bn 59:161.

Zhang Han 張邯. As Liu Liang, uncle of Emperor Guangwu and King of Zhao, was returning after the state funeral of the general Lai Xi in 35, his carriage met that of Zhang Han, General of the Household on the Right, at a gate of Luoyang city. Angry that his way was blocked, Liu Liang shouted at Zhang Han to turn back, then called the captain of the gate Cen Zun, abused him and forced him to kowtow and ordered him to walk in front of his chariot.

Liu Liang's conduct was reported by the Director of Retainers Bao Yong, who described it as wilful and unfitting to a king, and categorised it as Great Disrespect. Guangwu took no action. -HHS 29/19:1020; Bn 79:139.

Zhang Han 張漢; Le'an. Leader of a group of bandits in the 90s, Zhang Han was so impressed by the virtue and generous conduct of the new Chancellor Lu Gong that he brought his followers to surrender. Lu Gong appointed Zhang Han a county commandant, and as his former associates then quarrelled among themselves, they were attacked and crushed. -HHS 25/15:878.

Zhang Hanzhi 張漢直; Chen. During the 160s Zhang Hanzhi travelled to Nanyang to study Zuo zhuan with the celebrated Yan Du. A few months later his sister saw him in a dream, saying that he had died, and telling her of two business matters. The family went out to look for his funerary cortège, but it turned out that he was perfectly well and was on his way home.

Ying Shao cites this as examples of false popular beliefs in the reliability of such apparitions; he ascribes them to indigestion. -FSTY 9:71.

Zhang Hao 張皓/浩 [Shuming 叔明] (50-132);

1048 Zhang Hao

Jianwei. Son of Zhang Yin, from a family which claimed descent from Zhang Liang 良, celebrated minister of the founding Emperor Gao of Former Han, Zhang Hao was a student of legal administration and the Chunqiu. Having attended the University at Luoyang, during the 90s he held local office in his commandery and in Yi province.

About 109 Zhang Hao was recruited to the offices of the General-in-Chief Deng Zhi at the capital, and for eight years he was Deputy Director of the Imperial Secretariat. He became Chancellor of Pengcheng, returning to the capital in 120 as Minister of Justice.

In 124, as Emperor An proposed to dismiss his Heir Liu Bao, Zhang Hao and his fellow-ministers Huan Yan and Lai Li argued against the decision in open court. Zhang Hao pressed the case also in a letter to the emperor, noting that the prince was innocent of any fault but was in any case below the age of responsibility. He compared the situation to the treachery and disorder which arose when Emperor Wu of Former Han deposed his Heir in 91 BC [e.g. Loewe 74:41 ff].

The pleas were unsuccessful, but at the end of the following year Liu Bao, Emperor Shun, was placed upon the throne through a coup led by the eunuch Sun Cheng, and in the winter of 126 Zhang Hao was appointed Excellency of Works.

In 129, as an excess of natural disasters indicated imbalance in the spiritual order, Zhang Hao resigned his office. He was re-appointed Minister of Justice in 132, but died in that year. Imperial messengers were sent to his funeral, and he was granted burial ground near the capital. -HHS 56/46:1815-16*, SGZ Shu 15: 1073, HYGZ 10B:155.

Zhang Hao 張顥 [Zhiming 智明]; Changshan. A younger brother of the eunuch Zhang Feng [SGZ 6:179 PC quoting XHS 1:6b] Zhang Hao became Chancellor of Liang and was later Minister of Ceremonies. In the spring of 178 he was promoted Grand Commandant. He presumably paid for the appointment.

Zhang Hao was criticised by Cai Yong, who claimed that his advancement had come also through the influence of the Lady Huo Yu, and he that should resign his office because he was unworthy. He was also attacked by Cai Yong's relative Yang Zhi, Director of the Imperial Secretariat, who alleged that he was a member of a corrupt cabal of senior officials connected to the palace eunuchs. Zhang Hao left office in the autumn of that same year. -HHS 8:341, 60/50B:1999, 67/57:2209; deC 89:506.

Zhang He 章河/何. In 131 and 132 Zhang He was leader of a wide-spread religious rebellion in Yang province. -HHS 6:260, 101/11:3244.

Zhang He 張合 [Zhongyi 仲翼]; Nanyang. A former county magistrate, in 156 Zhang He was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhang He 張郃 [Junwen 儁文 or Jun'ai 儁义] (d.231); Hejian. In 184 Zhang He fought the Yellow Turbans and gained rank as a major. He then served Han Fu, and when Yuan Shao took over Ji province in 190, Zhang He was made a colonel. He was promoted further after the victory over Gongsun Zan in 199.

At the final stage of the Guandu campaign in 200 Zhang He was sent with Gao Lan to attack Cao Cao's camp. Though he argued that it was more important to protect the army's own supplies under Chunyu Qiong, he was over-ruled. Then Cao Cao did destroy the supply train. Accused of defeatism, Zhang He went over to Cao Cao.

Welcomed, promoted and enfeoffed, Zhang He became a leader of shock troops for Cao Cao. He took part in the campaigns which destroyed the Yuan family in 204 and defeated the Wuhuan in 207. Promoted to be a general, he was sent to conquer Donglai, then joined Zhang Liao on some minor campaigns. When Cao Cao took over Jing province in 208 Zhang He commanded one of seven divisions in Nanyang under the Area Commander Zhao Yan.

In 211 Zhang He accompanied the army to the northwest, and acted as Cao Cao's body-guard as he crossed the Yellow River under fire. He took part in the pacification, and under the command of Xiahou Yuan in 214 he defeated Ma Chao in the Wei valley and then the Qiang of Xining across the Yellow River. After Hanzhong was captured in 215, Zhang He was sent forward into present-day Sichuan, but he was driven back by Zhang Fei.

In 218 Zhang He held the southern defences against fierce attack from Liu Bei, but in the following year Xiahou Yuan was defeated and killed at Dingjun Mountain. Regrouping the troops after this disaster, Zhang He took a holding position on the Han River. Cao Cao came himself, but Hanzhong was lost, and the army was withdrawn to defend the Wei valley. In the following year Zhang He led a contingent which removed the last rebel groups from the hill country to the north of Zuopingyi.

After Cao Pi took the imperial title in 220, Zhang He was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele. He was further promoted, and in 222-223 he took part in the great offensive against Sun Quan's position in Nan commandery. Under Cao Rui in 228 he defended the Wei valley against Zhuge Liang. He died of wounds in 231. -SGZ 17:524-27*, LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:196.

Zhang Heng 張衡 [Pingzi 平子] (78-139); Nanyang. One of the finest intellectuals of Later Han, a brilliant scientist and mathematician, Zhang Heng was also a notable composer of rhapsodies and a competent official.

Zhang Heng's grandfather Zhang Kan had been a leading supporter of the founding Emperor Guangwu, but though the family was distinguished and substantial it was not notably wealthy. About 95 Zhang Heng travelled to Chang'an and then to Luoyang, where he studied for some years at the Imperial University. With a broad knowledge of the Confucian classics and other arts, he was recognised for his brilliance and became a close friend of Cui Yuan, Ma Rong, Wang Fu and Dou Zhang. A modest man, he refused nomination as Filial and Incorrupt and several invitations to the offices of Excellencies. Returning home aged about twenty, he became Officer of Merit in Nanyang under the Administrator Bao De.

During his time at Luoyang, Zhang Heng had been inspired to compose a pair of rhapsodies in emulation of Ban Gu's Liangdu fu 兩都賦 "Rhapsody on the Two Capitals", which described Chang'an and Luoyang and praised the quality of Later Han. Zhang Heng's two works, Xidu fu 西都賦 "Rhapsody on the Western Metropolis" and Dongdu fu 東都賦 "Rhapsody on the Eastern Metropolis," followed the pattern of his predecessor, but where Ban Gu sought only to praise the current dynasty, Zhang Heng sounds a note of warning: the present dynasty is morally superior to the extravagant old regime, but it must be careful not to go the same way and suffer the same fate.

Zhang Heng worked on the pieces for ten years, completing them about 108, when his patron the Administrator Bao De was recalled to the capital. He retired to his home, and there composed a third, Nandu fu 南都賦 "Rhapsody on the Southern Capital," celebrating the city of Nanyang, home of Liu Xiu the founding Emperor Guangwu of Later Han. [All three rhapsodies are translated by Knechtges 82, and the works of Ban Gu and Zhang Heng are compared by Hughes 60.] In these and other literary works Zhang Heng is noted for his frequent and intense references to the classics and to earlier texts of philosophy and history.

Zhang Heng was also known for his ability at mathematics, astronomy and natural phenomena, including divination by the wind. When he was again nominated for office, a special carriage was sent for him, and after a period as a gentleman cadet and service in the Imperial Secretariat he was appointed Court Astronomer. Under the personal reign of Emperor An after the death of the regent Dowager Deng, Zhang Heng was transferred to be Prefect of the Majors for Official Carriages under the ministry of the Guards; the two Gates for Official Carriages, one in the Northern and one in the Southern Palaces, accepted memorials to the throne and received special nominees for office.

Zhang Heng retained his concern for astronomy. In 123 the Internuncio Dan Song proposed that the calendar should be changed to accord with the teachings of the apocrypha, but Zhang Heng argued that such amendments would only add errors, while the apocryphal writings, not being written by the sages, were unworthy of serious attention. This opinion was supported by many discussants, and the calendar was not changed.

Zhang Heng further suggested that the apocrypha should be rejected and proscribed, but such opinion was not acceptable. Probably about this time Liu Zhen and Liu Taotu, members of the second committee of compilation for the history of the dynasty later known as Dongguan Hanji, asked to consult with him, but permission was refused. Zhang Heng was interested in historical work and had commented on items in the Shi ji of Sima Qian and the Han shu of Ban Gu, but he also found fault with the arrangement of the first recension of the history of Later Han: where Dongguan Hanji and the present-day Hou Han shu begin with the Annals of Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu, he objected to the relegation of the Gengshi Emperor Liu Xuan, true first ruler of Later Han, to a minor position. This approach, combined with his views on the apocrypha, evidently made him unsuitable as an official historian, and after the death of Liu Zhen and Liu Taotu the opportunity was ended. We are told that Zhang Heng deeply regretted the rejection, and a Treatise on Astronomy which he also prepared was likewise not accepted.

1050 Zhang Heng (continued)

At the beginning of the reign of Emperor Shun in 126 Zhang Heng was once more appointed as Court Astronomer. Though it was a responsible position, the rank/salary was only 600 shi: at this time he published Ying xian 應閒 "Response [to Criticism] of my Idleness," a rhymed dialogue in which a protagonist criticises his failure to obtain higher office but Zhang Heng replies that virtue, not greed for power, is the mark of a true gentleman.

Despite Zhang Heng's rejection of the apocrypha he was prepared to believe in some phenomena which could apparently not be explained by rational means. He accepted the claims of shamans and diviners, he compiled a commentary to the Taixuan jing 太玄經 "Classic of the Great Mystery" by Yang Xiong 楊雄, and his Ling xian 靈憲 "The Spiritual Constitution of the Universe" saw the movements of the heavenly bodies, and unusual events such as eclipses and comets, as guides to the situation of the state, while the rules of the heavens provided a model for government. Ling xian became the chief authority for the Hun tian 渾天 "Celestial Sphere" school of cosmology as opposed to the Gai tian 蓋天 "Hemispherical Dome" theory, based on the ancient Zhou bei suan jing 周髀算經.

During his time at the Bureau of Astronomy, and also as a private scholar, Zhang Heng was responsible for major developments in both theoretical and practical science. In Ling xian Zhang Heng counts more than 14,000 stars, and the official star maps of Later Han, lost at the end of the dynasty, were ascribed to him. He wrote a commentary on the armillary sphere, Hunyi zhu 渾儀注, describing how it was rotated by means of a clepsydra water-clock, and was the first to complete such a mechanism with horizon and meridian rings; he also developed a system of compensating tanks to make the clepsydra itself more accurate [Needham 59:315-317].

About 130 Zhang Heng attempted to calculate the value of π by comparing the volumes of a cube and of a cylinder and sphere within it, possibly by weighing: his figure of 3.1622 was some distance from the 3.1428 found by Archimedes some four hundred years earlier, and was markedly improved by scholars of the third century. On the other hand, Zhang Heng laid the foundations for the rectangular grid system of cartography in China, and in 132 he constructed the first seismograph 候風地動儀. The mechanism was based upon a pendulum which indicated the direction of the shock by knocking a ball from one of eight dragons' mouths to be caught by a toad underneath; for discussion, description and reconstructions see Needham 59:626-632.

After a series of earthquakes at the capital in 133, officials and candidates were asked to comment. Zhang Heng presented a sealed memorial criticising the reforms to recruitment lately introduced by Zuo Xiong, requiring Filial and Incorrupt nominees to be more than forty years old, and shifting responsibility for their assessment to the Excellencies rather than the Generals of the Household who were traditionally in charge of the corps of gentlemen cadets. Though we are told his objections were not accepted, Zhang Heng was soon afterwards awarded the high court rank of Palace Attendant.

Now a close adviser to the emperor, he opposed the palace eunuchs and, pointing to the troubles caused by their intrigues in the past, urged Emperor Shun to exercise power for himself. About this time he compiled a commentary to Zhou li 周禮, but as his enemies began a campaign of slander against him he also composed the rhapsody "Contemplating the Cosmos" Sixuan fu 思玄賦: with imagery reminiscent of the Li sao 離騷 of Qu Yuan 屈原 he debated whether a good man should flee the corrupt world or maintain his virtue within it.

In the rhapsody, Zhang Heng resolves to retire to his home, but though he resigned his court appointment in 136 he then took office outside as Chancellor of Hejian. He remained there two years, curbing the conduct of the arrogant king Liu Zheng and bringing powerful local families under control. His writings at that time are again depressed and bitter, and the poem "Four Sorrows" Si chou 四愁, in a genre which became very popular, tells how the protagonist seeks to woo a beautiful woman but finds his way blocked by mountains, snow and rivers – in the same way his contact to the emperor had been impeded by unworthy rivals.

In 138 Zhang Heng did return home, and composed Guitian fu 歸田賦 "Rhapsody on Returning to the Fields" to praise the life of retirement with his books and his lute. A few months later he was recalled to appointment in the Imperial Secretariat, and he died in that office in the following year, leaving thirty-two pian of works, literary, philosophical, scientific and mystical. He was buried in his home country, and his friend Cui Yuan composed the inscription for his tomb. -HHS 59/49*, XHS 4:10a-b, LS 19:18b-21b; Hughes 60:35-47, Knechtges 82:181-310, 481-483, Needham 56:556-557, 59 saepe, 65 saepe, Loewe 86E:673-682, MBeck 90:23, 26, 50, 59, 167, Sun 56.

Zhang Heng 張衡; Pei. Though Zhang Heng came nominally from the east of the empire, about 140 he accompanied his father Zhang Ling into Yi province, where Zhang Ling established a religious sect based upon the use of written charms and amulets. There were a number of such groups in the region at the time: it is claimed that Zhang Ling was the founder of the Five Dou of Rice sect 五斗米道, also known as the Rice Rebels 米賊, but it is possible that was a separate movement, initially led by Zhang Xiu q.v.

Zhang Ling passed on his teachings to Zhang Heng, who died some time in the 180s. [Some theories identify Zhang Heng with Zhang Xiu, but this appears unlikely.] Zhang Heng's widow was also an adept, and during the early 190s she held influence over Liu Yan the Governor of Yi province. By this means their son Zhang Lu became leader of the Rice Sect and established a theocratic state in Hanzhong.

Zhang Ling, Zhang Heng and Zhang Lu are regarded as the founding Celestial Masters 天師 of the modern Taoist church. -HHS 75/65:2435, SGZ 8:263; deC 89:557, deC 90:357-359, deC 96:83-84.

Zhang Heng 張衡 of Pei, wife of: see the Lady Zhang III.

Zhang Heng 張橫. In 211 Zhang Heng was one of the north-western warlords who opposed Cao Cao and were defeated at the battle of Huayin. -SGZ Shu 6:946.

Zhang Hong 張弘 (d.32); Langye. Brother of Zhang Bu, during the troubles which accompanied the fall of Wang Mang the family established a warlord regime, and as the Gengshi Emperor set up government in 23 he named Zhang Hong General of the Guards.

Zhang Hong shared the fortunes of Zhang Bu and his brothers, and he was with the army defeated by Geng Yan at Linzi in 29. He accompanied the family to Luoyang after their surrender, but joined the abortive escape to the southeast in 32 and was killed with the rest of the party by Chen Jun.

Zhang Hong 張鴻 (d.57). In the autumn of 57 Zhang

Hong was sent as an Internuncio to take command of operations against the Qiang leader Dianyu in Longxi. His force included local militia from Longxi, levies from Tianshui, and convicts pardoned for the occasion. They were heavily defeated in Jincheng, and Zhang Hong was killed. -HHS 2:97, 87/7:2879; deC 84:79.

Zhang Hong 張弘. In 198 Zhang Hong was in Lü Bu's service at Xiapi, besieged by Cao Cao and his ally Chen Deng. As three brothers of Chen Deng were held in the city, Lü Bu told Zhang Hong to kill them. Zhang Hong was afraid of the consequences, so he fled by night and brought them to safety. -SGZ 7:230.

Zhang Hong 張紘 [Zigang 子綱] (153-212); Guangling. When Zhang Hong was young he went to study at the University in Luoyang, specialising in the Jing interpretation of the Book of Changes and the Ouyang scholarship of the New Text Classic of History. He also attended the private academy of Puyang Kai in Chenliu, and studied the Han interpretation of the Classic of Poetry, Ritual and Chunqiu with Zuo zhuan. Returning home, he was at various times nominated by the Administrator Zhou Yu and by the provincial authorities and was invited to join the offices of the Excellencies, but refused each offer.

Zhang Hong was an old friend of the Sun family, and when Sun Ce first approached Yuan Shu he left his mother the Lady Wu and his younger brothers in Zhang Hong's care. They were later threatened by Tao Qian, warlord Governor of Xu province, and went for safety to the south of the Yangzi. As Sun Quan established himself there in 195, Zhang Hong joined him. He was given title as a colonel, and he and Zhang Zhao became Sun Ce's chief counsellors, one accompanying him on campaigns while the other stayed at headquarters.

Zhang Hong was known for his literary skills, and when Sun Ce made his formal peace with the Han court under Cao Cao's control in 197 he had Zhang Hong write the memorial. In 199 he sent Zhang Hong with a message to the imperial court at Xu city, and Cao Cao had him appointed as a member of the Secretariat.

A close friend of such leading scholars as Kong Rong, Zhang Hong was an effective ambassador for the Sun family: through his agency, Cao Cao recognised Sun Quan's succession to Sun Ce in 200, granted him title as a general and named him Administrator of Kuaiji. On the other hand, Cao Cao sent Zhang Hong back to the southeast as Commandant of that commandery, with the embarrassing indication that he might serve as an agent of the north. At the same time, moreover, the Lady Wu encouraged Zhang Hong to supervise the government, and there is reason to believe Sun Quan was uneasy with the tutelage from this senior friend of the family.

No doubt to ease the situation, Zhang Hong compiled and presented an account of the careers of Sun Jian and Sun Ce. Sun Quan was delighted, and the document probably formed the basis of the two biographies in the first chapter of the Wu section of Sanguo zhi. About 202, however, Zhang Hong was sent east to his post as Commandant in Kuaiji. We are told Sun Quan always addressed Zhang Hong with his title as "Eastern Division" 東部, not with his personal name: this may have been a mark of respect, but it was also a reminder of his distant status.

At this time Zhang Hong instigated a search for survivors of the family of his old patron Zhao Yu, sending one of his officers to Langye to enlist the aid of the Chancellor Zang Xuan. A five-year-old boy was found to maintain the ancestral sacrifices, and Zhang Hong was admired for his loyalty and concern.

As Sun Quan moved east against Jiangxia in 207 he recalled him to headquarters, and had him take his former position in charge of affairs at the base while the army was on campaign. As Chief Clerk in 208 Zhang Zhao accompanied the unsuccessful campaign against Hefei, and dissuaded Sun Quan from risking his life too freely in the heat of battle.

In the following year, as Sun Quan was planning a further campaign, Zhang Hong persuaded him to consolidate his rule at home rather than seek immediate adventures, and he encouraged him to set his capital at Jianye, present-day Nanjing. In 212 he went back to Wu to collect his family, but took ill on the road and died at the age of sixty.

Besides official documents, Zhang Hong left ten pian of poetry, rhapsodies, inscriptions and eulogies, and he was also celebrated for his calligraphy both in the formal kai shu 楷書 style and in the ancient Seal Script 篆勢. His work was greatly admired by Kong Rong, and also by Chen Lin, one of the Seven Masters of the Jian'an period. -SGZ Wu 8:1243-47*, 1:1104-06.

Zhang Hu 張虎 [Tiger Zhang]; Jiangxia. In 190 the new Inspector of Jing province, Liu Biao, advised by Kuai Yue, invited a number of local leaders to a banquet, but then killed them and took over their followers. Zhang Hu and Chen Zuo/Sheng, two bandit chieftains from Jiangxia, escaped the massacre. They took refuge in Xiangyang city, but Kuai Yue and Pang Ji persuaded them to surrender. -HHS 74/64B:2420, SGZ 6:212.

Zhang Hua 張化 of Shu was Administrator of Yongchang under Later Han. -HYGZ 4:60.

Zhang Hua 張化; Runan. When the magistrate Zhang Xi threw himself onto a funeral pyre in an attempt to bring rain which might end a drought, his Registrar Hou Chong and the junior officer Zhang Hua followed his example. Their prayers were answered. -SJZ 21: 16b.

Zhang Hua 張華. During the 170s Zhang Hua worked with Cai Yong on the treatises of Later Han. As a Consultant in 178, together with Cai Yong, Yang Ci and other scholars, he was consulted by Emperor Ling on a series of portents. -HHS 60/50B:1998, 93/3:3083.

Zhang Huan 張奐 [Ranming 然明] (104-181); Dunhuang>Hongnong. Son of Zhang Dun, as a young man Zhang Huan attended the Imperial University. He was widely read in the classics, but his particular teacher was Zhu Chong, expert in the New Text History according to the Ouyang interpretation. Zhang Huan himself made an abbreviated edition of the Mou commentary to the History 牟氏章句, reducing it from 450,000 to 90,000 characters, and he presented it to the throne of Emperor Huan about 150: see sub Mou Zhang.

Zhang Huan studied privately for a time in Youfufeng, not only traditional works but also horsemanship and archery. He was then sponsored by the palace eunuch Cao Teng and obtained a clerical position in the offices of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. After his work on the History was received he was appointed to the library of the Eastern Pavilion in the Southern Palace, but left that post on account of illness. He later received nomination as Worthy and Good, was graded First Class for his responses to questions, and became a Consultant. In 155 Zhang Huan was made Commandant of the Dependent State of Anding, in present-day southern Ningxia. He was fifty years old, and this was his first military or administrative command.

Just at this time the Xiongnu chieftains Taiqi and Bode rebelled and led seven thousand men to attack the Shanyu's capital at Meiji in Xihe. The Qiang people of Liang province were prepared to join the insurrection, and Zhang Huan, with only two hundred men, was directly between the would-be allies. His officers had no wish to act, but Zhang Huan sent his officer Wang Wei to face the Qiang, called further troops from garrisons to the west, and occupied the city of Qiuzi in Shang commandery, on the line of the Great Wall, which was not normally manned. Having thus blocked communications between the two groups of rebels, he bluffed the Qiang into surrender. When they did so, Zhang Huan led them against the Xiongnu. Taiqi and Bode were defeated and surrendered.

The Qiang offered Zhang Huan tribute of gold and horses, but he invited them to a banquet and gave the presents back. His predecessors had been greedy for such things, so Zhang Huan's reputation gained greatly, and he was known throughout his career in the north for his honest treatment of the non-Chinese.

Zhang Huan was transferred to be Emissary to the Xiongnu. The Xiuchuge clan rebelled, joined forces with the Wuhuan of Shuofang, and burned the camp of the General on the Liao in Wuyuan. Zhang Huan withdrew to camp outside the city; his troops wanted to flee further, but he sat at ease in his tent and discussed the classics with his pupils. His men returned to order, and he then persuaded the Wuhuan to submit once more. Again using the technique of dividing barbarians, he had Wuhuan agents assassinate the leaders of the rebels, then attacked their followers. Peace was restored.

In 158 Zhang Huan led the Shanyu Juche'er and his men on a punitive expedition against the Xianbi led by Tanshihuai, who was raiding the borders. In the following year, however, the power of the Liang clan was destroyed by Emperor Huan at Luoyang, and since Zhang Huan had served under Liang Ji he was dismissed and proscribed from office. Of his colleagues and associates, only Huangfu Gui spoke on his behalf, sending seven petitions to plead his case. Eventually, after four years in private life, Zhang Huan was named Administrator of Wuwei, where he reformed the tax collections and cared for refugees. He treated his subordinates most courteously, and restored good order throughout the northwest.

There was a local superstition whereby children born in the second or fifth months, or the same month as either of their parents, were killed. Zhang Huan taught the people differently, and enforced his will by rewards and punishments. The custom was abandoned, the people built temples and shrines in his honour, and the provincial authorities commended his Exceptional Quality.

About 164 Zhang Huan was made General on the Liao, and in the summer of 166 he led a counter-attack in response to a massive raid by the Xianbi chieftain Tanshihuai. He was recalled to the capital as Minister of Finance, but as soon as they learned of his departure the Xianbi returned and joined Wuhuan and Xiongnu to ravage Chinese positions. By autumn the rebel alliance included the Qiang, and raiding extended west to Wuwei and Zhangye.

Zhang Huan was sent back north as General of the Household Protector of the Xiongnu, ranking as a full minister with emergency powers across the frontier and authority to assess the conduct and capacities of all local officials. The Xiongnu and Wuhuan promptly surrendered, the Xianbi withdrew into the steppe, and Zhang Huan executed the rebel leaders. He recommended that the Southern Shanyu Juche'er, who taken part in the rising, be dismissed on account of his disloyalty and his evident lack of authority over his people, but Emperor Huan allowed Juche'er to keep his position.

Though the Xiongnu were settled, the Qiang remained active through 167, ravaging the region about Chang'an until the end of the year, when Zhang Huan was able to send Yin Duan and Dong Zhuo with a detachment. The enemy were defeated in Hanyang and the rebellion was ended.

It was widely believed that Zhang Huan should be enfeoffed, but because he was known as an opponent of the emperor's eunuch favourites he only received 200,000 cash and the right to have a member of his family appointed as a gentleman cadet. He asked instead for permission to move his registered place of residence from the frontier of Dunhuang to the inner commandery of Hongnong. Regulations forbade such a transfer, but Zhang Huan received it as a special reward.

In 168 Zhang Huan returned from the north. Just at that time Dou Wu, father of the regent Dowager, and his ally Chen Fan attempted to eliminate the eunuchs at court. As their plan was discovered, Dou Wu gathered troops inside the city, but the leading eunuch Cao Jie put Zhang Huan in command of the Northern Army to face Dou Wu. His prestige was so great that Dou Wu's followers changed sides; Dou Wu was isolated and committed suicide, Chen Fan was killed, and the reform movement was destroyed.

Most of the reform party were city-based officials, and though the distinguished Li Ying had held substantial appointments on the frontier in the 140s and 150s, he appears to have had minimal contact with the later commanders Zhang Huan and Huangfu Gui. If the reformers had contacted Zhang Huan at an early stage, he might not have supported the eunuchs against Dou Wu.

Zhang Huan became Minister Steward, then again Minister of Finance. It was once more proposed that he should be enfeoffed, but Zhang Huan was ashamed at the way he had been used by the eunuchs, and he returned the insignia.

In the summer of 169 a great snake appeared, and there were strong winds and fierce storms of rain and hail. Submissions were invited on the source of these portents, and Zhang Huan sent in a memorial attacking the eunuchs and praising the reformists' program. Emperor Ling was impressed, but the eunuchs persuaded him to take the matter no further.

Zhang Huan became Minister of Ceremonies, then joined Liu Meng and other officers of the Secretariat in recommending Wang Chang and Li Ying, known enemies of the eunuch group, to take part in the selection of Excellencies to replace Dou Wu and Chen Fan. Cao Jie and the eunuchs were furious, and had Zhang Huan and his associates put in prison. They were released after a few days, but were required to forfeit three months' salary.

Soon afterwards Zhang Huan spoke against the Director of Retainers Wang Yu, a eunuch ally, who wanted his powers extended to supervise the most senior ministers. Wang Yu accused Zhang Huan of faction, and he was dismissed and barred from office.

When Zhang Huan was General on the Liao in the middle 160s, he had quarrelled with Duan Jiong, Protector of the Qiang, and in 168, at the height of Duan Jiong's campaign of extermination against the Qiang, Zhang Huan presented a memorial calling for a halt to the slaughter. Duan Jiong was angry, and when he became Director of Retainers in 172 he took his revenge by arguing that Zhang Huan should be sent back to his original home in Dunhuang. As Zhang Huan begged for mercy, Duan Jiong had pity and withdrew his recommendation.

Though he maintained a thousand retainers, Zhang

Huan now withdrew into private life and composed Shangshu jinan 尚書記難, a commentary to the Classic of History in over 300,000 characters; this was in some contrast to his earlier work abbreviating the Mou commentary. He died at the age of seventy-eight, leaving a quantity of literary and scholarly material, including letters to friends and colleagues such as Yan Du, Cui Yuan and Xu Xun. The temples and shrines set up in his honour in Wuwei were maintained for several generations. -HHS 65/55:2138-44*, XC 4:2a-b; Tjan 49:148; Young 84, deC 84:318-329.

Zhang Hui 張恢. Administrator of Jiaozhi in the late 50s, he was found guilty of embezzlement. -HHS 41/31:1407.

Zhang Huiying 張惠英, the Lady. We are told that the Lady's father was a General on the Liao, and it is likely that he was Zhang Huan: no other such officer of that surname is recorded.

The Lady married the elder son of Chen Sheng and the Lady Yang Ligui of Hanzhong. She came of wealthy family, with several maid-servants, but her mother-in-law admonished her to treat her people generously in order to gain their best work. The Lady respected her advice, and in time of trouble later the members of the household showed their loyalty.

The Lady Zhang was also known for her womanly virtues. -HYGZ 10C:171.

Zhang Ji 張伋 (d.40). Intendant of Henan in 40, Zhang Ji and several other heads of commandery units were found guilty of having presented false returns for population and farmland. They were sent to prison and Zhang Ji was executed. [See sub Liu Zhuang, Emperor Ming.] -HHS 1B:66.

Zhang Ji 張稷 [Weijun 衛君]. In the time of Emperor Ming, Zhang Ji was a junior officer of the Imperial Secretariat. He impressed the emperor with his fine comments in court, and was appointed Chancellor of Jiaodong. -XC 7:5b. [There is anachronism here, for Jiaodong had ceased to be a royal fief in 37, and was incorporated into Beihai; Beihai was itself a kingdom from 52 to 87.]

Zhang Ji 張吉; Jingzhao. Son of Zhang Fu, he inherited the family marquisate. When he died in 110, he left no sons to succeed him and the fief was ended. -HHS 35/25:1200.

HHS notes that the enfeoffment had lasted eight generations over almost two hundred years, since the minister Zhang Anshi 安世 in the time of Emperor Zhao in Former Han. No other noble house could match that longevity. It was, of course, exceptional that Zhang Ji's great-grandfather Zhang Chun had been able to retain the rank of marquis from Former Han through Wang Mang and again under Emperor Guangwu of the restored dynasty.

Zhang Ji 張機; Shanggu. As a commandery officer in the 150s, Zhang Ji committed some fault. He made offerings at the local temple to the sage Emperor Shun 舜 in hope of escaping detection, but the Administrator Qiao Xuan found out, forced a confession and punished Zhang Ji for his bad attitude. -HHSJJ 51/41:1831.

Zhang Ji 張濟 [Yuanjiang 元江] (d.184); Runan. Son of Zhang Pan and a noted Confucian scholar, Zhang Ji was a magistrate in Henan about 170. When a slave of the eunuch Regular Attendant Duan Gui rode an ox-cart down the highway, Zhang Ji had him executed, then displayed the body in the market-place.

From Minister of Ceremonies in 179, Zhang Ji was made Excellency of Works, possibly paying a fine for the privilege [but see sub Long Yuan]. In 182 he was reprimanded for taking bribes, favouring the eunuchs, and condemning good and popular administrators from the frontiers. He continued to hold office until 184, however, when he resigned on account of illness and died soon afterwards.

Emperor Ling granted Zhang Ji posthumous honours as a General of Chariots and Cavalry and a secondary marquisate. Later that year, in further show of recognition at the request of Zhang Ji's former colleague Yang Ci, he granted a full marquisate to Zhang Ji's son Gen. -HHS 45/35:1534.

Zhang Ji 張機 [Zhongjing 仲景]; Hongnong. A noted medical man of the late second century, Zhang Ji was nominated for office in the time of Emperor Ling and served as Administrator of Changsha.

A number of impressive cures were recorded for Zhang Ji, his writings included Shanghan lun 傷寒論 "Dissertation on Typhoid Fever," and it is believed that he and his contemporary Hua Tuo developed the pharmacopeia Shen Nong bencao jing 神農本草經, forerunner of the modern Bencao jing; see also sub Wu Pu. -Needham 86:245-248.

Zhang Ji 張吉; Anping. Zhang Ji was a local bandit in his native commandery. In 192 Dong Zhao, Administrator of Julu, claimed Zhang Ji was going to attack, and used this as an excuse to declare a military emergency. -SGZ 14:436.

Zhang Ji 張濟 (d.196); Wuwei. An officer of Dong Zhuo, in 192 Zhang Ji accompanied Li Jue and Guo Si on campaign to the east under the command of Niu Fu. They attacked Zhu Jun and then raided Yingchuan and Chenliu. As they were on their way back, Dong Zhuo was assassinated in Chang'an and Niu Fu was killed in a mutiny. Zhang Ji joined Li Jue and others to storm Chang'an and take over government. A junior partner in the enterprise, he received enfeoffment and title as a general, but returned to Hongnong to guard against the east.

As Li Jue and Guo Si fought within the capital in 195, Zhang Ji attempted to make peace, and he wanted to take the emperor to Hongnong. In the autumn, as the situation remained confused, Zhang Ji arranged for Emperor Xian to leave, but events escaped his control and he joined Li Jue and Guo Si as they sought to recapture the imperial hostage. After a series of running fights the emperor and the remnants of his party escaped north across the Yellow River from Hongnong to Hedong, travelling eventually to Luoyang and Xu city with Cao Cao.

Zhang Ji was now isolated in the land within the passes, with his men short of supplies. In 196 he attacked Nanyang but was killed in battle. When Liu Biao, warlord Governor of Jing province expressed sympathy at his fate, Zhang Ji's kinsman and successor Zhang Xiu, gave him allegiance with his troops. -SGZ 8:262.

Zhang Ji 張濟, wife and widow. In 197 Zhang Ji's successor Zhang Xiu surrendered to Cao Cao. Cao Cao, however, took the widow of Zhang Ji as a concubine. Together with other provocations and apparent threats, this caused Zhang Xiu to make a surprise attack, defeating Cao Cao and driving him back. -SGZ 8:262.

Zhang Ji 張既 [Derong 德容] (d.223); Zuopingyi. A man of humble family, at the age of sixteen Zhang Ji was a clerical officer on the personal staff of the Administrator. His family later became rich, but Zhang Ji maintained his post and used his money to support officials and gentlemen who had fallen upon hard times. He gained local reputation, became a magistrate in Jingzhao about 196, and was admired for his fine administration.

As envoy in Cao Cao's service in 202, Zhang Ji persuaded Ma Teng to send troops to defeat Guo Yuan in Hedong. A Consultant in 205, he again called Ma Teng and other leaders in the west to defeat rebels and bandits in Hedong and Hongnong, and in 208 he persuaded Ma Teng to move east into Cao Cao's control at Xu city.

In 211 Zhang Ji followed Cao Cao against the north-western warlords, and after the victory at Huayin he was appointed Intendant of Jingzhao to restore civil government. He later joined the Secretariat of Cao Cao's kingdom of Wei, and then became Inspector of Yong 雍 province, covering the Wei valley and the further northwest.

After Cao Cao's forces were driven from Hanzhong by Liu Bei in 219, Zhang Ji recommended and arranged that Chinese and Di people be encouraged to leave the frontier region of Wudu and resettle along the valley of the Wei. He also urged Cao Cao to concentrate on the south and to ignore the quarrels of local warlords in the far northwest.

In 220, however, when Cao Cao's successor Cao Pi established a new Liang 涼 province in that region, Zhang Ji mobilised forces from Yong province to assist Su Ze establish control, and in the following year, after further disturbance Zhang Ji was appointed Inspector of Liang. He defeated the enemy and settled the territory.

After ten years on the frontier Zhang Ji died in 223. He was noted for his recruitment of good men into official service. -SGZ 15:471-77*.

Zhang Jia 張嘉 I see Zhang Xi 張喜 I. -HHS 9:375.

Zhang Jia 張嘉 II; Nan. As Guan Yu was besieging Xiangyang in 219, the local farmers Zhang Jia and Wang Xiu presented him with a jade seal which they had found in the Han River. This was later taken as a sign that Liu Bei should claim the imperial title. -SGZ Shu 2:888.

Zhang Jian 張筠 see Zhang Zun 張筠.

Zhang Jian 張儉 [Yuanjie 元節]; Shanyang. Zhang Jian's family claimed descent from Zhang Er 張耳, who had been enfeoffed as King of Zhao by the founding Emperor Gao of Former Han. Zhang Jian's father Zhang Cheng had been a commandery administrator. Zhang Jian was nominated Abundant Talent by his province, but he regarded the Inspector as a man of poor moral quality 非其人 and was unwilling to accept him as his patron. He excused himself on grounds of ill health.

In 165, when Zhang Jian was in his late forties, Zhai Chao became Administrator of Shanyang and appointed him Investigator for the eastern division of the commandery. The powerful eunuch Hou Lan and his mother oppressed the people of their home country, and when the Lady died he raised a vast tomb for her. Reports were sent to the capital asking that Hou Lan be punished, but he had agents intercept them. Zhang Jian then destroyed Hou Lan's constructions and confiscated his property; the commandery office sent another report to explain his actions, but the message still did not get through. [It is said that Zhang Jian killed Hou Lan's mother, but this story is probably false: cf. sub the Lady Hou.]

About this time Huang Fu, Chancellor of Donghai, had executed the eunuch relative Xu Xuan, and the eunuchs reported against both him and Zhai Chao. The two men were sentenced to convict service, but while his master received the penalty, Zhang Jian did not suffer for his actions. He and Zhai Chao were praised by the reform-minded students and junior officers at the capital and were included in their published lists of heroes. It appears that Zhang Jian now came to Luoyang as a political activist. Though he held no office, he was recognised as a leader of the men from Shanyang; he and twenty-three fellow-countrymen swore an oath of brotherhood, erecting an altar and inscribing their names on a stele.

After the eunuchs destroyed Dou Wu and Chen Fan in 168, they restored the proscription of the reformers but still sought occasion to attack them. In 169 another man from Shanyang, Zhu Bing, encouraged by Hou Lan, reported on the association and charged Zhang Jian and his fellows with plotting treason. A warrant was issued for their arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription.

In desperate flight, seeking lodging and shelter from house to house, Zhang Jian made his way through Lu, Donglai and Beihai to Yuyang and across the frontier to the north. Many admired his reputation and gave him assistance, but pursuit was fierce, scores of people who helped him were executed, while members of his clan and others linked to him were killed or lost their property. [For a negative opinion on Zhang Jian, see sub Xia Fu.]

Zhang Jian remained in exile until the ending of Proscription in 184, then returned to his home. Despite the earlier pursuit and persecution, no action was taken against him. On the contrary, he received invitations from the Excellencies and from the General-in-Chief He Jin, and he was nominated as Plain and Honest, with a special carriage sent to bring him to Luoyang for appointment as Minister Steward. Zhang Jian refused all such offers.

In the early 190s, as the empire fell into civil war and hunger became widespread, Zhang Jian distributed supplies to the local people, so that several hundred were saved from starvation.

When Cao Cao brought Emperor Xian and his court to Xu city in 196, an invitation was sent for Zhang Jian to become Minister of the Guards. Now eighty years old, he felt obliged to accept, but he was aware of Cao Cao's ambitions. He kept the doors of his residence closed and took no role in public affairs. He died about 200. -HHS 67/57:2210-11*, XC 4:8a-b; Ch'ü 72:482, deC 75A:9, 28-30, deC 89:79, 109-114.

Zhang Jian 張戢; Chen. Son of Zhang Cheng, in the early 200s Zhang Jian and his cousin Zhang Ling were kidnapped by bandits. Zhang Ling's father Zhang Fan went to beg for them. The bandits handed over Zhang Ling, but Zhang Fan offered to exchange his own son if they would release Zhang Jian. Admiring this, the kidnapers released both boys. -SGZ 11:337.

Zhang Jian 張儉. In 220 the general Mei Fu of Wei sent his officer Zhang Jian to negotiate his surrender to Sun Quan. -SGZ Wu 2:1121.

Zhang Jiang 張江; Nanyang? Early in the first century Zhang Jiang was Administrator of Wuwei and became Marquis of Zhe 析 county in Nanyang. By the time of Zhang Jiang's great-grandson Guo, the family had taken the name of the fief and changed the surname to Zhe 折. -HHS 82/72A:2720, HYGZ 10B:149; Ngo 76:100, DeWoskin 86:62.

Though HHS 82/72A and HYGZ 10B agree, it must be noted that the surname Zhe 折 varies slightly from the name of the county 析. There is, moreover, no record of Zhang Jiang and his enfeoffment anywhere else in the texts, while service as Administrator of a frontier commandery did not normally justify a county fief. The family may have claimed greater lineage than it deserved.

Zhang [Jili] 張季禮; Chen. Some time during the 180s Zhang Jili travelled to Runan to attend the funeral of a former teacher. It was the middle of winter, his carriage broke down and his oxen became ill. The travelling philanthropist Liu Yi, seeing his distress, gave him his own carriage and rode away. He did not tell Zhang Jili his name, but Zhang Jili guessed his identity. He attempted to return his property, but Liu Yi made excuses and refused to see him. -HHS 81/71:2695, XC 6:3b.

Zhang Jin 張斤 miswritten for Zhang Ang 張印. -HHJ 1:5.

Zhang Jin 張禁. Administrator of Changsha in the 40s, Zhang Jin embezzled quantities of money. His successor Zhi Yun was demoted for having failed to report it. -HHS 29/19:1032, DGHJ 15:4a.

Zhang Jin 張津 [Ziyun 子雲]; Nanyang. A close client of He Jin in 189, Zhang Jin supported Yuan Shao's proposal to destroy the palace eunuchs.

About 201 the Han court under Cao Cao sent Zhang Jin south as Inspector of Jiaozhi in succession to Zhu Fu, who had been driven from the territory by rebellion. Based upon the Pearl River, his nominal territory extended north of the Nan Ling range into Lingling and Guiyang, and he was granted title as Governor of a renamed Jiao province.

Zhang Jin attempted to build a position against Liu Biao in Jing province, and it is said that he used esoteric rituals and regalia to gain authority, but he had strong opposition. By 204 he was dead, either at the hands of local non-Chinese or as a result of a mutiny among his own troops. -HHS 69/59:2248; deC 90:206, 348.

Zhang Jin 張進; Zhangye. About 220 Zhang Jin named himself Administrator of Zhangye and joined Huang Hua of Jiuquan to gather an alliance of Chinese and non-Chinese groups in the northwest. He was attacked and killed by Su Ze. -SGZ 2:59, 16:492; Fang 52:6-7.

Zhang Jing 張景; Nanyang. In 159 Zhang Jing arranged that he and his family would provide clay figures and models for the annual ceremony to encourage agriculture at Wan city, capital of the commandery. In exchange, he was excused all corvée work and also any requirement to hold local office. A stele was set up at the yamen gate to confirm the agreement. -Nagata 94:136; Ebrey 80:338-339.

Zhang Jun 張敬 I. Prefect of Insignia and Credentials in 124, Zhang Jing joined the demonstration led by Lai Li at the Gate of the Vast Capital, protesting the dismissal of the Heir, Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun. Though the demonstrators achieved no success, their support was recognised, and after Liu Bao was brought to the throne at the end of 125, Zhang Jing and several of his colleagues were rewarded with high office and gained the ren right to nominate their sons as cadet gentlemen. -HHS 15/5:591-93.

1058 Zhang Jing

This may be the same man as Zhang Jing II below, but if so he would have had an official career of almost forty years at the comparatively low rank/salary of 600 shi. Considering his support for the future emperor, and the rewards which followed, this is unlikely.

Zhang Jing 張敬 II. A member of the Secretariat in 159, Zhang Jing was one of the non-eunuch supporters of Emperor Huan who were enfeoffed for their aid in the coup which destroyed Liang Ji. As Inspector of You province soon afterwards, Zhang Jing impeached Kou Rong for leaving his territory to return to the capital without permission.

Following the disgrace of the emperor's former favourites Zuo Guan and Ju Yuan in 165, Zhang Jing and others who had been rewarded in 159 were deprived of their fiefs. -HHS 7:305, 16/6:627, 57/47:1858 and see Zhang Jing I above.

Zhang Jing 張靖; Guangling. As Zhang Hong was on his deathbed in 212 he presented a statement of his political philosophy to his son Zhang Jing. Zhang Jing does not appear otherwise in the histories. -SGZ Wu 8:1245.

Zhang Jing 張景. In 215 Zhang Jing was an officer under the Area Commander Liang Xi, when the Wuhuan chieftain Luxi, known for his skill with a bow, took his wife and fled from Jinyang, capital of Taiyuan commandery. The local Chinese officers were afraid to pursue him, but Liang Xi ordered Zhang Jing to call up a group of Xianbi and send them in chase. They caught Luxi and killed him. -SGZ 15:470.

Zhang Jiong 張炯; Henei. In 197 Zhang Jiong found an auspicious omen for Yuan Shu to proclaim himself emperor of his new Zhong 仲 dynasty. -HHS 75/65:2442, SGZ 6:209.

Zhang Jiu 張就; Dunhuang. About 220 Zhang Jiu was sent to the capital by his father Zhang Gong to ask that a new Administrator be sent to the commandery. On his way back he was kidnapped by rebels and held hostage for his father's co-operation, but he sent a secret message urging his father to attack. Huang Hua was forced to surrender to the Han/Wei commander Su Ze, and Zhang Jiu was freed.

Zhang Jiu later succeeded his father as Wu and Ji Colonel for the Western Regions and was then Administrator of Jincheng. The family was celebrated in the west of the empire. -SGZ 18:550-51*.

Zhang Ju 張舉; Yuyang. Formerly Administrator of Taishan, in 187 Zhang Ju joined Zhang Chun and the Wuhuan chieftain Qiuliju in rebellion against Han. Supported by the Xianbi, their troops ravaged the northeast. They defeated and killed the Administrators of Youbeiping and Liaoxi and the Protector of the Wuhuan Gongqi Chou.

Zhang Ju took the imperial title in Liaoxi, but in the following year the rebels were heavily defeated by Gongsun Zan. Zhang Chun was killed, and Zhang Ju fled across the frontier. -HHS 73/63:2353-54.

Zhang Jue 張角 (d.184); Julu. An adept of Huang-Lao 黃老, the popular cult concerning the Yellow Emperor 黃帝 and Laozi 老子, Zhang Jue acquired wide popularity through the 170s. His teaching, known as the Way of Great Peace 太平道, was based upon faith-healing, using charmed water and a confession of sins, and was highly relevant at a time when major epidemics were reported almost every second year. It appears very likely that this period marked an occasion when a new and thus virulent disease, possibly a version of smallpox or measles, began to affect humans.

Though there were other teachers of similar style, Zhang Jue's influence spread widely. It is said that he sent disciples across the east of the empire, that people sold all they had to follow him and pilgrims clogged the roads. Eventually he set up thirty-six Divisions 方, like armies under a general, each with as many as ten thousand adherents, while the faithful were counted in the hundreds of thousands. Since the population of the empire was some forty million, the numbers may not have been overwhelming, but members of the sect were devoted, and they had considerable influence in their communities.

At first, local officials reported only that Zhang Jue's doctrines were an influence for good, and that people were reformed by his teaching. At some stage, however, this popular religious movement turned against the government of Han. There was tradition of religious rebellion in China, and the hostility of heterodox sects to the formally Confucianist state appears particularly prevalent in the second century AD.

A belief that the blue sky of Han would give way to the yellow of a new era was attested in a tomb of the Cao family as early as 170 [Barrett 86:876], but Zhang Jue developed this into a symbol of his own cult's rise to greatness. By 180 the change had been forecast for the beginning of the next sexagenary cycle in 184: the characters jiazi 甲子, first of the new series, were written as a threat on the walls of the capital city itself and government offices throughout the empire.

Concerned at such development, the Excellency Yang Ci urged that local officials should be ordered to halt the pilgrimages and other gatherings and to resettle the people. His memorial, however, was pigeon-holed, and though the clerical officer Liu Tao later returned to the charge, requesting a clear edict for the arrest of Zhang Jue and his senior supporters, still nothing was done.

In the ominous year of 184 the rising indeed took place. It was planned to be simultaneous from Jing province to You, including the capital, where the sect had adherents even amongst the palace eunuchs, but the plot was betrayed before the due time. More a thousand of Zhang Jue's followers were taken and executed in Luoyang, and imperial messengers were sent with orders for the arrest of Zhang Jue and his associates.

So the rebellion had to be called ahead of time. In the second month Zhang Jue proclaimed himself Lord of Heaven General 天公將軍 while his younger brothers Bao and Liang took the titles of Earth and Man; it is said they held human sacrifice to bless their cause. With yellow bands about their heads as a sign of the yellow heaven to come, the insurgents were known as Yellow Turbans 黃巾. They received wide response across the empire: towns and villages were looted, government offices were destroyed and officials driven from their posts, while in Anping and Ganling the people forced their kings to make cause with the rebels.

Despite initial confusion and disruption, the Han response was remarkably prompt and energetic. As eight passes guarding Luoyang were fortified and garrisoned, the general Lu Zhi was sent directly against Zhang Jue, while two further armies were despatched under Huangfu Song and Zhu Jun to attack the rebels in Yingchuan. Though the imperial forces included elements from the professional Northern Army, the majority were conscripts or volunteers; the rebels were likewise untrained and inexperienced.

Lu Zhi, who also had Wuhuan auxiliaries, achieved swift success. Killing or capturing more than ten thousand of the enemy, he drove Zhang Jue and his companions to refuge at Guangzong city in Julu, east of present-day Wei in Hebei. As he prepared to storm the place, however, he was slandered by the eunuch Zuo Feng and was recalled in disgrace. The frontier general Dong Zhuo took his place, but achieved no success, and it was not until winter that the commander Huangfu Song, fresh from victories further south, defeated and destroyed Zhang Liang and stormed the city.

Zhang Jue had died of illness some weeks earlier, but the victorious imperialists dug up his body, desecrated it, and sent the head to Luoyang. -HHS 70/60:2299-2302; deC 89:174-186.

Zhang Jujun 張巨君 "Great Gentleman Zhang." About 100 the young man Xu Jun went on pilgrimage to Mount Tai, seeking a cure for a serious illness. He claimed he met the Taoist sage 道士 Zhang Jujun on that journey, and that Zhang Jujun taught him magical arts. -HHS 82/72B:2731; Ngo 76:111, DeWoskin 83: 70.

Zhang Jun 張峻; Shanyang. Formerly a magistrate in Henei, Zhang Jun was a friend of Song Yang, father of the imperial concubines nee Song. When the Ladies Song were disgraced, Song Yang was arrested by the authorities of his home commandery, Youfufeng. Zhang Jun spoke on his behalf, and through his efforts and those of Liu Jun, Song Yang was released. -HHS 55/45:1800.

Zhang Jun 張俊; Shu. Zhang Jun and his brother Zhang Kan were both members of the Imperial Secretariat. A young man of talent, about 115 Zhang Jun was sent to assess the qualities of Yin Fang, who had been proposed as an Excellency; he found him inadequate.

In 117, believing that two of his colleagues, Zhu Ji and Ding Sheng, were remiss in their duties, Zhang Jun resolved to report them. The two men were afraid, and though they sent two other officers, Chen Zhong and Lei Yi, to approach Zhang Jun on their behalf, he remained adamant.

Then Zhu Ji and Ding Sheng bribed a servant to find something against Zhang Jun, and they got hold of some private correspondence with Yuan Xu, son of the Excellency Yuan Chang. The conspirators sent the letters to the emperor, claiming Zhang Jun had divulged matters which should have remained secret within the palace. Zhang Jun and Yuan Xu were imprisoned and sentenced to death, and Yuan Chang was obliged to commit suicide.

Zhang Jun persuaded one of the prison officers to take a letter to the throne appealing for justice. By the time it arrived, he had already been sentenced and was on the way to the execution ground, but the regent Dowager Deng sent orders post-haste that the death penalty was to be reduced.

Zhang Jun's memorial of thanks was admired for its elegant expression of emotion. He went into exile, but Yuan Chang was posthumously rehabilitated and Yuan Xu was able to resume his official career. -HHS 45/35:1524, HYGZ 10C:178-79.

Zhang Jun 張鈞/均 (d.184); Zhongshan. At the time of the Yellow Turban uprising in 184, Zhang Jun sent in a memorial criticising senior eunuchs, blaming them for the rebellion, and suggesting that they should be publicly executed as a means to settle the trouble.

Emperor Ling showed the document to the eunuchs, who apologised profusely and offered quantities of money for the cause. The emperor in any case refused to accept Zhang Jun's arguments, and the Imperial Censorate then falsely accused him of having studied the teachings of the Yellow Turbans. Zhang Jun was arrested and flogged to death. -HHS 78/68:2535 [as 鈞], HHJ 24:293 [as 均]; deC 89:179-180.

HHS 78/68, followed by ZZTJ 58:1867, says that when Zhang Jun presented his fatal memorial he was only a gentleman cadet. HHJ 24:293 describes him as a General of the Household, and this is more probable.

Zhang Kai 張楷; Henan. Known as a scholar and diviner, Zhang Kai was invited to the court of Emperor Shun in 127, at the same time as the hermit Fan Ying. He later criticised Fan Ying for being prepared to accept official positions but then failing to offer any good advice to the government; he argued that a man should either stay in private life or commit himself whole-heartedly to the benefit of public affairs.

Soon afterwards, the former Court Architect Zhai Fu, who had been driven from office by allegations of conspiracy and corruption, was also accused of having been involved in a treasonous plot with Zhang Kai. The charge was later dropped, but no more is heard of Zhang Kai. -HHS 82/72A:2724, 48/38:1605.

Zhang Kai 張楷 [Gongchao 公超]; Shu>Henan. Son of Zhang Ba by his father's first wife, he was registered as a man from Shu commandery and spent much of his childhood there with his step-mother, the Lady Sima/Ma Jingsi, who inspired him to scholarship. He later went to live at the capital, where he maintained his father's interest in the Yan interpretation of Chunqiu and studied the Old Text Classic of History. Maintaining a private academy with hundreds of students, he also attracted a vast number of clients and guests, many of them from his father's former school. So many came to call upon him that their carriages blocked the roads and their attendants had nowhere to rest, while a number of families, including some connected to the court nobility and the palace eunuchs, set up inns and stalls to profit from them.

Finding this distasteful, Zhang Kai moved into the country to avoid the crowds. His own household was poor, and he would ride in a donkey-cart and sell medicinal drugs in the market at the county city. As soon as he had enough money for food he would return to his village.

Recommended Abundant Talent by the Director of Retainers, Zhang Kai was appointed a magistrate in Jingzhao but refused to take up the post and went into the mountains west of Hongnong. Enthusiastic scholars still pursued him there, and a market developed about the place where he lived: it was known from his style as Gongchao Market 公超市.

The Excellencies, the General-in-Chief and the Grand Tutor all sent invitations to a position in their offices, and Zhang Kai was also recommended as Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright, but he would not go.

In 142, soon after the failure of the latest recommendation, Emperor Shun sent special instructions to the Intendant of Henan, comparing Zhang Kai to the most virtuous recluses of ancient times. Concerned that the earlier summons might have appeared insufficiently polite, the Intendant was instructed to offer a most courteous and particular invitation. This was done, but Zhang Kai pleaded ill health. A similar approach in 149, with a comfortable carriage and special gifts, received the same response, and Zhang Kai died at home, aged over seventy, a short time later.

Besides his Confucian studies and his ability to find medicinal drugs, it is said that Zhang Kai was also an expert in magical arts. In particular, he could create a mist that spread for five li. A certain Pei You, who could arrange a mist for only three li, came to seek further instruction, but Zhang Kai would have nothing to do with him. In the late 140s Pei You used his own mist-making to carry out a series of robberies and then proclaimed himself as emperor. When he was caught, it was found that he was using techniques similar to those taught by Zhang Kai. Zhang Kai was arrested and spent two years in prison before his innocence was proven. It is said that during his time there he compiled a commentary to the History, but the whole story is suspect. -HHS 36/26:1242-43*, XC 2:1a-b, HYGZ 12:213; Ch'ü 72:384-385, Vervorm 90:191.

Zhang Kai 張愷. A major under Duan Jiong, in 169 Zhang Kai commanded the troops on the eastern hillside in the battle and subsequent massacre of the Qiang at Shoot-Tiger Valley. -HHS 65/55:2153.

Zhang Kai 張闔. In 193 Zhang Kai was Commandant of Langye. As the former Excellency Cao Song was journeying to join his son Cao Cao, Tao Qian the Governor of Xu province put Zhang Kai in charge of his escort. Zhang Kai, however, killed Cao Song and plundered his baggage train, then fled south of the Huai. Cao Cao blamed Tao Qian and attacked Xu province in revenge. -SGZ 1:11. [It is possible this is the same man as Zhang Kaiyang below.]

Zhang Kaiyang 張闔陽. A leading retainer of Yuan Shu, in 197 Zhang Kaiyang was sent to assassinate Luo Jun the Chancellor of Chen. He journeyed privately to Chen, was received with a banquet, then took advantage of his host's generosity to kill him. -HHS 50/40:1670. [It is possible this is the same man as Zhang Kai immediately above.]

Zhang Kan 張堪 [Junyou 君游]; Nanyang. Member of a leading clan in the capital county Wan, Zhang Kan's father died when he was young. Zhang Kan passed all his inheritance, several million cash, to his brothers and their family.

At the age of sixteen, about 20 AD, Zhang Kan went to Chang'an to study. He was noted for his fine ambition and steady work, and scholars of that time described him as the "Young Sage" 聖童. Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, admired him, and when he took the imperial throne in 25 he followed a recommendation of Lai Xi and appointed Zhang Kan as a Palace Attendant.

Zhang Kai later became an Internuncio, and at the end of 36 he was sent with seven thousand horsemen to take a load of silk to the Grand Marshal Wu Han, outside the city of Chengdu, capital of Gongsun Shu. He was also designated Administrator of Shu, to take office after the conquest was complete. When Zhang Kan arrived, he found Wu Han to be short of supplies and planning to withdraw. He persuaded him to change his mind, so Wu Han only pretended to retreat, and by this means he enticed Gongsun Shu to the sortie which led to his death.

Zhang Kan then prepared a full inventory of Gongsun Shu's treasury, taking nothing for himself. Though Wu Han then allowed his soldiers to loot, Zhang Kan was admired for his honesty, and he was later able to restore order and good government among the people.

After two years in Shu, Zhang Kan was sent to the north as a Commandant of Cavalry, leading a regiment under the general Du Miao. He became Administrator of Yuyang, where he withstood attacks from the Xiongnu and opened up farmland for settlement. The people sang his praises and for the eight years he was there the border region was peaceful.

About 46 Emperor Guangwu asked the annual Reporting Officers from the various commanderies for their opinion of officials they had known. Fan Xian of Shu praised Zhang Kan for his scrupulous honesty in cataloguing the treasures left by Gongsun Shu [another account ascribes the praise to Li Shan]. Impressed by this long-maintained reputation, the emperor called Zhang Kan to court, but just at this time he was taken ill and died. Guangwu mourned him, and gave valuable gifts for his funeral.

Despite the imperial favour, it appears Zhang Kan's family was later poor and distressed. His widow and children were aided by his fellow-countryman Zhu Hui, to whom Zhang Kan had nominally entrusted them in the mid-20s. Though the two men had no contact thereafter, Zhu Hui honoured the ancient request.

The great scholar Zhang Heng was a grandson of Zhang Kan. -HHS 31/21:1100-01*, XC 1:9a; Bn 59:196-197.

Zhang Kan 張龕; Shu. Elder brother of Zhang Jun, he too was a member of the Imperial Secretariat. About 115 Deng Feng, son of Deng Zhi and a nephew of the regent Dowager Deng, wrote to urge him that the scholar Ma Rong, then a gentleman cadet, be appointed to that office. -HHS 45/35:1524, 16/6:616.

Zhang Kang 章康 (d.28). An officer of the warlord Qin Feng, Zhang Kang was defeated and killed in Nanyang by Guangwu's troops under Zhu You. -HHS 22/12:770.

Zhang Kuang 張況 (d.24); Zhao. A younger cousin of the wife of Liu Hui 回, grandfather of Liu Xiu the future Emperor Guangwu, Zhang Kuang was a regular visitor to the family and knew Liu Xiu when he was young.

1062 Zhang Kuang

When Liu Xiu was appointed commissioner in the north by the Gengshi Emperor in 23, he met Liu Kuang at Handan, where he was a junior officer in the commandery. Pleased to see him again, Liu Xiu appointed him a magistrate and then Administrator of Zhuo commandery. Now eighty years old, Zhang Kuang asked to be spared such responsibility. Liu Xiu transferred him to a county in Changshan, but then the city was attacked by a group of Red Eyebrows and Zhang Kuang was killed in battle. -HHS 44/34:1496.

Zhang Kuang 張匡 [Wentong 文通]; Shanyang. A scholar of the Han version of the Poetry, Zhang Kuang compiled a detailed commentary to the classic. Recommended as Knowing the Way, he was invited to become an Academician, but did not accept and died at home. -HHS 79/69B:2575.

Zhang Kuang 章誑; Danyang. In 196 Zhang Kuang was a major under Xu Dan of Danyang, an officer of Liu Bei in Xiapi. As the garrison commander Zhang Fei killed the Chancellor Cao Bao, Xu Dan sent Zhang Kuang to invite the enemy Lü Bu, and had his troops open the gates to him. -SGZ 7:223.

Zhang Kui 張逵 (d.139). A eunuch, in 139 Zhang Kui was a Regular Attendant to Emperor Shun. Concerned at the growing power of the Liang family, Zhang Kui, Yang Ding, Qu Zheng and others claimed that the father of the empress, Liang Shang, together with their rival eunuchs Cao Teng and Meng Ben, were planning to bring princes of the imperial house to the capital and choose a replacement for the emperor. When Emperor Shun doubted the story, they followed up by issuing unauthorised instructions that Cao Teng and Meng Ben should be arrested and held within the palace.

The emperor, furious, ordered the eunuch Li Xi to release the prisoners and to arrest Zhang Kui and his fellows. They died in prison. -HHS 6:268, 43/24:1175-76, 101/11:3245, 106/16:3333, 108/18:3367. [HHS 101/11 says that some of the conspirators committed suicide and others escaped.]

Zhang Lan 張藍 sometimes miswritten as 張蘭 (d.32); Langye. Zhang Lan was a younger brother of Zhang Bu and Zhang Hong. During the troubles at the fall of Wang Mang the family established a warlord regime, and when the Gengshi Emperor set up his government in 23 he named Zhang Lan as a chief general.

Zhang Lan shared his brothers' fortunes, and in 29

he held command of defences in Qi against Guangwu's general Geng Yan. Driven from his position, he joined Zhang Bu for a counter-attack by the main army, but they were defeated and scattered. As Zhang Bu surrendered later that year, Zhang Lan accompanied the family to Luoyang. He joined their abortive escape to the southeast in 32, and was killed with the rest of the party by Chen Jun. -HHS 19/9:709-11, 12/2:598-99.

Zhang Lang 張朗. Administrator of Dunhuang in 127, Zhang Lang was sent with three thousand men to join Ban Yong in forcing the submission of Yanqi [Karashar]. Having lately committed some fault, he was eager to rehabilitate himself and so arrived early. After a brief engagement King Yuanmeng and his allied rulers of Weili and Weixu sent hostages and tribute. Zhang Lang therefore escaped any penalty for his earlier wrong-doing, but Ban Yong was unjustly punished for arriving too late at the rendezvous.

Zhang Lang was soon afterwards accused of having conspired with the eunuch Zhang Fang, with Gaotang Zhi and members of the Imperial Secretariat, and several provincial officers. Two men were executed, but Zhang Lang and others were allowed to purchase relief. -HHS 6:254, 101/11:3243 and cf. sub Zhang Fang 張防.

Zhang Leigong 張雷公 [Lord of Thunder]. Probably named for his loud voice, in 185 he was a leader among the Black Mountain bandits in the Taihang range. -HHS 71/61:2310-11, SGZ 8:261-62.

Zhang Li 張禮; Yingchuan. When Yin Xiu was Administrator of Yingchuan during the 180s, he appointed Zhang Li to his local staff and later nominated him as Filial and Incorrupt. -SGZ 13:392.

Zhang Li 張立 miswritten for Zhang Xuan 張玄. -HHS 23/13:800-01.

Zhang Liang 張亮. A eunuch, in 168 Zhang Liang was a member of staff at the residence of the regent Dowager Dou. Very strong, he was a friend of the eunuch officer Zhu Yu. When Zhu Yu learned that Dou Wu and Chen Fan planned to arrest the senior eunuchs Cao Jie and Wang Fu, he called Zhang Liang, Gong Pu and others, and they took an oath in blood to destroy Dou Wu.

After the successful coup Zhang Liang, Gong Pu and three of their comrades were enfeoffed. -HHS 69/59:2243, 78/68:2524; Ch'ü 72:491.

Zhang Liang 張梁/良 (d.184); Julu. A brother of the religious leader Zhang Jue, when the Yellow Turban rebellion broke out in 184 Zhang Liang took title as Lord of Man General 人公將軍 beside Zhang Jue, who styled himself Lord of Heaven, and their brother Bao, Lord of Earth.

Though Zhang Jue may have initially held command, after the first assault by Lu Zhi it appears that he was taken ill, and Zhang Liang maintained the defence of Guangzong city in Julu. As Lu Zhi was succeeded by Dong Zhuo the rebels withstood the imperial attacks, and when Huangfu Song took over in the ninth month they again scored some success. In the tenth month, however, Huangfu Song inflicted a heavy defeat, and Zhang Liang was killed. -HHS 71/61:2300-02; deC 89:177-186.

Zhang Liang 張梁; Henan. An émigré, Zhang Liang was well-treated by Sun Jiao, Sun Quan's commander in the west about 215, and became a most loyal officer. An aide in command of troops, he later served Sun Jiao's brother Huan with similar commitment.

In 226 Zhang Liang accompanied Zhang Huan on a successful campaign and was rewarded with a secondary marquisate. In 229 he encouraged Sun Quan to move his capital back downstream to Jianye, present-day Nanjing. He was later an Area Commander on the Han River. -SGZ Wu 6:1207-08.

Zhang Liangze 張亮則 or Zhang Ze [Yuanxiu 元脩]; Hanzhong. As Administrator of Zangke, and known as the Sleeping Tiger 臥虎, Zhang Liangze over-awed the non-Chinese as far afield as Yongchang and Yuexi, and dissuaded them from rebellion. He was transferred north to be Protector of the Qiang, then Administrator of Youfufeng, but was later sent back south to Guiyang to put down insurgency there.

When the Banshun people of Ba commandery rebelled in 179, Zhang Liangze was sent to hold Hanzhong against them. He later became Inspector of Liang province and was then Administrator of Wei commandery; in every post he maintained a good government.

As civil war followed the death of Emperor Ling in 189, Zhang Liangze refused an invitation to become chief of staff to Yuan Shao. He became General on the Liao for Cao Cao. -HYGZ 10C:166.

Zhang Liao 張遼 [Shugao 叔高]; Jiangxia. Having retired from a position as a county magistrate, Zhang Liao bought a piece of land. In the middle was a great tree, whose shade prevented seed from sprouting over a large area. Zhang Liao ordered one of his servants to cut it down, but the tree emitted blood and the man was frightened. Zhang Liao then took it down himself, and as a four-headed demon leapt at him from the ruins, he killed it.

Ying Shao, who tells the story, goes on to say that on that same day Zhang Liao was appointed to the office of the Excellency of Works, and later became Inspector of Yan province; the ill will of the supernatural had thus no effect upon his career. -FSTY 9:74-75; Nylan 83:547.

Zhang Liao 張遼 [Wenta 文達] (165-222); Yanmen. Zhang Liao was originally a man of the Nie clan, claiming descent from Nie Yi 聶壹 of Former Han, but he changed his surname to avoid a vendetta. He became a local officer in the commandery, and was noted his strength and ability as a fighting man.

Recruited to the staff of Ding Yuan, Inspector of Bing province, in 189 Zhang Liao accompanied Ding Yuan to Luoyang for He Jin's demonstration of strength against the eunuchs. He was sent to raise troops north of the Yellow River and collected a thousand men, but by the time he returned to the capital He Jin had been destroyed and Dong Zhuo had taken over power, killing Ding Yuan as a potential rival. Zhang Liao nonetheless took service with Lü Bu, assassin of his former master.

As Lü Bu was driven from the capital in 192, Zhang Liao accompanied him to the east. He became Chancellor of Lu in Xu province and was then named Administrator of Beidi; the latter title was meaningless, for Lü Bu had no hope of control in that distant region. He assisted Gao Shun to defeat Liu Bei and Cao Cao's general Xiahou Dun in 198, but when Cao Cao himself destroyed Lü Bu, Zhang Liao brought his men to surrender. He was appointed a General of the Household and enfeoffed as a secondary marquis.

Distinguishing himself on several occasions, Zhang Liao was promoted major-general, and after the defeat of Yuan Shao in 200 he was sent east again to take over Lu kingdom. In 201 he accompanied Xiahou Yuan to attack Chang Xi in Donghai. As their supplies were getting low, they were going to retreat, but Zhang Liao suggested that Chang Xi might be ready to surrender. He went on embassy alone, treated Chang Xi and his wife with respect and courtesy, and indeed persuaded him to submit.

Zhang Liao then joined the campaign against Yuan

Shao's sons Yuan Tan and Yuan Shang in Ji province, and in 203 he was sent to take control of Zhao and Changshan, where he obtained the surrender of several leaders of the old Black Mountain bandit group. In 204 he took part in the final destruction of Yuan Tan, then led a separate expedition to the eastern coast, where he defeated Liu Yi and others who had been raiding across the sea from Liaodong. As he returned to Ye city Cao Cao came out in person to welcome him, and Zhang Liao was awarded a full marquisate.

Now likewise a full general, Zhang Liao was sent south through Yingchuan to face Liu Biao in Jing province. As Cao Cao was planning his northern campaign against Tadun and the Wuhuan allies of Yuan Xi and Yuan Shang in 207, Zhang Liao warned of the potential danger from Liu Biao and his associate Liu Bei, but he accompanied the army and commanded the van in the victory at White Wolf Mountain.

On return from the north, Zhang Liao was again stationed in Yingchuan. His colleagues Yu Jin and Yue Jin were in the same area, but the three could not cooperate and Cao Cao was obliged to send his Registrar Zhao Yan to enforce agreement. Soon afterwards, as Cao Cao invaded Jing province and received the surrender of Liu Biao's son Liu Zong, Zhang Liao was given command of one of seven divisions in Nanyang under Zhao Yan, now Area Commander.

A year later Zhang Liao accompanied Cao Cao's main army in his offensive against Sun Quan across the Huai, and was sent with a detached column against the bandits Chen Lan and Mei Cheng in Lujiang. Yu Jin, leading a second troop, forced the surrender of Mei Cheng, but as soon as he had withdrawn Mei Cheng brought his men to join Chen Lan, and the combined force took refuge in the hills. Advancing into the wilderness, Zhang Liao attacked the enemy's stronghold and took the heads of their leaders. He was now granted the Staff of Authority and his fief was increased in value.

As Cao Cao withdrew from direct attack against Sun Quan, he left Zhang Liao, Yue Jin and Li Dian with some seven thousand men to hold the city of Hefei in Jiujiang, guarding the line of the Huai from Sun Quan's attack across the Yangzi. In 215, as Cao Cao was attacking Zhang Lu in Hanzhong, Sun Quan brought a major army against Hefei. For such a contingency, Cao Cao had left instructions that Yue Jin should hold the city while Zhang Liao and Li Dian operated outside. At first the commanders felt they had too few men to divide and expose their forces in such a fashion, but Zhang Liao urged the policy and was supported by Li Dian, who had in the past been an enemy and a rival.

Zhang Liao gathered eight hundred volunteers, held a feast to confirm their comradeship, and led them against Sun Quan. Breaking the enemy lines, they threw them into utter confusion and threatened Sun Quan himself. The Wu attack was disrupted, the Wei forces became confident, and Sun Quan withdrew after a siege of only ten days. Zhang Liao harassed the retreat, and a sudden attack at a river crossing almost captured Sun Quan. It is said there was sickness in the Wu camp, which may have explained part of the debacle, but it was an embarrassment to Sun Quan as a war leader, and he never commanded another major campaign.

In 217 Cao Cao returned for another offensive. This too was unsuccessful, but as he withdrew he left his leading general Xiahou Dun with Zhang Liao and a number of other divisional officers. Zhang Liao was stationed with Zang Ba in Lujiang, facing Huan city, held by Wu. The threat of these garrisons persuaded Sun Quan to make formal submission to Wei.

In 219, as Guan Yu attacked northwards in Jing province, Zhang Liao and his colleagues were called to assist. By the time they arrived the emergency was over, but Cao Cao came out to meet Zhang Liao, and transferred him to Chen commandery. After Cao Cao died early in the following year, his successor Cao Pi named Zhang Liao as General of the Van, awarding him silk and grain, while his elder brother Zhang Fan and one of Zhang Liao's sons were granted enfeoffment.

Soon afterwards Zhang Liao was sent back to camp at Hefei, but he was again raised in fief and his mother was awarded a special carriage and a mounted escort.

When Cao Pi took the imperial title in 220 he awarded Zhang Liao additional revenues, and Zhang Liao was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele. When he came to court at Luoyang in 221 Cao Pi received him in private audience, seeking his advice on how to attack Sun Quan. He had a residence built for him at the capital, and granted his mother an apartment in the imperial palace. For his part, Zhang Liao gathered volunteers to prepare an attack on Wu.

Sun Quan proclaimed his formal independence in the following year, and Zhang Liao went with other generals under Cao Xiu to attack across the lower Yangzi. Taken ill, he was cared for by the emperor's own physician and Cao Pi came to visit him. He recovered slightly, and took part in the defeat of the enemy general Lü Fan, but died soon afterwards. -SGZ 17:517-20*, LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:196.

Zhang Liao 張遼, mother of: see the Lady Zhang IV.

Zhang Lin 張林. A county magistrate in Changshan in the early 80s, Zhang Lin was recommended for appointment to the Imperial Secretariat by Dou Xian, brother of the empress. Emperor Zhang asked Chen Chong about him, and Chen Chong observed that Zhang Lin had ability, but was greedy and corrupt. Zhang Lin was nonetheless granted the position.

About this time the government of Emperor Zhang was concerned that official revenue was inadequate because of the high prices of grain and silk. Zhang Lin argued that the reason for imbalance was an over-supply and thus comparative cheapness of money. He recommended that coins should be hoarded in the government treasuries and taxes made payable in cloth and silk, which should be used exclusively as the medium of exchange; this would change the balance and reduce prices. He also proposed that the court should make use of the jewels and precious goods which came as tribute from the far south and southwest. On a larger scale and perhaps more practically, he urged the re-introduction of state monopolies on salt and official trading in other commodities on the model of the junshu 均輸 system of Emperor Wu of Former Han, whereby government used tax revenues to compete with private merchants and control aspects of general commerce.

There was opposition to this plan, notably from Zhang Lin's senior colleague in the Secretariat Zhu Hui. The proposal was shelved, but it was revived about 85 and received the emperor's approval. Zhu Hui returned to the debate, with Confucian argument that it was wrong for the government to engage so deeply in trade, and traditional gentry opposition to official monopolies. Emperor Zhang angrily rejected Zhu Hui's protests and Zhang Lin's proposals were adopted, but they were abolished again soon afterwards.

In 87 the Grand Commandant Zheng Hong charged Zhang Lin with personal corruption, and private association with Dou Xian. He was dismissed. -HHS 33/23:1156, 43/33:1460-61; Yang 63:188-189.

Zhang Ling 張陵. Son of Zhang Weibo and grandson of Zhang Bin'gong, he died young and was buried with them. -LS 13:9b-10a.

Zhang Ling 張陵 or Zhang Daoling 道陵; Pei. About 140 Zhang Ling migrated from the east of the empire to Yi province, where he established a sect of popular religion in the western hill country. There were several such groups in the region at the time, while Zhang Ling's homeland in the region of the Huai was likewise a centre of esoteric beliefs. It appears that his teaching was based upon the use of written charms and amulets.

It is frequently said that Zhang Ling was the founder of the Five Dou of Rice sect 五斗米道, but it is possible that was a separate group until its forcible take-over by Zhang Ling's grandson Zhang Lu [see also sub Zhang Xiu]. Zhang Ling in any case passed on his teachings to his son Zhang Heng, and Zhang Ling, Zhang Heng and Zhang Lu are regarded as the founding Celestial Masters 天師 of the modern Taoist church. -HHS 75/65:2435-37*, SGZ 8:263; deC 89:557, deC 90:357-359, deC 96:83-84.

Zhang Ling 張陵 [Chuzhong 處沖]; Shu/Henan. Elder son of Zhang Kai, Zhang Ling may have been registered, like his father and grandfather, as a man from Shu commandery, and he is recorded as such in Huayang guo zhi. Like his father, however, he resided in the region of the capital and, as we see below he was nominated for office by the Intendant of Henan, indicating he was a citizen of that territory.

About 152 Zhang Ling was a member of the Imperial Secretariat. At the court held for the New Year, the General-in-Chief Liang Ji attended the ceremony with a sword at his waist. Zhang Ling denounced him, ordered him to leave and had the guards in attendance remove the weapon. Liang Ji knelt to seek pardon, but Zhang Ling would not relent, and he sent in a memorial that the matter should be referred as a criminal case to the Minister of Justice. An imperial edict ordered Liang Ji to pay a fine amounting to a full year's salary; all the officials were impressed by Zhang Ling's courageous stand.

Zhang Ling had originally been nominated for commissioned office by the Intendant of Henan Liang Buyi, Liang Ji's younger brother, and Liang Buyi was predictably angry that Zhang Ling had turned against the family of his patron in such a fashion. When he taxed him, Zhang Ling replied that it was only by fulfilling his official responsibilities that he could repay the duty he owed his patron. Liang Buyi was suitably embarrassed. -HHS 36/26:1243-44*, HYGZ.12:213, XC 2:1b-2a [this last describes Zhang Ling as a man from Qinghe, but is surely not correct].

1066 Zhang Ling

During the First Faction Incident of 166/167 we are told that a certain Zhang Ling, a member of the Imperial Secretariat, was commended to Emperor Huan by Dou Wu; he is not mentioned again. Given the dating, it is not certain this is the same man, but Dou Wu is also said to have praised Bian Shao, who had likewise been active in the 140s and 150s. Both citations may be anachronistic. -HHS 69/59:2240, XC 2:1b-2a.

Zhang Ling 張陵; Chen. In the early 200s Zhang Ling and his cousin Zhang Jian were kidnapped by bandits. Zhang Ling's father Zhang Fan went to beg for them, and the bandits handed Zhang Ling over. Zhang Fan then offered to leave Zhang Ling if they would only release Zhang Jian. Admiring this, the kidnappers let both boys go. -SGZ 11:337.

Zhang Lixiu 張禮脩, the Lady; Hanzhong. The Lady was married to Zhao Song, but her husband's aunt, evidently the senior woman of the family, treated her badly. Though the Lady made no protest, her parents found out, and the aunt realised her fault and began to show affection. The neighbours were most impressed.

The aunt later became ill and died, but urged her own daughter to entrust herself to the Lady Zhang. After Zhao Song died a hero's death against the Rice Rebels 米賊 in 190, the enemy came to threaten the family. The Lady told them that there was sickness, and they went away.

The Lady remained a widow, but brought up the children in her father's household. -HYGZ 10C:172.

Zhang Long 張隆. Administrator of Guiyang in 25, when Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu, took the imperial title and the Gengshi Emperor was trapped in Chang'an, Zhang Long attacked Liu Xin, Administrator of Yuzhang appointed by the Gengshi Emperor. Liu Xin was defeated and went to surrender to Guangwu at Luoyang.

Zhang Long remained independent in Guiyang until 29. As Cen Peng, Guangwu's general in Jing province, prepared to attack Gongsun Shu, he issued summons to all the administrators south of the Yangzi, and Zhang Long sent his son Ye with a contingent to assist in the campaign. He was made a full marquis and Zhang Ye was also enfeoffed. -HHS 14/4:566, 17/7:659.

Zhang Long 張隆 or Li Long 李隆. Minister of the Household under the claimant imperial regime of Gongsun Shu, he joined his colleague Chang Shao the Minister of Ceremonies in urging their master to acknowledge Emperor Guangwu of Han. As Gongsun Shu, however, insisted upon his imperial claim, the two men are said to have died of grief 以憂死 soon afterwards – surely a euphemism for enforced suicide. None of Gongsun Shu's officials dared raise the proposal again.

Dating is uncertain: HYGZ says the discussion took place in 35, after Guangwu had begun his final campaign and sent a letter calling on Gongsun Shu to surrender, but the text is corrupt; the incident probably took place in 30, when it appears Lai Xi and Ma Yuan came on an embassy. See HYGZJBTZ:335.

After the destruction of Gongsun Shu at the end of 36, Guangwu gave Zhang Long and Chang Shao posthumous recognition as ministers of his own court, and had them reburied with appropriate honours. -HHS 13/3:542-44 [Zhang Long], HYGZ 5:68-69 [Li Long]. Zhang Long 張隆. A former officer of the Bureau of Astronomy, during the reign of Emperor Ming Zhang Long was ordered to investigate whether the Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] system would be superior to the Taichu 太初 [Grand Beginning] calendar which was currently in use. His report was negative.

In 85, however, the Sifen calendar was nonetheless introduced, and when Jia Kui presented Li lun 歷論, his "Essay on the Calendar" in the early 90s, he claimed that Zhang Long's calculations had been mistaken. -HHS 92/2:3030 and see sub Li Fan.

Zhang Long 張龍. In 195 Zhang Long was in the service of Li Jue, who had quarrelled with Guo Si and held Emperor Xian hostage in Chang'an. Zhang Long and his colleague Zhang Bao secretly changed sides and let in an attack by Guo Si; it was not successful. -HHS 72/62:2337.

Zhang Lu 張路; Guangling. A pirate chieftain on the lower Yangzi about 120, Zhang Lu was dealt with by the Administrator Yuan Liang II. -LS 6:6a.

Zhang Lu 張魯 [Gongqi 公旗/祺]; Pei/Shu. Zhang Lu's grandfather Zhang Ling is said to have come from Pei, but migrated to the west about 140. His son Zhang Heng is said to have succeeded to Zhang Ling's teaching and passed it on to Zhang Lu. These three are identified as the patriarchs of the modern Taoist church, but the genealogy is uncertain, and there is great confusion about the origins and nature of Zhang Lu's teaching and his relationship with Zhang Xiu q. v. and below.

Soon after Liu Yan came as Governor to Yi province in 188, it appears that he fell under the influence of the Lady Zhang, widow of Zhang Heng and mother of Zhang Lu, who was herself an expert in spiritual matters. In 190 he gave official positions to Zhang Lu and Zhang Xiu, also a religious leader, and sent them to attack the Administrator of Hanzhong Su Gu, whom he regarded as an impediment to his authority. Zhang Lu and Zhang Xiu killed Su Gu and took over his territory, but they then established a degree of independence and cut the road from Yi province to the imperial capital. Though he had lost control of Hanzhong, Liu Yan was not entirely dissatisfied with the situation: he took no action against the "rebels," while the Lady Zhang and other members of her family remained at his court as hostages for restrained behaviour by Zhang Lu.

At some stage in the 190s Zhang Lu appears to have killed Zhang Xiu, and after Liu Yan's death in 194 he showed small respect for his son and successor Liu Zhang, eventually rejecting his authority. Liu Zhang had held Zhang Lu's mother and other kinsmen hostage at his capital Chengdu, but he was provoked into killing her. As defiance turned to open hostility, Zhang Lu occupied the north of Ba commandery and withstood attacks from Liu Zhang's Administrator Pang Xi. By 200 he was essentially independent.

Zhang Lu had established a theocratic state, with religious Libationers 祭酒 holding civil authority. Like many others of the time, his doctrine emphasised confession of sins and the use of charms to cure illness, accompanied by a donation of five dou [ten litres] of rice, from which came the popular name of the Five Dou of Rice sect 五斗米道: see also sub Zhang Xiu. Minor wrongdoers were required to take part in public works, notably on the roads, which were well maintained and provided with pavilions for the refreshment of travellers; wine, however, was forbidden. Many crimes were not punished until the third offence, presumably to give the spirits opportunity to inflict their own penalties of ill health.

Numbers of refugees came to Zhang Lu from other troubled regions, and when he later sent formal tribute to the nominal court of Han he received title as a General of the Household and Administrator of Hanning commandery, a new name for Hanzhong. Some of his followers urged him to take title as a king, but he resisted the temptation and his modesty later served him in good stead.

In 211 Cao Cao began operations against Zhang Lu, though his initial enterprise stirred up the north-western warlords and he was obliged to settle them first. At the same time, the threat from Cao Cao worried Liu Zhang, and he called Liu Bei from Jing province, hoping he could take Zhang Lu's territory before Cao Cao did. In fact, Liu Bei did very little against Zhang Lu but instead turned on Liu Zhang, and in 214 he took over as warlord of Yi province.

For his part, Zhang Lu did not join the leaders of the northwest in their opposition to Cao Cao, but he received Ma Chao when he was defeated and driven away. He gave him office, and was prepared to have his daughter marry him, but was then persuaded that he was unreliable and treated him with more caution. In 214 he allowed Ma Chao some troops for an attempt to recapture the north, but when was unsuccessful Zhang Lu refused him more support., Ma Chao went to join Liu Bei.

In 215 Cao Cao came with force. Zhang Lu was willing to surrender. His brother Zhang Wei attempted to oppose the invaders but was heavily defeated, Zhang Lu then sealed his treasury and other stores, left them for Cao Cao, and took refuge with allied tribespeople. Cao Cao sent messages of reassurance and at the end of the year Zhang Lu came to submit. Generously received, he was named a general and enfeoffed as a marquis, while his five sons were similarly honoured and his daughter was married to Cao Cao's son Yu.

Zhang Lu, his family, and his leading associates were brought to the east, and Zhang Lu died at Ye city in 216. -HHS 75/65:2435-37*, SGZ 8:263-66*; Eichhorn 55, Welch 66:113-116, deC 89:557-558, deC 90:356-361, deC 96:83-84, 306-307, 490-497, Goodman 96:82, Liu 2006.

Zhang Man 張滿 (d.27); Henan. A warlord in the hill country south of Luoyang, Zhang Man had imperial pretensions: he claimed to have a favourable prognostication and he offered sacrifice to Heaven and Earth.

In 26 Zhang Man was attacked by Guangwu's general Zhai Zun, who surrounded his headquarters and drove off an attack by some bandit groups which sought to come to his aid. Early in 27 Zhang Man was taken and killed, together with his wife and children.

1068 Zhang Man

He remarked at that time that his omens had proved false. -HHS 1A:28, 32, 20/10:739; Bn 59:150-151, 235.

Zhang Man 張璠 is probably a miswriting for Zhang Tuan 張湍 q.v. -HYGZ 1:5, 10B:145, 12:219.

Zhang Mancheng 張曼成 (d.184); Nanyang. A leader of local Yellow Turbans, in 184 Zhang Mancheng killed the Administrator Chu Gong and besieged Wan city, but he was defeated and killed by the succeeding Administrator Qin Jie. -HHS 71/61:2309.

Zhang Mao 張卯 see Zhang Ang 張印.

Zhang Meng 張猛 [Shuwei 叔威] (d.210?); Dunhuang >Hongnong: see sub Zhang Huan. Zhang Meng was a son of Zhang Huan. His father was Administrator of Wuwei when his mother was pregnant. She dreamt that she was climbing a tower and singing, while carrying the insignia of his office. A diviner interpreted the dream as indicating that she would bear a son who would die upon that tower, and the prophecy was fulfilled as described below.

In 194 the commanderies of the far west, which had been cut off by the rebellion in Liang province, were established as a separate Yong 雍 province. Handan Shang was sent out as Inspector and Zhang Meng, who had served as Officer of Merit in Hongnong, was made Administrator of Wuwei on account of his father's past connection. According to HHS 65/55, Zhang Meng killed Handan Shang but the provincial troops he had commanded came to take vengeance. Realising he would be taken, Zhang Meng climbed the tower, set fire to himself and died. The annals of HHS 9 date the death of Handan Shang to 206.

SGZ 18 PC quotes another account from Wei lue, which tells how Handan Shang and Zhang Meng, men of the same age, had always annoyed one another, and when they were on the road to the west together they quarrelled. Handan Shang intended to kill Zhang Meng, but Zhang Meng took him prisoner and later killed him instead. In the following year Zhang Meng was attacked by the rebels of Liang province. His troops deserted him, and he killed himself on the tower as foretold. Wei lue implies that the quarrel and killing came soon after the two men arrived in the west, but dates all the events to 209 and 210. Another extract from Wei lue, in SGZ 15 PC, says that the attack on Zhang Meng was led by the veteran leader Han Sui.

A third variation appears in the biography of Pang Yu, which says that after he had killed Handan Shang Zhang Meng ordered that no-one should attend his body under pain of execution. Pang Yu, however, an Attendant Officer stationed in Jincheng, left his post to carry out the mourning rites, then went to Zhang Meng's residence in hope of killing him. Recognising his sense of loyalty, and with some remorse for his treatment of Handan Shang, Zhang Meng did not put Pang Yu to death.

It seems probable that Zhang Meng killed Handan Shang in 206, but was not destroyed by his men at that time. He remained in command at Wuwei until the attack from Liang province in 210. -HHS 9:384, 65/55:2144, SGZ 18:547-48, 15:476; deC 96:351.

Zhang Mengchang 張孟嘗. Wang Chong refers to Zhang Mengchang, Administrator of Yulin, as a man with wide knowledge of things ancient and modern. He was probably a contemporary, living in the first century. -Lun heng 11; Forke 11:106.

Zhang Mengcheng 張孟成; Zhuo. XTS 72C:2675 says that Zhang Mengcheng was a son of Zhang Yu, and grandfather of the great minister Zhang Hua 華 of Jin. It also gives him title as Marquis of Feiru 肥如侯, a county in Liaoxi; the significance of this is uncertain.

Zhang Miao 張妙; Runan. During a drunken frolic after a wedding party about 80, Zhang Miao tied up his friend Du Shi in such a way that he died. The case was brought to the Excellency Bao Yu, who found that acts committed while a man was drunk should be considered as a joke, that there had been no intention to kill, and that Zhang Miao should be spared the death penalty. -FSTY 3f:107.

Zhang Miao 張邈 [Mengzhuo 孟卓] (d.195); Dongping. As a young man Zhang Miao was a celebrated adventurer, generous to his retainers. He joined the offices of the Excellencies, graded First Class, and became a Commandant of Cavalry. During the late 160s the reformists and students of the University included him in their lists of popular heroes.

In 189 Zhang Miao was named Administrator of Chenliu by Dong Zhuo, but then joined the eastern alliance against him. He was an old friend of both Yuan Shao and Cao Cao, but he criticised Yuan Shao's arrogance, and Yuan Shao urged Cao Cao to kill him. Cao Cao refused, and trusted Zhang Miao even with his own family, though Zhang Miao remained uncertain how long this relationship could last.

In 194, encouraged by Chen Gong and supported by his brother Zhang Chao, Zhang Miao turned against Cao Cao while he was engaged on his second campaign into Xu province. The conspirators called Lü Bu to take over Yan province, and they swiftly gained much of the territory. The enterprise, however, was ultimately unsuccessful, and in 195 Zhang Miao and Lü Bu were forced to flee to Liu Bei in Xu province.

Zhang Miao left his family with his brother Zhang Chao at Yongqiu city in Chenliu. As Cao Cao attacked, Zhang Miao went to seek aid from Yuan Shu, but was killed by his own men. Cao Cao took Yongqiu and destroyed the whole clan. -SGZ 7:221-22.

Zhang Min 張敏 [Boda 伯達] (d.112); Hejian. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt in 77, Zhang Min held a number of appointments, and in 80 he joined the Imperial Secretariat.

About this time there was the case of a man who killed another for insulting his father. In a show of leniency, Emperor Zhang pardoned him, and a Statute against Insult and Abuse 輕侮法 was proclaimed. Zhang Min objected, but his views were not accepted. Some time after Emperor Zhang's death in 88 Zhang Min returned to the debate: it was right for sons to avenge their fathers, and rulers of the past had been generous and humane, but such principles should not be formalised as precedents 科. Emperor He later changed the policy.

About 95 Zhang Min joined the Grand Commandant Zhang Pu in protest against the complex New Rituals 新禮, which had been presented to Emperor Zhang by the scholar Cao Bao and used for the capping ceremony of Emperor He in 91. They criticised Cao Bao for having confused the procedures laid down by the sages, and called for his execution. The emperor did not accept the recommendation, but Cao Bao's system was in practice largely abandoned.

In 97 Zhang Min was appointed Director of Retainers and in 99 he became Administrator of Runan. He governed smoothly and effectively, maintained just punishments, and was known for good principles and competence. He was later dismissed for some fault, but in 106, after the Dowager Deng became regent following the death of Emperor He, Zhang Min was reappointed, first in the holding position of a Consultant and then as Administrator of Yingchuan.

In 107 Zhang Min was appointed Excellency of Works. In this high position, he maintained the laws but took no initiatives. After three years he asked to retire on grounds of ill health, but was refused permission. He then fainted twice during the Great Archery ceremony in the spring of 112, and in the summer he was allowed to leave office. He died of illness at home soon afterwards. -HHS 44/34:1502-04*.

Zhang Min 張敏; Nanyang. Formerly a Chief Clerk to the Grand Commandant, Zhang Min was remembered with a stele. -SJZ 29:13a.

Zhang Min 張旻. About 208 Zhang Min was sent by Shi Xie to take tribute to the Han court under Cao Cao at Xu 徐 city. -SGZ Wu 4:1192.

Zhang Ming 張明. A Palace Counsellor, Zhang Ming was sent to Jiangxia in 29 to grant insignia as a general to Zang Gong. -HHS 18/8:692.

Zhang Ming 張明; Guanghan. Zhang Ming killed the gentleman Ru Kun. Ru Kun's friend Yang Kuan, however, captured and bound Zhang Ming, then sent him to Ru Kun's household to confess. -HYGZ 10B: 150.

Zhang Mu 張胤 [Xuanguong 玄公]; Jianwei>Wu. A brother of Zhang Yin, and a distant descendant of the great minister Zhang Liang 良 at the beginning of Former Han, early in Later Han Zhang Mu became Administrator of Shu commandery. He later moved his formal residence to Wu. -XTS 72C:2708.

Zhang Mu 張穆. Formerly an officer under Lian Dan 廉丹, Governor of Yi province in the time of Wang Mang, Zhang Mu became Administrator of Shu commandery. Lian Dan's son died in the west, and about 40 Lian Dan's grandson Lian Fan came to take his father's body back to his homeland near Chang'an. Zhang Mu offered assistance, but Lian Fan insisted upon arranging the transport with his own retainers.

In 42 Zhang Mu was attacked by the mutineer Shi Xin and was driven from his capital at Chengdu. The rebellion was put down by Guangwu's general Wu Han, but we are not told how much longer Zhang Mu held his appointment. -HHS 32/21:1101, 18/8:683.

Zhang Mu 張牧; Nanyang. In 165 Zhang Mu was Officer for Criminals 賊曹吏 at the commandery capital, Wan city. He and his colleague Cen Zhi urged the arrest of Zhang Fan, a wealthy merchant who was alleged to have used his influence at court to act unlawfully in the local community. The Administrator Cheng Jin eventually approved the arrest, but there was an amnesty current at the time. Despite this, and without reference to the throne, Cheng Jin killed Zhang Fan and more than two hundred of his kinsman, clients and retainers.

1070 Zhang Mu

Cheng Jin was arrested and died in prison, but Zhang Mu and Cen Zhi escaped to the east. They later benefited from an amnesty themselves, and were able to return home. -HHS 67/57:2212; deC 89:70.

Zhang Mu 張睦. In 220 Zhang Mu was Administrator of Xihai commandery, on the upper reaches of the Xining River. He was attacked by a rebel alliance under Zhang Jin of Zhangye, but was relieved by Guanqiu Xing, Administrator of Wuwei. -SGZ 28:761-62.

Zhang Na 張納 [Zilang 子郎]; Bohai. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Zhang Na became a gentleman cadet, then joined the Imperial Secretariat and was later a magistrate in Ganling. He left that post on grounds of ill health, but later accepted appointment to the offices of the Grand Commandant, graded First Class and became an officer of the Censorate.

When there was banditry in Yang province, probably in 189, Zhang Na was given command of operations; he was successful and was rewarded with a village marquisate. He later became Administrator of Ba commandery, and in 193 seventy-five of his officers set up a stele in his honour. -LS 5:10b-15a.

Zhang Nan 張南. Officers under Yuan Xi in You province in 205, Zhang Nan and Jiao Chu rebelled and drove him away. Cao Cao rewarded them with enfeoffment. -SGZ 1:27, 6:206.

Zhang Nan 張南 [Wenjin 文進] (d.222). Having joined Liu Bei when he was in Jing province in the early 200s, Zhang Nan was commander of the vanguard as Liu Bei attacked down the Yangzi against Wu in 221. He was killed in the defeat which followed. -SGZ Shu 15:1088, SGZ Wu 13:1346; Fang 52:100-102.

Zhang Ning 張寧/寧; Shu. A private scholar, Zhang Ning had several students. -HYGZ 10B:149, 12:215.

Zhang Niuju 張牛角 [Oxhorn Zhang] (d.185); Zhongshan/Boling. A bandit leader in the Taihang Mountains, he was killed in a raid on Julu, but left his command to Chu/Zhang Yan. -SGZ 8:261, but cf. Qing Niuju 青牛角 [Green Oxhorn].

Zhang, Oxhorn 張牛角 see Zhang Niuju 張牛角.

Zhang Pan 張磐; Runan. Son of Zhang Fan, he was the father of Zhang Ji and Zhang Xi. -HHS 45/35:1534.

Zhang Pan 張磐 [Zishi 子石]; Danyang. In 165 Zhang Pan was appointed Inspector of Jiaozhi. When remnants of a group of bandits formerly commanded by Hu Lan fled into his territory from Jing province, Zhang Pan drove them back. Du Shang, now Inspector of Jing province, had earlier been rewarded for destroying Hu Lan's band, and he was embarrassed by their return. He sent in a false report that this was a new group out of Cangwu, and Zhang Pan was sent to prison for having allowed them to spread from his territory.

Zhang Pan protested his innocence, and even when an amnesty was issued he refused to leave prison until his case was heard. The Minister of Justice investigated, and Du Shang was indeed found to be at fault. Zhang Pan was admired for his honesty.

He was then appointed Administrator of Lujiang. A strict man, he had an attendant flogged for giving his son some oranges, claiming that he was attempting to bribe the boy.

On another occasion Zhang Pan gave a banquet to welcome the new magistrate Tao Qian, whose father had been a friend, but his courtesy was rejected. -HHS 38/28:1286-87, SGZ 8:248, XC 8:7b-8a; deC 89:61-62.

Zhang [Pingzhong] 張平仲; Zhongshan. A stele was set up at this man's tomb about 180. He had formerly been a Consultant and then Administrator of Shanggu. -SJZ 11:18b. [This stele is probably cited at LS 27:2b.]

Zhang [Pingzi] 張平子; Nanyang. A man of literary and scholarly ability, during the reign of Emperor An he assisted Liu Qianqiu in the preliminary compilation of a comprehensive guide to the offices of Han. He later became a member of the Imperial Secretariat and was then Court Astronomer.

In the time of Emperor Shun Zhang Pingzi became a Palace Attendant and was in charge of collation in the imperial library. He completed Zhouguan jieshuo 周官解說, a study of the official system of the Zhou dynasty, and intended to prepare one for Han, following the work already done with Liu Qianqiu. He was then transferred to be Chancellor of Hejian, and the work went no further.

Zhang Pingzi is praised by Cao Pi in his Lun wen 論文 "Essay on Literature." -HHS 114/24:3556, HHSJ 80/70B:2870 Hui Dong, Guwen yuan 19:13a-14b.

Zhang Pu 張酺 [Menghou 孟侯] (d.104); Runan. Zhang Pu claimed descent from Zhang Ao 敖, King of Zhao in the time of the founding Emperor Gao of Former Han. He was a diligent student of the Classic of History under the celebrated New Text scholar Huan Rong. HHS 45/35 says that he also studied with his grandfather Zhang Chong, but DGHJ says that Zhang Chong was dead by the middle 20s. Since Zhang Pu died in 104 he can have benefited from Zhang Chong's teaching only as a very young child.

Zhang Pu later ran a private academy with hundreds of pupils. When Emperor Ming established the Palace School for Noble Families in 66, Zhang Pu was appointed Tutor for the History and took part in many discussions before the emperor. Admired for his ability to deal with difficult texts, he was made a gentleman cadet, was rewarded with robes and a chariot and horses, and later became a tutor to the Heir, Liu Da, future Emperor Zhang.

A man of strict morality, Zhang Pu spoke firmly against extravagance and waste, and his imperial pupil admired and respected him. When he came to the throne in 75, the new emperor made Zhang Pu a Palace Attendant and General of the Household, and in the following year Zhang Pu took part in the philosophical discussions on the Old Texts led by Jia Kui.

Later that year Emperor Zhang appointed Zhang Pu Administrator of Dong commandery. Concerned that his training as a Confucian scholar and experience in the imperial household had not prepared him for the real work of government, he sought to excuse himself, but the emperor encouraged his former teacher with a quotation from the History, rewarded him substantially, and insisted he take up his duties.

Despite his scholarly upbringing, Zhang Pu proved a strict administrator. He gave clear rewards and punishments, recruited a strong police force to break the power of the leading local families, and refused to allow any of his officers to ill-treat poor vagabonds, on the grounds that if they were provided with food and employment they would not offend the law.

Zhang Pu may have returned to the capital in 79 to take part in the Discussions at the White Tiger Hall, the imperial conference which confirmed the position of New Text Confucianism. Tjan 49, however, discounts the idea, and in any case Zhang Pu continued in his provincial office.

Emperor Zhang continued to express admiration for Zhang Pu, and when he made a join his personal staff and officials, and treated him with the courtesy owed by a student to his former teacher. He had him give a lecture on a chapter of the Classic of History, and only after that did he revert to the standard ceremonial of ruler and subject. He granted Zhang Pu special rewards and signs of favour, and everyone was impressed by his show of respect.

After fifteen years in Dong, early in the reign of Emperor He Zhang Pu was transferred to the neighbouring territory of Wei. About that time the Director of Retainers Zheng Ju, a native of Wei, had the Bearer of the Mace Dou Jing, brother of the regent Empress-Dowager, dismissed on account of the brutal conduct of his officers. Dou Jing was reinstated soon afterwards, and he sent his officer Xia Meng to Zhang Pu, claiming that Zheng Ju's brother, an officer in the commandery, was behaving unlawfully, that the whole family was tainted by misconduct, and that Zhang Ju should inflict punishment as a warning to all.

Zhang Pu was furious at such interference in his administration and at the attempt to involve him in a personal vendetta. He arrested Xia Meng and then reported the matter to Dou Jing's office, claiming to be concerned lest Xia Meng be harmed by members of the Zheng family. An order came promptly that Xia Meng was to be released on payment of a fine.

A short time later Zhang Pu was appointed Intendant of Henan, and again had to deal with Dou Jing. This time members of the Dou household attacked the police of the capital market-place, but were themselves arrested. Dou Jing sent five hundred of his official guards under the command of Hou Hai to attack the offices of the market, but Zhang Pu's own men, led by Yang Zhang, investigated the affair, arrested Hou Hai, and had him exiled to Shuofang.

Dou Jing now ordered that Yang Zhang and five of his colleagues should be transferred from the Henan administration to his own command, so he could also punish them with banishment. As Yang Zhang and the others asked Zhang Pu for help, Zhang Pu reported the matter to the throne; the Dowager Dou gave orders to protect them.

When the power of the Dou family was destroyed by Emperor He and his eunuch allies in 92, Zhang Pu sent in a memorial to apologise and explain his position as an officer of the former regime; but he also requested consideration for Dou Xiang, who had behaved far better than his brothers. The young ruler accepted his arguments, and though his brothers were obliged to kill themselves Dou Xiang was only ordered out to his fief.

In 93 Zhang Pu became Minister Coachman, and a few months later he was named Grand Commandant. In another display of reluctance, he claimed to be ill, and recommended Xu Fang the Administrator of Wei commandery in his stead. Emperor He, however, did not approve. He sent one of his eunuch attendants to enquire after Zhang Pu's health, taking presents and an award of 300,000 cash, and when Zhang Pu continued to make excuses he had the eunuchs apply persuasion to Zhang Pu's son Zhang Fan, then a gentleman cadet. Zhang Pu felt obliged to accept.

1072 Zhang Pu

About 95 Zhang Pu presented a series of memorials arguing against the complex New Rituals 新禮, which had been presented to Emperor Zhang by the scholar Cao Bao and had been used for the capping ceremony of Emperor He in 91. Zhang Pu and Zhang Min of the Imperial Secretariat claimed Cao Bao had confused the traditional procedures set down by the sages, and called for his execution. The emperor did not accept the recommendation, but Cao Bao's system was largely abandoned.

In 97 Zhang Pu investigated the claims of Liang Hu on behalf of his family, and recommended that the emperor should indeed recognise the late Honoured Lady Liang as his natural mother.

In 100 Zhang Pu became involved in a quarrel with the Director of Retainers Yan Cheng. Zhang Pu had made a private comment on the poor quality of some of the clerical officers under the Excellencies, and Yan Cheng used this casual remark to justify a major enquiry. As each accused the other of improper and abusive conduct, Emperor He called a full court assembly to resolve the affair. The Excellency Lü Gai argued that Zhang Pu should have known better than to attack the Director of Retainers, who was fully entitled to carry out an investigation, and that he had set a poor example to the empire. So Zhang Pu was dismissed.

Returning to his estates, Zhang Pu sent away his clients and students and lived in seclusion, but the official He Chang and others continued to praise his loyalty and public spirit at court, and the emperor remembered him with affection and approval. In 104 Zhang Pu was recalled as Minister of the Household, and in the autumn he was promoted Excellency over the Masses. He died a few weeks later.

As he lay on his deathbed, Zhang Pu mourned the fact that despite the high offices he had held and the trust he had been given as tutor to a ruler, he had not been able to extend full moral influence. He ordered that no temple should be established in his honour, but only a pavilion for sacrifices. Emperor He, however, showed the utmost respect, accompanied his funeral dressed in white silk, and awarded land for his tomb. -HHS 45/35:1528-34*, XC 2:11a; Tjan 49:160-162; MBeck 90:87.

Zhang Pu 張普. A stele of 173 from the region of Shu commandery tells how Zhang Pu and five colleagues, Libationers of the Rice Magicians 米巫祭酒, received a mysterious text. These men were evidently members of an early form of the Rice Sect which was later led by Zhang Lu. -LX 3:8a-9a.

Zhang Qi 張岐. A former Administrator of Lelang, in 191 Zhang Qi was sent by Han Fu, Yuan Shao and other leaders of the eastern alliance to offer the imperial title to Liu You. Liu You refused. -HHS 73/63:2355, SGZ 8: 241; see also sub Bi Yu.

Zhang Qian 張鉗 [Zi'an 子安]; Guanghan. Having been a student of Xie Pou in Jianwei, when his master died Zhang Qian personally built his tomb mound. Later Xie Pou's son was killed, and Zhang Qian avenged him. -HYGZ 10B:150.

Zhang Qian 張遷 [Gongfang 公方]; Chenliu. Having served as a local officer in his commandery and his province, Zhang Qian was invited to become a gentleman cadet and was then appointed as magistrate of a county in Dong commandery. When the Yellow Turban rebellion broke out in 184, his county was spared, and it was believed that this was due to his good administration. Transferred to Henei, he was equally successful, and in 186 a subscription stele was erected in his honour. -Nagata 94:252-54.

Zhang Qiao 張喬; Nanyang. As Inspector of Yi province in 117, Zhang Qiao took over military command from Yin Jiu against Qiang who had entered the territory from the north. He persuaded the invaders' local allies to make peace, and the enemy dispersed.

In 119 the non-Chinese people of Yizhou, Shu, Yuexi and Yongchang commanderies rebelled under the leadership of Fengli, destroying Chinese settlements and killing imperial officials. Zhang Qiao raised local troops and sent them under his Attendant Officer Yang Song, who defeated them and restored order. In 123 Zhang Qiao again took part in putting down a rebellion of non-Chinese in Yuexi.

In 138, when there was disturbance among the non-Chinese of Rinan, Zhang Qiao was appointed Inspector of Jiaozhi and went south with Zhu Liang the new Administrator of Jiuzhen, who also had experience in region. They settled the hill tribes by personal authority, military action and judicious bribery, and the region was at peace for several years.

Zhang Qiao later became Bearer of the Mace, chief of police at Luoyang. In the winter of 141/142, after the fatal defeat of Ma Yuan by the Qiang, he was named acting General of Chariots and Cavalry and sent to protect Chang'an with troops from the Northern Army and local levies. Late in 142, through the efforts of the Protector Zhao Chong, the emergency was reduced and Zhang Qiao's command was ended. -HHS 5:230, 6:268-72, 86/76:2838-39, 2853-54, 2857, 87/77:2896.

Zhang Quan 張權; Guangling. About 165, as a former officer of Xun Tan, Zhang Quan sought to attend his tomb. Xun Tan's grandson You, however, urged his uncle Xun Qu to investigate, and Zhang Quan was found to be a murderer fleeing justice. -SGZ 10:321.

Zhang Quan 張泉; Wuwei. Son of Zhang Xiu, he succeeded to his father's fief in 207. In 219 he took part in the conspiracy of Wei Feng. He was executed and the marquise was abolished. -SGZ 8:263.

Zhang Rang 張讓 (d.189); Yingchuan. A eunuch, when Zhang Rang was young he entered the harem of Emperor Huan and became an Attendant at the Yellow Gates. In the time of Emperor Ling he was promoted to be a Regular Attendant, received enfeoffment, and held great influence at court. Emperor Ling described Zhang Rang as his father and his colleague Zhao Zhong as his mother.

In 185 there was a great fire in the Southern Palace at Luoyang. Despite the damage done to the country by the recent rebellion of the Yellow Turbans, Zhang Rang and Zhao Zhong persuaded the emperor to levy a special land tax to pay for rebuilding, and when materials were sent in they falsely claimed they were unsatisfactory and forced down their price. The project was corrupted at every level, while Zhao Zhong and his fellows built themselves great mansions at the capital. Concerned that the emperor might see their massive constructions, they persuaded him that it would bring ill fortune if he climbed a tower, and so they were able to conceal their extravagance.

In 189 the eunuchs were under threat from the General-in-Chief He Jin. He persuaded his sister the Dowager to dismiss them from the palace, but another sister had married an adoptive son of Zhang Rang. Zhang Rang pleaded with his daughter-in-law that he and his colleagues should be allowed to return. She then spoke to her mother the Lady Xing, and she in turn persuaded the Dowager to allow the eunuchs back.

Soon afterwards, on 22 September, He Jin called again upon the Dowager. Zhang Rang and his colleagues had someone spy upon him and heard him urging her to agree to kill all the eunuchs. Zhang Rang and the others gathered several dozen followers and waylaid He Jin as he was leaving. Abusing him for his lack of gratitude for the help they had given his family, they killed him.

Zhang Rang and Duan Gui then composed an edict appointing their allies Fan Ling and Xu Xiang to office at the capital, and when members of the Secretariat asked to confirm this with He Jin, they showed them his head.

He Jin's officers now brought their troops to attack the palaces and slaughter the eunuchs. On 24 September Zhang Rang, Duan Gui and a few dozen followers fled the capital with the imperial children, the Little Emperor Liu Bian and his brother Liu Xie. They were pursued by Lu Zhi and a posse under Min Gong, who caught the fugitives at the Yellow River and killed Zhang Rang and his companions. -HHS 78/68:2534-37*, 69/59:2251-52; Bn 76:98-100, deC 89:191, deC 96:11-18.

Zhang Rao 張饒. A bandit of Ji province, about 192 Zhang Rao invaded Beihai and defeated the Administrator Kong Rong. -HHS 70/60:2263.

Zhang Ren 張任 (d.213); Shu. Though a man of poor family, Zhang Ren was ambitious and brave; he became an Assistant Officer under Liu Zhang the warlord Governor of Yi province.

As Liu Bei turned against Liu Zhang in 212, Zhang Ren and other commanders were sent to oppose him, but were defeated and driven back.

Zhang Ren was then at the defence of Luo city in Guanghan, and in the following year he was captured as he attempted a sortie. He refused to change sides, so Liu Bei killed him. -SGZ Shu 2:882-83.

Zhang Shao 張劭 [Yuanbo 元伯]; Runan. While attending the University at Luoyang, Zhang Shao became a close friend of Fan Shi of Shanyang. As they parted, Fan Shi agreed to visit him precisely two years later, and he was as good as his word.

Zhang Shao later became mortally ill. He was cared for by two friends, Zhi Junzhang and Yin Zizheng, but told them how much he regretted not seeing Fan Shi, whom he described as his "death friend" 死友 – they,

1074 Zhang Shao

by contrast, were his "life friends" 生友. When he died, he appeared to Fan Shi in a dream. At that time Fan Shi held local office in his commandery, and though the Administrator was sceptical he gave him permission to attend the funeral. The ceremony was due to begin before Fan Shi could arrive, but Zhang Shao's coffin became so heavy it could not be moved, and only when Fan Shi came did it become light again. More than a thousand people observed the phenomenon. -HHS 81/71:2676, XC 5:13b, XHS 5:13b-14a.

Zhang Shao 張少; Pingyuan. Zhang Shao's friend Hu Tan was unable to have proper intercourse with his wife, so he allowed Zhang Shao to couple with her in the hope she might bear a child. -FSTY 3f:108.

Zhang Shao 張紹; Ba. A local officer in 154, Zhang Shao joined his colleagues in urging the Administrator Dan Wang to send in a report describing the difficulty of maintaining control over the vast area of the commandery, and recommending that the territory be divided into smaller commanderies. The court did not agree. -HYGZ 1:5.

Zhang Shao 張紹; Zhuo. Zhang Shao was the second son of Zhang Fei, but his elder brother Bao died before their father, and Zhang Shao therefore succeeded to Zhang Fei's fief in 221. He later held court office and was appointed to the Secretariat of Shu. -SGZ Shu 6: 944.

Zhang Shen 張申; Hongnong. A local county officer in the 40s, Zhang Shou committed a number of crimes but had sufficient influence to cover them up. The Administrator Liu Xing later found out and punished him. All the territory was impressed and fearful. -HHS 14/4:556.

Zhang Shen 張慎. A eunuch Regular Attendant, in 102 Zhang Shen was commissioned by Emperor He to investigate a charge of witchcraft laid against his Empress Yin. With Chen Bao of the Imperial Secretariat, he interrogated the Empress and her grandmother the Lady Deng Zhu in the harem Prison of the Lateral Courts. They obtained confessions and the Empress was deposed. She and some kinfolk died, while others were exiled. -HHS 10A:417.

Zhang Shen 張參 see Zhang Can 張參 [2 entries].

Zhang Sheng 張盛 or Zhang Cheng. In 62 the officer of the Bureau of Astronomy Yang Cen reported to the throne that the Taichu 太初 [Grand Beginning] calendar, which had been in use since 104 BC, slightly adjusted by the Santong 三統 [Three Sequences] system of Liu Xin 劉歆 in the time of Wang Mang, was now quite inaccurate, so that the moon was out of kilter with the months. Emperor Ming set Yang Cen in charge of a special Office for the Phases and Eclipses of the Moon 弦望月食官, but at the same time he had his colleagues Zhang Sheng, Jing Fang and Bao Ye compare his calculations with the old Sifen 四分 [Quarter-Remainder] calendar. That proved more accurate than Yang Cen's system, and in 69 Zhang Sheng and Jing Bao took Yang Cen's place at the Office for the Moon.

This was the first time the Sifen system had been used for centuries, and Zhang Sheng and Jing Bao proved unable to calculate the adjustments needed for a full calendar of the year. The Taichu/Santong calendar therefore remained in use, with ad hoc changes to match the phases of the moon. -HHS 92/2:3025.

Zhang Sheng 張盛 or Zhang Cheng; Zhao. Eldest son of the Grand Commandant Zhang Yu, in 103 Zhang Sheng was made a gentleman cadet, and when his father died in 113 Zhang Sheng inherited his marquise.

About 140 Zhang Sheng was a member of the Imperial Secretariat. The reforms of Zuo Xiong had provided that Filial and Incorrupt nominees should be examined by the Excellencies and then by the Secretariat. Zhang Sheng suggested that the latter test might be abolished, but he was opposed by the Director Huang Qiong and the system was maintained. -HHS 44/34:1498-99, 61/51:3035, DGHJ 11:4a.

Zhang Sheng 張升 [Yanzhen 彥真] (121-169); Chenliu. Zhang Sheng's family claimed descent from Zhang Fang 放, a close favourite of Emperor Cheng of Former Han, but the lineage is questionable: see sub Zhang Chun. Fond of learning from the time he was young, Zhang Sheng had great literary ability, but was emotionally unrestrained: he took intense likes or dislikes for other people, regardless of rank, and claimed that life was too short for time-wasting courtesies and distinctions.

Zhang Sheng nonetheless became a senior staff officer in the commandery and was for some time an acting county magistrate. When one of the local officers was found guilty of taking bribes, Zhang Sheng had him killed. Someone questioned whether he should have used his brief authority in such a way, but Zhang Sheng cited Confucius as justification for appropriate action in any circumstances.

Zhang Sheng was then involved in Faction. He lost his post in the First Incident of 166/167, and in the Second Incident of 169 he was executed, aged forty-nine. A prolific composer, he left sixty pian of rhapsodies, hymns, eulogies, inscriptions and letters. -HHS 80/70B:2627-28*.

Zhang Sheng 張盛 or Zhang Cheng [Yuanzong 元宗]; Shu. Sons of the theocratic warlord Zhang Lu, when their father surrendered Hanzhong to Cao Cao in 215 Zhang Sheng and his brothers were granted fiefs. -SGZ 8:265 & JJ at 48a.

Zhang Shi 張時; Hedong. Administrator of Jingzhao for Cao Cao, Zhang Shi was an old friend of Du Ji, and when Du Ji came back from Jing province about 200 he appointed him as his Officer of Merit. Du Ji was later appointed Administrator of Hedong, and the two men met again as equal colleagues. -SGZ 16:494-96.

Zhang Shi 張世. In 218 Sun Quan was on a tiger-hunt when one of the beasts wounded his horse. As Sun Quan threw a lance at it, the tiger ran away, but his attendant/body-guard 常從 Zhang Shi speared and captured the animal. -SGZ Wu 2:1120.

Zhang Shiping 張世平; Zhongshan. A wealthy merchant, about 180 Zhang Shiping and his colleague Su Shuang went to Zhuo commandery to trade in horses. They met and were impressed by the fighting man Liu Bei, and gave him gold and other valuables so that he might recruit a large troop of followers. -SGZ Shu 2:872.

Zhang Shou 張壽; Langye. Youngest brother of Zhang Bu, during the troubles which accompanied the fall of Wang Mang the family established a local warlord regime, and when the Gengshi Emperor set up his government in 23 he named Zhang Shou as Administrator of Gaomi.

Zhang Shou shared his brothers' fortunes. He held command in the great army defeated by Geng Yan in Qi in 29, and accompanied the family to Luoyang after their surrender later that year. He did not, however, join the family's abortive attempt to escape to the southeast in 32, and may have died before that time.

Zhang Shou 張壽 [Zhongwu 仲吾] (89-168). A man of scholarly family, Zhang Shou was recommended Filial and Incorrupt. After probation as a gentleman cadet he became an Internuncio and then transferred to be chancellor of a county fief in Pei. Well respected, when he died at the age of eighty he was honoured with a stele. -LS 7:18a-20a, Nagata 94:166.

Zhang Shou 張壽 [Boxi 伯僖]; Guanghan. As a young man Zhang Shou became a junior officer in his native county. After the county Assistant Yang Fang was captured by raiders, probably about 110, Zhang Shou sold the family salt well for 300,000 cash, purchased five horses, and went in search of him. On the way he was robbed by the Qiang, but after several years he found the bandits, who took pity on his pleas and released Yang Fang.

As the commandery gave him local office and an imperial letter appointed him a county commandant in Nan commandery, Zhang Shou distributed the family property among his brothers. He later returned to Guanghan, where he was responsible for raising taxes of 3,500,000 cash per year; he died in senior local office. -HYGZ 10C:175.

Zhang Shu 張舒; Shangdang. In 25, as Bao Yong held out in Taiyuan for the lost cause of the Gengshi regime, he sent his younger brother Bao Sheng and his son-in-law Zhang Shu to capture Huangcheng county in Shangdang, which had been held by Guangwu's Administrator Tian Yi. In response, Tian Yi arrested Zhang Shu's family. Bao Yong later surrendered, and one trusts the hostages were released and reunited. -HHS 28/18A:975-76.

Zhang Shu? 張叔; Hanzhong. One reading of HYGZ 10C:172 suggests that the father of the Lady Zhang Lixiu had the personal name Shu.

Zhang Shuang 張爽. A local scholar, about 220 Zhang Shuang was an Assistant Officer for Education 勸學從事 in Yi province under Liu Bei. Following the abdication of Emperor Xian of Han he joined a petition which cited various works of divination and urged Liu Bei to claim the imperial title. -SGZ Shu 2:887.

Zhang [Shuji] 張叔紀, the Lady; Shu. Granddaughter of Zhang Ba, Zhang Shuji became the wife of Wang Zun VI of Guanghan and the mother of the celebrated scholar Wang Shang. She paid great attention to training in good conduct, and she and her mother-in-law, the Lady Yang Jin, and her stepmother-in-law, the Lady Wen Ji, were all celebrated for their excellent teaching.

When the Lady died a hymn was composed to her virtues. -HYGZ 10A:139.

Zhang [Shuliao] 張叔遼; Shu. About 160 Zhang Shuliao was one of a group of scholars gathered about Liu Zong. When Liu Zong held senior local office in his commandery and the province, he arranged for Zhang Shuliao and three of his colleagues to receive appointment in the imperial bureaucracy. Nothing is known about Zhang Shuliao's subsequent career. - HYGZ 10A:134-35.

1076 Zhang Shun

Zhang Shun 張順; Nanyang. A clerical officer of the commandery in 22, Zhang Shun was an early associate of Li Tong and his family in their plans for rebellion against Wang Mang. - DGHJ 1:2a; Bn 54:102.

Zhang Shun 張順. Former students of Chang Qia, after his death near Chang'an in 195 Zhang Shun and Zhai Deng took his body home to Shu. - HYGZ 10A:140.

Zhang Shuo 張朔; Yingchuan. Younger brother of the eunuch Zhang Rang, Zhang Shuo became a county magistrate in Henei. He governed with cruelty, but when Li Ying became Director of Retainers about 165 he fled back to the capital and took refuge in Zhang Rang's house. Li Ying then brought his men to break into the building, took Zhang Shuo to prison and then executed him.

Zhang Rang complained to Emperor Huan, who reprimanded Li Ying for putting a commissioned official to death without prior reference to the throne. When Li Ying justified his swift action, however, the ruler turned to Zhang Rang and observed, "Your brother was a criminal. What did the Director of Retainers do wrong?" Thereafter the eunuchs were afraid of Li Ying. - HHS 67/57:2194; deC 89:65. See also sub Zhang Yu 輿.

Zhang [Shuyuan] 張叔元 (d.77). Younger son of Zhang Changzhong and grandson of Zhang Bin'gong, he died at the same time as his father. His elder brother Yuanyi had them buried in the family tomb. - LS 13:9b-10a.

Zhang Si 張汜. In 34 Zhang Si was a county magistrate in Henan. He reported to the throne that the broken dykes on the Yellow River and the Vast Canal complex, which had not been repaired since the initial failure thirty years earlier, were causing frequent flooding, and that this was a source of trouble and resentment among the people. Emperor Guangwu ordered that repair work be carried out, but the neighbouring magistrate Yue Jun argued that the work was not essential and would be a misuse of resources at a time when the empire was still not yet settled. The program was abandoned. - HHS 76/66:2464; Bn 54:148. [This may be the same person as Zhang Fan 張汎/汜.]

Zhang Si 張汜 see Zhang Fan 張汎/汜; but note that this may be the same person as Zhang Si immediately above.

Zhang Song 張松 [Ziqiao 子喬] (d.212); Shu. In 208 Zhang Song succeeded his brother Zhang Su Attendant Officer to Liu Zhang, warlord Governor of Yi province. As Cao Cao took over Jing province Zhang Song was sent to him on embassy. This was the third such mission. On a previous occasion Cao Cao had used imperial authority to name Zhang Su as Administrator of Guanghan, but he had evidently tired of the pattern and he now was fully engaged in the pursuit of Liu Bei. Despite advice from his officers, he gave Zhang Song nothing, and he left disappointed.

Soon afterwards Cao Cao was defeated at the Red Cliffs, and Zhang Song then urged Liu Zhang to break with him and support Liu Bei. Liu Zhang did so.

Zhang Song, however, was also resentful of Liu Zhang, and he and his friend Fa Zheng secretly became agents for Liu Bei. In 211 they persuaded Liu Zhang to invite him into Yi province. When Liu Bei arrived, Zhang Song recommended that he arrest Liu Zhang and seize power at once. Liu Bei refused, but Zhang Song planned a rising at Chengdu in his support.

In the following year, as Liu Bei announced that he was returning to Jing province, Zhang Song wrote again to urge him to attack Liu Zhang. His brother Zhang Su, anxious not to be involved in such treachery, told Liu Zhang. Zhang Song was arrested and killed. - SGZ Shu 1:868, 2:881-82, HYGZ 5:72-75, 12:216; deC 96:399, 428-432, 444.

Zhang Su 張肅; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Zhang Su was a senior member of the group, and he may have been a kinsman of Zhang Jian. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. - HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Zhang Su 張肅; Shu. Zhang Su is described as a man of short stature and erratic conduct. He became Attendant Officer to Liu Zhang, warlord Governor of Yi province. As Cao Cao took over Jing province in 208, Liu Zhang sent Zhang Su with three hundred troops and a variety of tribute goods, and Cao Cao rewarded him with imperial appointment as Administrator of Guanghan.

In 212 Zhang Su's younger brother Zhang Song planned a rising at Chengdu in support of Liu Bei. Zhang Su warned Liu Zhang, and Zhang Song was arrested and killed. -SGZ Shu 1:868, 2:881-82, deC 96:444.

Zhang Sui 張睢 [Bozong 伯宗]; Nanyang. Formerly Assistant Officer for Water Control 河隄從事 in Jing province, in 156 Zhang Sui was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:17a.

Zhang Tai 張泰 Boqiang 伯彊; Hanzhong. Zhang Tai distinguished himself in the Dependent State of Guanghan. -HYGZ 12:233.

Zhang Tuan 張湍; Ba. Son of Zhang Xi, who was Administrator of Yuexi at the end of the first century, Zhang Tuan was noted for his fine conduct. About 120 the Administrator Wang Tang nominated him as Filial and Incorrupt.

Soon afterwards, following a period of rebellion in Yuexi, Zhang Tuan was sent there as Administrator on account of his father's excellent reputation in the region. Though the people were at first delighted, Zhang Tuan later became unpopular. There was threat of further rebellion, but when the local elders recalled the virtues of Zhang Xi, the trouble eased. -HHS 86/76:2854, HYGZ 1:5, 10B:145, 12:219. HYGZ has the personal name as 璚 Man, but this is probably incorrect.

Zhang Wan 張萬; Julu. In 24 Zhang Wan was an officer under the Administrator Pi Tong. When Wang Lang claimed the imperial title a great part of the region accepted him, but Pi Tong sent Zhang Wan and Yin Sui with two troops of cavalry to Xindu city to join his colleague Ren Guang and assist Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, against the pretender.

At an early stage of the campaign which followed, Pi Tong sent Zhang Wan and Yin Sui into the enemy-held city of Tangyang in Julu. They probably had family connections, and they were able to persuade the people to change sides and open the gates to Liu Xiu. Both men took part in later campaigns and rose to the rank of lieutenant-general, and Zhang Wan was enfeoffed as a marquis in Bohai. -HHS 21/11:758-59.

Zhang Wan 張宛; Jiyin. In 178 Cai Yong was accused of having sought private favours from the official Liu He and then of planning revenge when he was not successful. Cai Yong agreed that when Liu He was Administrator of Jiyin he had spoken on behalf of his local officer Zhang Wen. However he denied any wrongdoing. -HHS 60/50B:2001.

Zhang Wang 張汪; Henei. A county magistrate under Wei, Zhang Wang fathered the Lady Zhang Chunhua, consort of Sima Yi. -JS 1:948.

Zhang Wang 張汪, wife of: see the Lady Shan 山|.

Zhang Wei 張惟. Zhang Wei married the Lady Cheng Zhenjue, but died young. -HYGZ 10B:160.

Zhang Wei 張衛; Pei/Shu. Younger brother of Zhang Lu the theocrat warlord of Hanzhong, when Cao Cao attacked in 215 Zhang Wei was reluctant to surrender. He took up position at the Yangping Pass to resist Cao Cao's approach from Wudu. In a confused encounter, Zhang Wei's troops were thoroughly defeated, and Zhong Wei was killed as he fled. -HHS 75/65:2437, SGZ 8:264-65; deC 96:490-491.

Zhang [Weibo] 張偉伯. Son of Zhang Bin'gong, he and his wife were buried with his parents. -LS 13:9b-10a.

Zhang Wen 張文. In 24 and 25 Zhang Wen was a leader of the Five Towers bandit group operating in Ji province north of the Yellow River. In 26 he and his men were attacked by Wu Han and Feng Yi in Xindu. They were defeated and forced to surrender. -HHS 1A: 16, 18/8:679; Bn 59:80, 121.

Zhang Wen 張溫 [Boshen 伯慎] (d.191); Nanyang. A protégé of the palace eunuch Cao Teng, Zhang Wen became a member of the Imperial Secretariat under Emperor Huan and accompanied him on his tour south to the Yangzi in 164. Among other appointments, he served for a time as Administrator of Yingchuan.

In the summer of 184 Zhang Wen was promoted from Minister of Finance to be Excellency of Works, though despite his recognised quality he was obliged to pay a fine to take the office. He advised Emperor Ling not to dismiss Zhu Jun from his command against the Yellow Turbans in Nanyang, and Zhu Jun indeed brought the campaign to a successful conclusion.

In the autumn of 185 Zhang Wen was named General of Chariots and Cavalry and sent to replace Huangfu Song in operations against the Liang province rebels, who were at this time in the area of Chang'an. Zhang Wen led an army of a hundred thousand men to face the enemy at Meiyang in Youfufeng. At first he gained no success, but in the winter his subordinate general Dong Zhuo defeated the enemy and forced their withdrawal. Zhang Wen sent Zhou Shen in pursuit, while Dong Zhuo was ordered to attack the Qiang, potential allies of the rebels. Both columns, however, were forced back.

It is said that at this time Dong Zhuo refused to obey a summons from Zhang Wen, and that Sun Jian, then a staff officer, urged Zhang Wen to execute him by military law. Zhang Wen refused, for Dong Zhuo had great personal following in the northwest, and the army would lose all support if he acted against him.

We must note that much of Sun Jian's argument was given in private, so it cannot have been well recorded, and he is said to have referred to Dong Zhuo's failure in battle – hardly borne out by the history of the campaign. Sun Jian may have spoken against Dong Zhuo, and the story demonstrates Sun Jian's enterprise (he was later a leading general against Dong Zhuo) and the caution of Zhang Wen (who was later killed by Dong Zhuo). Details of the incident, however, are lost, and it may be no more than an ideal, ironic, anecdote.

In the spring of 186 Zhang Wen was appointed Grand Commandant, but still kept command in the lower Wei valley; this was the first time one of the three Excellencies had held such a post outside the capital. At the end of the year he was brought back to the capital, but in the summer of 187, after Geng Bi was killed in Liang province, Zhang Wen resigned in acknowledgement that the situation was still out of control.

After a period as Director of Retainers about 189, in 191 Zhang Wen was Minister of the Guards in the government at Chang'an controlled by Dong Zhuo. He was involved with Wang Yun in conspiracy against Dong Zhuo, but then the Court Astronomer foretold that a great official would be killed. To fulfil the prophecy Dong Zhuo had Zhang Wen accused of communicating with the enemy in the east; he was flogged to death in the market-place. -HHS 69/59:2246, 8:348-54, 72/62:2320-21, XC 4:13a, SGZ Wu 1:1095; deC 84:150-159, deC 89:188-203, deC 96:76.

Zhang Wen 張文. A gentleman cadet, about 177 Zhang Wen presented a memorial highly critical of the government of Emperor Ling. Soon afterwards Cai Yong endorsed his good intentions and urged his promotion. -HHS 60/50A:1995.

The name of Zhang Wen appears in the colophon to the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu in the Stone Classics engraved in the early 180s. He is described there as a Gentleman of the Palace, which may be only a cadet appointment or may represent a more substantive rank. This is probably the same man. -LS

14:8b.

Zhang Wen 張溫 [Huishu 惠怒] (d.230); Wu. Son of Zhang Yun, Zhang Wen was widely admired for his moral quality. He became Tutor to the Heir of Wu.

In 224 he was sent to establish relations with Shu, but was soon afterwards dismissed for his involvement with over-zealous censorship of officials. -SGZ Wu 12: 1329-33*.

Zhang [Wensi] 張文思. A filial son, he was praised in a stele of 83. -Nagata 94:26.

Zhang [Wenming] 張文明. Formerly a teacher of Xuan Du from Dunhuang, Zhang Wenming became Minister of Ceremonies. -FSTY 3:21: this probably refers to Zhang Huan, with the style Wenming 文明 miswritten for Ranming 然明.

Zhang White Rider 張白騎 see Zhang Cheng 張晟.

Zhang Wu 張武; Kuaiji [see sub Zhang Ye]. Zhang Wu's father Zhang Ye was murdered by bandits in Henei, and Zhang Wu was too young to have known him. He always carried Zhang Ye's sword, however, and about 60, as he travelled to the capital to study, he made sacrifice at the place where he had disappeared.

Diwu Lun, Administrator of Kuaiji, admired Zhang Wu's devotion. He recommended him as Filial and Incorrupt, but Zhang Wu's mother died at this time and there was an error in the conduct of her funeral. Believing he had failed his father's spirit, Zhang Wu killed himself. -HHS 81/71:2681-82*, XC 5:15a.

Zhang Xi 張翕 [Shuyang 叔陽]; Ba. Towards the end of the first century Zhang Xi served almost twenty years as Administrator of Yuexi, obtaining the trust of the non-Chinese by his honest and peaceful government. When he died in office the people mourned him as if for a parent and sent offerings to his home country for the funeral. An imperial edict ordered that a temple be established in his honour.

Zhang Xi's son Tuan later held the same office, and his father's reputation protected him. -HHS 86/76: 2853-54, HYGZ 12:219.

Zhang Xi 張熹 [Jizhi 季智]; Guiyang. As Zhang Xi was a magistrate in Runan, a serious drought affected the county. After the usual prayers had failed, Zhang Xi lit a funeral pyre and threw himself onto it, followed by two of his officers, Hou Chong and Zhang Hua. Rain fell. -SJZ 21:16b.

Zhang Xi 張喜 I; Runan. Younger son of Zhang Pan, in 193 from Minister of the Guard Zhang Xi was named Excellency of Works in the government controlled by

Li Jue and his colleagues at Chang'an. Sent by Emperor Xian to make peace between the warlords in 195, he was briefly kidnapped by Li Jue, but was then able to accompany the emperor in his escape to the east. As Cao Cao received the imperial party in 196, Zhang Xi was dismissed. -HHS 9:375, 380, 45/35:1534. [HHS 9:375 TC quotes Xiandi chungiu with the personal name as Jia 嘉.]

Zhang Xi 張喜 II. As Sun Quan attacked Hefei city in 209, Cao Cao ordered Zhang Xi to relieve the city, but he had a long way to travel and not many troops. The local officer Jiang Ji, however, sent messengers to Hefei with false news that Zhang Xi was close by with a strong army. Sun Quan captured two of these men, believed the story and abandoned the siege. -SGZ 14:450.

Zhang Xi 張熹 i.e. Zhang Xi 張喜 II. -SGZ 1:30-31.

Zhang Xia 張遐 [Ziyuan 子遠] of Yuzhang composed a supplement 外記 to the Wu-Yue chungiu 吳越春秋 of Zhao Ye. -Yao Zhenzong:2355.

Zhang Xian 張顯 (d.106). In 106 Zhang Xian was Administrator of Yuyang when several hundred Xianbi horsemen came on a raiding party. Zhang Xian took commandery levies in pursuit beyond the borders, and though he was warned by his officer Yan Shou of the dangers of ambush he insisted on attacking the raiders' camp.

The Chinese were indeed taken by surprise, and though Zhang Xian attempted to rally and regroup his men, he could not regain control and was wounded by enemy arrows. Yan Shou died in the fighting. Two other officers, Wei Fu and Xu Xian, tried to protect Zhang Xian, but they too were all killed.

When the regent Dowager Deng heard of this, she issued an edict in honour of Zhang Xian and his men. The families of the local officers were granted 100,000 cash, and one son was appointed a gentleman cadet. Though Zhang Xian had been chiefly responsible for the disaster, his family received 600,000 cash and two cadet appointments. -HHS 81/71:2671-72, 90/80:2986.

Zhang Xian 張賢. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates in 125, Zhang Xian took part in the coup led by Sun Cheng which destroyed the Yan clan and placed Liu Bao, Emperor Shun, upon the throne. He was rewarded with a county fief.

In 126 Zhang Xian joined Sun Cheng and others to support the Director of Retainers Yu Xu in his attack on the emperor's favourite Zhang Fang. Though the emperor was eventually compelled to disgrace Zhang Fang, he was angry at the result. Sun Cheng, Zhang Xian and their colleagues were sent out to their fiefs, but in 128 the emperor formally recalled their good work and they were allowed to return to the capital.

Later, Zhang Xian was among a group of eunuchs associated with the former wet-nurse Song E. Found guilty in 137 of corruption and making false accusations, they were all sent out to their fiefs and their pensions were reduced by a quarter. -HHS 78/68:2516-18.

Zhang Xian 張賢. During the 170s Zhang Xian was an Assistant Officer to the Director of Retainers Duan Jiong. Disapproving of Su Buwei, Duan Jiong sent Zhang Xian to kill him, and he threatened to kill Zhang Xian's own father if he failed. Zhang Xian duly arrested Su Buwei and killed him and over sixty of his kinsmen. -HHS 31/21:1109.

Zhang Xian 張羨 (d.200); Nanyang. Having served as a county magistrate in Lingling and Guiyang, Zhang Xian was widely popular in the south of Jing province. Liu Biao appointed him Administrator of Changsha but in 198, resentful at a perceived lack of courtesy from Liu Biao, he was persuaded by Huan Jie to turn against him in distant alliance to Cao Cao.

Though Liu Biao sent an army against him, Zhang Xian controlled all the basin of the Xiang River, and Liu Biao's forces gained no success until Zhang Xian died of illness. -SGZ 6:211-12, HHS 74/64B:2421.

Zhang Xiang 張翔 [Yuanfeng 元鳳]; Julu. Probably in 208, Zhang Xiang was sent on embassy by Cao Cao to the far south. While he was there Xu Jing entrusted him with letters for his old friends in the north, but when Xu Jing refused to swear an oath of allegiance to Cao Cao Zhang Xiang became angry and threw the letters away. -SGZ Shu 8:964-66.

Zhang [Xianzhang] 章顯章, the Lady (94-170); Nan. In 108, at the age of fifteen sui, the Lady married the future Excellency Hu Guang. She bore him five sons, but out-lived all of them, and it is said that she died of grief after the death of her husband's foster-mother, the Lady Huang Lieying, in 169. -Cai 4:6.

Zhang [Xiaozhong] 張孝仲. Formerly a shepherd, he was taken up by Guo Tai and became well known and respected. -HHS 68/58:2231.

Zhang Xie 張協 [Jiqi/Jiji 季期]; Henei. XTS 72C:2711 says that Zhang Xie, brother of the Excellency Zhang

1080 Zhang Xin

Xin became Minister of the Guards.

Zhang Xin 張歆; Zhao. Son of Zhang Kuang, Zhang Xin was a provisional magistrate when a man was arrested for avenging his father in a feud. Admiring his conduct, Zhang Xin set him free, then fled to escape punishment. The local people praised his sense of honour, and he received pardon through an amnesty.

Zhang Xin later became Chancellor of Huaiyang. When the king, Liu Yan, came to reside in his fief in 52, he brought a number of followers who regularly disobeyed the law. Zhang Xin led local officers into the royal palace to arrest them, but Liu Yan complained to Guangwu and Zhang Xin was demoted to be a magistrate in Henei. When he died in that office, the local people wanted to contribute to his funeral expenses, but his son Zhang Yu refused the offer. -HHS 44/34:1496-97.

Zhang Xin 張歆 [Jingrang 敬讓]; Henei. In 149 Zhang Xin was promoted from Minister of Finance to be Excellency over the Masses. He left that office in 151. -HHS 7:294-97.

Zhang Xing 張興 [Junshang 君上] (d.71); Yingchuan. An expert teacher of the Book of Changes according to the tradition of Liangqiu He, during the time of Emperor Guangwu Zhang Xing was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and invited to become a gentleman cadet. Making his apologies on grounds of ill health, he returned home to teach privately. In the early 50s he entered the offices of the Excellency Feng Qin, was again nominated as Filial and Incorrupt, and was this time appointed as an Academician.

Early in the reign of Emperor Ming Zhang Xing was made chief of the Palace Attendants, and in 67 he became Junior Tutor to the Heir. He died in that office four years later.

Regularly consulted on the classics by Emperor Ming, Zhang Xing is said to have received thousands of students from far and near, and to have established the prosperity of the Liangqiu School. -HHS 79/69A:2552-53*.

Zhang Xiu 張修 [Zizhen 子慎]. According to XC 7:2a, when Zhang Xiu was Director of the Imperial Secretariat arranged the recall of several officials who had been wrongfully dismissed, and he controlled the imperial favourites, relatives and eunuchs. So the court was well governed. Zhang Xiu, however, is not mentioned in HHS and it is not possible to date him.

Zhang Xiu 張休. In 159 Zhang Xiu composed a stele inscription at a river gorge among the mountains, probably in Sichuan. -LX 19:13a-b.

Zhang Xiu 張脩 (d.179). In 179 Zhang Xiu was Emissary to the Xiongnu. He quarrelled with the Shanyu Hucheng, arrested and killed him, then appointed the Worthy King of the Right Qiangqu as his successor. When this was reported to the court, Zhang Xiu was found guilty of having failed to seek permission before taking such action. Brought to the capital in a cage cart, he died in the prison of the Minister of Justice. -HHS 8:343, 89/79:2964; deC 84:345-346, deC 89:162.

Zhang Xiu 張脩; Ba. Records concerning Zhang Xiu, one of the founders of the Five Dou of Rice sect 五斗米道 [the Rice Sect], are confused and contradictory. Pei Songzhi of the early fifth century suggests Zhang Xiu is the same person as Zhang Heng, son of Zhang Ling and father of Zhang Lu, early masters of the present-day Taoist church, but it seems more likely that he was the leader of a separate cult in the region of present-day Sichuan. The account below is based upon that interpretation:

In the autumn of 184 Zhang Xiu, leader of a religious group identified as the Rice Sect, raised a rebellion in Ba commandery. There is no evidence of any direct connection with the Yellow Turbans led by Zhang Jue in the east, and Zhang Xiu's rising broke out several months after that of Zhang Jue. The teachings, however, were similar, both being concerned with faith-healing and confession of sins, and devotees were no doubt encouraged by the frequent outbreaks of plague which affected the empire at this time. The Dian lue by Yu Huan of the third century says that the Rice Sect got its name because those who received treatment were required to pay a fee of five dou [10 litres] of rice; they were commonly known as the Rice Rebels 米賊.

It appears that Zhang Xiu's rising was soon ended, that he was permitted to make his peace with the provincial government, and that he continued to hold authority as a religious leader. It has been suggested that the Zhang Xiu of 184 and the Zhang Xiu described below were two different men, but this seems less likely.

When Liu Yan came to Yi province as Governor in the late 180s he fell under the influence of the Lady Zhang, mother of Zhang Lu and also an adept of popular religion. Seeking to broaden his authority in the region, he named Zhang Xiu and Zhang Lu as majors and sent them to attack Su Gu the Administrator of Hanzhong. Su Gu was duly overthrown and killed, but Zhang Xiu and Zhang Lu then declared independence from both the Han dynasty and Liu Yan, and set up their own state in Hanzhong.

Liu Yan was not entirely dissatisfied with this development, for although he had lost control of Hanzhong he had an excuse to break off connection to the capital and establish his own regime. He took no direct action against the "rebels," and his policy was followed for several years by his son and successor Liu Zhang.

At some time in the 190s Zhang Lu killed Zhang Xiu and took all power for himself. It is impossible to assess the true relationship between Zhang Xiu on the one hand and the succession of religious leaders from Zhang Ling through Zhang Heng to Zhang Lu on the other. There were a number of different sects in the region at this time, and the conflict between Zhang Xiu and Zhang Lu may have represented the take-over of Zhang Xiu's Rice Sect by another, hitherto less influential, group. -SGZ 8:264, HHS 8:349, 75/65:2436; deC 89:557, deC 90:357-359, deC 96:83-84.

Zhang Xiu 張繡 (d.207); Wuwei. At the time of the Liang province rebellion in the 180s, Zhang Xiu was a local officer in his native county. When Qu Sheng of Jincheng attacked and killed the magistrate Liu Jun, Zhang Xiu waylaid and killed him in revenge; he gained reputation and a following among young men of the region.

Zhang Xiu later joined his kinsman Zhang Ji in the service of Dong Zhuo, and after Dong Zhuo was assassinated at Chang'an in 192, he followed Li Jue and others to attack and seize the capital. Distinguishing himself, he was named a general and enfeoffed, but stayed with Zhang Ji in Hongnong.

After Emperor Xian escaped to the east in 195, Zhang Ji's troops were isolated and short of supplies. He was killed in a raid on Jing province in 196, but the Governor Liu Biao then treated his men generously and they entered his service. Zhang Xiu took command of defence at Wan city in Nanyang, on the northern border of Liu Biao's territory.

In the following year, 197, Cao Cao came to attack. Zhang Xiu surrendered, but when Cao Cao took the widow of his former master Zhang Ji as a concubine, Zhang Xiu was humiliated and angry. Cao Cao planned to kill him, but Zhang Xiu learnt of it and made a sudden attack. Taken by surprise, Cao Cao was wounded and compelled to flee, and his son Cao Ang was killed. When Zhang Xiu pursued him, however, he counter-attacked and drove him back. Zhang Xiu rejoined Liu Biao.

Late in that year and again in 198 Cao Cao made further attacks, with some success, but Zhang Xiu maintained his defensive position.

In 199, as Cao Cao and Yuan Shao sought allies for their approaching confrontation, Zhang Xiu, with the advice of his counsellor Jia Xu, rejected Yuan Shao and turned to Cao Cao. Cao Cao made Zhang Xiu a general and had his son Cao Jun marry his daughter.

Zhang Xiu served with distinction in the fighting about Guandu in 200 and in later operations against the Yuan in Ji province. In 207 he accompanied the army against the Wuhuan in the northeast, but died on that campaign. -SGZ 8:262-63*.

Zhang Xiu 張休 [Shushi 叔嗣] (205-245); Pengcheng. Younger son of Zhang Zhao, Zhang Xiu followed his teachings on Han shu 漢書. He was a close companion of Sun Quan's eldest son and Heir Sun Deng, and later became a senior officer and general at court. He inherited Zhang Zhao's fief at his death in 236, but was later involved in a faction struggle and ordered to commit suicide. -SGZ Wu 7:1225; Fang 52:694.

Zhang Xu 張續; Jianwei. Elder son of Zhang Gang, after the death of his father in 144 Zhang Xu was awarded a million cash and appointed a gentleman cadet. He was later a member of the Imperial Secretariat. -HHS 56/46:1819, HYGZ 10B:157.

Zhang Xu 張敘 (d.165). Administrator of Cangwu in 165, Zhang Xu was captured by rebels led by Hu Lan and Zhu Gai. After the rebellion was put down, he was brought to the capital and executed. -HHS 7:315.

Zhang Xuan 張玄 (d.30). In 29 the warlord Wei Ao sent his officer Zhang Xuan to seek alliance with the leaders of the further northwest. Dou Rong, chief of that region, however, made terms with Han, and when Zhang Xuan came again in the following year he was killed by the Administrator of Wuwei Liang Tong. -HHS 32/13:798, 800-01 [as Zhang Li 立], 806.

Zhang Xuan 張玄 [Junxia 君夏]; Henei. As a young man, Zhang Xuan studied the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu according to the Zhuang/Yan tradition and many other schools of classical interpretation. At the beginning of Later Han he was recommended as Understanding the Classics, became a Literary Scholar in Hongnong and then an assistant magistrate in Youfufeng. Totally honest and with no personal desires, he devoted himself to scholarship and would go without food if there was a particularly difficult question to consider. In seeking solutions he chose eclectically among the various traditions, he was admired by his colleagues for his wide knowledge, and he had over a thousand students.

On one occasion he was required to report to the commandery headquarters. He could not find the right office, and was abused by the gate-keeper, but the Administrator Xu Ye knew of his teaching and invited Zhang Xuan to call. Vastly impressed, he treated him with great respect and kept him in conversation all day.

Zhang Xuan later left his minor office, but was then nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became a gentleman cadet. When a vacancy appeared for the chair in the Gongyang commentary according to the interpretation of Yan Anle 顏安樂 of Former Han, Zhang Xuan was examined, graded first, and became the new Academician. Within a few months, however, the students complained that he was teaching by the Zhuang/Yan interpretation [of Zhuang Pengzu 莊彭祖 of Former Han (whose surname was written as Yan 嚴 to avoid taboo on the personal name of Emperor Ming of Later Han)] as well as that of Yan Anle's disciple Ming Du 冥都. Though this showed Zhang Xuan's broad learning, it was claimed that he was not an appropriate person to hold a chair which should be devoted to the Yan 顏 school. Emperor Guangwu ordered him transferred, but Zhang Xuan died before this could be done. -HHS 79/69B: 2581*; Bn 79:189.

Zhang Xuan 張玄 [Boya 伯雅]; Henan. Zhang Xuan was a local officer. The inscription for his funerary temple 祠堂碑 was composed by Cai Yong. -Cai 6:2.

Zhang Xuan 張玄 [Chuxu 處虛]; Shu/Henan. A son of Zhang Kai, Zhang Xuan may have been registered like his father and grandfather as a man from Shu commandery, and he is recorded as such in Huayang guo zhi. Like his father, however, Zhang Xuan evidently resided in the region of the capital, while his brother Zhang Ling was nominated for office by the Intendant of Henan, which indicates that he was a citizen of that territory.

Zhang Xuan was known as a profound thinker and a man of great ability. When Zhang Wen was Excellency of Works in 184 and 185, he several times offered Zhang Xuan appointment in his offices, but he always refused. When Zhang Wen was appointed General of Chariots and Cavalry to attack the rebels of Liang province in 185, Zhang Xuan went to call upon him and urged that he take the opportunity of his command of the army to reform the government, with particular attention to destroying the eunuchs and their influence. As Zhang Wen explained that he could not take such action, Zhang Xuan prepared to take poison. Zhang Wen assured him that the fault was his for failing to take action, and in no way Zhang Xuan's for having given advice; their conversation would be kept quite secret [one may thus wonder how the historian found out about it: cf. a similar story concerning Dong Zhuo, Zhang Wen, and his adviser Sun Jian]. Zhang Xuan went away to the hill country south of Runan and Yingchuan in the Dabie Shan.

After Dong Zhuo had seized power at the capital in 189 he summoned Zhang Xuan to appointment as a Palace Attendant. When Zhang Xuan refused, Dong Zhuo sent troops to force him, but he fell ill and died on the way. -HHS 36/26:1244*.

Zhang Xuan 張宣; Pei. A local leader in the commandery, in 197 Zhang Xuan killed the warlord Han Xian. -HHS 72/62:2342, SGZ 6:187.

Zhang Xuan 張玄; Guangling. Son of Zhang Hong, Zhang Xuan was an honourable man but lacked his father's abilities. He became Administrator of Nan commandery for Sun Quan and was also a member of his Secretariat. -SGZ Wu 8:1246-47.

Zhang Xun 張恂. Intendant of Jingzhao in the early 70s, Zhang Xun appointed Yue Hui to his local staff. When he was later executed for some crime, Yue Hui was the only one of his former officers to carry out mourning ceremonies for him. -DGHJ 19:5a, HHS 43/33:1477.

Zhang Xun 張恂 see Feng Xun 馮恂. HHS 92/2:3041 has a single citation of Zhang Xun as an officer of the Bureau of Astronomy, whose system of forecasting eclipses of the moon was adopted in 179. It is probable that the character Feng 馮 was confused by a copyist for the more common surname Zhang 張. -Sivin 69: 60.

Zhang Xun 張馴 [Zijun 子儁]; Jiyin. As a young man Zhang Xun studied Chunqiu and Zuo zhuan at the Imperial University in Luoyang and taught the Classic of History according to the Elder Xiahou tradition. He joined the offices of the Excellencies, graded First Class and was appointed a Consultant.

As Palace Attendant in the imperial library, Zhang Xun was admired for his meticulous editorial work. In 175 he joined Cai Yong and others to urge the engraving of the Stone Classics at Luoyang, and he probably took part in the editing of the texts.

Zhang Xun later served as Administrator of Danyang, and is said to have reformed the people there by his generous conduct. He returned to Luoyang in 184 to join the Imperial Secretariat, and later became Minister of Finance. He died about 190. -HHS 79/69A: 2558*, 60/50B:1990, XC 5:9a-b.

Zhang Xun 張勳. A general of Yuan Shu, in 197 Zhang Xun was sent with Qiao Rui to attack Lü Bu at Xiapi. As their allies Han Xian and Yang Feng, however, were persuaded to change sides, Zhang Xun and Qiao Rui were defeated and withdrew with heavy losses.

Later that year Zhang Xun was at Hu city in Chen when it was captured by Cao Cao. Qiao Rui and other commanders were killed, but he managed to escape.

After Yuan Shu died in 199, Zhang Xun sought to bring some of his people to Sun Ce south of the Yangzi. They were intercepted by Liu Xun the Administrator of Lujiang and went to join him at Huan city: cf. sub Yuan Yin. -HHS 75/65:2442, SGZ 7:225, SGZ Wu 1:1104.

Zhang Ya 張雅; Kuaiji. A local leader of Houguan, on the coast by present-day Fuzhou, he joined the magistrate Shang Sheng to raise troops for the Administrator Wang Lang against Sun Ce. When Shang Sheng later sought to surrender to Sun Ce's officer He Qi, Zhang Ya and his associate Zhan Qiang killed him and maintained resistance. Zhang Ya took title as a general, but his son-in-law He Xiong then set himself up as a rival. Taking advantage of the rift, He Qi defeated the disorganised enemy and forced them to surrender. -SGZ Wu 15:1377-78.

Zhang Yan 張晏. In 170 Zhang Yan was Chief Clerk in the Western Regions when Hede of Shule [Kashgar] killed his nephew and seized the throne. As the Inspector of Liang province Meng De sent an expeditionary force, Zhang Yan brought allied non-Chinese troops to join the major Cao Quan. They had no success, and Shule was effectively independent. -HHS 88/78:2927.

Zhang Yan 張延 [Gongwei 公威] (d.187); Henei. Son of the Excellency Zhang Xin, in 185 Zhang Yan was promoted from Minister Coachman to Grand Commandant, probably paying for the honour. Slandered by the eunuchs, however, he left office in 186 and died in prison. -HHS 8:351-53.

Zhang Yan 張燕 or Zhang Feiyan 飛燕; Changshan. Zhang Yan's original surname was Chu 褚. About 184 he commanded a group of bandits in the Taihang ranges, then joined Oxhorn Zhang [Zhang Niujue] and accepted his leadership. Soon afterwards Oxhorn was fatally wounded and transferred his men to Chu Yan, who took the surname Zhang in honour of his patron. He was styled Feiyan 飛燕 "Flying Swallow" for his quick wit and swift action.

Zhang Yan created a loose confederacy across the Taihang ranges. Known as the Black Mountain bandits and numbered in the tens of thousands, they ravaged Changshan, Zhao, Zhongshan, Shangdang and Henei. Unable to halt his depredations, the Han court accepted a nominal surrender, granted him title as General of the Household Who Pacifies Disorder 平難中郎將 and gave him the right to nominate candidates for office like a commandery administrator: see also Yang Feng.

As the empire broke up in the 190s, Zhang Yan had a loose alliance with Gongsun Zan against Yuan Shao. In 193 Yuan Shao attacked the hill country, destroying the leaders in the south, but Zhang Yan held out in Changshan. As Yuan Shao made his final attack on Gongsun Zan in 199 Zhang Yan made an unsuccessful attempt to relieve him.

As Cao Cao took over Ji province in 205, Zhang Yan went to submit. He was given title as a general and enfeoffed as a marquis; the fief continued in his family after his death. -SGZ 8:261-62*, 1:27, HHS 71/61: 2311.

Zhang Yan 張琰 (d.205); Hongnong. In 205 Zhang Yan was an associate of the bandit leader Zhang Cheng, or White Rider Zhang. That year Cao Cao arranged for the north-western warlord Ma Teng to attack and destroy Zhang Cheng; Zhang Yan was also killed. -SGZ 16:472.

Zhang Yang 張楊 (d.27); Nan. An officer of the warlord Qin Feng, Zhang Yang supported him in holding the line of the Han River against the attacks of Guangwu's general Cen Peng. In the autumn of 27 Cen Peng pretended to be planning to cross upstream to the west, and let prisoners escape to report the false plan. Leaving Zhang Yang with a minimal force, Qin Feng took the bulk of his men to face the false threat. Cen

1084 Zhang Yang

Peng then crossed directly, and he defeated and killed Zhang Yang. -HHS 17/7:657.

Zhang Yang 張陽. In 71 it was alleged that Liu Kang the King of Ji'nan had sent his officers Zhang Yang and Dong Chen to make contact with Yan Zhong and other members of the alleged conspiracy about Liu Ying the King of Chu.

Zhang Yang 張楊 [Zhishu 稚叔] (d.198); Yunzhong. Noted for his fighting skills and courage, Zhang Yang became Assistant Officer for Military Affairs in the administration of Bing province. When Emperor Ling established his Western Garden corps under the eunuch Jian Shi in 188, the Inspector Ding Yuan sent Zhang Yang to join Jian Shi's staff, and he was appointed as an acting major.

In the following year Jian Shi was killed by the General-in-Chief He Jin. Zhang Yang accepted the new regime and He Jin sent him back to his home country to raise troops. He gathered a thousand men and attacked the hills bandits of Shangdang, presumably seeking to recruit them to his forces. Later that year, when He Jin was destroyed and Dong Zhuo seized power at the capital, Zhang Yang attacked the Administrator of Shangdang. He was unsuccessful, but he did plunder several counties, and his followers were now numbered in the thousands.

As the eastern alliance formed against Dong Zhuo, Yuan Shao came into Henei. Zhang Yang made contact with him, but he also joined the Xiongnu Shanyu Yufuluo, who then forced Zhang Yang to join him against Yuan Shao. Though their combined forces were defeated south of Ye city, they then drove the General on the Liao Geng Zhi from his base in Liyang.

Soon afterwards Zhang Yang received commission as general and Administrator of Henei from Dong Zhuo. Escaping from Yufuluo, he based himself at Yewang, northeast across the Yellow River from Luoyang, and maintained himself there for the next few years. At intervals in 192 and 193 he gave uncertain refuge to Lü Bu, a former officer of Ding Yuan and also a man from the north.

As Emperor Xian arrived in Hedong after his escape from Chang'an in 195, Zhang Yang sent aid and went to pay court. He wanted to escort him back to Luoyang, but the leaders who had brought the ruler so far were not prepared to allow an interloper's interest, and though Zhang Yang was granted a fief he was obliged to withdraw.

As the chieftains fell out soon afterwards, Zhang Yang was able to intervene. He arranged some rebuilding at Luoyang, and in the autumn of 196 he assisted Han Xian and Yang Feng to bring the emperor to the former capital. He was given title as Grand Marshal, but returned to his base in Henei; ostensibly this was to defend Luoyang, but in fact he was still kept out of the main leadership group about the emperor.

When Cao Cao attacked Lü Bu in Xiapi in 198 Zhang Yang attempted a diversion against his rear, but he was killed by his officer Yang Chou, who was a supporter of Cao Cao. It is said that Zhang Yang was a good and generous man, and even when he learned of plots against him he would forgive the conspirators. -SGZ 8:250-51*.

Zhang Yao 張曜; Zhao. Younger son of Zhang Yu, when his father the former Excellency died in 113 Zhang Yao was appointed as a gentleman cadet. -HHS 44/34:1499.

Zhang Ye 張曄 I. In 24 Zhang Ye was county magistrate of the capital of Dai commandery. The Gengshi Emperor sent orders to recall the Administrator Zhao Yong, but Geng Kuang the Administrator of Shanggu persuaded Zhao Yong to go instead to Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, who was at that time commissioner in the northeast but was approaching a declaration of independence. Liu Xiu confirmed Zhao Yong in his appointment.

As Zhao Yong was returning to his territory, Zhang Ye mutinied. He obtained support from the Xiongnu and the Wuhuan, but Liu Xiu sent Geng Kuang's son Geng Shu to attack him. Zhang Ye was destroyed and Zhao Yong regained his post. -HHS 19/9:705.

Zhang Ye 張曄 II. In 29 Cen Peng, Guangwu's general in Jing province, sent summons to the south of the Yangzi for the campaign against Gongsun Shu, and Zhang Long the Administrator of Guiyang sent his son Zhang Ye with a contingent. Zhang Long was made a full marquis, and Zhang Ye was also enfeoffed. -HHS 14/4:566, 17/7:659.

Zhang Ye 張業 [Zhongshu 仲叔]; Kuaiji. A local officer of his commandery about 40, Zhang Ye was sent to escort the Administrator's wife and children to their homeland. They were waylaid by bandits in Henei, and Zhang Ye was killed as he attempted to defend the party. See further sub Zhang Ye's son Zhang Wu. -HHS 81/71:2681-82, XC 5:15a, XHS 5:15a. [XC and XHS describe Zhang Ye as a man of Wu, but this is an anachronism, for the commandery was not separated from Kuaiji until 129.]

Zhang Yi 張異 [Zhongzong 仲宗]; Yuzhang. Administrator of Guangling, Zhang Yi nominated Wu Feng as Filial and Incorrupt. Wu Feng wanted to offer him a present, and though Zhang Yi refused he left a quantity of gold in the courtyard of his residence. Zhang Yi insisted upon returning it. -XC 7:7b.

Zhang Yi 張佚. In 52 a conference was held to consider who should be made formal Tutor to the Heir Liu Zhuang. A majority of officials supported the candidacy of Yin Shi, brother of the prince's mother the Empress Yin, but the Academician Zhang Yi protested that the appointments of the Heir and of his Tutor were decisions which should be made in the interest of the empire as a whole: "If it is just to benefit the Yin clan, then Marquis Yin is possible. But if the appointment is for the empire as a whole, then you must choose amongst all worthy and talented men." Emperor Guangwu observed that "You have not found it difficult to correct Us; and this will be still more true in dealing with the Heir," and he appointed Zhang Yi himself as Senior Tutor.

Zhang Yi, however, is not heard of again, and it appears that Liu Zhuang's closest and most favoured mentor was his Junior Tutor Huan Rong. -HHS 37/27: 1251; Bn 79:59.

Zhang Yi 張懿 (d.188). Inspector of Bing province, Zhang Yi was killed in Xihe in 188 by rebel Xiongnu led by the Xiuchuge clan. -HHS 8:354, SGZ Shu 1:865. [This man's personal name also appears as 益 and 壹: it was probably changed in the texts to avoid taboo on that of Sima Yi, a founder of the Jin dynasty.]

Zhang Yi 張逸 (d.193). A local officer of You province, when Liu Yu was killed by Gongsun Zan he and others came to show their loyalty. They cursed Gongsun Zan and accepted death together. -SGZ 8:244.

Zhang Yi 張義 (d.195). Minister of Finance, Zhang Yi accompanied Emperor Xian on his escape from Chang'an in 195. He was killed in one of the battles along the way. -HHS 9:378.

Zhang Yi 張擇; Nanyang. Son of Zhang Xian, in 200 Zhang Yi succeeded his father as warlord Administrator of Changsha. He sought to maintain a position independent of Liu Biao in the south of Jing province, but he was attacked and defeated. -SGZ 6: 211.

Zhang Yi 張顛. In 204 Zhang Yi was an officer under Yuan Shang facing Cao Cao outside Ye city. As the armies engaged, he brought his troops over and changed sides. -SGZ 1:25.

Zhang Yi 張異. In 206 Zhang Yi was senior commander for Sun Quan in final operations against the recalcitrant camp of Mo in eastern Jiangxia. -SGZ 10:1296.

Zhang Yi 張裔 [Junsi 君嗣] (d.230); Shu. A loyal and generous man, Zhang Yi was a noted scholar of the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu and of the Han histories. Recommended to Liu Zhang, warlord Governor of Yi province, as Filial and Incorrupt, he became a county magistrate in Ba commandery, then an Assistant Officer and a member of Liu Zhang's personal staff.

As Liu Bei attacked Liu Zhang in 214, Zhang Yi attempted to hold Guanghan against Zhang Fei's advance from the south, but he was defeated and driven back to Chengdu. There he negotiated the surrender to Liu Bei, who appointed him Administrator of Ba and then Commissioner for Metal, responsible for production of military weapons and agricultural equipment.

Following the abdication of Emperor Xian of Han in 220 Zhang Yi, now ranked as a lieutenant-general, joined a petition which cited various works of divination and urged Liu Bei to claim the imperial title. Soon afterwards he was appointed Administrator to settle Yizhou commandery, but was captured by the local warlord Yong Kai and sent as a prisoner to Sun Quan.

As Wu and Shu established a formal alliance in 223 Zhang Yi was permitted to return to the west. He later held charge of affairs at the capital while Zhuge Liang was on campaign, and received title as a general. -SGZ Shu 11:1011-13.

Zhang Yi 張巖 [Boqi 伯岐] (d.254); Ba. As a young man Zhang Yi was Officer of Merit in his county. When hills people attacked about 215, the magistrate abandoned his family and fled, but Zhang Yi faced the enemy and brought the man's wife to safety. Now well known, he was respected and befriended by leading men of the region and became an Assistant Officer of Yi province.

Having served with success under Zhuge Liang, about 240 Zhang Yi became Administrator of Yuexi. He put down rebellion which had been endemic in the territory, and restored communications across the frontier towards present-day Burma/Myanmar. A leading adviser and general of Shu-Han, he died in battle against Wei. -SGZ Shu 13:1051-55*.

Zhang Yi 張翼 [Bogong 伯恭] (d.264); Jianwei. A descendant of the Excellency Zhang Hao, Zhang Yi joined Liu Bei's staff as he took over Yi province in 214. He became a county magistrate in Hanzhong, Ba and Jianwei and served with Zhao Yun against Cao Cao in 219.

Zhang Yi was then Administrator of Guanghan and of Shu, and later Area Commander of Laixiang, the southern part of Yi province. He accompanied Zhuge Liang on campaign in that region, and later became a member of the Secretariat and a chief general. He was killed in the disorders at the end of Shu-Han. -SGZ Shu 15:1073-75*, HYGZ 10B:159.

Zhang Yi 張意. As General of Agile Cavalry, Zhang Yi held command of a campaign against the Dong'ou 東甌 people of present-day Fujian. He attacked by sea and was completely successful. -XC 7:4b.

Xie Cheng was a man of the south, and should be reliable in this area, but it is difficult to relate this campaign to any enterprise in the Later Han period recorded elsewhere, and Dong'ou was a state of the mid-second century BC, which appears to have been effectively abolished at that time [e.g. Yü 86:455-456]. It is moreover surprising that a man of such high rank as General of Agile Cavalry should not be mentioned in the Hou Han shu of Fan Ye. For most of the dynasty the rank was reserved for imperial relatives: see sub Liu Cang and Dong Zhong, also Bn 80:122. The historicity of this item is thus very doubtful.

Zhang Yin 張印 miswritten for Zhang Ang 張印. -XHS 2:1b.

Zhang Yin 張胤; Jianwei. A brother of Zhang Mu, and a distant descendant of the great minister Zhang Liang 良 at the beginning of Former Han, Zhang Yin was the father of Zhang Hao. -XTS 72C:2675.

Zhang Yin 張音. When the imperial kinsman Fan Shu died in 67, the eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates Zhang Yin was sent with offerings, and also to enquire about his testament. He reported that Fan Shu had been concerned about the ill-treatment of two groups of commoners, and Emperor Ming had both situations dealt with. -HHS 32/22:1124.

Zhang Yin 張隱; Shanyang. Some time in the late 160s twenty-four men from Shanyang, under the leadership of the reformist Zhang Jian, swore an oath of fellowship and set up a stele. Zhang Yin was a member of the group, and he may have been a kinsman of Zhang Jian. Encouraged by the eunuch Hou Lan, in 169 the malcontent Zhu Bing claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210, ZF:16a [in SGZ 6:211 PC]; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

This Zhang Yin must be distinguished from another man of the same name, a scholar of the Jin dynasty who is one of the putative authors of Wenshi zhuan 文士傳 "Biographies of Scholars," cited in the commentary of Pei Songzhi to SGZ: SGZ 9:280 & JJ at 23a.

Zhang Yin 張胤 (d.188). An Assistant Officer in Yi province, in 188 Zhang Yin was in Guanghan with his colleagues Yan Bin and Dong Fu when the Inspector Que Jian was attacked and killed by rebels at his headquarters nearby. Yan Bin urged his fellows to turn against the enemy, but when they refused he fought alone and died. When Liu Yan arrived as Governor he honoured Yan Bin's heroism but executed Zhang Yin and Dong Fu for cowardice. -HYGZ 10C:170.

Zhang Yin 張音/愔. Minister of Ceremonies at the court of Emperor Xian of Han in 220, Zhang Yin was named Acting Imperial Secretary with the Staff of Authority in order that he might negotiate the abdication of Han to Wei and transfer the ritual insignia of the empire. -SGZ 2:62; Fang 52:11, Goodman 98:64-65, 164.

Zhang Ying 張嬰 (d.145); Guangling. Active as a bandit in the lower Yangzi from the late 130s, in 142 Zhang Ying killed the Administrator of Guangling and the Inspector of Yang province.

In 143 Zhang Gang the new Administrator to Guangling went to Zhang Ying's camp, asked about grievances and promised pardon. Zhang Ying apologised for his crimes, was duly reassured, and brought his people to surrender. Zhang Gang gave local office to any of the former rebels who wished to enter the imperial service.

In the following year, however, Zhang Gang was recalled to the capital, and though Zhang Ying and his fellows asked that he might stay he died on the road. About this time, moreover, Fan Rong and other bandits in Jiujiang defeated an attack by provincial forces under Feng Gun and Zhang Ying, inspired by this, reverted to his old ways.

In 145 Zhang Ying killed two county magistrates and took over much of the commandery, but in the winter he was defeated and killed by local forces commanded by Teng Fu. -HHS 6:272, 277, 279, 38/28:1179, 56/46:1819.

Zhang Ying 張英. An officer of Liu Yao defending the line of the Yangzi, he was defeated by Sun Ce in 195. -SGZ Wu 1:1102, SGZ Wu 5:1197; deC 90:161-163.

Zhang You 張游. A chieftain of the non-Chinese Li people from the frontier of Jiuzhen, in 36 Zhang You brought his people to acknowledge the Han. Guangwu enfeoffed him as Lord of the Li Submissive to Han 歸漢里君. -HHS 86/76:2836; deC 90:161-163.

Zhang You 張攸; Zangke. A local man of wealth, in the early 160s he was accused on trumped-up charges by the Inspector Hou Can, brother of the palace eunuch Hou Lan. Zhang You and all the members of his family were killed and Hou Can seized their property. -XC 3:6a.

Zhang Yu 張雨, the Lady; Dongping. In the time of Emperor Ming, when the Lady was still only fifteen her father and her mother both died. Refusing offers of marriage she brought up her two younger brothers, educating them in the classics and making good marriages for them. The magistrate Xie Yiwu had both men nominated for office and arranged honours for the Lady herself. -XC 6:4b.

Zhang Yu 張魚; Jingzhao. As Han irregular troops gathered for a final attack on Wang Mang in 23, Zhang Yu, Zhu Di and other young men of Chang'an, afraid that the city would be plundered and sacked, took sides with the insurgents. Shouting slogans in support of Han and calling on Wang Mang to surrender, they broke into the imperial palace and set it on fire. -Dubs 55:462-463, Bn 54:131.

Zhang Yu 張禹 [Boda 伯達] (d.113); Zhao. Son of Zhang Qin, Zhang Yu was a scholar of the New Text Classic of History according to the Ouyang interpretation, and during the 50s he studied at the capital under Huan Rong. He was a generous and moral man: when his father died as a magistrate in Henei, the local people wanted to contribute to his funeral expenses but Zhang Yu refused to accept the gift.

In 65 Zhang Yu was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, served in the Ministry of Justice and, after some minor appointments, became Inspector of Yang province about 80. When he planned to visit the south he was warned that the legendary hero Wu Zixu 伍子 胥 haunted the Yangzi. Observing that even if such a spirit existed it would recognise his good intentions, Zhang Yu crossed the river, travelled widely in the region and impressed the people there.

In 85 Zhang Yu was transferred to Yan province, and in the following year he became Chancellor of Xiapi. The Officer of Merit Dai Run had dominated the territory, but Zhang Yu found cause to send him to prison, and the people then accepted his authority. He established irrigation to open up a large area for farmland, and so many people came to colonise it that a town was founded within a year.

In 94 Zhang Yu went to the capital as Minister of Finance, and in 100 he was appointed Grand Commandant. Emperor He treated him with great courtesy, and as he went on tour to the south in 103 he left Zhang Yu in charge at Luoyang. Later, hearing that the emperor planned to visit the middle Yangzi, he sent a messenger post-haste to warn of possible danger: Emperor He went no further, and as the imperial cortège returned Zhang Yu received special rewards and his son Sheng became a gentleman cadet.

In 105 Zhang Yu and the Excellency Xu Fang recommended the posthumous enfeoffment of Deng Xun, father of the empress, and when Emperor He died in 106 the Lady Deng, now regent Dowager, appointed Zhang Yu as Grand Tutor for the Young Emperor Liu Long. He shared control of the Imperial Secretariat, which gave formal control over the imperial government, and resided in the palace as a guard for the infant ruler. Real power, however, was held by the Dowager, though Zhang Yu did persuade her to open waste-land in the imperial hunting parks near Chang'an and in Runan, to be taken up by poor people.

Later that year, following the death of the Young Emperor Liu Long and the accession of Emperor An, Zhang Yu sought to retire on grounds of ill health. Palace eunuchs, however, were sent to enquire after him, he was granted further gifts and rewards, and in 107 he was enfeoffed for his part in the selection of the new ruler.

In the autumn of that year, when the Excellencies Xu Fang and Yin Qin were dismissed on account of flooding and some outbreaks of banditry Zhang Yu was displeased and again asked to retire. This time he was transferred back to be Grand Commandant, and no Grand Tutor was appointed to replace him.

In 110 the Dowager went to stay at the residence of her mother the Lady Yin, who was on her death-bed. Zhang Yu and his fellow-Excellencies Xia Qin and Zhang Min protested firmly on grounds of protocol and security, and the Dowager was obliged to return to the palace.

Soon afterwards Zhang Yu noted that there had been a series of bad harvests and that the public treasury was empty. He recommended taxes be called in advance so that local authorities could loan out grain more easily. This was approved.

In 111 Zhang Yu left office because the Yin and the Yang were out of order. When he died two years later imperial officers were sent to his funeral and his younger son Yao was made a gentleman cadet. -HHS 44/34:1496-99*, DGHJ 11:3b-4a.

Zhang Yu 張紆. In 86 Zhang Yu was Administrator of Longxi. During the course of a raid by the Qiang from across the border, his troops captured the chieftain Haoyu. Zhang Yu intended to kill him, but Haoyu argued that if he let him go the Qiang would go away and trouble the frontier no further. Zhang Yu took the authority to accept the proposal, and the Qiang duly withdrew to their own territories.

In the following year, however, the Protector Fu Yu was killed in battle by Haoyu's brother Miyu, chief warlord of the Shaodang Qiang. Zhang Yu took his place, and soon afterwards his officer Sima Fang gained a victory against a raiding force in Jincheng. Miyu now asked to surrender, and Zhang Yu invited him to a banquet to settle terms. As the Qiang arrived, he had a body of men waiting in hiding, and he also drugged the wine. As his guests became affected, he had his soldiers attack, and they killed eight hundred of them.

Zhang Yu sent the heads of Miyu and four comrades as offerings to the tomb of his predecessor Fu Yu, while he himself led an attack against the Qiang home territories, killing a further four hundred and capturing another two thousand.

Miyu's son Mitang, vowing vengeance, gathered a consortium of tribes to attack Longxi, and he stirred up trouble across all the northwest. By 88, as the situation was out of control, Zhang Yu was recalled and replaced by the more humane and honourable Deng Xun. -HHS 87/77:2881-83.

Zhang Yu 張宇; Jianwei>Zhuo. HYGZ 72C:2675 says that Zhang Yu, son of the Excellency Zhang Hao, was a county magistrate in Zhuo commandery and then Administrator of Youbeiping. He moved the family residence from the southwest to the northeast.

Zhang Yu 張御; Ba. A local commandery officer, Zhang Yu was killed by brigands about 150. -HYGZ 1:6.

Zhang Yu 張輿; Yingchuan. Younger brother of the eunuch Zhang Rang, Zhang Yu was a county magistrate in Yingchuan. He was cruel and corrupt, and about 165 the Intendant of Henan Li Ying had him arrested, examined and killed. -HHJ 22:260.

It was unusual for a man to hold such high office in his home commandery, and Li Ying must have arrested Zhang Yu after he had taken up residence at the capital: he had no jurisdiction in Yingchuan, which was also his home commandery. HHJ tells how the Imperial Secretariat questioned Li Ying, who cited Confucius' celebrated execution of Shao Zhengmao 少正印, but HHS 67/57:2194 has him using the same defence to justify killing Zhang Shuo, also a brother of Zhang Rang, for similar wrongdoing. The stories of Zhang Yu and Zhang Shuo are very close, so there may be dittography; the Zhang Shuo case is administratively more straightforward.

Zhang Yu 張裕 [Nanhe 南和]; Shu. A celebrated sooth-sayer and physiognomist, Zhang Yu was an Assistant Officer to the Governor Liu Zhang, and when Liu Bei first came to Yi province in 211 Zhang Yu embarrassed him at court with his repartee.

Zhang Yu later joined Liu Bei's staff, and in 218 Liu Bei consulted him on his plans to attack Hanzhong. Zhang Yu warned against the idea, but the campaign proved successful. About the same time, moreover, he made the private comment that it was time for the dynasty to change, that fortune had left the house of Liu, and that Liu Bei would lose Yi province nine years from the time he gained it. His words leaked out and, despite protests from Zhuge Liang, Liu Bei had Zhang Yu executed for his treasonous prophecy and on account of the old insult. In fact Liu Bei died in 223, nine years after he had taken over Yi province, and his state did indeed fail. -SGZ Shu 12:1020-21.

Zhang Yuan 張員 see Zhang Zhen 張貞/眞.

Zhang [Yuanyi] 張元益. Elder son of Zhang Changzhong and grandson of Zhang Bin'gong, in 77 he buried his father and his own younger brother Shuyuan in the family tomb. -LS 13:9b-10a.

Zhang Yuanzu 張元祖; Yingchuan. During the 170s

Zhang Yuanzu was a gentleman traveller 行士. When he was in Chenliu he called upon Fu Rong, who had just suffered the death of his wife. Though Fu Rong was poor, he insisted he would accept no help with her simple interment, but Zhang Yuanzu persuaded him to accept the loan of his ox-cart for the cortège. -HHS 68/58:2233, XC 7:16b.

Zhang Yue 張悅. Nephew of Zhang Wei, Zhang Yue was cared for by Zhang Wei's widow, the Lady Cheng Zhenjue. -HYZ 10B:160.

Zhang Yun 張雲. Administrator of Yuzhang about 112, Zhang Yun nominated Chen Zhong as Filial and Incorrupt. Chen Zhong urged that his friend Lei Yi, Officer of Merit, be given preference. After long debate, Zhang Yun insisted on his choice, but in the following year he did recommend Lei Yi, so both men became gentleman cadets. -HHS 81/71:2686.

Zhang Yun 張憚 (d.159). A eunuch, in 159 Zhang Yun was a junior officer in the Yellow Gates. He was an agent of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, who sent him to take up residence in the private imperial apartments and watch for any trouble. His senior colleague Ju Yuan was conspiring with Emperor Huan against Liang Ji, and he arrested Zhang Yun on the grounds that he lacked proper authorisation. The coup was successful and Zhang Yun was presumably killed. -HHS 34/24:1186; deC 89:13.

Zhang Yun 張允. A friend of Gao Dai, about 193 Zhang Yun assisted him to escape with his mother from Xu Gong, Administrator of Wu commandery. -SGZ Wu 1:1109.

Zhang Yun 張允; Nanyang. Nephew of the Lady Cai, wife of Liu Biao, Zhang Yun supported Liu Zong against Liu Qi for Liu Biao's favour and inheritance. As Liu Biao was dying, Zhang Yun prevented Liu Qi from visiting him. -SGZ 6:213-14.

Zhang Yun 張允; Wu. Known locally for his virtues, Zhang Yun became a senior officer at Sun Quan's headquarters. He died about 220. -SGZ Wu 12:1319.

Zhang Zai 張載 miswritten for Zhang Yi 張異.

Zhang Zan 張瓚 (d.193). In 193 Zhang Zan was a local officer in You province when the Governor Liu Yu was killed by Gongsun Zan. Zhang Zan and others went to show their loyalty, cursed Gongsun Zan and accepted death together. -SGZ 8:244.

Zhang Ze 張則 see Zhang Liangze 張亮則.

Zhang Zhan 張湛 [Zixiao 子孝]; Youfufeng. A man of strict morality, Zhang Zhan lived in seclusion and was so concerned for proper conduct that he behaved toward even his wife and children as if he were their father and grandfather. He played a balanced role in district politics, and all the capital region admired his fine behaviour. Some said it was a facade, but Zhang Zhan laughed and said that at least his facade was a good one; others presented an evil face.

During the reigns of emperors Cheng and Ai of Former Han, Zhang Zhan held high rank, and under Wang Mang he was Commandant of a commandery. When Guangwu claimed the empire in 25, Zhang Zhan was appointed Administrator of Zuopingyi, where he restored good order and conduct. Later, as he was returning to his home town, he got down from his carriage when he came to the gates, explaining that despite his rank he wanted to emulate Confucius' simplicity and sincerity [Analects 10:1:1].

In 29 Zhang Zhan was appointed Minister of the Household, and he was swift to criticise any breach of etiquette in the court. He was noted for the white horses that he drove and Guangwu referred to him as the White Horse Gentleman 白馬生; he frequently deferred to his opinion. In 31 Zhang Zhan retired from the ministry on grounds of ill health, but he then became a Household Counsellor and later succeeded Wang Dan as Senior Tutor to the Heir, Liu Qiang.

A close friend of Du Lin, Zhang Zhan was a member of the Ma faction, and when Guangwu dismissed his Empress Guo, mother of Liu Qiang, in 41, he claimed to be ill and did not attend court. He was reduced in rank to be a Palace Counsellor, but the emperor enquired after him regularly, gave frequent gifts, and allowed him to take up residence in the quarters of the captain of a city gate; Zhang Zhan became known as the Gentleman of the Central East Gate 中東門君.

After the disgrace and death of the Excellency over the Masses Dai She in 44, Zhang Zhan was summoned to take his place. Since the last three incumbents had suffered a similar fate, no-one was anxious to accept the honour and the risk. Guangwu compelled Zhang Zhan to accept, but as he stood in court his bladder gave way. Observing that the long ceremonies required good control, Bielenstein suggests that Zhang Zhan's embarrassment could have been self-induced; it may, however, have been a real medical condition, possibly a fault of the prostate.

It was in any case agreed that Zhang Zhan was unfit for service: he held no further office and died at home a few years later. -HHS 27/17:928-30*; Bn 79: 63, 119.

1090 Zhang Zhang

Zhang Zhang 張璋. When He Jin was killed by the eunuchs in 189, his officer Zhang Zhang led his troops to attack the palace to slaughter them. -HHS 69/59:2252.

Zhang [Zhangzhong] 張長仲 see Zhang Changzhong 張長仲.

Zhang Zhao 張昭. In 175 an edict required that the boundary of Ji and You provinces should be formally marked. As Assistant Officer of You, Zhang Zhao joined his opposite number Wang Qiu from Ji province to set up an inscribed stele near Beiping county in Zhongshan. -SJZ 11:24a. [Though the dates are compatible, this man should not be the same as either of the men immediately below: an Assistant Officer was appointed locally and neither Chen nor Pengcheng were in You province.]

Zhang Zhao 張昭; Chen. A son of the Excellency Zhang Yan and younger brother of Zhang Fan and Zhang Cheng, in the late 180s Zhang Zhao became a Consultant. When Dong Zhuo took power he was obliged to follow the court to Chang'an, but later managed to return. He warned his brothers not to join the troops raised against the usurper, for Dong Zhuo would be destroyed without them, and they should be very wary of the troubled times ahead. -SGZ 11:337.

Zhang Zhao 張昭 [Zibu 子布] (156-236); Pengcheng. A scholar when he was young, and a fine calligrapher in the official li shu 隸書 style, Zhang Zhao studied Chunqiu and Zuo zhuan with Bohou Zi'an. He was widely read, with good knowledge of Han shu 漢書, and he became a close friend and colleague of Zhao Yu and Wang Lang.

Recommended by his commandery, he would not accept office, but he joined Wang Lang, a magistrate in Pengcheng, to compile an essay on the ancient use of taboo names 諱, contradicting the arguments of the celebrated scholar Ying Shao. They were widely praised, and Zhang Zhao received provincial nomination. He again refused, and though the Governor Tao Qian was angry at the apparent insult Zhou Yu was on his staff and persuaded him to take no action.

In the early 190s, as the territory fell into disorder, Zhang Zhao sought refuge south of the Yangzi, where he joined Sun Ce and became his head of administration. Sun Ce named him a General of the Household, and went himself to pay his respects to Zhang Zhao's mother. Zhang Zhao was consulted on all matters of civil and military policy, and though he received many flattering letters from scholars in the north Sun Ce maintained the utmost confidence in his ability and his loyalty. He compared him to the great Guan Zhong 管仲, minister to the hegemon Duke Huan of Qi 齊桓公.

When Sun Ce died, Sun Quan went into mourning, but Zhang Zhao persuaded him there was no time for such luxury. He insisted that he show himself to his followers, and with Zhou Yu and other leaders he expressed confidence that Sun Quan would be able to maintain the nascent state. Zhang Zhao became chief minister, acting almost as a regent, and later, when Sun Quan was away on campaign with the army Zhang Zhao had charge of the government at headquarters.

At the same time, under both Sun Ce and Sun Quan, Zhang Zhao led campaigns: facing Chen Deng north of the Yangzi and destroying the bandit Zhou Feng in Yuzhang. On the other hand, when Cao Cao called for surrender in 208 Zhang Zhao was chief among those who wanted to accept, and he opposed Zhou Yu, who argued for resistance and who later triumphed at the Red Cliffs.

A man of great dignity and firm views, Zhang Zhao was always treated with respect by Sun Quan, though he had no effect when he remonstrated about his passion for dangerous tiger-hunting. When Sun Quan became King of Wu in 221 he enfeoffed Zhang Zhao as a marquis, but he did not make him his Chancellor passing him over initially for Sun Shao and then for Gu Yong. He claimed Zhang Zhou was too serious and inflexible, but he may not have forgiven his mistaken advice in 208. There is a story, probably false, that when he took the imperial title he observed in open court that if he had taken Zhang Zhao's advice at that time he would now have been begging on the streets; such an extraordinary public insult would have done little for Sun Quan's own reputation and authority.

Zhang Zhao, however, did resign all his offices at that time, ostensibly on grounds of age and ill health. He occasionally held office and attended court thereafter, but the relationship was uneasy and both men recalled the days of tutelage when Sun Quan first came to power.

During Zhang Zhao's periods of retirement he composed commentaries to Chunqiu and Zuo zhuan, and to the Analects of Confucius. -SGZ Wu 7:1219-23*; Mather 76:500.

Zhang Zhaoyi 張昭儀 "Brilliant Companion," the Lady (d.214); Shu. As Liu Zhang was besieged by Liu Bei at Chengdu in 214, the Lady and her husband Zhu Shuxian were in the city. Zhu Shuxian was found guilty of conspiracy to surrender and was executed. Liu Zhang intended to have the Lady marry again, but instead she took her own life. Everyone was sorry for her. -HYGZ 10A:140-41.

Zhang Zhen 張貞/眞 also as Zhang Yuan 員; Jianwei. Zhang Zhen travelled to study the Book of Changes with the master Han Zifang but was drowned on the journey. His body could not be found until his widow, the Lady Huang Bo, threw herself into the river at the site of his death and emerged fourteen days later with his hand. -HYGZ 10B:161, SJZ 33:10b.

Zhang Zhi 張志. Inspector of Yi province in the time of Emperor Ming, Zhang Zhi recommended the scholar and diviner Yang Tong as Sincere and Upright. -HYGZ 10B:143.

Zhang Zhi 張植 Guanghan. Eldest son of Zhang Gang, Zhang Zhi became a gentleman cadet, but he evidently died before his father and rose to no higher office. -HYGZ 12:229.

Zhang Zhi 張芝 [Boying 伯英]; Dunhuang, later Hongnong; see sub Zhang Huan. Eldest son of Zhang Huan, Zhang Zhi was a celebrated scholar who refused invitations to the offices of the Excellencies at Luoyang. He also refused an imperial summons as Knowing the Way, though he held the sobriquet Youdao 有道.

Zhang Zhi was admired for his calligraphy in the informal cao shu 草書 script, sometimes linking a whole column of characters in a single brush-stroke. He was known as the "Sage of the Grass Style" 草聖, and the great fourth century calligrapher Wang Xizhi 王羲之 modelled his style upon that of Zhang Zhi and his colleague Zhong Yao, who was expert in the more formal kai shu 楷書, also known as zheng shu 正書 or zhen shu 真書, the "Standard Script" of the present day. -HHS 65/55:2144, JS 36:1065.

Zhang Zhi 張陟. In 207 Zhang Zhi was Inspector of Bing province in Cao Cao's service. -SGZ 24:679.

Zhang Zhong 張忠. As the Gengshi Emperor established his capital at Chang'an in 24, he named Zhang Zhong Inspector of Yi province and sent him with his officer Li Bao to take over the territory. The warlord Gongsun Shu sent his brother Gongsun Hui to attack them as they approached Chengdu, and Li Bao and Zhang Zhong were defeated. The Han troops withdrew into Wudu commandery, and Zhang Zhong is not heard of again. -HHS 13/3:534.

Zhang Zhong 張重 [Zidu 子篤]; Rinan. In the time of Emperor Ming Zhang Zhong was nominated Filial and Incorrupt. When he came to court, the emperor asked if indeed the people of his commandery had the sun at their north, as the name "South of the Sun" 日南 implied. Zhang Zhong replied that this was not the case, any more than the commandery of Yanmen 鴈門 had a gate formed by wild geese or Jincheng 金城 a city made of metal. -Anon.:1a.

[In fact, Rinan lay south of the Tropic of Cancer, so there was a period in the middle of summer when the sun did appear in the north at midday. The same phenomenon could be observed over much of the far south, for the line of the tropic is north of present-day Guangzhou.] .

Zhang Zhong 張忠; Hejian. A nephew of the Dowager Dong, mother of Emperor Ling, and thus himself a cousin of the emperor, Zhang Zhong was Administrator of Nanyang about 180. He was reported for corruption by the Inspector Xu Qiu. -HHS 48/38:1620.

Zhang Zhong 張种 see Zhang Chong 張种.

Zhang [Zhongjie] 張仲階/階; Chenliu or Chen. Ying Shao tells how the wife of Zhang Zhongjie twice in a single day mistook her brother-in-law Bojie for her husband. -FSTY 3f:106.

Zhang [Zhongran] 張仲然 (d.184); Runan. In 184 Zhang Zhongran was a member of staff of the Administrator Zhao Qian. When the Yellow Turban rebellion broke out the commandery militia was defeated. Zhang Zhongran and six other officers shielded Zhao Qian with their bodies, and though they were all killed Zhao Qian was able to escape. An edict ordered inscriptions placed on the gate of each officer's home in honour of the "Seven Heroes" 七賢. -HHS 45/35:1527.

Zhang [Zhongyu] 張仲瑜; Nanyang. A brevet magistrate in his native commandery, Zhang Zhongyu organised the repair of a trestle road after a landslide in the mountains. The work was commemorated with a stele. -SJZ 28:5b-6a.

Zhang Zhu 張助; Runan. The farmer Zhang Zhu found a plum stone, put it in a hollow mulberry tree, watered it and went away. The plum grew from inside the mulberry, and the local people found this so strange that they worshipped it as a god, claimed it had magical curative powers, and presented offering. When Zhang Zhu returned a year later, he was amazed at the fuss. He disapproved, and chopped the tree down.

Ying Shao cites this among a number of examples of false popular beliefs in the divinity of various objects. -FSTY 9:70-71.

Zhang Zhu 張著. An officer under Zhao Yun, Zhang Zhu was wounded in battle against Cao Cao in 219, but was rescued by Zhao Yun. -SGZ Shu 6:950.

Zhang Zi 張咨/資 [Ziyi 子議] (d.190); Yingchuan. A man of reputation, in 189 Zhang Zi was made Administrator of Nanyang by Dong Zhuo. In the following year, as Sun Jian the Administrator of Changsha came north to join the alliance against Dong Zhuo, Zhang Zi took the view that he had left his territory without authority. He refused him supplies, but Sun Jian enticed Zhang Zi into his camp, then executed him as a traitor and took over the commandery. -SGZ Shu 8:963, SGZ Wu 1:1096-97. SGZ 6:175 mistakenly lists Zhang Zi 資 among the allies against Dong Zhuo.

Zhang [Zijin] 張子禁 see Zhang Fan 張汎/汜 of Nanyang. -XC 4:8b.

Zhang Zilin 張子林; Kuaiji. A bandit chieftain, in the time of Emperor Guangwu Zhang Zilin ravaged the commandery. Impressed by the heroic conduct of the bravery of the magistrate Peng Xiu, he and his men surrendered. -HHS 81/71/.2674.

Zhang [Ziping] 張子平; Zuopingyi. When Tian Hui was struck mute through distress at the failure of his brother Weidu to receive recommendation for office, his friends Zhang Ziping and Ji Zhongkao doubted the affliction was real. They stole his bedding one night for a joke, and left him in the cold. When Tian Hui made no call for help, but only mumbled incoherently, they realised his case was real and apologised most sincerely. -FSTY 5:35-36; Nylan 83:451-453.

Zhang [Ziqian] 張子謙. An officer under Yuan Shang, Zhang Ziqian surrendered to Cao Cao. When Ye city fell in 204 and Shen Pei was captured, Zhang Ziqian jeered at him. Shen Pei in turn abused him as a turncoat. -SGZ 6:206; deC 96:329.

Zhang [Ziyang] 張子陽 was an Administrator of Hongnong. -LX 14:2b.

Zhang Zong 張宗 [Zhujun 諸君] (d.59); Nanyang. In the time of Wang Mang, Zhang Zong was a district officer. In 23, as men rose in arms throughout the empire, Zhang Zong gathered some three hundred men and plundered his territory. He joined the Gengshi Emperor at Chang'an, who named him a lieutenant-general, but as he saw the regime was in trouble Zhang Zong led his men across the Yellow River into Hedong.

When Guangwu's commander Deng Yu came on campaign to the west in 25, he took control of Hedong and Zhang Zong went to submit. Deng Yu had heard that Zhang Zong was an effective leader and good at planning, and he confirmed Zhang Zong's appointment as a lieutenant-general.

The army advanced into Youfufeng and occupied Xunyi city. Believing that the Red Eyebrows were too strong to face immediately, Deng Yu proposed to make an oblique approach to Chang'an. At the same time, though Xunyi was not strong, he wanted to leave a garrison there to protect his rear. None of his officers were anxious to command this isolated defence post, and Deng Yu prepared to draw lots. To his surprise and admiration, Zhang Zong volunteered to command this rearguard.

As the main army withdrew, Zhang Zong set his men to strengthening the fortifications and prepared to hold his position to the last. Deng Yu realised that his men were too few to withstand the hordes the Red Eyebrows, and sent a further two thousand men to his aid. Rather than remaining on the defensive, Zhang Zong took advantage of these reinforcements to make a pre-emptive strike. He withdrew safely from the sortie, the bandits did not come back, and all admired his courage.

At the beginning of 26, as Deng Yu at last advanced on Chang'an, Zhang Zong led a night attack into the city. He was stabbed in the neck, and later hit by an arrow, both wounds close to being fatal.

At the conclusion of Deng Yu's campaign in 27, Zhang Zong was appointed Commandant of the Adjunct Capital Region, and he accompanied Feng Yi in his operations to bring control over the various gentry and warlords in the region about Chang'an. Zhang Zong was then appointed Commandant of Henan, to control the region of the new capital at Luoyang. The office of the Adjunct Capital Region about Chang'an was probably abolished at that time, and a few years later, in 30, the Commandant's office in Henan was likewise eliminated. Zhang Zong became a Palace Counsellor.

In 32 Zhang Zong was sent once more on active service against some bandits in Yingchuan, and he was then engaged as an Internuncio in operations in the hills and marshes of Ji and Qing provinces by the lower course of the Yellow River. This was the area of the devastating floods which had disrupted local communities in the time of Wang Mang, and which brought the mass movement of the Red Eyebrows and other troops. Those attacked by Zhang Zong were presumably people who had remained behind and formed clan and self-defence groups.

In 40 Zhang Zong took command of combined commandery forces to deal with pirates and bandits in Beihai and Langye. He established clear strategy and a firm system of rewards and punishments, and the enemy were destroyed or scattered. As a result of this success, the various groups in the neighbouring regions of Pei, Chu, Donghai and Linhuai were so terrified that they turned against one another. Qing and Xu provinces were thus settled.

In the following year Zhang Zong was sent with several thousand men to deal with the religious leader Li Guang, who had seized Huan city in Lujiang. This time, he was defeated by the rebels, and Li Guang had to be destroyed later by Ma Yuan.

Probably soon after this set-back, Zhang Zong was appointed Chancellor of Langye, where he remained almost thirty years until he died in office. His government was always firm, and he had no hesitation in attacking or killing any dissident groups.

Zhang Zong was evidently a useful officer to Emperor Guangwu, but he was not sufficiently important to receive enfeoffment, nor did any later member of his family achieve distinction. -HHS 38/28:1275-76*; 24/14:838.

Zhang Zong 張宗; Hanzhong. About 150 Zhang Zong went to study in Nanyang. He was killed there by a certain Liu Yuan, but his former colleague Chen Gang killed Liu Yuan in revenge. -HYGZ 10C:167.

Zhang Zun 張尊. About 95 Zhang Zun was a physician in the service of Liu Cuo, Heir to the kingdom of Ji'nan. Liu Cuo fell in love with the Lady Song Run, a musician at his father's court, and had Zhang Zun serve as his go-between. When Song Run refused him, Liu Cuo was furious and killed Zhang Zun. -HHS 42/32:1432.

Zhang Zun 張辚 [Ziming 子明] (136?-240); Julu. As a young man, Zhang Zun studied at the University in Luoyang, then lived in retirement. During the 190s Yuan Shao offered him several appointments, but he moved to Shangdang. Importuned also by Gao Gan, he moved once more to Changshan.

Returning later to his native region, Zhang Zun likewise refused office under Cao Cao and the succeeding state of Wei. With hundreds of students and a reputation for deciphering omens, Zhang Zun was widely respected and is said to have died at a great age. -SGZ 11:361.

Zhangba 丈八 see Zuo Zizhangba 左髭丈八.

Zhangyou 張游 see Zhang You 張游.

Zhanshan 詹山; non-Chinese. A tribesman of the hill county in the west of Wuling, in 151 Zhanshan led more than four thousand men in rebellion. They burnt local offices and killed officials, and established a series of defence posts in the mountains. In 153 the Administrator Ying Feng settled the trouble by negotiation and a show of good faith. -HHS 48/38:1608, 86/76:2833.

Zhao 趙, the Lady I; Nanyang. Daughter of Zhao Meng, in 24 the Lady became a favoured concubine of the Gengshi Emperor. -HHS 11/1:471.

Zhao 趙, the Lady II. Married to Liu Kai, King of Hejian, the Lady became the mother of Liu Yi, Marquis of Liwu, father of Liu Zhi the future Emperor Huan.

The Lady presumably died about the same time as her husband, in 131. After their grandson Liu Zhi was brought to the imperial throne in 146, Liu Kai and the Lady Zhao were granted posthumous imperial honours. -HHS 55/45:1809, 7:288.

Zhao 趙, the Lady III. A concubine of Cao Cao, she was the mother of Cao Mao. -SGZ 20:579.

Zhao 趙 [personal name unknown]. In 160, as Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, he was sent to take charge of local forces dealing with bandit groups under Lao Bing and Shusun Wuji in the region about Mount Tai. He was evidently not successful, for a few months later Zong Zi was sent on the same mission. -HHS 7:307.

Zhao [?]jian 趙?建 [personal name unknown] (121-188). Having held local office in his commandery and his province, about 177 he was invited to join the offices of the Excellency Yang Ci. Because of the recent death of his brother, he refused.

In 179 he did join the offices of the Excellency Yuan Pang, and later served as a magistrate in two counties. He died in office in Chenliu. A stele was set up in his honour two years later. -LS 11:8a-9a.

Zhao 趙 [personal name unknown]. Elder brother of Zhao Fan, he married the Lady Fan, one of the great beauties of the empire, but died some time before 208. -SGZ Shu 6:949.

Zhao A 趙阿, the Lady; Pei. Daughter of Zhao Xiao, the Lady married Zhou Yu 郁. She was a woman of fine morality, but her husband was vicious. Her father-in-law told her that she had been chosen on account of her father's good qualities, and it was her duty to reform her new husband. He refused to change, however, and in despair she killed herself.

Zhao A's biography is in Fan Ye's Chapter on Worthy Women 列女傳. -HHS 84/74:2784*.

Zhao An 趙安 (d.179); Jiuquan. Murdered by Li Shou, Zhao An was avenged by his daughter, the Lady Zhao E, who became the mother of Pang Yu. -SGZ 18:548.

Zhao Ang 趙昂 [Weizhang 偉章]; Hanyang. A man of family who had served as a county magistrate in Wudu, in 213 Zhao Ang was a military adviser on the provincial staff at Ji, capital of Hanyang. Ma Chao took the city, and though Zhao Ang had argued against surrender, Ma Chao took his son hostage and compelled him to enter his service.

Despite this record of resistance, Zhao Ang's wife the Lady Wang Yi had influence upon Ma Chao's wife nee Yang. She persuaded Ma Chao to trust him, but in the autumn Zhao Ang joined Yang Fu and Jiang Xu in a rising. They tricked against Ma Chao into leaving Ji city, then closed the gates against him. Ma Chao fled south.

In the following year Ma Chao returned with reinforcements. He besieged Zhao Ang, Jiang Xu and others at Qi Mountain, on the edge of the Qin Ling ranges to the south of Hanyang, but after a month he was driven away by Xiahou Yuan. Zhao Ang received enfeoffment. -SGZ 25:701-02, 703.

Zhao Ang 趙昂, wife of: see the Lady Wang Yi 王異.

Zhao Anshi 趙安世; Xiapi. Grandson of Zhao Xing, Zhao Anshi became Chancellor of Lu and Director of Retainers. -HHS 46/36:1456.

Zhao Bao 趙苞 [Weihao 威豪]; Ganling. Zhao Bao was a cousin of the powerful palace eunuch Zhao Zhong; their families came from neighbouring commanderies. Zhao Bao was ashamed to have a eunuch relative, and refused all contact with his kinsman.

Having held office in his commandery, Zhao Bao was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became a county magistrate in Guangling. After three years of good government he was commended by the commandery. He was appointed Administrator of Wuwei in the northwest and then transferred to Liaoxi in the northeast; he was evidently considered something of a specialist in dealing with the border regions and non-Chinese.

After a year in Liaoxi, Zhao Bao invited his mother and called his wife and children to join him. Travelling along the coast, they were captured by a raiding party of Xianbi, who then turned against Zhao Bao's headquarters. When he brought out his troops, the enemy showed him their captives and defied him to attack. Zhao Bao nonetheless ordered the advance; the raiders were defeated but all his family was killed.

As Zhao Bao took the bodies home for burial, Emperor Ling awarded him a marquisate. He observed to his neighbours, however, that he had faced an impossible choice: had he not attacked he would have failed in his duty, but he had sacrificed his family for the sake of honour. Unable to live with the consequences, he vomited blood and died. -HHS 81/71:2692-93*; deC 84:463.

Zhao Bing 趙秉; Youfufeng. After the fall of Wang Mang in 23 Zhao Bing fled west into Tianshui and became a client of the local warlord Wei Ao, and in 25 Wei Ao appointed him an official in his separatist government. About 30 Zhao Bing left Wei Ao and returned to the east. Recommended by his fellow-countryman Du Lin, he held office under Emperor Guangwu. -HHS 13/3:522, 27/17:937.

Zhao Bing 趙炳阿 [Gong'a 公阿]; Guangling. An expert in Yue magic 越方, and particularly in the jin 禁 "preventing" spells, it was said that Zhao Bing could paralyse a man by breathing on him, and if he blew on a tiger it would promptly lie down ready to be tied.

During the time of war and pestilence in the late second century Zhao Bing and his colleague Xu Deng swore to devote themselves to curing illness. They sealed their bond by a display of spells: Xu Deng halted the flow of a river, and Zhao Bing caused a dead tree to sprout again.

Younger than Xu Deng, Zhao Bing treated him as his master. They lived very simply, and even their offerings to the spirits were no more than river water and mulberry bark. They treated disease simply with chants and spells, but they were very successful.

Then Xu Deng died, and Zhao Bing went east into Kuaiji, a territory where he was not known. He demonstrated his abilities by cooking a meal on an open fire on top of a thatched roof, without harming the building, and later crossing a river on a simple cloth, calling up winds to speed his passage. The people worshipped him, but the local magistrate, concerned that he was a rival to official authority, arrested him and put him to death.

A shrine was set up in his honour, and even mosquitos and gnats were held at bay by his influence. -HHS 82/72B:2741-42; Ngo 76:127-128, DeWoskin 83:76-77.

Zhao Bo 趙博. In 79 the scholar Yang Zhong proposed that an imperial council on the Confucian classics be held, and Emperor Zhang accordingly summoned the gathering in the White Tiger Hall.

Yang Zhong was at that time in custody for some crime, but the Academician Zhao Bo joined Ban Gu and Jia Kui in a request that, given Yang Zhong's great understanding of the Chunqiu, he should be released and allowed to take part. This was approved. It is probable, but not certain, that Zhao Bo himself took part in the discussions. -HHS 48/38:1599; Tjan 49:160-162.

Though they have the same name, it seems unlikely that this scholar was the same man as the military officer Zhao Bo below.

Zhao Bo 趙博. In 91 Zhao Bo was a major with the colonel Geng Kui in the final attack sent by Dou Xian against the Shanyu of the Northern Xiongnu.

Zhao Bo later became Chief Clerk in the Western Regions and was promoted Commandant of Cavalry in 107. With the Protector Duan Xi and the Senior Colonel Liang Qin, he was besieged for some months in Qiuzi [Kuqa]. The rising was suppressed, but the court ordered a full withdrawal from the Western Regions, and the process triggered the great East Qiang rebellion.

In 111 Zhao Bo was Administrator of Hanyang when Du Qi, a Chinese from the south of the Wei, led a rising in alliance with the rebel Qiang. As the court put a price on Du Qi's head, Zhao Bo sent his client Du Xi to kill him. -HHS 23/13:819, 47/37:1591, 87/77:2888, 5:218; deC 84:273, deC 90:106.

Zhao Bo 趙伯. A leader of rebels in Jing province, Zhao Bo was probably a non-Chinese of Wuling. In 162 he and other chieftains surrendered to the imperial army led by Feng Gun. -LS 7:13b.

Zhao Bo 趙播. A follower of the Yellow Turban leader Ma Xiang in 188, Zhao Bo was sent with Wang Yao to attack Luo city, headquarters of Que Jian the Inspector of Yi Province. They captured the city and killed Que Jian. It is possible this is the same person as Zhao Zhi 祇. -HYGZ 5:70, 10C:170.

Zhao [Boying] 趙伯英; Hanzhong. In 147 Zhao Boying was the husband of Li Gu's daughter Wenyi. -HHS 63/53:2089, HYGZ 10C:172. HYGZ 12:234 suggests that his personal name was Ying 英.

Zhao Bu 趙部 (d.188). Administrator of Ba commandery in 188, Zhao Bu was killed by Yellow Turban rebels led by Ma Xiang. -HHS 8:358, 75/65: 2432.

Zhao Chang 趙暢; Dong. An Academician, he died quite young. -HHS 39/29:1313.

Zhao Cheng 趙承; Henei. When Li Gu was arrested at the behest of Liang Ji in 147, his former student Zhao Cheng led a demonstration of several dozen men, who presented themselves at the gates of the palace bearing the tools of execution to show their support. The regent Dowager Liang released Li Gu, but soon afterwards her brother Liang Ji had him arrested again and killed.

Zhao Cheng and other disciples then compiled the De xing 德行 "Virtuous Conduct," a record of their master's sayings. -HHS 63/53:2087-89, XC 3:14a [which gives Zhao Cheng's place of origin as Henan].

Zhao Chengkou 趙盛寇 see Zhao Rong 趙融.

Zhao Chong 趙沖 (d.144); Hanyang [On his place of origin, see sub Zhao Kai]. Administrator of Wuwei in 141, Zhao Chong attacked the rebel Gongtang tribe of the Qiang who were raiding Longxi with a force of three thousand men. He forced two thousand of the enemy to surrender and captured eight thousand horses, camels, oxen and sheep. He was then given general command of all troops from the north-western commanderies in the Gansu corridor, and joined Jia Fu the Administrator of Beidi in attacking other members of the Gongtang group who were attacking that commandery. They gained no success, while the Xianbi allies that Zhao Chong had brought to the campaign proved unruly. As raiding extended over Liang province, the headquarters of several frontier commanderies were withdrawn.

In 142 Zhao Chong was appointed Protector of the Qiang, and he managed to persuade five thousand households of the Han tribe to surrender. Only the Shaohe tribe held out in Anding with some three thousand campfire groups, and an imperial army which had been gathered under the general Zhang Qiao was now disbanded.

In the summer of 144 Zhao Chong joined Zhang Gong, Administrator of Hanyang, to attack the Shaohé. They killed 1,500 men and captured 180,000 head of animals. Further attacks in the winter killed another five thousand of the enemy, and thirty thousand households came to surrender to the Inspector of Liang province. Zhao Chong was rewarded by having one of his sons made a gentleman cadet.

Early in the following year Zhao Chong's officer Ma Xuan went over to the Qiang and sought to lead them outside the frontier. The Deputy Protector Wei Ju/Yao chased Ma Xuan and defeated him, but when Zhao Chong attempted to follow up this success he was caught in an ambush in Anding and killed.

Despite this loss, Zhao Chong's earlier successes had broken the back of Qiang resistance and there was no further major trouble. His son Zhao Kai was enfeoffed as a marquis. -HHS 6:270-276, 87/77:2896-97.

Zhao Chong 趙寵. In 190 Zhao Chong was a major in the service of Zhang Miao, one of the leaders of the rebellion against the Han court controlled by Dong Zhuo. -SGZ 18:544.

Zhao Chou 趙稠. As Emissary to the Southern Xiongnu in 133, Zhao Chou sent one of his officers with the Xiongnu king Fushen on a successful raid of reprisal against the Xianbi beyond the frontiers. -HHS 90/80:2988.

The Annals of HHS 6:262 also record this incident, but name the Emissary as Wang Chou 王稠. It is not possible to determine which is correct.

Zhao Ci 趙慈 (d.186); Jiangxia. In 186 Zhao Ci led a mutiny in Nanyang, killed the Administrator Qin Jie and ravaged the commandery. He was killed that year by Qin Jie's successor Yang Xu. -HHS 31/21:1110.

Zhao Da 趙達; Henan. Having studied at the capital in the 180s, Zhao Da divined by his magic arts that there was a royal emanation in the southeast. As civil war broke out, he travelled there, and foretold the future there by several varied arts, including calculations from magic squares 九宮 [Needham 59:58]. He refused to divulge his methods, but laughed at those who sought to prognosticate by means of astrology or the direction of the wind. He forecast the day he would die.

Zhao Da was admired by leading scholars and was consulted by Sun Quan on several occasions, but he lost favour when he refused to reveal his techniques. After his death, Sun Quan heard that he had left a book; he questioned Zhao Da's daughter and dug up his coffin, but he could not find anything. So Zhao Da's art was lost. -SGZ Wu 18:1424-26*.

Zhao Dai 趙代 see Zhao Shi 趙世 [2 entries]. During Tang the personal name Shi was sometimes rewritten as Dai in order to avoid taboo on that of Emperor Taizong 太宗, Li Shimin 李世民. Some later editions changed the amendment back to the original, others did not.

Zhao Dao 趙荊 [Zi? 子?]; Hanzhong? A former gentleman cadet, Zhao Dao had a stele set up in his honour. Only fragments remain. -Nagata 94:292.

Zhao Dian 趙典 [Zhongjing 仲經] (d.168); Shu. Son of Zhao Jie by a concubine, Zhao Dian was learned in the classics and works of divination, and he attracted students from far and near. Early in the reign of Emperor Huan, when his father was an Excellency, he refused several recommendations for office but eventually accepted an imperial invitation with an official carriage. He became a Consultant and then a Palace Attendant. Noted for his direct advice, he persuaded the emperor against an extravagant project to enlarge the Vast Pond park east of Luoyang.

When Zhao Jie died in the mid-150s, Zhao Dian inherited his marquisate, and he served as Administrator of Hongnong and of Youfufeng. After some time out of office, he was appointed Colonel of the City Gates, Court Architect, Minister Steward and then Minister Herald. In that last capacity, as the official responsible for feudatories, he protested against Emperor Huan's enfeoffment of his favourites, notably eunuchs, after the destruction of Liang Ji in 159. Predictably, the emperor rejected his opinion, and Zhao Dian was transferred to be Minister Coachman. He was later Minister of Ceremonies and Minister of Finance, and was noted for his scrupulous honesty.

Whenever there was an adverse portent, officials were asked to give advice, but during the personal reign of Emperor Huan in the 160s Zhao Dian's firm criticisms eventually brought his dismissal. Admired by the reformists, he was named a "hero" [後 jun], second category in the major list of worthy men circulated by the students of the University.

When Emperor Huan died in 167, orders were sent out that marquises should not come to the capital for the funeral. Zhao Dian was indignant that as a former high official he should be forbidden to pay his last respects, and he handed in his insignia and went to Luoyang.

The local authorities and the Minister Herald reported this, but the senior ministers argued his case and the regent Dowager Dou approved it. Zhao Dian was made Steward of the Change Palace, in charge of the Dowager's apartments, then Minister of the Guards. It was proposed that he should be made Grand Tutor for the new Emperor Ling, but just at this time he fell ill and died.

Xie Cheng says that Zhao Dian joined Dou Wu and Chen Fan in their plan to destroy the eunuchs, and that he died in the counter-coup of 168. HHS 27/17, however, refers to the award of posthumous honours, and this would have been most unlikely if he had been killed in the attempted coup. It is more probable that he had died of natural causes earlier in the year. -HHS 27/17:947-49*, HYGZ 10A:133, XC 1:7b, XHS 3:2a; deC 89:435.

Though Zhao Dian's name appears in the major list recorded in the Chapter on the Proscribed Faction, HHS 67/57:2187, Fan Ye's cross-referencing at 2190 has no reference to his biography in HHS 27/17. It has been suggested this indicates there were two men of the same name, but that is surely most unlikely.

Zhao Ding 趙定; Shu. Father of the future Excellency Zhao Jie, Zhao Ding was a local leader of retainers, known for his generosity to the poor. -HYGZ 10A:135.

Zhao Du 趙犢 (d.205); Zhuo. Local leaders in the commandery, Zhao Du and Huo Nu rebelled in 205, killing the Administrator and the Inspector of You province. They were attacked and killed by Cao Cao. -SGZ 1:27.

Zhao Dun 趙敦 or Zhao Gen 根; Yingchuan. A leader of bandits, Zhao Dun and his colleague were defeated early in 26 by Guangwu's general Feng Yi and driven to the north of the commandery. There they joined Jia Qi of Henan. Soon afterwards Kou Xun was sent as Administrator to Yingchuan, aided by the general Hou Jin. Jia Qi was captured and executed and the others were pacified. -HHS 17/7:645, 16/6:623.

Zhao Dun 趙敦 [Jianhou 建侯]; Jianwei. As a magistrate in Guanghan in the 150s, Zhao Dun gained a fine reputation. He was invited to the offices of the Excellencies at the capital, and to that of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, but refused them all. When Liang Ji was destroyed in 159 instructions were sent that no mourning should be held, but Zhao Dun carried out ceremonies for his former would-be patron. He was liable to punishment, but received a special pardon from Emperor Huan. -HYGZ 10B:157.

Zhao E 趙娥, the Lady; Ba. Wife of Zhao Wan, she was celebrated for a reason now unknown. -HYGZ 12:219.

Zhao E 趙娥 or Zhao Eqin 娥親, the Lady; Jiuquan. The Lady Zhao was married to a member of the Pang family. In 179 her father Zhao An was killed by his fellow-countryman Li Shou. As other men of the Zhao were taken ill and died, Li Shou became confident there was no-one to maintain the vendetta against him, and he held a feast to celebrate.

It appears the Lady's husband was also dead, but she was told by her young son Pang Yu how Li Shou was boasting of his success. She bought a knife, and when she encountered Li Shou in broad daylight, she stabbed his horse so that he fell. She then fought and killed him, cut off his head, then went to the county office and asked to be executed. The magistrate Yin Jia resigned his position rather than punish her, and when Zhao E sought to insist, the commandery office had her escorted back to her home.

Then an amnesty was issued, so she was able to escape punishment with honour. Admiring her sense of duty, the provincial authorities set up a stele at her gate, while such enterprise and courage displayed by a woman were reported to the court and celebrated all over the empire.

The Lady's biography appears in Fan Ye's Chapter on Worthy Women 列女傳, and her son Pang Yu also became known for his courage and loyalty. -HHS 84/74:2796-97*, SGZ 18:548-50*.

Zhao Eqin 趙娥親, the Lady, see Zhao E 趙娥 of Jiuquan.

Zhao Fan 趙範. As Cao Cao took over Jing province in 208 he sent Zhao Fan south of the Yangzi to be his Administrator of Guiyang. After Cao Cao's defeat at the Red Cliffs a few months later, Zhao Fan was compelled to surrender to Liu Bei, who appointed Zhao Yun to take his place.

Zhao Fan's elder brother had died, and his sister-in-law was one of the celebrated beauties of the region. Presumably seeking a useful alliance, Zhao Fan offered the Lady Fan as wife to Zhao Yun. Zhao Yun observed that they were men of the same surname, so if he married the Lady it would be like wedding the widow of his own brother. Though others also encouraged him, he firmly refused the offer.

Zhao Fan later escaped to rejoin Cao Cao in the north. -SGZ Shu 2:879, Shu 6:949.

Zhao Fen 趙芬; Ba. Commandery Officer for Education 文學掾 under the Administrator Dan Wang, in 154 Zhao Fen joined other members of the local staff in persuading Dan Wang to send in a report describing the problems of maintaining control over the great area of the commandery. It was recommended that the territory be divided into smaller commanderies, but the court did not agree.

Zhao Fen later became Officer for Households 戶曹 in the commandery. -HYGZ 1:5-6, 12:220.

Zhao Feng 趙豐 [Shuji 叔奇]; Jincheng. Claiming distant kinship with the general Zhao Chongguo 充國 of Former Han, Zhao Feng became Internuncio in charge of the Reserve Camp of the Trans-Liao Command 監度遼營謁者; this is probably another name for the Camp at Liyang in Wei commandery. - Nagata 94:226.

Zhao Feng 趙封. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates in 125, Zhao Feng took part in the coup led by Sun Cheng which destroyed the Yan clan and placed Liu Bao, Emperor Shun, upon the throne. He was rewarded with a county marquissate in Nanyang.

In 127, after Sun Cheng forced the disgrace of the emperor's favourite Zhang Fang, he and Zhao Fang and their colleagues were all sent out to their fiefs, but in the following year the emperor recalled their good work and they were permitted to return to the capital. -HHS 78/68:2516-18.

Zhao Fu 趙浮. Officers of Han Fu commanding forces in the east in 191, Zhao Fu and Cheng Huan defied Yuan Shao with their troops and urged Han Fu not to yield to him. -HHS 74/64A:2378.

Zhao Gang 趙綱 (d.25); Dong. During the troubled times at the beginning of Later Han Zhao Gang, member of a leading local family, gathered a large following, set up an encampment, and plundered the people. He dressed in a feathered cape and carried an ornamented sword.

In 25 Li Zhang was appointed magistrate of the county for the new Emperor Guangwu. He invited Zhao Gang to a banquet, and Zhao Gang came with a hundred guards. Li Zhang took him by surprise, however, killed him and all his attendants, and went on to destroy the remainder of his following in their camp. -HHS 77/67:2492; Bn 79:134.

Zhao Gao 趙高. Administrator of Qinghe in 26, Zhao

Gao was visited by the angry ghost of his predecessor Xianyu Ji. -SJZ 9:27b-28a.

Zhao Gen 趙根 see Zhao Dun 趙敦.

Zhao Guang 趙光, the Lady, see the Lady Meng Guang 孟光.

Zhao Guang 趙廣. A stele of 173 from the region of Shu commandery tells how Zhao Guang, Zhang Pu and four other Libationers of the Rice Magicians 米巫祭酒 received a mysterious text. These men were evidently members of an early form of the Rice Sect which was later led by Zhang Lu. -LX 3:8a-9a.

Zhao Gui 趙璜; Ba. Zhao Gui was the father of the Lady Zhao Ying. -HYGZ 12:222.

Zhao Hong 趙閔 (d.24). A senior officer of the pretender Wang Lang, Zhao Hong commanded the garrison at Ji city in Guangyang. As Wu Han and others went south to join the Han commissioner Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, they captured the city and killed Zhao Hong. -HHS 18/8:676.

Zhao Hong 趙宏; Chen. In 33 Zhao Hong was leader of a group of bandits in the hills of Yingchuan. The Administrator Guo Ji persuaded him and his associate Shao Wu to surrender. They and their followers came with bound hands, but Guo Ji freed them and had them return to farming. Though he had granted the pardons without reference to the throne, Emperor Guangwu gave retrospective approval.

Zhao Hong and Shao Wu spread news of Guo Ji's generosity to their former colleagues south of the Yangzi and north across the plain, and great numbers of former rebels and bandits came to offer submission on such lenient terms. -HHS 31/21:1092.

Zhao Hong 趙弘/宏 (d.184); Nanyang. After the death of Zhang Mancheng, Zhao Hong became the local leader of the Yellow Turbans. The numbers under his command grew, and in the summer he seized Wan, chief city of the commandery. He was besieged there by Zhu Jun and other imperial commanders, and was killed in an attack. -HHS 71/61:2309.

Zhao Hou 趙侯 "Marquis Zhao" see Zhao Qian 趙謙. -HYGZ 10A:140, HYGZJBT 552-53.

Zhao Hua 趙華, the Lady; Ba. Widow of Zhao Manjun, who died when she was young, the Lady had refused to marry again. As Qiang raiders attacked her homeland about 110, she was afraid they would take her chastity. With the Lady Ma Yi and the Lady Wang Ji, two women in the same situation, she leapt into the Han River and drowned. They were celebrated as the Three Virtuous Women 三貞. -HYGZ 1:4.

Zhao Huang 趙璜 [Wenbo 文博]; Jincheng. Nephew of Zhao Kuan, he was involved in the erection of a stele to this family. -Nagata 94:226-27.

Zhao Hui 趙恢. When Wei Ao died in 33, Zhao Hui and others of his former officers rallied to his heir Wei Chun. They were forced to surrender to Han at the end of 34, and were sent to the east of Luoyang. -HHS 13/3:531.

Zhao Jia 趙嘉 [Taisheng 臺生] was the original name and style of Zhao Qi 岐 [Binqing 郟卿]. -HHS 64/54:2121.

Zhao Jian 趙堅; Nanyang. About 50 Zhao Jian killed a man. When he was sentenced to death his father and mother went to plead with the county magistrate Bao Yu, explaining that they were old and he was their only son; he was newly married and there were no children to carry on the lineage. Bao Yu allowed Zhao Jian's wife to visit him in prison, released his bonds so that he could couple with her, and delayed the execution until she was pregnant. -HHS 29/19:1021, DGHJ 14:2b.

Zhao Jian 趙建 also as Zhao Jianzhang 建章; Henan. Having mastered one of the Confucian classics by the age of twelve, Zhao Jian was nominated by the Director of the Secretariat Zuo Xiong and was named a Junior Gentleman, giving him early entrance to the University and probation for a commissioned post in the civil service. -HHS 61/51:2020-21.

Zhao Jian 趙堅 [Shuzhen 叔貞]; Nanyang. A member of staff of the Minister of the Household, in 156 Zhao Jian was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16a.

Zhao Jian 趙戡 [Shumao 叔茂]; Jingzhao. A nephew of Zhao Qi, in 158 he accompanied him on his flight from the enmity of Tang Xuan.

As a member of the Imperial Secretariat at Chang'an about 190, Zhao Jian was admired for his refusal to approve a number of Dong Zhuo's nominees for office.

Zhao Jian later became a county magistrate in Youfufeng. When Wang Yun was killed by Li Jue and his colleagues at Chang'an in 192, no-one dared attend his corpse, but Zhao Jian had at one time served under Wang Yun, and he gave him proper burial.

Zhao Jian then took refuge with Liu Biao, who treated him as an honoured guest, and when Cao Cao took over Jing province in 208 he gave him appointment.

About 217 Zhao Jian was a senior officer under the Chancellor of State Zhong Yao. He died soon afterwards. -HHS 64/54:2112, 66/56:2177-78, SGZ Shu 2:883.

Zhao [?]jian 趙?建 (121-188). Having served as a local officer in his commandery and his province, he was invited to the office of the Excellency Yang, but did not accept because his elder brother had died. This was most likely in the late 170s, when the Excellency was Yang Ci.

He later did accept appointment under the Excellency Yuan [Pang?] and served as magistrate in two counties. He retired from his last post, in Chenliu, on grounds of ill health, and died at the age of sixty-eight. In 190, two years after his death, a stele was set up to his memory. -LS 11:8a-9a, Nagata 94:256.

Zhao Jie 趙戒/誠 [Zhibo 志伯; later changed to Yibo 意伯 to avoid taboo on the personal name of Emperor Huan]; Shu. Son of Zhao Ding, Zhao Jie was well versed in the Confucian classics. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, after several appointments he became Inspector of Jing province, where he reported on the misrule of Liang Rang, uncle of the empress of Emperor Shun. As Chancellor of Hejian he kept firm hold on local partisans of Liang Ji, and when he was transferred to Nanyang he controlled the leading families and supported his junior officers and the common people. He also memorialised against members of the eunuch faction who held county magistracies but were greedy and corrupt.

After a term as Director of the Imperial Secretariat, Zhao Jie became Intendant of Henan and then Minister of Ceremonies, and in 141 he was promoted from Minister Coachman to Excellency of Works.

In 146, following the death of Liu Zuan the young Emperor Zhi in suspicious circumstances, Zhao Jie joined his colleagues Li Gu and Hu Guang, with other senior officials, in recommending that Liu Suan the King of Qinghe, a young man of twenty and thus of full age, be chosen as emperor. Liang Ji, however, made his displeasure clearly known; Hu Guang, Zhao Jie and their fellows acceded to his will and the youthful Liu Zhi, Emperor Huan was placed upon the throne. Li Gu was destroyed soon afterwards, and Zhao Jie became Excellency over the Masses in the regent government of the Liang family. As reward for their compliance Zhao Jie and the other Excellencies were enfeoffed as marquises, with designation as Specially Advanced which allowed them to remain at the capital.

1100 Zhao Jin

In 147 Zhao Jie became Grand Commandant, leaving office in 149. In 152, he was once more Excellency of Works, and joined his colleague Wu Xiong in urging repairs to the Temple of Confucius in Lu. One year later he left office and retired. He died at home.

Zhao Jie had shown courage in dealing with imperial favourites early in his career, but the historian Fan Ye describes him and his colleague Hu Guang as "shit" 糞土 on account of their pusillanimity at the time of Emperor Huan's accession. -HHS 6:271, 282, 63/53:2085-87, 2095, HYGZ 10A:135, XC 1:7a, LS 21:19a-20a.

Zhao Jin 趙津 (d.165); Taiyuan. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates, Zhao Jin took advantage of his position at court to terrorise his home country. In 165 he was arrested and killed by Wang Yun, an officer of the commandery. Zhao Jin's associates protested to Emperor Huan, and the Administrator Liu Zhi was executed. -HHS 66/56:2172.

Zhao Jin 趙瑾. In 188 Zhao Jin was appointed a senior major in the First Regiment of the Western Garden 西園上軍別部司馬, the army raised privately by Emperor Ling. He was soon afterwards sent to deal with the Banshun people in Ba commandery, who had risen in sympathy with the "Yellow Turbans" led by Ma Xiang q.v. -HHS 86/76:2843.

Zhao Jing 趙京; Nan. Chancellor to the warlord Qin Feng, in 27 he held the city of Yicheng on the Han River in Nan commandery, just south of Qin Feng's base at Liqiu. In the autumn the Han commander Cen Peng crossed the Han and defeated Qin Feng. Zhao Jing surrendered to him. Appointed a general of Han, he brought his men to join the siege of his former master at Liqiu. -HHS 17/7:658.

Zhao Jun 趙峻 [Boshi 伯師] (d.145); Xiapi. Son of Zhao Xing, Zhao Jun was widely admired for his ability. He became a close associate of the Liang family of the empress of Emperor Shun, and was appointed Director of Retainers about 140.

HYGZ says that in 142 the censorial commissioner Zhang Gang accused Zhao Jun of corruption, and he was sent to prison in a cage-cart and then dismissed. HHS Annals, however, record Zhao Jun's appointment as Grand Commandant, highest administrative office of the empire, in that same year. The stories are incompatible and HYGZ is certainly wrong: see also sub Zhang Gang.

When the infant Liu Bing, Emperor Chong, came to the throne under the regency of the Dowager Liang in 144, Zhao Jun was named Grand Tutor and shared control of the Imperial Secretariat with Liang Ji and Li Gu. The new emperor died in the following year, but Zhao Jun continued as Tutor for his youthful successor Liu Zuan, Emperor Zhi. He died in the autumn, a few months before his nominal protégée. -HHS 46/36:1546, 6:272-79, 34/24:1179, HYGZ 10B:157.

Zhao Jun'an 趙君安 see Zhao An 趙安.

Zhao [Junqing] 趙君卿. This man, who probably lived at the end of Later Han, is the first recorded commentator to the early mathematical and astronomical treatise Zhou bei suan jing 周髀算經 "The Arithmetical Classic of the Gnomon and the Circular Paths of Heaven." His contribution very probably included diagrams to demonstrate the solution to Pythagoras theorem.

The bibliographical treatise of Songshi, at 207:5271, ascribes the Zhou bei suan jing [i.e. its commentary] to Zhao Junqing, but Sui shu 34:1018, Jiu Tang shu 47:2036 and Xin Tang shu 59:1543 all say that Zhao Ying 嬰 was the compiler of a commentary to the Zhou bei [suan jing] 周髀注. Yao Zhenzong:2394 prefers the variant personal name Shuang 爽; there may have been a miswriting, or the man had two personal names. He is commonly known, however, by his style: e.g. Needham 59:19-20.

Zhao Kai 趙愷; Hanyang. Son of Zhao Chong, Zhao Kai was presumably the son who was appointed a gentleman cadet in honour of his father's achievements against the rebel Qiang in 144. Zhao Chong was killed soon afterwards, and in the following year Zhao Kai was awarded a village marquisate.

During the 170s Zhao Kai was Inspector of Jing province. He reported falsely that Yang Xuan had wrongly claimed credit for success against rebels in Lingling, and because he had factional support at court his slander was at first believed. As Yang Xuan cleared his name, however, Zhao Kai was punished. -HHS 87/77:2897, 38/28:1288 & JJ at 1371 Hui Dong; deC 89:165-166. It seems likely that these two references to Zhao Kai relate to the same man.

Zhao Kang 趙康 [Shusheng 叔盛]; Nanyang. About 150 Zhao Kang was celebrated as a recluse scholar and teacher, living in the mountains to the west of the commandery and refusing invitations to court. The official Zhu Mu declared himself his disciple, and when Zhao Kang died he carried out mourning for him. -HHS 43/33:1463.

Zhao Kuan 趙寬 [Boran 伯然] (88-152); Jincheng. Eldest son of Zhao Mengyuan, Zhao Kuan became a major under the Protector of the Qiang. At the time of the great rebellion about 110 he was caught up in the defeat and destruction and was the only one of his immediate family to survive. Taking refuge in Zuopingyi, he established a local reputation, but returned to the west in 131 under the resettlement program urged by Yu Xu.

The Administrator Yin Song invited Zhao Kuan to join his staff as an Investigator, but he declined on grounds of ill health, though as a leading member of the community he accepted appointment as a Thrice Venerable. He died at the age of sixty-five.

A stele was set up in 180 to commemorate Zhao Kuan and his family. -Nagata 94:226-27; Ebrey 80:334.

Zhao Kuang 趙匡; Nanyang. In 27 Emperor Guangwu sent Zhao Kuang to be Administrator of Youfufeng, with command of troops to assist Feng Yi take control of the lower Wei valley. The territory was short of food, and Feng Yi was greatly aided by the reinforcements and supplies brought by Zhao Kuang. They attacked the local warlords, killed those who would not submit, sent the others to Luoyang, and resettled their followers. In the following year Zhao Kuang took part in the defeat of Gongsun Shu's general Cheng Wu at Chencang, bringing a final settlement of the region. -HHS 17/7:647-48.

Zhao Kuang 趙匡 (d.34). A general of Gongsun Shu, after the death of Wei Ao in 33 Zhao Kuang and his colleague Tian Yan tried to support his son and successor Wei Chun and maintain a presence in the Wei valley. They were attacked by an imperial army under Lai Xi, and after a year of fighting Zhao Kuang was captured and killed by the general Feng Yi. -HHS 1B:55, 15/5:588, 17/7:651.

Zhao Lei 趙累. An officer with Guan Yu in Jing province in 219, Zhao Lei was captured by Ma Zhong, a major in the service of the Sun commander Pan Zhang. -SGZ 10:1300.

Zhao Li 趙歷. Administrator of Changsha in the early 140s, Zhao Li was commended by the Inspector Li Gu. -HYGZ 10C:165.

Zhao Li 趙禮; Pei: see sub his brother Zhao Xiao 趙

孝.

Zhao [Manjun] 趙蔓君; Ba. Husband of the Lady Zhao Hua, he died when she was young. -HYGZ 1:4.

Zhao Meng 趙萌 (d.25); Nanyang. A general under the Gengshi Emperor, in the winter of 23 Zhao Meng joined Deng Ye, Shentu Jian and Li Song to occupy Chang'an after the destruction of Wang Mang. By early 24 he and Li Song had emerged as leaders of the Nanyang gentry faction, and by sending away potential rivals the two men established a dominant position at court. Zhao Meng became Grand Marshal on the Right, and one of his daughters entered the imperial harem. He was treated with the utmost favour, and it is said that he killed a man for a private quarrel even in the presence of the emperor.

As the Red Eyebrows approached Chang'an in 25, the Gengshi Emperor sent Zhao Meng to hold Xinfeng, east of the capital, supported by the chieftains Wang Kuang, Chen Mu and Cheng Dan. Then the emperor was driven out by Zhang Ang and others, his former supporters, and came to Xinfeng. There he killed Chen Mu and Cheng Dan, as sympathisers with Zhang Ang, and Wang Kuang fled to join his fellows in Chang'an.

Zhao Meng and Li Song then fought their way into the capital and restored the emperor there, but the city fell to the Red Eyebrows soon afterwards. Zhao Meng was evidently killed in the fighting. -HHS 11/1:470-74; Bn 59:51-60, 98-101, 251.

Zhao [Mengchang] 趙孟長; Jincheng. Son of Zhao Mengyuan and brother of Zhao Kuan, he was killed during the great Qiang rebellion about 110. -Nagata 94:226.

Zhao [Menglin] 趙孟麟; Jianwei. Commandant of a border county in Shu commandery in 112, Zhao Menglin had a stele set up to celebrate improvements he had made to the local road network. -LS 4:2b-3b.

Zhao [Mengyuan] 趙孟元; Jincheng. Son of Zhao Feng, Zhao Mengyuan became the father of Zhao Kuan. -Nagata 94:226.

Zhao Min 趙旻; Nanyang. A senior member of staff to the Administrator Lu Nu in 163, Zhao Min was associated with the new temple at the source of the Huai, in the mountains east of the commandery. -LS 2:12a-14b, Nagata 94:142.

Zhao Min 趙敏; Ba. Towards the end of Han, Zhao Min was Administrator of Ba. The commandery had by this time been divided into three, and the truncated territory controlled by Zhao Min probably did not include his home country. -HYGZ 1: 9.

Zhao Ming 趙明 miswritten for Zhao Bing 趙炳/炳.

Zhao Mu 趙牧 [Zhongshi 仲師]; Jingzhao. As a young man, Zhao Mu was known for his proper conduct of public affairs. A student of Chunqiu, he became a disciple of Yue Hui, and when Dou Xian forced Yue Hui to kill himself, Zhao Mu was one of those who protested at the injustice and obtained his posthumous rehabilitation.

Qualifying for office in the highest grade, Zhao Mu was appointed to the Imperial Censorate. He later became Administrator of Kuaiji, and obtained a high reputation in both offices.

Zhao Mu was then Chancellor of Lecheng. In 116 he reported how the king, Liu Gong, had forced his son to commit suicide; but he also presented a false accusation that Liu Gong had offered sacrifices to the deities against the interests of the dynasty. This was Impiety, and the senior officials urged Emperor An to have Liu Gong executed. Liu Gong defended himself, and on the basis of his past good conduct a full investigation was ordered. There was no evidence to support the charges, and Zhao Mu was sent to prison.

There was an amnesty soon afterwards, so Zhao Mu escaped the death penalty. He was released and died at home. -HHS 50/40:1671.

Zhao Mu 趙謨. In 189 Zhao Mu was Minister of the Guards. -SGZ 8:240.

Zhao Niao 趙嬈, the Lady: see the Lady Zhao Rao 趙嬈.

Zhao Ning 趙寧; Shu. In the late 180s the minister Zhao Qian sent his son Zhao Ning back to their home country, where the Administrator Gao Shun had him prepare Xiangzu ji 鄉俗記, "Record of Local Customs." -HYGZ 3:34.

Zhao Pan 趙磐 or Zhao Qing 磬; Jingzhao. Eldest brother of Zhao Qi, Zhao Pan held local office in the administration of the capital province. He died young. -HHS 64/54:2123.

Zhao Ping 趙評 (d.151). In 151 Zhao Ping was Chief Clerk for the Western Regions. When he was taken ill and died at Yutian [Khotan], King Chengguo of neighbouring Jumi claimed King Jian had poisoned him. Zhao Ping's son pressed the case, his successor Wang Jing followed it up with undue energy, and Chinese authority in the west was seriously weakened. -HHS 88/78:2916.

Zhao Qi 趙旂 [Ziluan 子鸞]; Jianwei. Having served with distinction as a magistrate in Hongnong, Zhao Qi joined the Imperial Secretariat and was then appointed Director of Retainers. At this time the kinsmen of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji sought to bully the people, but Zhao Qi kept them under firm control and the alarm drums were always still. -HYGZ 10B:155.

Zhao Qi 趙歧/歧 [Binqing 邠卿] (d.201); Jingzhao. Of strong local lineage, Zhao Qi's grandfather was a member of the Imperial Censorate. Zhao Qi was born about 110, in a residence attached to the offices of the Censorate [御史臺 yushi tai]; his original style was Taisheng 臺生 "born at the office" and his personal name was Jia 嘉. He changed his personal name to Qi and his style to Binqing in 158 [XHS 4:18a has his style as Taiqing 臺卿].

Possessing great understanding of the Confucian classics when he was still young, Zhao Qi was also arrogant and independent. He married the Lady Ma Qiang [Zongmei], a junior cousin of the celebrated scholar Ma Rong, but he felt insulted by Ma Rong's informal conduct and did not respect his scholarship. He held local office in Jingzhao, but was resented and forced out because of his rigid honesty.

At the age of thirty [Xie Cheng says forty] Zhao Qi became extremely ill and was bed-ridden for seven years. Believing he would die, he spoke to a nephew of his regret that he had achieved nothing in his life, and asked that his tomb inscription observe that "He had the will, but not the time" 有志無時. Later, however, he regained his health.

In 154 Zhao Qi joined the offices at the capital, and later received appointment under the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. Recommended as being Qualified to Deal with Complex Affairs, he became a magistrate in Hedong, where he encouraged local schools. When Zuo Sheng, brother of the palace eunuch Zuo Guan, became Administrator of the commandery, Zhao Qi refused to serve under him. He returned to his home country of Jingzhao, where he became Officer of Merit to the Intendant Yan Du.

In 158 Tang Xuan, brother of the eunuch Tang Heng, became Intendant. He had formerly been Commandant of the Tiger Tooth garrison by Chang'an, but was despised for having received his position through favouritism rather than ability. Zhao Qi and his cousin Zhao Xi had been leaders in this denigration, and Tang Xuan was bitterly resentful. Fearing his vengeance, Zhao Qi fled with his nephew Zhao Jian, but Tang Xuan laid false charges against other members of his family and had them killed: cf. sub Zhao Xi.

It was at this time, as he journeyed incognito, that he changed his personal name from Jia 嘉 to Qi 岐 [after the famous mountain in present-day Shenxi] and his style to Binqing [Bin 邠 being the legendary place of origin of the Zhou dynasty], as signs that he would not forget his homeland.

Zhao Qi travelled across eastern China, and he was selling cakes in a market in Beihai when he encountered the young gentleman Sun Song. Recognising his quality, Sun Song introduced himself, and when he heard of Zhao Qi's situation he sheltered him in a concealed room of his house for several years. It was in these circumstances that Zhao Qi compiled much of his edition and commentary to the Book of Mencius.

After the death of Tang Heng in 164, followed by that of Tang Xuan, Zhao Qi took advantage of an amnesty and returned home. He received invitations from all the Excellencies, and in 166 he joined those of the Excellency over the Masses Hu Guang. Zhao Qi was then named Inspector of Bing province, to deal with trouble among the non-Chinese people of the frontier, but before he could put any policy into effect he was forced from office by the First Faction Incident of 166-167 and, after the second series of accusations and purges in 169, he was proscribed from office. He nonetheless he compiled a lengthy discussion on how to resist the insurgents, Yukou lun 禦寇論 in forty pian.

In 184 the rebellion of the Yellow Turbans brought a summons for all experienced officials. Initially named a Consultant, Zhao Qi was chosen as chief of staff by the general Zhang Wen for his campaign against the rebels of Liang province; he was then detached to be Administrator of Anding commandery, whose capital had been transferred south into Youfufeng in the 140s.

Zhao Qi was later named Administrator of Dunhuang, but on the way to the west he and other newly-appointed administrators were captured by rebels. They wanted Zhao Qi to act as their leader in the same fashion as Yan Zhong, but he escaped and went back to the east. He encountered another force of the enemy, but this time evaded them altogether, though he spent several days hiding in the open without food.

As the imperial court, now controlled by Dong Zhuo, moved west to Chang'an in 190, Zhao Qi was again appointed as a Consultant, and soon afterwards he became Minister Coachman. As Li Jue and his fellows seized power at the capital in 192, they sent Zhao Qi and Ma Midi on an embassy to make peace with the leaders of the east. More successful than Ma Midi, Zhao Qi arranged a truce between Yuan Shao and Gongsun Zan in 193.

Zhao Qi then went south to Chenliu, where he became ill. Now over eighty years old, he took no part in affairs for two years, but as Emperor Xian returned to Luoyang in 196 Zhao Qi was named Minister Coachman with the Staff of Authority as an envoy for the newly – and briefly – independent regime. He was able to persuade Liu Biao in Jing province to send aid to Dong Cheng in his efforts to restore the capital.

As he was now old and ill, Zhao Qi stayed with Liu Biao, though when Cao Cao took control of the court in the following year, he was given title as Minister of Ceremonies. He died in 201, aged over ninety.

Besides his work on Mencius, Zhao Qi left many other works of scholarship and literature, few of which have survived. The most notable was Sanfu jue lu 三輔決錄 "Evaluative Records of the Three Adjuncts," a collection of biographies of gentlemen from his native territory, the commanderies about Chang'an. Probably compiled during the period of proscription under Emperor Ling, it is an important representative of a genre of local history which had increasing influence upon concepts of thought and identity towards the end of the dynasty; only fragments remain. -HHS 64/54: 2121-24*, XC 4:1b-2a; Legge CC II:4-7; Texts:331-332 [Lau], Ebrey 86:645, deC 95:545.

Zhao Qi 趙岐/歧, wife of: see the Lady Ma Jiang 馬姜.

Zhao Qian 趙謙; Zuopingyi. Administrator of Zuopingyi at the time of an eclipse in 167, Zhao Qian recommended the scholar Dong Fu of Guanghan as a worthy man for office. As was his custom, Dong Fu pleaded ill health and would not attend court. -SGZ Shu 2:866.

Zhao Qian 趙謙 [Yanxin 彦信] (d.192); Shu. Grandson of Zhao Jie and a nephew of Zhao Dian, Zhao Qian was among those scholars who compiled a local history Ba-Shu qijiu zhuan 巴蜀耆舊傳 "Venerable Men and Ancient Affairs of Ba and Shu" [see also Zheng Qin and Wang Shang].

At the time of the Yellow Turbans rebellion in 184 Zhao Qian was Administrator of Runan. He faced the rebels in the field but was defeated.

Zhao Qian later became Minister of the Household, and in the spring of 190 he replaced Huang Wan as Grand Commandant in the imperial court controlled by Dong Zhuo. As Acting General of Chariots and Cavalry, he arranged the transfer of the government to Chang'an, and he was rewarded with enfeoffment.

In the autumn of 191 Zhao Qian resigned his office on grounds of ill health, but he was soon afterwards appointed Director of Retainers. In that position he executed the hostage prince of Jushi, who had relied upon Dong Zhuo's favour to repeatedly disobey the laws. Dong Zhuo, furious, killed one of Zhao Qian's staff, but had too much respect for the man himself to take direct action against him.

Sent out as General of the Van, Zhao Qian took a defensive position against possible attack from Liu Yan in Yi province, who had made alliance with the north-western warlord Ma Chao and his associates. He encouraged the local officer Jia Long to rebel against Liu Yan in the name of Han; though the rising was suppressed, the activity served to distract Liu Yan from ambitions further afield. Zhao Qian also defeated the Bobo bandits from Xihe.

After the assassination of Dong Zhuo in 192 and the subsequent destruction of Wang Yun by Dong Zhuo's former officers Li Jue and others, Zhao Qian became Excellency over the Masses. Leaving office a few months later on grounds of illness, he was named Director of the Imperial Secretariat in the ramshackle regime at Chang'an. He died before the end of the year. -HHS 27/17:949, XC 8:10a, SGZ Shu 1:869, HYGZ 10A:135, 140 [as "Marquis Zhao" 趙侯].

Zhao Qin 趙勤 [Yiqing 益卿 or Mengqing 孟卿]; Nanyang. Zhao Qin's mother was a sister of Liu Ci, favoured kinsman of Emperor Guangwu, but Zhao Qin took nothing from the relationship. Known for his sense of honour and concern for learning, during the 70s he held local office in the commandery, and he was Officer of Merit to the Administrator Huan Yu.

When the chiefs of two counties governed wrongly, Huan Yu sent Zhao Qin as his Investigator, and by moral authority he compelled both men to resign. -DGHJ 18:8a.

Zhao Qing 趙磬 see Zhao Pan 趙磐.

Zhao Qinglong 趙青龍 [Dark Dragon]; Zuopingyi. A hills bandit about 212, he was killed by troops of the Administrator Zheng Hun. -SGZ 16:511.

Zhao Qu 趙衢; Hanyang. In 213 Zhao Qu was in Ji city, capital of Hanyang, which had been captured by Ma Chao. He joined the conspiracy led by Yang Fu and Jiang Xu: as the local leaders raised arms Ma Chao left the city to attack them; Zhao Qu, Pang Gong and Liang Kuan then barred the gates against him and killed his family. Zhao Qu was rewarded with enfeoffment.

In 220, now a general, Zhao Qu was sponsor of a stele to commemorate Cao Pi's assumption of the imperial throne. -SGZ 25:702, SGZ Shu 6:946, LS 19:4b; Goodman 98:197.

Zhao Rao 趙嬈 also as Zhao Niao and as Zhao Yao 堯, the Lady; Hejian. Formerly wet-nurse to Liu Hong, Emperor Ling, when he was brought to the throne in 168 the Lady gained influence with the regent Dowager Dou and was enfeoffed as Lady of Pingshi in Nanyang.

The Lady argued against the proposals of Chen Fan and Dou Wu to purge the palace eunuchs, and when Cao Jie and the eunuchs led the young emperor in a coup against them, she escorted him to the Imperial Secretariat where the necessary orders were drawn up. She was rewarded with high honours.

In 178 Cai Yong described the Lady Zhao as a dangerous influence on the empire. -HHS 66/56:2169, 69/59:2242-43, 60/50B:1999, YSS:22a; deC 89.96-99.

Zhao Ren 趙任, the Lady. A member of the harem of Emperor An, the Lady was punished for some fault and became resentful of the regent Dowager Deng and her family.

After the death of the Dowager in 121, the former Excellency Li He suggested that there had been a plan to depose him. When the emperor made enquiries, the Lady Zhao supported the story, and the imperial favourites Li Run and Wang Sheng pressed the accusation. The Deng clan was disgraced and destroyed. -HHS 16/6:616, 108/18:3365.

Zhao Rong 趙融 [Zhichang 稚長?]; Hanyang? In 188 Zhao Rong was one of the eight colonels of the Western Garden, in the private army set up by Emperor Ling.

Some ten years later, when he heard how Yuan Shao had behaved discourteously to the great scholar Zheng Xuan, Zhao Rong foretold his failure. -HHS 69/59:2247, SGZ 6:195.

During the 190s the eccentric scholar and critic Ni Heng abused several members of Cao Cao's court, and HHS 80/70B:2653 refers to one of his victims as Zhao Zhichang 稚長.. Commentary observes that this man was General Who Restrains the Bandits 盛寇將軍, and the parallel passage of SGZ 10:2653 refers to him as Zhao Chengkou 盛寇. Shen Qinhan, in SGZJJ 10:9b, quotes a stele which identifies Zhao Rong with the style Zhichang, and also Wei shu 52:1145, where a distant ancestor of Zhao Yi 逸 of Tianshui/Hanyang is identified as Zhao Rong, who became a Household Counsellor of Han. It would appear, therefore, that Zhao Rong was a general under Cao Cao and a senior member of his court.

SJZ 17:17b has a confusing reference to a certain Zhao Rong, who is described as Inspector of Bin province 邠州刺史, and who had a stele erected in his honour in the first year of the Jian'an 建安 reign period of Emperor Ling. There was, however, no unit named 邠州 Binzhou during Han, and the first year of Jian'an, 196, was seven years after the death of Emperor Ling. There may have been a stele erected to Zhao Rong after his death, possibly in 196, but the other statements appear confused.

XTS 73B:2980 mentions Zhao Rong, whose style included the character chang 長 and whose family came from the region of Hanyang; he held office as Administrator of Youfufeng and as Minister Herald.

Zhao Rong 趙融. In 222 Zhao Rong was a commander in the army of Liu Bei which was defeated on the Yangzi by Lu Xun of Wu. -SGZ Wu 13:1346.

Zhao Rui 趙蕤. As the remnant imperial court came under Cao Cao's control in 196, the Consultant Zhao Rui was one of those enfeoffed for good service in the escape from Chang'an. -HHS 72/62:2342, HHJ 29:344.

Zhao Rui 趙叡 (d.200). An officer in the escort for Yuan Shao's supply train near Guandu, he was killed by Cao Cao's raiding party. -SGZ 1:22.

Zhao Shang 趙商 [Zisheng 子聲]; Henci. During the 180s Zhao Shang travelled to Beihai to study under the celebrated scholar Zheng Xuan. -HHS 35/25:1208.

Zhao Shao 趙邵 [Botai 伯泰]; Ba. Known for his filial conduct, Zhao Shao became a county magistrate in Runan. -HYGZ 12:219.

Zhao Shao 趙邵 [Ji'nán 季南]; Hanzhong. A staff officer to the Administrator Wang Sheng in 148, Zhao Shao was joint sponsor of a stele celebrating the repair of the Baoye Road through the Qin Ling ranges and honouring his master's fellow-countryman Yang Huan, who had urged the work. -LS 4:5a.

Zhao She 趙舍. Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate, about 185, he quarrelled with his subordinate Kong Rong, who resigned on grounds of ill health. -HHS 70/60:2263.

Zhao Shengkou 趙盛寇 i.e. Zhao Chengkou; see Zhao Rong 趙融.

Zhao Shengqing 趙聖卿 see Qu Shengqing 麴聖卿.

Zhao Shi 趙世 I also as Zhao Dai 代 q.v. (d.98); Nanyang. Son of the Grand Tutor Zhao Xi, Zhao Shi became a Palace Attendant, and in 75 he was given supernumerary office as Serving within the Yellow Gates. When Zhao Xi died in 80, he succeeded to his fief.

Zhao Shi became a colonel in the Northern Army, and he was second-in-command to Liu Shang against the Qiang chieftain Mitang in 97. In the following year Liu Shang was dismissed and imprisoned for lack of energy in pursuit, while Zhao Shi suffered the same penalty. He was taken ill and died in prison; in pity, Emperor He gave posthumous gifts, restoring his seal of office as a colonel and his fief as a marquis. -HHS 26/16:915.

Zhao Shi 趙世 II also as Zhao Dai 代 q.v. A Palace Attendant in 124, Zhao Shi joined the demonstration led by Lai Li at the palace Gate of the Vast Capital, protesting the dismissal of the Heir, Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun. The demonstrators achieved no immediate success, but their support was recognised, and after Liu Bao had been brought to the throne in the following year Zhao Shi and his colleagues were rewarded with high office and the ren right to nominate their sons as cadet gentlemen.

Zhao Shi became Minister of Justice, but was later transferred to another post after failing to attend the New Year court assembly. -HHS 26/16:915, 15/5:591-93, 87/77:2884, 115/25:2582-83.

Zhao Shu 趙淑; Nanyang. Son of Zhao Zhi, he inherited the family marquise. He had no sons and the fief died with him. -HHS 26/16:915.

Zhao Shuang 趙爽 see Zhao Junqing 趙君卿.

Zhao [Shubao] 趙叔寶; Jincheng. Son of Zhao Mengyuan and brother of Zhao Kuan, he was killed during the great Qiang rebellion about 110. -Nagata 94:226.

Zhao Song 趙松 [Junqiao 君橋]; Jianwei. As a young man Zhao Song accompanied Fei Yi as he evaded the demands of Gongsun Shu. After Gongsun Shu was destroyed in 36, Zhao Song was nominated Abundant Talent and he later became Administrator of Shang commandery. -HYGZ 10B:156.

1106 Zhao Song

Zhao Song 趙誦 [Gongliang 公梁]; Hanzhong. A junior official, Zhao Song was responsible for repair work on the Baoye Road through the Qin Ling ranges. His contribution was recorded in a stele inscription of 148. -LS 4:5a.

Zhao Song 趙嵩 [Bogao 伯高] (d.190); Hanzhong. Su Gu, Administrator of Hanzhong, was killed by Zhang Xiu in 190. Seeking to avenge his master, his officer Zhao Song attacked Zhang Xiu's camp single-handed. He killed a dozen men, but was slain before he could reach Zhang Xiu. -HYGZ 2:17, 10C:170. [There is a similar story concerning Chen Tiao.] See also sub Zhao Song's wife, the Lady Zhang Lixiu.

Zhao Ta 趙達. About 214 Zhao Ta and Lu Hong were Examiners in the kingdom of Wei; this new style of appointment probably represents an attempt by Cao Cao to establish a Censorate over personal conduct and the sumptuary laws. When they were criticised by the regular official Gao Rou, Cao Cao defended the men as well-suited to their work, but he later found that they were corrupt and had them executed. -SGZ 24:684, 27:739.

Zhao Tai 趙臺 [Gongfen 公憤]; Jianwei Dependent State. As a county magistrate in Ba commandery in 169, Zhao Tai arranged a stele to honour the former local worthy Liu Min. -LS 8:8b.

Zhao Te 趙特 variant writing for Gongsun Te 公孫特? -HYGZJBTZ:537.

Zhao Teng 趙騰; Qinghe. An interpreter of portents, Zhao Teng came to court some time during the 120s and presented criticism of the government. There are, however, two different accounts of the date of his activity and of his fate.

According to HHS 54/44:1766, Zhao Teng sent in a letter in 124, at a time when the eunuch Fan Feng and his associates were attacking the Excellency Yang Zhen. Emperor An was furious at his criticism and ordered that he be executed for impiety. Despite protests from Yang Zhen, the sentence was carried out.

HHS 56/46:1816 says that Zhao Teng made his comments to the court of Emperor Shun about 127. He and eighty supporters were arrested, but the Excellency Zhang Hao urged their good intentions, and the emperor accepted his argument. Zhao Teng was spared the death penalty, and his followers received just two years convict service.

It has been suggested there were two men of the same name and similar activity, but this is unlikely.

Zhao Wan 趙萬; Ba. The Lady Zhao E, wife of Zhao Wan, was celebrated for a reason now unknown. -HYGZ 12:222.

Zhao Wang 趙王 i.e. Zhao Yu 趙玉. HHS 55/45:1809 describes how in 121 the "Palace Counsellor Zhao Wang" 中大夫趙王 was accused of having attempted to persuade the late regent Dowager Deng to depose Emperor An. In JJ at 1949, Wang Xianqian suggests that the text should be corrected to 中大人趙, referring to the Lady Zhao Yu, an old associate of the Dowager. Zhao Wei 趙韙 (d.201); Ba. A man of local family, in 188 Zhao Wei was head of the Great Granary at Luoyang, but resigned his post in order to accompany the new Governor Liu Yan back to his home province.

When Liu Yan died in 194, Zhao Wei was a leader of those who supported the succession of Liu Yan's son Liu Zhang as Governor, to some extent because he was seen as a weak man who would allow them more autonomy. With title as a General of the Household, Zhao Wei led troops to drive away Hu Mao, nominee of the Chang'an government, who had been supported by Liu Biao, Governor of Jing province, and some local rebels. Establishing a camp at the head of the Gorges in the east of Ba commandery, to guard against further trouble from that direction, he proposed that the commandery be divided for easier administration, and his plan was adopted [cf. sub Dan Wang; and see HYGZ 1:8, where the name is miswritten as Zhao Ying 趙穎].

Zhao Wei remained in garrison for the next several years and acquired a strong local following, but in 200, as Liu Zhang, currently involved in a war with the theocrat Zhang Lu in Hanzhong, showed lack of confidence in Pang Xi the Administrator of Ba, Zhao Wei protested. As a native of Yi province, he was resentful of the migrant groups from the east: Liu Yan had recruited amongst these people, styling them the Dongzhou Troops, but Liu Zhang had proved unwilling or unable to restrain their conduct against the locals.

Zhao Wei now raised a rebellion. He paid money to establish formal alliance with Liu Biao in Jing province, found real support in Guanghan, Jianwei and Shu commandery, and led a large army to besiege Liu Zhang's capital of Chengdu. The Dongzhou Troops, however, fearful of their fate at Zhao Wei's hands, fought fiercely and drove back the attack.

Zhao Wei was forced south to Jiangzhou, present-day Chongqing, where he was killed by his own officers. -SGZ Shu 1:865-69, HYZG 5:70-71; deC 96:298-305.

Zhao Weisun 趙威孫; Henei? A connection by marriage to Sima Lang, in 190 Zhao Weisun commanded troops at the military base in Liyang in Wei commandery. Believing that his home country of Henei was exposed to the coming civil war, Sima Lang led his household and others to take refuge under his protection. -SGZ 15:467.

Zhao [Weizhang] 趙偉章 see Zhao Ang 趙昂.

Zhao Wen 趙溫 [Zirou 子柔] (137-208); Shu. Younger brother of Zhao Qian, Zhao Wen became Assistant to the Intendant of Jingzhao, but left office in disgust at the low level of the position. Later, when there was a famine in his home country he distributed the family stores of grain, and it was said that he saved over ten thousand from starvation.

In the time of Emperor Huan, Zhao Wen was Administrator of Ba commandery. The non-Chinese Banshun people rebelled, but he settled the trouble by honest dealing and fair treatment.

As the government controlled by Dong Zhuo moved to Chang'an in 190, Zhao Wen's brother Zhao Qian was in charge of the transfer. Zhao Wen went to the court, was made a Palace Attendant and accompanied the imperial cortège. He was rewarded with a village fief and was later Minister of Ceremonies.

In the winter of 193 Zhao Wen was given title as Excellency of Works, with control of the Secretariat, under the ramshackle government dominated by Li Jue and his fellows. He was dismissed a few weeks later, but then became Minister of the Guards and returned to Excellency rank in the following year.

In 195, as Li Jue and his associate Guo Si quarrelled, Li Jue seized Emperor Xian, took him to his headquarters in Chang'an; it was thought that he intended to take him to his base territory north of the capital. Now Excellency over the Masses, Zhao Wen wrote to remonstrate against such abuse of power. Li Jue was furious, and he was dissuaded from killing him only by the intervention of his cousin Li Ying, who had served at some time under Zhao Wen.

As Emperor Xian fled east from Chang'an, Zhao Wen was captured by Li Jue but was saved by the intervention of Jia Xu. He eventually rejoined the imperial group and continued as Excellency at the court in Xu city under the control of Cao Cao.

In 208 Zhao Wen nominated Cao Cao's son Cao Pi as a candidate of Abundant Talent. Cao Cao was angry, claimed the proposal was false and insisted Zhao Wen be dismissed. The nomination may have been an attempt to curry favour, or it may, on the contrary, have represented a spark of independence at the puppet imperial court. In either case, Cao Cao regarded it as interference in his management of the state and of his family. Zhao Wen died later that year. -HHS 27/17:949-50*, 86/76:2843, SGZ 2:57, HYZG 10A:135, XC 1:7b.

Zhao Wuji 趙無忌 [Shiqing 世卿] (d.158); Jingzhao. Elder brother of Zhao Qi, Zhao Wuji held local office in the capital province. He and other members of the family were killed by Tang Xuan the Intendant of Jingzhao, his home country, who had a quarrel with the family. See below sub Zhao Xi of Jingzhao. -HHS 64/54:2123.

Zhao Xi 趙熹/壹/熹 [Boyang 伯陽] (3 BC-80 AD); Nanyang. As a young man Zhao Xi was noted for his moral conduct. One of his cousins was murdered, leaving no sons to avenge him, and though Zhao Xi was at that time only fifteen he took up responsibility for the vendetta. Taking up arms and leading a band of retainers he went to take revenge, but then found that there was sickness in his opponent's household. He believed it would be wrong to take advantage of such a situation, so he told his enemies that when they were better they should go away. They were so impressed by this generosity that when they had recovered they went instead to him with bound hands. Zhao Xi refused to see them, and in the end he killed them.

When the Gengshi Emperor first took the imperial title in 23, the powerful Li 李 clan of Wuyin county in Nanyang initially refused to accept him. The general Li Bao was sent, but they said they would trust only Zhao Xi. As Zhao Xi was barely twenty, the new emperor was surprised at his wide reputation, but he named him a lieutenant-general and sent him to Wuyin. The Li duly submitted, and Zhao Xi then led troops into Yingchuan and Runan and took several more surrenders. Having served with distinction under Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, in the triumph at Kunyang, he was appointed as a General of the Household and granted title as a marquis.

As the Red Eyebrows destroyed the Gengshi Emperor in 25, Zhao Xi was caught in Chang'an, but he and a few dozen others broke out and fled. His friend Han Zhongbo was accompanied by his beautiful wife, but was afraid she would attract attention and bring harm to the party, so he was going to leave her by the wayside. Zhao Xi refused to hear of it. He put dirt on the Lady's face and carried her along in a hand-cart, explaining to anyone they met that she was ill. When they came to Nanyang, they met a group of palace women who had also escaped from the capital but were now in desperate straits. Zhao Xi gave them food and clothing and helped them return to their homes.

Zhao Xi was an old friend of Deng Feng, but when Deng Feng rebelled in 26 he wrote to criticise him. Guangwu was suspicious, but when Deng Feng surrendered in the following year he obtained the letters and now appreciated Zhao Xi's loyalty.

Zhao Xi was then appointed to a county in Jing province south of the Yangzi. The roads were dangerous, but Zhao Xi refused any escort and went alone to his new post, impressing the local leaders with the imperial authority and bringing them to submit. The provincial Inspector admired his achievements, and Zhao Xi was transferred to a county in Nanyang, where he again put down banditry and pacified the territory.

About 40 Zhao Xi became a magistrate in Henei. A powerful family headed by Li Zichun dominated the county, but as soon as Zhao Xi arrived he arrested two of Li Zichun's grandsons for a murder. The young men committed suicide, and Zhao Xi went on to arrest and question Li Zichun himself. There were repeated appeals for clemency from the capital, but Zhao Xi paid no attention until the emperor himself reluctantly accepted the dying wish of his uncle Liu Liang and gave orders for a pardon.

Zhao Xi was promoted to be Administrator of Pingyuan. There were numbers of rebels and bandits, but Zhao Xi raised commandery troops to defeat them, killed the leaders, and persuaded the emperor to transfer some thousands of those who surrendered to the inner commanderies of Yingchuan and Chenliu. He established a strong moral government, and the people sang of how his virtue was so great that when Qing province was affected by a plague of locusts, all the insects which entered Pingyuan immediately dropped dead.

Zhao Xi's achievements in Pingyuan were raised at a court assembly in 50, and several women of his harem then told the emperor how he had rescued the palace ladies after the fall of Chang'an in 25. Guangwu called Zhao Xi to court as Minister Coachman and rewarded him generously.

After the resignation of the former Grand Marshal 太司馬 [Bn: Commander-in-Chief] Liu Long in 51, Zhao Xi succeeded him. He was the first formal civilian to hold that office, which was now renamed Grand Commandant 大尉. As the precedent was followed thereafter, the military connection was abandoned, and the position became the most senior among the Excellencies, heads of the civil administration.

Following the surrender of the Southern Shanyu Bi, and the establishment of his puppet government in Xihe, Zhao Xi was given responsibility for the frontier and supervised the return of refugees to the border commanderies which had been abandoned. The program was not entirely successful, for many people preferred to remain in central China or travel even further to the south.

In 54 Zhao Xi proposed that the emperor should perform the Feng and Shan sacrifices, and in 56 he took part in the ceremonies and reported them at the Imperial Ancestral Temple. He also recommended the construction of the Three Enclosures, being the Bright Hall, the Hall of the Circular Moat and the Spiritual Terrace.

When Guangwu died in 57 Zhao Xi reported the matter at the Altar of Heaven and announced his posthumous dynastic title, and as Emperor Ming came to the throne he and the other Excellencies were awarded district marquises [see also sub Li Xin]. Concerned at the informality with which Emperor Ming treated his royal brothers, Zhao Xi enforced restrictions on their access to the palace and that of their servants to the court.

Early in 60 Zhao Xi was found guilty having failed to investigate properly an affair involving Xue Xiu, Chancellor of Zhongshan, the kingdom held by Emperor Ming's half-brother Liu Yan 焉. No further details are given of the incident, but Zhao Xi and his colleague Li Xin were both dismissed.

In the winter of that year Zhao Xi returned to office as Minister of the Guards, and in 64 he was named Acting Grand Commandant; in practice he had full tenure of the post. About this time the emperor, impressed and contented with the scholarly ceremonies conducted at the Hall of the Circular Moat, was thinking of abolishing the Imperial University; Zhao

Xi persuaded him that both institutions had a role and both should be maintained [HHS 46/36:1606].

When Zhao Xi's mother died, he sought leave for the funeral. The emperor refused, but sent messengers instead, and he showered Zhao Xi with gifts and favours. Zhao Xi was correct and conscientious both in public and in private life, though we are told the ruler criticised him for failing to keep his offices in proper style: he had sought to spare the tax-payers, but Emperor Ming believed his frugality was misplaced.

When Emperor Zhang succeeded to the throne in 75 Zhao Xi became Grand Tutor, sharing control of the Imperial Secretariat with the new Grand Commandant Mou Rong, while seven of his sons were granted official positions.

Zhao Xi became ill and died in 80, at the age of eighty-four. Emperor Zhang visited his sick-bed and attended his funeral. -HHS 26/16:912-14*; Bn 79:61, 65, 172-181, 225.

Zhao Xi 趙熹. A eunuch, in 124 Zhao Xi was head of the household of the Empress Yan. He was evidently regarded as a supporter of the Heir Liu Bao: when Emperor An was persuaded to dismiss Liu Bao, Zhao Xi and some of his subordinates were accused on trumped-up charges and sent to exile in Shuofang.

After Liu Bao had been placed upon the throne by the coup of Sun Cheng at the end of the following year, Zhao Xi and his fellows were called back to the capital and made Regular Attendants. -HHS 78/68:2518.

Zhao Xi 趙襲/息 [Yuansi 元嗣]; Jingzhao. According to HHS 64/54, which writes the personal name as 襲, Zhao Xi was a cousin of Zhao Qi, who was Officer of Merit. Zhao Xi joined Zhao Qi in denigrating Tang Xuan, brother of the palace eunuch Tang Heng, who was Commandant of the Tiger Tooth garrison by Chang'an, but in 158 Tang Xuan became Intendant of Jingzhao and destroyed the Zhao family.

According to Wei lue, which writes the personal name as 息, it was Zhao Xi who was Officer of Merit, and he who took the lead in insulting Tang Xuan. Then Tang Xuan had his brother arrange his appointment as Intendant and proceeded to slaughter the Zhao clan, with orders that anyone who sheltered them would share their fate. Zhao Xi fled, as did Zhao Qi, here described as his uncle, who held a magistrate's appointment in Hedong; cf. sub Zhao Qi.

Years later, after the death of the Tang brothers in the mid-160s, Zhao Xi became Administrator of Dunhuang.

Sanfu jue, compiled by Zhao Qi, describes how Zhao Xi and his colleague Luo Hun sought to emulate the informal cao shu 草書 "Grass Style" calligraphy of the earlier masters Cui Yuan and Du Bodu. The great Zhang Zhi, however, regarded their work as clumsy and inferior to his own. -HHS 64/54:2122-23, SGZ 18: 551-52.

Zhao Xi 趙熹. Administrator of Hanyang in the early 160s, Zhao Xi was old and incompetent. He failed to deal with trouble from the Qiang, but clung to the prestige of his office. When Huangfu Gui came to Liang province in 162 he impeached Zhao Xi, who was dismissed and may have been executed. -HHS 65/55:2133-34.

Zhao Xian 趙憲; Shu. Husband of the Lady He Xuan, Zhao Xian died young. -HYGZ 10A:140.

Zhao Xiao 趙孝 [Changping 長平]; Pei. Zhao Xiao was a son of Zhao Pu 普 [also known as Zhao Bing 並], who controlled agricultural colonies on the northern frontier under Wang Mang. Zhao Xiao became a gentleman cadet, but he would conceal his rank and pass modestly as a commoner.

In the troubles which accompanied the fall of Wang Mang, cannibalism was rife. When Zhao Xiao's brother Li was captured by hungry bandits, Zhao Xiao went to offer himself instead, as a tastier morsel. Amazed at this, the bandits asked only that he find them some more normal food. Though he failed to do this, they were so impressed that they let both brothers go. The local people admired him, and Zhao Xiao was nominated Filial and Incorrupt; he would not accept. [Cf. also sub Ni Meng and Che Cheng.]

In the time of Emperor Ming Zhao Xiao joined the offices of the Grand Commandant, and the emperor, who had heard his story, made him a Counsellor Remonstrant and Palace Attendant. He was then Commandant of the Guards at the Changle Palace, the apartments of the Dowager, while Zhao Li became head of the Censorate. Emperor Ming admired both brothers, showed them special favour and sought their company. When Zhao Li died, Zhao Xiao was given leave to arrange his funeral.

Zhao Xiao later retired and died at home. He left only a daughter, Zhao A q.v., but Zhao Li's two sons were appointed gentleman cadets. -HHS 39/29:1298-99*, XC 2:4a.

Zhao Xin 趙訢 [Gongfu 公甫]; Nanyang. Described as a private gentleman 處士, in 156 Zhao Xin was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:17a.

1110 Zhao Xing

Zhao Xing 趙興; Xiapi. Zhao Xing was Director of Retainers in the time of Emperor Zhang, and he also became Administrator of Shangdang and of Yingchuan. He was known for his rationalist rejection of superstition and his insistence on innovation and reform. Despite such defiance of custom, Zhao Xing's family prospered and his son Zhao Jun and grandson Zhao Anshi both held substantial office. -HHS 46/36:1456.

Zhao Xing 趙興; Henan. A local commandery officer, in 135 Zhao Xing was involved in the construction of the Stone Bridge over the Gu River at Luoyang; see sub Ma Xian. -SJZ 16:14b.

Zhao Xu 趙序 (d.145). In 145 Zhao Xu was sent as a General of the Household to aid Teng Fu and the troops of Yang and Xu provinces against a major rebellion in the southeast. Their army defeated the bandits and killed most of its leaders, but Zhao Xu was then charged with embezzlement, of having been insufficiently energetic in the campaign, and of exaggerating the number of enemy dead. He was executed. -HHS 6:279, 38/28:1279.

Zhao Xuan 趙宣 [Ziya 子雅]; Hanzhong. Though a man of humble family, Zhao Xuan had fine manners and was very learned. The Administrator Yang Wenfang nominated him Filial and Incorrupt, and Zhao Xuan later became Administrator of Jianwei.

Zhao Xuan married the Lady Du Taiji. All seven of their sons were successful officials, while Zhao Yao and Zhao Yan rose very high. -HYGZ 10C:166.

Zhao Xuan 趙宣, wife of: see the Lady Du Taiji 杜泰姬.

Zhao Xuan 趙宣; Le'an. About 150 Zhao Xuan acquired great reputation for filial piety, because for twenty years after the death of his parents he refused to close their tomb but lived there with their bodies. When the Administrator Chen Fan called upon him, however, he found that Zhao Xuan had sired five sons during his ostensible mourning. Regarding such conduct as being rather a desecration of the dead than a sign of virtue, he had him executed. -HHS 66/56:2159-60.

Zhao Xuan 趙珰. In 178 Zhao Xuan was a colonel in the Northern Army. Cai Yong claimed that he had received favour and honour beyond his due as a result of his contact with the favourites of Emperor Ling. -

HHS 60/50B:1999-60.

Zhao Xun 趙勳 [Ningbo 寧伯]; Pei. A county Assistant in Danyang, in 181 Zhao Xun was a leading sponsor of a stele in honour of the magistrate Pan Qian, his senior officer. -LS 5:4a.

Zhao Xun 趙峻 see Zhao Jun 趙峻.

Zhao Yan 趙晏 [Pingzhong 仲平]; Ba. Known for his fine character, Zhao Yan became Administrator of Wei commandery. -HYGZ 12:219.

Zhao Yan 趙彥; Langye. As a young man, Zhao Yan studied statecraft and esoteric arts. When Zong Zi came to command of operations against local bandits in 160, Zhao Yan made calculations: the enemy were in Ju 莒 county, present-day Juxian in Shandong, and five counties about Ju had the character yang 陽 in their names; Zong Zi should therefore recruit from five yang commanderies. As troops were called in from Danyang, Shanyang, Nanyang, and from as far away as Guangyang and Hanyang, Zhao Yan advised also on the timing of the attack. The bandits were duly destroyed.

During the late 190s Zhao Yan was a Consultant at Xu city. He kept Emperor Xian informed on events of the day, but Cao Cao objected to his influence and killed him. -HHS 82/72B:2732*, 74/64A:2396; Ngo 76:112-113, DeWoskin 83:71-72, deC 96:480.

Zhao Yan 趙琰 [Zhigui 稚珪 or Yagui 雅珪]; Hanzhong. Son of Zhao Xuan and the Lady Du Taiji, about 180 Zhao Yao was Inspector of Qing province and then Chancellor of Liang. Called to join the Imperial Secretariat, he died before he could take up the post. -HYGZ 10C:166-67.

Zhao Yan 趙延; Anping. A brother of the eunuch Zhao Zhong, in 186 he approached Fu Xie to seek a present; Zhao Zhong would then recommend him for the enfeoffment he deserved for his service against the Yellow Turbans. Fu Xie indignantly refused, and Zhao Zhong had him sent from away the capital. -HHS 58/48:1876.

Zhao Yan 趙儼 [Boran 伯然] (171-245); Yingchuan. During the disturbances of the early 190s Zhao Yan took refuge in Jing province, where he became a close associate of Du Xi and Po Qin.

In 197, after Cao Cao had set the imperial court under his control at Xu city, Zhao Yan brought his kinsmen and dependents to join him. Appointed a county magistrate in Runan, he brought order by strictly enforcing the law even against the most powerful families. That area was the power base of the titular Commandant and local warlord Li Tong, but when an uncle of Li Tong's wife committed a crime Zhao Yan still proposed to execute him. Li Tong had formal right to intervene, but despite appeals from his family he refused to over-ride Zhao Yan's decision. Instead, he took him as an adviser and showed him particular attention and favour.

As Yuan Shao prepared to attack Cao Cao in 200, he sent agents to seek allies in Yu province, and a number of local officials were wavering. Li Tong remained firm, but his demand for taxes caused popular resentment. When Zhao Yan urged him to be more lenient, Li Tong explained that he feared Cao Cao's advisers might doubt his loyalty if he failed to maintain the rate of payments. Zhao Yan was able to persuade Cao Cao that the tax should be reduced to reward the people who were remaining faithful to his cause.

Zhao Yan later became Registrar on Cao Cao's ministerial staff, and in 208 he was sent as a personal envoy to settle disputes and co-ordinate defences under the three commanders about Xu city, Zhang Liao, Yu Jin and Yue Jin. As Cao Cao moved into Jing province later that year, Zhao Yan was put in charge of Zhangling commandery, newly established in the north of the province, and was appointed Area Commander with authority over seven army groups.

After another period as Registrar, Zhao Yan was sent to the west as Administrator of Youfufeng and Area Commander with authority over the region about Chang'an. When the Qiang raided the borders Zhao Yan led Yin Shu and other generals, pursued them north to Xiping in Zuopingyi, and thoroughly defeated them. Soon afterwards he turned against the local rebel Lü Bing in Youfufeng and destroyed him.

In 215 Zhao Yan was ordered to lead newly-surrendered troops from the northwest to take part in the settlement of Hanzhong under the general Yin Shu. The men became restless, and though Zhao Yan was able to prevent outright mutiny and brought loyal troops to regain control, he persuaded Cao Cao that the original group should not be used on the southern front. They were instead brought east into territory which was more secure, and over twenty thousand people were eventually shifted from the sensitive frontier.

In 219 Zhao Yan was appointed a Consultant and sent as an adviser to Xu Huang, in support of Cao Ren against Guan Yu. Xu Huang's officers urged an immediate attack, despite the numbers against them and the flooded river Han, but Zhao Yan argued that they should wait for reinforcements, and he accepted personal responsibility for any misfortune which might come through delay. His plan was accepted, and when the additional troops arrived Guan Yu was defeated.

Again, as Cao Ren and the other generals wanted to press the pursuit, Zhao Yan argued that they should not use their strength to destroy Guan Yu completely, but that he should be preserved as a threat against Sun Quan; his opinion agreed entirely with Cao Cao's.

When Cao Pi succeeded his father in 220, Zhao Yan was appointed a Palace Attendant and Commandant of Attendant Cavalry, serving as Administrator of Hedong and Commissioner for Agriculture with general authority over agricultural colonies. Enfeoffed in 222, he became a military adviser and Area Commander, with increasing responsibilities and occasional appointment to the Secretariat. A minister under Cao Rui and a general under Cao Fang, in 245, the year of his death, he was named Excellency of Works. -SGZ 23:668-71*; deC 96:228-229, 281, 499-501, 543-548. Zhao Yao 趙瑤 [Yuanguai 元珪]; Hanzhong. Son of Zhao Xuan and the Lady Du Taiji, as a young man at Luoyang in the 160s Zhao Yao was a close associate of Li Xie and others.

About 180 Zhao Yao became a magistrate in Henan, where he ruled so well that it was said fierce tigers abandoned the area. He later served as Administrator of Youfufeng, of Shu commandery, and of Guanghan, where he died. -HYZ 10C:166-67.

Zhao Yao 趙瑤; Hanzhong? At the time of an eclipse in 167 Zhao Yao was recommended as Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright. He went as far as Chang'an, from where he sent a sealed letter to the court, but then pleaded ill health and returned to his home. -HHSJJ 82/72B:3008 Shen Qinhan quoting Yibu qijiu zhuan. [This is probably the same person as Zhao Yao 瑤 above.]

Zhao Yao 趙堯, the Lady: see Zhao Rao 趙嬈.

Zhao Ye 趙曄 [Changjun 長君]; Kuaiji. As a young man Zhao Ye became a local officer in his county, but when he was ordered to welcome the commandery Investigator he was angry at being treated like a servant and left his post.

Having travelled to Jianwei to study the Han version of the Classic of Poetry under Du Fu, he stayed twenty years without any contact with his family, so that they held funerary ceremonies for him. Then Du Fu died and Zhao Ye returned home.

Though offered appointment in the provincial office, and recommended as Knowing the Way, Zhao Ye did not accept and died at home. During the early 190s, when Yu Fan discussed local worthies of Kuaiji with the Administrator Wang Lang, he gave special mention to Zhao Ye.

Zhao Ye compiled Wu-Yue chungiu 吳越春秋, a history of the conflict between the two states in the fifth century BC, though it is doubtful how much of the present-day text reflects his original work; it is also suggested that he may have written Yue jue shu 越絕書. He did compose Shi xili shenyuan 詩細歷神淵, interpreting the Poetry by calendrical calculations; it is said that this work was greatly admired by Cai Yong, who regarded it as superior to the Lun heng of Wang Chong, and that with Cai Yong's sponsorship it became the centre of a school at the imperial capital. -HHS 79/69B:2575*, XC 5:10b; Texts:473-476 [Lagerwey], 491 [Schuessler and Loewe].

Zhao Yi 趙壹 [Yuanshu 元叔]; Hanyang. Well-built and of fine appearance, nine foot tall [208 cm], Zhao Yi was a man of considerable ability. He was also extremely arrogant, and his neighbours got together to drive him away. He responded by composing Jiebin fu 解擯賦 "Rhapsody to Explain [my] Rejection," and also Ce shibing ye fu 刺世疾邪賦 "Rhapsody on the Ills of the Times." He later came into trouble with the law and was nearly executed, but a friend pleaded for him and he was released; he wrote a most eloquent and erudite letter of thanks.

In 178 Zhao Yi was sent to Luoyang as Reporting Officer for the commandery. That year the Excellency Yuan Feng was in charge of receiving the accounts. While all the other officers kowtowed to him, Zhao Yi made only a slow bow. Yuan Feng was surprised, and had one of his subordinates question his temerity. Zhao Yi replied that such was the courtesy the scholar Li Yiqi 酈食其 gave to Emperor Gao of Han [QH:234], and he doubted an Excellency should expect more than an emperor. Yuan Feng was most impressed, took him by the hand and brought him to sit with him at the dais.

In similarly arrogant fashion, Zhao Yi forced himself upon Yang Zhi the Intendant of Henan. Yang

Zhi nonetheless joined Yuan Feng in his praise, so Zhao Yi left the capital with a high reputation.

As he returned west through Hongnong Zhao Yi called upon the Administrator Huangfu Gui. The gate-keeper would not admit him, so he went away. Huangfu Gui sent after him to apologise, and asked him to return, but Zhao Yi sent an erudite letter of refusal. [For a similar story, see sub Gao Biao.]

Yuan Feng had arranged for an expert physiognomist to study Zhao Yi, and this man foretold that he would never hold more than local office. When he arrived back in Hanyang the commandery and provincial officials received him with honour, and he had many invitations to appointments at the capital. He accepted none of them, however, and died at home: so the prophecy was fulfilled.

Zhao Yi left sixteen pian of rhapsodies, hymns, eulogies, essays and other writings. -HHS 80/70B:2628-35*.

Zhao Yin 趙胤; Donglai. When Zhao Zi died he ordered a simple burial. His son Zhao Yin wanted a more impressive affair, but the trustees Zhu Zhi and Xiao Jian insisted on the terms of the testament. -HHS 39/29:1315.

Zhao Ying 趙英, the Lady; Ba. Daughter of Zhao Gui, she was celebrated for a reason now unknown. -HYGZ 12:222.

Zhao Ying 趙英, the Lady (b.205); Hanyang. Infant daughter of Zhao Ang and the Lady Wang Yi q.v., she was hidden and saved by her mother when Xi city was stormed by the rebel Liang Shuang in 210.

Zhao Ying 趙穎 miswritten for Zhao Wei 趙隲. -HYGZ 1:8.

Zhao Ying 趙英 see Zhao Boying 趙伯英. -HYGZ 12:234.

Zhao Ying 趙嬰 see Zhao Junqing 趙君卿.

Zhao Yong 趙永. In 24 Zhao Yong was Administrator of Dai commandery for the Gengshi Emperor. Orders were sent for him to return to the court, but his neighbour Geng Kuang, Administrator of Shanggu, persuaded him not to obey, and had him go instead to pay his respects to Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, who was then commissioner in the northeast but was approaching a declaration of independence.

Liu Xiu confirmed Zhao Yong in his office, but as he was returning to his territory his officer Zhang Ye mutinied and called the Xiongnu and Wuhuan to assist him. Liu Xiu sent Geng Kuang's son Geng Shu to attack Zhang Ye. The enemy were destroyed and Zhao Yong regained his post. -HHS 19/9:705.

Zhao Yong 趙融. In 188 Zhao Yong was named a colonel in the new imperial corps of the Western Garden.

Zhao Yong later became an officer under the warlord Yuan Shao. At one time Yuan Shao called the scholar Zheng Xuan to visit him, but then behaved discourteously. Zhao Yong questioned how he could hope to hold the confidence of the people if he treated such a gentleman so badly. -HHS 8:356, 74/64A:2374, SGZ 6:195.

Zhao Yong 趙顥 (d.219). In 219 Zhao Yong was Cao Cao's claimant Inspector of Yi province. He was killed when Liu Bei's army defeated Xiahou Yuan at Dingjun Mountain in Hanzhong. -SGZ Shu 2:884.

Zhao [Yongjiang] 趙永姜, the Lady (134-187); Nan? Wife and then widow of Hu Ning, the Lady brought up their children after his death. At the time of troubles in the mid-180s, her son Hu Hao was appointed Administrator of Jiyin. As the Lady was ill, he was obliged to leave her at Luoyang. She died there and he had Cai Yong compose a mourning elegy for her. -Cai 4:7.

Zhao You 趙祐; Chenliu. When Zhao You was drunk, he sometimes claimed to be an imperial officer. He was brought before the Excellency Bao Yu, but he found that such behaviour should be regarded as a joke, without ill intent. -FSTY 3f:107.

Zhao You 趙祐 or Zhao Yu 裕; Beihai. A eunuch Attendant at the Yellow Gates under Emperor Ling, Zhao You was respected for his honesty and loyalty and for the fact that, unlike Zhang Rang and others, he did not contend for power. A considerable scholar, Zhao You was also admired by Confucianists for his work on editing the classics at the time of their engraving in stone: see sub Cai Yong.

In 175 Zhao You joined the Consultant Bei Zheng to present a memorial urging that proper recognition be given to the Lady Yu, mother of the short-lived infant Emperor Chong, and to the Lady Chen, mother of Liu Zuan, Emperor Zhi. Emperor Ling approved: the Lady Yu was named Honoured Lady in attendance at the tomb of Emperor Shun, and the Lady Chen was formally ranked as a concubine of the late Liu Hong, King of Le'an. -HHS 10B:440, 78/68:2533.

Zhao Yu 趙玉, the Lady. A senior member of the imperial harem 中大人, about 100 the Lady was an attendant of the Honoured Lady Deng, future empress of Emperor He.

The current Empress Yin was resentful of the Lady Deng, and at a time the emperor was extremely ill she remarked privately that the Lady Deng should not survive him for long. The Lady Deng heard of this, and was so distressed at the evidence of the empress's hostility that she thought of killing herself rather than bring scandal to the court and disaster to her family. The Lady Zhao arranged a false report that the emperor was getting better, so the Lady Deng did not kill herself and on the following day the emperor indeed recovered.

In 121 the Lady Zhao was accused of involvement in the alleged plan of the Dowager Deng and her relatives to depose Emperor An. She probably died soon afterwards. -HHS 10A:420, 55/45:1809 [miswritten as "the Palace Counsellor Zhao Wang" 中大夫趙王: see Wang Xianqian in JJ at 1949].

Zhao Yu 趙昱 [Yuanta 元達] (d.194); Langye. Celebrated for his filial piety, Zhao Yu studied the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu with the private teacher Qimu [Kai?]. At first he kept strict seclusion and refused invitations to local office, but he later accepted nomination, became a county magistrate in his home commandery and created a model government.

In 184 Zhao Yu led local levies against the Yellow Turbans. The Inspector Ba Zhi praised his conduct in the highest terms, but when he recommended him for a reward Zhao Yu saw it as an insult to his integrity; he left office and returned home.

In 191 Zhao Yu agreed to join the staff of the Inspector Tao Qian and became his Attendant Official, but only having first insisted that he be given authority in criminal matters. In 193 he persuaded Tao Qian to send tribute to the court at Chang'an, and when Tao Qian was promoted to be Governor he made Zhao Yu his Administrator of Guangling. Later, however, as Tao Qian's government deteriorated, the two men became estranged.

In 194 Zhao Yu was murdered by Zhai Rong, whom he had sheltered as a guest. -XC 5:1a-b, HHS 73/63:2368, SGZ 8:248-49, Wu 4:1185.

Zhao Yu 趙域. Zhao Yu's name appears in the colophon to the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu in the Stone Classics engraved in the early 180s. He is described there as a Counsellor Remonstrant. -LS 14:8b.

Despite the different writing of the personal name and the different career, it seems possible this is the same man as Zhao Yu 昱 above. Both men were scholars of the Gongyang commentary and were active at the same time, and despite his reluctance to hold office Zhao Yu 昱 may have been persuaded to take part in such an important project.

1114 Zhao Yu

Zhao Yu 趙裕 see Zhao You 趙祐.

Zhao [Yuanjiang] 趙媛姜, the Lady (d.201); Jianwei. In 200 the Lady's husband Sheng Dao joined the rebellion of Zhao Wei against the warlord Governor Liu Zhang. The enterprise was unsuccessful, and by the following year both Sheng Dao and his wife had been taken.

Sheng Dao was sentenced to death, but in order to maintain the family line the Lady Zhao arranged for him to escape with their five-year-old son Sheng Xiang, and she took his place long enough for him to get away. She was killed, but Sheng Dao was later amnestied. In honour of her sacrifice he never remarried.

Fan Ye included the Lady's biography in his Chapter on Worthy Women 列女傳. -HHS 84/74:2799*, HYGZ 10B:161.

Zhao Yuansi 趙元嗣. At the end of Han Zhao Yuansi and Luo Shujing were celebrated in the west of the empire for their calligraphy in the informal cao shu 草書 "Grass Style." -JS 36:1065.

Zhao Yue 昭約 [Jiezai 節宰]; Guanghan. About 150 Zhao Yue was a disciple of Yang Hou, expert in the doctrines of Huang-Lao. -HYGZ 10B:144, 12:214.

Zhao Yue 趙越 [Yanshan 彥善]; Henei. Having held senior office in the Imperial Secretariat and as a General of the Household, Zhao Yue became Administrator of Guiyang and then Intendant of Henan. He died about 170, and had an impressive tomb in his home country. -S/JZ 9:6b.

Zhao Yue 趙月 (d.213); Hanyang. Son of Zhao Ang, in 213 he was taken hostage by Ma Chao to ensure his father's service. As Zhao Ang rebelled against Ma Chao a few months later, Ma Chao killed Zhao Yue. -SGZ 25:703-04.

Zhao Yun 趙雲 [Zilong 子龍] (d.229); Changshan. A handsome man eight foot tall [185 cm], Zhao Yun held military office in his commandery, and when rebellion broke out against Dong Zhuo in 190 he went to join Gongsun Zan.

In 191 Zhao Yun was sent with Tian Kai, Gongsun Zan's Inspector of Jing province, against Yuan Shao. He established a close relationship with Liu Bei and became an officer of horse in his service.

In 208, as Liu Bei sought to escape southwards after Cao Cao's take-over of Jing province, he was heavily defeated at the Chang Slope in Nan commandery. Someone suggested that Zhao Yun had gone over to the enemy, but Liu Bei refused to believe it, and soon afterwards Zhao Yun returned with his concubine the Lady Gan and her son Liu Shan, future Later Sovereign, whom he had rescued and brought to safety.

After the victory of the Red Cliffs, Zhao Yun was named lieutenant-general and Administrator of Guiyang, taking over from Cao Cao's officer Zhao Fan. Zhao Fan offered him his widowed sister-in-law the Lady Fan as wife, but Zhao Yun observed that they were men of the same surname, so if he married the Lady it would be like taking his brother's widow. Though others also encouraged him, he refused the offer, adding that there were plenty of other women in the empire, and he was not sure he could trust Zhao Fan. Later Zhao Fan did escape back to the north to rejoin Cao Cao, but Zhao Yun had avoided any involvement. [One may contrast Zhao Yun's moral stand about the widow of a fellow-clansman to the marital arrangements later made by Liu Bei with the Lady Wu, widow of Liu Mao.]

Zhao Yun was later appointed General of the Yamen 牙門將軍 at Liu Bei's headquarters on the Yangzi, and when Liu Bei went to Yi province in 211 he stayed in charge at the base. Liu Bei's wife the Lady Sun tried to take Liu Bei's young son Liu Shan east to her brother Sun Quan, but Zhao Yun and Zhang Fei intercepted her and brought the boy back.

As Liu Bei attacked Liu Zhang at the end of 212 Zhao Yun and Zhang Fei went with Zhuge Liang to support him. Having taken the eastern part of Yi province, in 214 they captured Jiangzhou, present-day Chongqing. As Zhuge Liang and Zhang Fei moved north up the Jialing Jiang, Zhao Yun was sent through Jianwei and up the Min River, rejoining the main army outside Chengdu.

When Liu Zhang surrendered Zhao Yun was named General of the Assistant Army 翊軍將軍. Liu Bei wanted to distribute the estates about Chengdu among his officers, but Zhao Yun argued that the struggle for the empire was by no means over and he persuaded Liu Bei that it would be a serious error to alienate the local people by such an act of plunder.

During the fighting in Hanzhong in 219 Zhao Yun, accompanied by only a few dozen men, met a far larger force of Cao Cao. He drove them back briefly, but they pursued him to his camp. Zhao Yun opened the gates and kept his men hidden. The enemy was suspicious and withdrew, but as they did so Zhao Yun beat his drums, fired on them with his most powerful bows, and so terrified them that they fled with heavy losses. As Liu Bei visited the battlefield next day he remarked "Zilong is all bravery!" [The stratagem of the Empty City 空城計 is also attributed to Cao Cao's general Wen Ping in Jiangxia in 226 and, most famously but without good authority, to Zhuge Liang: deC 90:438, 585.]

After Sun Quan destroyed Guan Yu and seized Jing province, Zhao Yun urged Liu Bei not to embark on a campaign of revenge, but to concentrate on his main enemy to the north. Once the power of Wei was broken Sun Quan would be compelled to submit. Liu Bei ignored this advice, and in 221 he attacked down the Yangzi. Zhao Yun stayed in reserve at Jiangzhou and, after the army was routed by Lu Xun, he brought his men forward to hold the Gorges.

As Liu Bei's son Liu Chan, the Later Sovereign, succeeded his father in 223, Zhao Yun was again promoted as a general and was enfeoffed as a marquis. He took part in the northern campaigns of Zhuge Liang, but after a defeat by Cao Zhen in 228 he was slightly demoted in rank. He died in the following year and received a posthumous title. -SGZ Shu 6:948-50*; deC 96:382, 467.

The commentator Zhao Yiqing, in SGZJJ Shu 6: 17b, notes there is a record of a stele in Nanyang which purports to be that of Zhao Yun, but since it is clear from the history that he died in the west the account of the stele must be false.

Zhao [Yunjun] 趙雲君 see Zhao Manjun 趙蔓君. -HYGZ 12:222.

Zhao Zheng 趙徵; Anping. A former Assistant Officer of Ji province, Zhao Zheng had a stele erected in his honour. -SJZ 10:19a.

Zhao Zhi 趙直; Nanyang. Son of Zhao Shi, he succeeded to his fief. In 125 Zhao Zhi was a colonel in the Northern Army when the Little Emperor Liu Yi, who had been placed upon the throne by the Dowager Yan and her family, became ill. Zhao Zhi joined a plot with the Excellency Li He and the minister Tao Fan to restore Emperor Shun to the succession, but the eunuch Sun Cheng and his colleagues carried out their own coup before they were ready to take action.

The aborted plan was not known at the time, but was revealed a year later. Li He was offered enfeoffment but it does not appear Zhao Zhi received any special favour. -HHS 26/16:915, 82/72A:2718.

Zhao Zhi 趙祉. A county magistrate in Jianwei in 126, Zhao Zhi sent his officer Xian Nihe with a message to Ba commandery, but Xian Nihe drowned on the way. -HYGZ 3:40, SJZ 33:14a.

Zhao Zhi 趙直. In the early third century Zhao Zhi was known as an interpreter of dreams, advising He Zhi, Jiang Wan and Wei Yan.

Zhao Zhi 趙祇. A bandit from Liang province, Zhao Zhi accompanied Ma Xiang into Yi province, where they styled themselves Yellow Turbans. Zhao Zhi is not mentioned after the beginning of the insurrection, but he may be the same person as Zhao Bo 播. -SGZ Shu 1:866.

Zhao [Zhichang] 趙稚長 see Zhao Rong 趙融.

Zhao Zhong 趙忠 (d.189); Anping. A eunuch, in 153 Zhao Zhong was an Attendant at the Yellow Gates. When his father died he misappropriated funerary insignia from the imperial workshops to ornament his tomb. Hearing of this, Zhu Mu the Inspector of Ji province ordered the local officials to retrieve the grave goods, the corpse was taken from its coffin, and members of the family were arrested. Zhao Zhong, however, was a favourite of Emperor Huan, and Zhu Mu was arrested and sent to convict service.

Zhao Zhong was not directly involved in the coup which destroyed Liang Ji in 159, but he was nonetheless awarded a marquisate. When Guan Ba and Ju Yuan were disgraced in 165, it was reduced to a secondary fief.

In the time of Emperor Ling, Zhao Zhong was promoted to be a Regular Attendant, and in 172 he was spokesman for his colleagues Cao Jie and Wang Fu as they argued that the late Dowager Dou of Emperor Huan should be buried with the rites only of a concubine. They were opposed by the Excellency Li Xian and the minister Chen Qiu, and lost the debate.

After the death of Cao Jie in 181, Zhao Zhong became Grand Prolonger of Autumn, in charge of the residence of the Empress He. Restored to a full marquisate, he was a favourite of Emperor Ling, who described Zhao Zhong as his mother and his colleague Zhang Rang as his father. At the time of the Yellow Turban uprising in 184, when the maverick eunuch Lü Qiang persuaded the emperor to end the proscription of reformists and to restrict the power of the eunuchs, Zhao Zhong, Xia Yun and others accused him of treason and forced him to kill himself.

In 185, even after the devastation of the Yellow Turbans, Zhao Zhong and Zhang Rang persuaded the emperor to place a tax upon farmland in order to repair palace buildings which had been damaged by fire and to construct bronze statues. During the campaign against the rebels, the general Huangfu Song observed the luxurious mansion of Zhao Zhong at Ye city in Wei commandery, and had it confiscated. In turn, Zhao Zhong and Zhang Rang had Huangfu Song dismissed from his command against the rebels in Liang province, and his fief was heavily reduced.

At the same time, within Luoyang, Zhao Zhong and his fellows built themselves great mansions. Concerned the emperor might see them, they persuaded him that it would bring ill fortune if he climbed too high, so they were able to conceal their extravagance.

In 186 Zhao Zhong was named General of Chariots and Cavalry in honour of his notional role in the defeat of the Yellow Turbans. He retired from that office later in the year.

In 189 Zhao Zhong was consulted by Jian Shi about his plans to assassinate the General-in-Chief He Jin. Later, after the murder of He Jin, he was killed by Yuan Shao and He Miao in the general slaughter of the eunuchs. In 190 his intended tomb was used for the burial of the former Young Emperor Liu Bian.

When Emperor Xian returned to Luoyang in 196 he lodged in Zhao Zhong's former residence. -HHS 78/68:2534-37*; deC 89:125-126, deC 96:16.

Zhao [Zhongbao] 趙仲寶; Jincheng. Son of Zhao Mengyuan and brother of Zhao Kuan, he was killed during the great Qiang rebellion about 110. -Nagata 94:226.

Zhao [Zhongrang] 趙仲讓; Henei. Zhao Zhongrang received provincial nomination as Abundant Talent from the Director of Retainers and became a magistrate in Pingyuan. He first travelled incognito to check on the customs and the administration, and when he took up his appointment he changed all the officers. After just a few weeks, however, he quit the post.

Zhao Zhongrang later became Officer of Merit in his home commandery, but again walked out in a huff when his recommendations were not approved. He had hitherto held a good reputation, so the Administrator did not punish him.

Zhao Zhongrang was then a senior officer under the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. In the winter months, however, he would sit in the courtyard in the sun, with his clothing open to the wind, or would lie on a bed completely uncovered. Liang Ji's wife Sun Shou urged that he be punished, but Liang Ji admired his quality. Though he continued to behave in eccentric fashion, Zhao Zhongrang was later appointed Administrator of Jiangxia. -FSTY 4:32-33: Ying Shao, predictably, disapproves such excessive behaviour.

Zhao [Zhongtai] 趙仲臺 (d.158); Jingzhao. An uncle of Zhao Xi [and in this version a brother of Zhao Qi q.v.], in 158 Zhao Zhongtai was Inspector of Liang province. Tang Xuan, brother of the palace eunuch Tang Heng, became Intendant of Jingzhao and wanted to destroy the Zhao family because of insults he had received. Tang Heng arranged that Zhao Zhongtai be recalled and sent back to his home country, where he was arrested and killed. -SGZ 18:552.

Zhao Zi 趙咨 [Wenchu 文楚]; Dong. Son of the Academician Zhao Chang, who died when he was young, Zhao Zi became known for the filial piety. He was recommended for office by his commandery and by his province, but did not accept.

In 158, however, Zhao Zi accepted nomination as Extremely Filial and Knowing the Way from the minister Chen Qi. He later became an Academician, but after the eunuchs destroyed Chen Fan and Dou Wu in 168 he claimed to be ill and left the capital.

About 182 the Grand Commandant Yang Ci sent Zhao Zi a special invitation to a discussion. He was then graded First Class and held a number of posts. He became Administrator of Dunhuang, but resigned on grounds of illness, and returned home to engage in farming with his sons and grandsons. On one occasion that robbers came to his gate, he opened it for them and offered everything that he had, so long as they did not disturb his aged mother. The robbers apologised for troubling him and went away, and though he sent after them with gifts they would not take them.

Now celebrated, Zhao Zi was invited to become a Consultant, and although he was reluctant he was pressed and persuaded by the local authorities. He then became Chancellor of Donghai, and so great was his prestige that as he passed through Yingchuan on his way to take up office his former nominee Cao Gao of Dunhuang abandoned his post as a magistrate in order to pay his respects.

Zhao Zi was in Donghai for three years, keeping powerful families under control, but he then became ill and asked to leave. He was again appointed as a Consultant, but became seriously ill at the capital. He asked his former students Zhu Zhi and Su Jian to arrange a simple burial, no matter what his family planned, and added a literary exhortation. Despite the protest of Zhao Zi's son Yin, the trustees carried out his wishes, and people admired Zhao Zi's wisdom. -HHS 39/29:1313-18*, XC 2:5a-b.

Zhao Zi 趙咨 [Junchu 君初]; Henei. In 190 Zhao Zi's neighbour Sima Lang warned the local people that their territory would become a battlefield of the coming civil war, and urged them to take refuge in Wei commandery. Most were unwilling to move, but Zhao Zi brought his household and went with Sima Lang.

A leading scholar-official of the time, Zhao Zi became a member of the Secretariat of Wei and was later Minister of Ceremonies. -SGZ 15:467-69.

Zhao Zi 趙咨 [Dedu 德度]; Nanyang. A man of wide learning and swift repartee, Zhao Zi became a Commandant under Sun Quan. When Cao Pi, Emperor of Wei, enfeoffed Sun Quan as King of Wu in 221, Zhao Zi was appointed a Counsellor and sent on an embassy to offer thanks. Quizzed by Cao Pi, he praised the qualities of Sun Quan and the defensive strength of his state.

On his return, Zhao Zi warned Sun Quan that the Wei would not keep the treaty, and he should prepare for independence. Sun Quan accepted his advice and promoted him. -SGZ Wu 2:1123-24.

Zhao [Zigong] 趙子恭; Jincheng. Son of Zhao Kuan, he was a local officer of the commandery. -Nagata 94:226.

Zhao [Zihui] 趙子惠; Jincheng. Son of Zhao Kuan, he became an officer under the Protector of the Qiang, but died young. -Nagata 94:226.

Zhao [Zijian] 趙子賤 (d.160); Hanzhong. In 147 Zhao Zijian was Officer of Merit in the commandery when orders came from the imperial government controlled by Liang Ji that Li Ji and Li Zi, sons of the disgraced minister Li Gu, were to be killed. The Administrator, respecting the family, wanted to let them take poison, but Zhao Zijian insisted the law be carried out, and the two men were duly executed.

Li Xie, younger brother of Li Ji and Li Zi, went into hiding, but returned home in 160. Afraid he might seek revenge, Zhao Zijian hired a man to kill him. Li Xie learnt of the plan and told the new Administrator; Zhao Zijian was executed. -HHS 63/53:2088, HYGZ 10C:172-73.

Zhao Zijian, wife of: see the Lady Han Shu'nan 韓樹南.

Zhao [Zizhen] 趙子真; Shu. Members of a powerful local family in the time of Emperor Huan, Zhao Zizhen and his kinsmen caused trouble in Chengdu. They were brought under control by the magistrate Liu Chong. -HYGZ 3:35.

Zhao Zuo 趙祚. In 220 Zhao Zuo was Attendant Officer to Liu Bei as Governor of Yi province. Following the abdication of Emperor Xian of Han he joined a petition which cited various works of divination and urged Liu Bei to claim the imperial title. -SGZ Shu 2:887.

Zhe Guo 折國; Nanyang/Guanghan. Grandson of Zhang Jiang, he took his surname from the family fief of Zhe 析 county in Nanyang [see also, however, sub Zhang Jiang].

Zhe Guo became Administrator of Yulin, and moved the family to Guanghan. He was immensely wealthy, with hundreds of servants and retainers, but when he died his son Zhe Xiang gave all his property away. -HHS 82/72A:2720*, HYGZ 10B:149; Ngo 76:100, DeWoskin 86:62.

Zhe Xiang 折像/象 [Boshi 伯式]; Guanghan. Son of Zhe Guo, Zhe Xiang was a gentle and generous man, who would not harm even an insect or a plant. Having studied with Yu Shuya of Dongping, he became an expert in the Jing Fang interpretation of the Book of Changes and a devotee of Huang-Lao.

When his father died, Zhe Xiang gave away the family property. He was criticised for leaving his sons and daughters destitute, but replied that long hoarding of wealth could bring disaster, while his sons lacked the ability to deal with it sensibly. By giving it away he was saving them from destruction. Wise men agreed with his arguments; but one may doubt his children felt the same way.

Foretelling the day of his death, Zhe Xiang held a farewell banquet for all his kinsmen. He died at the age of eighty-four, leaving no property behind, and his descendants proved as inadequate as he had expected. -HHS 82/72A:2720-21, HYGZ 10B:149; Ngo 76:100-101, DeWoskin 86:62-63.

Zhen 甄, the Lady (183-221); Zhongshan. Daughter of Zhen Yi, about 198 the Lady married Yuan Xi, second son of Yuan Shao. Yuan Xi became Governor of You province, but the Lady remained at Ye city to care for Yuan Xi's mother. When Cao Cao captured the city in 204, his son Cao Pi took her as his principal wife, though her first husband Yuan Xi did not die until 207. She became the mother of Cao Rui, born about 206, and of a daughter.

The Lady was celebrated for her beauty. It is said that Cao Cao had wanted her for himself, and that she was the inspiration for Cao Zhi's Luoshen fu 洛神賦 "Rhapsody on the Goddess of the Luo River." These stories are improbable.

The Lady was admired for her kindly nature and for her devotion to her mother-in-law the Lady Bian, but after Cao Pi took the imperial title in 220 it is said that she became jealous: his harem was large, and her rivals included the Ladies Guo, Li and Yin, together with two daughters of the deposed Emperor Xian of Han. Cao Pi became angry at her discontent, the Lady Guo told tales about her, and in 221 she was ordered to commit suicide. The official history of Wei concealed the scandal by a story that Cao Pi wanted to name her as his empress, but that she repeatedly refused the honour and died of natural causes before he could persuade her: Pei Songzhi notes the falsehood and disapproves.

In 227, after Cao Rui had become emperor, the Lady Zhen was granted posthumous title as empress and great favour was shown to her family. -SGZ 5:159-62*; Mather 76:503, Cutter 92, C/C 99.95-101.

Zhen Cheng 甄承; Beihai. Son of Zhen Pu and grandson of Zhen Yu, Zhen Cheng continued their tradition of scholarship on the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu. So devoted to his studies that he paid no attention to the affairs of his household, he was respected by all the scholars of the day.

About 80 Zhen Cheng was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and embarked upon an official career. He became Chancellor of Liang kingdom, and died in that office.

Zhen Cheng's descendants maintained the tradition of scholarship in Chunqiu. -HHS 79/69B:2580*.

Zhen Dao 甄道, the Lady; Zhongshan. Daughter of Zhen Yi, she was an elder sister of the Lady Zhen, future consort of Cao Pi.

Zhen Fang 甄訪 see Ma Fang 馬訪.

Zhen Feng 甄豐 see Shen Feng 沈豐.

Zhen Jin 甄晉 see Zhen Pu 甄普. -DGHJ 16:8a.

Zhen Hui 甄會 see Zhen Yi 甄逸.

Zhen Jiang 甄姜, the Lady; Zhongshan. Eldest daughter of Zhen Yi, she was a sister of the Lady Zhen, future consort of Cao Pi. -SGZ 5:159.

Zhen Pu 甄普 or Zhen Jin 晉; Beihai. Son of Zhen Yu, he maintained his father's scholarship on the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu. -HHS 79/69B:2580 [普], DGHJ 16:8a [晉].

Zhen Rong 甄榮, the Lady; Zhongshan. Daughter of Zhen Yi, she was an elder sister of the Lady Zhen, future consort of Cao Pi.

Zhen Shao 甄邵; Yingchuan. A supporter of Liang Ji, Zhen Shao was magistrate of Ye in Wei commandery. A former colleague, who had entered the imperial service in the same year, came to him for refuge from Liang Ji. Zhen Shao pretended to shelter him but secretly informed Liang Ji, so the man was captured and killed.

Later, as Zhen Shao was due to become head of a commandery, his mother died. He should have left office for the mourning period, but he buried her body in a stable and announced the death only after he had received the appointment.

Zhen Shao later returned to Luoyang, where he encountered Li Xie, son of Liang Ji's enemy Li Gu and now Intendant of Henan. Li Xie had Zhen Shao hauled from his chariot and flogged, then fixed a placard to his back saying, "To gain favour I sold my friend, in greed for position I hid my mother's corpse." The story now came out, and Zhen Shao was proscribed from office for the rest of his life. -HHS 63/53:2091.

Zhen Tuo 甄脫, the Lady; Zhongshan. Daughter of Zhen Yi, she was an elder sister of the Lady Zhen, future consort of Cao Pi.

Zhen Yan 甄儼 (d.196); Zhongshan. Son of Zhen Yi, he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, served in the offices of the General-in-Chief He Jin and became a magistrate in Wei commandery. He died young. His widow, the Lady Liu XVI, and their child were cared for by his sister, future consort of Cao Pi, Emperor Wen of Wei. -SGZ 5:159; C/C 99.96-97.

Zhen Yao 甄堯; Zhongshan. Son of Zhen Yi, he received commandery nomination. -SGZ 5:159.

Zhen Yi 甄逸 (d.185); Zhongshan. A man of old official family, Zhen Yi became a magistrate in Runan. He married the Lady Zhang of Changshan and fathered the Lady Zhen, consort of Cao Pi, Emperor Wen of Wei. -SGZ 5:159. One text has Zhen Yi's personal name as Hui 會, but this is probably an error: Mather 76:484, cf. C/C 99:95-96, 198.

Zhen Yi 甄逸, wife of: see the Lady Zhang 張 V.

Zhen You 眞祐 became Chief Clerk to the Grand Commandant. -FSTY 5f:133.

Zhen Yu 甄宁 [Changwen 長文]; Beihai. A man of pure morality and few desires, Zhen Yu was an expert in the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu according to the Zhuang/Yan interpretation. He taught hundreds of students.

During the time of Emperor Guangwu Zhen Yu was an Assistant Officer in his province. He later became an Academician at the Imperial University in Luoyang and then Junior Tutor to the Heir. He died in that office. -HHS 79/69:2580*.

Zhen Yu 甄豫; Zhongshan. Son of Zhen Yi, he died young. -SGZ 5:159.

Zhen [Ziran] 甄子然; Beihai. A man of family, in 160 he joined Sun Bin and Lü Zizhi to save Diwu Lun from exile and death, then concealed him for several years until he was released by an amnesty.

When Kong Rong came as Chancellor to Beihai in 190, he regretted that Zhen Ziran had died. He presented offerings at his county altar. -HHS 41/31:1404, 70/60:2263.

Zhen Zun 甄遵 see Guo Zun 郭遵. -XHS 4:11b.

Zheng 徵 sisters [rebels in Jiaozhi] see sub Zheng Ce 徵側.

Zheng 鄭 [a woman bandit] see Zheng Jiang 鄭姜.

Zheng An 鄭安; Nanyang. Son of Zheng Hong 閔, he succeeded to his marquisate. The fief was later abolished, but see sub Zheng Shichou. -HHS 78/68:2513.

Zheng Ang 正昂. Administrator of Yizhou for Liu Bei about 215, he was killed by Yong Kai. -SGZ Shu 11:1101.

Zheng Anshi 鄭安世; Henan. Son of Zheng Zhong, he maintained the family tradition of scholarship. Head of the palace stables in 124, he joined the demonstration led by Lai Li at the palace Gate of the Vast Capital, protesting the dismissal of the Heir, Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun. The demonstrators gained no success, but their support was recognised.

Zheng Anshi died before Liu Bao was brought to the throne at the end of 125, but his family was granted a reward of cash, and his son Zheng Liang was made a gentlemen cadet. -HHS 15/5:591-93. According to XTS 75A:3259, Zheng Anshi was at some time Colonel of the City Gates.

Zheng Bao 鄭寶 (d.199). A gang leader south of the Huai, he attempted to bully Liu Ye. Liu Ye killed him and took over his troops. -SGZ 14:443.

Zheng Bao 鄭袤 see Zheng Mao 鄭袤.

Zheng [Bojian] 鄭伯堅; Runan. FSTY 5:37-38; Nylan 83:462-465 tells how Zheng Bojian of Runan was nominated Filial and Incorrupt by the Administrator Li Zhang. As Li Zhang died soon afterwards, Zheng Bojian and his colleague Zhou Cheng refused their appointments at the capital and remained behind to assist his widow and her children. This may be the same person as Zheng Gu, whose style was Bojian, and who is commemorated in a stele. See sub Zheng Gu.

Zheng [Boshan] 鄭伯山; Guanghan. A scholar of the diagrams of the Map from the Yellow River and the Book from the Luo 河圖洛書, Zheng Boshan was a teacher of the diviner Yang Tong. -HHS 30/20A:1047.

Zheng Ce 徵側 [Vietnamese: Tr'ung Trac] (d.43); Jiaozhi. Daughter of a chieftain of the Luo people of Jiaozhi, on the Red River delta, Zheng Ce was married to a certain Shi Su. We are told that she was spirited and brave, and when the Administrator Su Ding attempted to bring her under control she became angry. With her younger sister Zheng Er, Zheng Ce raised an army and captured the commandery capital. As they were joined by tribesmen from Jiuzhen, Rinan and Hepu, the rebellion affected the whole imperial territory of present-day Vietnam, extending also along the coast towards the Leizhou peninsula and the island of Hainan. Zheng Ce took a royal title 王.

The rebellion was wide-spread, and it is said that the insurgents seized a total of sixty-five cities 成. There were not so many county seats in the whole of the far south, so most of these "cities" must have been fortified villages, and we are told that many Chinese officials held out, presumably in more substantial walled towns.

Emperor Guangwu gave orders for the preparation of ships, carts, roads and bridges, and in 42 the general Ma Yuan brought an army of commandery troops from the south of Jing province and the Pearl River region. In the summer of 43 Zheng Ce was killed by the general Liu Long, and Ma Yuan later captured and executed Zheng Er. Their heads were sent to Luoyang, their forces scattered and their associates across the far south were defeated in detail.

The sisters are now recalled as heroines of 1120 Zheng Chang

Vietnamese independence, but Ma Yuan was celebrated for centuries as a god and a hero, and the territory remained settled for a century after his campaign. - HHS 86/76:2836-37; Bn 67:63-65, Schafer 67:81, Holmgren 80:11-16, Taylor 83:37-41, deC 90:38.

Zheng Chang 鄭長; Runan. About 195 Lü Meng, a trooper under Deng Dang in Sun Ce's forces, killed a man. He took refuge for a time with Zheng Chang, a man from his home country. -SGZ Wu 9:1273.

Zheng Chen 鄭郴; Yingchuan. A magistrate in Henei in 150, Zheng Chen set up a stele to honour the local hero known as Lord Zhang 張公. -LS 3:12b-15a.

Zheng Chen 鄭絀; Henan. XTS 75A:3259 says that Zheng Chen was a son of Zheng Anshi and a brother of Zheng Liang, and that he became a Commandant of Cavalry.

Zheng Cheng 鄭稱. Palace Attendant to Cao Pi, King of Wei, in 220 Zheng Cheng was appointed Tutor to Cao Rui, future Emperor Ming of Wei. -SGZ 2:59.

Zheng Chong 徵崇 [Zihe 子和]; Henan. Originally holding the surname Li 李, he was learned in the Book of Changes and in Chunqiu and Zuo zhuan, and expert also on internal medicine. As civil war broke out at the end of Han, he changed his surname to Zheng and took refuge south of the Yangzi. He lived in secret in Kuaiji, supporting himself by his own labour in the fields, and teaching a few chosen students.

Zheng Chong was in correspondence, however, with local scholar-officials such as Bu Zhi, and Yan Jun recommended him to Sun Quan. When Sun Deng was named Heir of the kingdom of Wu in 221 Zheng Chong was appointed to his household, where he was given great respect and attention. He died in the 220s, aged seventy. -SGZ Wu 8:1248-49.

Zheng Chong 鄭冲 [Wenhe 子文] d.273; Henan. Though he came from a humble family, Zheng Chong was devoted to scholarship, and he became a member of the court of Cao Pi when he was Heir. He rose to be an Excellency under Wei and in 265 he was named Grand Tutor to Sima Yan 司馬炎 when he took the throne as first emperor of Jin. -JS 33:991.

Zheng Chun 鄭純 [Changbo 長伯]; Guanghan. During the 60s Zheng Chun was Commandant of the western region of Yizhou commandery, controlling six counties on the frontier by the Dali Lake. Though the territory produced quantities of gold and other valuable items, and most officials took vast quantities for themselves, Zheng Chun was strictly honest and stole nothing.

Zheng Chun had excellent influence on the local non-Chinese people, and when King Liumiao of the Ailao people came to offer submission in 69, Emperor Ming named Zheng Chun as Administrator of Yongchang. With its capital on the Mekong by present-day Yongping in Yunnan, the new commandery comprised the six counties of Zheng Chun's former territory, plus two which nominally extended over the present-day frontier of Burma/Myanmar, with general control over routes towards India.

Zheng Chun's government was light, with the local people taxed just two pieces of cloth and one measure of salt from each clan chieftain. Not surprisingly, the people found small difficulty in accepting the Han regime, and another six tribes, including some more Ailao, came to submit in 74.

After ten years in the southwest Zheng Chun died in office. His portrait was given an honoured place in the Eastern Pavilion at Luoyang. -HHS 86/76:2851, HYGZ 10B:143; Bn 67:77-78, Yü 67:82.

Zheng Du 鄭篤; Henei. A local officer, about 140 Zheng Du took part in the erection of a stele at the funerary temple of the Grand Duke Lü Wang 太公呂望, founder of the ancient state of Qi 齊. -SJZ 9:7a.

Zheng Du 鄭度; Guanghan. In 213 Zheng Du was an Assistant Officer to the warlord Governor Liu Zhang in Yi province. As Liu Bei came to attack, Zheng Du urged Liu Zhang to strip the country of its people and supplies. When Liu Bei heard of this scorched-earth plan he was seriously concerned, but his adviser Fa Zheng reassured him that Liu Zhang was too soft-hearted to adopt such a strategy. Liu Zhang indeed rejected Zheng Du's advice and dismissed him from his service. -SGZ Shu 7:958, HYGZ 10B:152.

Zheng Er 徵貳 [Vietnamese: Tr'ung Nhi]; non-Chinese of Jiaozhi: see sub Zheng Ce 徵側.

Zheng Feng 鄭封. Administrator of Chenliu, he was honoured with a stele. -LS 27:1a.

Zheng Gan 鄭甘; Zuopingyi. Bandits of the northern hills, in 220 Zheng Gan and Wang Zhao were attacked by the Wei general Zhang He. They surrendered. -SGZ 2:59, 26:734.

Zheng Gu 鄭固 [Bojian 伯堅] (117-158); Runan? LS 6:17b-19b preserves a stele inscription in honour of Zheng Gu. It describes how he was a student of the History according to the New Text tradition and held a number of local commandery appointments, including those of Investigator, Registrar and Officer of Merit. He received an imperial letter of appointment 詔書 as a gentleman cadet in 158, but he declined on grounds of ill health and died soon afterwards. Now in an official collection in Jining in southern Shandong, the stele is also transcribed in Nagata 94:130 and is discussed at LS 21:21b-22a.

The stele does not indicate Zheng Gu's native commandery, but an entry in FSTY 5:37-38 tells how Zheng Bojian of Runan was nominated Filial and Incorrupt by the Administrator Li Zhang 李張. When Li Zhang died soon afterwards, his nominees agreed that Zheng Bojian and his colleague Zhou Cheng would take up their appointments at the capital while others stayed behind for the mourning rituals. It seems unlikely that the same style would have been born by two men of the same surname about the same time, so the man referred to in the stele is perhaps the same as the man mentioned in FSTY 5.

One must note, however, that the Zheng Gu stele contains no reference to any nomination as Filial and Incorrupt, nor to the act of self-abnegation recounted by FSTY, while present-day Jining is not in the territory of Later Han Runan. The omission from the stele need not be significant, and several stele have been moved from their original sites, but the situation is further complicated by the fact that a parallel text, cited by Hui Dong in HHSJ 53/43:1879-80, presents another version of this story, but with some different names. The Administrator appears as Li Chang 李偃 and, more significantly, the surname of the man whose style was Bojian is given as Ai 艾.

In these circumstances, it seems impossible to determine whether Zheng Gu [Bojian] was indeed a man of Runan and received nomination about 150, or whether the text of FSTY is quite mistaken and a completely different person, Ai Bojian, was the man involved. See sub Li Chang 李偃.

Zheng Hong 鄭鴻. Administrator of Yuexi in 51, Zheng Hong received the messengers of submission sent by King Xianli of the Ailao people. -HHS 86/76: 2848.

Zheng Hong 鄭弘/宏 [Jujun 巨君] (d.87); Kuaiji. Originally from Qi, Zheng Hong's family claimed descent from high officials of Former Han, including Zheng Ji 鄭吉, an expert on the Western Regions [QHX:722-723], but by Zheng Hong's time there had been no such distinction for several generations. As a young man, however, Zheng Hong became head of his district, and he came to the notice of the Administrator Diwu Lun during a spring tour of inspection. Diwu Lun made him a commandery Investigator and then a Reporting Officer, and later nominated him Filial and Incorrupt.

At the capital Zheng Hong became a student of Jiao Kuang the Administrator of Hedong, who was also a man from Kuaiji. In 70 Jiao Kuang was accused of involvement in the alleged conspiracy with Liu Ying the King of Chu. He was arrested and died on the road to his trial, while his wife and children were sent to prison, with occasional floggings. Jiao Kuang's former clients were afraid they might be implicated, and some even changed their names in order to avoid his fate, but Zheng Hong shaved his head as sign of liability for convict service, took an axe and the guillotine by which he might be cut in two at the waist, and presented himself at the gates of the palace to plead Jiao Kuang's innocence. Touched by his loyalty, Emperor Ming pardoned his presumption, and Zheng Hong was allowed to escort Jiao Kuang's coffin and his family back to their home country. From this he became well known.

Zheng Hong was appointed a country magistrate in Lu, where it was said that his rule was so excellent the territory escaped locusts, drought and fierce frosts, while people who found valuables on the road left them for their true owners. He then became Administrator of Linhuai/Xiapi, where more miracles attended his regime, and after further appointments, at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Zhang about 76 he became Director of the Imperial Secretariat.

Up to this time, when an officer of the Secretariat came to the end of his tenure, a Gentleman, who ranked at 400 shi, was normally transferred to be a junior county magistrate at 300 or 400 shi, while Foreman Clerks, ranked at 200 shi, became county assistants or commandants. Zheng Hong argued that although the formal rank and salary of members of the Secretariat was low, it was an institution of great importance and prestige, and the poor prospects for promotion made men reluctant to join. He persuaded the emperor that departing Gentlemen should be eligible for posts of 1000 shi, while Foreman Clerks could become county magistrates. Besides this reform, during his term of office he put forward a number of additional proposals to restore the best policies of the past.

1122 Zheng Hong

We are told that Zheng Hong was later sent out as Chancellor of Pingyuan 平原. Pingyuan, however, was not a kingdom at this time, and the post should have been that of an Administrator. Qian Dazhao suggests that Zheng Hong's appointment may have been to Pingchun 平春 in Jiangxia: that county was granted as a royal fief to Liu Quan, son of Emperor Zhang, in 79; Liu Quan died later that same year.]

Returning to court as a Palace Attendant, Zheng Hong became Minister of Finance in 83. Hitherto, tribute from the commanderies of Jiaozhi province in the far south had been brought to the capital by the sea route past Dongye, present-day Fuzhou in Fujian. The passage was vulnerable to storms, and many ships were lost. Zheng Hong recommended that an inland route be established, to bring the goods across the Nan Ling divide to the upper reaches of the Xiang River in Lingling and Guiyang. His plan was adopted, to the great benefit of the imperial budget. Later, a drought affected the frontier, and on Zheng Hong's advice the storehouses were opened to relieve want.

In 84 Zheng Hong was made Grand Commandant, highest position of the bureaucracy. His former patron Diwu Lun was Excellency of Works, and although that position was lower than his own, Zheng Hong granted him precedence. When the reason was explained to Emperor Zhang, he gave his approval, but he had a screen of mother-of-pearl set up between them, and this became a custom of the court. Soon afterwards there was a drought. The officials of the court went out to pray for rain, then returned home, but Zheng Hong maintained a vigil for the whole day; rain duly arrived.

In 85 Meng Yun the Administrator of Wuwei reported that the Southern Shanyu, dependent of Han, had sent raiding parties to attack traders from the Northern Xiongnu. The minister Yuan An argued that the moral authority of the empire required the agreement for peaceful trade be honoured, and the Excellency Huan Yu supported him. Zheng Hong objected, and he shouted at Huan Yu that "Anyone who says we should hand back the captives is a traitor!" Huan Yu responded in kind, while Diwu Lun and other ministers also lost their tempers.

The Director of Retainers reported all of them for lese-majesty, the disputants apologised and offered their resignations, and the emperor finally decided that the government would purchase the prisoners from the southerners, restore them to their own people, and pay blood-money for any who had been killed. So the peace party was largely successful but in the longer term Zheng Hong and the supporters of the Southern Xiongnu had the advantage. Even the agreement to pay ransom meant that aggression was rewarded, and in following years, as the Northern Xiongnu became weaker, attacks on their caravans continued.

After four years in office, in 87 Zheng Hong had Zhang Lin of the Imperial Secretariat dismissed for corruption and private association with Dou Xian, brother of the empress, and he then reported against the Prefect of Luoyang Yang Guang. When the memorial was presented, friends of Yang Guang warned him, and he turned to Dou Xian; Dou Xian then accused Zheng Hong of slander. When the emperor asked for his insignia, Zheng Hong went to surrender at the office of the Minister of Justice, and though he was immediately released he now asked to retire. Permission was refused, but Zheng Hong was now seriously ill. He sent in a memorial to make his excuses, and to tell the faults of Dou Xian.

Emperor Zhang sent messengers with medicines for his complaint, but Zheng Hong died before they arrived. From his deathbed he returned all the gifts he had received, and instructed his family to escort his body back to his homeland with the simplest cortège possible.

A local legend claimed that when Zheng Hong was young he found and returned an arrow which had been lost by a spirit. Invited to choose a reward, he asked that there should be a south wind on the river each morning and a north wind in the evening, making it easier for people to travel to the gleaning grounds. This was granted, and the local phenomenon became known as Lord Zheng's wind 鄭公風. -HHS 33/23:1154-57*, XC 1:12a-13a.

Zheng Hong 鄭閔; Nanyang. Adopted son of the eunuch Zheng Zhong, when Zheng Zhong died in 114 Zheng Hong was permitted to succeed to his fief. -HHS 78/68:2513.

Zheng Hun 鄭渾 [Wengong 文公]; Henan. Son of Zheng Xi, Zheng Hun was a man of good family. In 192 his elder brother Zheng Tai died after a failed plot against Dong Zhuo, and Zheng Hun took his nephew Zheng Mao to refuge in the south. Rejecting an invitation from Yuan Shu, he went to Hua Xin in Yuzhang and was later a magistrate under Cao Cao. He was noted for encouraging people not to abandon their infants in times of difficulty.

In 212 Zheng Hun was sent as Administrator to Zuopingyi, where he led the people to defeat the local warlord Liang Xing, isolating the enemy and making raids to capture their treasure and their women, while he also put down renegades in the hill country. He was transferred to be Administrator of Shangdang, and became Intendant of Jingzhao in 215. He encouraged agriculture, and his government in each territory was noted for the fact that people did not run away.

Zheng Hun was an imperial attendant to Cao Pi, then administered several commanderies, notably Pei, where he organised major works of water control. A stele was erected and a large dam named in his honour. Zheng Hun was later enfeoffed and became Court Architect to Cao Rui. He died about 230. -SGZ 16:508-12*, JS 26:784, SJZ 24:8b; Yang 63:166, Goodman 98:118.

Zheng Jian 鄭戡. Emissary to the Southern Xiongnu in 114, Zheng Jian quarrelled with the General on the Liao Geng Kui for interfering with his office. Geng Kui was dismissed and punished. -HHS 19/9:719.

Zheng Jiang 鄭姜; Dongping? A woman bandit about 210, Zheng Jiang ravaged her territory, but was dealt with quite quickly. -SGZ 29:810; DeWoskin 86:138. [Another interpretation has two women bandits, surnamed Zheng and Jiang.]

Zheng Jing 鄭敬 [Zidu 欠都]; Runan. Though naturally a solitary man, in the time of Wang Mang Zheng Jing was obliged to serve as Officer of Merit in his home county. When an officer claimed that some liquid collected on a tree by his residence was sweet dew 甘露, sign of excellent government, Zheng Jing disillusioned him and soon afterwards left his post. As disorder spread throughout the empire, he went to live as a hermit in the south, joined by his fellow-countryman Zhi Yun. They later returned to the north, where both men joined the staff of the Administrator Ouyang Xi.

Zheng Jing was little interested in office, and as he saw how Zhi Yun was constantly at odds with his superior he returned to hermit life in the hills nearby. After a few months Zhi Yun joined him once more, but he then wanted to return to public life. Zheng Jing refused to go with him, arguing that his own moral conduct was an example and a force for good government. He received several invitations from senior officials, and one even from Emperor Guangwu, but he remained in the wilderness until his death. -HHS 29/19:1025-31, XC 7:15a, XS:2b; Vervoorn 90:135-136.

Zheng [Jixuan] 鄭季宣 (129-185). Zheng Jixuan was a magistrate in Chenliu. A year after his death some forty local officers and gentlemen sponsored a stele to his memory. -LX 19:5a-8b, Nagata 94:242-44.

Zheng Ju 鄭據 or Zheng Qu 璩 [Pingqing 平卿]; Wei. In 83 Zheng Ju was Administrator of Hanyang when an anonymous letter, sponsored by the family of the Empress Dou, laid accusation of treason against Liang Song, father of the Honoured Lady Liang who was the mother of the Heir Liu Zhao. Zheng Ju was ordered to arrest Liang Song and put him to question. Liang Song died in prison.

Zheng Ju was at some time an Imperial Clerk, and in 90 he became Director of Retainers. In that position he was accused by the Excellency Yuan An of acting at the behest of the Dou family rather than in concern for public good. No action was taken.

On the other hand, Zheng Ju later reported Dou Jing, Bearer of the Mace, for the depredations and unruliness of his officers. Dou Jing was briefly dismissed, but soon returned to office. He then sent his clerk Xia Meng in an unsuccessful attempt to slander Zheng Ju and his family to Zhang Pu, Administrator of his home commandery of Wei. -HHS 34/24:1172, 45/35:1519-20, 1531 [據], DGHJ 19:4b [璩]; Ch'ü 72:462.

Zheng Jun 鄭均 [Zhongyu 仲虞]; Rencheng. As a young man, Zheng Jun studied the Classic of History and also the doctrines of Huang-Lao. His elder brother Zhong, a county officer, was pleased to receive gifts, and paid no attention to Zheng Jun's objections. So Zheng Jun hired himself out as a labourer, saved his wages, and presented everything to Zhong. Zhong was impressed, and became more restrained. Later Zhong died, and Zheng Jun cared for his family.

Called to local office, Zheng Jun pleaded ill health, and when the requests became importunate he left the district. In 78 he was invited to the offices of the Excellency Bao Yu at the capital and in 80 he was nominated as Able to Speak Directly and Admonish Unflinchingly. He refused both, but in 81 he accepted a special summons in an official carriage and joined the Secretariat. Emperor Zhang admired his honest advice, and when he sought to leave office on grounds of ill health he was appointed as a Consultant.

1124 Zheng Kai

Zheng Jun's condition became worse, and about 84 he received permission to return home. He was awarded gifts and robes of honour, while the Administrator of Dongping was ordered to present him with a quantity of grain and provide him with a sheep and a measure of wine each year. When the emperor visited the region in 85 he called in person upon Zheng Jun and granted him salary as a member of the Secretariat for the rest of his life. Zheng Jun died about 90. -HHS 27/17:945-47*, DGHJ 18:4a, XC 1:7a.

Zheng Kai 鄭凱 [Shaogong 召公]; Yingchuan. About 115 Zheng Kai was Officer of Merit to the Administrator Zhu Chong, and debated with him the qualities of worthy men of the past from different localities. Their conversation was recorded and was known in later times. It may be seen as a symbol of the developing interest in local history. -HJJ 18:211-12, Anon.:2a-b, SGZ Wu 12:1324.

Zheng Li 鄭颯 (d.172). A eunuch, in 168 Zheng Li was a member of the secretariat in the household of the Dowager Dou. As Dou Wu and Chen Fan planned to destroy Cao Jie and his eunuch fellows, they appointed Shan Bing as Prefect of the Yellow Gates and had him arrest Zheng Li. Under interrogation Zheng Li made a statement implicating Cao Jie and Wang Fu.

At this point Cao Jie and his fellows learned of the accusation and organised a counter-coup. Zheng Li was freed by Wang Fu, joined him to arrest the Dowager Dou, and was then sent to lead Imperial Clerks and Internuncios with orders to arrest Dou Wu. Some of his entourage were killed, but in the confrontation which followed Dou Wu's men deserted him. As the eunuchs established their power, Zheng Li became a Regular Attendant.

For several years Zheng Li had had friendly contact with Liu Kui, King of Bohai and younger brother of Emperor Huan, whom he admired for his free and sometimes frivolous conduct. Wang Fu, however, was angry at Liu Kui for failing to pay a bribe, and in 172 he claimed that Zheng Li and his associate Dong Teng planned to set Liu Kui upon the throne in place of Emperor Ling. Zheng Li and Dong Teng were arrested by the Director of Retainers Duan Jiong and died in prison, while Liu Kui and his household were destroyed. -HHS 69/59:2243, 55/45:1798, 65/55:2153; Ch'ü 72:487-488.

Zheng Liang 鄭亮; Henan. In 124 Zheng Liang's father Zheng Anshi joined a demonstration against the deposition of Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun, as Heir to his father Emperor An. Zheng Anshi died soon afterwards, but when Liu Bao came to the throne at the end of 125 Zheng Liang was appointed a gentleman cadet in recognition of his father's good will. -HHS 36/26:1226.

Zheng Mao 鄭袤 [Linshu 林叔] (189-273); Henan. Son of Zheng Tai, who died when he was young, Zheng Mao was taken by his uncle Zheng Hun south into Yuzhang, and was there taken up by the Administrator Hua Xin, an old friend of his father.

Returning to the north, Zheng Mao held posts with the government of Cao Cao, becoming a literary adviser at the court of Cao Zhi. In 219 he warned Ran Lan against Wei Feng.

Zheng Mao rose to ministerial rank under Wei, became a close adviser to Sima Shi 司馬師 and was a respected officer of the Jin dynasty. The family had thus prospered from the time of Former Han [see sub Zheng Xing] into the third century AD. -JS 44:1249-51.

Zheng Qi 鄭奇; Runan. A local officer of the commandery, Zheng Qi was killed by a demon which haunted a tower. -FSTY 9:73; Nylan 83:544.

Zheng Qin 鄭勤/廛 [Boyi 伯邑] (d.110); Hejian or Shu. In 110 the rebel Qiang leader Dianlian sent a force through the passes of the Qin Ling range. The Administrator of Hanzhong Zheng Qin brought commandery troops to face them, but they were defeated and Zheng Qin was killed. -HHS 87/77:2887, HYZG 2:16.

At 11:189 and 12:205, HYZG cites Zheng Qin as compiler of a local history Ba-Shu qijiu zhuan 巴蜀耆舊傳 "Venerable Men and Ancient Affairs of Ba and Shu" [see also Zhao Qian and Wang Shang]. Zheng Qin is identified in the first reference as a man from Shu commandery, and this is supported at 12:215, where he is listed as a man from Shu who was Administrator of Hanzhong. This probably represents a sponsorship of local history by the Administrator, but it was unusual for a man to hold such high office in his home province, so it is more likely that Zheng Qin came indeed from Hejian. -Yao Zhenzong:2369.

Zheng Qu 鄭璩 see Zheng Ju 鄭據. -DGHJ 19:4b.

Zheng Quan 鄭泉 [Wenyuan 文淵]; Chen. A man of wide learning but a committed drunkard, Zheng Quan held position at Sun Quan's court. In the winter of 222-223 he was sent as an envoy to restore relations with Liu Bei after the seizure of Jing province and the defeat of his invading army. -SGZ Wu 2:1126-29.

Zheng Sa 鄭颯 see Zheng Li 鄭颯.

Zheng Shichou 鄭石讎; Nanyang. Zheng Shichou was a great-grandson of the eunuch Zheng Zhong through his adoptive son Zheng Hong. In 159 Emperor Huan enfeoffed him as a secondary marquis, in partial restoration of a fief which had been granted to Zheng Zhong but had since ended. -HHS 78/68:2513.

Zheng [Shugong] 鄭叔躬; Nanyang. When Li Gu was appointed Inspector of Jing province about 140, he consulted local worthies, including Zheng Shugong, on the quality of local officials. On the basis of their advice he reported against several Administrators. -HYGZ 10C:165.

Zheng Sui 鄭遂 (d.192); Runan. A student of the Excellency Li Gu, after his master was executed in 147 Zheng Sui was one of the disciples who compiled De xing 德行 "Virtuous Conduct," a posthumous record of their master's sayings.

Chancellor of Rencheng in 192, Zheng Sui was killed by a group of Yellow Turbans from Qing province. -HHS 63/53:2089, 76/66:2479, SGZ 1:9.

Zheng Tai 鄭泰/太 [Gongye 公業] (151/152-192); Henan. The personal name of this man was Tai 泰, but Fan Ye, author of HHS, avoided taboo on the personal name of his own father by writing it as 太. Like Guo Tai [Linzong], Zheng Tai is often referred to by his style, Gongye.

Son of Zheng Xi and a man of wealthy family, in the late 180s Zheng Tai gathered retainers and established contact with local leaders across the North China plain.

Having refused earlier invitations to office, after the death of Emperor Ling in 189 Zheng Tai joined the General-in-Chief He Jin. First appointed to the Imperial Secretariat and later to the Censorate, he became a trusted associate. He argued against He Jin's invitation to Dong Zhuo, and left office when He Jin rejected his advice.

He Jin was killed soon afterwards, and as Dong Zhuo took power Zheng Tai, He Yong, Wu Qiong and Zhou Bi were commissioned to select suitable men as officials for the new regime.

In 190 Dong Zhuo planned a great campaign against the rebel alliance in the east. Concerned at the potential for a general conflict Zheng Tai persuaded Dong Zhuo that while his opponents were no match, and a full-scale attack would certainly be successful, it would cost his government prestige and add to the rebellion. Dong Zhuo accepted the argument, and he gave Zheng Tai general command of operations against the east. Then, however, he was warned that Zheng Tai was very clever, and that he had contacts among the allies: so he withdrew the commission and recalled Zheng Tai to become a Consultant.

As Dong Zhuo transferred the capital to Chang'an in 190 many gentlemen were starving, but Zheng Tai always had a surplus, and he held court for his clients each day with music and a distribution of food.

In 192 Zheng Tai joined Xun You in a plot against Dong Zhuo at Chang'an. Their plans were found out, but while others were arrested Zheng Tai escaped to the east. Yuan Shu named him Inspector of Yang province, but he died on the road, aged forty-one or forty-two. -HHS 70/60:2257-60*, ZF:12a-14b [in SGZ 16: 509-10 PC].

Zheng [Wenbo] 鄭文伯. When Emperor Guangwu of Han invited Gongsun Shu to surrender, the court officers Zheng Wenbo and Xie Wenqing encouraged him to accept. Gongsun Shu was furious and sent them to prison. Refusing to change their opinion, they died there, and their example discouraged anyone else from offering the same advice later. -HYGZ 5:69, 10A:138, HYGZJBZ:335.

The dating of this incident is uncertain. HYGZ says the discussion took place in 35, after Guangwu had begun his final campaign and sent a letter calling on Gongsun Shu to surrender. The text, however, is corrupt, and the incident probably took place in 30, when it appears that Lai Xi and Ma Yuan came on an embassy. See also sub Chang Shao.

Zheng Xi 鄭熙; Henan. XTS 75A:2259 says that Zheng Xi, a son of Zheng Chen, was a Reporting Officer of his commandery.

Zheng Xiaotong 鄭小同; Beihai. Posthumous son of Zheng Yan [Yi'en], who was killed in the mid-190s, Zheng Xiaotong "Little Same" was so named by his grandfather Zheng Xuan because the markings on the palm of his hand resembled his own.

A Palace Attendant and secondary marquis under Wei, Zheng Xiaotong was killed by Sima Zhao 司馬昭 about 260. -HHS 35/25:1212.

Zheng Xing 鄭興 [Shaogan 少贛]; Henan. Descended from a lineage which traced its official positions back to the beginning of the dynasty, Zheng Xing's father Zheng Bin 賓 was head of the Censorate towards the end of Former Han, and Zheng Xing became a distinguished scholar. He first specialised in the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu in the New Text tradition, but was later a pupil of the celebrated Liu Xin 劉歆 and dealt with Zuo zhuan, a work of the Old Text. He was admired by his fellow-students and his master, and Liu Xin involved him in the calculations of his Santong 三統 [Three Sequences] calendar, which revised the Taichu 太初 [Grand Beginning] system of Former Han and was adopted by Wang Mang.

When the Gengshi regime was established in 23 Zheng Xing was appointed to senior clerical office under the acting Imperial Chancellor Li Song. He was sent to persuade the new ruler to transfer his residence from Luoyang to Chang'an; despite the objections of his commoner supporters and the strategic danger of such a move, the Gengshi Emperor accepted the arguments of tradition.

Given title as Counsellor Remonstrant, Zheng Xing was sent as an imperial commissioner to the three northern and western provinces Liang, Shuofang and Yi. He was later named Inspector of Liang, but the rebels and warlords of that region would not accept his authority, and he was soon dismissed.

As the Red Eyebrows approached Chang'an in 25, Zheng Xing fled west to Tianshui. He became a client of the local warlord Wei Ao, who gave him office in his separatist regime. It is said that Wei Ao considered setting himself up as a king, but Zheng Xing dissuaded him with eloquent arguments based upon the histories and classics.

As Wei Ao sent his son Xun as hostage to Emperor Guangwu in 30, Zheng Xing asked to return to the east, ostensibly to care for his parents' graves, but accompanied by his wife and children. Wei Ao reluctantly agreed, and Zheng Xing's former companion in exile Du Lin, now an Imperial Clerk, recommended him to Guangwu. Zheng Xing was made a Palace Counsellor.

On 10 May in the following year, an eclipse of the sun fell on the last day of the third month instead of on the expected first day of a month. This gave occasion for Zheng Xing to present a long memorial on the need for the emperor to avoid personal prejudice in his selection of good officials, and to interpret the eclipse as a warning from Heaven against the ruler's arrogance and self-will. He referred specifically to Guo Ji, who had been widely recommended for an Excellency's position but had not been appointed because Guangwu wanted the office for his brother-in-law Li Tong; Guo Ji was a fellow-countryman, and both men were associates of the leading general and imperial relative by marriage, Ma Yuan.

Later, when the emperor asked about prognostications for the Sacrifice to Heaven, Zheng Xing replied that he never studied the apocrypha. Guangwu was angry, and asked if he disapproved of such works. Zheng Xing was frightened, and claimed that although he knew nothing of them, he certainly did not disapprove of them. He later spoke on other matters of government, but it was felt that his opinions were too much limited to the traditional classics, and that he was not in tune with the emperor's interests. He received no substantial office.

In 33, however, Zheng Xing was sent to supervise Cen Peng and Fu Jun in their operations along the Yangzi against Gongsun Shu, and he evidently remained with the army until the winter of 35. Then Cen Peng was assassinated, and Zheng Xing took over his forces under the general command of Wu Han until the final victory at Chengdu.

Zheng Xing was initially ordered to take part in the civil government of the conquered city, but he was later accused of private dealings in slaves, and he was demoted to a county magistracy in Zuopingyi. He sought to repair the ravages of war by civil reconstruction and the establishment of traditional schools, but was again found guilty of some fault and was dismissed. Retiring to Hongnong, he devoted himself to scholarship, and though he later received invitations to clerical appointment at the capital, he never held office again.

Zheng Xing's special understanding of Zuo zhuan, Zhou li and the calendar made him a leader of the Old Text, regarded as an authority by Du Lin, Huan Dan and Wei Hong. His work on Zuo zhuan was maintained by Jia Kui in the next generation. -HHS 36/26:1217-23*, XC 1:14a; Bn 79:59-60, 190, 195, Tjan 49:152-153.

Zheng Xing 鄭行; Guanghan. Maternal grandfather of the Lady Yang Jingyang, whose mother had died in childbirth, Zheng Xing cared for her after her father Yang Wen was killed a few years later. -HYGZ 10B: 153.

Zheng Xuan 鄭玄 [Kangcheng 康成] (127-200); Beihai. The personal name also appears as Yuan 元, to avoid taboo.

A distant ancestor of Zheng Xuan had served in the Imperial Secretariat towards the end of Former Han but the family, while still ranked as gentry, had now only local ambitions. Zheng Xuan became a district head, but he was far more interested in scholarship. Though his father disapproved, Zheng Xuan was supported by the Chancellor Du Mi, and he left his position to go to the University at Luoyang. He was a pupil of Diwu Yuan, with whom he studied the Book of Changes according to the New Text interpretation of Jing Fang, and also the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu, and he became skilled in the Santong 三統 [Triple Concordance] calendrical system, the mathematics of the Jiuzhang suanshu 九章算術, and in divination by the wind. He was also known for his great capacity for wine.

Zheng Xuan then studied under Zhang Gongzu of Dong commandery, with a wide-ranging syllabus including Zhou li, Ritual, Zuo zhuan according to the Old Text, the New Text Han interpretation of the Classic of Poetry, and the Old Text Classic of History. Believing he had exhausted the scholarly resources of the east of the empire, Zheng Xuan went west to the region of Chang'an where he joined Lu Zhi at the private academy of Ma Rong. For three years he had no contact with the master, but then impressed him with his classical knowledge and his mathematical ability, and Ma Rong acknowledged him as the disciple who should maintain his teachings.

After ten years travel, Zheng Xuan returned home. His family was poor, and he migrated to Donglai to farm there, though he also attracted several hundred students. With some forty other men of Beihai, Zheng Xuan was proscribed from office in the late 160s on account of his contact with Sun Song, and he went into seclusion to concentrate on scholarly work. When he commented on He Xiu's work on the Gongyang and Guliang commentaries to Chunqiu and on Zuo zhuan, He Xiu observed with some admiration that Zheng Xuan had used his own material against him, and it is said that Zheng Xuan's criticism, following the earlier debate of Ma Rong with Liu Yuan, brought a revival of the Old Text tradition. At the same time, like adherents of the New Text, Zheng Xuan accepted and quoted from the apocrypha.

The main thrust of Zheng Xuan's scholarship 鄭氏

學 was to deal in eclectic fashion with the whole corpus of the Confucian classics rather than, as the structure of the University required, with individual approved works. Like his teacher Ma Rong, he admired Zhou li, accepting the tradition that it was compiled by the legendary Duke of Zhou 周公 (a position questioned by He Xiu), and he prepared the commentary 周官注. He also produced major commentaries and editorial work for the Ritual, for Analecets, Mencius, the Book of Changes, the Classic of Poetry and the Classic of History. In the Poetry, his use of the Mao interpretation established this Old Text version so strongly that its New Text rivals were generally abandoned, and his use of Old Text chapters of the History supported their legitimacy, even if they were not yet accepted in official circles. Zheng Xuan also compiled a number of individual works, and though Confucianism was in decline his exegeses were of major importance to its revival during the third century.

In addition to this traditional work, Zheng Xuan compiled a commentary to the laws. There were many such works by scholars of Later Han, but Cao Rui, Emperor Ming of Wei, later ordered that all others should be disregarded and only Zheng Xuan's annotations were to be used.

Zheng Xuan warned against the rise of the Yellow Turban movement, and following the end of Proscription in 184 he was nominated as Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright, and as Knowing the Way. The General-in-Chief He Jin had an official carriage sent for him, and the local authorities obliged him to accept the call, but Zheng Xuan had no taste for court life and left very quickly. He was later recommended as a Palace Attendant by the high official Yuan Wei, but declined on account of the death of his father. He returned to private teaching, receiving thousands of students, and the Chancellor Kong Rong had the name of his district changed in his honour.

In 192 Zheng Xuan joined a petition organised by Tao Qian, Inspector of Xu province, which urged Zhu Jun to lead an army west to rescue the emperor at Chang'an. Nothing came of the proposal, but Zheng Xuan later took refuge with Tao Qian in Xu province; he returned soon afterwards, and it is said that even the Yellow Turbans spared his homeland.

When Yuan Shao, warlord Governor of Ji province, called him to his court, Zheng Xuan arrived late. Eight feet tall [185 cm] and of fine appearance, he took a place at the top of the hall, had a great deal to drink, but then amazed those present by the quality and range of his discourse. He was offered high office in the puppet imperial government under Cao Cao, and a special carriage was sent to bring him to Xu city. He was greeted as he passed by all the local officials, but then claimed ill health and returned home; he was later known by courtesy as Minister of Finance.

In 200, at the age of seventy-four, Zheng Xuan was forewarned of his impending death by a dream of Confucius. He soon became ill, but Yuan Shao, who was engaged in battle with Cao Cao at Guandu, sent his son Yuan Tan to bring him to his camp. Zheng Xuan was obliged to obey, but he died on the road. Thousands of officials who had been taught by him gathered for his mourning and a stele was set up in his honour.

Besides Zheng Xuan's many formal works, his students published Zheng zhi 鄭志, a collection of his responses to questions on the classics, in the style of the Analects. -HHS 35/25:1207-12*, 79/69B:2577, XC 1:14a, XHS 3:10a-b, SJZ 26:30a, JS 20:923; Tjan 49:150, Mather 76:506, Kramers 86:764, Demiéville 86:813-814, Texts:24-32 [Boltz], 221-223 [Shaughnessy], 293-297 [Riegel], 317 [Cheng], 332 [Lau], 382-383 [Shaughnessy], 415-422 [Loewe].

Zheng Yan 鄭炎 [Yi'en 益恩?]; Beihai. A fragment of the Secondary Biography of Zheng Xuan, preserved in Taiping yulan 362 and cited by Hou Kang in HHSJJ 6:269 jiabou, mentions Zheng Yan, a son of Zheng Xuan, who was nominated Filial and Incorrupt but died at the age of twenty-eight.

HHS 35/25:1212 tells how in the early 190s Zheng Yi'en, son of Zheng Xuan and at that time twenty-three sui, was nominated Filial and Incorrupt by Kong Rong the Chancellor of Beihai. He was soon afterwards killed fighting for Kong Rong, and in HHSJJ 35/25:1283 Hui Dong cites the Secondary Biography as saying that he died at the age of twenty-seven.

Despite the discrepancy of age, and some uncertainty whether the young man's death was caused by Yellow Turbans or by Yuan Tan in 194, we may note that HHS 35/25 also describes Zheng Yi'en as the only son of Zheng Xuan. He must therefore be the same person as Zheng Yan: Yan was his personal name, not mentioned by HHS, and Yi'en his style.

Zheng Yan 鄭彥 [Jingzai 景載]; Lingling. A humane and virtuous man, Zheng Yan became a district headman. He gave poor people money to encourage them not to kill their children. -SJZ 38:7a.

Zheng [Yi'en] 鄭益恩 see Zheng Yan 炎.

Zheng Ying 鄭英; Dongping. As Zheng Jun sought to return home on grounds of ill health, he sent his son Zheng Ying to present the petition to the palace. Emperor Zhang received Zheng Ying in audience, enquired about Zheng Jun's condition, and presented him with silk, cash and cloth. -DGHJ 18:4a.

Zheng Yu 鄭嫗 [or Yu of Gucheng 孤/菰城嫗]; Wu. A celebrated judge of physiognomy, Zheng Yu was an ornament to the court of Sun Quan. When Wu Can was young Zheng Yu foretold that he would be a great minister. -SGZ Wu 18:1426, 12:1339.

Zheng Yuan 鄭元 see Zheng Xuan 鄭玄.

Zheng Yun 鄭雲; Kuaiji. Former Registrar of the commandery, in the early 190s Zheng Yun was listed by Yu Fan among its loyal officers. -SGZ Wu 12:1325.

Zheng Zha 鄭札; Pei. A man of learning, Zheng Zha came south at the time of civil war at the end of Han. Joining the staff of the warlord Sun Quan, he became a close adviser like Zhang Zhao and Sun Shao. -SGZ Wu 2:1142.

Zheng Zhang 鄭長 see Zheng Chang 鄭長.

Zheng Zhen 鄭真; Chenliu. As a magistrate in Jiying in 175, Zheng Zhen joined the Administrator Zhang Chong and a group of local gentlemen to set up a stele at the temple to the sage Emperor Yao 堯. -LS 1:5a-7b.

Zheng Zhong 鄭眾 [Zhongshi 仲師 or Zishi 子師] (d.83); Henan. Son of Zheng Xing, under his father's tutelage Zheng Zhong studied Zuo zhuan, the Book of Changes and the Classic of Poetry, and by the time he was twelve he was a well-known scholar. He published a commentary to Chunqiu and gained a mastery of the Santong 三統 [Three Sequences] calendar, in which his father had been involved with Liu Xin 劉歆 of Former Han.

Some time after 41 the Heir Liu Zhuang and his brother Liu Jing, King of Shanyang, sent their brother-in-law Liang Song to invite Zheng Zhong to join their households within the palace. Zheng Zhong explained that it was against the custom of Han for members of the imperial family to recruit men privately to their service. Liang Song tried to press him, but Zheng Zhong replied that it was better to die for good principle than to suffer a lesser punishment for disobeying the law. His response was reported to Liu Zhuang and Liu Jing, and they gave up the idea. Liang Song was later disgraced and died in prison, and many of his clients were also punished, but Zheng Zhong escaped any involvement.

Soon after Liu Zhuang came to the throne in 57, Zheng Zhong became a clerk in the office of the Excellency of Works. On account of his Understanding of the Classics he was consulted on antiquities and received special privileges as Serving within the Palace. Later, still with that supernumerary title, he was appointed a major in the Northern Army.

In the early 60s the Northern Xiongnu sought to establish treaty relations with Han, and in the summer of 65 Zheng Zhong was sent with the Staff of Authority on embassy to the north. The Shanyu wanted him to pay obeisance but Zheng Zhong refused, and though the Xiongnu surrounded his camp and deprived him of water and fire, he held to principle until the barbarian was obliged to concede the point.

As Zheng Zhong returned he was accompanied by envoys from the Shanyu. Though members of the court urged a further exchange of embassies, Zheng Zhong reported that the Northern ruler was only pretending friendship; his real ambition was to obtain the allegiance of the city-states of the Western Regions in central Asia, and force a rift between Han and the Southern Xiongnu and the Wuhuan. He added that he had captured a messenger, sent to the North by the Southern Shanyu Chang, seeking a rapprochement in case the Chinese turned against him. Chinese defences were speedily strengthened, notably by the appointment of Wu Tang as Acting General on the Liao in Wuyuan to hold the two groups of Xiongnu apart.

Emperor Ming nonetheless insisted on another embassy. Zheng Zhong argued that the question of obeisance had potential to embarrass Han, and even as he was travelling he sent a stream of memorials objecting to the procedure. Losing patience, the emperor recalled Zheng Zhong while he was still on the road and had him sent to the prison of the Minister of Justice. An amnesty followed soon afterwards, and Zheng Zhong returned to his home.

Some time later the emperor received a further embassy from the Northern Xiongnu and only then did he appreciate the problem with obeisance. It was now recognised that Zheng Zhong had shown the utmost courage and devotion to duty, and he was compared to Su Wu 蘇武 in Former Han.

Zheng Zhong was recalled to appointment as a major in the army, and in 74, after Dou Gu's successful attack on the Xiongnu in the previous year, he accompanied the General of the Household Ma Liao to attack Jushi [Turfan] in central Asia. They then stayed in Dunhuang with a watching brief over the newly-acquired territories.

When Ma Liao was recalled to ministerial office at the capital in 75, Zheng Zhong took his place as General of the Household stationed in Dunhuang. As the Xiongnu returned in force to Jushi, and the Chinese colonels Geng Gong and Guan Chong were isolated and besieged. The remnant garrisons were relieved early in 76, and Zheng Zhong received them and reported on Geng Gong's heroic defence.

Zheng Zhong was then appointed Administrator of Wuwei, where it is said he kept the borders so well that the enemy dared not attack. Transferred to Zuopingyi, he again maintained a most effective government.

In 81 Zheng Zhong returned to the capital as Minister of Finance. When Emperor Zhang proposed to reintroduce state monopoly offices for salt and iron, Zheng Zhong opposed the plan and refused to process the necessary orders. He died in office in 83.

Besides his extensive official and military career, Zheng Zhong was a scholar of the Old Text tradition in the Mao interpretation of the Classic of Poetry and the Fei interpretation of the Book of Changes. Towards the end of his life he received the imperial commission to compile an edition of Zuo zhuan, which was completed in nineteen chapters 刪; his style was described by Ma Rong as broad rather than detailed. Expert on Zhou li 周禮, Zheng Zhong's work was followed by Ma Rong and passed on to Zheng Xuan. Zheng Zhong also left an essay on the ceremonial for visits at times of marriage, Hunli ye wen 婚禮謁文.

Following the calendrical work of his father Zheng Xing, moreover, Zheng Zhong studied mathematics, and his identification of the nine ways of reckoning, juzhu 九數, cited in Zheng Xuan's commentary to Zhou li, indicates his knowledge of the important Jiuzhang suanshu 九章算術 "Nine Chapters on the Art of Mathematics" which was completed about this time. -HHS 36/26:1224-26*, 89/79:2949, 19/9:722-23; Tjan 49:150, MBeck 90:85, Needham 59:25, Texts:18 [Cullen], deC 84:252.

Zheng Zhong 鄭仲; Rencheng. Elder brother of 1130 Zheng Zhong

Zheng Jun, Zheng Zhong became a county officer. He was pleased to receive gifts or bribes, but Zheng Jun eventually persuaded him to be more restrained.

When Zheng Zhong died, Zheng Jun cared for his family. -HHS 27/17:945-46.

Zheng Zhong 鄭眾 [Jichan 季產 or Jiping 季平] (d.114); Nanyang. A eunuch, in the time of Emperor Ming Zheng Zhong entered the household of the Heir Liu Da, future Emperor Zhang, and when he came to the throne in 75 Zheng Zhong became an Attendant at the Yellow Gates. He was later promoted Regular Attendant and early in the reign of Emperor He, about 90, he was made Prefect of the Palace Gardens.

At this time the Dowager Dou, with her brother Dou Xian and their family, dominated the court. Zheng Zhong was one of the few who respected the rights of the emperor and did not approve of the clique, and as Emperor He took action against the Dou in 92 he trusted Zheng Zhong with a leading role. As rewards were given for the successful coup, Zheng Zhong was modest in his requests, but he was appointed Grand Prolonger of Autumn, head of the empress's household, and he continued to have a leading role in discussions of policy. It was through Zheng Zhong that eunuch involvement in government was established for Later Han.

In 102 Emperor He recalled Zheng Zhong's fine service and enfeoffed him as a district marquis, with revenue from 1,500 households, and in 107 the regent Dowager Deng added a further three hundred. When he died in 114, his adopted son Zheng Hong was granted succession to the fief; this too set a new precedent. -HHS 78/68:2512-13*, DGHJ 19:8a; Ch'ü 72:463-464.

Zheng Ziran 鄭子然 see Zhen Ziran 甄子然.

Zhi, Emperor 質帝 (reg. 145-146) see Liu Zuan 劉纘.

Zhi 致, the Maid 婢; Cangwu. Zhi and her mistress, the Lady Su E, were murdered by the village headman Gong Shou. -XC 6:13a-b.

Zhi 摯, the Lady. The Lady was a daughter of Zhi Xun, who gave her in marriage to his student Ma Rong. -HHS 60/50A:1953.

Zhi 芝 [surname unknown]. Inspector of Jing province, in 165 he was captured by the rebel Hu Lan. He was freed by the general Du Shang, but was later executed for his military failure. -HHS 102/12:3257; MBeck 90:128.

HHSJJ at 3677 suggests that the story of Zhi may be confused with similar incidents about this time, such as those of Li Wei, Zhang Xu, Ge Zhi and Ren Yin qq.v.

Zhi 陟 [surname unknown]. A Protector of the Army, being an officer responsible for discipline, in 220 he was a sponsor of a stele commemorating Cao Pi's assumption of the imperial title. -LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:197.

Zhi 質 [surname unknown] see Wu Zhi 吳質. -LS 19:4b; Goodman 98:197.

Zhi [Boshang] 鄧伯尚; Runan. Though they had been invited to office at the imperial capital, when their patron the Administrator Li Chang 李偃 died Zhi Boshang and other nominees stayed to carry out his mourning: see sub Li Chang.

Zhi [Boxiang] 鄧伯向 see Zhi Boshang 鄧伯尚 and sub Li Chang 李偃.

Zhi [Boyi] 鄧伯夷; Runan. Grandson of Zhi Yun, when Zhi Boyi was a commandery Investigator, he challenged and destroyed a fox demon which had haunted a tower and killed the officer Zheng Qi and others.

Zhi Boyi later became a county magistrate. -FSTY 9:74; Nylan 83:545-546.

Zhi Hong 職洪 was a county magistrate in Henei. -FSTY 6f:147.

Zhi [Junzhang] 鄧君章; Runan. Close friends of Zhang Shao, Zhi Junzhang and Yin Zizheng cared for him in his last illness. Zhang Shao told them that he regretted not seeing Fan Shi of Shanyang, whom he described as his "death friend" 死友 – they, by contrast, were his "life friends" 生友. -HHS 81/71:2677.

Zhi Yun of Runan, who has an entry below, also had the style Junzhang, but he cannot be the same as this man. He was active in the early first century, but Zhang Shao and his friends were men of the second: Fan Shi's great-grandfather Fan Ji was Chancellor of Changshan during the first century.

Zhi Kan 質堪. A Foreman Clerk of the Secretariat about 120, Zhi Kan urged that the right to wear a cap with two bridges 梁 [loops from front to back] should be authorised for all officers above the rank of 600 shi. He was opposed by his superior Meng Bu, but it appears that the privilege was indeed extended over the following years. -HHS 120/30:3667; MBeck 90:259.

Zhi Shou 鄧壽 [Bokao 伯考] (d.91); Runan. Son of Zhi Yun, and likewise a noted scholar, Zhi Shou was nominated Filial and Incorrupt. He became Inspector of Ji province, where there were a number of fiefs held by members of the imperial clan. Their clients and retainers frequently acted against the law, but Zhi Shou brought them under strict control.

Zhi Shou then joined the Imperial Secretariat and later became its head. Emperor Zhang respected his good advice and presented him with an inscribed sword. Transferred to Chang'an as Intendant of Jingzhao, his reputation from Ji province promptly brought the powerful local families under control.

Dismissed on account of some fault, in the late 80s Zhi Shou returned to office as Deputy Director of the Secretariat. He strongly disapproved of the Dou clan of the regent Dowager, and particularly of her brother Dou Xian, whom he compared to the usurper Wang Mang. In 88 he was among the leaders opposing the great campaign against the Northern Xiongnu, and the Dowager had him briefly imprisoned. After the first stage of operations proved successful, Dou Xian and his brothers became still more powerful, but Zhi Shou criticised them in open court for building official residences in time of war when the treasury was all but empty.

Dou Xian now had agents accuse Zhi Shou of having corruptly purchased public farmland, categorised as Disrespect and liable to the death penalty. He Chang, an officer of the Censorate, spoke on his behalf, and so Zhi Shou escaped death, but he was exiled to Hepu in the far south. On the way he committed suicide, and other members of his household were then allowed to return to their home country. -HHS 29/19:1032-34*.

Zhi Su 支肅; Nan. Registrar to the Administrator Ma Rong in the 140s, Zhu Su was involved in the charge of corruption levelled through the influence of Liang Ji. It was alleged that he had paid a bribe to Ma Rong in order to obtain nomination as Filial and Incorrupt. -HHSJJ 60/50A:2130 Hui Dong quoting *Sanfu jue*lu.

Zhi Tongqi 支通期 see You Tongqi 友通期. -DGJJ 24:4b.

Zhi Xi 脂習 [Yuansheng 元升]; Jingzhao. During the 180s Zhi Xi held a local commandery post, then joined the offices at the capital, graded First Class and became Court Physician. He accompanied the court to Chang'an and back to Xu city.

Zhi Xi became a close friend of Kong Rong, whom he warned against offending Cao Cao, and when Kong Rong was executed in 208, Zhi Xi was the only person to mourn him. Cao Cao thought of arresting him too, but there was an amnesty and Zhi Xi went to live outside Xu city. He later apologised to Cao Cao, who treated him generously.

When Cao Pi took power in 220, Zhi Xi was given honorary appointment at court. He retired, and died aged over eighty. -HHS 70/60:2279, SGZ 11:349.

Zhi [Xuanya] 支宣雅 see Zhi Yiya 支宜雅.

Zhi Xun 摯恂 [Jizhi 季直]; Jingzhao. In the late first century Zhi Xun was celebrated as a Confucian scholar-hermit living in the Qin Ling ranges. He was the teacher of Ma Rong, and gave him his own daughter in marriage. -HHS 60/50A:1953; Vervorm 90:160.

Zhi [Yiya] 支宜雅 or Zhi Xuanya 宣雅; Lingling. As Li Gu was appointed Inspector of Jing province about 140, he consulted local worthies, including Zhi Yiya, on the quality of local officials. On their advice, he reported against several Administrators. -HYGZ 10C: 165.

Zhi Yun 鄧惲 [Junzhang 君章]; Runan. A scholar of the Han interpretation of the New Text Poetry and the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu, Zhi Yun was also an expert on astronomy and the calendar. As banditry increased during the last years of Wang Mang, he foretold the fall of the new dynasty and travelled to Chang'an to urge the usurper to return the government to the Han, rightful holders of the Mandate of Heaven. Wang Mang, furious, had him accused of Great Refractoriness, but though Zhi Yun refused to renounce his words he was able to benefit from an amnesty. He went with his fellow-countryman Zheng Jing to the mountains of the far south, where they lived as hermits.

In 27 Zhi Yun returned north. When he came to Lujiang he met Guangwu's general Fu Jun, who knew his reputation and treated him with courtesy. As he went with the army to take over Yang province, he saw how the troops killed people and plundered tombs, and he warned Fu Jun that the new regime would lose support if this continued. Fu Jun brought his men under control.

In 31 Zhi Yun went to the capital to meet Guangwu, but was embarrassed to take office because of his service as a military adviser. He returned home to private life, and would not take local office.

When his friend Dong Zizhang was dying, Zhi Yun fulfilled a vendetta for him: he led his own retainers to murder Dong Zizhang's enemy, then attended the county yamen, reported his crime and went to the prison. Admiring Zhi Yun's moral spirit, the magistrate sent him away, threatening that if he did not go he, the magistrate, would kill himself.

Several years later Zhi Yun did become Officer of Merit to the Administrator Ouyang Xi. Ouyang Xi proposed to reward the Investigator Yao Yan and recommend him to the court, but Zhi Yun came forward at the official banquet and claimed that Yao Yan was in fact greedy and weak, quite unworthy of such honour. In an embarrassing confrontation Ouyang Xi was compelled to acknowledge his lack of judgement, and the feast broke up in confusion.

Zhi Yun's old friend Zheng Jing helped to calm the situation, but urged him to leave office and join him in the life of a hermit. Zhi Yun at first refused, but when Ouyang Xi again called up Yao Yan he left in disgust and went into the mountains.

After a few weeks, however, he tired of the rural life and wanted to return to politics. As Zheng Jing remained behind, Zhi Yun went south to Jiangxia, where he taught for a time. He then obtained nomination as Filial and Incorrupt and became captain of a gate of the city of Luoyang.

One evening, after Emperor Guangwu had been out hunting, he attempted to return through Zhi Yun's gate. Though a torch was held close to the ruler's face, Zhi Yun refused to recognise him and open the way. Guangwu gained entry by another gate, and the following day Zhi Yun presented a memorial complaining that the emperor paid too much attention to his own pleasures and not enough to the needs of the nation. He was rewarded with silk, while the captain of the other gate was sent out to a distant county with lower rank.

Having thus come to notice, Zhi Yun was made tutor to the Heir, Liu Qiang, for the Han interpretation of Poetry. When Guangwu proposed to dismiss Liu Qiang's mother, the Lady Guo, as empress, Zhi Yun protested, but after the change had been made he persuaded Liu Qiang to accept the situation and concentrate upon having his mother treated with appropriate honours. This was done; but Liu Qiang was in turn dismissed as Heir two years later.

After further appointments, Zhi Yun became Administrator of Changsha, where he encouraged learning and recommended men of fine conduct. His predecessor Zhang Jin, however, was found to have embezzled money, and because he had failed to report it Zhi Yun was demoted to be a county magistrate in Pei.

In Pei, Zhi Yun attacked and beat the officer Han Gong because of his harsh treatment of the robber Ding Zhong. Han Gong then killed Ding Gong, and Zhi Yun was dismissed over the incident.

Returning to his home country, Zhi Yun taught privately. He died of illness, leaving eight pian of written works. -HHS 29/19:1023-32*, DGHJ 15, FSTY 4:27; QHX:726, Vervoor 90:134-136, Bn 76:15.

Zhihu Chi'er 支胡赤兒 see Chi'er 赤兒.

Zhijian 置鞬 see Zhijianluoluo 置鞬落羅.

Zhijianluoluo 置鞬落羅; Xianbi. During the 170s Zhijianluoluo was a commander in the west under Tanshihuai. -SGZ 30:838; Schreiber 47:187.

Zhong 忠 of Yanqi [Karashar]. Son of Shun, Zhong succeeded him as King of Yanqi. Like his father, he was an enemy of China and a supporter of the Xiongnu, and in 75 he and his people attacked and killed the Protector-General Chen Mu. -HHS 47/37:1582.

Zhong 忠 of Shule [Kashgar] (d.86). A nephew of King Cheng, who was killed by King Jian of Qiuzi [Kuqa] in 73, Zhong was placed upon the throne and the dynasty was restored by the Chinese agent Ban Chao. The new king had formerly been called Yule, but he now took the name of Zhong "Loyal."

In 75 the army of Qiuzi came again to attack, and Ban Chao supported Zhong in the defence for several months. The new Emperor Zhang recalled him, but he returned a few weeks later and the pro-Chinese regime was restored.

In 84 Ban Chao co-ordinated an attack against Suoju with troops from Yutian [Khotan] and Shule, but the ruler of Suoju bribed Zhong to change sides and join an alliance against the Chinese, while Kangju [Sogdiana] sent aid from across the Pamirs. Ban Chao turned against Shule and proclaimed his own nominee in place of Zhong. He then sent gifts to the Yuezhi, who were linked by marriage to the Kangju royal house, so the allies withdrew and took Zhong with them.

In 86 Zhong obtained some more men from Kangju and made a secret alliance with Qiuzi, but then came to make a false submission. Ban Chao pretended to accept this, but at the welcoming banquet he had Zhong seized and killed. -HHS 47/37:1574-80, 88/78:2926.

Zhong 鍾 [personal name unknown]; Runan. When some of Zhong's neighbours stole vegetables from him, he gathered the remainder and gave them also to the thieves. They reformed. -XC 8:2b.

Zhong 鍾 [personal name unknown]. Students of calligraphy under Liu Desheng in the late second century, Zhong and his colleague Hu continued the tradition of their master's new xing shu 行書 "Running Style," and Zhong composed Li shi 隸勢, an essay on aspects of the official "Clerical Style." -JS 36:1065.

Zhong Changtong 仲長統 see Zhongchang Tong 仲長統.

Zhong Di 鍾迪; Yingchuan. Son of Zhong Hao, Zhong Di was kept from office during the great Proscription under Emperor Ling, but he was at some time Registrar in his home commandery. -SGZ 13:392.

Zhong Ding 仲定 (d.172); Ji Yin. Zhong Ding's father had been an Administrator, and Zhong Ding was nominated as Filial and Incorrupt. He refused once, but accepted a second nomination by the Administrator Hu Guang about 134. Having served probation as a gentleman cadet, he held junior office in the Imperial Secretariat and became a county magistrate in Pengcheng. He later passed an examination to become an Academician at the Imperial University, and about 145, after the Grand Tutor Zhao Jun commended his fine conduct, he was named Inspector of Yu province.

Zhong Ding later joined the staff of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, was appointed as Prefect of Insignia and Credentials and then Administrator of Yuzhang. Returning to the capital as a Consultant, he served in the Imperial Secretariat, and again held office under Liang Ji, this time as his Chief Clerk. Evidently trusted, he was transferred to important police and protection duties as Colonel of the City Gates and Bearer of the Mace.

Probably after the fall of Liang Ji in 159, Zhong Ding was shifted to a non-executive post as Palace Counsellor. He later became Minister of Justice, but left that office on grounds of ill health. He refused further invitations, but was always treated with respect as a former senior official.

In 172 Zhong Ding asked the government of Emperor Ling to approve restoration work on the Spiritual Terrace associated with temples and shrines to the sage Emperor Yao and his mother 堯母 in his family's home county of Chengyang. The proposal was accepted, and while the work was carried out by the local Administrator Shen Huang and the magistrate Guan Zun, Zhong Ding arranged for his kinsmen to contribute. He was granted honorary position as Palace Counsellor, a stele was set up to commemorate the completion of the project, and when he died soon afterwards there was another erected by his clients to honour the man himself. -LS 25:5a-6a, 1:8a-13a; Ebrey 80:338.

Zhong Fu 鍾敷; Yingchuan. Son of Zhong Hao, he was kept from office during the Great Proscription under Emperor Ling. -SGZ 13:392.

Zhong Guang 仲光 also as Chong Guang 种光 and as Chong Gao 种髡 (d.115). Administrator of Youfufeng in 115, Zhong Guang held a subordinate command in the army led by Sima Jun to attack the Qiang rebels and the renegade Du Jigong. They occupied the enemy fortress at Dingxi in northern Beidi, but when Sima Jun sent Zhong Guang and other officers out to collect grain they ignored his orders and allowed their troops to scatter. They were cut off by the rebels and their Qiang allies, but Sima Jun, angry at their disobedience, stayed in the city and refused to send help. Zhong Guang was killed, and the Chinese lost more than three thousand men. -HHS 87/77:2889; deC 84:107-108.

Zhong Hao 鍾皓 [Jiming 季明] (121-189); Yingchuan. Zhong Hao's family was long-established locally, with a reputation in legal matters, and Zhong Hao became known for his honest conduct. He was several times invited to office at the capital, but because his elder brothers had not been appointed, he went away into the hills, where he taught law and the Classic of Poetry to more than a thousand students.

Zhong Hao later became Officer of Merit in the commandery, and he eventually accepted appointment in the offices at the capital; as he was leaving he recommended Chen Shi, at that time only a guard officer, to succeed him as Officer of Merit.

Though Zhong Hao was then offered posts at the Imperial University, in the Ministry of Justice and as a county magistrate, he refused all of them and returned to private life. He explained that in difficult times the only proper conduct was to avoid state politics and protect one's own family: see sub Zhong Jin.

Widely admired for his virtue, Zhong Hao was recognised as one of the exemplary teachers of the empire, in the same category as Xun Shu and Chen Zhishu. -HHS 62/52:2064-65*, XC 3:12b, SGZ 13:391-92; Mather 76:516.

Zhong Jin 鍾瑾/覲; Yingchuan. Zhong Jin was a nephew of Zhong Hao, and his mother was a sister of Li Yi, father of Li Ying; the two young men were the same age. A keen scholar, Zhong Jin was greatly admired by his grandfather Li Xiu, who saw him as a worthy member of the clan and arranged for him to marry his cousin, Li Ying's sister.

As Zhong Jin refused to take any official position, Li Ying twitted him about his lack of public spirit and his failure to express judgement of right and wrong – in opposition to the engaged teachings of Mencius. Zhong Jin's uncle Zhong Hao, however, confirmed him in this stance, arguing that his proper responsibility in the present age of difficulty was to preserve his own family, not to seek trouble by pointing out others' faults. That could be left to great official clans such as the Li; and indeed Li Ying's opposition to the eunuchs brought destruction to his family.

Zhong Jin died young. -HHS 62/52:2064, SGZ 13:392.

Zhong Jing 中京 became Minister Steward. -FSTY 5f:118.

Zhong Qiu 仲球 [Boyi 伯儀]; Jiyin. In 172 Zhong Qiu was a magistrate in Pengcheng. In the early 170s his kinsman the minister Zhong Ding obtained imperial endorsement for restoration of the Spiritual Terrace associated with temples and shrines to the sage Emperor Yao and his mother 堯母 and his mother in the Zhong family's home county of Chengyang. Zhong Qiu and other relatives took a leading role in the work, and an inscription dated 172 records that Zhong Qiu contributed 37,000 cash to the general cost of the project, and a further 3,200 to a clan fund.

Three years later, now retired, Zhong Qiu again joined his kinsmen and other local gentlemen to set up a stele at the temple to Emperor Yao. -LS 1:5a-13a.

Zhong Xin 仲訢 [Bohai 伯海]; Jiyin. In 172 Zhong Xin was Administrator of Julu. In the early 170s his kinsman the minister Zhong Ding obtained imperial endorsement for restoration of the Spiritual Terrace associated with temples and shrines to the sage Emperor Yao and his mother 堯母 in the Zhong family's home county of Chengyang. Zhong Xin and other relatives took a leading role in the work, and an inscription dated 172 records that Zhong Xin contributed ten thousand cash to the general cost of the project, and a further 1,400 to a Zhong clan fund.

Three years later, now retired, Zhong Xin again joined his kinsmen and other local gentlemen to set up a stele at the temple to Emperor Yao. -LS 1:5a-13a.

Zhong Xing 鍾興 [Ciwen 次文]; Runan. As a young man Zhong Xing studied the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu according to the Zhuang/Yan interpretation under Ding Gong, and when Ding Gong became a minister under Emperor Guangwu he recommended him. The emperor interviewed Zhong Xing and was impressed by his knowledge and understanding of the classics. He first appointed him as a gentleman cadet, and then made him a General of the Household, in charge of a corps of cadets.

Zhong Xing later received an imperial command to simplify and shorten the detailed commentary to Chunqiu 春秋章句, removing repetitions, then teach it to the imperial children and junior members of the clan. He was offered a secondary marquise, but was unwilling to accept, even after his teacher Ding Gong was granted the same honour. He died in office. -HHS 79/69B:2579-80*; Bn 79:189, 194.

Zhong Xiong 仲雄. A disfigured stele records how Zhong Xiong held local office in his commandery and in the province, was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, became a gentleman cadet and was then a magistrate in Nan commandery. -LS 26:8b-9a.

Zhong Xuan 仲選 [Menggao 孟高]; Jiyin. In 172 Zhong Xuan was a member of the offices of the Excellency over the Masses Xu Xu. In the early 170s his kinsman the minister Zhong Ding obtained imperial endorsement for restoration of the Spiritual Terrace associated with temples and shrines to the sage Emperor Yao and his mother 堯母 in the Zhong family's home county of Chengyang. Zhong Xuan and other relatives took a leading role in the work, and an inscription dated 172 records that Zhong Xuan contributed two thousand cash to the general cost of the project, and a further 1,400 to a Zhong clan fund.

Three years later, now described as a former magistrate, Zhong Xuan again joined his kinsmen and other local gentlemen to set up a stele at the temple to Emperor Yao. -LS 1:5a-13a.

Zhong Yan 鍾演; Yingchuan. XTS 75A:3354 says that Zhong Yan was a son of Zhong Di and a brother of Zhong Yao.

Zhong Yao 鍾繇 [Yuanchang 元常] (151-230); Yingchuan. Zhong Yao was a son of Zhong Di. [SGZ 13:392 says Zhong Yao was a grandson of Zhong Di, and ZZTJ 60:1941, evidently based upon that, says that Zhong Di's father Zhong Hao was Zhong Yao's great-grandfather. HHS 62/52:2065, however, describes Zhong Hao as Zhong Yao's grandfather, and commentary quotes the Hainei xianxian zhuan of the third century, saying that Zhong Di was his father. That appears most likely: it is difficult to fit another generation within the dates, and there is no other suggestion of the name of Zhong Yao's father. XTS 75A:3354 traces the lineage from Zhong Hao to Zhong Di to Zhong Yao. See also SGZJJ 13:2b.]

A noted pupil of the calligrapher Liu Desheng, Zhong Yao spent ten years in the mountains practicing his art, and he became a recognised master of the kai shu 楷書 [or zheng shu 正書/zhen shu 真書], the "Standard Script" developed by Wang Dezhong. The great fourth-century calligrapher Wang Xizhi 王羲之 is said to have modelled his style upon that of Zhong Yao and his colleague Zhang Zhi, who was expert in the informal cao shu 草書 "Grass Style."

In the late 180s Zhong Yao joined the imperial service and held posts at the capital and as a county magistrate: see also sub Zhong Yu.

In 192 Zhong Yao was a Gentleman at the Yellow Gates in Chang'an. He persuaded Li Jue and Guo Si to recognise Cao Cao on behalf of the imperial government, and he was sent on the embassy which acknowledged Liu Biao as Governor of Jing province and named him as a general.

In 195 Zhong Yao joined in a plot with Liu Jue's officer Yang Feng to kill Li Jue. The plan was unsuccessful, but Yang Feng set himself up independently and Li Jue was weakened. Soon afterwards Zhong Yao helped Emperor Xian escape from Chang'an, and as the court came to Xu city under Cao Cao in 196 he was rewarded with enfeoffment and gained high appointments in the Imperial Censorate and the Secretariat.

Recommended by Xun Yu, in 197 Zhong Yao was appointed Director of Retainers, to keep the west quiet while Cao Cao was engaged with Yuan Shao north of the Yellow River. Establishing himself in Chang'an, Zhong Yao persuaded the warlords Ma Teng of Longxi and Han Sui of Jincheng to send hostages to court, and it appears he also stirred up a quarrel between them. He was so successful that he was able to send troops to support Cao Cao in the decisive campaign of 200.

Zhong Yao later transferred his headquarters to the less vulnerable region of Hongnong, and when Wei Ji's proposal to re-establish the salt monopoly was put into operation, his position was strengthened by refugees returning to settle.

In 202 Zhong Yao's nephew Guo Yuan joined Gao Gan of the Yuan family in his attack on Hedong. Guo Yuan was supported by the Shanyu of the Southern Xiongnu, so Zhong Yao set siege to the Xiongnu capital at Pingyang. As Guo Yuan came to relieve Pingyang, Ma Teng sent aid to Zhong Yao. Guo Yuan was defeated and killed, and the Xiongnu surrendered.

In 205, now based at Luoyang, Zhong Yao again commanded a general levy to support the new Administrator Du Ji in Hedong, putting down local rebellions and driving Gao Gan away.

In 211 Zhong Yao proposed an advance to the west towards Chang'an, ostensibly for operations against Zhang Lu in Hanzhong, but in fact to establish a measure of control over the north-western warlords. The warlords combined forces to oppose him, but they were eventually defeated by Cao Cao at Huayin, and Zhong Yao then established civilian control behind the armies as they mopped up resistance.

In 213 Zhong Yao was among the senior officials who urged Cao Cao to take title as Duke of Wei and he was named Grand Judge of the new state. He argued unsuccessfully for Chen Qun's proposal to reintroduce mutilating punishments in preference to flogging, which in practice led often to death.

As Cao Cao took the royal title in 216, Zhong Yao was appointed Chancellor of State, highest post in the kingdom. In 219 he was dismissed for bad judgement after his junior officer Wei Feng turned traitor.

Zhong Yao, however, had close connection with the Heir Cao Pi. When Cao Cao died he was again appointed Grand Judge, and when Cao Pi took the imperial title at the end of 220 Zhong Yao was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele. Grand Commandant of the new regime, he held that post, also under Cao Rui, until his death. -SGZ 13:391-99*, LS 19: 4a.

Zhong Yi 鍾異. Formerly a leader of the Datong bandits on the North China plain, after the majority were absorbed by the Red Eyebrows in 24, Zhong Yi retained independent command of a small group. He later joined the warlord Zhang Bu.

In 29 Zhong Yi accompanied Zhang Bu's main force to attack Guangwu's general Geng Yan at Linzi in Qi. His men encountered Geng Yan in the first engagement, and though Geng Yan could hold his own he allowed himself to be driven back into the city, drawing Zhang Bu's troops into an ambush. -HHS 19/9:710-11.

Zhong You 鍾繇 see Zhong Yao 鍾繇.

Zhong Yu 鍾瑜; Yingchuan. A senior cousin of Zhong Yao, there was an occasion about 190 that they were journeying together to Luoyang. They met a physiognomist who remarked that Zhong Yao had a countenance of great honour, but that he should be very cautious about water. A little way on they came to a bridge, where Zhong Yao's horse shied at something. Zhong Yao fell into the river and almost drowned. Impressed by this initial fulfilment of the physiognomist's forecast, Zhong Yu showed Zhong Yao the utmost respect and provided money and goods to support his education. -SGZ 13:391.

Zhong Yu 仲昱 see Chong Yu 种昱. -HYGZJBTZ: 537.

Zhongchang Tong 仲長統 [Gongli 公里] (180-220); Shanyang. A man of both scholarly and literary ability, from the age of twenty Zhongchang Tong travelled for study across the northern plain, and he was widely admired by those whom he met. Gao Gan, the nephew of Yuan Shao serving as his Inspector of Bing province, was seeking to establish a reputation as a patron of scholars, and he issued a general invitation to his court. Zhongchang Tong went to call upon him, but when he spoke with Gao Gan he warned him that he was out of his depth and lacked the qualities required of a true leader. Gao Gan was predictably annoyed and Zhongchang Tong left.

Direct and out-spoken in this fashion, Zhongchang Tong was described by colleagues as a "wild man" 狂生 or free spirit. He was several times invited to office, but always declined on grounds of ill health. In fact this was only an excuse, for Zhongchang Tong argued in classical Taoist fashion that the search for personal happiness was far more important than the bubble reputation of politics. He was nonetheless widely known, and after the fall of Gao Gan in 206 he was recommended to Cao Cao by Xun Yu. This time he did accept appointment, first to the Imperial Secretariat, then to Cao Cao's headquarters staff, followed by a return to the Secretariat. He died at the time of Emperor Xian's abdication, aged forty, and his friend Miao Xi compared him to Dong Zhongshu and other great thinkers of Former Han.

Zhongchang Tong compiled a local history of worthy men, Shanyang xianxian zhuan 山陽先賢傳, but his major work was Changyan 昌言 "Admirable Words." A series of essays of a hundred thousand words in either thirty-four or twenty-four pian, with an Introduction by Miao Xi, the work may have been left incomplete by the author's comparatively early death. It exists now only in part, including three sections in Hou Han shu, and some fragments in encyclopaedias and other collections.

The title Changyan comes from a phrase used in the Classic of History to describe advice given to a sage ruler. It could be rendered literally as "Frank Discussions," and Zhongchang Tong was writing with a sense of indignation and despair, describing the inevitable cycle of dynastic failure. The problem is the decadence of the founder's long-term successors and, while Zhongchang Tong himself took pleasure in the life of a country gentleman, he argued that the pressures of private property and the greed of great land-owners will eventually destabilise any state. His solution was to limit private manorial exploitation, to encourage essential farming and education, and to enforce such a program by strict laws and administration, with careful attention to the recruitment of officials. -HHS 49/39: 1643-59*, SGZ 21:620; Balazs 50, deC 96:349-350, Ebrey 86:624-625, Loewe 86E:715, Hsü 80:55-56.

Zhongli Yi 鍾離意 [Zi'a 子阿]; Kuaiji. As a young man, Zhongli Yi was Registrar of the commandery, and in 23 he assisted Ren Yan in approaching the scholar recluse Longqiu Chang. When the Acting Administrator Zai Chao was going to execute a county prison officer for some minor fault, Zhongli Yi protested; he was nearly killed himself, but the Officer of Merit Peng Xiu dissuaded Zai Chao with flattery.

Zhongli Yi then became an Investigator, but when an officer was to be questioned for having received improper presents, he refused to take action: quoting from Chunqiu and the Classic of Poetry, he told the new Administrator Huang Dang that before he applied any punishment he should first ensure his own office was faultless. Huang Dang was impressed, and had Zhongli Yi act as brevet magistrate of a county. When there was an epidemic Zhongli Yi cared for people himself, and many were saved.

Zhongli Yi served as Officer of Merit to the Administrator Dou Xiang and was then Assistant Officer for Yang province stationed in Jiujiang. The Inspector Shi Xiajun recommended him to the capital, he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, and served in the offices of the Excellency over the Masses. One winter he was sent in charge of convicts going to Henei. As the men were sick with cold, Zhongli Yi had their fetters removed and ordered a county office in Hongnong to give them civilian clothing. Not one attempted to flee and the group arrived on time. When he reported his actions, Emperor Guangwu himself praised his sense of humanity, but Zhongli Yi was taken ill and had to leave office.

Zhongli Yi later became a county magistrate in Shanyang, transferred in 49 to a county in Guangling, and then to another in Nanyang. In each place he brought good order by generous treatment and encouraging moral conduct, and at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Ming he was appointed to the Imperial Secretariat.

About this time, as Zhang Hui the Administrator of Jiaozhi was found guilty of embezzlement, his property was confiscated and distributed among officials at the capital. Zhongli Yi refused his share, the emperor asked why, and Zhongli Yi quoted Confucius to the effect that such wealth was morally dirty. Vastly impressed, Emperor Ming granted him 300,000 cash from the treasury and appointed him Deputy Director of the Secretariat. He put forward the names of several worthy elders who had great influence for good in their local communities, and they were summoned to court for appointment as Consultants.

Emperor Ming was known for his volatile temper, and Zhongli Yi was one of the few men at court prepared to face up to him, expressing his moral stand on a number of occasions. He criticised the ruler's too-frequent hunting, and at a time of drought in 60 he persuaded him to halt work on the Northern Palace: rain fell soon afterwards. Again, when members of the Secretariat were threatened with the bastinado for mistakenly authorising ten times the appropriate amount of silk to a non-Chinese prince, Zhongli Yi protested fiercely, tearing his robes, and the emperor changed his mind.

Following a number of portents and natural misfortunes, Zhongli Yi urged Emperor Ming to reform his style government, notably in the severity of the punishments inflicted by his officials, and his own propensity for revealing private communications, which left even his closest officers unprotected and vulnerable to slander. Though his good intentions were recognised, Zhongli Yi's advice was predicably not accepted, and it was felt to be time he left the capital. He was sent out as Chancellor of Lu, and when a ceremony was held to celebrate the restoration of the Northern Palace in 65, the emperor remarked that if Zhongli Yi had still been at court the work would never have been finished.

Arriving in Lu, Zhongli Yi gave money from his own purse so that the local officer Kong Xin, evidently a member of the sage's lineage, could repair a ceremonial carriage of Confucius, and he restored the furnishings and accoutrements of the sage's statue in his local temple. He later opened a bowl which had been left by Confucius, and through a prophecy contained in it he collected seven jade bi-rings 璧 [see sub Zhang Bo].

In the latter part of the 60s, after five years good government of Liang, Zhongli Yi died of a long-standing illness. Emperor Ming mourned him, and gave 200,000 cash to his family.

In the early 190s the former house of Zhongli Yi was available as a residence for the refugee Huan Ye, and about the same time, as Yu Fan discussed the local worthies of Kuaiji with the Administrator Wang Lang, Zhongli Yi was one of the men that he praised. -HHS 41/31:1406-10*, 81/71:2674, XC 2:6b, SGZ Wu 12: 1325.

Zhou 周, the Lady I, was an Honoured Lady in the harem of Emperor He when he died in 105. It was expected that the concubines of a dead emperor should reside at his funerary park as notional guardians of his tomb, but the Dowager Deng, who now took regency control of the government, ordered that the Lady Zhou and the Honoured Lady Feng be excused this exile. Explaining that the two women had been her companions for more than ten years, and she could not bear to part with such old friends, she allowed them to remain at the capital. They were granted gold, brocade and fine cloth, and carriage and horses fit for a king. -HHS 10B:421.

Zhou 周, the Lady II. Widow of Liu Fu the King of Pei, in 109 she was given charge of the household of her grandson Liu Guang, who had succeeded to the fief but was incapacitated by illness. The Lady died about 143 and was given posthumous honour by Emperor Shun. -HHS 42/32:1428.

Zhou 周, the Lady III; Langye. Wife of Bian Guang and grandmother of the Lady Bian, consort of Cao Cao, she was posthumously ennobled in 230. -SGZ 5: 158; C/C 99.94.

Zhou 周, the Lady IV. A concubine of Cao Cao, she was the mother of Cao Jun 均. -SGZ 20:579.

Zhou 周 [personal name unknown]. Administrator of Guiyang, a stele was set up in his honour. -LS 27:9b.

Zhou Ang 周昂; Kuaiji. Brother of Zhou Xin and Zhou Yu 隅, in 190 Zhou Ang was named Administrator of Jiujiang by Yuan Shao. In 192 he was defeated by Yuan Shu's officer Sun Ben. -SGZ Wu 6:1209.

The careers of the three brothers Zhou are frequently confused, but see SGZ Wu 1:1100, quoting Wu lu and Kuaiji dianlu.

Zhou Ba 周霸 [Wengzhong 翁中]; Runan. When Zhou Ba was a clerk under the Grand Commandant, his wife gave birth to a daughter. Disappointed that it was not a boy, she paid a butcher's wife, who had given birth to a son at the same time, to make an exchange.

Seventeen years later, when Zhou Ba was Chancellor of Beihai, his Registrar Zhou Guang was a clairvoyant. He told Zhou Ba that the boy was not his own, and when Zhou Ba challenged his wife she confessed the truth.

Zhou Ba then looked for his daughter, and when he found her married to a pastry-cook he arranged a more suitable husband for her. At the same time, in order to maintain his lineage in the male line he adopted his cousin Zhou Xi. -FSTY 3f:105.

Zhou Ba 周霸, daughter of: see above. First married to a pastry-cook, she was later the wife of Li Wensi, who became Administrator of Nanyang.

Zhou Bao 州寶 [Ji? 季?]; Nanyang. A former magistrate and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Bao was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhou Bi 周碧, the Lady; Pingyuan. The Lady was married to Hu Tan. Because he was unable to have proper intercourse with her, he allowed two of his friends to bed her in the hope she might bear a child. -FSTY 3f:108.

Zhou Bi 周玘/悛 [Zhongyuan 仲遠] (d.190); Wuwei or Hanyang: see below. Son of Zhou Shen, in 189 Zhou Bi was a member of the Imperial Secretariat under Dong Zhuo. He and his colleague Wu Qiong urged Dong Zhuo to reform the government by appointing worthy men for office, and they were commissioned with Zheng Tai and He Yong to make suitable nominations. Though they were trusted by Dong Zhuo, many of the men they recommended raised troops against him, and after arranging the appointment of Yuan Shao as Administrator of Bohai the two men acted as agents for the eastern alliance.

Zhou Bi and Wu Qiong were later appointed as colonels, but in 190 they opposed Dong Zhuo's plan to shift the capital to Chang'an. Losing trust in them, he now complained of their bad advice and had both men killed. -SGZ 6:175, HHS 72/62:2326-27, HHJ 26:311-12.

HHS 72/62 and Hanmo yingxiong ji say that Zhou Bi came from Wuwei, but HHJ and SGZ Shu 8:963 describe him as a man from Hanyang.

Zhou Bin 周斌. In 184 Tang Zhou, renegade disciple of the religious leader Zhang Jue, revealed the plot for a coup within the capital and insurgency outside. The eunuch Zhou Bin was commissioned to take charge over the clerical officers of the Excellencies and investigate all officials and commoners who were members of the sect. Over a thousand people were executed. -HHS 71/61:2300.

Zhou Bin 周邠 miswritten for Zou Bin 鄒邠.

Zhou Bo 州博 [Qishi 起世]; Nanyang. A gentleman cadet and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Bo was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhou Bo 周勃 (d.196); Kuaiji. When Sun Ce occupied Kuaiji in 196, Zhou Bo and Huanglong "Yellow Dragon" Luo were local leaders south of Hangzhou Bay. They were defeated and killed by Sun Ce and his new officer Dong Xi. -SGZ Wu 10:1291.

Zhou [Boling] 周伯靈. A friend of Xu Jing 敬, he died young, probably in the 90s. Xu Jing cared for his son. -XC 7:7b.

Zhou Buyi 周不疑 [Yuanzhi 元直 or Wenzhi 文直] (193-209), Lingling. Intelligent, able and a talented writer, Zhou Buyi composed a number of literary and scholarly works. He was a companion to Cao Cao's favourite son Cao Chong [styled Cangshu], and Cao Cao offered him one of his daughters in marriage. Declining the honour, he married a daughter of Liu Xian instead.

Later, when Cangshu died young, Cao Cao was bitter and resentful. Despite the pleas of his Heir Cao Pi he had Zhou Buyi killed. -SGZ 6:216.

Zhou Chang 周敞; Wu. Xie Cheng's fragmentary biographies of this man and his associate Chen Mao contain contradictions. Notably, it is said that Zhou Chang was a student of Jing Fang 京房 who died in 37 BC [QHX:199-200], but that he was Inspector of Yu province and Inspector of Jiaozhi during Later Han. This indicates a very long life; more probably the accounts relate to two men of the same name. [QHX:145 also mentions a Zhou Chang who was a junior clerk about 10 BC.]

As Inspector of Yu province Zhou Chang became close to his Attendant Officer Chen Mao, and he took Chen Mao with him to Jiaozhi in the same capacity. Aided by Chen Mao's magical arts, he was the first Inspector to visit the island of Hainan.

Zhou Chang also executed the village headman Gong Shou for the murder of the Lady Su E. -XC 6: 13a-b.

Zhou Chang 周暢 [Bozhi 伯持 or Boshi 伯時]; Runan. A cousin of Zhou Jia, Zhou Chang was a generous man. He became Director of Retainers [see sub Zhou Pan] and then Intendant of Henan. In the summer of 108 there was serious drought, and prayers for rain received no response. Zhou Chang then arranged for the burial of the remains of more than a hundred thousand people who had come as refugees. As soon as he had done so, rain fell and there was an abundant harvest.

The Annals at HHS 5:210 record a drought in this year, providing the occasion for an imperial visit to the local prisons and some jail release, but Zhou Chang's arrangements for burial appear more like sound public health practice in hot conditions than specific placation of the elements. HHS 103/13:3278 LC, in the Treatise of the Five Powers, mentions a drought in 107, but none in 108.

Zhou Chang later became Minister of the Household. -HHS 81/71:2676, XC 5:13a, XHS 5:17a.

Zhou Chao 州超 [Jujian 巨堅]; Nanyang. A gentleman cadet and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Chao was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhou Chao 周朝 (d.187); Lingling. Presumably successors to Guan Gu, in 187 Zhou Chao and Guo Shi were leaders of bandits in Lingling, Guiyang and Changsha. They were destroyed by Sun Jian, Administrator of Changsha. -SGZ Wu 1:1095; deC 90: 103-104.

Zhou Cheng 周乘 [Ziju 子居]; Runan. FSTY 5:37-38 tells how about 150 Zhou Cheng and other gentlemen were called to office at the capital through the recommendation of the Administrator Li Chang. Then Li Chang died, and his nominees went to his funeral. Li Chang's widow urged them to resume their travels, but Zhou Cheng observed that if they did so they would be neglecting their duty to their late patron; if they did not go they would be failing their public responsibilities. He and Ai Bojian went to the capital, while others stayed to carry out the mourning ceremonies. See sub Li Chang 儼.

There are different accounts of Zhou Cheng's further career. According to FSTY 5, Zhou Cheng became a gentleman cadet and then a county magistrate. Ying Shao claims that he took his responsibilities lightly and his administration was mediocre. He criticises Zhou Cheng's failure to attend the full mourning ceremonies for his late patron Li Chang and states that he soon left office. At the beginning of the item, however, he refers to Zhou Cheng as Administrator of Taishan.

In contrast, XHS 5:18b says that Zhou Cheng was firm and strict, and XC 7:12b records that when he was appointed Inspector of Jiaozhi he reported two Administrators for wrong-doing; forty county magistrates promptly resigned their posts before they could themselves be dismissed.

Shishuo xinyu has two references to Zhou Cheng. The first, at 1:2; Mather 76:4, describes him as one of the admirers of the hermit Huang Xian. This may be a mistake for Zhou Ju, but Zhou Cheng appears to have been a man whose judgement of character was respected. The second entry, at 8:1; Mather 76:210, tells how his administration was admired by Chen Fan.

Given that he describes Zhou Cheng as an eventual Administrator, Ying Shao's negative comments appear strange.

Zhou Cheng 州稱 [Ziming 子明]; Nanyang. Described as a former brevet magistrate and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Cheng was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17: 17a.

Zhou Chong 周崇; Lujiang. Son of Zhou Jing, he became Chancellor of Ganling. -HHS 45/35:1539.

Zhou Dang 周黨 [Bokuang 伯況], Taiyuan. A man of wealthy background at the end of Former Han, Zhou Dang was orphaned when he was young and brought up by a kinsman. His guardian kept Zhou Dang's family property, but when Zhou Dang grew up he forced him to return it and then distributed it among his relatives; he also freed the family slaves.

Zhou Dang studied Chunqiu at Chang'an, and became celebrated for fighting a duel with a petty official who had abused him in public. As Wang Mang seized power Zhou Dang went into retirement, and when the Red Eyebrows came into Taiyuan they knew of his virtue and did not plunder his county.

After the restoration of Han Zhou Dang was appointed a Consultant by Emperor Guangwu, but resigned on grounds of ill health and went with his family into Hongnong. Summoned once more, he came with his hair tied with hay-stalks like a peasant and refused to appear before the emperor, explaining that he wished to be true to his personal ideals. Guangwu accepted this.

The Academician Fan Sheng presented a memorial criticising Zhou Dang for disrespect and ingratitude, but an imperial edict endorsed his moral stand and granted him a reward. As Vervoorn points out, Guangwu's edict of tolerance compared Zhou Dang with the legendary recluses Boyi 伯夷 and Shuqi 叔齊; and by doing so allocated himself the role of the sage King Wu of Zhou 周武王.

Zhou Dang died as a scholar in retirement, leaving two pian of writings. Local people admired him and established sacrifices in his honour, and he became a model for gentlemen who sought to avoid public life. Ying Shao found his conduct extravagant. -HHS 83/73: 2761-62*, FSTY 4:28; Vervoorn 90:145.

Zhou Du 周度, the Lady; Jianwei. The Lady was married to Xiang Deng, but he died when she was only nineteen. The magistrate Wu Hou sent a messenger to seek her hand, but she cut off her hair to show her commitment to widowhood; when further suitors appeared she cut off her nose.

The Lady's son also died early, leaving a young widow nee Zuo, and the two women maintained their loyalty to their late husbands. They were widely admired. -HYZ 10B:160.

Zhou Fang 周防 [Weigong 偉公]; Runan. Son of Zhou Yang, when Zhou Fang was sixteen he held appointment as a junior officer in the commandery. On one of Emperor Guangwu's tours of inspection to the east, probably in 54 or 56, he held an examination in the classics for all local officers. Zhou Fang was excellent, both at reciting the texts and at interpreting them. He was named Assistant of the commandery, but asked to be excused as he was not yet old enough to take the cap of manhood; his request was granted.

Zhou Fang then studied the Classic of History under He Yu. His biography in HHS says he worked in the Old Text tradition, but the Qing scholar Wang Guowei suggests it was the Ouyang school of the New Text; this is supported by the fact that Zhou Fang later became an Academician at a time when the Imperial University had no chair of Old Text scholarship.

Nominated Filial and Incorrupt on account of his great learning, Zhou Fang became a gentleman cadet. His Shujing zaji 書經雜記 "Notes on the Classic of History," in thirty-two pian and 400,000 characters, was one of the largest in this excessive genre; some time after 100 he was appointed an Academician by the Grand Commandant Zhang Yu on the basis of this erudite work.

Zhou Fang was later Administrator of Chenliu, but left office on account of some legal fault. He died at home aged seventy-eight. -HHS 79/69A:2559-60*, XC 5:9b; Tjan 49:147-148.

Zhou Fang 周魴 [Ziyu 子魚]; Wu. Fond of study when he was young, Zhou Fang was recommended Filial and Incorrupt and served as magistrate in a series of counties under the rule of Sun Quan of Wu. The powerful bully Peng Shi had been plundering the territory of Qiantang with a host of followers, but Zhou Fang swiftly executed him.

Zhou Fang then became a Commandant in Danyang, and in 227 he was appointed Administrator of Poyang, in the east of Later Han Yuzhang. He joined a successful attack on Peng Qi 彭綺, who had rebelled in that region in favour of Wei, and in the following year he led Cao Xiu into a trap with a false offer of submission.

Zhou Fang was in Poyang for thirty years, maintaining excellent administration. He died about 260. -SGZ Wu 15:1387-92*.

Zhou Feng 周鳳; Yuzhang. A local leader of bandits in the early 200s, Zhou Feng was destroyed by Sun Quan's officer Zhang Zhao. -SGZ Wu 7:1221.

Zhou Fu 州輔 (95-156); Nanyang. A eunuch, Zhou Fu became an Attendant at the Yellow Gates, then entered the household of the regent Dowager Deng. In the early 120s he returned to the imperial palace, and when Emperor Shun came to the throne he was again Attendant at the Yellow Gates. He later joined the household of the Empress Liang Na and was then promoted to be a Regular Attendant.

When Emperor Shun died in 144 Zhou Fu acted as Prefect of the Yellow Gates, but returned to the service of the Lady Liang, now regent Dowager, as a senior officer of her household. In 148 he and six other eunuchs were enfeoffed for their role in bringing Emperor Huan to the throne, and in 150 Zhou Fu became Grand Prolonger of Autumn, in charge of the residence of Emperor Huan's Empress Liang Nüying.

Following Zhou Fu's death on 11 January 157, at the end of the Chinese year 156, forty-nine relatives and admirers, including six of Administrator rank, set up a stele in his honour. -HHS 78/68:2519, LS 17:14a-18b.

Zhou Fu 周福 [Zhongjin 仲進]; Qinghe/Ganling. About 140 Zhou Fu became the tutor of Liu Zhi, the young Marquis of Liwu, future Emperor Huan. When Liu Zhi was brought to the throne in 146, Zhou Fu was appointed to the Imperial Secretariat.

Many people of his home country believed that Zhou Fu had gained advancement through his connection to the new ruler, not for any personal qualities. These critics praised Fang Zhi, also a man from Ganling, and a ditty was circulated, comprising two seven-character phrases, each with internal rhymes based upon the men's styles:

"A model for the empire, Fang Bowu;

"Grasping appointment through his tutoring,
Zhou Zhongjin."

[天下規矩,房伯武 tianxia guiju, Fang Bowu;

[因師獲印,周仲進 yin shi huo yin,

Zhou Zhongjin.]

The gentry of Ganling were divided into "northern" and "southern" parties, opponents and supporters of Zhou Fu and Fang Zhi.

This dispute is said to have been the beginning of the fashion for moral criticism of officials and scholars, first expressed in seven-character verses as above, and later with lists of heroes and groups of affiliates, leading ultimately to accusation of Faction. See, for example, sub Zhang Jian and sub Cheng Jin. -HHS 67/57:2185-86.

Zhou Gan 周乾; Guanghan. A noted scholar, Zhou Gan joined colleagues to compose a hymn at the death of the Lady Zhang Shuji, wife of Wang Zun. He served at some time as Inspector of Yang province, and in 192 he joined Tao Qian and other senior officials urging Zhu Jun to lead an attack against Chang'an to rescue the emperor. Nothing came of the proposal. -HHS 71/61:2314, HYGZ 10A:139.

Zhou Gong 周躬; Runan. When Zhou Gong was a magistrate in Zuopingyi, his Officer of Merit Wan Liang killed a man to avenge his father, then went to the county prison in bonds. Zhou Gong set him free. Wan Liang wanted to give him a present, but Zhou Gong refused to accept anything. -XC 1b-2a.

Zhou Gu 周谷; Wu. During the late 190s Zhou Gu was Officer of Merit to Sun Quan when he was a county magistrate. Unlike Lü Fan, who supervised him strictly, Zhou Gu would sometimes allow Sun Quan to take public money for his private purposes. Sun Quan was glad of this at the time, but when he came to power he gave office to the trustworthy Lü Fan and not to Zhou Gu. -SGZ Wu 11:1311.

Zhou Guang 周光; Beihai. A clairvoyant, Zhou Guang was Registrar to the Chancellor Zhou Ba. He advised him that the young man he believed to be his son was in fact a changeling. -FSTY 3f:105.

Zhou Guang 周廣 (d.125). Palace Attendants in 124, Zhou Guang and Xie Yun joined Geng Bao and the eunuchs Fan Feng and Li Run in their accusations against the Excellency Yang Zhen, who was dismissed and killed himself. In protest, the minister Lai Li and the Imperial Clerk Yu Xu refused further dealing with them.

The two men continued their association with Geng Bao, Fan Feng and Emperor An's former wet-nurse Wang Sheng, but in 125, after the death of the emperor and the enthronement of the Little Emperor Liu Yi, the Dowager and her brother Yan Xian turned against their former allies. Zhou Guang and his fellows were accused of factionalism and died in prison. -HHS 5:242, 10B:437, 15/5:590.

Zhou Gui 周規 [Gongyuan 公圓]; Kuaiji. A man of poor family, Zhou Gui became Officer of Merit to the Administrator Tang Feng, a cousin of the palace eunuch Tang Heng. Tang Feng governed with greed and cruelty, and Zhou Gui criticised and warned him. Tang Heng was angry and had Zhou Gui arrested, but he was soon afterwards impeached.

Appointed to clerical office under the Excellencies at the capital, Zhou Gui borrowed from the commandery for his expenses but was then unable to redeem the debt. Zhu Jun bailed him out with the property of his mother's silk business.

Zhou Gui then became a magistrate in Changsha. As the Administrator Cheng Xu came on tour during spring, orders were sent that the roads should be prepared for him. Zhou Gui considered that it was more important that the people should attend to the fields at this time, and he did not have the work carried out. As Cheng Xu sent an Investigator, Zhou Gui promptly abandoned his office.

Cheng Xu, embarrassed, sent his Officer of Merit with a letter of apology and a request that Zhou Gui take back his seal. Remarking that he had no respect for an Administrator who cared more for his horses' hooves than he did for his people, Zhou Gui continued on his way. -HHS 71/61:2308 & JJ at 2527 Hui Dong quoting Kuaiji dianlu, HQ 2:7b.

Zhou Hong 周洪. Zhou Hong was Inspector of Liang province about 180. Together with Liu Ban, Administrator of Hanyang, he reported on the fine vengeance taken by the Lady Zhao E against her father's murderer; they set up a stele in her honour. -SGZ 18:549.

Zhou Huan 周煥 [Wenming 文明] (d.192); Youfufeng. Zhou Huan became Minister Herald under the short-lived government of Wang Yun at Chang'an. He was killed as Li Jue and other former officers of Dong Zhuo stormed the city. -HHS 9:373, SGZ 6:182.

Zhou Hui 周暉; Lujiang. Son of Zhou Zhong, Zhou Hui was Prefect of Luoyang during the 180s. He left that office, and returned to his home country, where his family was extremely powerful, with many kinsmen, clients and retainers.

Learning of the troubles at the capital after the death of Emperor Ling in 189, Zhou Hui went back to Luoyang to collect his father, who was at that time a minister. Dong Zhuo, who had seized power at the capital, objected. He killed Zhou Hui and some other members of his family. -HHS 45/35:1539 but see also sub Zhou Yi.

Zhou Huo 周獲 miswritten for Gao Huo 高獲. -XC 6:4a.

Zhou Ji 周紀 married the Lady Cao Jing/Jingji, but died young. -HYZ 10B:160.

Zhou Jia 周嘉 [Huiwen 惠文]; Runan. Zhou Jia was descended from Zhou Yan 周燕, who was celebrated for having sacrificed himself for the faults of his Administrator [QHX:736]; all Zhou Yan's sons had held high office.

At the end of the reign of Wang Mang in the early 20s, Zhou Jia was Registrar of the commandery. When a horde of bandits attacked Runan, Zhou Jia went with the Administrator He Shang to attack them. Their local troops were defeated and scattered, and as Zhou Jia shielded He Shang with his body they were surrounded by rebels. Zhou Jia pleaded for his master's life, and offered his own in his stead, and the enemy were so impressed that they provided a cart to take both men away.

In the late 20s Zhou Jia was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and was appointed to the Imperial Secretariat. Emperor Guangwu asked him about the incident with He Shang, was impressed by his modesty, and wanted to have him marry one of his daughters. Zhou Jia, however, pleaded ill health and would not accept the match.

Zhou Jia became Administrator of Lingling in the south, and served there seven years until his death. The people praised his gentle regime, and later set up a temple to him. -HHS 81/71:2675-76*, XC 5:12a.

Zhou Jian 周建 (d.29); Pei. A leader of local gentry, Zhou Jian came with others to join Liu Yong in 24. He received military appointment, joined the campaigns to take over neighbouring territories, and later opposed the attack of Guangwu's general He Yan in 26, but with small success. After Liu Yong was driven from his capital, Suiyang in Liang, Zhou Jian remained loyal and gave him refuge at his base in Huling city in Shanyang, some hundred kilometres to the northeast.

In 27 Liu Yong managed to reoccupy Suiyang, but Guangwu's general Wu Han attacked the fortress of Guangle, held by Zhou Jian's colleague Su Mao, in the north of Liang close to Huling. Zhou Jian gathered new troops to relieve Su Mao, but was defeated and forced back into Huling.

Then Suiyang fell and Liu Yong was killed, but Su Mao and Zhou Jian withdrew to Chuihui in Pei, where they proclaimed his son Liu Yu as King of Liang. In the winter of 27-28 they sought to expand northwards, and they occupied Pengcheng, but they were twice defeated by Guangwu's general He Yan and returned to the south.

In the autumn of 28 Guangwu's generals Ma Wu and Wang Ba laid siege to Zhou Jian in Chuihui. Early in 29, as Su Mao came to the relief, he captured Ma Wu's baggage and Zhou Jian made a sortie which put Ma Wu's troops to flight. Wang Ba held his men back, however, until Zhou Jian and Su Mao were committed to pursuit, then attacked their rear and reversed the course of the battle.

On the following day Zhou Jian and Su Mao challenged Wang Ba to battle, but Wang Ba held his men in camp and Zhou Jian and Su Mao were compelled to retreat for lack of supplies. As they returned to Chuihui, Zhou Jian's nephew Zhou Song changed sides and closed the gates to them. The allies fled, and Zhou Jian was killed in a skirmish on the road. -HHS 12/2:494-95; Bn 59:135-143.

Zhou Jiang 周彊. About 110 Zhou Jiang was a county magistrate in Chenliu. A plague of locusts came, but spared the fields of the worthy gentleman Gao Shi. Zhou Jiang reported this to the commandery headquarters. -SGZ 24:683.

Zhou Jin 周近. About 206 Cao Cao sent Zhou Jin to the Xiongnu in Hedong with a ransom for the release of the Lady Cai Yan, who had been held in the harem of one of their chieftains. -HHSJJ 84/74:3086 Shen Qinhan quoting Taiping yulan.

Zhou Jing 周景 [Zhongxiang 仲饗/嚮] (d.168); Lujiang. Son of Zhou Xing, Zhou Jing was known for his scholarship and his ability when he was still young. Recommended Filial and Incorrupt, he was appointed to the offices of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, and later became Inspector of Yu province and Administrator of Henei. He showed respect for worthy gentlemen, while his recommendations for commissioned office and for local appointments were excellent, including Chen Fan, Li Ying, Xun Kun, Du Mi and Zhu Yu. Each year he invited the new nominees to dinners in his private apartments and gave them generous presents. He also gave positions to their kinsmen, explaining that he regarded his nominees as members of his family. In contrast, his predecessor Han Yin had made no such fuss of his nominees, and never promoted their kinsmen.

Zhou Jing later became Court Architect. When Liang Ji was destroyed in 159 he was proscribed from office as a former subordinate. His loyalty and honesty were remembered, however, and he was recalled soon afterwards to be Director of the Imperial Secretariat. He then served as Minister Coachman and Minister of the Guards, and in 163 he became Excellency of Works.

At this time kinsmen and clients of the palace eunuchs held many high positions, but as soon as Zhou Jing was appointed he joined the Grand Commandant Yang Bing in pressing for a purge of unworthy men: more than fifty were dismissed, including generals and senior local officials. They went on to attack the eunuchs Hou Lan and Ju Yuan, and both were dismissed; they were later restored to office, but all the court was impressed.

In 165 Zhou Jing left office on account of an ominous earthquake, but he was then appointed Minister of the Household, and when Chen Fan was dismissed at the time of the First Faction Incident of 166 Zhou Jing succeeded him as Grand Commandant. He died in office in 168, but was posthumously enfeoffed for his role in the accession of Emperor Ling. -HHS 45/35:1538*, SGZ Wu 9:1259, XC 2:11a, FSTY 5:38; deC 89:40-41.

Zhou Jing 周靖. In 168 Zhou Jing was Minister Steward. When the General-in-Chief Dou Wu, father of the regent Dowager, and his ally Chen Fan attempted to eliminate the eunuchs at court, their plan was discovered and Dou Wu took command of the Northern Army. The eunuchs had Zhou Jing named Acting General of Chariots and Cavalry, armed with the Staff of Authority, and sent him with the frontier general Zhang Huan to contend with Dou Wu for command of the troops. Zhang Huan's prestige was so great that Dou Wu's men changed sides. Dou Wu committed suicide, Chen Fan was killed, and the reform movement was destroyed.

Zhang Huan took Zhou Jing's place as Minister Steward soon afterwards, and the eunuch Cao Jie became General of Chariots and Cavalry in the following year. Zhou Jing is not mentioned again, but he was presumably well rewarded for his support of the victorious eunuchs. -HHS 69/59:2244, 65/55:2140.

Zhou Jing 周憬 [Junguang 君光]; Xiapi. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Zhou Jing became a member of the Imperial Secretariat and was then a county magistrate in Runan. From there he was appointed Administrator of Guiyang, where his achievements in government were widely admired. In 174 his junior colleagues and local gentlemen set up a stele in his honour. -LS 4:13a-17b.

Zhou Jing 周旌; Pei. In 188 Zhou Jing was involved in the plot of Wang Fen to kidnap and depose Emperor Ling. -SGZ 1:4.

Zhou Jing 周京. Zhou Jing was the father-in-law of Dan Meng the Administrator of Jiuzhen, and about 220 Dan Ming gave a banquet for him. Inspired by wine and music, the local officer Pan Xin danced before Zhou Jing and offered him a toast. When Zhou Jing did not respond, Pan Xin attempted to force him. Angry at the insult to his guest, Dan Meng struck Pan Xin and killed him on the spot. This incident triggered mutiny and rebellion. -SGZ Wu 8:1252.

Zhou Jiu 周糾 see Zhou Qiu 周璆.

Zhou [Jizhen] 周季貞. Son of an elder sister of Ban Gu, Zhou Jizhen was skilled at literature. After the death of his wife he composed Wen shen 問神, a resentful "Question to the Gods," asking why they had taken her life. His aunt the Lady Ban Zhao wrote a letter in reply, criticising his failure to accept the will of the fates. -HHSJJ 84/74:3076 Shen Qinhan citing Sanfu jue as quoted in the Guang bowu zhi 廣博物志 by Wang Zhiqing 王志慶 of Ming.

Zhou Ju 周舉 [Xuanguang 宣光] (d.149); Runan. Son of Zhou Fang, he inherited his father's taste for scholarship and was admired in the capital for his vast learning. The people of Luoyang praised him in a rhymed couplet as: "Zhou Xuanguang, who knows the classics from front to back" 五經從橫,周宣光.

In 125 Zhou Ju joined the offices of the Excellency over the Masses Li He. At that time the Yan clan of the Dowager of Emperor An had arranged the dismissal of the emperor's son Liu Bao as Heir, and had placed their own infant nominee upon the throne. The palace eunuchs led by Sun Cheng, however, destroyed the Yan and restored Liu Bao, Emperor Shun, to his inheritance.

It was generally agreed that by encouraging the dismissal of Liu Bao, the Dowager Yan had failed to show proper respect for her role as titular mother to the Heir: she should be removed to separate quarters and no longer received in audience. Zhou Ju argued to his patron Li He that the proposal was unduly harsh: it showed comparable lack of respect for the responsibility of son to mother; and it could affect the moral authority of the new ruler if the Lady Yan should die from such harsh treatment. Li He was persuaded to oppose the harsh policy, and early in 126 the Lady was received in audience. She did die a few weeks later, but the new regime was spared the blame.

Soon afterwards, despite the work of Sun Cheng and his comrades in setting him upon the throne, Emperor Shun turned against them on account of their quarrel with his favourite Zhang Fang. Initial protests were ignored, but then Zhou Ju persuaded his new chief Zhu Chang, who had succeeded Li He as Excellency, to intervene, and Sun Cheng and his fellows were restored to some favour. [FSTY 5:40; Nylan 83:478-482 says that Zhou Ju also drafted a memorial by which the eighty-year-old Zhu Chang defended himself against the claim by Yu Xu that he was too old and infirm for his position. Ying Shao claims that he was motivated by selfishness, seeking to keep his patron in power.]

Nominated Abundant Talent by Zhu Chang, Zhou Ju became a county magistrate in Chenliu. From there he sent a letter to the throne with proposals to deal with the problems of the time. He was admired by officers of the Imperial Secretariat for his plain speaking, and he was soon afterwards appointed Inspector of Bing province.

In the commandery of Taiyuan there was an old custom forbidding the use of fire during the depths of winter, because the local hero Jiezi Dui 介子推 had been killed when Duke Wen of Jin 晉文公 sought to burn him out of his hiding-place in the hills. As a result of this prohibition many old people and children died for lack of warm food. Zhou Ju paid respects at the shrine of Jiezi Dui, but claimed that he surely could not wish such hardship; the effect of the superstition was weakened.

Zhou Ju was transferred to Ji province, and in 134 he was recommended by the reformer Zuo Xiong and joined the Secretariat at Luoyang. Respected by his colleagues, he became a close associate of the reforming Deputy Director Huang Qiong.

About this time there was a drought in the region of the capital. The emperor personally prayed for rain and ordered similar ceremonies throughout the region, and he also sought advice from Zhou Ju, whom he admired for his learning. Zhou Ju argued that the misfortune was the result of the ruler's own luxury and extravagance, and his tolerance of corrupt officials. He urged him to reduce the expenses of his table and to send away those palace women who rendered no services, while he also criticised the ruler's failure to secure his inheritance: the twenty-two-year-old Emperor Shun had now been married to his Empress Liang for two years but had achieved no son. This last was a remarkably blunt comment, but the maintenance of the dynasty was a matter of general concern, and many were anxious lest government was again controlled by a consort regency. Indeed the Empress Liang bore no children, and though Emperor Shun sired one son by a concubine the succession later fell into disorder under the control of the Liang family.

Emperor Shun was so impressed that he called

Zhou Ju to audience, accompanied by Huang Qiong and the Director of the Secretariat Cheng Yishi. Zhou Ju again urged the dismissal of wrong-doers and sycophants, but when asked to be specific he could name only the Excellency Liu Qi, as a man who had held office for many years without useful effect. Liu Qi was dismissed, together with his colleague Kong Fu, while Zhou Ju succeeded Zuo Xiong as Director of Retainers. Little else was changed: the ruler continued to rely upon favourites, and he came increasingly under the influence of the Liang family.

In 136 Emperor Shun called a court conference to consider whether his short-lived predecessor Liu Yi, puppet nominee of the Yan clan, who had been granted only a royal burial in 126, should be raised to imperial status. It had been suggested that some unfavourable omens reflected the failure to pay proper respect to a former sovereign, but Zhou Ju argued that Liu Yi's early death was a sign of Heaven's disapproval of the manner in which he had been brought to the throne by the Yan family, and it was a rebuke to such self-interested action by consort relatives. In this, he offered a veiled warning to the Liang. The majority at court accepted his arguments and the matter went no further.

Sent out as Administrator of Shu commandery, Zhou Ju was later dismissed for some wrong-doing. The General-in-Chief Liang Shang, however, admired him, and may have regarded Zhou Ju as a potential counter to the excesses of his own family. He made him his chief assistant, and from his deathbed in 141 he commended Zhou Ju to Emperor Shun as an honest, loyal man worthy of high office. The encomium proved of limited immediate value, for Zhou Ju became only a Counsellor Remonstrant.

After another series of unfavourable omens, the emperor remembered Liang Shang's recommendation and called Zhou Ju to audience. He protested once more about the dangers of corruption and personal abuse of power, arguing that disorder at court was reflected by disturbance in the provinces; his proposals were shelved.

In the autumn of 142, however, in response to continuing criticism of the growing power of the empress's brother Liang Ji and their kinsmen, eight scholar-officials were named to a special commission of inquiry. Zhou Ju was promoted to Palace Attendant, and he and Du Qiao were the senior officers. They had a wide brief, with authority to report good officials of every rank and to impeach those who ruled badly, but though the commissioners were admired for their efforts, and some good men gained advancement, Liang Ji and his associates defended one another and blocked memorials of criticism. The emperor eventually ordered the investigations ended, though the reformist minister Li Gu later had the reports reviewed and some provincial officials were dismissed.

After a short period as Administrator of Henei, Zhou Ju was commended by Li Gu, who evidently had the ear of the emperor. He returned to the capital as Minister Herald, while Li Gu became Minister of Finance.

Following the death of Emperor Shun in 144 the regent government of the Dowager Liang Na and her brother Liang Ji proposed that the funerary tablet of Emperor Shun should be given higher position than that of his short-lived predecessor Liu Long the Young Emperor Shang 殤帝, an infant who had reigned for just a few months in 106. This would mean that in a future generation Liu Long's tablet would be removed first. The Minister of Ceremonies Ma Fang endorsed the idea, but in discussion at court Zhou Ju argued that precedence should be maintained in order of chronology and dynastic descent. This was agreed, though we may note that Zhou Ju's support of Young Emperor Shang is in contrast to his earlier rejection of the imperial claims of the infant Liu Yi in 136; the reign of Liu Long, however, had extended over two Chinese calendar years, and he was at least a legitimate heir.

Soon afterwards Zhou Ju was made Minister of the Household, but he left office on account of the death of his mother. He returned to court as a Household Counsellor, and died in 149.

Though he was widely mourned, and a testimonial edict was issued in his honour, Zhou Ju played no significant role under the Liang. He had done his best to remove personal influence and corruption, but Emperor Shun never committed himself to reform, and without such support no official could achieve lasting effect. -HHS 61/51:2023-30*, XC 3:11b, XHS 4:11b-12b.

Zhou [Kangzi] 周康子; Dingxiang. Sponsored by Guo Tai, he became well-known and respected. -HHS 68/58:2231.

Zhou Kui 周逵; Xiapi. About 200 Cao Cao gave appointments to Zhou Kui and Wang Mo. His officer Chen Qun foretold they would not do well, and they were later executed for criminal wrongdoing. -SGZ 22: 633.

1146 Zhou Long

Zhou Long 州龍 [Xuanxing 宣興]; Nanyang. Described as a private gentleman 處士 and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Long was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17: 17a. Zhou Lü 周慮. During the reign of Emperor Ming the commoner Zhou Lü acquired a reputation, but in 62 an edict ordered his arrest. The scholar Yin Min, who had befriended Zhou Lü, was implicated in the affair and was dismissed from his office as a magistrate. -HHS 79/69A:2559.

Zhou Ma 周生; Qiang. In the early 140s Zhou Ma and his kinsmen led a rebellion in the northwest. -HHS 101/11:3246; MBeck 90:128.

Zhou Mu 州穆 [Xuanxu 宣豫]; Nanyang. A former Assistant Officer of Jing province, and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Mu was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:17a.

Zhou Mu 周穆. Officer of Merit in his commandery, Zhou Mu dressed in rags. -XC 6:10a.

Zhou Pan 周磐 [Jianbo 堅伯 or Bojian 伯堅] (49-121); Runan. Zhou Pan was a kinsman of Zhou Xie 燮, and his grandfather Zhou Ye had been a commandery Administrator. As a young man, Zhou Pan went to Luoyang, where he studied the Classic of History, notably the Five Powers 五行 section of the Hong fan 鴻範 "Great Plan" Chapter, and Zuo zhuan. He was admired by his colleagues, but returned home to care for his mother and lived in poverty.

Some time during the 80s, as Zhou Pan was reciting the Poetry, he was impressed by the last lines of the Ru fen 汝墳 Ode, which are interpreted as a call to public duty [Legge CC IV:18]. He accordingly accepted nomination as Filial and Incorrupt, and about 90 he became an Internuncio. He was later a magistrate in Youfufeng, but as his cousin Zhou Chang became Director of Retainers, Zhou Pan was unable to serve within his provincial territory. He accordingly transferred to Rencheng, and later held office in Chen and Bohai. He returned home once more to care for his mother, and when she died he mourned her deeply and took up residence by her tomb. Though he was invited several times to office with the Excellencies, he always refused, but he did maintain a school with great numbers of students.

At the New Year of 121 Zhou Pan held an assembly of his students. After a day of discussions, he announced that he had been warned of his coming death in a dream. He made his preparations and two weeks later, without any sign of illness, he passed away. -HHS 39/29:1310-12*, XC 2:5a.

Zhou Pang 周滂 [Ziyan 次彦]; Runan. As Emperor Guangwu was in Changshan in 25, about the time that he took the imperial title, he was looking for men who were able to command troops. Zhou Pang's uncle recommended him, but Zhou Pang was a small man, and Guangwu doubted his capacity. Zhou Pang replied to those who made fun of him, however, and he was appointed Assistant Administrator of Yingchuan. Nothing more, however, is heard of him. -XC 7:14a.

Zhou Qi 周起 see Zhou Gui 周規. -ZF:15a.

Zhou Qian 周謙; Nanyang. A senior member of staff to the Administrator Lu Nu in 163, Zhou Qian was associated with the new temple at the source of the Huai in the mountains to the east of the commandery. -LS 2:12a-14b, Nagata 94:142.

Zhou Qiu 周璆 or Zhou Jiu 糾 [Mengyu 孟玉]; Le'an. There are varying and in some respects contradictory accounts of this man, and several different forms of his name and style.

FSTY 5:37 tells how Zhou Jiu, with the style Mengyu, held a clerical position in the offices of the General-in-Chief. His nephew was arrested for arranging that one of the family clients killed a man, and Zhou Jiu left his appointment and travelled back to seek pardon for him. Unlike Dan Wang q.v., however, when Zhou Jiu called upon the Administrator Sheng Liang he made no special show of regret, and Sheng Liang remarked to his attendants that he could hardly disregard the law for the sake of someone who was not even prepared to shed blood in support of his plea. So the young man died in prison.

Zhou Jiu's sister-in-law, mother of the young man, wept not for her son but for Zhou Jiu himself, and there were varying opinions about his conduct. Ying Shao says that many admired his restraint, but describes them as mistaken.

While FSTY 5 says that Zhou Jiu became a magistrate in Pingyuan, YSS:11a tells how Zhou Qiu, with style Mengyu, was a magistrate in Hejian, where he maintained good order simply by example, taking no action.

HHS 66/56:2159 says that Zhou Qiu, with the style Mengyu, was celebrated as a gentleman of ideal conduct and purity. He was invited by many local administrators, but refused to respond until Chen Fan came. When he called, the two men addressed one another on intimate terms, and Chen Fan had a special couch prepared for his guest. When Zhou Qiu departed he hung it on the wall, to be used by no other. This story is echoed by Yuan Shansong but, as Hui Dong observes in HHSJJ at 2362, where he cites a number of the anecdotes concerning Zhou Qiu/Jiu, the same compliment was paid by Chen Shou to the recluse Xu Zhi of Yuzhang about 156. One cannot be certain this is not dittography.

Finally we may note that a brief entry by Zhang Fan refers to the worthy Zhou Qiu of Le'an with the style Ziyang 子瑩 [ZF:10a], while his personal name also appears mistakenly as Yu 瑜.

Zhou Qun 周羣 [Zhongzhi 仲直]; Ba. Son of Zhou Shu, Zhou Qun was taught by his father and became an expert on portents. A keen astrologer, he built a tower at his family mansion and sent slaves in shifts to maintain constant watch on the heavens.

Having been an Assistant Officer for Education 師友從事 under Liu Zhang the warlord Governor of Yi province, Zhou Qun continued in an equivalent post under Liu Bei. He foretold the success of Liu Bei's expedition into Hanzhong in 219. -SGZ Shu 12:1020-21*.

Two of Zhou Qun's interpretations of comets are preserved in the Treatise of Astronomy of Hou Han shu, presumably through quotation by his fellow-countryman Qiao Zhou: HHS 102/12:3261; MBeck 90:118-121.

Zhou Rong 周榮 [Pingsun 平孫]; Lujiang. In 85 Zhou Rong was recommended by his commandery as Understanding the Classics and was appointed to the offices of the Excellency Yuan An, who admired his ability and frequently discussed affairs with him. Yuan An's arguments against the policies of Dou Xian towards the Xiongnu were based on Zhou Rong's advice, and though he was warned that he was in danger from the Dou faction, he defied the threat and confirmed his loyalty to the throne and to Yuan An.

When the Dou group was destroyed in 92 Zhou Rong became well known. He was transferred from a county magistracy in Yingchuan to be Director of the Imperial Secretariat.

Zhou Rong was later Administrator of Yingchuan, but committed some crime and was due to go to prison. Recalling his early loyalty, Emperor He arranged that he suffer only demotion to a magistracy in Henei, and a year later he was promoted Administrator of Shanyang.

Praised and remembered in each position he held, Zhou Rong retired on account of age and illness. When he died at home, the emperor awarded cash to his family and had his son Zhou Xing appointed as a gentleman cadet. -HHS 45/35:1536-37*.

Zhou Shang 周尚; Lujiang. In 194 Zhou Shang was named Administrator of Danyang by Yuan Shu, to challenge the authority of Liu Yao. Military operations on his behalf, however, were carried out by Wu Jing and then by Sun Ce.

In 195, after Sun Ce's initial successes, Yuan Shu replaced Zhou Shang with his own kinsman Yuan Yin. Zhou Shang returned to the north. -SGZ Wu 9:1259; deC 96:171-175.

Zhou Shen 周慎 (d.187); Wuwei or Hanyang [see sub Zhou Bi his son]. In 185 Zhou Shen was a general under Zhang Wen against the Liang province rebels about Chang'an. After Dong Zhuo's success at Meiyang in Youfufeng, Zhou Shen laid siege to Yuzhong in Jincheng, by present-day Lanzhou, but as the rebels threatened his communications he abandoned his baggage and withdrew. Dong Zhuo later criticised him for rejecting the strategy of Sun Jian, who had proposed keeping a large reserve to fix the enemy, then sending a mobile column against them. -HHS 8:352, 72/62:2320, SGZ Wu 1:1098-99; deC 90:99-100.

Zhou Sheng 周生 or Zhu Sheng 朱生 (d.145); Jiujiang. Both men of long-time bandit families, in 144 Zhou Sheng and Fan Rong joined in a major rising, affecting all the region of the lower Yangzi and the Huai. The Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk Feng Gun, head of the Censorate, was given authority to lead troops from Yang and Xu provinces against them, but his army was defeated, two senior officials were killed, and the disorders grew worse.

In the following year Teng Fu was appointed Commandant of Jiujiang, and joined Feng Gun and the General of the Household Zhao Xu to attack the rebels. They won a complete victory, and Zhou Sheng and Fan Rong were both killed. -HHS 6:275-77, 38/28:1279.

Zhou Sheng 周生; Yingchuan. About 210 Zhou Sheng joined a conspiracy to kill Sima Yi, but was dissuaded by Hu Zhao and swore a blood oath to proceed no further. -SGZ 11:362.

Zhou Sheng 周乘 see Zhou Cheng 周乘.

Zhou Shengfeng 周生豐 see Zhousheng Feng 周生豐.

Zhou Shenglie 周生烈 see Zhousheng Lie 周生烈.

Zhou Shu 周樹 [Changsheng 長生]; Kuaiji. An expert in law, and on pleading difficult cases, Zhou Shu was the author of Dongli [ji] 洞歷紀, presumably a study of historical precedents, which was admired by Wang Chong.

Zhou Shu became an Assistant Officer in Yang province. When the Inspector Meng Guan was accused of some wrongdoing, he had Zhou Shu prepare his defence and so escaped punishment. -XC 8:6b, Lun heng 37; Forke 07:469, Yao Zhenzong:2356.

Zhou Shu 周舒 [Shubu 叔布]; Ba. About 150 Zhou Shu was a disciple of Yang Hou, expert in Huang-Lao, and later became known for his interpretation of celestial and earthly phenomena. He refused invitations to office.

Zhou Shu identified the prophecy that the successor to Han would be "high road" 塗高 as referring to the state of Wei; his reasons are not recorded. -HYGZ 1:12, 10B:144, SGZ Shu 12:1020.

Zhou Shu 周術. Zhou Shu was Administrator of Yuzhang in the early 190s. He died of illness, probably in 194. -SGZ Shu 5:911.

Zhou Song 周誦; Pei. Nephew of Zhou Jian, in 29 Zhou Song was with his uncle at Chuihui under siege by Guangwu's commanders Ma Wu and Wang Ba. Zhou Jian led a sortie but was driven back, and as he and his men returned Zhou Song closed the gates against them and surrendered to Han. -HHS 12/2:495.

Zhou Tai 周泰 [Youping 幼平]; Jiujiang. A fellow-countryman of Jiang Qin, he went with him to join Sun Ce south of the Yangzi. Both men became senior majors.

Sun Quan asked Zhou Tai to enter his personal service, and on one occasion that the main army was away Zhou Tai saved Sun Quan from a surprise attack, at the cost of several wounds. In gratitude, Sun Ce appointed him a county magistrate in Danyang on the Yangzi. In 199 Zhou Tai accompanied the expedition which conquered Lujiang and Yuzhang and attacked Jiangxia. He then returned to his position, and in 203 he transferred to a county in Yuzhang.

In 208 Zhou Tai joined the attack which destroyed Huang Zu, and later that year he was with the army against Cao Cao at the Red Cliffs and against Cao Ren in Nan commandery. He then joined the defence of the lower Yangzi against Cao Cao, and in 216 he was named a general and given command at the fortress of Ruxu. His subordinates, Zhu Ran, Xu Sheng and others, lacked respect for him, but Sun Quan called them to a banquet and had Zhou Tai display his scars and tell how he had come by each of them. He then toasted him with wine and the following day held a grand parade and granted Zhou Tai his personal umbrella. The others now showed him respect.

After the destruction of Guan Yu in 219, Zhou Tai was named Administrator of Hanzhong, in fact still controlled by Liu Bei, and was enfeoffed as a marquis. He died about 223. -SGZ Wu 10:1287-88*.

Zhou Tang 州湯 [Bode 伯德]; Nanyang. A former gentleman cadet and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Tang was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhou Teng 周騰 [Shuda 叔達]; Yuzhang. Probably about 160, as Emperor Huan was proposing to leave his palace for a suburban sacrifice, the Imperial Clerk Zhou Teng warned him that the stars were unfavourable and that if he proceeded his son would die. This incident is cited by the Yuzhang lieshi zhuan 豫章列士傳, preserved in Taiping yulan 6, and is cited by Hou Kang in HHSJJ 8:337 jiaobu as evidence that Emperor Huan had a son. The emperor is elsewhere recorded as having left only daughters, but he may have had a boy who died young.

Zhou Tiao 周條. About 229 Zhou Tiao held territorial appointment in Jing province for Sun Quan. -SGZ Wu 7:1239.

Zhou Wei 周偉; Pei. Father of Zhou Yu 郁, who was a man of bad conduct, he told his daughter-in-law the Lady Zhao A that it was her duty to reform her husband. As Zhou Yu refused to change, the Lady Zhao killed herself. -HHS 84/74:2784.

Zhou Wei 周鮪. Administrator of Jiuquan, in 100 he was appointed Protector of the Qiang. The war-leader Mitang attacked Jincheng from across the frontier. Two years earlier he had been able to obtain the support of the local non-Chinese, but on this occasion Zhou Wei gathered them to support the Han as auxiliaries, and he joined the Administrator Hou Ba in pursuit of Mitang. As Zhou Wei kept his men on the defensive in a small fortress, Hou Ba attacked and heavily defeated the enemy.

The Qiang surrendered and large numbers were resettled inside China, but in the following year Zhou Wei was dismissed for cowardice. In fact, his lack of enterprise may have been because he was uncertain of the loyalty of his troops, while holding them in reserve would have created a threat which fixed and made them vulnerable to Hou Ba's assault [see, for example, sub Zhou Shen above]. -HHS 87/77:2884-85.

Zhou Wenguang 周文光; Pingyuan. In 110 the local bandits Zhou Wenguang and Liu Wenhe, who styled themselves "messengers" 使者, joined forces with the pirate Zhang Bolu. They captured one county city, attacked others, and gained a great following.

Later that year the Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk Wang Zong, head of the Censorate, came to take control of the provincial and commandery troops, and after several engagements the bandits were defeated and driven to flight. There was a confused attempt to surrender to an amnesty, and in 111 there was a final raid on Donglai, at the tip of the Shandong peninsula, but the remnant force was defeated. Driven across the sea to Liaodong, they were destroyed there by the local leader Li Jiu. -HHS 5:213-14, 38/28:1277.

Zhou Xi 周熙; Runan. A cousin once removed of Zhou Ba, Zhou Xi was adopted to maintain his lineage. He became a magistrate in Shanyang. -FSTY 3f:105.

Zhou Xi 州熹 [Boping 伯平]; Nanyang. A former Assistant Officer of Jing province, and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Xi was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:17a.

Zhou Xie 周勰 [Jusheng 巨勝] (110-159); Runan. Son of Zhou Ju, Zhou Xie was a student of the Mysteries [玄學 Xuan xue], and though he became a gentleman cadet in ren right of his father he left that office and returned home. Shao Kui, who had been his father's former officer was later appointed as Administrator of the commandery. Zhou Ju had disapproved of Shao Kui, and he was ashamed to be lower in rank than a man whom he did not respect. He therefore withdrew entirely from public life, and though he was nominated for office he claimed to be ill.

At this time Liang Ji dominated the government of Emperor Huan, and those whom he called to join his staff were afraid not to accept. Zhou Xie, however, rejected three invitations and some special nominations. Claiming ill health, he sought to emulate the sage Laozi in rustic seclusion, but then after ten years, in 159 he suddenly opened his gates and held receptions and banquets; in the autumn, Liang Ji was destroyed by Emperor Huan.

Zhou Xie died at the end of that year, and Cai Yong composed an inscription in his honour. -HHS 61/51:2031*, Cai 2:5.

Zhou Xie 周燮 [Yanzu 彦祖]; Runan. When Zhou Xie was born he had a twisted neck and a low forehead, and was so ugly that he frightened people. His mother wanted to abandon him, but his father believed his appearance could be a good omen for the family, so he was allowed to live.

A precocious child, by the time he was ten Zhou Xie knew the Classic of Poetry and the Analects, and he later specialised in Ritual and the Book of Changes. Dealing only with the texts of the sages, he lived alone in the mountains and supported himself by farming and fishing, while his moral conduct influenced his household and his neighbours. He was nominated on several occasions and received many invitations to office, but always pleaded ill-health.

In 123, at the behest of Chen Zhong, Zhou Xie and other scholars in retirement received a special invitation from Emperor An. Pressed courteously by the local officers, he reluctantly embarked on the journey, but when he saw the number of people who came to welcome him at the capital of Yingchuan he again claimed to be ill and returned home.

Zhou Xie died aged over seventy. -HHS 53/43:1741-43*, XC 3:1b; Vervoorn 90:157.

Zhou Xin 州歆 [Xuansui 宣睢]; Nanyang. A former county magistrate and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Xin was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhou Xin 周昕 [Daming 大明]; Kuaiji. A man of local family, elder brother of Zhou Ang and Zhou Yu 購, during the 160s Zhou Xin studied under Chen Fan at Luoyang. Well-read and skilled in divination, he graded First Class from the offices of the Excellencies.

When the alliance in the east was raised against Dong Zhuo in 189, Zhou Xin was Administrator of Danyang. He sent thousands of men from his commandery to take service with Cao Cao.

In 194 Yuan Shu sent Wu Jing across the Yangzi to attack Zhou Xin, and proclaimed that all who supported him would be killed without mercy. Rather than expose his followers to such harm, Zhou Xin abandoned his position and returned home to Kuaiji.

In 196 Zhou Xin led troops against Sun Ce for the 1150 Zhou Xing

Administrator Wang Lang. He was defeated and killed. -SGZ Wu 6:1205-06.

The careers of the three brothers Zhou are frequently confused, but see SGZ Wu 1:1100 PC quoting Wu lu and Kuaiji dianlu.

Zhou Xing 周興; Lujiang. Son of Zhou Rong, Zhou Xing became well known as a young man, and after his father's death he was appointed a gentleman cadet. In 120 Chen Zhong, Director of the Imperial Secretariat, presented a long memorial in praise of him, and Zhou Xing was appointed to that office.

In 123 the Internuncio Dan Song urged that the calendar be altered to fit with the teachings of the apocrypha, but Zhou Xing and his colleague Zhang Heng argued that the changes would add errors, and that the apocryphal writings were unworthy of serious attention. In wide debate, Zhou Xing and Zhang Heng were supported by many discussants, and the calendar was not changed.

Zhou Xing died soon after this. -HHS 45/35:1537, 92/2:3034-35; MBeck 90:59.

Zhou Xu 周栩. A clerical officer under Liu Cang when he was General of Agile Cavalry at Luoyang, Zhou Xu admired his courteous treatment of his men. When Liu Cang went to his state as King of Dongping in 62, Zhou Xu followed him, and he served Liu Cang, his son Zhong and his grandson Chang as an officer in their royal households.

As Emperor Zhang came on tour to Dongping in 86, Zhou Xu and his colleague Ding Mu were presented to him. In recognition of their loyalty, both men were appointed Consultants, and Zhou Xu was later a magistrate in Runan. -HHS 42/32:1442.

[Given their dates, this man cannot be the Zhou Xu described below.]

Zhou Xu 周栩. A senior and distinguished Confucianist, in 142 Zhou Xu was given acting appointment as a Household Counsellor and joined the special commission of eight sent out to observe the conduct of the empire. Little came of the project, and government remained in the hands of the Liang kinsmen of the empress. -HHS 6:272, 61/51:2029. [Given the dates, this cannot be the Zhou Xu described above.]

Zhou Xuan 周宣 [Konghe 孔和]; Le'an. A noted interpreter of dreams, Zhou Xuan was a local officer in the commandery about 205. The Administrator Yang Pei had a dream which foretold the defeat of bandits, and Zhou Xuan interpreted it for him.

When Liu Zhen of Dongping dreamt of a snake which grew feet, Zhou Xuan advised him that this was a dream of national concern, not just related to his family. A snake with feet was so unnatural that it foreshadowed female rebels. Soon afterwards a rebellion led by the woman Zheng Jiang [or by women of the Zheng and Jiang families] ravaged the region.

Zhou Xuan interpreted dreams for Cao Pi and many others, and he was accurate eight or nine times out of ten. He died about 240. -SGZ 29:810-11; DeWoskin 86:138-140.

Zhou Xun 周循; Jianwei. A local scholar, Zhou Xun taught the diviner Yang Tong of Guanghan. -HHS 30/20A:1047.

Zhou Xun 周恂; Runan. A grandson of Zhou Xie, Zhou Xun also became well known. -HHS 61/51:2031.

Zhou Yang 周揚; Runan. Zhou Yang was orphaned and poor when he was young, but in the time of Wang Mang and at the beginning of Later Han he became known for his generosity to clients and to passing travellers. -HHS 79/69A:2559.

Zhou Ye 周業 of Runan was Administrator of Tianshui early in Later Han. -HHS 39/29:1310.

Zhou Yi 周異; Lujiang. A kinsman of the Grand Commandant Zhou Zhong and member of a great family in Lujiang, Zhou Yi became Prefect of Luoyang. He was the father of Zhou Yu the celebrated general of Wu. -SGZ Wu 9:1259.

HHS 45/35:1539 says that Zhou Yi's cousin Zhou Hui was Prefect of Luoyang. One must wonder if the ascription of that office also to Zhou Yi is not a case of dittography.

Zhou Yong 周永. A county magistrate in Pei during the 150s, Zhou Yong was a client of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji, who protected him when he should have been punished for some wrong-doing.

Zhou Yong later joined the Imperial Secretariat, but later recognised that the power of his former patron was under threat. In 159 he supported Emperor Huan in the coup which destroyed Liang Ji, and he was among those who were rewarded with enfeoffment. In 165 the official Huang Qiong criticised such lack of personal loyalty.

After the disgrace of the emperor's former favourites Zuo Guan and Ju Yuan in 165, Zhou Yong and others who had been rewarded in 159 were deprived of their fiefs. -HHS 57/47:1858, 61/51:2038.

Zhou Yong 州永 [Mengyuan 孟元]; Nanyang. A member of staff of the Minister of the Household and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Yong was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhou You 周游 (d.30). An officer of Wei Ao, in 30 Zhou You was sent as an envoy to Emperor Guangwu of Han. When he came to the camp of the imperial general Feng Yi, however, he was killed by one of his men on account of a family feud. About the same time Guangwu's envoy Yao Qi was robbed of the gifts he was taking to Wei Ao, and Guangwu remarked on the unfortunate chances which had interrupted their contact and negotiations. -HHS 13/3:526.

Zhou Yu 周郁; Pei. A man of bad conduct, Zhou Yu married the Lady Zhao A, daughter of the celebrated moralist Zhao Xiao. Finding that she was unable to reform him, she killed herself. -HHS 84/74:2784.

Zhou Yu 周紆 [Wentong 文通] (d.97); Xiapi. A harsh man, with small sense of generosity, Zhou Yu admired the political techniques of Han Feizi. He was a clerk in the Ministry of Justice, and in the time of Emperor Ming he became a magistrate in Changshan, where he terrified the people by killing several dozen men who had presented false accusations. Transferred to a county in Dong commandery, he arrested and tortured evil-doers, none of whom were released from their imprisonment.

Having thus established a reputation for authority, Zhou Yu became Chancellor of Qi. As he continued to emphasise punitive aspects of the law, his rule became a model for the whole province. Later, however, he was found to have killed an innocent man, and he was sent back to his former office in Dong commandery.

About 76 Zhou Yu became Administrator of Bohai. Whenever an amnesty was issued by the court, he kept the information back until all his subordinate county offices had carried out their executions; only then would he announce the edict. Eventually he was reported for this, brought to the Ministry of Justice, and dismissed from office.

Because of his strict honesty, Zhou Yu was very poor, and while he was out of office he earned his living as a builder. Emperor Zhang heard of him and had him reappointed as a cadet gentleman. He then became chancellor of a county marquisate in Runan, where he used detective work and trickery to trap one of his officials who had sought to deceive him; no-one dared try it again.

Brought to the capital as Prefect of Luoyang, Zhou Yu encouraged his officers to enforce the law against the great families of imperial relatives by marriage such as the Ma and the Dou. When the empress's brother Dou Du was arrested by Zhou Yu's officer Huo Yan, the Intendant of Henan and the Director of Retainers, Zhou Yu's superiors, were questioned by the Imperial Secretariat, while guards were sent to take Zhou Yu to the prison of the Ministry of Justice. He was released under an amnesty a few days later.

The emperor himself approved his policy, though there were increasing protests from the most senior officials. Zhou Yu was dismissed in 83, but was soon afterwards appointed Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate.

When Emperor He came to the throne in 88 under the regency of the Dowager Dou, the Grand Tutor Deng Biao noted Zhou Yu's record of cruelty and occasional false convictions, and memorialised that he should not hold authority over senior officials at the capital. Deng Biao was no doubt influenced by his debt to the Dou clan for his appointment as Tutor and by Zhou Yu's known hostility to imperial relatives by marriage.

Zhou Yu was therefore sent back to his home country, and as the Dou gained power under the regency he was sure they would turn on him. He avoided all public activity, and Dou Du and his brothers could find no cause to attack a man of such high reputation.

In 93, after Emperor He had overthrown the Dou, Zhou Yu was once more appointed head of the Censorate. He argued fiercely that Dou Xiang, remnant of the family, should not be allowed to remain at court, and Dou Xiang was sent away to his fief.

Zhou Yu was then transferred to be Director of Retainers, but when there was a drought in the following summer the emperor came on a visit of review and jail delivery. Two convicts who had been flogged were found to have their wounds crawling with worms, and Zhou Yu was demoted to a supernumerary post.

Next year, 95, Zhou Yu became Court Architect, a position which entailed control of corvée and convict labourers; he died in that office two years later. Courageous and intelligent but also brutal and sadistic, Zhou Yu was a model of the Stern Official 酷吏. -HHS 77/67:2493-96*.

Zhou Yu 周囁 [Renming 仁明]; Kuaiji. The younger brother of Zhou Xin and Zhou Ang, in 189 Zhou Yu raised two thousand men to serve with Cao Cao in the alliance against Dong Zhuo. He then transferred to Yuan Shao, who named him Inspector of Yu. In 191 Zhou Yu attacked Yuan Shu's officer Sun Jian, but was defeated and driven away. [This venture is also ascribed, probably mistakenly, to Zhou Ang and/or to Zhou Xin.]

In 192 Zhou Yu went to aid his brother Ang against Yuan Shu in Jiujiang, but was again defeated. He returned to Kuaiji, where he was killed by Xu Gong. -SGZ Wu 1:1100; deC 90:130-131.

The careers of the three brothers Zhou are frequently confused, but see SGZ Wu 1:1100, quoting Wu lu and Kuaiji dianlu.

Zhou Yu 周瑜 [Gongjin 公瑾] (175-210); Lujiang. Son of Zhou Yi, when Zhou Yu was in his teens he became a friend of Sun Ce, who had come with his mother and younger brothers to live in Lujiang while his father Sun Jian was fighting in the service of Yuan Shu. Though the Sun were not of distinguished background, Zhou Yu and his family treated them well: they gave them a fine house to live in and Zhou Yu paid his respects to Sun Ce's mother, the Lady Wu.

In 194 Zhou Yu's uncle Zhou Shang was named Administrator of Danyang by Yuan Shu, and Zhou Yu went with him. As Sun Ce established himself south of the Yangzi in the following year, Zhou Yu went to join him. Their friendship was re-affirmed and Zhou Yu joined his campaigns. In early 196, as Sun Ce prepared to take over Wu and Kuaiji, he left Zhou Yu to hold Danyang, but when Yuan Shu recalled Zhou Shang to his headquarters north of the Yangzi Zhou Yu went with him.

Yuan Shu wanted to give Zhou Yu appointment in his army, but Zhou Yu asked instead to be made a magistrate in Lujiang. In 198, after Yuan Shu took the imperial title, he left his post and went back south of the Yangzi to join Sun Ce, who welcomed him with great friendship and favour. He first set Zhou Yu to guard the line of the Yangzi against Yuan Shu, but after Yuan Shu died in the following year he recalled him to headquarters as Protector of the Army of the Centre 中護軍: apparently chief of staff for military affairs, with authority parallel to that of Zhang Zhao over civil matters.

Zhou Yu and Sun Ce were both known as Young Gentlemen 郎, and in 199, after the capture of Lujiang, they each took a woman of the Qiao family, celebrated beauties, to wife. As Sun Ce prepared to attack Huang Zu on the middle Yangzi he named Zhou Yu Administrator of Jiangxia, and after the conquest of Yuzhang in 200, Zhou Yu was stationed in that commandery.

Then Sun Ce died and was succeeded by Sun Quan. It is possible that Zhou Yu could have succeeded to the leadership, but he made no such move, and instead returned to headquarters where he showed public support for Sun Quan and resumed his position as Protector of the Army. He argued against sending hostages to Cao Cao, and the Lady Wu commended him to Sun Quan as a surrogate for his elder brother.

In 206 Zhou Yu led the army west against Huang Zu, first taking the camps of Mo and Bao in eastern Jiangxia, then defeating Huang Zu's army on the Yangzi in 207. Early in 208 he led the van of the final attack which destroyed Huang Zu's headquarters and killed him.

In the autumn of that year, Liu Biao the warlord Governor of Jing province died and Cao Cao took over his territory. Driving Liu Bei before him, he advanced to the Yangzi and demanded Sun Quan's submission. Several advisers urged acceptance, but Lu Su persuaded Sun Quan to call in Zhou Yu, and Zhou Yu undertook to deal with the invaders. Sun Quan agreed, and gave Zhou Yu joint command with Cheng Pu. Allied to Liu Bei, they faced Cao Cao at the Red Cliffs on the Yangzi south of present-day Wuhan, and when Huang Gai led an attack of fire-ships Cao Cao was defeated and driven back.

While Liu Bei took over the south of Jing province, Zhou Yu attacked the naval base of Jiangling in Nan commandery. The defenders under Cao Ren held out for several months, and Zhou Yu himself was wounded. He recovered, and in 209 Cao Ren withdrew, but the momentum of the campaign had been lost. Zhou Yu was named a lieutenant-general and Administrator of Nan commandery, with revenue from four counties, but the Sun group held only a narrow strip along the Yangzi, flanked by Liu Bei to the south and Cao Cao to the north.

Zhou Yu now proposed to advance west through the Gorges against Liu Zhang in Yi province. Liu Bei later opposed such a move, and it is uncertain how he would have reacted at this time, but in 210, even as Zhou Yu was making his preparations, he was taken ill and died at the age of thirty-six sui.

An elegant, generous man, with an excellent ear for music, Zhou Yu had been Sun Quan's most celebrated and valuable commander, and his death caused an immediate weakness, both apparent and real, in Sun Quan's position. His successor Lu Su lacked Zhou Yu's prestige and authority, and he soon afterwards arranged for Nan commandery, including Jiangling, to be granted or "loaned" to Liu Bei, damaging any hopes of major expansion on the middle Yangzi.

Zhou Yu's daughter became consort 配 to Sun Quan's son and Heir Sun Deng, his elder son Xun 循 married a princess and his younger son Yin 胤 also married into the Sun clan. -SGZ Wu 9:1259-65*; deC 90:226-229, 290-300.

Zhou Yu 周瑜, wife of: see the Lady Qiao 橋 II.

Zhou Yu 周瑜 miswritten for Zhou Qiu 周璆.

Zhou Yuanyu 周紀. Son of Zhou Ji and the Lady Cao Jing/Jingji, his father died young but Zhou Yuanyu was brought up by his devoted mother and became a noted scholar. -HYGZ 10B:160.

Zhou Ze 周澤 [Zhidu 穉都]; Beihai. As a young man Zhou Ze studied the Gongyang commentary to Chunqiu according to the New Text Zhuang/Yan interpretation, then became a private teacher with hundreds of students. In 40 he joined the offices of the Grand Marshal, and a few months later he was appointed as an Academician.

In 56 Zhou Ze became a county magistrate in Hongnong, where he was admired by his subordinates for his personal honesty and his compassion for those in need. In 62, through recommendation from Fan Shu, he became a Gentleman of the Household, and in 67 he was made Minister of Ceremonies. Noted for his direct speech, Zhou Ze was involved in a number of debates at court.

When Liao Xin the Administrator of Beidi was found guilty of extortion and sent to prison about 68, his goods were confiscated and Emperor Ming distributed his property among various officials. Zhou Ze and his colleagues Sun Kan and Chang Chong were especially favoured, and people at the capital were impressed [compare, however, the attitude of Zhongli Yi].

Zhou Ze was named Acting Excellency over the Masses in 69, but it was then found that his conduct was too informal and he lacked the presence to hold the highest rank; he reverted to his former ministry a few months later. In that office, he conscientiously attended the Imperial Ancestral Temple, and maintained a regular fast. His wife was concerned at his age and the likely effect upon his health, but when she came to ask after him Zhou Ze was furious and sent her to prison. People sang a song about him: "No sex all the year, except one day; and then he gets drunk and acts silly."

In 75 Zhou Ze was given supernumerary office as Commandant of Attendant Cavalry, and at the annual ceremony of Serving the Aged at the Hall of the Circular Moat, he was several times honoured as the Five-fold Experienced or Thrice Venerable, central figures for the ritual offering by the sovereign. He left office about 80 and died at home. -HHS 79/69B:2578*; Bn 76:56.

Zhou Zhang 周章 [Zishu 次叔 or Shengshu 升叔] (d.107/108); Nanyang. In 92 Zhou Zhang was Officer of Merit in his commandery when Dou Xian, brother of the Dowager, was dismissed as General-in-Chief and sent to his fief. The Administrator, evidently not realising that Dou Xian had lost his power to Emperor He, was going to pay his respects, but Zhou Zhang argued fiercely against such a gesture, and he cut the traces of the carriage to prevent him going. Soon afterwards, when the emperor sent orders for Dou Xian and his brothers to kill themselves, all those associated with them were punished but, thanks to Zhou Zhang, his Administrator was not involved. Impressed and grateful, he nominated Zhou Zhang as Filial and Incorrupt.

After a number of posts Zhou Zhang became a General of the Household, and in 106 he was made Minister of the Household. In the following year he was transferred to be Minister of Ceremonies and then promoted Excellency of Works.

After Emperor He died in the winter of 105/106, his Dowager Deng bypassed the elder of his two sons, Liu Sheng, and had the younger, Liu Long, take the succession. That Young Emperor died in the autumn of 106, and the Dowager, still avoiding Liu Sheng, set Liu You, Emperor An, upon the throne. Liu Sheng had been disqualified on the grounds that he was ill, but many officials believed he had largely recovered, and that the Dowager was seeking a young ruler so that she and her family might hold power through a regency. Zhou Zhang and others, moreover, resented the influence which the eunuchs Zheng Zhong and Cai Lun held in government.

1154 Zhou Zhao

Zhou Zhang therefore attempted to organise a coup, to remove the Dowager and her family, depose Liu You, and set Liu Sheng upon the throne. As the affair was found out in the winter of 107/108, Zhou Zhang killed himself. His family was left in abject poverty. -HHS 33/23:1157-58*.

Zhou Zhao 周朝 see Zhao Chao 周朝.

Zhou Zhi 周直; Runan. During the 180s Zhou Zhi was a leader of fighting men. Li Tong, head of another group, invited him to a banquet and killed him there. Li Tong and his associate Chen Gong then killed Zhou Zhi's subordinate commanders and divided his followers among themselves. -SGZ 18:534-35.

Zhou Zhong 州忠 [Shuyu 叔玉]; Nanyang. Prefect of the Majors for Official Carriages and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Zhong was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhou Zhong 周忠 [Jiamou 嘉謀]; Lujiang. Son of Zhou Jing, Zhou Zhong held a number of senior appointments, and became Minister of Finance under Emperor Ling. After Dong Zhou took over the government in 189, Zhou Zhong was compelled to accompany the court to Chang'an, where he became a Household Counsellor. In 192 he was named Grand Commandant with control of the Imperial Secretariat, though under the regime of Li Jue and his fellows the appointment was meaningless, and in the following year he was dismissed on account of unfavourable portents. Zhou Zhong joined Jia Xu in urging that the new regime should call the potential enemy Zhu Jun back into the imperial service at Chang'an; they may have hoped that he might serve as an ally against the excesses of the warlords.

Zhou Zhong was then Minister of the Guards, and as Emperor Xian made his escape in 195 he led troops to protect him. After some successes Zhou Zhong was defeated and captured by Li Jue. He was later released, but is not heard of again. -HHS 45/35:1539.

Zhou Zong 周宗; Tianshui. A local leader, in 23 Zhou Zong joined Wei Cui in rebellion against Wang Mang, seizing the commandery capital and killing the administrator. The insurgents chose Wei Cui's nephew Wei Ao as their leader, and in the summer of that year Wei Ao gathered followers to swear allegiance to the house of Han. Zhou Zong received title as a general.

Zhou Zong accompanied Wei Ao to Chang'an, and when the Gengshi Emperor tried to arrest Wei Ao after the failed plot against him, Zhou Zong was among those who prepared to defend his mansion. He escaped with Wei Ao to Tianshui, and was named a chief general.

In the winter of 32 Wei Ao was besieged in Xi city in the south of Longxi. Zhou Zong and Xing Xun came to the rescue with troops from Gongsun Shu brought by Wang Yuan. They broke the siege, returned Wei Ao to his capital at Ji county, and led a brief revival of his fortunes.

When Wei Ao died at the beginning of 33, Zhou Zong and Wang Yuan proclaimed his son Wei Chun as king in his place, but in the following year, 34, the Han armies came against them in force. They surrendered to the commander Lai Xi, and Zhou Zong was sent to the east of Luoyang with other leaders of the Wei group. -HHS 13/3:513-31.

Zhou Zong 州宗 [Boxing 伯興]; Nanyang. A former magistrate and presumably a kinsman, in 156 Zhou Zong was one of the sponsors of a memorial stele for the eunuch Zhou Fu. -LS 17:16b.

Zhousheng Feng 周生豐 [Weifang 偉防]; Taiyuan. Zhousheng Feng was a member of the Secretariat at the court of Emperor Guangwu in 30, when Feng Yan presented a memorial on lessons to be drawn from a recent eclipse. The clerical officer Linghu Lue, who also came from Taiyuan and who held a grudge against Feng Yan, warned Zhousheng Feng and the Prefect Wang Hu that Feng Yan would slander them to the emperor. So Zhousheng Feng and Wang Hu prevented the audience from taking place.

In the following year Zhousheng Feng was made Administrator of Yuzhang, where he became known for his honesty, frugality and kindness. -HHS 28/18A:977-78.

Zhousheng Lie 周生烈; Dunhuang. Recommended as a scholar by Zhang Ji about 220, Zhousheng Lie attended the court of Cao Pi and compiled commentaries to the classics and histories. -SGZ 15:477, 13:420.

Zhu 朱, the Lady; Langye? Second wife of Wang Rong, she was the mother of Wang Lan. She intensely disliked her stepson Wang Xiang, abused and beat him and attempted to kill him, but was restrained by her own son Wang Lan. For his part, Wang Xiang behaved towards the Lady with exemplary filial piety. -JS 33:987; Fang 65:242.

Zhu 朱, the Lady. A concubine of Cao Pi, she bore him a son, Cao Jian 鑒. -SGZ 20:590.

Zhu 朱 [personal name unknown]. First husband of Xing, later the Lady He Xing, he was father of He/Zhu Miao. -SGZ 6:173.

Zhu Ao 祝奥. In 202 Zhu Ao was an adviser to Guo Yuan, general of the Yuan family operating in Hedong. Deceived by Jia Kui, he persuaded Guo Yuan to remain stationary for a week, and during that time Cao Cao's officers were able to establish their defence. -SGZ 15:480.

Zhu Bing 朱並; Shanyang. Though Zhu Bing was a fellow-countryman of Zhang Jian, he was deceitful and corrupt and Zhang Jian refused to deal with him. Having acquired a reputation for destroying the property of the powerful eunuch Hou Lan in 165, Zhang Jian held a leading role among the reformers at the capital. Recognised as leader of a group from Shanyang, he swore an oath of brotherhood with twenty-three of his countrymen.

Encouraged by Hou Lan, in 169 Zhu Bing reported on the association and charged Zhang Jian and his fellows with plotting treason. A warrant was issued for their arrest, and this was the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2210; deC 89:110.

Zhu Bo 朱伯; Jiuzhen. In the winter of 43, after the Han general Ma Yuan had destroyed the rebellion of the Zheng/Tr'ung sisters in Jiaozhi, he moved south against other groups in Jiuzhen. A local leader, presumably non-Chinese, Zhu Bo was among those who fled the commandery to take refuge in the mountain forests. -SJJ 37:9a.

Zhu Bo 朱勃 [Shuyang 叔陽]; Youfufeng. When still only twelve, Zhu Bo had mastered the Poetry and the History. He was admired by his fellow-countryman Ma Kuang, who commended him to his younger brother Ma Yuan 援. Zhu Bo held office as a magistrate before he was twenty, but never rose higher than that position. Even as Ma Yuan rose to power and fame, however, he always treated Zhu Bo with friendship and respect.

After his death in 49, Ma Yuan was accused of various crimes and the family was disgraced. Zhu Bo presented a memorial of protest against such treatment of a distinguished servant of the throne, then retired to his home country.

Zhu Bo was aged sixty, and he died soon afterwards. As Emperor Zhang came to the throne in 75, he recognised Zhu Bo's loyalty by awarding his son with a quantity of grain. -HHS 24/14:846-50.

Zhu Cai 朱才 [Junye 君業]; Danyang. Eldest son of Zhu Zhi, he became a colonel under Wu, then succeeded to his father's fief in 224 and was made a lieutenant-general. -SGZ Wu 11:1305.

Zhu Cang 朱倉 [Yunqing 雲卿]; Guanghan. Zhu Cang went to study under Zhang Ning in Shu commandery. He travelled on foot, chanting his texts on a plain diet of beans and water, but though his fellow-students offered him rice and meat he did not accept. He compiled He-Luo jie 河洛解, explanations of the mystical diagrams from the Yellow River and the Luo.

Zhu Cang became Officer of Merit in his commandery. He was frequently offered nomination as Filial and Incorrupt, appointment as Headquarters Officer to the province, or entry to an office at the capital, but refused all of them. Still chanting texts, he killed himself. -HYGZ 10B:149.

Zhu Chang 主長 sometimes miswritten for Wang Chang 王長.

Zhu Chang 朱敞. Administrator of Hanyang in the early 90s, Zhu Chang was a client of Dou Xian. -HHS 45/35:1520.

Zhu Chang 朱偃 [Sunqing 孫卿]; Jiujiang. In the time of Emperor Zhang, Zhu Chang was a student protégé of Ding Hong.

As a Palace Counsellor in 124, Zhu Chang joined Lai Li and others in the assembly at the palace Gate of the Vast Capital to protest the dismissal of the Heir Liu Bao, future Emperor Shun. Though the demonstrators achieved no success, their support was recognised, and after Liu Bao had been brought to the throne at the end of 125, they were rewarded with high office and gained the ren right to nominate their sons as cadet gentlemen.

Zhu Chang then became Steward of the Changle Palace, responsible for holding the Dowager Lady Yan under arrest. Somewhat suspiciously, the Lady died a few weeks later, and two days after her funeral Zhu Chang was appointed Excellency over the Masses.

Despite the achievement of the eunuch Sun Cheng and his comrades in setting him upon the throne, Emperor Shun later turned against them and sent them out to their fiefs. Zhu Chang was reluctant to be involved, but his clerical officer Zhou Ju eventually persuaded him to intervene, and Sun Cheng and his fellows were restored to some favour.

Now over eighty years old, Zhu Chang left the office of Excellency at the end of 127. FSTY 5 has the story that he was attacked by the Director of Retainers Yu Xu as being too old and infirm to maintain his position, but Zhou Ju presented a memorial in his own defence, and Yu Xu was ordered to apologise; Ying Shao disapproved of his hanging on to office in such a fashion.

Though Zhu Chang was regarded as an effective scholar of the classics and histories, his literary style was not considered to be of high quality. -HHS 15/5: 591-93, 6:252-54, 61/51:2023-24, FSTY 5:40-41; Nylan 83:478-484.

Zhu Chen 助陳, the Lady: see Chen Zhu 陳助.

Zhu Chong 朱寵. At HHSJJ 20/10:773, Hui Dong cites DGHJ as saying that Zhu Chong was a leader of the pioneers who helped Wang Zhong clear the road for Zhai Zun's initial advance against Wei Ao in 30. The relevant text, DGHJ 9:4b, however, does not mention his name.

Zhu Chong 朱冲; Nanyang. Zhu Chong's father Zhu Yan inherited a family fief in Pingyuan, but was later reduced to be a commoner. In 113 the regent Dowager Deng restored the marquise in favour of Zhu Chong, with another county in Pingyuan. -HHS 22/12:771.

Zhu Chong 朱寵 [Zhongwei 仲威]; Jingzhao. As a young man Zhu Chong studied the New Text Classic of History. A pupil of Huan Yu, he became an expert in the Ouyang interpretation.

At the time of the Qiang rebellion in 108, Zhu Chong and other worthy men were called to join the staff of Deng Zhi, brother of the regent Dowager, and in 111, as the trouble was at its height, Zhu Chong was sent with troops of the Northern Army to garrison the Meng Crossing of the Yellow River north of Luoyang.

In later years Zhu Chong established a fine reputation as Administrator of Yingchuan, for his encouragement of Confucian learning and conduct, for his concern with farming and for his benevolence towards the people; a stele inscription in honour of Mount Song 嵩山 was set up under his auspices in 118, and was followed by others: LS 20:10b, Nagata 94:58-59 and ff. Zhu Chong was remembered also for his debate with Zheng Kai on the varying qualities of worthy men of the past from different localities.

Returning to Luoyang as Minister of Finance, Zhu Chong held that office when the Dowager Deng died in 121. The Deng family was disgraced soon afterwards, but Zhu Chong came to court with bared breast, praised their achievements, and pointed out that the emperor owed his throne to the Dowager and Deng Zhi. He then went to the office of the Minister of Justice to take his punishment.

There was considerable sympathy for the Deng among their former clients at court, so Zhu Chong suffered only dismissal from his post and was ordered to return to his home country. At the same time, moreover, Emperor An was embarrassed by the evidence of support: he sent messengers to offer sacrifices to those who had died, and to recall the surviving members of the clan to residence at the capital.

When Emperor Shun came to the throne in 125, the Deng were rehabilitated and Zhu Chong was enfeoffed and appointed Minister Herald. He became Grand Commandant in the following year, sharing control of the Imperial Secretariat. He was noted for his simple, even poor, living, for he took no advantage from his position and refused all gifts and favours. He left office in 127. -HHS 16/6:616-18, HHJ 18:211-12, XC 8:5a, Anon.:2a-b.

Zhu Ci 朱賜 or Zhu Kuan 寬; Jingzhao. A well-known calligrapher and a friend of Zhang Zhi, Zhu Ci became Minister Coachman. -HHS 64/54:2122-23 & JJ at 2312 Hui Dong.

Zhu Dan 祝耽 see Zhu Rong 祝融.

Zhu Di 朱弟 also as Song Di 宋弟 or Yu Di 于/予弟; Jingzhao. A young man of Chang'an, as Han irregular troops gathered for a final attack on Wang Mang in 23, Zhu Di, Zhang Yu and others, afraid the city would be plundered and sacked, took sides with the insurgents. Shouting slogans in support of Han and calling on Wang Mang to surrender, they broke into the imperial palace and set it on fire. -Dubs 55:462-463, Bn 54:131.

Zhu Fan 朱翻 see sub Zhu Yu 朱寓 of Pei.

Zhu Feng 祝諷 see Dai Feng 殺諷.

Zhu Fu 朱浮 [Shuyuan 叔元] (d.57); Pei. Zhu Fu was the son of Zhu Yi 翊, who had been a favoured officer of the powerful eunuch Dong Xian under Emperor Ai of Former Han. After Dong Xian was forced to kill himself in 1 BC, Zhu Yi arranged his burial. Wang Mang was furious and had Zhu Yi arrested and killed [HS 93:3741].

Zhu Fu was an early supporter of the Han rebellion, and he joined the staff of Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, when he was commissioner for the Gengshi Emperor in the northeast in 23. He became a trusted aide and was soon a lieutenant-general.

In 24 Zhu Fu and Deng Yu led the initial attack against the pretender Wang Lang, but they were surprised and heavily defeated by Wang Lang's general Li Yu. Zhu Fu nonetheless continued in command of troops, and he was present at the capture of Wang Lang's capital of Handan in the summer of that year.

Despite his unimpressive military record, Zhu Fu was named a chief general and Governor of You province. Although he was young, he had considerable ability, and he gained support through his respect for traditional northern customs and by his appointment of local leaders to his staff. In 26 the frontier in this region was considered settled, and Zhu Fu was rewarded with enfeoffment, but his honours were resented by Peng Chong the Administrator of Yuyang, who had assisted Liu Xiu against Wang Lang and believed that his own contribution had not been appreciated. The two men became enemies.

Relying on the favour of Liu Xiu, now Emperor Guangwu, Zhu Fu was conceited and boastful. He made accusations against Peng Chong: that during the troubles just past he had shown a lack of filial piety by sending a party to rescue his wife rather than his mother; and that he had harmed some supporters of the emperor. He also claimed that Peng Chong was laying up supplies and gathering troops. In 26 Peng Chong was summoned to court, and when his request that Zhu Fu be called up too was rejected he gathered local gentry and attacked Zhu Fu.

In the autumn Zhu Fu and his colleague Deng Long attempted a counter-stroke, but they were separately defeated and Zhu Fu was besieged in his headquarters of Ji city in Guangyang, by present-day Beijing. The siege does not appear to have been pressed hard, and Zhu Fu was able to defend himself for over a year, but in the winter of 27 his situation was made more precarious as Zhang Feng went over to Peng Chong.

Zhu Fu had hoped for relief from Guangwu and his main army, and was now concerned that he had been abandoned. He sent a desperate request for aid, but Guangwu replied that time was on their side and he needed only to hold out. In the spring of 28, just as supplies in Ji were exhausted, the Administrator of Shanggu Geng Kuang sent a small force of cavalry, and with their aid Zhu Fu was able to escape from the city. As he fled, however, his own officers turned against him. Zhu Fu abandoned his horse and, killing his own wife, managed to escape alone.

Peng Cheng took Ji city, but he was defeated soon afterwards and was murdered in the following year. Hou Ba, Director of the Imperial Secretariat, now accused Zhu Fu of having caused the trouble in the northeast and argued for his execution, but Zhu Fu continued in the emperor's favour. The allegations were ignored and Zhu Fu was named Bearer of the Mace, with a new enfeoffment.

In these early years of Emperor Guangwu's government, partly through uncertainty as to their loyalty and/or competence, senior officials in the provinces were retained in their posts for only short periods, and were frequently dismissed for minor faults. In the winter of 30 Zhu Fu took the occasion of an eclipse to present a memorial urging that men appointed to a position should have more time to demonstrate their ability. At a court conference the majority supported his argument, and the policy was changed.

Soon afterwards Zhu Fu sent in a further memorial, urging a return to the system of Former Han: at the end of his term of office a provincial governor was entitled to report on those heads of commandery units whom they deemed unfit for their position. In the past such comments had been reviewed by the Excellencies before any action was taken, but under Guangwu they were given immediate effect. The emperor's response is not recorded, nor the degree to which policy was changed, but Bielenstein discusses Guangwu's lack of decision regarding the balance between the senior officials at the capital, the administration of the commanderies, and the use of the censorial system.

In 31 Zhu Fu became Minister Coachman, and later that year he presented a memorial urging that recruitment of Academicians for the University should not, as was planned, be restricted to scholars from the immediate region of the capital, but extend across the empire. Guangwu accepted his advice, and Academicians thereafter came indeed from a broad spread of commanderies. Zhu Fu shared the emperor's interest in portents, and in 32 he and the Counsellor Xu Shu presented memorials urging reform of the calendar, which was now incorrect. Guangwu believed this was premature, and he took no action.

At the beginning of 43 Zhu Fu joined the Gentleman of the Household Zhang Chun in calling for a court conference to consider procedures for worship of the imperial ancestors. They argued that the emperor should carry out sacrifices to his predecessors of Former Han, while it was improper for him to maintain worship to his own blood lineage. In the end a variation of this argument, presented by the Excellencies Dai She and Dou Rong, was accepted: the emperor in person should sacrifice to the Former Han rulers Yuan and Xuan, while senior officials made offerings to emperors Cheng, Ai and Ping; ceremonies for Guangwu's own direct ancestors would be carried out by local officers.

In 44 Zhu Fu succeeded Dou Rong as Excellency of Works, but two years later, in the winter of 46, he was dismissed for having sold state favours, no doubt through his influence with the emperor. Guangwu was bitter at the way Zhu Fu had imposed upon him, but he held residual admiration and refused to inflict further punishment. Zhu Fu retained his fief, and it was transferred again in 49.

After Emperor Ming came to the throne in 57, past accusations were raised once more; the emperor, furious, ordered Zhu Fu to kill himself. The colonel Fan Shu protested that such hasty action was against the principles of the past, and the matter should have been referred to the Minister of Justice for investigation. It is said that the new ruler regretted his decision. -HHS 33/23:1137-46*; Bn 59:124-130, Bn 79:55, 70, 169-170, 186.

Zhu Fu 朱輔 or Zhu Pu 輔; Liang. As Inspector of Yi province under Emperor Ming for several years in the 70s, Zhu Fu was concerned to extend the reputation and authority of Han among the non-Chinese people of the southwest, and he had government buildings adorned with carved and painted images of gods, spirits and strange beasts in order to impress them. It is claimed that more than six million people from a hundred different tribes came to submit but, as Bielenstein observes, this vast accretion is not mentioned in the annals and the statement is either false or exaggerated.

The history may well be correct, however, when it says that King Tangzou of the Zuodu people from the upper reaches of the Yangzi brought three songs in praise of Han. Zhu Fu had the clerical officer Tian Gong translate the pieces, then sent him and the Assistant Officer Li Ling to the court at Luoyang. His accompanying memorial cited parallels of the extended influence of virtue recorded for rulers of classical times. Emperor Ming, delighted with the compliment, had the alien texts and their Chinese rendering sent to the history office. They are quoted in HHS 86/76 and DGHJ 22 at 1b-2a.

Soon after Emperor Zhang came to the throne in 75, Zhu Fu was among three provincial inspectors criticised by Ma Yan, head of the Imperial Censorate, for lack of energy in carrying out their duties and for the poor quality of candidates whom they recommended for office. He was dismissed.

After Zhu Fu's departure, the distant tribes of the Zuodu gradually ended their contact with Han and returned to their own customs and independence. - HHS 86/76:2854-57, 24/14:860, 56/46:1827, DGHJ 17:5a; Bn 67:78-79 [HHS 86/76 and 56/46 have the personal name as Fu 輔; DGHJ and HHS 24/14 have Pu 輔].

Zhu Fu 朱福 see Zhu You 朱祐.

Zhu Fu 朱符; Kuaiji. A son of Zhu Jun, Zhu Fu became Inspector of Jiaozhi in the 190s. He received refugees from the troubles of the north, and appointed men from his own commandery as local officers. As they behaved oppressively, there was a rebellion, joined by the non-Chinese people of the hills. Zhu Fu fled away by sea and disappeared. -SGZ Wu 8:1252; Taylor 83:71.

A pair of officials mentioned by the Buddhist apologeta Mouzi 牟子 can be identified as Zhu Fu and his brother Zhu Hao: Zürcher 59:13-14.

Zhu Gai 朱蓋 or Zhu Yi 益 (d.165); Guiyang. In 165, after several years of fighting, the troops in Jing province were resentful that they had been neither relieved nor paid. The common soldier Zhu Gai led a mutiny and allied with the bandit Hu Lan. Having overrun Guiyang, they attacked the capital of Lingling, but were held off by the Administrator Chen Qiu. They were then defeated and destroyed by a provincial army under Du Shang. -HHS 7:315, 38/28:1286, 56/46:1831-32.

Zhu Gai 朱蓋. In 209 Zhu Gai was a subordinate commander under Cao Cao's general Zhang Liao in his successful campaign against Chen Lan in Lujiang.

In 219 Zhu Gai assisted Xu Huang in the successful counter-attack against Liu Bei's general Guan Yu outside Fan city. -SGZ 17:518, 529; deC 96:545.

Zhu [Gongdao] 祝公道; Henan. In 202, after Guo Yuan captured the county city of Jiang in Hedong, he took the magistrate Jia Kui to Shangdang, where he placed him in a dungeon pit with a cart-wheel on top to close it. Zhu Gongdao heard of Jia Kui's plight, and although he had no previous connection he came by night and released him.

Zhu Gongdao would not reveal his name, but after Guo Yuan was defeated and killed Jia Kui found it out. Zhu Gongdao was later condemned to execution for some crime. Jia Kui tried to secure a reprieve, but he was not successful; when Zhu Gongdao was killed he wore mourning for him. -SGZ 15:480.

Zhu Guang 朱光. An officer of Cao Cao, Zhu Guang was appointed Administrator of Lujiang. He established his capital at Huan and set up agricultural colonies, but in 214 Sun Quan brought his army. The city was stormed by Lü Meng and Gan Ning, and Zhu Guang was captured.

In 219, as Sun Quan was negotiating peace with Cao Cao in order to deal with the expected attack from Liu Bei, he sent Zhu Guang and other prisoners back to the north. -SGZ Wu 2:1119-21; deC 96:464-465, 555.

Zhu Gui 朱龜 [Boling 伯靈] (120-183). Zhu Gui's grandfather was a commandery Administrator and his father a county magistrate. Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Zhu Gui served in the Imperial Secretariat and then in the offices of the Grand Commandant, where he was graded First Class.

In 176 there was rebellion among the non-Chinese people of Yizhou commandery, and the Administrator Yong Zhi was taken captive. As Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate, Zhu Gui was sent to attack the insurgents with troops from Bing and Liang provinces. He failed to put down the disturbance, and it was eventually settled by a new Administrator, Li Yong.

After a period of leave on account of illness Zhu Gui was appointed Inspector of You province, where he maintained defence against the Xianbi. He died in 183 and his former officials set up a stele in his honour at his tomb two years later. -HHS 86/76:2847, HYGZ 4:49, LS 10:22a-24a, SJZ 23:7a-b.

Zhu Gui 祝龜 [Yuanling 元靈]; Hanzhong. From the age of fifteen Zhu Gui travelled to study in Yingchuan and Runan, and at the Imperial University in Luoyang. Returning to the west in the early 190s, he was appointed as a magistrate in Guanghan by the warlord Governor Liu Yan.

Zhu Gui compiled Hanzhong qijiu zhuan 漢中耆舊傳, a collection of biographies of local worthies, in a genre common at that time. -HYGZ 10C:169.

Zhu Han 朱漢 (d.191); Henei. As Yuan Shao took Ji province from Han Fu, Zhu Han joined his staff. The former Governor, Han Fu, had treated him discourteously in the past, and Zhu Han now attacked his residence and beat his son. Yuan Shao executed Zhu Han. -HHS 74/64A:2380.

Zhu Hao 祝皓 [Zichun 子春]. A local officer, Zhu Hao gave his leisure time to visiting the sick and offering condolences to the bereaved. -XC 7:11a.

Zhu Hao 朱皓 [Wenming 文明] (d.195); Kuaiji. Son of Zhu Jun, Zhu Hao was named Administrator of Yuzhang by the Han court. Aided by the Inspector Liu Yao, he drove away his rival Zhuge Xuan and established an excellent government. He was later killed by Zhai Rong. -HHS 71/61:2313, SGZ Shu 5: 911, SGZ Wu 4:1184-85, XC 8:3b.

A pair of officials mentioned the Buddhist apologia Mouzi 牟子 can be identified as Zhu Fu and his brother Zhu Hao: Zürcher 59:13-14.

Zhu Hu 朱祐 see Zhu You 朱祐.

Zhu Huan 朱桓 [Xiumu 休穆] (167-238); Wu. Joining Sun Quan about 200, Zhu Huan was appointed a county magistrate in Kuaiji. There was widespread illness and consequent shortage of food, but Zhu Huan arranged the distribution of supplies and medical treatment and people were suitably grateful.

Zhu Huan was later appointed a colonel with authority to raise troops, obtained several thousand men and took part in operations against the hills people of Danyang. He was enfeoffed and promoted major-general, and about 220 he became commander at the fortress of Ruxu on the Yangzi. Having driven back the attack of Cao Ren in 222, he was raised in fief and made a full general.

Zhu Huan continued in active military command, but about 237 he appears to have suffered a nervous breakdown: he quarrelled with Sun Quan's son-in-law Quan Zong and in fury killed several of his attendants. He recovered briefly, but died soon afterwards.

Fiercely independent and swift to anger, Zhu Huan cared for his men and was popular with them, but he was probably always a little mad. -SGZ Wu 11:1312-15.

Zhu Hui 祝回; Shangdang? In 25, as Bao Yong held out in Taiyuan for the lost cause of the Gengshi regime, he sent his younger brother Bao Sheng and his son-in-law Zhang Shu to capture Huangcheng in Shangdang, held by Guangwu's Administrator Tian Yi. The city was taken, the magistrate Feng Yan was killed, and Zhu Hui, a former Internuncio, was named in his stead. -HHS 28/18A:976.

Zhu Hui 朱暉 [Wenji 文季] (12-88); Nanyang. A man of old official family, and evidently wealthy, in the time of Wang Mang Zhu Hui's father Cen 岑 attended the University at Chang'an and was a colleague of Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu. Zhu Cen died when Zhu Hui was about ten years old, and as disorder broke out after the fall of Wang Mang Zhu Hui accompanied his family in flight from their country holdings to Wan city, capital of the commandery. They were attacked by bandits, who seized the women-folk and took clothing and other possessions. Zhu Hui's brothers hid away, but though Zhu Hui was only thirteen he faced the robbers with a drawn sword. Admiring his courage, they laughed and spared his life.

After Guangwu took the throne in 25, he looked for his old friend Zhu Cen, and when he learned of his death he appointed Zhu Hui as a gentleman cadet. Though Zhu Hui left on grounds of ill health, he attended the University and impressed people by his excellent conduct.

About 57 Zhu Hui was approached by Yin Jiu, uncle of Emperor Ming, but refused contact. When he held local office in the commandery, the Administrator Ruan Kuang wanted to buy a female slave from him. Zhu Hui refused, but when Ruan Kuang died soon afterwards he sent generous gifts to his family. He explained that he had not wanted to engage in a transaction before, in case people thought he was trying to buy favour, but now he was free to be generous.

Liu Cang, brother of the emperor, admired this and called Zhu Hui to his office at Luoyang. Zhu Hui saved Liu Cang from embarrassment on the occasion of a court ceremony by purloining a bi-ring 璧 for him, and when Emperor Ming heard of this he appointed him to his personal guard.

Zhu Hui later became Administrator of Linhuai. He was known for his good appointments and his fair but firm handling of disputes, but some years later one of his officers was put to the question over some wrongdoing and died in prison. Zhu Hui was reported by the province and dismissed.

He returned to private life, but when there was a serious local famine about 77 he distributed supplies from his own household to relieve the people. In his private dealings, moreover, he cared for the family of a distant acquaintance Zhang Kan, and he took in the posthumous son You of his friend Chen Yi; he even recommended Chen You for office rather than his own son Zhu Pian. He was widely admired for such honourable conduct.

When Emperor Zhang visited Nanyang in 84, he had the Administrator call Zhu Hui to audience and appointed him Deputy Director of the Imperial Secretariat. He was later named Administrator of Taishan, but asked to remain at the capital; his wish was granted, and he became a most trusted officer.

Zhu Hui's junior colleague Zhang Lin urged that because of inflation the coinage in circulation should be restricted and government monopolies of salt and iron should be re-introduced. Zhu Hui opposed him on Confucian grounds, but at a second hearing the emperor accepted Zhang Lin's arguments and became angry with Zhu Hui. Zhu Hui presented himself at the imperial prison, and only on the third day were orders given for his release. Zhang Lin's policy was adopted but soon afterwards abandoned.

Zhu Hui now claimed to be ill and sought to leave office, for he was over eighty years old. Emperor Zhang, embarrassed, sent messengers and his imperial physician to enquire about his health. Zhu Hui recovered slightly and was granted cash and cloth.

Zhu Hui was later appointed Director of the Secretariat, but again asked to retire; he was made a Commandant of Cavalry and granted further rewards. After the death of Emperor Zhang in 88, he argued against the proposed expedition of Dou Xian against the Northern Xiongnu. He died soon afterwards.

We are told that Zhu Hui's wife died when he was fifty, but that although his brothers urged him to marry again in order to secure his lineage, Zhu Hui refused because a second wife could destroy the family. It appears that he was survived only by his son Zhu Jie. -HHS 43/33:1457-60*; Yang 63:188-189.

Zhu Hui 朱徽 or Zhu Wei 徽 (d.95). From Bearer of the Mace at Luoyang, in 94 Zhu Hui was appointed General on the Liao. The Shanyu Anguo, who had succeeded to the title in the previous year, was overshadowed by his younger cousin Shizi, known as a friend of the Chinese and an energetic enemy of the Northern Xiongnu. Anguo quarrelled with the Emissary Du Chong, but when he wrote to complain Du Chong intercepted the letter, then reported that he doubted Anguo's loyalty. Zhu Hui supported the attack.

The court of Emperor He ordered an investigation, but gave orders that Anguo should be subject to a special watch and guard. As Du Chong and Zhu Hui led armed men to Anguo's camp during the night, Anguo fled in fear. He gathered his personal supporters and some surrendered Northern Xiongnu, and went to attack Shizi. Shizi took refuge in Zhu Hui's headquarters and the attack was unsuccessful. Then more Chinese troops came up, and when Anguo refused to surrender he was killed by his own men.

Shizi succeeded Anguo as Shanyu, but his enmity for the northerners, and the manner in which he had been placed upon the throne, brought rebellion among the people who had surrendered. Proclaiming the southern prince Fenghou as Shanyu, they killed Chinese officials and burnt their guard-houses. The court sent a large army, but despite heavy defeats Fenghou and many of his people managed to escape across the frontier and establish a new state of their own.

Zhu Hui and Du Chong had contributed heavily to this major failure of policy. Both men were arrested and died in prison. -HHS 89/79:2955-56; deC 84:278-281.

Zhu Ji 朱濟. In 117 Zhu Ji was a member of the Imperial Secretariat. His colleague Zhang Jun found that he and another officer, Ding Sheng, were remiss in their duties and resolved to report them. Zhu Ji and Ding Sheng were afraid, and they had two other officers, Chen Zhong and Lei Yi, approach Zhang Jun on their behalf. As Zhang Jun remained adamant, Zhu Ji and Ding Shen bribed a servant to find something against him, and they obtained private letters he had exchanged with Yuan Xu, son of the Excellency of Works Yuan Chang.

The conspirators sealed these letters and sent them to the emperor, claiming that Zhang Jun had divulged matters which should have remained secret within the palace. Zhang Jun and Yuan Xu were imprisoned and sentenced to death, and Yuan Chang was obliged to commit suicide. As Zhang Jun appealed, his sentence was commuted to exile, while Yuan Chang was posthumously rehabilitated and Yuan Xu was allowed to resume his official career. Zhu Ji is not heard of again. -HHS 45/35:1524.

Zhu Ji 朱紀; Danyang. Second son of Zhu Zhi, he was married to a daughter of Sun Ce and held command as a colonel. -SGZ Wu 11:1305.

Zhu Jian 朱建 miswritten for Song Jian 宋建. -HHSJJ 9:359.

Zhu Jianping 朱建平; Pei. An expert in physiognomy, Zhu Jianping was renowned among the common people, and in 213 Cao Cao brought him to court. Cao Cao's son Cao Pi asked him to assess how long he and his attendants might live, and Zhu Jianping advised each of them, frequently with reference to a mid-life crisis which, if it was overcome, would be followed by a further lease of life. Cao Pi, for example, was allocated eighty years, so long as he survived beyond the age of forty; in the event, he died at the earlier age. In each case, one way or another, Zhu Jianping's prognoses came true.

Zhu Jianping was also good on horses. On one occasion he saw Cao Pi's horse in the courtyard and foretold that it would die that day. As it happened, when Cao Pi went to ride it, the horse became frightened and bit him in the knee. Cao Pi was angry and killed it. -SGZ 29:808-10*; DeWoskin 86:134-137.

Zhu Jie 朱頡; Nanyang. Son of Zhu Hui, Zhu Jie was a noted Confucian scholar. During the reign of Emperor An he served as Chancellor of Chen and/or Administrator of Chenliu. Through his son Zhu Mu he became known posthumously as the Master of Wide Virtue 貞宣先生. -HHS 43/33:1461.

Zhu Jie 朱頡 [Xuande 宣德]; Ganling. Magistrate of Huayin in Hongnong in 165, Zhu Jie was ordered by the Administrator Sun Qiu to complete work on the temple at Mount Hua which had been commenced by Sun Qiu's predecessor Yuan Feng. -LS 2:3a.

Zhu Jin 祝璠 (d.168). An officer of the Censorate, Zhu Jin was sent by Dou Wu to join Shan Bing and Yin Xun in interrogating the eunuch Zheng Li as a preliminary to an attack of the palace eunuchs led by Cao Jie. Zheng Li's confession duly implicated Cao Jie and Wang Fu, but they struck first and destroyed Dou Wu and Chen Fan. Shan Bing and Yin Xun were among the first to be killed, and Zhu Jin surely died also at this time. -HHS 69/59:2243; Ch'ü 72:487.

Zhu Jun 朱儁/雋 [Gongwei 公偉] (d.195); Kuaiji. Zhu Jun's father died when he was young and his mother was a silk-seller. He was admired for both his filial piety and his generosity: on one occasion in the 150s he took from his mother's stock to assist Zhou Gui, a colleague of poor family. He justified his conduct as part of the natural order.

As a clerk in his county office, Zhu Jun was admired and recommended by the magistrate Du Shang. He joined the commandery staff, and after almost twenty years he was Registrar to the Administrator Yin Duan. In 173 Yin Duan was reported by the provincial authorities for failing to defeat the rebels led by Xu Chang, but Zhu Jun hastened to Luoyang and bribed his way to intercept and amend the letter. Yin Duan was glad to be sentenced only to convict service rather than execution, but Zhu Jun never revealed his role.

Nominated Filial and Incorrupt, Zhu Jun became a magistrate in Donghai. His rule was excellent, he was commended by the Chancellor, and in 181 he was sent to Jiaozhi as Inspector to deal with the rebellion led by Liang Long. Having received authority to raise troops in his home commandery of Kuaiji, he took five thousand men to the south. Holding back at the provincial border, he first sent agents to spy on the rebels, then advanced into the territory. He killed the Administrator of Cangwu, Chen Shao, who had sided with the rebels, and called up loyal commandery troops to support his advance. The local officials were encouraged, the people turned to him and the insurgents surrendered. Within a few weeks the trouble was ended and Liang Long had been executed. Zhu Jun was rewarded and enfeoffed, and was called to the capital as a Counsellor Remonstrant.

As the Yellow Turban rebellion broke out in 184, Zhu Jun was appointed a General of the Household with the Staff of Authority and was sent with Huangfu Song to attack the enemy in the south. They suffered some setbacks, but by autumn they had pacified Yingchuan, Runan and Chen, and Zhu Jun was awarded a larger fief and a more substantial title. He then went to Nanyang, where the rebels had killed the Administrator Chu Gong and occupied Wan, chief city of the commandery. Joining forces with loyal troops from the province and commandery, he attacked the place for several months. At one time there was a proposal to recall him for lack of success, but the Excellency Zhang Wen argued in his favour, and Zhu Jun was left in command. He defeated various sorties of the enemy, and eventually deceived the enemy with a feint attack and stormed the city. The rebels took refuge in the citadel and asked to surrender, but Zhu Jun refused. After direct attacks proved unsuccessful, he withdrew his troops to give an apparent route of escape, but then pursued and slaughtered the rebels as they fled. The remnants returned to Wan, but a further fierce attack destroyed them completely.

Early in 185 Zhu Jun was appointed General of Chariots and Cavalry on the Right and enfeoffed with special honours. He was made a Household Counsellor, but left office when his mother died. He later became Court Architect, Minister Steward and Minister Coachman, and was then sent out as Administrator of Henei, commanding levies of private armies against Zhang Yan and other bandits of the Black Mountains. They were restrained but not suppressed, and Zhang Yan received a nominal commission into the imperial service. Zhu Jun returned to the capital once more as a Household Counsellor, was then a colonel in the Northern Army, and later Colonel of the City Gates.

As Dong Zhuo seized power in 189, Zhu Jun was Intendant of Henan. In the following year Dong Zhuo sought to make him his chief assistant, but Zhu Jun refused, protesting at the same time about the shift of the capital to Chang'an.

As Dong Zhuo withdrew to the west, he left Zhu Jun in charge at Luoyang, but Zhu Jun joined the eastern warlords against him, and in 191 he left his post and moved south into Jing province. Dong Zhuo sent Yang Yi to replace him, but Zhu Jun drove him away. The desolate city of Luoyang was now abandoned, and Zhu Jun set his headquarters in eastern Henan, attempting to restore unity in the east and seeking allies against Dong Zhuo. He obtained troops from Tao Qian in Xu province and others, but in 192 he was defeated by Dong Zhuo's commanders Li Jue and Guo Si, who then ravaged Yingchuan and Chenliu.

After the assassination of Dong Zhuo, Tao Qian and other leaders urged Zhu Jun to take title as Grand Master 太師 and lead an army west to rescue the emperor. The new regime of Li Jue and his colleagues, however, called him to Chang'an to become Minister Coachman and, despite its provenance, Zhu Jun felt obliged to obey the imperial command. In 193 he became Grand Commandant, but left office after an eclipse in 194.

It was intended that Zhu Jun should lead an embassy to the east but in 195, before he could go, Li Jue and Guo Si embarked on open warfare in the capital. Emperor Xian sent Zhu Jun and other senior officials to persuade Guo Si to settle the quarrel, but Guo Si took the whole party hostage. Zhu Jun, humiliated and angry, became ill and died. -HHS 71/61:2308-13*,XC

4:12a, SGZ Wu 1:1094.

Zhu Kai 朱楷; Shanyang. A reformist at Luoyang in the late 160s, Zhu Kai joined a sworn brotherhood of twenty-four men from Shanyang under the leadership of Zhang Jian. In 169 their fellow-countryman Zhu Bing, acting at the instigation of the powerful eunuch Hou Lan, claimed the association was treasonous. A warrant was issued for the members' arrest, and this became the trigger for the Second Faction Incident and the Great Proscription. -HHS 67/57:2188 & 2210; deC 75A:28-31, deC 89:110.

Zhu Kuan 朱寬 i.e. Zhu Ci 朱賜. -HHSJ 64/54:2312 Hui Dong.

Zhu Liang 祝良 [Shaoqing 邵卿 or Shaoping 邵平]; Changsha. An intelligent man of wide learning, Zhu Liang was known for honesty and fairness. He served as Inspector of Bing province, where he was noted for his military ability, and then in Liang, where he reformed the administration, punished official corruption, and restored confidence during the final years of the first Qiang rebellion.

In 119 there was a rebellion among the non-Chinese people of Rinan in the far south. Zhu Liang was sent as Administrator of neighbouring Jiuzhen commandery to accompany the new Inspector Zhang Qiao. Travelling among the people without escort, Zhu Liang established personal trust, received the surrender of the dissidents, and organised the reconstruction of official offices and settlements. In conjunction with Zhang Qiao he also undertook a series of campaigns to settle the remaining opposition groups and confirm the borders of imperial territory against the hill tribes of the west.

Zhu Liang later became Prefect of Luoyang, where he enforced discipline and restrained the conduct of the great families. At one time, during a period of drought, when the emperor had prayed for rain without success, Zhu Liang went to the steps of his offices, exposed himself to the fierce sun, and asked to take all punishment upon himself. Within a few hours, clouds had gathered and good rain fell. The people of the city made up a song to celebrate his achievements.

In 133 the new wife of the Grand Commandant Pang Can threw the step-children borne to her predecessor into a well to drown. Zhu Liang was not on good terms with Pang Can, and when he heard of the crime he came with his officers, forced his way into the official residence to investigate the matter, then reported that Pang Can should share the responsibility. Pang Can left office on the grounds of unfavourable omens, but it was also judged that Zhu Liang had acted precipitately, without seeking proper authority, and he was sent to prison. [Xie Cheng has another story, which says that the titular wife of the eunuch Regular Attendant Fan Feng killed a maid-servant and put her body in a well. Zhu Liang found out, and had the woman executed.]

Because of Zhu Liang's popularity among the people and his officers, a host of petitions were presented, many asking to take his place for any punishment that might be inflicted. In response to such support, an imperial edict was issued to pardon him.

In 138 the Imperial Clerk Jia Chang was besieged by non-Chinese in Rinan. A major expedition was proposed to rescue him, but the plan was opposed by the staff officer Li Gu, who argued that the complications and dangers of such a long-distance enterprise were prohibitive. He recommended that Zhu Liang should be sent to the region with his old associate Zhang Qiao. Zhu Liang was again named Administrator of Jiuzhen and Zhang Qiao Inspector of Jiaozhi, and they restored control by personal authority, joint military action and judicious bribery. The area remained at peace for several years, and the people erected shrines to Zhu Liang. -HHS 6:268, 86/76:2837-39, 51/41:1691, XC 7:13a.

Zhu Ling 朱零; Runan. Zhu Ling was a clerical officer under Zong Zi the Administrator of Runan about 163, when a certain Li Song was recommended for local appointment by the powerful eunuch Tang Heng. Though Li Song was a kinsman by marriage to Fan Pang the Officer of Merit, Fan Pang disapproved of him and refused to issue the call to office. Attempting to apply pressure to Fan Pang, Zong Zi had Zhu Ling beaten, but Zhu Ling observed that he admired Fan Pang's honesty, and he would continue to accept his lead even to death. Zong Zi gave up the idea of appointing Li Song. -HHS 67/57:2205, XC 4:7a-b; deC 89:70.

Zhu Ling 朱靈 [Wenbo 文博]; Ganling/Qinghe. In the service of Yuan Shao about 192, Zhu Ling was sent to attack Ji Yong, who had turned to Gongsun Zan and held Yu city in Ganling. Zhu Ling's mother and younger brother were in the city, and the defenders seized them and showed them on the wall. Weeping, Zhu Ling observed that "When a man embarks on public affairs, he must think no more of his family." He stormed the city and captured Ji Yong, but his mother and brother both died.

In 193, when Cao Cao attacked Tao Qian, Yuan Shao sent Zhu Ling with troops to assist him. When the other contingents returned, Zhu Ling and his men stayed with Cao Cao.

In 199 Zhu Ling was sent with Liu Bei to intercept Yuan Shu's attempted escape to the north, and he took part in the take-over of Ji province from the remnant of the Yuan family in 204. As Cao Cao entered Jing province in 208, Zhu Ling commanded one of seven divisions in Nanyang under the Area Commander Zhao Yan.

In 211 Zhu Ling accompanied Cao Cao against the warlords of the northwest. While the main army faced the enemy at the Tong Pass, Cao Cao sent Zhu Ling and Xu Huang north into Hedong to establish a bridgehead at the Puban Crossing of the Yellow River so he could mount an oblique attack on Huayin, south of the Wei.

As Cao Cao returned east in 212, Zhu Ling stayed at Chang'an under the command of Xiahou Yuan for operations against the remnants of the warlords. In 215 he took part in the defeat of the Di people in Wudu, opening the road to attack Zhang Lu in Hanzhong.

Zhu Ling's reputation as a commander was comparable to that of his colleague Xu Huang, though there was on one occasion that Cao Cao was angry with him and sent Yu Jin with orders for Zhu Ling to hand over his command and take a post on his staff.

Zhu Ling later became General of the Rear, and he was enfeoffed by Cao Pi. He was one of the sponsors of a commemorative stele when Cao Pi took the imperial title, and he continued to serve in the field under Cao Pi and Cao Rui. -SGZ 17:530-31*, LS 19:4a; Goodman 98:196.

Zhu Miao 朱苗 see He Miao 何苗.

Zhu [Mingshu] 朱明叔; Nanyang. In the first half of the second century Zhu Mingshu was a teacher of the classics. -HYGZ 10C:174.

Zhu Mu 朱穆 [Gongshu 公叔 or Gongyuan 公元 or Wenyuan 文元] (100-163); Nanyang. Son of Zhu Jie and grandson of Zhu Hui, at the age of five Zhu Mu already showed filial piety: when his father and mother were taken ill he would not eat or drink, and he returned to normal only when they recovered. A devoted student of the classics, he could be quite absent-minded, not looking where he was walking and sometimes forgetting even to dress.

Despite this, Zhu Mu became an Investigator in the commandery when he was only twenty, and he so impressed the Administrator with his knowledge of local affairs that he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt. He joined the Imperial Secretariat and was later a trusted member of staff of the General-in-Chief Liang Ji. After Emperor Huan was brought to the throne in 146 Zhu Mu warned Liang Ji of the dangers of his high position, citing omens which were reflected in the plot centred about Liu Suan in the following year.

Appointed an Academician at the University, Zhu Mu was graded First Class and became a member of the Censorate. He made a fuss, however, when some imperial guards at the Hall of the Circular Moat, presumably as part of the Great Archery ceremony, placed their bows on the ground. He had the men punished for sacrilege, but the Excellencies and ministers were embarrassed and it was felt that Zhu Mu had been too strict. He was degraded to be a gentleman cadet, but then there were protests and he was raised to be a Consultant.

About this time, moreover, despite his position at court, Zhu Mu declared himself the disciple of the recluse scholar Zhao Kang, and when Zhao Kang died he carried out mourning for him; he was admired for this show of honour and virtue. Concerned at the general decline of morality, moreover, Zhu Mu compiled Chonghou lun 崇厚論, an "Essay in Praise of Liberality," decrying traditional Confucianism as a failed solution to the problem and arguing that each individual should seek to develop his personal generosity.

During the 150s and early 160s Zhu Mu worked in the Eastern Pavilion 東觀 on the third instalment of the official history of Later Han, later entitled Dongguan Hanji 東觀漢記 but at that time known simply as "Record of Han" 漢記. The compilation included annals, tables of marquises and officials, accounts of the Xiongnu and the Qiang, with biographies of empresses and other individuals.

Concerned at Liang Ji's increasing power and arrogance, which might involve himself as his former officer, Zhu Mu wrote to urge restraint. His advice was ignored, but Liang Ji did not punish him, and his record served him well when Liang Ji was later overthrown.

In 153 the Yellow River overflowed, many people drowned and more were made homeless. As numbers of bandits appeared in Ji province, Zhu Mu was sent there as Inspector. Rejecting special pleading from palace eunuchs who came from that region, he purged the local administration, forcing many officials to resign or kill themselves, then put down the disturbances. He nominated several worthy men, and many of them rose to high rank.

When the father of the senior eunuch Zhao Zhong died, Zhao Zhong arranged his burial in his home commandery of Anping, but he misappropriated grave-goods such as the jade shroud reserved to members of the imperial clan. When Zhu Mu heard of this he sent local officers to arrest members of the Zhao household, dig up the corpse and strip it of its wrongful insignia. Emperor Huan was extremely angry: he had Zhu Mu report to the prison of the Minister of Justice, and ordered he be sentenced to convict service. There was major opposition to this. Some wanted to have Zhu Mu's portrait painted and circulated, a traditional form of public support and approval, and the University student Liu Tao gathered several thousand colleagues to demonstrate on Zhu Mu's behalf; in the face of this new mass movement the emperor was persuaded to grant a pardon.

After some years in private life Zhu Mu was recalled to join the Imperial Secretariat in the 160s. He was a consistent and outspoken opponent of eunuch power and a strong supporter of the Excellencies Liu Ju and Chong Gao, but he also attacked the general Feng Gun for an apparent lack of public spirit. Frustrated at the conduct of the court, he died in 163. Though he had held office for many years he had taken no profit and his household was poor, and at the petition of senior officials he was awarded posthumous rank as Inspector of Yi province.

Besides his work on the Han history, Zhu Mu left twenty pian of essays, poems, letters, official documents and other writings, and the scholar Cai Yong later went to his house and copied them for his own library. Cai Yong also joined disciples of Zhu Mu in composing a eulogy and inscriptions, styling him Master of Literature and Loyalty 文忠先生貞宣. - HHS 43/33:1461-76*, XC 2:7a-8a, XHS 3:15b, YSS: 11a-13a, ZF:3b-5a, Cai 1:8 & 1:9; Ch'en 86:787-788.

Zhu Mu 祝睦 [Yuande 元德] (d.164); Jiyin. Having been a magistrate in Beihai and in Yingchuan, Zhu Mu was appointed Adjutant of the Northern Army at Luoyang and later joined the Imperial Secretariat, where he rose to be Deputy Director. He then served as Chancellor of Changshan and Administrator of Shanyang, retired and died at home. A stele was set up in his honour. -LS 7:2b-4a.

Zhu Nan 朱南. A county magistrate in Hedong about 211, Zhu Nan wanted to assist the hermit Qiao Xian, but was persuaded not to. -SGZ 11:363.

Zhu Pian 朱駢; Nanyang. About 75 the Administrator Huan Yu invited Zhu Pian, son of Zhu Hui, to local office in the commandery. Zhu Hui turned down the offer, but arranged for his foster son Chen You to be appointed in his stead. -HHS 43/33:1459.

Zhu Pu 朱普 [Boqin 伯禽]; Shu. Zhu Pu was commandery Officer of Merit when his Administrator, who had quarrelled with the Inspector Wang Ji, suffered a false accusation. Zhu Pu was taken to the provincial prison, where he was beaten for several months, but steadfastly maintained his master's innocence. He told his sons that, if he died, they should carry out mourning at the gates of the imperial palace, so the emperor might learn of the situation. It would appear that the charges were dropped, while Zhu Pu's name became a byword for loyalty. -HYGZ 10A:137.

Zhu Pu 朱輔 see Zhu Fu 朱輔.

Zhu Ran 朱然 [Yifeng 義封] (181-249); Danyang. Originally of the Shi 施 surname, Zhu Ran was a nephew of Zhu Zhi, whose elder sister had married into that family. Zhu Zhi at first had no sons, so when Zhu Ran was thirteen Zhu Zhi adopted him as his heir. [After Zhu Zhi died in 234, Zhu Ran asked to return to his original surname. Sun Quan refused, but about 255 Zhu Ran's son Ji 績 received approval from the government of Sun Liang 亮.]

Favoured by Sun Ce, Zhu Ran became a close friend of Sun Quan, and when Sun Quan came to power in 200 he appointed him as a magistrate in Kuaiji, although he was not yet twenty. Zhu Ran was later promoted to be a colonel in charge of five counties, and about 211 he was named Administrator of Linchuan, in the west of Danyang, with two thousand soldiers to deal with the hills people east of Poyang.

When Cao Cao attacked south in 217 Zhu Ran was appointed a lieutenant-general in command of two defence camps and in 219 he was sent on detachment with Pan Zhang to cut off Guan Yu's route of escape from Lü Meng's surprise attack in Jing province. He was enfeoffed and promoted to full general, and when Lü Meng died he recommended that Zhu Ran take his place at Jiangling in Nan commandery. In 222 Zhu Ran played a leading role in the defeat of Liu Bei and in defence against Cao Pi.

Zhu Ran was not a tall man, less than seven feet [160 cm], but he had personal presence, he did not get flustered, and he maintained discipline and order among his troops. For thirty years he was one of the leading generals of Wu, and Sun Quan had him act as a mentor and guide to younger commanders. -SGZ Wu 11:1305-08*.

Zhu Rong 祝融 or Zhu Dan 耽. At HHSJJ74/64B:2651, Hui Dong quotes the funerary inscription to Liu Biao as General Who Maintains the South in Peace 鎮南 [將軍] 碑. This tells how the General of the Household Zhu Rong was sent to award special honours to Liu Biao, warlord Governor of Jing province, and to grant him formal authority also over Yang and Jiao provinces. This mission probably took place in 196, after the court of Han had come under the control of Cao Cao.

Hui Dong is evidently following Cai 3:7, a text wrongly attributed to Cai Yong [see sub Liu Biao], but the name of the envoy appears there as Zhu Dan. It is not possible to determine which reading is correct.

Zhu Shan 朱山; Hedong. A man of humble background, Zhu Shan was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became a gentleman cadet. About 163 he was recommended by the General of the Household Huang Wan, head of his corps of cadets, and the Minister of the Household Chen Fan promoted him as Abundant Talent so that he could take substantive office. Nothing more is known of Zhu Shan's career. -HHS 61/51:2040.

Zhu Shang 朱商; Nanyang. Son of Zhu You, he inherited his fief in 48. -HHS 22/12:771.

Zhu Shang 朱尙 see sub Zhu Yu 朱寓 of Pei.

Zhu Sheng 朱生 see Zhou Sheng 周生 of Jiujiang.

Zhu [Shuxian] 朱叔賢 (d.214); Guanghan. Zhu Shuxian was a commandery Investigator. As Liu Zhang was besieged by Liu Bei at Chengdu in 214, Zhu Shuxian and some of his kinsmen were found guilty of conspiracy to surrender. They were executed. -HYGZ 10A:140-41.

Zhu Si 朱祀; Jiujiang. A great-great-grandson of Zhu Wei, Zhu Si inherited the family marquisate, but was later found guilty of killing a man. The fief was abolished. -DGHJ 17:1b.

Zhu Sui 朱遂. As Chancellor of Zhongshan, Zhu Sui omitted to carry out the sacrifices due to the spirit of the Northern Peak 北嶽, the sacred Mount Heng 恆山 in present-day Shanxi, and in the winter of 132 almost a hundred women and children were killed by wolves in that territory. An imperial edict blamed the misfortune on his failure to maintain the proper ritual, and ordered that the omission be rectified immediately. -DGHJ 20:4a, HHS 6:261, 103/13:3185-86.

Zhu Tian 祝恬 [Boxiu 伯休] (d.160); Zhongshan. After an official carriage was sent to invite Zhu Tian to Luoyang, he was appointed a Palace Attendant. He served in the Secretariat and became its Director, was Administrator of Yuzhang, and returned to the capital as a senior aide to the General-in-Chief Liang Ji.

Director of Retainers in 151, Zhu Tian supported a proposal to grant Liang Ji extraordinary honours, but the Excellency Huang Qiong vetoed the idea.

In 159 Zhu Tian was a Palace Counsellor. Despite his previous connection to the Liang, after Emperor Huan destroyed that family he appointed Zhu Tian as Excellency over the Masses. Zhu Tian died in office in the following summer. -HHS 61/51:2035, HHS 7:306-307, FSTY 7:55.

Zhu Wansui 朱萬歲; Danyang. Fourth son of Zhu Zhi, he died young. -SGZ Wu 11.1305.

Zhu Wei 朱鮪; Huaiyang. Evidently a commoner, Zhu Wei was one of the leaders of the Troops from Xinshi which entered Nanyang in 22 and joined the Han rebellion against Wang Mang. In 23 he supported the candidacy of Liu Xuan, the Gengshi Emperor, to lead the restored dynasty, and was named Grand Marshal. Soon afterwards Zhu Wei and Li Yi impeached Liu Bosheng, leading to his execution.

As the main Han army advanced from Nanyang to storm Chang'an and destroy the government of Wang Mang, Zhu Wei led a force back east to his native country. Li Shen/Sheng 李琴/聖, Wang Mang's governor of Yang province, was killed, and Zhu Wei went on to take Huaiyang before returning to the west.

When the Gengshi Emperor set his court at Chang'an in 24 Zhu Wei was named a king, but he refused the enfeoffment on the grounds that those not of the Liu clan should not hold royal rank. As Bielenstein 59:52-56 observes, however, the real point of contention lay between commoner leaders such as Zhu Wei, and the gentry who were now increasing their influence at court.

Soon afterwards, moreover, Zhu Wei was obliged to share his position as Grand Marshal with the gentry leader Zhao Meng and the imperial relative Liu Ci, and he was sent away from the capital to deal with remnant opposition in the east.

Zhu Wei opposed Liu Xiu's appointment as commissioner in the north, and when Liu Xiu proclaimed his independence at the end of 24 Zhu Wei was given command of the garrison to hold Luoyang against him. In 25 he killed his former collaborator Li Yi for dealing with Liu Xiu's general Feng Yi. Later that year a sortie by Zhu Wei and Su Mao was heavily defeated by Feng Yi and Kou Xun, and they were driven back into Luoyang.

Soon afterwards the Gengshi Emperor was destroyed by the Red Eyebrows in Chang'an, and some of the leaders at Luoyang went to surrender to Liu Xiu, now Emperor Guangwu. A break-in to the city was defeated and driven out, but Zhu Wei now sought terms. Despite his old enmity and his involvement in the death of Liu Bosheng, his former subordinate Cen Peng, now a leading officer under Guangwu, obtained the emperor's guarantee of good treatment: "I call the Yellow River to witness that I shall not eat my words" 河水在此吾不食言. For his part, as Zhu Wei left to visit the imperial camp he warned his followers to hold their guard until he had returned safely; should he not come back they must seek to escape and join Yin Zun, a survivor of the Gengshi regime in Nanyang.

In the event, as Zhu Wei approached with bound hands Guangwu himself released him and welcomed him, and he returned to Luoyang and arranged the surrender. Zhu Wei was named a general and enfeoffed, and later became Minister Steward. His fief was held by his descendants for several generations: see sub Zhu Si. -HHS 17/7:653-55, DGHJ 14:1a-b; Bn 54:106, 116, 121, Bn 59:35, 102-105.

Zhu Wei 朱緯; Danyang. Third son of Zhu Zhi, he died young. -SGZ Wu 11:1305.

Zhu Wei 朱微 see Zhu Hui 朱徽.

Zhu Xi 祝羲; Zhongshan. XTS 75A:3256 mentions Zhu Xi as a grandson of the Excellency Zhu Tian.

Zhu Yan 朱演; Nanyang. Son of Zhu Shang, he inherited the fief of his grandfather Zhu You. In 102 an accusation of witchcraft brought the downfall of the Empress Yin of Emperor He and the disgrace of her family. Though Zhu Yan was only distantly connected by marriage, he was implicated and was reduced to be a commoner. -HHS 22/12:771.

Zhu Ye 朱野 [Ziliao 子遼]; Nanyang. Son of Zhu Mu, he became Intendant of Henan. -HHS 43/33:1473.

Zhu Yi 朱益 see Zhu Gai 朱蓋 (d.165).

Zhu Ying 朱英; Dong. When Geng Chun was Administrator of Dong commandery in the late 20s, he executed a number of kinsmen and clients of Zhu Ying.

Geng Chun was granted a marquise in Zhuo commandery, but in 30 he asked to be transferred because Zhu Ying had become the Administrator of Zhuo and he feared his vengeance. Guangwu agreed, and Geng Chun's fief was transferred to Bohai. -HHS 21/11:765.

Zhu Ying 竺嬰. Younger brother of Zhu Zeng the Administrator of Jiuquan, in 31 Zhu Ying killed the officer Wang Yin in a vendetta. Zhu Zeng was ashamed and left his office. -HHS 23/13:805.

Zhu Yong 朱永; Pei. Son of the Excellency Zhu Fu 浮, Zhu Yong became Administrator of Xiapi. -XTS 74B: 3186.

Zhu You 朱祐 [Zhongxian 仲先] (d.48); Nanyang. Due to confusion about the taboo name of Liu Hu, Emperor An, the personal name of Zhu You appears also as Hu 祐 or Fu 福: Bn 54:27.

When his father died, Zhu You was still young, and he was raised by his mother's family, the Liu clan of Fuyang, who were related to the former marquises of the nearby district of Chongling. Zhu You was a cousin of Liu Bosheng and his younger brother Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, he frequently visited Chongling, and was a friend of the two young men.

Zhu You studied at Chang'an about the same time as Liu Xiu, which confirmed their relationship, and he was again with him at the capital about 21, when they were both engaged on family tax cases. After the Han rebellion broke out, and Liu Bosheng was named Excellency over the Masses under the Gengshi Emperor in 23, he appointed Zhu You as his Protector of the Army, responsible for discipline.

After Liu Bosheng was killed, Zhu You was left isolated. In 24, however, through the good offices of Liu Jia, King of Hanzhong, he was sent to join Liu Xiu, now commissioner to the north. Their friendship was renewed and Zhu You was again appointed Protector of the Army.

Zhu You served with distinction in the north and was frequently in the forefront of battle. Wounded, he was attended by Liu Xiu, then appointed as a lieutenant-general and enfeoffed as marquis of a county in Runan. Pointing out the troubles of the Gengshi regime at Chang'an, Zhu You urged Liu Xiu to claim the imperial title. Like that of Ma Wu, the proposal was premature and Liu Xiu rejected it, but it allowed him to show suitable loyalty and humility.

When Liu Xiu did take the throne in the autumn of 25, Zhu You was made a chief general, and he accompanied the army which attacked and captured Luoyang. Early in 26 Zhu You's fief was transferred into Nanyang. Having accompanied Jing Dan to deal with bandits in Hedong and Hongnong, he returned to join the imperial forces in the campaign which broke the bandit groups of Wei commandery and Henei.

Zhu You then accompanied Wu Han into Nanyang. Deng Feng rebelled in the autumn and Zhu You was sent to deal with him, but in the winter his men were defeated and he was taken prisoner. He was freed when Deng Feng surrendered a few months later, and was rewarded and restored to his former command. He then took part in the final stages of the campaign in Nanyang.

After the soldier of fortune Yan Cen was defeated by Geng Yan, he joined Zhang Cheng, an officer of the local warlord Qin Feng. Zhu You and the general Zhai Cun then combined against them. They killed Zhang Cheng and seized quantities of seals and other booty which Yan Cen had acquired in the region of Chang'an. Zhu You was rewarded with 3,000 jin 斤 [750 kg] of gold.

In the following year Zhu You led an army against Qin Feng, defeated and killed his general Zhang Kang, then attacked his base in Nan commandery. After eighteen months siege, in the summer of 29 Qin Feng surrendered and was sent to Luoyang for execution. The Grand Marshal Wu Han accused Zhu You of having offended military law and honour by allowing Qin Feng to surrender rather than killing him on the spot, but Guangwu inflicted no punishment. As Zhu You returned into Nanyang he was ordered to join Zang Gong in mopping up three counties on the Han River which had remained loyal to Yan Cen and might have provided a base for him to return to.

In contrast to Wu Han, who was notorious for his cruelty and whose troops were ferocious in victory, Zhu You was a man of Confucian morality who was prepared to accept surrender, and who regarded the taking of cities and the holding of territory as more important than the numbers of enemy slain. He forbade his men to plunder, and many of them resented such restraint.

In the summer of 33 Zhu You was sent with three other generals and fifty thousand men, under the command of Wu Han and Wang Ba, to attack Lu Fang's officers Jia Lan and Min Kan in Dai commandery. They were defeated in a rain-storm and forced to withdraw, and Zhu You was left to command the defences of Changshan.

In 37 Zhu You's county fief was transferred to Pingyuan, and its revenue was increased to 7,300 households. He sought to refuse, claiming that it was more than he deserved, but Guangwu insisted. Later Zhu You sent in a memorial arguing that tradition did not support subjects being enfeoffed as kings. Guangwu accepted the policy: he reduced his uncle Liu Liang and his nephews Liu Zhang and Liu Xing to be dukes; thereafter only his direct descendants were to receive the royal title.

In 38 Zhu You's command in Changshan was absorbed into that of Ma Cheng, and in the following year he returned to Luoyang and handed in his insignia as a general. He remained at the capital with title as Servant at Court, excusing him from the requirement to reside at his fief. The emperor took pleasure in recalling his student days at Chang'an with Zhu You, and on one occasion, remembering how they had bought honey for sweetening medicine, he presented him with a jin 斤 [250 g] of fine white honey.

Again with argument from precedent, Zhu You later proposed that the prefix "Grand" 大 should be removed from the titles of the Excellency over the Masses 大司徒 and of the Excellency of Works 大司空. In 51, after Zhu You's death in 48, this was done. As Bielenstein 79:63-64 observes, the change was more than antiquarianism, for it marked a shift of power at the highest level of administration: in Former Han the Imperial Chancellor 丞相, renamed (Grand) Excellency over the Masses [Bn: Minister over the Masses] had been senior to the Grand Marshal 大司馬 [Bn: Commander-in-Chief]; now the Grand Marshal, renamed Grand Commandant 太尉, ranked higher than the other two Excellencies.

When Guangwu's successor Emperor Ming had portraits of his father's great servants painted on the Cloud Terrace of the Southern Palace at Luoyang, Zhu

You was among those honoured. -HHS 22/12:769-71; Bn 67:26, 107-112.

Zhu Yu 諸於 was Prefect of Luoyang. -FSTY 6f:145.

Zhu Yu 朱寓 (d.169); Pei. Having served as an Attendant Officer of Yu province under the Inspector Zhou Jing in the 150s, Zhu Yu joined the Imperial Secretariat in the 160s and later became Administrator of Lujiang.

Widely respected, Zhu Yu was ranked with Li Ying and others in the second category as a "hero" [後 jun] in the major list of worthy men circulated at Luoyang in this time, and during the First Faction Incident of 166/167 Dou Wu presented a letter to Emperor Huan describing him as one of the worthy men of the state.

As Dou Wu and Chen Fan took power under the regency for the young Emperor Ling in 168, they recalled Zhu Yu to office. In the autumn, as they planned to destroy the palace eunuchs, they appointed him Director of Retainers. When the coup was defeated soon afterwards, Zhu Yu and other supporters of the Dou and Chen group were dismissed.

In the winter of 169 Zhu Yu and other former officials were accused of faction by the eunuch Hou Lan. Zhu Yu and hundreds more died in prison, their families were exiled, and even distant relatives and clients were proscribed from office. -XC 2:11a, HHS 8: 330, 67/57:2187 & 2190, 69/59:2240-43; deC 89:83, 98, 110, 111.

The personal name of this man Zhu Yu sometimes appears as 瑀. He must be distinguished from his contemporary the eunuch Zhu Yu, described below.

XTS 74B:3186 has a detailed but unsubstantiated genealogy surrounding Zhu Yu, there written as 禹. It is said that his grandfather was Zhu Shang 尙, an officer of the Imperial Secretariat, and his father was Zhu Zhi 質, described as Excellency over the Masses but in fact surely a clerical officer under the Excellency. After Zhu Yu's death the family transferred to Danyang.

XTS also mentions Zhu Yu's younger brother Zhuo 卓, father of Zhu Fan 讎, who became Administrator of Youfufeng, towards the end of Han, and was the father of Zhu Yue 越, Administrator of Shanggu.

Zhu Yu 朱瑀. A eunuch, in 168 Zhu Yu was a member of staff in the residence of the regent Dowager Dou. On the night of 24 October, the Dowager's father Dou Wu sent the Palace Attendant Liu Yu with a report recommending the arrest of the senior eunuchs Cao Jie and Wang Fu. Zhu Yu intercepted the message and, realising that such a purge would involve himself, his colleagues and their families, he announced that the message was in fact a call to dethrone the young Emperor Ling.

Zhu Yu then called a group of seventeen eunuchs, close friends and physically strong, and they swore an oath with blood that they would kill Dou Wu and his associates. The leading role in the proceedings was then taken over by Cao Jie and Wang Fu, though a fragment of the undated Hou Han nan ji by Zhang Ying, cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ 66/56:2374, says that it was Zhu Yu [written 朱寓: cf. the entry immediately above] who killed Chen Fan. After the coup was concluded Zhu Yu led prayers at the Bright Hall, and he was awarded a district fief.

In 179 Shen Zhong complained about Emperor Ling's reliance upon the eunuchs, and Zhu Yu was a particular target. The emperor took no action, and Zhu Yu died of illness about 182. -HHS 78/68:2524-27.

Though the characters of their personal names are sometimes confused, the eunuch Zhu Yu must be distinguished from his contemporary, the official Zhu Yu, described above; see also the item immediately below.

Zhu Yu 朱禹 (d.179). According to HHS 77/67:2499, the eunuch Zhu Yu was an associate of Wang Fu and held office as an Attendant at the Yellow Gates. In 179 he and others of their party were impeached by the Director of Retainers Yang Qiu. They were tortured and died in prison.

One edition of HHS gives the personal name as 瑀, which would identify this person with the entry immediately above. That Zhu Yu, however, is said to have been attacked by Shen Zhong, not by Yang Qiu, and to have survived until about 182. It seems hard to believe that there were two eunuchs of such similar names; more probably, the reference to Zhu Yu 禹/瑀 in HHS 77/67 is an error.

Zhu Yue 朱越 [Yuansheng 元勝]; Pei. XTS 74B:3186 describes this man as Administrator of Shanggu; though he may have been a contemporary, he is probably not the same man as Zhu Yue of Dong below. See also sub Zhu Yu 朱寓 of Pei.

Zhu Yue 朱越; Dong. A member of the imperial court of Han about 210, Zhu Yue planned a conspiracy to overthrow the power of Cao Cao. He is not heard of again. -SGZ 22:647.

Zhu Zan 朱讚; Pei. A fellow-countryman of Cao Zhen

真, kinsman of the imperial family of Wei, Zhu Zan served Cao Cao but died early. At Cao Zhen's urging, about 230 a fief was granted to Zhu Zan's son. -SGZ 9:282.

Zhu Zeng 竺曾 [Jugong 巨公]. When Dou Rong was appointed to the northwest in 23, he established a good relationship with Zhu Zeng the Commandant of Jiuquan, and when the Gengshi regime collapsed at Chang'an in 25, Zhu Zeng and his colleagues accepted Dou Rong's leadership. Zhu Zeng was named Administrator of the commandery.

In 31 Zhu Zeng's brother Ying killed a man in a vendetta. Zhu Zeng was ashamed and left the his office. Dou Rong then arranged his appointment as a general.

As Dou Rong brought his army east to assist Emperor Guangwu's attack on Wei Ao in the following year, Zhu Zeng and his fellows were awarded titles as marquises. -HHS 23/13:796-97, 805-06.

Zhu Zhan 朱展 (d.195). In 195 Zhu Zhan was a Palace Attendant to Emperor Xian. He accompanied the imperial party on its escape from Chang'an, but was killed in battle in Hongnong. -HHS 9:378.

Zhu Zhen 朱震 [Bohou 伯厚] (d.168); Chenliu. When Zhu Zhen was Registrar of his commandery another officer, Yuan Shuzhi, committed a small fault. The Administrator Guo Cong was angry and was going to punish him. All his fellow-officers were concerned, but Zhu Zhen stood up to Guo Cong and argued that Yuan Shuzhi was a grandson of a member of the Imperial Secretariat, and should not be treated in such fashion. So Yuan Shuzhi was released.

As a local officer of Yan province about 159, Zhu Zhen was widely admired for reporting the corrupt conduct of Shan Kuang, Administrator of Jiyin and kinsman of the court eunuch Shan Chao [see also sub Wei Yu].

In 168 Zhu Zhen was a magistrate in Pei, but when Chen Fan was killed at Luoyang he left his post to give the body burial. He also rescued Chen Fan's son Chen Yi and hid him in Ganling. Arrested and tortured, he died without speaking. -HHS 66/56:2171, XC 4:4b-5a, XHS 4:20b.

Zhu Zhi 朱祗/祗; Donghai. Zhu Zhi and Xiao Jian served as local officers under the Chancellor Zhao Zi. When Zhao Zi was dying he asked them to arrange a simple funeral. The two men escorted his body home and carried out his wishes, despite the protest of Zhao Zi's son Yin. -HHS 39/29:1314-15.

Zhu Zhi 朱質 see sub Zhu Yu 朱寓 of Pei.

Zhu Zhi 朱直. In 181 the eunuch Zhu Zhi was Bailiff of the Drying House, which served as the hospital and also the prison of the imperial harem [Bn 80:53]. When the Beauty Wang, mother of Liu Xie, future Emperor Xian, was killed by the Empress He, Emperor Ling had Zhu Zhi conceal the infant and find a wet-nurse for him. Later the boy's grandmother the Dowager Dong took over. -XHS 1:19a.

Zhu Zhi 朱治 [Junli 君理] (156-234); Danyang. As a junior officer in his county, Zhu Zhi was nominated Filial and Incorrupt and became an Assistant Officer of the province. A major with Sun Jian in 188, he then accompanied him to Changsha and served with success as Commandant of that commandery. He accompanied Sun Jian into the civil war, was at the capture of Luoyang in 191, became colonel with a special command, then went east to aid Tao Qian deal with Yellow Turbans in Xu province.

After Sun Jian was killed later that year, Zhu Zhi returned and looked after his family for a time. He took service with Yuan Shu and was then Commandant of Wu. As Liu Yao turned against Wu Jing and Sun Ce in 194 Zhu Zhi brought their family to safety in the east, and when Sun Ce moved on the commandery in 196 Zhu Zhi drove out the Administrator Xu Gong and took over government. In 197 he nominated Sun Quan as Filial and Incorrupt, and he supported his succession after Sun Ce's death in 200.

Zhu Zhi remained in Wu for over thirty years until his death, recognised as Administrator with a general's command, and provided with income from four fief cities. He encouraged leading local families to support Sun Quan, and paid special attention to the peaceful settlement of refugees and non-Chinese people in the hills. Though he later received enfeoffment and further promotion, and was always treated with respect and favour, he was noted for his personal restraint. -SGZ Wu 11:1303-05*.

Zhu [Zhongshao] 朱仲昭. In a letter written to Huang Qiong in 127, Li Gu refers to Zhu Zhongshao as a hermit scholar who was called to court and offered gifts, but did not distinguish himself. -HHS 61/51:2032; Vervoorn 90:294.

Zhu [Zhongsun] 朱仲孫. A gentleman cadet at Luoyang about 30, he gave lodging to the youthful student Ma Yan. -DGHJ 12:5a.

Zhu Zhuo 朱卓 see sub Zhu Yu 朱寓 of Pei.

Zhu Zun 朱遵 [Xiaozhong 孝仲] (d.24); Jianwei. In the early 20s, as Gongsun Shu began to extend his control over Yi province, Zhu Zun was Officer of Merit in Jianwei. He gathered a small force to resist the invaders at a river near the commandery capital, but his men were overwhelmed and Zhu Zun died in battle. Recognising his loyalty, Guangwu gave Zhu Zun posthumous title as a general, while the local officials established a shrine in his honour. -HYGZ 10B:157.

Zhuan Yi 傅毅 miswritten for Fu Yi 傅毅. -Forke 07:469.

Zhuang 莊 [surname] see also Yan 嚴. The original surname Zhuang was replaced by Yan in many texts to avoid taboo on the personal name of Emperor Ming of Later Han. See, for example, Bn 59:112.

Zhuang Ben 莊本; Zuopingyi [The surname appears also as Yan 嚴, and the personal name also as Ping 平 or Pi 丕.] In the time of Wang Mang Zhuang Ben was head of a strong local clan. Though they were registered in different commanderies it is likely that he was related to Zhuang Chun below.

In the autumn of 23 the armies of the Gengshi Emperor of Han defeated the last field force of Wang Mang and sent advance parties towards Chang'an. Zhuang Chun and other local leaders took title as generals in the name of Han, and as the main Han army halted at Huayin, their irregular troops ravaged the city and killed Wang Mang.

In 25 Zhuang Ben held command of a garrison camp west of Chang'an. In the tenth month, as the Red Eyebrows approached the capital, the Gengshi Emperor fled to him for refuge. Zhuang Ben was afraid that if he let the emperor go the Red Eyebrows would kill him, so he forced him to make terms with the Red Eyebrows. -HHS 11/1:475; Dubs 55:461, Bn 54:130, Bn 59:100.

Zhuang Chun 莊春 also as Yan Chun 嚴春 (d.26); Youfufeng. In the time of Wang Mang Zhuang Chun was head of a strong local clan. Though they were registered in different commanderies it is likely that he was related to Zhuang Ben above.

In the autumn of 23 the armies of the Gengshi Emperor of Han defeated the last field force of Wang Mang and sent advance parties towards Chang'an. Zhuang Chun and other local leaders took title as generals in the name of Han, and as the main Han army halted at Huayin, their irregular troops ravaged the city and killed Wang Mang.

In 26 the Red Eyebrows left Chang'an and came west up the valley of the Wei. Zhuang Chun fought them but was defeated and killed. -HHS 11/1:483; Dubs 55:461, Bn 54:130.

Zhuang Pi 莊丕 see Zhuang Ben 莊本.

Zhuang Ping 莊平 see Zhuang Ben 莊本.

Zhuang You 莊尤 I; also cited as Yan You 嚴尤: see the note on the surname above [Boshi 伯石] (d.23). A frontier general of Wang Mang, in 12 AD he argued for generous treatment of Zou 騶, chief of the Gaogouli/Koguryo people in the northeast, but later, under orders, tricked and killed him.

In the spring of 22 Zhuang You and his colleague Chen Mao gained a victory over the Troops from the Lower Yangzi. A year later, early in 23, they were sent against the Han rebels in Nanyang, but were heavily defeated by Liu Bosheng. In the summer Zhuang You and Chen Mao were with the army of Wang Yi which was destroyed at the battle of Kunyang. The two men fled to refuge with Liu Wang in Runan.

In the autumn, after the fall of Wang Mang, as Liu Wang took the imperial title in rivalry to the Gengshi Emperor, he named Zhuang You as his Grand Marshal and Chen Mao as Imperial Chancellor. That winter he and his party were attacked and killed by the Gengshi Emperor's general Liu Xin. -HHS 11/1:469-70; Bn 54:112, 75-77, Bn 59:29-35, Dubs 55:325-326, 430-468, QHX:748.

Zhuang You 莊尤 II; see Yan You 嚴尤 and also [as Yan Shuo 嚴說] sub Cen Peng.

Zhuge Gui 諸葛珪 [Jungong 君貢]; Langye. Father of Zhuge Jin, Zhuge Liang and Zhuge Jun, Zhuge Gui became Assistant in Taishan commandery, but died about 193. -SGZ Shu 5:911.

Zhuge Jin 諸葛瑾 [Ziyu 子瑜] (174-241); Langye. Son of Zhuge Gui, Zhuge Jin was seven years older than his brother Zhuge Liang, possibly born to a different mother: we are told that when Zhuge Jin's mother died he mourned her fully, then served his step-mother as a filial son should.

In the late 180s Zhuge Jin travelled to the capital, where he studied the Mao interpretation of the Classic of Poetry, the Classic of History, and Zuo zhuan. He later returned home. After his father died in the 190s, his uncle and brothers went to Yuzhang, but Zhuge Jin went separately for refuge south of the Yangzi. After the death of the young warlord Sun Ce in 200, Zhuge Jin was recommended to his brother and successor Sun Quan by Hong Zi, Sun Quan's brother-in-law, and joined his staff.

Gently persuasive, he had great influence with Sun Quan, and was able to make peace for him with his officers Zhu Zhi and Yin Mo. He became Chief Clerk and received title as a major. In 215 Sun Quan sent Zhuge Jin on embassy to Liu Bei, and he saw his brother Zhuge Liang for the first time in twenty years. They made a point of meeting only in public, and had no private contact.

In 219 Zhuge Jin took part in the attack which destroyed Guan Yu and seized Jing province; he was enfeoffed as a marquis and named Administrator of Nan commandery. As Liu Bei prepared to attack in 222, Zhuge Jin wrote to dissuade him, predictably without effect. Some suggested he might be treating privately with the enemy, but Sun Quan had no doubts of his loyalty.

Though not an enterprising commander, Zhuge Jin served successfully against Wei, and when Sun Quan took the imperial title in 229 he was named a chief general and given nominal appointment as Governor of Yu province.

Zhuge Jin remained an intimate and confidential adviser for another ten years. He was admired for his simplicity and elegance, and for his courtesy and good nature. When his wife died he took a concubine whom he loved and who bore him children, but he did not marry again.

Wu shu notes that although Zhuge Jin lacked the brilliance of Zhuge Liang, his position in Wu was almost comparable to that of his brother in Shu-Han, and in the following generation his son Zhuge Ke 恪 was favoured by Sun Quan and became extremely powerful. The family did remarkably well in troubled times. -SGZ Wu 7:1231-35*; Mather 76:514.

Zhuge Jun 諸葛均; Langye. Third son of Zhuge Gui, after his father's death Zhuge Jun and his elder brother Zhuge Liang went with their uncle Zhuge Xuan to Yuzhang. Zhuge Jun followed Zhuge Liang into the service of Liu Bei and became a colonel in Shu-Han. -SGZ Shu 5:911, 928.

Zhuge Li 諸葛禮. Administrator of Jiyin, Zhuge Li employed the youthful, good-looking but unduly emotional Rong Liang as his confidential clerk. -XC 8:12a.

Zhuge Liang 諸葛亮 [Kongming 孔明] (181-234); Langye. Son of Zhuge Gui, Zhuge Liang was a younger brother of Zhuge Jin. Zhuge Gui died when Zhuge Liang was young, and Zhuge Liang then accompanied his uncle Zhuge Xuan to his appointment as Administrator of Yuzhang. When Zhuge Xuan was driven from that territory in 195, Zhuge Liang went for refuge to Xuan's old friend Liu Biao, warlord Governor of Jing province.

Zhuge Liang grew to be eight feet tall [185 cm], and he compared his own abilities to those of the sage minister Guan Zhong 管仲. Few agreed with him, but he was a close friend of Cui Zhouping and Xu Shu, and the judge of character Sima Hui compared him to a sleeping dragon. On his recommendation, and at the behest of Xu Shu, Liu Bei called upon Zhuge Liang. Impressed with his strategic thinking, he took him into his service, and became closer to him than even his oath-brothers Guan Yu and Zhang Fei. Zhuge Liang also advised Liu Qi, son of Liu Biao, but with less success.

In 208 Zhuge Liang went on embassy to Sun Quan to seek aid for Liu Bei against Cao Cao's advance, and it is claimed that he persuaded him to act; cf., however, sub Lu Su and Zhou Yu. After the victory at the Red Cliffs, Zhuge Liang was sent to take over the south of Jing province, and when Liu Bei went west to Yi province three years later he left Zhuge Liang with Guan Yu to hold Jing province. In 213, as Liu Bei attacked Liu Zhang, Zhuge Liang brought assistance, and after Liu Bei took over in the west in 214 he put him in charge of administration, holding Chengdu while Liu Bei was on campaign. He worked with Fa Zheng, Liu Ba, Yin Ji and Li Yan to compile the administrative code Shu ke 屬科.

In 219 Zhuge Liang was one of the officials listed in the formal memorial to the emperor as Liu Bei took title as King of Hanzhong, and in 221 he encouraged Liu Bei to proclaim himself emperor. Zhuge Liang was named Imperial Chancellor of the new regime, with control of the Secretariat, and as Liu Bei was dying in 223 he left him plenipotentiary authority as regent for his son Liu Shan.

In fact, Zhuge Liang ruled the state until his death in 234, and despite his civilian background he demonstrated considerable military ability. He subjugated the south of Yi province in the mid-220s, then embarked on a series of campaigns north and east from Hanzhong. Though he gained several victories, however, he was ultimately unsuccessful, and Shu-Han never managed to break across the mountain barriers into the valleys of the Wei or the lower Han.

It does appear that Zhuge Liang's administrative ability made the state of Shu-Han viable, and he was admired for his ability to recruit good officers. His literary and political skills were celebrated, and later became legendary and even supernatural, so that he was credited with a number of inventions and stratagems, from the development of the wheel-barrow to the ruse of the Empty City 空城計 [on this last, however, cf. sub Wen Ping and Zhao Yun]. The romantic tradition which accepts Liu Bei as the great hero of his age credits Zhuge Liang as his finest assistant and successor, just like his ancient ideal, Guan Zhong. -SGZ Shu 5:911-31*; deC 96, Fang 52, Mather 76:515.

Zhuge Xuan 諸葛玄; Langye. After Zhuge Gui died in the early 190s, his brother Zhuge Xuan was named Administrator of Yuzhang. As he went to the post he took his nephews Zhuge Liang and Zhuge Jun with him. In 195 he was driven away by Zhu Hao, supported by the Inspector Liu Yao.

One account says that Zhuge Xuan was named as Administrator by the warlord Yuan Shu and that he later took refuge with his old friend Liu Biao in Jing province. Another version says he was nominated by Liu Biao and that after an initial defeat by Zhu Hao, he was killed in a mutiny in 196. -SGZ Shu 5:911.

Zhuo 卓 [personal name unknown]. A noted physician, in 215 he was called by Sun Quan to treat his officer Ling Tong, who had been seriously wounded. Ling Tong recovered. -SGZ Wu 10:1297.

Zhuo Chen 卓琴 or Zhuo Sen; Nanyang. Son of Zhuo Chong, he succeeded to the family fief. -HHS 25/15:872.

Zhuo Chong 卓崇; Nanyang. Younger son of Zhuo Mao, when his father became Grand Tutor to Emperor Guangwu in 25, Zhuo Chong was made a gentleman cadet with supernumerary title as Serving within the Yellow Gates.

When his father died in 28 Zhuo Chong succeeded to his marquisate, which was transferred from an honorary title to a district fief. He later held office as Minister of Finance. -HHS 25/15:871-72.

Zhuo Hui 濁惠; Hongnong. A local leader in 26, who had taken title as a general, Zhuo Hui surrendered to Emperor Guangwu's officer Feng Yi. -DGHJ 9:3b.

Zhuo Jing 卓京 or Zhuo Yuan 原. An officer of the Gengshi Emperor, in 25 Zhuo Jing sought to establish an alliance of the leading clans of Wei commandery with the Tanxiang and Five Towers bandit groups in opposition to Liu Xiu the newly-proclaimed Emperor Guangwu.

Guangwu sent Yao Qi as Administrator of Wei, who raised local levies to defeat Zhuo Jing. He pursued him west into the hills, killed dozens of his officers and captured his wife and children. -HHS 20/10:732-33.

Zhuo Long 卓隴 (d.103); Nanyang. Son of Zhuo Xin, he succeeded to the family marquisate. When he died without sons the fief was ended. -HHS 25/15:872.

Zhuo Mao 卓茂 [Zikang 子康 or Zirong 子容] (d.28); Nanyang. A man of established official family, Zhuo Mao studied at Chang'an during the time of Emperor Yuan of Former Han. He became an expert in the Classic of Poetry and in Ritual, and held office at the court and as magistrate of Mi county in Henan. His fine conduct and good government had great influence, so that even a plague of locusts spared his territory.

When Wang Mang took power as regent in 6 AD, Zhuo Mao left office on a plea of ill health and retired to his home, but the people remembered his excellent government and established a temple in his honour.

As the Gengshi Emperor claimed the throne in 23 he appointed Zhuo Mao chief of the Palace Attendants. He accompanied the court to Chang'an but, observing the turmoil, he retired once more on grounds of ill health and old age.

When Liu Xiu, Emperor Guangwu, took the imperial title in 25 he sought out Zhuo Mao and named him as his Grand Tutor. He gave him title as Marquis Who Proclaims Virtue 褒德侯, granted him a carriage and regalia, and appointed his two sons to office at court.

When Zhuo Mao died three years later he was buried with honours, and when Guangwu's son and successor Emperor Ming had the portraits of the great assistants of the founding emperor painted on the walls of the Cloud Terrace in the Southern Palace at Luoyang, Zhuo Mao was included.

As Emperor Huan took up the worship of Huang-Lao and the Buddha in 165, he ordered that all local shrines be abolished; Zhuo Mao's in Mi county was one of just two that were spared. -HHS 25/15:869-71*, 22/12:789-91; Bn 76:26, Bn 79:135-136, deC 80:79, Vervoor 90:133.

Zhuo Mou 卓茂 see Zhuo Mao 卓茂.

Zhuo Rong 卓戎; Nanyang. Son of Zhuo Mao, when his father became Grand Tutor to Emperor Guangwu in 25, Zhuo Rong was made a Palace Counsellor. Nothing more is recorded of him. When his father died in 28, Zhuo Rong's younger brother succeeded to his fief, so it is likely Zhuo Rong was already dead by that time. -HHS 25/15:871.

Zhuo Sen 卓琴 see Zhuo Chen 卓琴.

Zhuo Xin 訢; Nanyang. Son of Zhuo Chen/Sen, he succeeded to the family fief. -HHS 25/15:872.

Zhuo Xing 卓行; Hanzhong. A junior official, Zhuo Xing was responsible for construction work to repair the Baoye Road through the Qin Ling ranges. His contribution was recorded in a stele inscription of 148. -LS 4:5a.

Zhuo Ying 卓膺. As he turned against Liu Zhang in 212, Liu Bei sent Zhuo Ying and Huang Zhong to occupy Fu city in Guanghan on the approaches to Chengdu. -SGZ Shu 2:882.

Zhuo Yuan 卓原 see Zhuo Jing 卓京.

Zhuobing 涿兵; Xiongnu. A chieftain of the Northern Xiongnu, in 85 Zhuobing came to the frontiers with his colleague Cheli and other leaders, bringing a total of 73,000 people to surrender. -HHS 89/79:2950.

Zhuodi 涿鞮 of Further Jushi (d.97). King of Further Jushi in 96, Zhuodi heard that the Chinese garrison commander Suo Jun planned to depose him and place the pro-Han prince Xizhi on the throne. Believing that King Weibida of Nearer Jushi had spoken against him, Zhuodi attacked that state.

In the following year the Chief Clerk Wang Lin came with an army of Chinese commandery troops and non-Chinese auxiliaries. Zhuodi was defeated and attempted to flee to the Xiongnu, but he was caught and killed. -HHS 88/78:2930.

Zhuqi Chengxian 祝其承先 was Commandant of the Capital in the kingdom of Qinghe. -FSTY 5f:133.

[Zichang (style)] 子長 [surname and personal name unknown]; Wudu. A local officer of the commandery, in 172 this man joined in offsetting up a stele to commemorate the road construction work of the Administrator Li Yu. -LS 4:12b.

Zihou Lanqing 子后蘭卿; Nanyang. A cousin of Peng Chong, in 26 Zihou Lanqing was sent to Yuyang by Emperor Guangwu to persuade Peng Chong to obedience. Peng Chong persuaded him to join him, but as Zihou Lanqing had hostages at the Han court he did not entirely trust him. He therefore he kept him at a distance from his headquarters, and thus became vulnerable to the assassination plot of his slave Zimi.

After Peng Chong was murdered in 29, Zihou Lanqing took title as a general and proclaimed Peng Chong's son Wu as successor King of Yan 燕王. Their party was destroyed soon afterwards by the imperial forces. -HHS 12/2:503-05.

Zilu on the City Wall 城頭子路 see Yuan Zeng 爰曾.

Ziluo 則羅 of Suoju [Yarkand]. About 50 King Xian of Suoju captured Qiuzi [Kuqa], on the north of the Tarim basin. He named his son Ziluo as king, but because Ziluo was young Xian divided the state into two and had his officer Sijian rule in parallel. Some years later the people joined in rebellion to kill their alien rulers, and invited the Xiongnu to appoint a new king from their own nobility. -HHS 88/78:2924.

Zimi 子密. In 29 Zimi was a slave [蒼頭 cangtou] of Peng Chong the warlord of Yuyang. As Peng Chong was in the bedroom of a separate villa, apart from his main residence, Zimi and two others seized and bound him, then issued orders in his name that he should not be disturbed, that his officers should withdraw and all other slaves be put into fetters. Then they called in Peng Chong's wife and forced her to open the treasury.

Peng Chong tried to persuade the one man left to guard him to let him go, but the robbers returned, forced him to write an order to get them through the gates, then killed husband and wife. Taking two heads in silken bags, they presented them to the court of Emperor Guangwu at Luoyang, and Zimi claimed the reward of enfeoffment which had been offered. There was naturally concern at such treachery of a slave against his master, and Zimi was granted the title of Marquis Without Honour 不義侯. -HHS 12/2:504-05; Bn 59:131.

[Ziyou 子游] see Yun 允 [surname unknown]. -Nagata 94:50.

Zong 宗 [surname] also appears as Song 宋: see Bn 67:69.

Zong 宗, the Lady. Widow of Liu Shi, King of Qi, in 87 the Lady Zong and her sons Liu Huang and Liu Gang were found to have made false accusations against one another. Emperor Zhang ordered that Liu Huang be demoted to a marquis and Liu Gang's fief be reduced, while the Lady was stripped of her royal seal. -HHS 14/4:553-54.

Zong 宗 or Song 宋 [personal name unknown]; Nanyang. Son of Zong Yi, he was Director of Retainers and Administrator of Changsha. -HHSJJ 8:314 and 41/31:1505 Hui Dong citing LS 18:1a.

Zong Bo 宗伯 or Song Bo 宋伯; Nanyang. In the early part of the reign of Emperor Guangwu, Zong Bo was a General of the Household responsible for probationary cadets. -HHS 41/31:1411.

Zong Cheng 宗成 (d.23); Nanyang. As the empire fell into disorder after the destruction of Wang Mang, Zong Cheng took title as a general and went west to raid Hanzhong commandery. The effect of his incursions extended into Guanghan, where the local bandit Wang Cen killed the Governor appointed by Wang Mang, styled himself likewise as a general and declared his support for Zong Cheng.

Gongsun Shu, Administrator of Shu commandery, invited Zong Cheng south to Chengdu, but as Zong Cheng paid primary attention to plunder, Gongsun Shu explained to his people that he had mistakenly believed Zong Cheng to be a genuine officer of the new Han regime. Claiming that he himself had now received appointment from the Gengshi Emperor, he turned against Zong Cheng. Zong Cheng's officer Yuan Fu killed Zong Cheng and surrendered to Gongsun Shu with all his troops. -HHS 13/3:533-34; Bn 59:30.

Zong Cheng 宗誠; Liang. A grandson of the calendrical scholar Zong Gan, in 175 Zong Cheng presented as number of amendments to his method of forecasting eclipses of the moon, and also corrected a false forecast of the official Bureau of Astronomy. His system was put into effect and Zong Cheng was appointed to the Bureau.

In 179, however, the Court Astronomer Xiu recommended that Zong Cheng's system be replaced by the rival method of Feng [or Zhang?] Xun. As Zong Cheng's elder brother Zheng complained that his decision was based on false calculations, an edict ordered there be a full investigation, and the Minister of Ceremonies set up a committee of enquiry. After acrimonious debate, Zong Cheng's method was judged slightly the better and was restored, but because of the trouble they had caused Zong Cheng and Feng Xun were each fined two months salary, while Zong Zheng was sentenced to two months convict service. -HHS 92/2:3041-42.

Zong Cheng 宗承 [Shilin 世林]; Nanyang. Son of Zong Ci, Zong Cheng was a man of fine moral quality.

About 170 he dissuaded Yuan Shu from killing He Yong, an associate of his cousin and rival Yuan Shao.

About the same time, the youthful Cao Cao attempted to call upon him, but Zong Cheng refused to see him. Later, as Cao Cao took control of the court of Han in 196, he asked Zong Cheng if he did not regret his earlier rejection, but Zong Cheng refused to be impressed. Cao Cao was obliged to respect him. He had his son Cao Pi recognise him as a teacher, and named Zong Cheng Administrator of Hanzhong, a territory he did not yet control.

After Cao Cao destroyed the Yuan and took over Ji province, Zong Cheng went with him to Ye city He was admired by Chen Qun, who was responsible for personnel, but Cao Cao resented Zong Cheng's earlier conduct and did not give him high office.

Cao Pi appointed Zong Cheng as a courtier, and Cao Rui would have named him Chancellor, but Zong Cheng excused himself as being too old. -SGZ 10:322, HHSJJ 67/57:2428 jiaobu Hou Kang quoting Chuguo xianxian zhuan; Mather 76:581.

Zong Ci 宗慈 [Xiaochu 孝初]; Nanyang. Zong Ci was nominated Filial and Incorrupt by his commandery, and invited nine times to clerical office at the capital. He rejected all such offers, but in 154 he received special recommendation as Knowing the Way. He became a county magistrate in Henei, but resigned his office because the commandery Administrator was corrupt and subservient to powerful local interests.

Zong Ci was later appointed a Consultant, but died on the road to the capital. All the gentlemen of Nanyang admired his high standards, and he was numbered among the popular heroes in the lists compiled by the reformists and students of the University in the late 160s. -HHS 67/57:2202-03* & 2212.

Zong Diao 宗佻 see Zong Tiao 宗佻.

Zong Du 宗度 see Song Du 宋度.

Zong Gan 宗紺; Liang. A private scholar of the calendar, in 90 Zong Gan forecast an eclipse of the moon for the first month, while the Bureau of Astronomy had said it would fall in the second month. Zong Gan proved to be correct, the Court Astronomer Xun accepted his calculations for future use, Zong Gan was granted official appointment, and his system was adopted on a provisional basis. It was maintained for fifty-six years.

Sivin points out that although Zong Gan's method improved the Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] system, established five years earlier, it could not be formally approved without a full and imperially-sponsored reform of the calendar. -HHS 92/2:3040; Sivin 69:59.

1176 Zong Guang

Zong Guang 宗廣; Nanyang. An officer of Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu, early in 24 Zong Guang was left in charge of Xindu commandery while the Administrator Ren Guang went with Liu Xiu's army to attack the pretender Wang Lang. The local leader Ma Chong opened the gates of the capital to troops of Wang Lang, and Zong Guang was taken prisoner. As the city was recaptured a short time later, Zong Guang and other hostages were released unharmed.

When Liu Xiu took the imperial throne in 25, Zong Guang became a member of his Secretariat. He accompanied the army of Deng Yu against Chang'an, and was sent with the Staff of Authority to receive the submission of Huang Fang. At the end of the year, after the death of the Gengshi Emperor, Wang Kuang and other chieftains left the Red Eyebrows at Chang'an and came to Zong Guang to surrender. He escorted them to the east, but they "died while attempting to escape" before the party reached Luoyang.

In 26 Zong Guang was sent with orders to execute the general Wang Liang for disobeying his instructions in operations under Wu Han against the Tanxiang bandits. Since Wang Liang was an old comrade of the emperor, Zong Guang was reluctant to put him to death: he sent him to Luoyang in a cage cart, and Wang Liang did receive a pardon. -HHS 21/11:752, 755, 16/6:601-02, 22/12:775; Bn 59:101.

Zong Han 宗紺 see Zong Gan 宗紺. -Sivin 69:59.

Zong Han 宗漢 see Song Han 宋漢.

Zong Hong 宗弘; Liaodong. Having come from the northeast to join Cao Cao, about 207 Zong Hong was sent as Commandant of the Equipage on embassy to Gongsun Kang.

When Cao Pi succeeded his father in 220, Zong Hong was sent to Gongsun Kang's successor, Gongsun Gong. -SGZ 8:257-58; Gardiner 72B:143.

Zong Jing 宗京 or Song Jing 宋京; Nanyang. A kinsman of Zong Jun, Zong Jing taught the Classic of History according to the New Text interpretation of the Elder Xiahou. He later became Administrator of Liaodong. -HHS 41/31:1414.

Zong Ju 宗俱 or Song Ju 宋俱 [Boli 伯儺] (d.173); Nanyang. Grandson of Zong Yi, Zong Ju was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, served as captain of a gate at Luoyang, became a gentleman cadet, a Consultant, then a Gentleman of the Household in charge of cadets, and later a colonel in the Northern Army. He left the capital to be Administrator of Runan, but returned to hold a series of ministerial appointments.

In 171 Zong Ju was promoted from Minister of Ceremonies to be Excellency of Works. He died in office two years later. -HHS 8:333-34, 41/31:1416, LS 18:1a-2b.

Zong Jun 宗均 or Song Jun 宋均 [Shuxiang 叔庠] (d.76); Nanyang. Son of Zong Bo, Zong Jun entered the imperial service as a gentleman cadet through the ren right of his father. A keen scholar, at the age of fifteen he spent his free time studying with Academicians of the Imperial University, and he became expert on the Classic of Poetry and the Ritual. At the age of twenty he was appointed a county magistrate in Wuling, where he countered local shamanism by establishing schools and forbidding the practice of witchcraft. He left office when his grandmother died, and spent some time as a private citizen in Yingchuan commandery.

About 48 Zong Jun returned to office as an Internuncio at Luoyang. At this time the general Liu Shang attacked the non-Chinese of Wuling commandery, but his army was trapped by the tribesmen. When it was known that he was in trouble, but before his end was reported, Zong Jun was sent to raise three thousand men in Jiangxia and go to Liu Shang's relief. His appointment was no doubt due to his previous experience in the region, but it was fortunate that by the time he reached Jiangxia the news of Liu Shang's destruction arrived; Zong Jun's men would have been far too few to make a difference.

When Ma Yuan arrived for a further campaign in the following year Zong Jun was named Inspector of his army 監軍, evidently a senior adjutant. Though halted by the local defences and with troops suffering from illness, Ma Yuan forced the tribesmen to offer surrender. He died just at that time, however, and the other officers were hesitant but Zong Jun, now styled as an Internuncio, took the initiative: he forged an imperial edict and sent an envoy with its terms. When the enemy accepted, Zong Jun went to receive their submission, then sent them back to their homes and appointed officers to supervise them. He was liable to heavy punishment for his extra-legal initiative, but the emperor recognised the urgency of the moment and the need for speed, and Zong Jun was both pardoned and rewarded.

Zong Jun then became a magistrate in Runan. When instructions came from the commandery office prohibiting extravagance at funerals he refused to enforce the rule, arguing that such rituals were an essential part of civilised culture.

Promoted Administrator of Jiujiang, Zong Jun ruled very lightly. In a somewhat clichéd story, we are told that the territory was beset by tigers, and though people sought to trap them, they still caused harm. Zong Jun proclaimed that the tigers were only following natural instincts; they should be left in peace while the people concentrated on virtuous conduct. The tigers duly left the territory and crossed the Yangzi [FSTY 2:18-19 (as Song Jun) doubts the story of the tiger's migration: Nylan 83:401-403]. Again, when there was a plague of locusts through the region in 56, we are told that as the insects came to Jiujiang they divided left and right to avoid the commandery; Zong Jun was celebrated far and wide.

Perhaps more practically, Zong Jun dealt with a local non-Chinese cult; shamans required young men and women to enter into a mystical marriage with two sacred mountains, and to abstain thereafter from the human variety. No previous administrators had ventured to interfere, but Zong Jun ordered that such ceremonies should henceforth involve only the families of the shamans themselves; the custom soon ended. [FSTY 9:69; Nylan 83:530 (referring to Song Jun) describes harsher measures.]

In 58 Zong Jun was transferred to Dongping, where he made a point of recruiting Confucian scholars to office. After five years he was dismissed for some fault and went back once more to private life in Yingchuan, but the people had so admired his rule that thousands came to call for his return. Emperor Ming was impressed: he did not send Zong Jun back to Dongping, but in 64 he appointed him Director of the Imperial Secretariat. Zong Jun consistently supported the emperor, who admired his loyalty and his firm standards.

Transferred to be Director of Retainers and then Administrator of Henei, Zong Jun maintained an effective government in both offices. When he became ill the people offered prayers for him and held vigil day and night, but he asked permission to resign his post. Emperor Ming granted a cadet appointment to his son Tiao, and when Zong Jun came to offer thanks he sent eunuchs to enquire after his health. A position as Excellency was vacant at that time, and the ruler believed Zong Jun should fill it, but Zong Jun assured him that he was desperately ill. Emperor Ming granted him rich gifts, and Zong Jun died at home. -HHS 41/31:1411-14*, XC 2:6b-7a [surname as Song 宋]; Miyakawa 60:30, Bn 67:69-72, 80-81, deC 90:11-12, 16.

Zong Qian 宗謙 or Song Qian 宋謙 (d.162). Commandant of the Tiger Tooth Camp at Chang'an, in 162 he was found guilty of corruption. He died in prison. -HHS 7:311, 102/12:3256.

Zong Qing 宗慶. As Administrator of Changsha, Zong Qing found that many poor parents killed their newborn children. He persuaded elders of the community to prohibit the custom, thousands of infants were saved, and many of them were named Zong in his honour: Hulsewé 55:106 and cf. Jiao Biao. -XC 7:6a-b.

Zong Tiao 宗佻 or Song Tiao 宋佻; Nanyang. A member of the gentry, when Liu Xuan took title as Gengshi Emperor in 23 Zong Tiao was appointed Chief General of Agile Cavalry. In the summer of that year he held command among the Han forces at Kunyang. He escaped from the city with Liu Xiu and took part in the attack from outside which destroyed Wang Yi's army.

In 24 the Gengshi Emperor named Zong Tiao as king of a county in Yingchuan. -HHS 1A:6-7, 11/1:471, 41/31:1414; Bn 54:75, 119, Bn 59:54.

Zong Tiao 宗條 or Song Tiao 宋條; Nanyang. Son of Zong Jun, he was granted a cadet appointment in respect for his father, but later left the capital to escort him home. -HHS 41/31:1413.

Zong Xin 宗歆 (d.25). When Deng Yu was ordered west against the Gengshi Emperor in 24, he chose Zong Xin to be a general under his command. When Deng Yu turned to take control of the northern commanderies late in 25, he left Zong Xin and Feng Yin in Youfufeng to face the former capital. The two generals quarrelled about precedence; Feng Yin killed Zong Xin and turned against Deng Yu. -HHS 16/6:601-03.

Zong Xin 宗訢. In 143 Zong Xin was an officer in the Bureau of Astronomy at Luoyang responsible for the calendar. Bian Shao, a member of the Imperial Secretariat, presented a paper claiming that the current Sifen 四分 [Quarter Day] calendar was based upon the wrong base year (Sivin 69:59: "working epoch") and did not accord with the apocrypha. Zong Xin joined the Court Astronomer Yu Gong in arguing that while the calendar was not perfect, it was basically satisfactory and should not be changed. Emperor Shun agreed. - HHS 92/2:3036-37.

Zong [Wubo] 宗武伯; Nanyang or Dong? In the time of Emperor Ming, Zong Wubo was a colleague of Deng Biao in local office. Together with three other young men, all of whom were talented and ambitious and had the character bo in their styles, they were known locally as "the five elder brothers" -DGHJ 18:2a.

Though DGHJ says that the five were called "elder brothers of Nanyang" 南陽五伯, the same passage describes Zong Wubo as a man from Dong commandery, which was not even in the same province; he may have come as a migrant or as a travelling scholar.

Zong Yan 宗延 (d.76). In 76 Zong Yan was a county magistrate in Jincheng when one of his officers abducted the wife of a Qiang man of the Bi'nan tribe. The husband killed the man and fled across the frontier. Zong Yan went in pursuit, but the fugitive's fellow-tribesmen were afraid they too would be punished. So they killed Zong Yan, then joined other tribal groups in raiding the frontiers. -HHS 87/77:2881, 101/11:3232 [surname as Song 宋].

Zong Yi 宗意 or Song Yi 宋意 [Bozhi 伯志] (d.90); Nanyang. Son of Zong Jing, he followed his father's tradition of scholarship in the New Text interpretation of the Classic of History. In the time of Emperor Ming he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, became a magistrate in Tianshui/Hanyang, and about 76, at the beginning of the reign of Emperor Zhang, he was appointed to the Imperial Secretariat.

Showing particular favour to his uncles Liu Kang and Liu Yan the kings of Ji'nan and Zhongshan, Emperor Zhang had allowed them to reside at the capital and call regularly at the palace. Zong Yi felt that this was not a proper relationship between ruler and subject, and presented a memorial to say so. The emperor accepted his advice.

In 88 the Shanyu of the Northern Xiongnu was defeated and killed by the Xianbi, and the Southern Shanyu proposed an expedition to destroy the demoralised state. The Dowager Dou, regent for the young Emperor He, wanted to adopt this plan and appoint her brother Dou Xian as commander-in-chief. Zong Yi objected strongly, arguing that it was in the empire's interest for the barbarians to attack one another, that the weakness of the Xiongnu owed nothing to Chinese arms, and this was the successful policy of Emperor Guangwu. The current proposal would use men and money to assist the Southern Shanyu's personal political ambitions, but the natural course of events would see the dominance of the Xianbi.

Though Zong Yi's argument was supported by the most senior ministers, the Dowager was adamant and eventually gained her way. Dou Xian's expedition took place, the Northern Xiongnu were destroyed, and the steppe was indeed controlled by the Xianbi.

Zong Yi was transferred to be Director of Retainers. As the Dou clan increased their power after the triumph over the Xiongnu, a number of officials and gentlemen took advantage of their connection to act without the law. Zong Yi reported their conduct, but the regency government took no action and he was now known as an enemy of the Dou faction. He became ill and died soon afterwards. -HHS 41/31:1414-16*.

Zong You 宗由 see Song You 宋由.

Zong Yu 宗育. Appointed as Administrator of Xihe by the Gengshi Emperor, in 25 Zong Yu sent his son as hostage and submitted to Emperor Guangwu's general Deng Yu. -HHS 16/6:603.

Zong Yu 宗預 [Deyan 德豔] (d.264); Nanyang. In 214 Zong Yu accompanied Zhang Fei into Yi province, and in the early 220s he joined the staff of Zhuge Liang. He served as an envoy to Wu, became a chief general and was enfeoffed. Together with Liao Hua, he died on the road to Luoyang after the surrender to Wei. -SGZ Shu 15:1075-76*.

Zong Yuan 宗員. Protector of the Wuhuan in 184, Zong Yuan brought non-Chinese auxiliaries to assist Lu Zhi against the Yellow Turbans. -HHS 64/54:2118.

Zong Zhan 宗湛. Early in the reign of Emperor Zhang Zong Zhan was Administrator of Pengcheng. There was a severe drought, but Yang Tong, magistrate of Pengcheng, called the forces of Yin and Yang to bring rain to his county. Zong Zhan had him perform the same ritual for the commandery as a whole, and the drought was broken. -HHS 30/20A:1047.

Zong Zheng 宗整; Liang. A grandson of the calendrical scholar Zong Gan, Zong Zheng served for a time in the Bureau of Astronomy. He then retired to private life, but about 175 he sent in a proposal for a new approach to calculating eclipses, relying upon the course of the moon. Though his method was checked and found correct, the Court Astronomer Shan Yang believed it represented only a slight improvement over the system currently in use.

In 180 Zong Zheng complained that the Court Astronomer Xiu had preferred the inaccurate system of the officer Feng Xun to that of his brother Zong Cheng for forecasting eclipses of the moon. The emperor ordered an investigation, and after acrimonious argument Zong Cheng's method was indeed found to be better and was accordingly restored. Because of the trouble they had caused, however, Zong Cheng and Zhang Xun were each fined two months salary, while Zong Zheng was sentenced to two months convict service. -HHS 92/2:3030, 3041-42; Sivin 69:60-61.

Zong Zhong 宗仲 see Song Chong 宋冲.

Zong Zhong 宗忠 see Song Chong 宋忠/衷.

Zong Zi 宗資 or Song Zi 宋資 [Shudu 叔都]; Nanyang. A man of old official family, Zong Zi was a grandson of Zong Jun. Having studied the Book of Changes and the New Text Classic of History at the imperial capital, he was nominated Filial and Incorrupt, became a Consultant, and was later Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, head of the Censorate.

In 160 Zong Zi was named General of the Household and sent to attack the bandit Shusun Wuji of Taishan. After some setbacks, he eventually destroyed him.

A year or so later Zong Zi was appointed Administrator of Runan. He chose Fan Pang to be his Officer of Merit and accepted his judgement on all personnel. The commandery was well governed, but Fan Pang's influence was so strong that people sang how he was the real Administrator, and Zong Zi no more than a cipher. Zong Zi had no hesitation in ascribing credit to Fan Pang, but his own achievement was celebrated, and he too was numbered among the worthy men in lists compiled by the reformists and students of the University. -HHS 7:307, 67/57:2186-87 & 2205, XC 4:7b.

Zong Zi 宗茲 see Zong Ci 宗茲.

Zong [Ziqing] 宗子卿; Nanyang. In the winter of 218, as the people of Wan city suffered heavy demands for labour services, the garrison officer Hou Yin led a mutiny, seized the city, and called people from the hills to support him. He also captured the Administrator Dongli Gun and planned to hold him as a hostage while he invited the Shu-Han general Guan Yu to send an army.

Evidently seeking additional local support, Hou Yin appointed Zong Ziqing as Officer of Merit. Zong Ziqing persuaded Hou Yin that it was unworthy of him to hold Dongli Gun. When he let him go, however, Zong Ziqing escaped over the walls and joined Dongli Gun to collect loyal troops outside the city. They returned to lay siege to Hou Yin, until in the spring of 219 a major army under Cao Ren arrived and the rebellion was destroyed. -SGZ 1:51.

Zou Bin 鄒邠 [Boqi 伯岐]; Wu. Zou Bin compiled Xuan si 玄思, a commentary to the Taixuan jing 太玄經 "Classic of the Great Mystery" by Yang Xiong 楊雄 and Jian lun 檢論, on the Xin lun of Huan Tan. -Lun heng 37; Forke 07:468-469; Yao Zhenzong:2381.

Zou Dan 鄒丹 (d.195). Administrator of Yuyang for Gongsun Zan, Zou Dan was defeated and killed by rebels led by Yan Rou. -SGZ 8:474.

Zou Jing 鄒靖. As a colonel in 184 Zou Jing fought the Yellow Turbans in the north. As Adjutant of the Northern Army in 185, he recommended recruiting troops from the Xianbi, rather than from the Wuhuan, to fight the rebels of Liang province. -HHS 46/36:1609, SGZ Shu 2:872.

Zou Lin 鄒臨; Kuaiji. A local leader on the upper Min River in present-day Fujian, Zou Lin was conquered by He Qi in 203. -SGZ Wu 15:1378.

Zou Qi 鄒岐. Administrator of Anding in 220, Zou Qi was appointed Inspector of the newly-restored Liang 涼 province, in the corridor of present-day northwest Gansu. The local leaders at first refused to admit him, but he was set in place after the successes of Su Ze.

As new disturbances broke out in the following year, Zou Qi was replaced by Zhang Ji. He later became Inspector of Xu province. -SGZ 15:474.

Zou Tuo 鄒他 (d.199); Wu. A local leader, Zou Tuo opposed Sun Ce in 196 but was defeated and killed. -SGZ Wu 1:1105.

Zu 祖 [surname unknown]. In 220 a colonel in the Northern Army, with personal name Zu and enfeoffment as a village marquis, was one of the sponsors of a stele commemorating Cao Pi's assumption of the imperial title. Goodman suggests this man may have been Guo Zu from Taishan. -LS 19:4a-b; Goodman 98:197.

Zu Lang 祖郎; Danyang. A local leader, Zu Lang defeated Sun Ce in a skirmish about 194, but was driven into the southern hills by Wu Jing. Allied to Chen Yu in 197, and to Yuan Shu in 198, he led hills people against Sun Ce. He was captured, but Sun Ce held no ill-will and appointed him to his staff. -SGZ Wu 1:1103, 1107, 6:1212.

Zu Mao 祖茂. In 190 Sun Jian's troops were defeated by Dong Zhuo's general Xu Rong, and Sun Jian was surrounded. Zu Mao, an officer of Sun Jian's bodyguard, or Companions 親近, took Sun Jian's red cap, broke through the enemy lines, and attracted their pursuit. Sun Jian escaped capture, and Zu Mao also got away. -SGZ Wu 1:1096.

Zu Mou 祖茂 see Zu Mao 祖茂.

Zu Shan 祖山; Danyang. Zu Shan and Chen Pu were chieftains of non-Chinese people in the Huang Shan range of southern Danyang. They and their Chinese allies were conquered by He Qi in 208. -SGZ Wu 15:1378.

Zu Si 卒巳 see Xin Si 辛巳. -HYGZ 10C:165.

Zuo 左, the Ladies, see Zuo [Da'e] 左大娥 and Zuo [Shao'e] 左小娥.

Zuo 左, the Lady; Jianwei. The Lady was married to a son of Xiang Deng but, like his father, he died young. Though only nineteen at that time, the Lady followed the example of her mother-in-law, the Lady Zhou Du, in maintaining devotion to her late husband, though not by such drastic physical methods. The two women were widely admired. -HYGZ 10B:160.

Zuo Biao 左表 [Yuanyi 元異] (d.150); Xihe. A former General of the Household commissioned with the Staff of Authority 使者持節中郎將, Zuo Biao had a stele set up at his tomb. -Nagata 94:106.

Zuo Ce 左慈 [Yuanfang 放元]; Lujiang. Expert in magical arts and longevity, Zuo Ce nourished his vital essence by controlled breathing and by coupling with a number of different women without ejaculation, and he could live for long periods without eating. He had studied the Confucian classics, was skilled at astrology, and received a copy of Wuyue zhenxing tu 五嶽真形圖 "Veritable Images of the Five Sacred Peaks," a set of mystical diagrams, from his teacher Feng Heng [Feng Junda].

It is said that at some time before 200 the warlord Sun Ce wanted to kill Zuo Ce and chased him on horseback, but found that although his quarry appeared to walk slowly he was moving too swiftly to be caught. [A similar skill is ascribed to Ji Zixun; and for similar hostility shown by Sun Ce towards men of powers, see sub Gan Ji.]

Zuo Ce was among the magicians who were granted a pension at court by the warlord Cao Cao. His biographies say that he provided exotic fish by magic, and sent instant messages over hundreds of miles. On another occasion he fed a whole court assembly from apparently inexhaustible bowls of meat and wine, but it was then found that he had magicked the stock of every wine shop in the region to serve his purpose. Cao Cao tried to arrest him, but Zuo Ce walked through walls and then disguised himself in a flock of sheep until Cao Cao announced that he had only been trying to test his abilities.

Zuo Ce retired from the world to practise his arts among the mountains; it is claimed that lived until 306. -HHS 82/72B:2747-48*, SGZ 29:805; Ngo 76:137-139, DeWoskin 83:83-86, Sailey 78:333.

Though Cao Cao gave appointment to Zuo Ce and his colleagues, and may have been interested in the possibilities of longevity, his son Cao Zhi claimed that such patronage was intended only to keep these men and their wild teachings under control; he and his family gave them no credence.

Zuo Chang 左昌. As rebellion broke out in Liang province in 184 the Inspector Zuo Chang raised an army to attack the insurgents, but he also took the opportunity to appropriate quantities of military stores for his own profit. When his officer He Xun protested, Zuo Chang sent him to an exposed outpost against the enemy; in that position, however, He Xun achieved considerable success.

As the rebels attacked Yuanya, capital of Jincheng commandery, He Xun urged Zuo Chang to go the relief, but he made no move and the city was taken. The rebels then advanced into Hanyang and laid siege to Zuo Chang's own headquarters at Ji city, capital of Hanyang commandery. Zuo Chang called for help, He Xun came to his aid, and the rebels withdrew. Soon afterwards Zuo Chang was dismissed for his embezzlement. -HHS 58/48:1880; deC 89:187.

Zuo Cheng 左稱 also as Zuo Sheng 勝 (d.165); Henan. Elder brother of the eunuch Zuo Guan, about 155 Zuo Cheng was appointed Administrator of Hedong. He was later awarded a marquisate, presumably in reward for Zuo Guan's role in the coup against Liang Ji, and early in 165 he was Minister Coachman.

Soon afterwards Zuo Cheng was impeached by the Director of Retainers Han Yan for corruption in office and for the misconduct of the family's retainers in their home country. Zuo Guan was implicated, and both committed suicide. -HHS 7:314, 78/68:2522; deC 89:57.

HHS 64/54:2122 describes Zuo Sheng 勝 as Administrator of Hedong, while HHS 102/12:3257, has Zuo Sheng as the suicidal Coachman; this latter text, with HHS 7:314, is evidence that the two men were the same.

Zuo Chenghuangzu 左丞黃祖 see Zuo Chengzu 左丞祖.

Zuo Chengzu 左丞祖/承祖 also as Zuo Chenghuang [黃]zu; Beihai. A local gentleman noted for his ability in planning, he joined the staff of the Chancellor Kong Rong in the 190s, but was paid no attention. Later he argued to Kong Rong that he was too isolated, and he should make alliance either with Cao Cao or with Yuan Shao. Claiming that such talk was treasonous, Kong Rong killed him. -SGZ 12:372, HHS 70/60:2264; deC 96:203.

Zuo [Da'e] 左大娥, the Lady; Jianwei. The Lady was a niece of Zuo Sheng. After he was disgraced and executed, she and her younger sister Shao'e were taken into the imperial harem, where they grew to be both beautiful and talented. It appears that the Lady, like her sister, was granted by Emperor He to one of the kings of the imperial clan, probably to Liu Qing, King of Qinghe, but she did not receive the same fortune and favour. Da'e and Shao'e both died and were buried at the capital. -HHS 55/45:1803.

Zuo Dang 左黨 (d.165); Nanyang. Younger brother of the eunuch Zuo Guan and of the minister Zuo Sheng, Zuo Dang was enfeoffed as a district marquis. In 165, as Zuo Cheng and Zuo Guan were impeached and forced to commit suicide, Zuo Dang shared their fate. -HHS 102/12:3257.

Zuo Fang 左防. Formerly officers of the Gengshi Emperor, in 27 Zuo Fang and Wei/Han Yan controlled two counties in Nanyang. Guangwu's officers Zhai Zun and Zang Gong came to attack them, and the two men surrendered. -HHS 18/8:692.

Zuo Guan 左棺/愆 (d.165); Nanyang. In 146, soon after Emperor Huan had come to the throne, the General-in-Chief Liang Ji attacked the senior ministers Li Gu and Du Qiao. The eunuchs Zuo Guan and Tang Heng also told the young ruler how the two men had opposed his accession; Li Gu and Du Qiao were executed.

In 159 Zuo Guan and Tang Heng were Attendants at the Yellow Gates when Emperor Huan asked Tang Heng who might help him get rid of Liang Ji. Zuo Guan was one of four he recommended, for Liang Ji's brother Liang Buyi had at some time arrested his brother and Zuo Guan had had to plead to get him released. After the coup was successful [see sub Ju Yuan], the five chief conspirators were awarded county marquisates and a cash donation, while Zuo Guan and Tang Heng were promoted to be Regular Attendants.

The favoured eunuchs presumed on their influence to live in luxury, building great mansions and taking women of good family as [decorative and titular?] concubines. They adopted unrelated children and even slaves to maintain their lineages, while their kinsmen held high office. Zuo Guan's brothers Min and Cheng ruled badly in Chenliu and in Hedong, and Cheng became a Minister.

Popular discontent was supported by fierce criticism from regular officials, but they were largely ignored by Emperor Huan, and Zuo Guan was highly trusted. Early in 165 he was sent as special imperial envoy to carry out sacrifice to the sage-divinity Laozi 老子 at his notional birthplace in Chen.

Later that year, however, Zuo Cheng was impeached by the Director of Retainers Han Yan for corruption in office, and he also implicated Zuo Guan for the misconduct of the family retainers in their home country. Zuo Cheng, Zuo Guan and their brother Zuo Dang all killed themselves. -HHS 78/68:2520-22*, 102/12:3297; Ch'ü 72:476-480, Bn 76:94-95, deC 89:12-14.

Zuo Ji 左姬, the Lady: see the Lady Zuo Shao'e 左少娥.

Zuo Jun 左駿. In the early 160s robbers broke into the tomb of Emperor Shun, stole some of the imperial grave-goods, and offered them for sale in the market at Luoyang. The chief of the market chased but could not catch them. Taking over from the Director of Retainers, the Director of the Secretariat Zhou Jing ordered Zuo Jun, one of the guards Rapid as Tigers, to find the thieves within three days. Zuo Jun did so. -HHS 45/35:1537.

Zuo Li 左立. Zuo Li's name appears in the colophon to the Stone Classics edition of Analects engraved at Luoyang in the early 180s. He is described there as an Academician. -LS 14:13a.

Zuo Ling 左靈. In 195 Zuo Ling accompanied Emperor Xian from his palace to the encampment of Li Jue. -SGZ 6:183.

Zuo Long 左隆; Yingchuan. Having been recommended by his fellow-countryman Feng Yi, in 23 Zuo Long joined the staff of Liu Xiu, future Emperor Guangwu. He accompanied him to Luoyang, but is not mentioned again. -HHS 17/7:640.

1182 Zuo with the Long Moustache

Zuo with the Long Moustache 左髭丈八 [lit. "a moustache eighty feet long"] see Zuo Zizhangba 左髭丈八.

Zuo Min 左敏; Henan. Younger brother of the palace eunuch Zuo Guan, Zuo Min became Administrator of Chenliu. He governed badly. -HHS 78/68:2521.

Zuo Qiaoyun 左喬雲; Guanghan. Adopted son of Zuo Tong, Zuo Qiaoyun was thirteen years old when Zuo Tong was arrested. Zuo Tong was about to have his legs broken, but Zuo Qiaoyun killed the officer concerned and helped Zuo Tong to escape. The official in charge was going to chase the pair, but when he heard how Zuo Qiaoyun was just a boy he wept in admiration. -HYGZ 10B:150.

Zuo [Shao'e] 左少娥, the Lady; Jianwei. The Lady was a niece of Zuo Sheng. After he was disgraced and executed the Lady and her elder sister Da'e were brought into the imperial harem. They grew to be beautiful and talented, and Shao'e studied the histories and enjoyed literary composition.

Emperor He gave some ladies of his harem to kings of the imperial clan, and so Zuo Shao'e entered the household of Liu Qing, King of Qinghe. She was especially favoured by the king and gave birth to his eldest son Liu You, future Emperor An.

The Lady died before 106, while Liu Qing was still at Luoyang, and she was first buried with her sister near the capital. When Liu Qing died in 106, the body of the Lady Zuo was re-entombed with him in Qinghe.

After the death of the regent Dowager Deng in 121, the Lady's son Emperor An awarded her posthumous title as an empress, sent missions of ceremony to her tomb, and appointed her half-brothers and nephews to junior office in Qinghe. -HHS 55/45:1803-04, 5:203, 232.

The Lady is also referred to as Zuo Ji 姬. This may be a sobriquet, "Concubine Zuo," or Ji may have been her personal name.

Zuo Sheng 左聖; Jianwei. During the reign of Emperor He Zuo Sheng was executed for witchcraft, having sought to cast spells or curses 妖言. As his family and dependents were implicated, his two young nieces Da'e and Shao'e were taken into the imperial harem. -HHS 55/45:1803, XHS 1:14a.

Zuo Sheng 左勝 see Zuo Cheng 左稱. -HHS 102/12:3256.

Zuo Tasheng 左達生; Jianwei. Son of Zuo Sheng and younger half-brother of the Lady Zuo Shao'e, in 121 Zuo Tasheng, his brother Zi, and their nine sons and nephews, were appointed Gentlemen at the court of Qinghe. -HHS 55/45:1805.

Zuo Tong 左通; Guanghan. Zuo Tong was found guilty of a crime and tried to flee, but was recaptured. He was going to have his legs broken, but was saved by his adoptive son Zuo Qiaoyun. -HYGZ 10B:150.

Zuo Xi 左習; Jianwei. Zuo Xi was a client of Dong Tai in the late second century. When the young widow Han Jiang refused their patron's hand, Zuo Xi and his colleague Wang Su abducted her and forced her into the marriage. The Lady Han killed herself, and when the Administrator learned of the affair he had Zuo Xi and Wang Su executed to avenge her death. -HYGZ 10B:160.

Zuo Xian 作顯 became Administrator of Zhuo commandery. -FSTY 5f:123.

Zuo Xiang 左向. Chancellor of Pengcheng, Zuo Xiang was arrested for embezzlement, but though he was examined by torture he refused to provide the confession required for a guilty verdict. When he was courteously and gently treated by the junior officer Deng Sheng, however, he admitted his wrongdoing. -HHSJJ 66/56:2388 Hou Kang.

Zuo Xiao 左校 see Zuoxiao 左校.

Zuo Xiong 左雄 [Bohao 伯豪] (d.138); Nanyang. About 120 Zuo Xiong was named Filial and Incorrupt and he later became Inspector of Ji province. He was noted for his frugality and his simple life – he rejected the customary welcome with fireworks, for his refusal to accept overtures from powerful local families, and for his willingness to report senior officials who were corrupt.

At the beginning of the reign of Emperor Shun Zuo Xiong was called to the capital as a Consultant, and soon made his mark when he accused several high officials of incompetence and laziness. Recommended by the influential reformer Yu Xu, he was appointed to the Imperial Secretariat and swiftly promoted to be its Director. With Yu Xu as Deputy Director, he sought to use the office, with its close connection to the emperor, as the base for political change.

In a preliminary memorial, Zuo Xiong criticised the general corruption and irresponsibility of local officials, the manner in which ordinary people were oppressed and plundered by taxation, and the failure of inspectors to keep check. Concerned at such weakness of control, he urged a number of reforms, including life-time proscription for wrong-doing, without benefit of amnesty, and punishment for family members of any official who fled from impeachment. On the other hand, he urged that good officials should be sought out and promoted, and Confucian scholars should be encouraged to serve as local officers, with an eye to future substantial appointment. He also argued that officials should be expected to remain in their posts long enough to ensure consistency in administration, that the right to leave office should be restricted, and mourning leave should be permitted only for the death of a parent.

It is said that the emperor was impressed, but when he opened the proposals for comment, there was reluctance and opposition. While Zuo Xiong, unlike Yu Xu, had not aimed his reforms at the eunuchs, many would have been worried at the emphasis on Confucian virtues and on the strengthening of local government. In the event, little was done, and the situation in the provinces is said to have deteriorated still further.

In 128, after a series of earthquakes and floods, and outbreaks of banditry in the east of the empire, Zuo Xiong presented a second major memorial, this time criticising the harshness of the laws, the extension of punishment to affect whole clans, and the need for stronger administration. Again it appears that many vested interests were doing well from the current situation, and there was continuing tolerance for the opportunities offered by corruption and influence.

Zuo Xiong's proposals for restoration of the Imperial University, however, were well received and were followed by action. Though Emperor Zhang and Emperor He had supported the institution, the stultifying effect of the official New Text teachings meant that it had fallen into decline, and though the regent Dowager Deng had initiated some reforms, it was again neglected during Emperor An's personal rule. Ten years later it was said that the Academicians failed to teach, their pupils would not study, that the buildings were in ruins and the site had reverted to pasture and gleaning.

In 131 Zuo Xiong urged the restoration of the University and increased attention of Confucian scholarship. Work on the physical plant was duly begun in the winter, and in the course of the following year an army of more than 110,000 convicts completed 140 buildings and 18,500 rooms. At the same time, leading Confucian scholars were recruited as Academicians, scholarships were offered, and the number of students grew. Though direct entry to the bureaucracy through examinations was still limited, a few more places were added, while time spent at the University formed part of the curriculum vitae for many young men of the gentry and frequently preceded their entry into local government office or nomination for commissioned rank. Also on Zuo Xiong's advice, it was ordered that senior Confucian scholars throughout the provinces should be appointed as gentlemen cadets and members of the Suite of the Heir at the capital, and as gentlemen at the courts of the various kings.

The reconstruction and restoration of the University demonstrated Emperor Shun's formal commitment to Confucian ideals, and as patronage continued and grew in later years, notably under the influence of the Liang family of his empress, the University became a centre of reformist activism.

In 132, still seeking to improve the morality and the ability of officials, Zuo Xiong called for major changes to the procedure for Filial and Incorrupt nominations. Unless they had exceptional talent, candidates should be at least forty years old, should be trained in the Confucian classics and/or should be competent to draft official documents. They were to be examined for quality by the Excellencies and the Secretariat. This reform was also accepted, and was promulgated by edict at the end of the year.

Raising this age limit contrasts with Zuo Xiong's policy towards the University. There he nominated Xie Lian and Zhao Jian, two boys of eleven who had each mastered one of the classics, as Junior Gentlemen, which gave early entrance and probation for a post in the civil service. It appears Zuo Xiong was attempting to make the University the main route of entry to the civil service, and restrict the commandery nominations which were often controlled by local influence.

Such restriction, however, soon proved quite impracticable. It is true that one corps of cadets was reserved for men over fifty, but forty is an advanced age to begin a career, many leading officials of Han held positions of authority well before that age, and among the rulers of Later Han only Guangwu and Emperor Ming had reached it. Several commanderies, moreover, would have had difficulty in filling their annual quota of nominees, and a shortage of candidates is surely reflected in an additional edict issued a few weeks later, calling for candidates who had been approved to present additional nominations of their own.

There was in any case widespread opposition to the new arrangements. Hu Guang, Zhang Heng and other senior officials presented objections, and the celebrated hermit Lang Yi also argued the conservative case. Zuo Xiong did succeed in embarrassing and rejecting the under-age candidate Xu Shu, but Xu Shu was a talented man who later distinguished himself as a General on the Liao, while Zuo Xiong's two academic protégés, Xie Lian and Zhao Jian, do not appear again in the histories.

It is claimed that the nomination process was kept free of corruption until the death of Emperor Shun, but one must wonder how long this remained the case after Zuo Xiong left office a few years later, and as the power and patronage of the Liang consort family developed from the second half of the 130s. Certainly the new requirements for age were soon honoured rather in the breach than in the observance. At HHSJJ 6:269 jiaobu the modern scholar Hou Kang cites stele set up for Wu Ban and Wu Rong: Wu Rong was nominated Filial and Incorrupt about 160 when he was thirty-six sui, but Wu Ban received the nomination at the age of twenty-five sui, no later than the early 140s. On further developments of the recruitment system, see also sub Huang Qiong.

While Zuo Xiong may have had some success in reforming the University and the recruitment system, such achievements were marginal compared to the on-going problem of quality and morality in the civil service, and he was faced on several occasions by a personal interest of the emperor himself.

Wet-nurse to Emperor Shun as a child, the Lady Song E remained a favourite, and in 133 the emperor proposed to grant her a fief. This was ostensibly as a reward for her assistance in his accession, though other such enfeoffments had been granted six years earlier. Zuo Xiong opposed the idea, took the occasion of an earthquake to draw comparison with the earlier grant to the Lady Wang Sheng, wet-nurse to Emperor An, which had been accompanied by similar portents, and argued that such action was wrong and unlawful. The emperor vacillated: he initially sent the Lady Song back to her residence, but later granted her title to a county. With similar lack of success, Zuo Xiong also opposed the enfeoffment of Liang Ji, brother of the new empress, who would later dominate the government.

In all his arguments, Zuo Xiong was primarily concerned with the long-term structure of power. He planned for a bureaucracy controlled by gentlemen of Confucian standards, and he sought to limit the position of such people as the Lady Song, the palace eunuchs and the Liang family, who held influence through their proximity to the throne and their relationship to the ruler. Emperor Shun, however, was not yet twenty, and while he may have paid lip service to the principles of impartial government – he had himself suffered from his father's abuse of personal power – he was reluctant to accept all its terms. It appears that Zuo Xiong's confrontation with the emperor on the case of Song E marked the beginning of his own fall from favour and influence.

In a third case, Zuo Xiong protested when the disgraced Minister of Finance Liu Ju was threatened with a beating: such physical punishment did not accord with tradition nor with the dignity of office. On this occasion the emperor accepted his argument.

In 134 Zuo Xiong was transferred to become Director of Retainers. Though this was also a significant censorial position, the office did not have such broad authority as the Secretariat, and in the following year Zuo Xiong was demoted on account of some fault. He returned to the Secretariat as a regular officer and died in that post. -HHS 6:261, 61/51:2015-22*, XC 3:11a-b; Bn 80:136, Loewe 86C:306-307.

Zuo Yi 左姬, the Lady: see the Lady Zuo Shao'e 左少娥.

Zuo Yu 左于. When Deng Yu was ordered west against the Gengshi Emperor in 24, he chose Zuo Yu to be a general under his command, possibly as a senior member of his staff. -HHS 16/6:601.

Zuo Yuan 左原; Chenliu. About 160 Zuo Yuan was a student in the commandery academy, but was expelled for some crime. Guo Tai met him and sought to comfort him by references to worthy men of former times who had overcome similar setbacks.

Zuo Yuan later prepared to avenge his humiliation by an attack on his former fellows, but hearing that Guo Tai was visiting the academy at that time, he felt ashamed and abandoned the plan.

Some people had questioned Guo Tai's kindness to a wrong-doer, but the story of the potential threat was discovered later and all were appropriately grateful. -HHS 68/58:2227-28; deC 89:47.

Zuo Zi 左次; Jianwei. Son of Zuo Sheng and younger half-brother of the Lady Zuo Shao'e, in 121 he and his brother Tasheng and their nine sons and nephews were appointed Gentlemen at the court of Qinghe. -HHS 55/45:1805.

Zuo [Ziyi] 左子邑. A calligrapher at the end of Later Han, Zuo Ziyi was widely admired, though his work was not considered to reach the standard of Handan Chun and Liang Gu. -JS 36:1064.

Zuo Zizhangba 左髭丈八 [Zuo with the Long Moustache] (d.193). A leader among the Black Mountain bandits in the Taihang range in 185, he was killed by Yuan Shao in 193. -HHS 71/61:2310, 74/64A: 2381, SGZ 8:262, 6:194. The last two characters appear also as Wenba 文八, but this is a less likely sobriquet.

Zuoxiao 左校 [Enclosure of the Left] (d.193). A leader among the Black Mountain bandits in the Taihang range in 185, his sobriquet was no doubt taken from the title of the officer in charge of convict labourers. He was killed by Yuan Shao in 193. -HHS 71/61:2310, 74/64A:2381, SGZ 8:262, 6:194; deC 89:587.

TABLE 3: SUMMARY OF THE LINEAGE OF DENG YU OF NANYANG¹

¹ Deng Chen 鄧晨, a kinsman of Deng Yu from the same county, was an old friend and supporter of Emperor Guangwu and had married his sister. Later generations of his descendants, however, did not maintain the same close connection to the throne.

² Two sons appear to have been born between Zhen and Xun, and six, including Gai, between Xun and Hong; see sub Deng Yu.

³ Deng Bao is described as a cousin of the Empress Deng, but it is not known by which lineage.

⁴ The name of this son of Deng Bao and the Princess Liu Biede 劉別得 is not recorded.

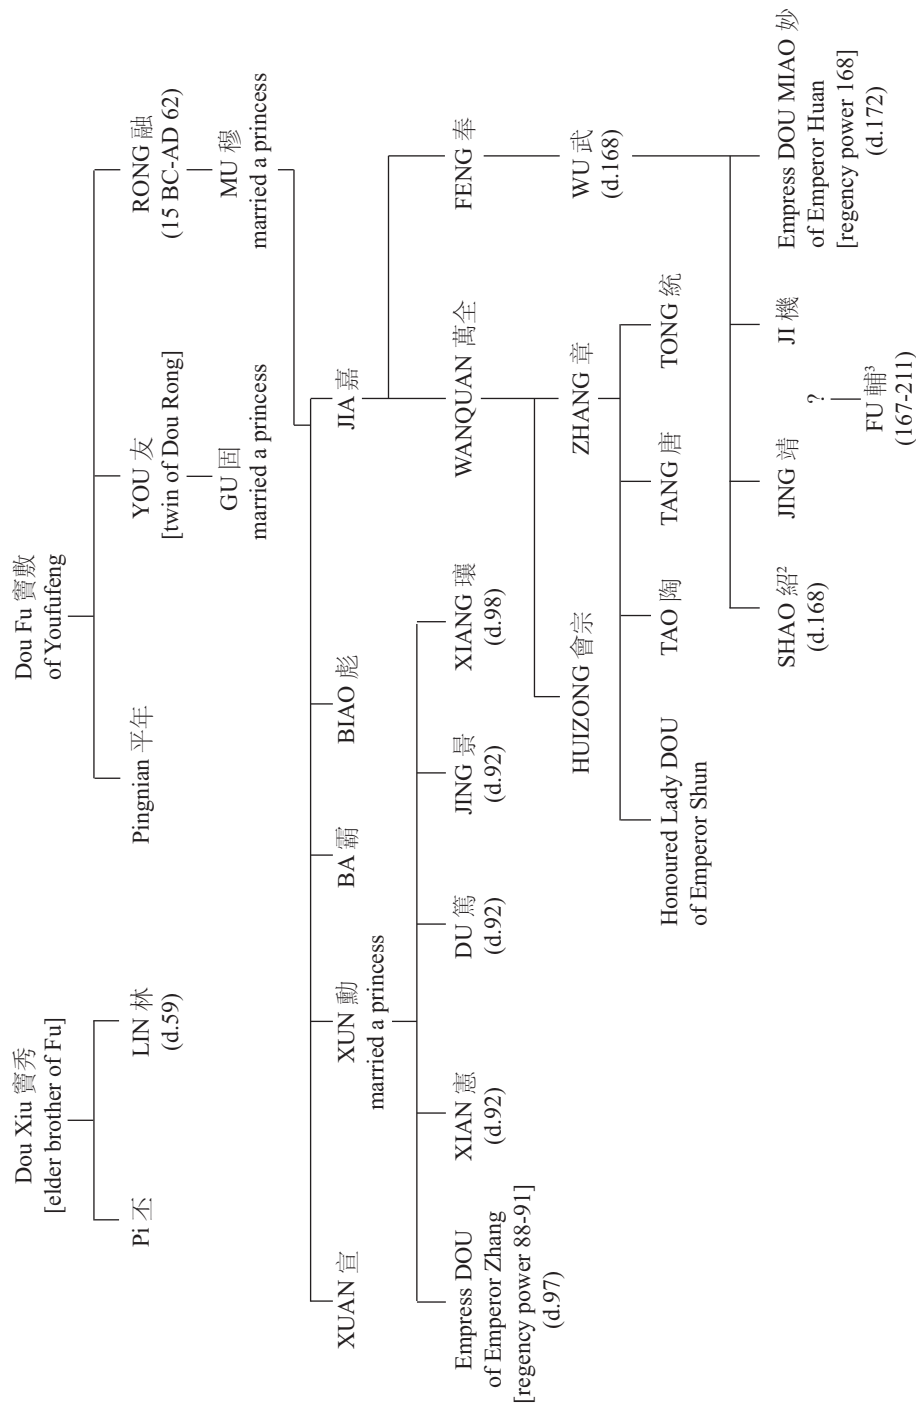

⁵ After the death of Deng Zhong, his mother the Lady the Lady Geng 耿 adopted Deng Si, son of Bao [see note 3 above].

⁶ Deng Zun is described as a cousin of the Empress Deng, but it is not known by which lineage.

⁷ Deng Xiang is described as a great-nephew of the Empress Deng, but it is not known by which lineage.

⁸ The Lady Deng's nephew Deng Bing and other more distant kinsmen shared in her fortune but were disgraced when she was deposed. They included Deng Bi 弼, Deng De 德, Deng Shou 壽 and Deng Xun 循, but their relationship and lineage are not indicated more precisely.

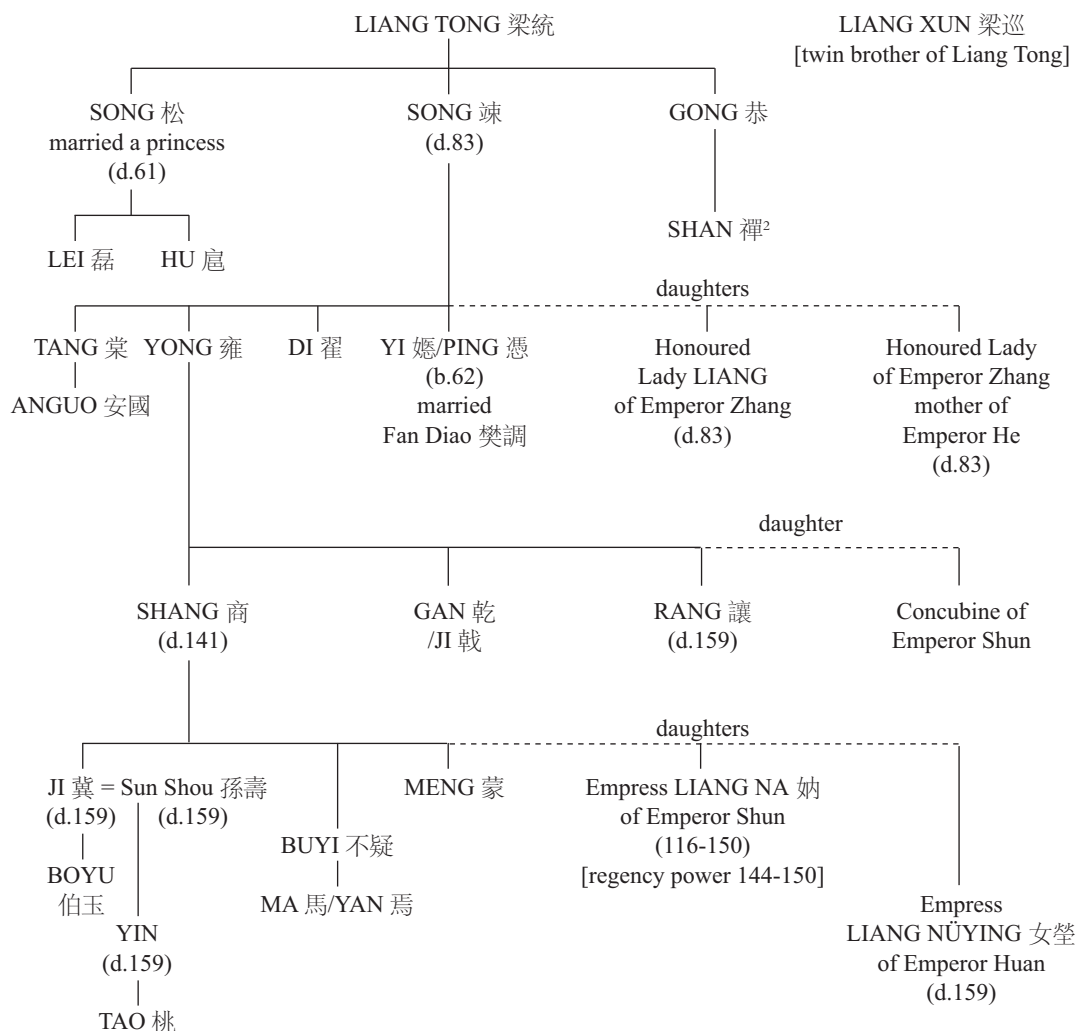

TABLE 4: SUMMARY OF THE DOU FAMILY OF YOUFUFENG¹

¹ The names of people who have individual entries in the Biographies appear in capitals.

² Dou Shao was either the eldest son or perhaps a nephew of Dou Wu.

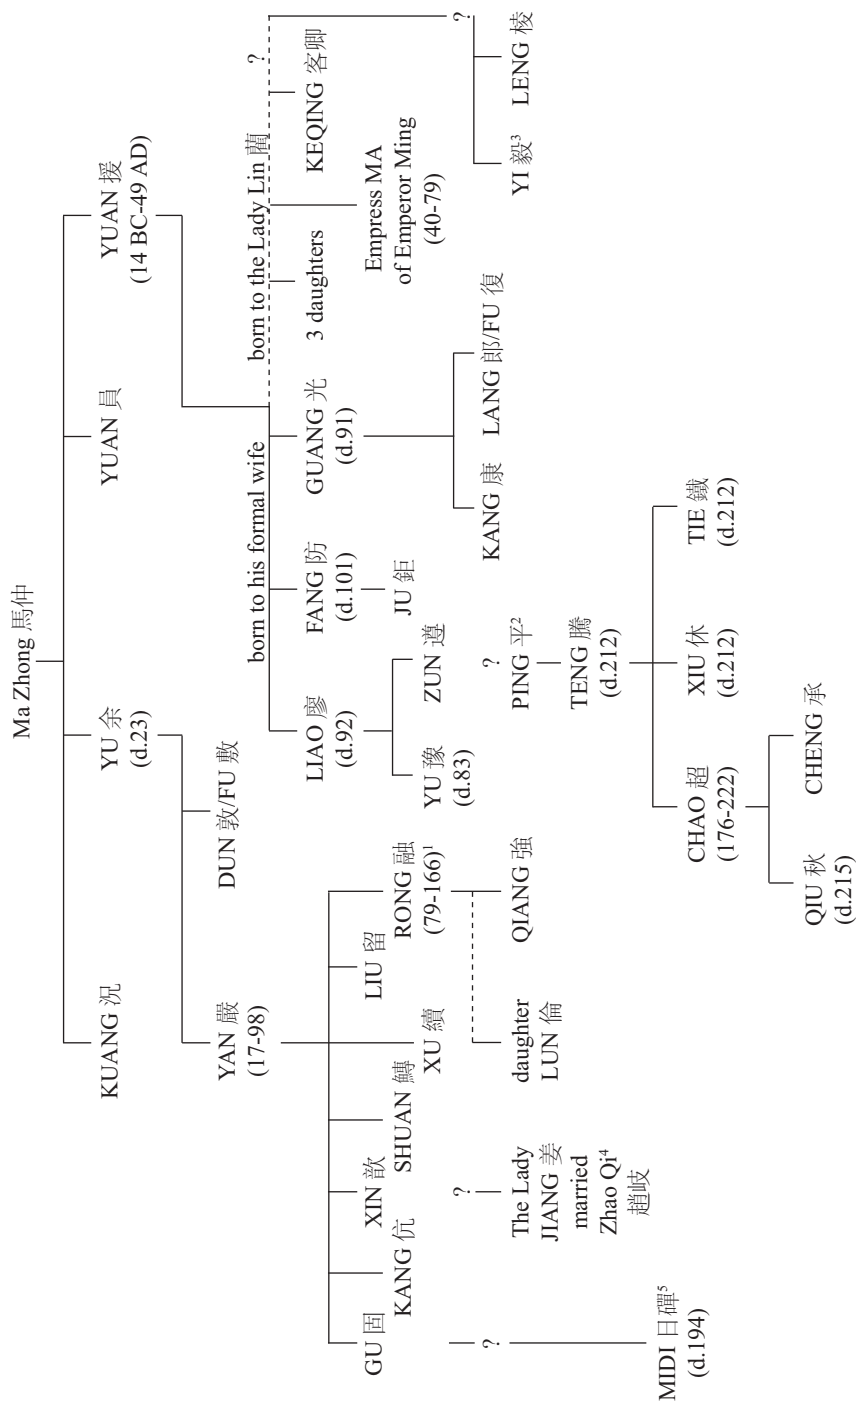

³ Dou Fu is described as a grandson of Dou Wu; his father is not identified.

TABLE 5: SUMMARY OF THE LIANG FAMILY OF ANDING ¹

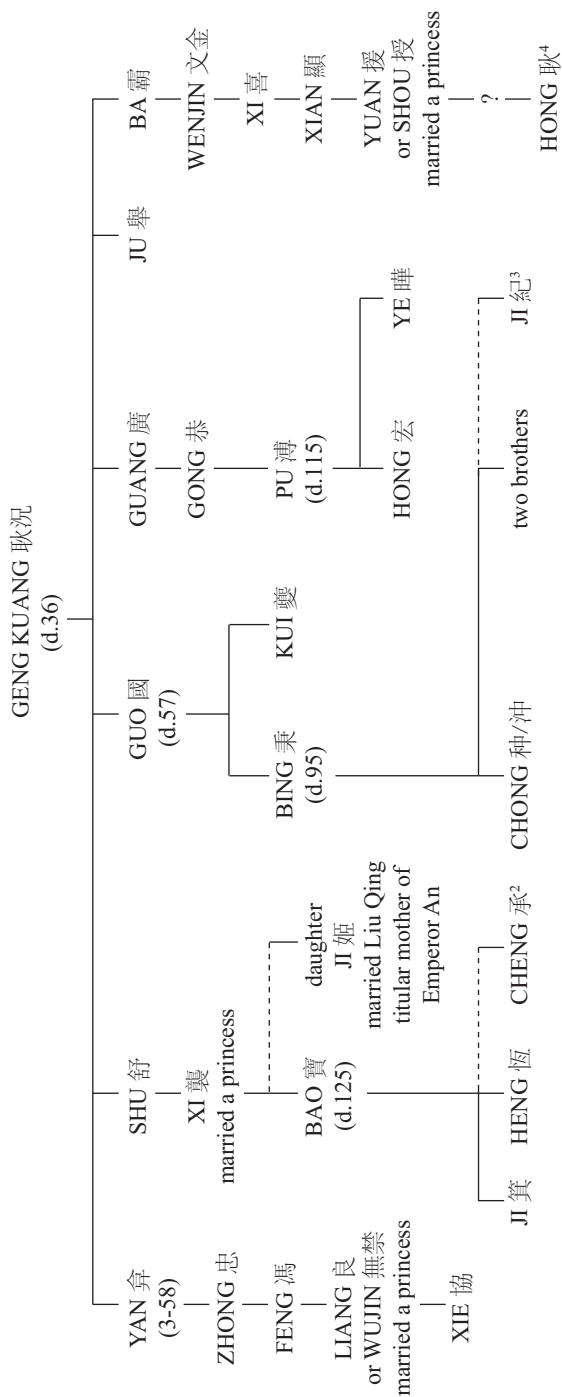

¹ Some cousins and other kinsmen of the Liang are mentioned in the histories, but their place in the lineage cannot always be identified. They include Liang Teng 騰 at the beginning of Later Han, and Liang Bing 並, Liang Min 旻, Liang Shu 淑 and Liang Zhong 忠, all of whom were associated with Liang Ji; Liang Shu and Liang Zhong died in the coup of 159.

² Liang Shan is described as an cousin of Liang Hu; he was probably the son of Liang Gong, the only other son of Liang Tong who is named in the histories.

TABLE 6: SUMMARY OF THE MA FAMILY OF YOUFUFENG

¹ Ma Xu and Ma Rong are described variously as the fifth or the seventh sons of Ma Yan.
² Though Ma Ping was a man of humble circumstances, he claimed descent from Ma Yuan 援.
³ Ma Yi and Ma Leng are described as cousins, both descended from Ma Yuan; Ma Yi was the elder. They presumably came from a connection other than his wife or the Lady Lin.
⁴ We are told that the wife of Zhao Qi was a niece of Ma Rong, but it is not known which of his brothers was her father.
⁵ Ma Midi is described as a junior kinsman of Ma Rong, presumably the son or grandson of one of his six brothers.

TABLE 7: SUMMARY OF THE GENG FAMILY OF YOUYUFENG¹

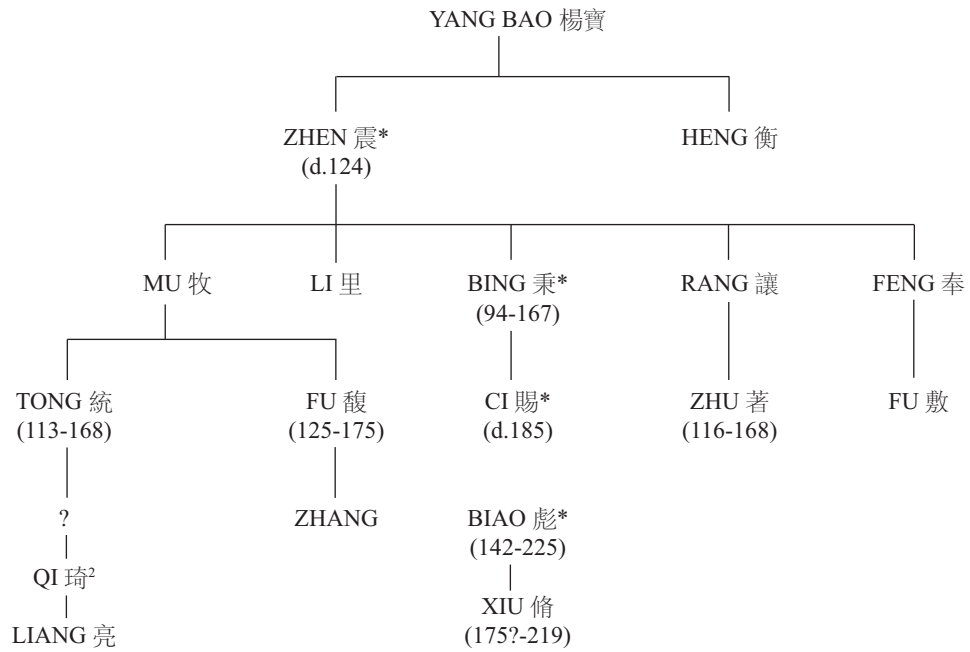

¹ Some cousins and other kinsmen of the Liang are mentioned in the histories, but their place in the lineage cannot always be identified. They include Geng Tan 譚 [fl. 90], Geng Shu 叔 [fl.140], and Geng Xun 勳 [fl.170].

² Geng Cheng is described as a nephew of Geng Bao, but there are no details of his lineage.

³ Geng Ji is described as a descendant of Geng Bing, but there are no details of his lineage.

⁴ After the failed coup of Geng Ji [note 3 above], Cao Cao killed many members of his clan. Geng Hong, a grandson of Geng Yuan/Shou, was one of the few survivors.

TABLE 8: SUMMARY OF THE YANG FAMILY OF HONGNONG¹

¹ An asterisk * indicates a men who held position as an Excellency.

² Yang Qi is described as a grandson of Yang Mu; his father is not identified

PROVINCES AND COMMANDERY UNITS OF LATER HAN

The table below is based on the list of provinces, commanderies, kingdoms and dependent states presented in the Treatise on Administrative Geography 郡國志, HHS 109/19-113/23, taken over from the Xu Han shu of Sima Biao. HHS 109/19.3389 dates the census figures for Henan commandery to the fifth year of the Yonghe 永和 period of Emperor Shun, 140 AD, and this has commonly been taken as the date relevant to all the entries. Much of the information in the Treatise relates to earlier or later years, however, and Sima Biao's text was probably based upon "Notes of the Marquis Fu on Things Ancient and Modern" 伏侯古今注 by Fu Wuji 伏無忌, which dealt with the situation of 144-145, following the death of Emperor Shun. MBeck 90.187-189 discusses Sima Biao's use of the original material and finds fault with his editing.

Despite errors and confusions, however, the Treatise provides a good picture of the situation about the middle of the second century, and I have used it as the base for this table, providing details of name and/or status changes before and after the 140s under each entry. During the years of civil war which followed the death of Emperor Ling in 189, however, many warlords made changes to commandery and provincial units; these were often contradictory and only a few of the rearrangements are cited below, while others are mentioned at appropriate places among the biographies.¹

The term "province" 州 which appears in the Treatise is synonymous with a "region" 部 controlled by an Inspector 刺史, though "region" appears more frequently in Former Han. Provinces headed by Governors 牧 [the title is also rendered as Shepherd] were formally maintained under Later Han until 42, and were restored for some regions from 188. The difference is that a Governor had status comparable to that of a Minister and possessed executive authority, while an Inspector ranked below the heads of the commandery units in his division: in normal circumstances he was entitled only to report wrong-doing and could take no direct action.

The general term "commandery units" describes commanderies 郡, kingdoms [or royal states] 王國, and dependent states of commandery rank 屬國. Each entry in the table includes a summary of the changed status of the unit: where a kingdom is created or abolished there is reference to a relevant biography.

The term "counties" 縣 includes also marquisates 侯國 of that rank, estates 邑 which were the appanages of princesses, and some duchies 公. The evidence is too slight, and the complications too great, to allow notice of minor transfers of counties from one commandery unit to another, but such changes certainly took place. One complex example is Anping 安平, home territory of the distinguished Cui family. The county was in Zhuo commandery during Former Han and presumably at the beginning of Later Han, but was at some time incorporated into Xindu 信都, which was renamed Lecheng 樂城 in 72. The name of Lecheng was changed to Anping in 122, but from 158 to 220 the county was part of the new establishment of Boling 博陵.²

Population figures in registered households 戶 hu and individual persons 口 kou for each commandery unit are provided by the Treatise, and I total them for each province. A number of corrections have been made by ¹ The changes from the time of Emperor Ling are tabulated and discussed in detail by Wu Zengjin 吳增僅 and Yang Shoujing 楊守敬, Sanguo junxian biao fu kaozheng 三國郡縣表附考證, in ESWSBB III.

In 213, shortly before Cao Cao made himself Duke of Wei, he carried out a vast re-organisation of the provinces under his control. The main effect was to enlarge Ji province, which became the base of his fief, to incorporate You and Bing, but he also restored the classical name of Yong 雍 for the region of Liang in the northwest. The old capital region of Sili, moreover, was abolished: Hongnong and the commanderies about Chang'an were added to Yong, Henan was incorporated into an extended Yu province, and Hedong and Henei were included in Ji province. See Wu Zengjin op.cit. 2828; deC 96.445-447 and Map 20. In 220, however, a new Liang 涼 province was separated from Yong, to control the present-day Gansu corridor in the far west: see sub Su Ze and, for further details of the confusing changes in this region, deC 84.498-499.

² In her important discussion of the history of the long-lasting Cui 崔 lineage, Ebrey 78 gives their place of origin as Boling 博陵. The home county of the family was Anping 安平, which was in Zhuo commandery under Former Han, was later transferred to Xindu/Lecheng/Anping, and 158 formed part of Boling, a new commandery which was itself abolished towards the end of the dynasty [see items 18 and 19 below and sub Cui Zhuan].

Bielenstein and other commentators. The total for the empire is given by Sima Biao as 9,698,630 households and 49,140,220 persons [HHS 113/23.3533], evidently relating to the early 140s; the figures at the time of the death of Emperor Shun in 145 are given by the commentator Liu Zhao quoting Fu Wuji as 9,946,919 households and 49,735,150 persons [HHS 113/23.3534]: MBeck 90.189.

Sili 司隸 [the capital province]

[HHS 109/19.3385-3408]

Seven commandery units, 106 counties,

616,355 households, 3,106,161 persons;

headquarters at Luoyang 洛陽 in Henan [the imperial capital]

1 Henan 河南

[HHS 109/19.3389-95]

21 counties

208,486 households

1,010,827 persons

established in Former Han

2 Henei 河內

[HHS 109/19.3395-97]

18 counties

159,770 households

801,558 persons

established in Former Han

3 Hedong 河東

[HHS 109/19.3397-3401]

20 counties

93,543 households

570,803 persons

established in Former Han

4 Hongnong 弘農

[HHS 109/19.3401-03]

9 counties

46,815 households

199,113 persons

established in Former Han;

during the reign of Emperor Ling the name of Hongnong was changed to Hengnong 恆農 to avoid taboo on the ruler's personal name; the variant, however, seldom appears in texts

5 Jingzhao [yin] 京北尹

[HHS 109/19.3403-05]

10 counties

53,299 households

285,574 persons

established in Former Han;

headed by the Intendant 尹 of Jingzhao³

³ Jingzhao yin, Zuopingyi and Youfufeng, controlling the old capital district about Chang'an, were collectively known as the Three Adjuncts

6 Zuopingyi 左馮翊 or Pingyi⁴

[HHS 109/19.3405-06]

13 counties

37,090 households

145,195 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Yan 焉 from 41 to 54

7 Youfufeng 右扶風 or Fufeng⁵

[HHS 109/19.3406-08]

15 counties

17,352 households

93,091 persons

established in Former Han;

in 189 the western part of Youfufeng was divided off to form Han'an 漢安, later called Hanxing 漢興; the new commandery was ended about 215

Yu province 豫州 or region 部

[HHS 110/20.3421-31]

Six commandery units, 99 counties,

1,142,783 households, 6,179,139 persons;

headquarters at Qiao 譙 in Pei

8 Yingchuan 潁川

[HHS 110/20.3421-24]

17 counties

263,440 households

1,436,513 persons

established in Former Han

9 Runan 汝南

[HHS 110/20.3424-26]

37 counties

404,448 households

2,100,788 persons

established in Former Han;

in 82 eight counties were taken for the state of Liu Xian, King of Xiping 西平, but they were returned to Runan in 88

10 Liang 梁

[HHS 110/20.3426-27]

9 counties

83,300 households

431,283 persons

[sanfu 三輔], and the names of the commanderies were also applied to the officials who administered them. In the body of the text I render the title Jingzhao yin as Intendant of Jingzhao, but identify the officials Zuopingyi and Youfufeng [Dubs/Bielenstein: Eastern Supporter and Western Sustainer] simply as Administrators of their respective commanderies.

⁴ See note 3 above.⁵ See note 3 above.

established in Former Han;
kingdom of Liu Chang 暢 and successors from 79 to 220

11 Pei 沛

[HHS 110/20.3427-28]

21 counties

200,495 households

1,251,393 persons⁶

established in Former Han;
kingdom of Liu Fu 輔 and successors from 44 to 220

12 Chen 陳

[HHS 110/20.3429]

9 counties

112,653 households

547,572 persons

Huaiyang 淮陽 of Former Han;
kingdom of Liu Yan 延 from 41 to 73;
name changed to Chen in 88;
kingdom of Liu Bing 炳 from 79 to 87, of Liu Xian 羨 and successors from 88 to 119, and of Liu Chong 崇 and successors from 120 to 197 [Liu Chong 寵]

13 Lu 魯

[HHS 110/20.3429-31]

6 counties

78,447 households

411,590 persons

established in Former Han;
kingdom of Liu Xing 興/行 from 26 to 37 and from 43 to 52;
included in the fief of Liu Qiang 彊 the King of Donghai from 52, and held by his successors until 220

Ji province 冀州 or region 部

[HHS 110/20.3431-37]

Nine commandery units, 100 counties,
908,005 households, 5,440,340 persons;
headquarters at Gaoyi 高邑 in Changshan

14 Wei 魏

[HHS 110/20.3431-33]

15 counties

129,310 households

695,606 persons

established in Former Han;
centre of the duchy and then kingdom of Cao Cao 曹操 from 213

15 Julu 鉅鹿

[HHS 110/20.3433]

⁶ Bn 47.159 argues that the figure of a million has been misplaced by the text from Pei to Chen immediately below. I follow his correction.

15 counties
109,517 households
602,096 persons

established in Former Han;

in 37 incorporated the former territory of Guangping 廣平;

Guangping was the title of the kingdom of Liu Xian 羨 from 60 to 82, but it does not appear to have been a commandery-level establishment;

Julu was the title of the kingdom of Liu Gong 羨 from 72 to 78;

during 93 Julu was divided to form the fief of Liu Wansui, King of Guangzong 廣宗

16 Changshan 常山

[HHS 110/20.3433]

13 counties
97,500 households
631,184 persons

established in Former Han;

in 37 incorporated the former territory of Zhending 真定, which had been a kingdom under Former Han but was abolished by Wang Mang; Zhending was restored about 23, but ended in 37 [Liu Yang 揚/楊/陽 and Liu De 德/得];

Changshan was the kingdom of Liu Ze 側 and successors from 90 to 206

17 Zhongshan 中山

[HHS 110/20.3434-35]

13 counties
97,412 households
658,195 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Mao 茂 from 25 to 37;

kingdom of Liu Fu 輔 from 41 to 44;

kingdom of Liu Yan 焉 and successors from 52 to c.174 [Liu Zhi 稚]; divided to form Boling 博陵 in 158; Boling was a kingdom from 213 to 220 [Liu Gui 珪]

18 Anping 安平

[HHS 110/20.3435-36]

13 counties
91,440 households
655,118 persons

Xindu 信都 of Former Han;

name changed to Lecheng 樂城 in 72;

kingdom of Liu Dang 黨 and successors from 72 to 119 and in 120;

name changed to Anping in 122; kingdom of Liu De 德/得 and successors from 122 to 184 [Liu Xu 續]

19 Hejian 河間

[HHS 110/20.3436]

11 counties
93,754 households
634,421 persons

kingdom under Former Han, abolished by Wang Mang;

re-established in 31, but abolished again in 37 [Liu Shao 邵];
re-established as a kingdom for Liu Kai 開 and successors from 90 to 200

20 Qinghe 清河

[HHS 110/20.3436]

7 counties

123,964 households

760,418 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Qing 慶 and successors from 82;

in 107 Qinghe was divided to form the fief of Liu Changbao 常保, King of Guangchuan 廣川; he died in 108 and the territory reverted to Qinghe in 121;

name changed to Ganling 甘陵 in 148;

kingdom ended in 206 [Liu Zhong 忠]

21 Zhao 趙

[HHS 110/20.3437]

5 counties

32,719 households

188,381 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Liang 良 from 29 to 37 and of his successors from 43 to 213 [Liu Xu 栩/盱 and Liu Gui 珪]

22 Bohai 勃海

[HHS 110/20.3437]

8 counties

132,389 households

1,106,500 persons

established in Former Han;

in You province until 94

Yan province 兗州 or region 部

[HHS 111/21.3447-51]

Eight commandery units, 80 counties,

799,302 households, 3,394,597 persons;

headquarters at Changyi 昌邑 in Shanyang

23 Chenliu 陳留

[HHS 111/21.3447-49]

17 counties

177,529 households

869,433 persons

established in Former Han

24 Dong 東

[HHS 111/21.3450-51]

15 counties

136,088 households

603,393 persons

established in Former Han

- 25 Dongping 東平
 [HHS 111/21.3451-52]
 7 counties
 79,012 households
 448,270 persons
 established in Former Han;
 kingdom of Liu Cang 蒼 and successors from 41 to 200; divided to form Rencheng in 84
- 26 Rencheng 任城
 [HHS 111/21.3452]
 3 counties
 36,442 households
 194,196 persons
 divided from Dongping in 84;
 kingdom of Liu Shang 尚, son of Liu Cang 蒼, and successors from 84 to 220
- 27 Taishan 太山
 [HHS 111/21.3453-54]
 12 counties
 80,929 households⁷
 437,317 persons
 established in Former Han;
 divided to form Jibei in 90
- 28 Jibei 濟北
 [HHS 111/21.3454-55]
 5 counties
 45,689 households
 235,897 persons
 divided from Taishan in 90;
 kingdom of Liu Shou 壽 and successors from 90 to 220
- 29 Shanyang 山陽
 [HHS 111/21.3455-56]
 10 counties
 109,898 households
 606,091 persons
 established in Former Han;
 kingdom of Liu Jing 荊 from 41 to 58
- 30 Jiyin 濟陰
 [HHS 111/21.3456-57]
 11 counties
 133,715 households
 657,554 persons
 established in Former Han;
 from 90 to 94 Jiyin was divided to form the fief of Liu Shu, King of Chengyang 城陽;

⁷ Bn 47.159 corrects the figure of 8,000 to 80,000.

Xu province 徐州 or region 部

[HHS 111/21.3458-62]

Five commandery units, 62 counties,

576,054 households, 2,791,683 persons;

headquarters at Tan 鄰 in Donghai

31 Donghai 東海

[HHS 111/21.3458-59]

13 counties

148,784 households

706,416 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Yang/Zhuang 陽/莊 from 41 to 43;

kingdom of Liu Qiang 疆 and successors from 43 to 220

[Though Donghai was a kingdom throughout the Later Han period, from 52 onwards the fief included the territory of neighbouring Lu, and the capital was in the city of that name: see sub Liu Qiang. For most of the dynasty, therefore, Donghai was described as a commandery, but its chief official was styled as a Chancellor.]

32 Langye/Langya 琅邪

[HHS 111/21.3459-60]

13 counties

120,804 households⁸

570,967 persons

established in Former Han;

in 37 incorporated the former territory of Chengyang 城陽 which had been the kingdom of Liu Zhi/Zhong 祉/終 from 26 to 35;

Langye was the kingdom of Liu Jing 京 and successors from 41 to 220

33 Pengcheng 彭城

[HHS 111/21.3460-61]

8 counties

86,170 households⁹

493,027 persons

Chu 楚 of Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Ying 延 from 41 to 71;

name changed to Pengcheng in 88; kingdom of Liu Gong 恭 and successors from 88 to 220

34 Guangling 廣陵

[HHS 111/21.3461]

11 counties

83,907 households

410,190 persons

established in Former Han;

in 37 incorporated the former territory of Sishui 泗水, which had been the kingdom of Liu Xi 歙 from 26 to 34;

⁸ Bn 47.159 corrects the figure of 8,000 to 80,000.

⁹ Bn 47.159 corrects the figure of 8,000 to 80,000.

Guangling was the kingdom of Liu Jing 荆 from 58 to 67

35 Xiapi 下邳

[HHS 111/21.3461-62]

17 counties

136,389 households

611,083 persons

Linhuai 臨淮 of Former Han;

name changed to Xiapi in 72;

kingdom of Liu Yan 衍 and successors from 72 to 185 or 206 [Liu Yi 宜]

Qing province 青州 or region 部

[HHS 112/22.3471-76]

Six commandery units, 65 counties,

636,185 households, 3,709,793 persons;

headquarters at Linzi 臨淄 in Qi

36 Ji'nan 濟南

[HHS 112/22.3471-72]

10 counties

78,544 households

453,308 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Kang 康 and successors from 41 to 153 [Liu Guang 廣] kingdom of Liu Yu 廆 and successors from 174 to 220

37 Pingyuan 平原

[HHS 112/22.3472]

10 counties¹⁰

155,588 households

1,002,658 persons

established in Former Han

kingdom of Liu Sheng 勝 from 105/106 to 113, then of Liu De 得 and finally of Liu Yi 翼, ended about 121 kingdom of Liu Shi 碩/石/Gu 顛 and successors from 148 to 206

38 Le'an 樂安

[HHS 112/22.3472-73]

9 counties

74,700 households

424,075 persons

Qiansheng 千乘 of Former Han;

kingdom from 60 to 61 [Liu Jian 建];

kingdom from 79 [Liu Kang 伉] to 145 [Liu Hong 鴻]; name changed to Le'an in 95

39 Beihai 北海

[HHS 112/22.3473-74]

¹⁰ Qian Daxin corrects the reading from 9 to 10.

18 counties
158,641 households
853,604 persons

established in Former Han;

in 37 incorporated the former territories of Zichuan 蓄/淄川, Jiaodong 膠東 and Gaomi 高密;
Zichuan had been the kingdom of Liu Zhong 終 from 26 to 34;

Jiaodong had been a kingdom in Former Han and may have been restored by Guangwu, but the fief was certainly ended in 37;

Gaomi had been a kingdom in Former Han and may have been restored by Guangwu, but the fief was certainly ended in 37;

Beihai was a kingdom from 52 [Liu Xing 興] to 87 [Liu Ji 基], from 90 to 96 [Liu Wei 威], from 107 [Liu Pu
普] to 206 [Liu Yi 翼] and from 212 to 220 [Liu Dun 敦]

40 Donglai 東來

[HHS 112/22.3474-75]

13 counties
104,297 households
484,383 persons

established in Former Han

41 Qi 齊

[HHS 112/22.3475-76]

6 counties
64,415 households
491,765 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Zhang 章 from 35 to 37

and of Liu Zhang and his successors from 43 to 206 [Liu Cheng承]

Jing province 荊州 or region 部

[HHS 112/22.3476-85]

Seven commandery units, 117 counties,

1,399,394 households, 6,265,952 persons;

headquarters at Hanshou 漢壽 in Wuling

42 Nanyang 南陽

[HHS 112/22.3476-79]

37 counties
528,551 households
2,439,618 persons

established in Former Han

43 Nan 南

[HHS 112/22.3479-82]

17 counties
162,570 households
747,604 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Gong 劉恭, under the title of Jiangling 江陵, from 78 to 85

- 44 Jiangxia 江夏
 [HHS 112/22.3482]
 14 counties
 58,434 households
 265,464 persons
 established in Former Han
- 45 Lingling 零陵
 [HHS 112/22.3482-83]
 13 counties
 212,284 households
 1,001,578 persons
 established in Former Han
- 46 Guiyang 桂陽
 [HHS 112/22.3483-84]
 11 counties
 135,029 households
 501,403 persons
 established in Former Han
- 47 Wuling 武陵
 [HHS 112/22.3484]
 12 counties
 46,672 households
 250,913 persons
 established in Former Han
- 48 Changsha 長沙
 [HHS 112/22.3485]
 13 counties
 255,854 households
 1,059,372 persons
 established in Former Han
 kingdom of Liu Xing 興 from 24 to 37
- Yang province 揚州 or region 部
 [HHS 112/22.3485-92]
 Six commandery units, 92 counties,
 1,021,096 households, 4,278,538 persons;
 headquarters at Liyang 歷陽 in Jiujiang
- 49 Jiujiang 九江
 [HHS 112/22.3485-86]
 14 counties
 89,436 households
 432,426 persons
 established in Former Han

50 Danyang 丹陽

[HHS 112/22.3486-87]

16 counties

136,518 households

630,545 persons

established in Former Han

51 Lujiang 廬江

[HHS 112/22.3487-88]

14 counties

101,392 households

424,683 persons

established in Former Han;

in 37 incorporated the territory of Liu'an 六安, a kingdom of Former Han; from 85 to 88 this territory was the fief of Liu Gong 恭, King of Liu'an

52 Kuaiji 會稽

[HHS 112/22.3488-89]

14 counties

123,090 households

481,196 persons

established in Former Han;

divided to form Wu in 129

53 Wu 吳

[HHS 112/22.3489-91]

13 counties

164,164 households

700,782 persons

established in 129 from the northern part of Kuaiji

54 Yuzhang 豫章

[HHS 112/22.3491-92]

21 counties

406,496 households

1,608,906 persons

established in Former Han;

divided to form Poyang 鄱陽 commandery in the early 190s;

divided to form Luling 廬陵 commandery in the early 190s

Yi province 益州 or region 部

[HHS 113/23.3506-16]

Twelve commandery units, 118 counties,

1,525,247 households, 7,242,028 persons;¹¹

headquarters at Luo 雒 in Guanghan

55 Hanzhong 漢中

[HHS 113/23.3506]

¹¹ These totals are doubtful, for they include the exaggerated figures for Yongchang: see note below.

9 counties
 57,334 households
 267,402 persons
 established in Former Han;
 kingdom of Liu Jia 嘉 from 24 to 27;
 kingdom of Liu Bei 備 from 219;
 from about 200 to 215 this territory was controlled by Zhang Lu, who called it Hanning 漢寧

56 Ba 巴

[HHS 113/23.3507-08]
 14 counties
 310,691 households
 1,086,049 persons
 established in Former Han;
 divided at the end of Han into Ba 巴, Baxi 巴西 and Badong 巴東¹²

57 Guanghan 廣漢

[HHS 113/23.3508]
 11 counties
 139,865 households
 509,438 persons
 established in Former Han divided in 108 to form a separate Dependent State

58 Shu 蜀

[HHS 113/23.3508-09]
 11 counties
 300,452 households
 1,350,476 persons
 established in Former Han
 divided in 123 to form a separate Dependent State

59 Jianwei 犍爲

[HHS 113/23.3509-10]
 9 counties
 137,713 households
 411,378 persons
 established in Former Han
 divided in 107 to form a separate Dependent State divided at the end of Han to form the commandery of Jiangyang 江陽

60 Zangke 牂牁

[HHS 113/23.3510-11]
 16 counties
 31,523 households
 267,253 persons
 established in Former Han

¹² The areas and nomenclature of these new commanderies varied: see deC 90.364-366 and deC 96.466 Map 21.

- 61 Yuexi 越禡
 [HHS 113/23.3511-12]
 14 counties
 130,120 households
 623,418 persons
 established in Former Han
- 62 Yizhou 益州¹³
 [HHS 113/23.3512-13]
 17 counties
 29,036 households
 110,802 persons
 established in Former Han
- 63 Yongchang 永昌
 [HHS 113/23.3513-14]
 8 counties
 231,897 households
 1,897,344 persons¹⁴
 established in 69 [see sub Liumiao 柳貌/邈]
- 64 Dependent State of Guanghan 廣漢屬國
 [HHS 113/23.3514-15]
 3 counties
 37,110 households
 205,652 persons
 divided from Guanghan to form a separate administration in 108
- 65 Dependent State of Shu commandery 蜀郡屬國
 [HHS 113/23.3515]
 4 counties
 111,568 households
 475,629 persons
 divided from Shu to form a separate administration in 123¹⁵
- 66 Dependent State of Jianwei 犍爲屬國
 [HHS 113/23.3515]
 2 counties
 7,938 households
 37,187 persons
 divided from Jianwei to form a separate administration in 107

¹³ Note that the name of this commandery is the same as the title of its province: cf. the region/province of Jiaozhi below.

¹⁴ The population of Yongchang appears quite disproportionate to that of its neighbours. The figures probably represent a nominal, and exaggerated, count of the Ailao people who acceded to Han and justified the establishment of the commandery in 69. Not only are these numbers questionable, but they cast doubt on the total for the province as a whole: see note 11 above.

¹⁵ HHS 86/76.2857 says that this territory was renamed Hanjia 漢嘉 commandery during the reign of Emperor Ling. JS 4.439, however, dates the name change to 221, in the time of Liu Bei.

Liang province 涼州 or region 部¹⁶

[HHS 113/23.3516-22]

Twelve commandery units, 98 counties,

138,702 households, about 600,000 persons;¹⁷

headquarters at Long 隴 in Hanyang

67 Longxi 隴西

[HHS 113/23.3516-17]

11 counties

5,628 households

29,637 persons

established in Former Han;

from 36 to 37 this commandery included the territory of Jincheng

68 Hanyang 漢陽

[HHS 113/23.3517-18]

9 counties

57,334 households

267,402 persons

Tianshui 天水 in Former Han;

name changed to Hanyang in 72;

name changed to Tianshui at the end of Han;

in 188 the north-western part of Hanyang was divided off to form Nan'an 南安

69 Wudu 武都

[HHS 113/23.3518]

7 counties

20,102 households

81,728 persons

established in Former Han

70 Jincheng 金城

[HHS 113/23.3518-19]

10 counties

3,858 households

18,947 persons

established in Former Han;

from 36 to 37 this commandery was combined into Longxi;

in 101 the court ordered the restoration of Xihai 西海 commandery to the west of Jincheng near the Koko Nor/

Lake Qinghai: this territory had been claimed by Wang Mang but was later abandoned; on this occasion too it does not appear that the unit was maintained for long;

in 110 the commandery administration was withdrawn into Longxi;

it was returned about 118

71 Anding 安定

[HHS 113/23.3519]

¹⁶ Liang province of Former Han had been renamed Yong 雍 by Wang Mang. The name was restored at the beginning of Later Han. See also note 1 above.

¹⁷ See the note on Jiuquan and below.

8 counties
6,094 households
29,060 persons

established in Former Han;
in 111 the commandery administration was withdrawn into Youfufeng;
it was returned in 129, but was finally withdrawn in 141

72 Beidi 北地

[HHS 113/23.3519-20]
6 counties
3,122 households
18,637 persons

established in Former Han;
in 111 the commandery administration was withdrawn into Zuopingyi;
it was returned in 129, but was finally withdrawn in 141

73 Wuwei 武威

[HHS 113/23.3519-20]
14 counties
10,042 households
34,226 persons

established in Former Han

74 Zhangye 張掖

[HHS 113/23.3520]
8 counties
6,552 households
26,040 persons

established in Former Han divided c. 110-120 to form the two separate Dependent States of Zhangye and of Juyan in Zhangye

75 Jiuquan 酒泉

[HHS 113/23.3521]
9 counties
12,706 households
about 50,000 persons¹⁸

established in Former Han

76 Dunhuang 敦煌

[HHS 113/23.3521]
6 counties
7,048 households¹⁹
29,170 persons

established in Former Han

77 Dependent State of Zhangye 張掖屬國

[HHS 113/23.3521]

¹⁸ The Treatise has no figures for individuals in Jiuquan, but Bn 47.159 suggests multiplying by the average [4] of members per household in neighbouring commanderies.

¹⁹ Bn 47.159 corrects the reading from 700 to 7,000.

5 counties
4,656 households
16,952 persons

divided from Zhangye to form a separate administration c. 110-120

78 Dependent State of Juyan in Zhangye 張掖居延屬國

[HHS 113/23.3521]

1 county
1,560 households
4,733 persons

divided from Zhangye to form a separate administration c. 110-120

Bing province 并州 or region 部

[HHS 113/23.3522-26]

Twelve commandery units, 98 counties,
114,991 households, 696,765 persons;
headquarters at Jinyang 晉陽 in Taiyuan

79 Shangdang 上黨

[HHS 113/23.3522-23]

13 counties
26,222 households
127,403 persons

established in Former Han

80 Taiyuan 太原

16 counties
30,902 households
200,124 persons

established in Former Han;
kingdom of Liu Zhang 章 from 26 to 35

81 Shang 上

[HHS 113/23.3524]

10 counties
5,169 households
28,599 persons

established in Former Han;

in 111 the commandery administration was withdrawn into Zuopingyi;
it was returned in 129, but was finally withdrawn in 140

82 Xihe 西河

[HHS 113/23.3524]

13 counties
5,698 households
20,838 persons

established in Former Han

83 Wuyuan 五原

[HHS 113/23.3524-25]

10 counties
4,667 households
22,957 persons

established in Former Han;

from the late 30s to the early 50s this territory was largely abandoned to the Xiongnu,
but it was recovered after the accession of the Southern Shanyu;
reduced to nominal county level under Xinxing 新興 commandery in 215

84 Yunzhong 雲中
[HHS 113/23.3525]

11 counties
5,351 households
26,430 persons

established in Former Han;

reduced to nominal county level under Xinxing 新興 commandery in 215

85 Dingxiang 定襄
[HHS 113/23.3525]

5 counties
3,153 households
13,571 persons

established in Former Han

from the late 30s to the early 50s this territory was largely abandoned to the Xiongnu,
but it was recovered after the accession of the Southern Shanyu;
reduced to nominal county level under Xinxing 新興 commandery in 215

86 Yanmen 鴈門
[HHS 113/23.3525-26]

14 counties
31,842 households
249,000 persons

established in Former Han

from the late 30s to the early 50s this territory was largely abandoned to the Xiongnu, but it was recovered after the accession of the Southern Shanyu

87 Shuofang 鴈門
[HHS 113/23.3526]

6 counties
1,987 households
7,843 persons

established in Former Han;²⁰

from the late 30s to the early 50s this territory was largely abandoned to the Xiongnu,
but it was recovered after the accession of the Southern Shanyu;
in 140 the commandery administration was withdrawn into Wuyuan;
reduced to nominal county level under Xinxing 新興 commandery in 215

²⁰ For a period until 35 Shuofang was a separate provincial unit with a Governor 牧 [HHS 1B.58].

You province 幽州 or region 部

[HHS 113/23.3526-30]

Eleven commandery units, 90 counties,

>405,263 households, >2,212,888 persons;²¹

headquarters at Ji in Guangyang

88 Zhuo 涿

[HHS 113/23.3526-27]

7 counties

102,218 households

633,754 persons

established in Former Han

89 Guangyang 廣陽

[HHS 113/23.3527]

5 counties

44,550 households

280,600 persons

established in Former Han;

kingdom of Liu Liang 良 from 26 to 29;

abolished and territory taken over by Shanggu in 37; restored as a commandery unit in 96

90 Dai 代

[HHS 113/23.3527-28]

11 counties

20,123 households

126,188 persons

established in Former Han

from the late 30s to the early 50s this territory was largely abandoned to the Xiongnu,

but it was recovered after the accession of the Southern Shanyu

91 Shanggu 上谷

[HHS 113/23.3528]

8 counties

10,352 households

51,204 persons

established in Former Han

from the late 30s to the early 50s this territory was largely abandoned to the Xiongnu,

but it was recovered after the accession of the Southern Shanyu

92 Yuyang 漁陽

[HHS 113/23.3528]

9 counties

68,456 households

435,740 persons

established in Former Han

²¹ The total figures for You province are uncertain, as there are figures missing for both Liaodong and its Dependent State qqv.

93 Youbeiping 右北平

[HHS 113/23.3528]

4 counties

9,170 households

53,475 persons

established in Former Han

94 Liaoxi 遼西

[HHS 113/23.3528-29]

5 counties

14,150 households

81,714 persons

established in Former Han divided in 107 to form the Dependent State of Liaodong²²95 Liaodong 遼東

[HHS 113/23.3529]

11 counties

64,158 households

about 250,000 persons²³

established in Former Han

96 Xuantu 玄菟

[HHS 113/23.3529]

6 counties

10,594 households²⁴

43,163 persons

established in Former Han

97 Lelang 樂浪

[HHS 113/23.3529-30]

18 counties

61,492 households

257,050 persons

established in Former Han

98 Dependent State of Liaodong 遼東屬國

[HHS 113/23.3530]

6 counties

figures for households missing

figures for persons missing

divided from Liaodong to form a separate administration c. 110-120

²² In deC 84:460-465 I have argued that the Dependent State of Liaodong was not, as Zhongguo lishi ditu ji II:62 has it, on the shore of the present-day Gulf of Liaodong, but in the hill country of the Daling River 大凌河. Though the name would indicate that it was separated from Liaodong commandery, the bulk of its territory in fact came from Liaoxi.

²³ The Treatise has the same number of individuals for Liaodong as for Liaoxi. Bn 47.159 disregards both the household and the person, but, as in his dealing with Jiuquan above, I have multiplied by the average [4] of members per household in neighbouring commanderies.

²⁴ Bn 47.159 corrects the reading from 1,000 to 10,000.

Jiaozhi region 交趾[部] or Jiao province 交州²⁵

[HHS 113/23.3530-33]

Seven commandery units, 56 counties;

census figures are incomplete;

headquarters at Guangxin 廣信 in Cangwu

99 Nanhai 南海

[HHS 113/23.3530]

7 counties

71,477 households

250,282 persons

established in Former Han

100 Cangwu 蒼梧

[HHS 113/23.3530-31]

11 counties

111,395 households

466,975 persons

established in Former Han;

about 170 a new commandery of Gaoxing 高興, soon afterwards renamed Gaoliang 高涼 [or 高梁], was established on the coast south of Cangwu; it was abandoned about 180²⁶101 Yulin 鬱林

[HHS 113/23.3531]

11 counties

figures for households missing

figures for persons missing

established in Former Han

102 Hepu 合浦

[HHS 113/23.3531]

5 counties

23,121 households

86,617 persons

established in Former Han

103 Jiaozhi 交趾

[HHS 113/23.3531-32]

12 counties

figures for households missing

figures for persons missing

established in Former Han

²⁵ Though the Treatise refers to this territory as Jiao province, it appears that for most of Later Han it was known as Jiaozhi, and was subject to an Inspector 刺史. Its status was changed and a Governor 牧 was appointed in 203: e.g. JS 15.464-65; deC 90.31-32. This means, of course, that the province had the same name as one of its constituent commanderies: the same situation applied to Yizhou commandery in Yi province [item 62]: HHS 113/23.3531.

²⁶ JS 15.464; deC 90.36. In 220 Sun Quan established a commandery centred on Gaoliang 高梁 county in the west of Hepu: HHS 113/23.3531. This was the same region as the earlier Gaoxing/Gaoliang, and no doubt represents a restoration of the earlier foundation.

104 Jiuzhen 九真
[HHS 113/23.3532]

5 counties
46,513 households
209,894 persons

established in Former Han

105 Rinan 日南
[HHS 113/23.3532]

5 counties
18,263 households
100,676 persons

established in Former Han

INDEX TO COMMANDERY UNITS

Anding 安定 commandery	71	Guiyang 桂陽 commandery	46
Anping 安平 commandery/kingdom	18	Han'an 漢安 commandery	7
Ba 巴 commandery	56	Hanning 漢寧 commandery	55
Badong 巴東 commandery	56	Hanxing 漢興 commandery	7
Baxi 巴西 commandery	56	Hanyang 漢陽 commandery	68
Beidi 北地 commandery	72	Hanzhong 漢中 commandery/kingdom	55
Beihai 北海 commandery/kingdom	39	Hedong 河東 commandery	3
Bohai 勃海 commandery	22	Hejian 河間 commandery/kingdom	19
Boling 博陵 commandery/kingdom	17	Henan 河南 commandery	1
Cangwu 蒼梧 commandery	100	Henei 河內 commandery	2
Changsha 長沙 commandery/kingdom	48	Hengnong 恆農 commandery	4
Changshan 常山 commandery/kingdom	16	Hepu 合浦 commandery	102
Chen 陳 commandery/kingdom	12	Hongnong 弘農 commandery	4
Chenliu 陳留 commandery	23	Huaiyang 淮陽 commandery/kingdom	12
Chengyang 城陽 commandery/kingdom	30, 32	Jiangling 江陵 kingdom	43
Chu 楚 commandery/kingdom	33	Jiangxia 江夏 commandery	44
Dai 代 commandery	90	Jiangyang 江陽	59
Danyang 丹陽 commandery	50	Jianwei 犍爲 commandery	59
Dingxiang 定襄 commandery	85	Jianwei Dependent State 犍爲屬國	66
Dong 東 commandery	24	Jiaodong 膠東 commandery/kingdom	39
Donghai 東海 commandery/kingdom	31	Jiaozhi 交趾 commandery	103
Donglai 東來 commandery	40	Jibei 濟北 kingdom	28
Dongping 東平 commandery/kingdom	25	Ji'nan 濟南 commandery/kingdom	36
Dunhuang 敦煌 commandery	76	Jincheng 金城 commandery	70
Fufeng 扶風 see Youfufeng	7	Jingzhao [yin] 京北尹 commandery	5
Ganling 甘陵 commandery/kingdom	20	Jiujiang 九江 commandery	49
Gaoliang 高涼/高梁 commandery	100	Jiuquan 酒泉 commandery	75
Gaomi 高密 commandery/kingdom	39	Jiuzhen 九真 commandery	104
Gaoxing 高興 commandery	100	Jiyin 濟陰 commandery/kingdom	30
Guangchuan 廣川 kingdom	20	Julu 鉅鹿 commandery/ kingdom	15
Guanghan 廣漢 commandery	57	Juyan in Zhangye DS 張掖居延屬國	78
Guanghan Dependent State 廣漢屬國	64	Kuaiji 會稽 commandery	52
Guangling 廣陵 commandery/kingdom	34	Langye 琅邪 commandery/kingdom	32
Guangping 廣平 commandery	15	Le'an 樂安 commandery/kingdom	38
Guangping 廣平 kingdom	15	Lecheng 樂城 commandery/kingdom	18
Guangyang 廣陽 commandery/ kingdom	89	Lelang 樂浪 commandery	97
Guangzong 廣宗 kingdom	15	Liang 梁 commandery/kingdom	10

Liaodong 遼東 commandery	95	Taiyuan 太原 commandery	80
Liaodong Dependent State 遼東屬國	98	Tianshui 天水 commandery	68
Liaoxi 遼西 commandery	94	Wei 魏 commandery	14
Lingling 零陵 commandery	45	Wu 吳 commandery	53
Linhuai 臨淮 commandery	35	Wudu 武都 commandery	69
Liu'an 六安 commandery	51	Wuling 武陵 commandery	47
Longxi 隴西 commandery	67	Wuwei 武威 commandery	73
Lu 魯 commandery/kingdom	13	Wuyuan 五原 commandery	83
Lujiang 廬江 commandery/kingdom	51	Xiapi 下邳 commandery/kingdom	35
Luling 廬陵 commandery	54	Xihai 西海 commandery	70
Nan 南 commandery/ kingdom	43	Xihe 西河 commandery	82
Nan'an 南安 commandery	68	Xindu 信都 commandery	18
Nanghai 南海 commandery	99	Xinxing 新興 commandery	83, 84, 85, 87
Nanyang 南陽 commandery	42	Xiping 西平 kingdom	9
Pei 沛 commandery/kingdom	11	Xuantu 玄菟 commandery	96
Pengcheng 彭城 kingdom	33	Yanmen 鴈門 commandery	86
Pingyi 馮翊 see Zuopingyi	6	Yingchuan 潁川 commandery	8
Pingyuan 平原 commandery/kingdom	37	Yizhou 益州 commandery	62
Poyang 鄱陽 commandery	54	Yongchang 永昌 commandery	63
Qi 齊 commandery/kingdom	41	Youbeiping 右北平 commandery	93
Qiansheng 千乘 commandery/kingdom	38	Youfufeng 右扶風 commandery	7
Qinghe 清河 commandery/kingdom	20	Yuexi 越嶲 commandery	61
Rencheng 任城 commandery/kingdom	26	Yulin 鬱林 commandery	101
Rinan 日南 commandery	105	Yunzhong 雲中 commandery	84
Runan 汝南 commandery	9	Yuyang 漁陽 commandery	92
Shang 上 commandery	81	Yuzhang 豫章 commandery	54
Shangdang 上黨 commandery	79	Zangke 牂牁 commandery	60
Shangu 上谷 commandery	91	Zhangye 張掖 commandery	74
Shanyang 山陽 commandery/kingdom	29	Zhangye Dependent State 張掖屬國	77
Shu commandery 蜀郡	58	Zhao 趙 commandery/kingdom	21
Shu Dependent State 蜀郡屬國	65	Zhending 真定 commandery/kingdom	16
Shuofang 鴈門 commandery	87	Zhongshan 中山 commandery/kingdom	17
Shuofang 鴈門 province	87	Zhuo 涿 commandery	88
Sishui 四水 commandery/kingdom	34	Zichuan 蓄川 commandery/kingdom	39
Taishan 太山 commandery	27	Zuopingyi 左馮翊 commandery/kingdom	6

THE ADMINISTRATIVE STRUCTURE OF LATER HAN

This summary of the government organisation of Later Han is designed to provide background and context for the official careers and activities of the men and women discussed in the biographies.

Some fragments of contemporary sources on the government of Later Han survive, notably the now anonymous Hanguan or Hanguan mulu 漢官目錄, the Xiaoxue Hanguan pian 小學漢官篇 by Wang Long with commentary by Hu Guang, Hanguan dianzhi yishi xuanyong 漢官典職儀式選用 and other works by Cai Zhi, and Hanguan yi 漢官儀 and other works by Ying Shao. Most material, however, is found in the Treatise on the Bureaucracy 百官志, HHS 114/24-118/28, taken over from the Xu Han shu by Sima Biao of the third century. MBeck 90:197-226 criticises Sima Biao's compilation for many omissions and a number of misinterpretations, and for presenting "essentially fluid subject-matter in static, somewhat impracticable terms." As he points out, the Treatise must be expanded and interpreted in the light of information from the annals and biographies of Hou Han shu and other texts.

In his comprehensive account of The Bureaucracy of Han Times [Bn 80], Bielenstein renders official titles according to the system established by Dubs, and I have followed the same formula in earlier publications. For the present work, however, partly due to a need for brevity, but also for the sake of clarity, I have made changes to that pattern. In the discussion which follows, I give Bielenstein's renderings in brackets, and I attach a table of cross-references based upon the transcription of Chinese titles.¹

THE IMPERIAL POWER

The Emperor (皇帝 huangdi) held supreme power in the state and was the sacral intermediary between the forces of Heaven and Earth and the world of men. During Later Han, his authority was all but absolute: the ruler might consult with his ministers or hold a full court conference, but his final decision was accepted without question. Most notably in time of crisis, documents prepared by the Imperial Secretariat and endorsed by the emperor were normally sufficient to remove even the highest and most powerful ministers from their positions.²

In contrast to many other royal and imperial states, formal arrangements for succession to the throne of Later Han were clear and generally accepted.³ During his lifetime, the ruler could name any of his sons as Heir (太子 taizi; Heir-Apparent), and the ceremony of accession was held as soon as he died and in the presence of the late sovereign's corpse. If an emperor died without naming an Heir, his Empress (皇后 huanghou), now Dowager (皇太后 huang taihou; Empress Dowager) could choose any of his sons or any male member of the imperial clan.⁴ In

¹ One particular change is that I refer to the head of a commandery, 太守 taishou, as the Administrator rather than the Grand Administrator; there was no significance to the prefix in Later Han. In similar fashion I normally omit the prefix "Chief" in rendering the title 都尉 duwei, which Bielenstein and Dubs cite as Chief Commandant; it was now likewise of marginal importance. [I do include it in rendering some titles awarded to non-Chinese leaders.]

² Notable examples of the exercise of imperial authority in this fashion are the overthrow of Dou Xian by Emperor He in 92, and the destruction of Liang Ji by Emperor Huan in 159. In 168 Dou Wu attempted to oppose the imperial orders issued at the behest of the palace eunuchs, but failed. In 189, after the eunuchs had killed the General-in-Chief He Jin, they again attempted to use the imperial authority: the orders were ignored and the eunuchs were slaughtered, but the event marked the end of organised government.

³ The succession procedures of the Xiongnu were complex, causing confusion, disagreement and division over several generations: see, for example, the biography of the Southern Shanyu Bi. In India, the death of any ruler frequently produced major conflict between his sons, whether or not he had designated an heir.

⁴ The right of the Dowager to determine the succession had been established during Former Han, when in 74 the Lady Shangguan 上官, Dowager of Emperor Zhao, deposed the emperor-elect Liu He 劉賀. Though the fifteen-year-old Dowager was acting under the influence of her grandfather Huo Guang 霍光, her formal authority was critical to the process [QH: 465].

The Dowager's authority was confirmed for Later Han by the actions of the Dowager Deng Sui of Emperor He in 106, when she passed over one imperial son and chose a kinsman, Liu You, Emperor An. The authority was abused by the Lady Yan Ji, Dowager of Emperor An, in 125.

carrying out this responsibility, the Dowager had no obligation to consult with or take the advice of any particular official, no matter how high: the decision was frequently taken within the private apartments 定策禁中.

Should a new ruler be under age, the Dowager became regent for the duration of his minority.⁵ She took part in the affairs of court (臨朝 lin zhao), ruling with the same authority as an emperor.⁶ In practice, a regent Dowager commonly involved a senior male member of her family, father or brother, in the government, frequently with title as General-in-Chief (大將軍 da jiangjun). The General-in-Chief and some other senior officials could have "control of the Imperial Secretariat" (錄尚書事 lu shangshu shi), which gave administrative command of government, but the regent Dowager had ultimate power, and could defy her male kinsmen.⁷

THE IMPERIAL HAREM, THE PRIVATE APARTMENTS AND THE EUNUCHS

Where Former Han reached a total of ten grades of imperial concubines, Later Han had only three ranks below the Empress: Honoured Lady (貴人 guiren; Honourable Lady), Beauty (美人 meiren; Beautiful Lady) and Chosen Woman (采女 cainü; Chosen Lady). This did not indicate any restriction on the number of women who could be engaged, and it is said that during the 160s Emperor Huan had more than six thousand.⁸

There was a general selection for the harem in the eighth month of each year, when palace officials, including a eunuch and a physiognomist, were sent about the region of the capital to review virgins of respectable family⁹ between the ages of thirteen and twenty sui [twelve to nineteen by Western count]. Candidates were graded on a scale of nine according to their physical attractions and their character, and were then placed at one or another rank in the harem. Women of leading families, or those who were well-connected, could also be recommended and accepted, and any concubine could be promoted by the emperor's wish or by other influence. It was generally expected that the Empress would be chosen from among women of high family, though this was not always the case, and in such a highly political matter the emperor had rather less power of decision.¹⁰

Within the harem, known as the Lateral Courts (掖庭 yiting), the separate apartments of the Empress were designated as the Palace of Prolonged Autumn (長秋宮 changqiu gong); those of the Dowager were known as the Changle Palace 長樂宮, the Palace of Prolonged Joy, and on occasions when the emperor was brought to the throne from outside and his natural mother came to the capital, her apartments were styled the Yongle Palace 永樂宮, of Perpetual Joy. The head of the Empress's household, known as the Grand Prolonger of Autumn (大長秋 da changqiu), was a eunuch¹¹ with rank/salary of 2000 shi.¹² He commanded a large staff of officials, servants and slaves, responsible for all such matters as provisions, clothing and furnishing, horses and carriages, and secretaries for records and correspondence. A corps of bodyguards was commanded by the Supervisor of the Retinue of the Empress (中宮黃門冗從僕射 zhonggong huangmen rongcong puye; Supervisor of the Extra Retinue of the Attendants of the Yellow Gates of the Empress).

⁵ The Dowager Deng Sui actually ruled until her death in 121, though her protégé Emperor An had taken the cap of manhood several years before that.

⁶ The Dudian of Cai Yong, cited by HHS 10B:436 TC, describes how when an emperor is a minor the Dowager attends court 臨朝. She sits on the dais looking to the east, while the emperor faces her. Submissions from members of the court are presented in two copies, one to each.

⁷ In 168, the regent Dowager Dou refused permission to her father Dou Wu, when he wanted to purge the palace eunuchs. In 189 the regent Dowager He rejected a similar request from her brother He Jin.

At Bn 80:151-154, Bielenstein discusses the position of the Dowager and her male relatives. His description is quite correct, but I believe that he confuses the terminology by identifying all men who held title as General-in-Chief as being Regents; I reserve the term regent for the Dowager. Bielenstein also describes the authority to control the affairs of the Secretariat [領 ling shangshu shi during Former Han] as an official title: Intendant of the Affairs of the Masters of Writing; I interpret it rather as descriptive.

⁸ Bn 80:74 notes that some former titles of concubines were restored about 170, possibly reflecting the increase under Emperor Huan.

⁹ A "respectable family" (良家 liangjia; blameless family) was defined as one whose members had not been convicted of a crime, and were not involved in medicine 醫, magic 巫, trade 商賈 or any handicraft manufacture 百工 [HS 28B:1644 commentary quoting Ru Shun 如淳 of the third century]. The category was used for a number of selection processes, including recruitment to the army [see Feathered Forest guards below] and, in some circumstances, for an official career [see Wang Lie].

¹⁰ Examples of women of humble family include the Empress Yan of Emperor Shun and the Empress He of Emperor Ling. Both the Empress Liang of Emperor Shun and the Empress Dou of Emperor Huan were chosen specifically on account of their excellent family background.

¹¹ The chief assistant to the Grand Prolonger of Autumn could be either a eunuch or a full man: see sub Liang He and Wu Kaiming.

¹² On ranks and salaries measured by shi, see below.

The head of the household of the Dowager, the Steward of the Changle Palace (少府 shaofu; Privy Treasurer), was normally a full man. Reflecting the senior status of his mistress, the Steward's rank was higher than that of the Grand Prolonger of Autumn, and was equal to that of a Minister in the outside court. The most senior eunuch official was the Coachman (太僕 taipu), while the Commandant of the Guards (衛尉 weiwei) was normally a full man. Depending upon circumstances, the Commandant was responsible either for the Dowager's protection or for holding her under house arrest.¹³ Stewards of the Yongle Palace were full men, while other officials of the household were eunuchs; the natural mother of the emperor had neither the political nor the ritual status of the Dowager and the Empress, and her establishment was correspondingly less important.

The ladies of the harem were naturally attended by female servants, and overall administration was controlled by the eunuch Prefect of the Lateral Courts (掖庭令 yiting ling), subject to the separate establishments of the Empress and the Dowagers; his staff included full men as well as eunuchs. Within such a closed and cloistered environment, with personal and family fortune depending upon favour and childbirth, there was predictably fierce competition for the emperor's interest and affection. Intrigue was endemic, quarrels were frequent, witchcraft and magic were often brought into service, and murder was not unknown. The Lateral Courts had their own prison (掖庭獄 yiting yu), while the Drying House (暴室 bushi), so named because it had traditionally been used for the preparation of silk, contained the harem hospital and also a private place of confinement. Several empresses died there, ostensibly of grief 以憂死.

After an emperor's death, it was normal practice for the women of his harem to leave the palace and be placed as notional guardians of his tomb; a few, more fortunate, were able to remain at the palace,¹⁴ and some, who had not received the ruler's personal attentions, were perhaps able to resume a life outside.

The emperor's own private apartments, closed to the public areas of the palaces by yellow doors, were managed by the Prefect of the Yellow Gates (黃門令 huangmen ling), and there was also a eunuch Prefect of the Palace Gardens (鉤盾令 goushun ling; Prefect Intendant of the Imperial Palace Gardens). Each of these officials, responsible for the day-to-day supervision of very large staffs, had rank/salary of 600 shi, as did the Supervisor of the Retinue (中黃門冗從僕射 zhong huangmen rongcong puye; Supervisor of the Extra Retinue of the Palace Attendants at the Yellow Gates), who commanded guards and escorts. There was also a eunuch office of Palace Internuncios (中謁者 zhong yezhe), which was responsible for communication between the emperor in his private apartments. During the latter part of the dynasty, at least from the time of eunuch power under Emperor Huan, the Northern Prison of the Yellow Gates (黃門北寺獄 huangmen beisi yu; Prison of the Northern Office of the Yellow Gates) was used for political prisoners, particularly for enemies of the imperial eunuchs.

Besides these specific offices, there were two more general sets of eunuch officials. Firstly, at the beginning of Later Han, Emperor Guangwu appointed a number of Attendants at the Yellow Gates (小黃門 xiao huangmen; Junior Attendant at the Yellow Gates), who served as imperial messengers to the outside court from the private apartments of the palace. Their number was initially no more than ten, but increased considerably in later reigns; their rank/salary was 600 shi, equal to that of the administrative Prefects, but they were independent agents of the ruler.

Second, and growing in importance through the dynasty, were the Regular Attendants (中常侍 zhong changshi; Regular Palace Attendants), also agents and confidants of the emperor.¹⁵ Their rank/salary was at first 2000 shi, briefly reduced to 1000 shi, then made permanent at Equivalent to 2000 shi; their numbers were originally restricted to four, but later raised to ten and even higher. This level was comparable to that of a Minister in the outside court, and though the Regular Attendants had no formal subordinates they were generally recognised as leaders of the eunuchs in the palace.

¹³ The one eunuch recorded as having held this office is Cao Jie, who kept the Dowager Dou a prisoner in the late 160s.

¹⁴ See, for example, the Lady Feng I.

¹⁵ During Former Han, Regular Attendant had been a supernumerary office held by a full man; Later Han changed it to a formal position reserved for eunuchs [Bn 80:63 & 66].

Formally speaking, the officials of the private imperial apartments and the harem were responsible to the Minister Steward,¹⁶ but their close and intimate connection to the emperor meant that they were effectively independent of the hierarchy of the outer court, and during the second century they became a major political power.

KINGS AND NOBLES

It was a basic principle, established early in Former Han, that the title of King (王 wang; sometimes as "Prince") should be granted only to members of the imperial Liu family. At the beginning of Later Han some royal titles were awarded to leaders of the successful rebellion against Wang Mang, and the warlord Cao Cao was named King of Wei early in the third century, but these were both exceptional times, when the Han emperor did not have full control.

In the first part of Former Han, royal powers had been considerable, but they were removed during the course of the dynasty, and by the end of the first century BC kings had become no more than figure-heads. The tradition was maintained by Later Han, and though an imperial kinsman might be named as a king, he had no influence in the affairs of his nominal state; indeed, just because of their close relationship to the throne, kings were held under tight control. A royal state or kingdom (王國 wangguo), usually of commandery size, was governed by a Chancellor (相 xiang), who was appointed by the central government. There was a Tutor (傅 fu), also an imperial official, supervising personal conduct, and all members of the court were likewise appointed from the capital; none were answerable to the nominal ruler. A pension was paid, based upon the tax collected from the state, and kings were generally extremely wealthy, but they had no political power.

For the most part, kings were expected to stay on their fiefs, and came to the imperial capital only by permission. Some emperors were lenient, and allowed their brothers to reside at Luoyang, where life was a good deal more interesting than in the provinces. For the most part, however, kings led a comfortable life well out of the way of the government, and we learn of their activities only through the records of an occasional scandal involving sex, murder or, far more dangerous, dabbling in witchcraft.¹⁷

It was customary for the eldest son of a king by his principal wife to inherit his father's fief, while his brothers received county marquisates.¹⁸ Later generations and cadet lineages could be awarded less valuable fiefs, and if a royal line failed for lack of heirs, a cousin could be adopted across and enfeoffed to maintain the ancestral sacrifices.

Below the level of the kings, there was a complex system of noble ranks, in twenty grades, which could be awarded to any commoner either individually or by a general proclamation. Each rank gave certain privileges, notably relief from conscription and a degree of protection from the law, as a penalty might be commuted by sacrifice of one or more ranks.¹⁹ The two highest ranks, received only by direct grant from the emperor, were held by marquises (侯 hou) and secondary marquises (關內侯 guannei hou).²⁰

The major difference between the full marquises and the secondary marquises was that full marquises were normally granted a territorial fief and could expect to hand their honour to the next generation, while secondary marquises received only a pension, and inheritance was less common. At the beginning of Later Han, moreover, a number of the supporters of Emperor Guangwu were awarded marquisates of title: the Grand Tutor Zhuo ¹⁶ The Minister Steward (Privy Treasurer) is discussed under the Ministers below.

¹⁷ On this last, see Liu Ying, King of Chu.

¹⁸ These lower fiefs are discussed immediately below.

¹⁹ Loewe 60 provides a comprehensive discussion of the Han system of noble ranks, summarised by Bn 67:53.

²⁰ Renderings of these fiefdoms vary. Hou are commonly referred to as Marquises, but in QHX Loewe has adopted the term Nobles; I have followed the earlier system.

Handling of guannei hou has been even more varied. Bn 67 renders the title literally, as Marquis Within the Passes; I have previously followed Dubs' Marquis Within the Imperial Domain; Loewe QHX has Nobility of the Interior; and Cambridge 86 has Lesser Marquisate. For the present work I have adapted the last of these.

The phrase guannei is generally interpreted as referring to the Land Within the Passes, the imperial capital territory of Former Han. By tradition, subjects should not hold territorial fiefs in the region of their sovereign's domain.

Mao, for example, was named Marquis Who Proclaims Virtue, with a pension from the revenue of two thousand households; but this practice was gradually ended, and such awards were normally given only to non-Chinese.²¹

As a courtesy to the traditions of the past, Later Han gave titles to identified representatives of ancient royal and noble houses, including descendants of the rulers of Shang/Yin 商/殷 and of Zhou 周, both of whom were named as Dukes (公 gong) and of Confucius, whose family received a marquissate.²² These fiefs were evidently maintained until the end of the dynasty.

During Former Han, a full marquis had regularly received the territorial fief of a county, but Later Han adopted a more flexible system, and fiefs were frequently granted in smaller units, rising in rank from village (亭 ting; commune) to chief village (都亭 duting), district (鄉 xiang) and chief district (都鄉 duxiang).²³ The value of a marquissate was usually related to the size of the fief, but there are many cases where the revenue is defined in terms of a number of taxable households, and some senior marquises received revenue from more than one county.

As with kings, marquises of Later Han had no control over the administration of their nominal fiefs. Counties designated as marquissates were governed in the same fashion as any other, the only difference being that the magistrate was described as a Chancellor (相 xiang) rather than as a ling 令 or a zhang 長.²⁴ In theory, like the kings, a marquis could be expected to reside on his fief, but since many such feudatories, at least in the first generation, had been rewarded for their work at the court or in the administration, this provision was not always enforced. In particular, a marquis with supplementary title as a Servant at [the Spring and Autumn] Court (奉朝請 fengchao qing) was permitted to remain at the capital and held high rank at court conferences; during Later Han there were three grades of these Servants: Specially Advanced (特進 te jin) followed by Marquis at Court (朝廷侯 chaoting hou) and Marquis Attending Sacrifices (侍祠侯 shici hou). A feudatory who fell from favour, however, could be promptly exiled to his fief.

While it appears to have been the exception rather than the rule for a secondary marquissate to be transferred from father to son, full marquissates were generally hereditary, and there are a number of occasions that a fief was transferred to a cadet branch after the direct lineage had died out. Each succession, however, had to be approved and recorded, and the imperial government could exact a fine or fee at the time of transfer. This was certainly done by the regent Dowager Deng at a time of financial crisis early in the second century,²⁵ while there were a number of occasions that noble ranks were put on sale. The Han made some distinction between fiefs awarded for meritorious service and those that came from the grace and favour of the sovereign, notably to imperial relatives by marriage and, particularly in the second century, to palace eunuchs, but it was, as now, always a matter of judgement, and judgement was not always good.

It was rare for a woman to be enfeoffed in her own right. The sisters or daughters of an emperor were given title as Princess (公主 gongzhu), ranking equal with a marquis, and could be promoted to Senior Princess (長 chang gongzhu), ranking with a king. Each was granted a county as an estate (邑 yi), their husbands held rank as marquises, and their eldest sons inherited the fief. Daughters of kings also received title as Princesses, but their fiefs were districts and villages, and they were not passed down to their sons. Outside the imperial family, a few women were enfeoffed as Ladies (君 jun), with county fiefs, primarily because they were related to the emperor ²¹ Zhuo Mao's son Zhuo Zhong inherited his father's titular marquissate, but it was transferred to be a district fief [on which see below]. For awards to non-Chinese see Dian'an, Xushen and Yugui.

²² See Kong An, Ji Chang and Kong Zhi.

²³ Duting and duxiang were apparently territories about the capital of the larger unit: so that a duting was the village where the headquarters of the district was situated, and the duxiang contained the headquarters of a county. Unless it is necessary, in the body of this work I describe these fiefs only as villages or districts..

²⁴ On the administration of counties see below.

²⁵ See, for example, sub Deng Kang.

by marriage.²⁶ Emperor An honoured two of his wet-nurses, Song E and Wang Sheng, but this was predictably disapproved of.²⁷

SALARIES AND RANKS

The rank of any official was defined by his nominal salary, ranging through eighteen ranks from Ten Thousand shi (萬石 wanshi) for the very highest officials, through Fully 2000 shi (中二千石 zhong erqian shi), 2000 shi (erqian shi) and Equivalent to 2000 shi (比 bi erqian shi), down to the most junior officers at 100 shi or less. Salaries were paid partly in grain and partly in cash, in varying proportions and graded according to the official's position in the hierarchy, but the annual value was not identical to that indicated by his rank. Allowing for frequent donations and special grants, which could increase a man's income by half as much again, Bielenstein has calculated that all but the very lowest officers received an adequate income from the state; any corruption came rather from greed than from necessity.²⁸

In the discussion which follows, it may be borne in mind that high officials held rank/salary in the range of 2000 shi, while the head of a bureau at the capital or the magistrate of a medium-size county in the provinces was ranked at 600 shi.

EXCELLENCIES, MINISTERS AND OTHER SENIOR OFFICERS AT THE CAPITAL

At the beginning of each reign one distinguished official was named Grand Tutor (太傅 taifu). His status was higher than any other, and he could hold formal control of the Imperial Secretariat, but the office was normally a position of honour rather than of substance. When the incumbent died, the position fell into abeyance until the following reign.²⁹

For most of Former Han, the highest official of the government was the Imperial Chancellor (丞相 chengxiang), assisted by the Imperial Counsellor (御史大夫 yushi dafu; Grandee Secretary), who held censorial responsibilities. In 8 BC, however, this dual structure was replaced by three officials: the Grand Commandant (太尉 taiwei), the Grand Excellency over the Masses (大司徒 da situ) and the Grand Excellency of Works (大司空 da sikong); they were known as the Three Excellencies (三公 san gong). The new arrangement was followed by Emperor Guangwu of Later Han, with the most senior official styled as Grand Marshal (大司馬 da sima; Commander-in-Chief). In 51 AD the Grand Marshal was renamed Grand Commandant, while the prefix da "Grand" was dropped from the title of the situ and the sikong.³⁰

The Excellencies had general supervision over all aspects of the imperial government, and each had a small staff to assist him. The Grand Commandant was nominally the most senior, but all three were equal at Ten Thousand shi, so that, unlike Former Han, no one man held unmatched power. For active emperors such as Guangwu and his immediate successors, this arrangement ensured their control of government, but danger came when later rulers were neither so energetic nor so competent as their predecessors.

Below the Excellencies and ranked at Fully 2000 shi were nine Ministers (卿 qing), responsible for the bulk of the regular administration. The first three, formally under the supervision of the Grand Commandant, were ²⁶ These included the Lady Yin III, mother of Empress Deng of Emperor He, the Lady Yan Zong, mother of the Empress Yan of Emperor An, the Lady Yin V, mother of the Empress Liang of Emperor Shun, the Lady Sun Shou, wife of Liang Ji and sister-in-law of two empresses, the Lady Xuan, mother of the Empress Deng of Emperor Huan, and the Lady Xing, mother of the Empress He of Emperor Ling.

²⁷ In 191, during his short-lived hold on power, the usurping general Dong Zhuo enfeoffed his grand-daughter Dong Bo.

²⁸ Two sets of figures, from 50 and 106 AD, list the amounts paid to officials at each grade, in hu 斛 of unhusked grain and in cash, and Bn 80:125-131 presents detailed calculations on the salary paid.

The hu or shi was a measure of capacity, 19,968 litres [e.g. Dubs 38:276-280 and Cambridge 86:xxxviii]. It is sometimes rendered as "bushel" or, incorrectly, as "picul" (a measure of weight). Given that the actual amount of the salary was not directly related to the rank, I prefer to follow the convention which uses the transliteration rather than an attempted translation.

²⁹ After Chen Fan was destroyed by the palace eunuchs in 168, Hu Guang took his place as Grand Tutor to Emperor Ling; this was the only time a ruler had more than one Grand Tutor.

³⁰ Dubs renders san gong as Three Dukes, and Bielenstein has the [da situ] and the [da sikong] as [Grand] Minister over the Masses and [Grand] Minister of Works. I find it preferable to describe them as Excellencies; in particular, it is confusing that the da sinong, rendered by Bielenstein as Grand Minister of Agriculture, was of lower rank than the plain Minister over the Masses and Minister of Works.

the Minister of Ceremonies (太常 taichang; Grand Master of Ceremonies), the Minister of the Household (光祿勳 guangluxun; Superintendent of the Imperial Household), and the Minister of the Guards (衛尉 weiwei; Commandant of the Guards). The Minister Coachman (太僕 taipu; Grand Coachman), the Minister of Justice (廷尉 tingwei; Commandant of Justice) and the Minister Herald (大鴻臚 dahonglu; Grand Herald) were under the Excellency over the Masses, while the Minister of the Imperial Clan (宗正 zong zheng; Director of the Imperial Clan), the Minister of Finance (大司農 da sinong; Grand Minister of Agriculture) and the Minister Steward (少府 shaofu; Privy Treasurer) were supervised by the Excellency of Works.³¹

The Minister of Ceremonies was responsible for the relations between the sovereign and the supernatural. He was in charge of worship at the imperial ancestral temples and the suburban altars, and responsible for the care of the imperial tombs and for such ceremonies as the Great Archery and Serving the Aged which were held each year at the Hall of the Circular Moat. One of his major subordinates was the Court Astronomer (太史令 taishi ling; Prefect Grand Astrologer), ranked at 600 shi, whose office maintained observations of the heavens, prepared the calendar, recorded portents, and advised on auspicious and ill-omened days. The Court Astronomer was also in charge of the literacy test which was administered to candidates for entry to the Imperial Secretariat or the Censorate; they were required to know some nine thousand characters and be able to write all recognised styles of calligraphy.³²

The Minister of Ceremonies also supervised the Imperial University (太學 taixue; Academy), including some thirteen Academicians (博士 boshi; Erudits) holding chairs for each of the five Confucian classics of the New Text school.³³ Academicians were Equivalent to 600 shi and the head of the University, the Libationer (祭酒 jijiu), ranked at 600 shi; despite the official emphasis on scholarship, this was no higher than any other regular bureau of general administration. The role of the University as a comparatively minor route of entry into the commissioned imperial service is discussed below.

The Minister of the Household was responsible for guarding the emperor within the public areas of the palace and when he was outside; the walls and gates of the palace were in the charge of the Minister of the Guards, while the harem was protected by eunuchs: in this way, no single officer had full control of the ruler's security.

The work of protection was carried out by gentleman cadets (郎 lang), organised in five corps, each commanded by a General of the Household (中郎將 zhonglang jiang; General of the Gentlemen of the Household).³⁴ The General of the Household for All Purposes (五官 wuguan zhonglang jiang), of the Left (左 zuo zhonglang jiang) and of the Right (右 you zhonglang jiang) were in charge of men who were essentially civilians: they had been nominated by their commanderies and were serving a period of probation before being appointed to substantive office in the civil service;³⁵ the numbers of these three corps (三署 sanshu) could total between 700 and 2000.

³¹ For convenience and swifter recognition of the significance of these ministerial offices, I have rendered each with the prefix Minister. Loewe has used a similar system, but with the term Superintendent [e.g. Loewe 74:310 and QHX 757-765].

³² Many scholars render the character shi in this title as Historian or Scribe, notably inspired by the fact that the great historian Sima Qian 司馬遷, compiler of Shi ji 史記, held appointment as taishi ling. However, though Bielenstein fairly describes the officer as "the most versatile and technically trained official" in the government [Bn 80:19], his responsibilities for the calendar, for portents and for specialised examinations did not necessarily extend to historical records. As Bielenstein observes, the official Diaries of Activity and Repose (起居注 qiju zhu), with detailed accounts of the emperor's day-to-day life within the court and the palace, were more likely to have been entrusted to intimate scribes, including eunuchs, rather than to an outside official, now matter how talented [Bn 80:163 and Bn 54:21-22]. Similarly, though the official history of Later Han was compiled at intervals through the dynasty, no taishi ling appears as a member of the relevant committee; and the other great historian Ban Gu, chief author of Han shu, never held that office.

³³ On the various schools of Later Han, see the chapter on Literary and Scholarly Works.

³⁴ The title zhonglang jiang presents problems of rendering, for it sometimes appears in circumstances which have little to do with any corps of gentleman at the capital. For much of Later Han, for example, the chief imperial agent at the court of the Southern Xiongnu was known as the shi Xiongnu zhonglang jiang, which I render simply as Emissary: see the section on Officials dealing with Non-Chinese peoples below. On occasion, moreover, a commander in the field could hold title as zhonglang jiang, as Ren Shang in 112 and Zhu Jun in 184. And when military agricultural colonies were established at the end of Han, many were supervised by Generals of the Household in Charge of Agriculture: in that context I render the title as Commissioner for Agriculture.

³⁵ This matter is discussed in the section on Recruitment below.

The other two units, Rapid as Tigers (虎賁 huben) and the Feathered Forest (羽林 yulin), were of more practical use. The Gentlemen Rapid as Tigers, some 1500 strong, appear to have held their positions by hereditary right, but the 1700 men of the Feathered Forest were recruited from the sons and grandsons of soldiers who had died in battle and also from respectable families of Liang province.³⁶ The Feathered Forest corps provided guards for the imperial horse-parks of the northwest, and some of them may have been officer cadets for the army.

Counsellors (大夫 dafu), who took part in debate at court and provided advice to the emperor, were also subordinates of the Minister of the Household. They included the Household Counsellors (光祿 guanglu dafu; Imperial Household Grandee) at Equivalent to 2000 shi, the Palace Counsellors (太中 taizhong dafu; Grand Palace Grandee) at 1000 shi, and the Attendant Counsellors (中散 zhongsan dafu; Palace Attendant Grandee) and Counsellors Remonstrant (諫議 jianyi dafu; Grandee Remonstrant and Consultant), both at 600 shi. Any of these, and particularly the high-ranking Household Counsellors, could receive special commissions as investigators or messengers on behalf of the emperor. Also at 600 shi were the Consultants (議郎 yilang; Gentleman Consultant); though nominally the most junior of the Counsellors at court, this position was frequently used as a holding appointment for a man in waiting for substantially higher office.

Under the general aegis of the Minister of the Household there was also provision for a number of special Commandants (都尉 duwei; Chief Commandant), appointed under one of three titles. In time of peace these military offices were effectively sinecures, but their incumbents were capable of command in war. There could be as many as ten Commandants of Cavalry (騎 ji duwei), five of Attendant Cavalry (鮒騎 fujī duwei) and three Commandants of the Equipage (奉車 fengju duwei); all were ranked at Equivalent to 2000 shi.

The Internuncios (謁者 yezhe), also formally under the Minister of the Household, are discussed in the section below on the Imperial Agencies.

The Minister of the Guards was responsible for the guards and patrols at the gates and walls of the two imperial palaces at Luoyang. He had some three thousand men under his command, of which the ordinary troops were conscripted for a year. They were carefully divided among a number of patrol units and guard-posts, with Prefects of the Guards (衛士令 weishi ling) for the Northern Palace and for the Southern Palace, and a Prefect of the Majors for Official Carriages (公車司馬令 gongju sima ling). The two Gates for Official Carriages (公車門 gongju men), one at each palace, accepted memorials to the throne and received special nominees for office. The three Prefects ranked at 600 shi, but there was a Major (司馬 sima), at 1000 shi, in charge of each separate gate to the palace, and entrance was strictly controlled by a system of passports and tallies.

The Minister Coachman had two areas of responsibility. Firstly, his office was in charge of the carriages and horses of the imperial stables of Luoyang, for use by the emperor and appropriate members of his harem and his court. Secondly, and far broader in scale, he was in charge of the breeding and supply of horses for the army and for the manufacture of military equipment. Former Han had established great horse-parks in the northwest, and Later Han continued the system, the most important being the Liuma pasture 流馬苑 of "Roaming Horses" in Hanyang commandery. Towards the end of the first century, after the triumph over the Northern Xiongnu, some of the breeding grounds were reduced or abandoned, but a few years later, as fighting increased against the Qiang and other non-Chinese of the north and northwest, new parks were established southwest in Yi province, away from the now troubled region of Liang province.

The Minister of Justice was the chief legal officer of the empire. Assisted by a Director (正 zheng) and a staff of about 150, he was in charge of the administration of the law, could recommend changes, codifications and amnesties, and decided on cases submitted from the provinces. The Ministry maintained an Imperial Prison (詔獄 zhaoyu) at Luoyang,³⁷ and the Minister was responsible for death sentences each year.

The Minister Herald had charge of visitors to the imperial capital, including members of the imperial clan and non-Chinese embassies, and his officers guided people to their places at time of court ceremonies or imperial ³⁶ On respectable families (liangjia), see note 9 above.

³⁷ There were two Imperial Prisons at Luoyang, one under the Minister of Justice, one controlled by the Prefect of Luoyang: Bn 80:50.

sacrifices. With a comparatively small staff, his office received messengers from provinces and commanderies and kings, and the Minister supervised the inheritance of hereditary titles and fiefs; this last presumably in conjunction with the Minister of the Imperial Clan. It is probable that the Ministry had a small bureau of interpreters.

The Minister of the Imperial Clan, as his title implies, supervised the conduct of all members of the extended imperial family, including kings, marquises and princesses. Again with a small staff, usually less than fifty, his office maintained a register and, in particular, reported on occasions that an imperial kinsman committed a crime, so that the ruler could consider what level of penalty should be applied. As a matter of principle, the Minister was a member of the imperial Liu clan.

The Minister of Finance was the government Treasurer. During Former Han he shared responsibility for funding with the Minister Steward, who had control of the privy purse, but during Later Han all financial matters were placed under one ministry.³⁸ Officials of the Minister of Finance had charge of the treasury, the imperial mint and the great government granaries. They supervised and audited the collection of taxes, and implemented the policies of price control and government monopoly applied during the dynasty. To a very large degree, however, Later Han decentralised such financial matters, so that the production of salt and iron was entrusted to the governments of commanderies and kingdoms: and the great Ao Granary 敖倉, for example, which collected the grain brought from the east of China by the Vast Canal 鴻溝 network, was under the local control of the Intendant of Henan, the capital commandery.³⁹

The Minister Steward was in charge of all aspects of the emperor's personal life, including his food and drink, his health and entertainment, the maintenance of his harem and the imperial palaces and parks. The staff of the ministry was naturally extremely large, though several offices which were formally under the Steward's jurisdiction were in practice independent or attended the ruler personally: these included the eunuchs of the harem and the private apartments, discussed in a section above, and the Imperial Secretariat and the Censorate, discussed below.

Among officials directly involved with serving the emperor, one may note the Court Provisioner (太官令 taiguan ling; Prefect Grand Provisioner), who had charge of all aspects of imperial food and drink, including the kitchens and the supply of grains and meat, with special offices for delicacies, fruits and wine, and the Court Physician (太醫令 taiyi ling; Prefect Grand Physician). There were also officials for the wardrobe, valets, stationery, a storehouse and pay office, and for sacrifices within the palace; several of these were eunuchs.

The offices of the Eastern and Western Gardens (東園 dong yuan and 西園 xi yuan) lay apart from the main palace compounds but were directly related to the emperor. The Eastern Garden included workshops for ritual and funerary objects, including the celebrated jade shrouds, which could also be issued to members of the close imperial clan. The Western Garden, in contrast, was a pleasure park, much favoured by Emperor Ling, who also maintained personal treasuries there, funded by the sale of offices and titles, and by forced transfers from the public holdings of the Ministry of Finance. In 188 he established a private army, under eight Colonels of the Western Garden, of whom the chief was the eunuch Jian Shi, to assist in dealing with the general troubles of the empire.

Though the eunuch Prefect of the Palace Gardens was responsible for pleasure parks and gardens, there were also a number of hunting grounds outside the capital. Among them were the Vast Pond (鴻池 hongchi), the Shanglin Park (上林苑 shanglin yuan; Park of the Supreme Forest), and the Guangcheng Park (廣成苑 guangcheng yuan; Park of Extending Achievement).⁴⁰ Each was administered by a Prefect, and provided not only exercise and entertainment for the ruler but also birds and beasts for the imperial table.

³⁸ See Bn 80:46-47. In such circumstances it appears inappropriate and misleading to render the title shaofu as Privy Treasurer, and I have therefore adopted the reading Minister Steward.

³⁹ HHS 116/26:3590 and see under Liu Zhuang, Emperor Ming, and Liu Da, Emperor He. Cf. however Bn 80:45-46 and 76:59-60.

⁴⁰ The Vast Pond lay to the east of Luoyang, the Guangcheng Park to the south, and the Shanglin Park to the west. They, and others, are described by Bn 76:80-83. The Shanglin Park was the second of that name: there was a Shanglin Park outside Chang'an during Former Han, and it was still maintained and occasionally visited by the rulers of Later Han. Additional parks were established by later rulers, notably Emperor

The Prefect of Insignia and Credentials (符節令 fujie ling), responsible for issuing official seals and other emblems of authority, fell under the jurisdiction of the Minister Steward, as did the imperial libraries (祕書 bil mishu) for most of the dynasty.⁴¹ The Orchid Terrace (蘭臺 lantai), evidently the headquarters of the Censorate [on which see below], held official documents and archives, while the Eastern Pavilion (東觀 dongguan) held a similar collection which was used most notably for the on-going compilation of Dongguan Hanji, the history of Later Han itself. Both these buildings were in the Southern Palace, but there was a further collection in the Hall of All-Embracing Brightness (宣名殿 xuanming dian) of the Northern Palace; while the Stone House (石室 shishi), whose site is unspecified, housed the apocryphal texts strongly favoured by Emperor Guangwu.

Palace Attendants (侍中 shizhong), ranking at 2000 shi or its Equivalent, and Gentlemen at the Yellow Gates (黃門侍郎 huangmen shilang; Gentlemen-in-Attendance of the Yellow Gates), at 600 shi;⁴² were under the Minister Steward. Palace Attendants frequently escorted the emperor; and for most of the first century they had full right of access to the palace; though the privilege was withdrawn by Emperor He the office remained one of high honour. Gentlemen at the Yellow Gates acted as liaison between the palace and the outside world, and served as ushers at formal gatherings of the court. There were also two sets of supernumerary appointments, Serving within the Yellow Gates (給事黃門 jishi huangmen) and Serving within the Palace (給事中 jishi zhong), which granted trusted access to the sovereign and were probably under the Minister Steward; full men held both offices, but eunuchs could be appointed as Serving within the Yellow Gates.⁴³

We have already observed that the Minister of the Household was responsible for the emperor's security within the public areas of the palace and outside, and the Supervisor of the Retinue for his protection within the harem, while officers under the Minister of the Guards controlled the gates of the palaces themselves. Besides these three commands, however, two further senior officials, again with separate units, guarded the capital. The Bearer of the Mace (執金吾 zhijinwu; Bearer of the Gilded Mace) was in charge of police in the city of Luoyang, outside the imperial palaces, while the Colonel of the City Gates (城門校尉 chengmen xiaowei) was responsible for the garrisons at each of the twelve gates of the capital. Both officials were ranked at Equivalent to 2000 shi, comparable to but below the Ministers.

The Court Architect (將作大匠 jiangzuo dajiang), ranked at 2000 shi, again close to that of a Minister, was responsible for the construction, maintenance and repair of imperial and official buildings, and for roads about the capital. Most buildings were made of wood with tiled roofs, so dilapidation was constant, and fires were also frequent. Maintenance and repair were thus a considerable task and there was constant refitting and refurbishing. Some special projects required large-scale labour: the restoration of the Imperial University under Emperor Shun in the early 130s, for example, occupied more than a hundred thousand workmen for a year; Emperor Huan was known for building work, particularly his luxurious restoration of the Garden of the Shining Dragon (濯龍園 zhuolong yuan; Garden of the Sleek Dragon) in the Northern Palace; and during the 180s Emperor Ling engaged in a vastly extravagant and wasteful program.

One must assume that skilled workmen were hired when necessary, but a great part of the work was carried out by convicts controlled by the Prefect of the Enclosure of the Left (左校令 zuoxiao ling); in 124 an additional unit was set up under the Prefect of the Enclosure of the Right. There are a number of references to high officials who fell into disgrace and were sentenced to a term in the Enclosure on the Left.

Huan and Emperor Ling.

⁴¹ The collections were formally supervised by the Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk (御侍中丞 yushi zhongcheng), head of the Censorate, but in 159 a Custodian of the Private Library (祕書監 mishu jian) was appointed under the Minister of Ceremonies.

⁴² Former Han huangmen lang 黃門郎 (Gentlemen of the Yellow Gates) and huangmen shilang 黃門侍郎 (Gentlemen in Attendance of the Yellow Gates), both being supernumerary positions. Under Later Han, huangmen lang were no longer appointed, while huangmen shilang became substantive officials; the character shi being sometimes omitted in the texts. I render the title as Gentleman at the Yellow Gates.

⁴³ The office of Cavalier Attendant (散騎 sanjì), which had been supernumerary under Former Han, was not used by Later Han. In 220 the court of Wei restored the position in two grades: Cavalier Regular Attendant (散騎常侍 sanjì changshi) and Cavalier Gentleman Attendant (sanjì shi lang 散騎侍郎): SGZ 2:58, JS 14:733; Fang 52:4, and see sub Sima Fu. Fang renders the titles as Senior and Junior Chamberlains, but I cite them without distinction as Cavalier Attendants.

The imperial capital and the region about it were administered in essentially the same way as any other territory in the empire, and the general system of local administration is discussed below. Because of the importance of the territory, however, and the nobles and high officials who lived there, there were some special arrangements.

The city and county of Luoyang was in the charge of a Prefect (令 ling), while the surrounding commandery of Henan was administered by an Intendant (尹 yin; Governor). The rank/salaries of the two officials were no higher than their counterparts in the provinces, though their duties were certainly more complicated. Besides the possibility of friction with people of position and influence, the Intendant of Henan was responsible for a number of markets about the city, and also for the great Ao Granary, the collection and distribution centre for supplying the capital. The Prefect of Luoyang had considerable authority to deal with criminals, including those of high rank, and had charge of an important Imperial Prison (獄朝 zhaoyu).

The capital province was governed by the Director of Retainers (司隸校尉 sili xiaowei; Colonel Director of Retainers).⁴⁴ His territory included seven commanderies: Henan, Henei and Hedong north of the Yellow River; Hongnong; and the so-called Three Adjuncts (三輔 sanfu) about the former capital of Chang'an, being Jingzhao, Youfufeng and Zuopingyi.⁴⁵ Though Inspectors of regular provinces ranked only at 600 shi, the Director of Retainers was Equivalent to 2000 shi, and he had special authority to supervise and if necessary impeach all officials in the capital province.⁴⁶

THE IMPERIAL AGENCIES

At the beginning of Later Han, as Emperor Guangwu appointed Xuan Bing his Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk (御侍中丞 yushi zhongcheng; Palace Assistant Secretary), he arranged for him to take a separate place at court with the Director of the Retainers and the Director of the Imperial Secretariat; closely associated with the throne, they became known as the holders of the Three Special Seats (三獨坐 san duzuo). The direct contact of the emperor with these lower officials, together with the division of the highest position of the bureaucracy between the Three Excellencies, gave the ruler another means to influence the government.⁴⁷

The Imperial Secretariat (尚書 shangshu) was formally under the Minister Steward, and the Director (令 ling; Prefect of the Masters of Writing) ranked at 1000 shi. He was assisted by a Deputy Director (僕射 puye; Supervisor) at 600 shi, with individual Masters of Writing (shangshu), also at 600 shi, responsible for one of six Bureaus (曹 cao), each with a skilled staff of Gentlemen (郎 lang) in various ranks and Foreman Clerks (令史 lingshi).⁴⁸ The bureaus dealt variously with correspondence and documents relating to the senior ministers, the heads of provincial administration, memorials and petitions from common people, and non-Chinese states and tribes.

As the essential source for any official documents, including commissions and appointments to office, the Secretariat had great potential power, already reflected in the right to control the Secretariat (lu shangshu shi), which had been held by some high officials during Former Han and which continued during Later Han.⁴⁹ Its ⁴⁴ Former Han had appointed from time to time either a sili xiaowei or a sili: Bn 80:84-85. Later Han always appointed a sili xiaowei, and I use the shorter rendering. The province itself was known as Sili.

⁴⁵ The heads of these commanderies took their titles from their territories, and Dubs and Bielenstein render them accordingly, as Governor of Jingzhao 京北尹, Western Sustainer 右扶風, and Eastern Supporter 左馮翊. I describe the head of Jingzhao as Intendant, but refer to the heads of the other two units as Administrators.

⁴⁶ The Directors Li Ying and Han Yan used their powers to effect against the palace eunuchs and their party in the 160s, as did Yang Qiu in the late 170s.

⁴⁷ HHS 17:927; deC 81:68-69. Bielenstein also makes this point, notably in Bn 79:68-70 and 80:149, though he discounts the claims by several modern Chinese scholars that the Excellencies became all but figure-heads.

⁴⁸ The fact that the office and some members of its staff are both described as shangshu can be confusing; I therefore refer to the office consistently as the Imperial Secretariat, and do not use the rendering Masters of Writing.

Though they are consistent within the Dubs/Bielenstein system, it is again confusing that the head and the second-in-command of the office are described as Prefect (ling) and Supervisor (puye), particularly as some departments of the government were headed by a puye. Rather than explain their role each time, I render the two as Director and Deputy Director, and I usually refer to their subordinate staff in generic terms.

⁴⁹ See above at note 7..

position became increasingly influential in the course of the dynasty, so that during the second century the Secretariat was heavily involved in policy and had a pivotal position in any coup d'état.⁵⁰

The title of the Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk reflected the original position of the office as one of two chief assistants to the Imperial Counsellor under Former Han. At the beginning of Later Han, however, the position was set up in similar fashion to the Secretariat: ranking at 1000 shi, the Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk was formally subordinate to the Minister Steward, but his close association to the emperor made it largely independent of that ministry. Most notably, the Palace Assistant and his subordinates, the Imperial Clerks (侍御史 shiyushi: Attending Secretaries), were responsible for checking memorials for possible offences and for supervising the conduct of state ceremonies. They could raise any matter of concern, could charge any official with an offence, and the most senior and experienced, the Imperial Clerks Preparers of Documents (治書 zhishu shiyushi), advised the ruler on cases referred by the Minister of Justice.

In this regard, though the Excellencies still exercised general supervision over the affairs of state, and the Secretariat could be called upon to investigate and adjudicate accusations of crime or lese-majesty,⁵¹ the Imperial Clerks had the right to take the initiative, and their office thus performed the essential functions of an Imperial Censorate.

The library of the Orchid Terrace, with a skilled staff of Foreman Clerks, evidently served as the headquarters of the Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, and until 159 his office held general charge of all the imperial libraries; the duties were then transferred to a new Custodian of the Private Library.⁵²

Besides their attendance on the emperor, the Imperial Clerks also acted as his agents abroad, representing the ruler at a funeral or an enthronement, reporting on local problems, or taking action on his authority. From the time of Emperor An, moreover, Clerks and the Palace Assistant could be found in command of troops, frequently in circumstances where disorder was so widespread that the imperial forces needed a high level of co-ordination to deal with the problem; their use and effectiveness varied, and such duties were more regularly entrusted to professional military commanders, but Imperial Clerks appear in various campaigns until the last years of effective government.

Slightly below the Imperial Clerks, without their censorial powers but also agents of the emperor, were the Internuncios, whose rank was Equivalent to 600 shi, and who were headed by a Supervisor at Equivalent to 1000 shi. Chosen for commanding presence and a powerful voice, they took part in ceremonies at the capital, acted as envoys for the emperor to feudatories and non-Chinese peoples, and could be allocated to supervise and control potential dissidents. Besides this, however, Internuncios were sent on a wide range of special expeditions and projects, undertaking water control of the Yellow River and supervising frontier defence-works. A reserve and training camp established at Liyang in Wei commandery was under the permanent command of an Internuncio, and on occasion, like Imperial Clerks, Internuncios could lead troops in the field.

During Former Han and under Wang Mang, Special Commissioners clad in Embroidered Garments 繡衣直指 had been sent out with high censorial powers to review the administration of the provinces. This program was not maintained by Later Han,⁵³ and the closest parallel was the Special Commission of Eight, headed by Zhou Ju and Du Qiao, which was sent out by Emperor Shun in 142; it was unique to the dynasty, and achieved only limited success.

On many occasions, however, officials were sent out with a Staff of Authority (節 jie),⁵⁴ giving them special status in addition to their substantive rank. The staff itself was six feet in length, with ribbons at the top, and the ⁵⁰ See, for example, the activities of Yu Xu and Zuo Xiong in the time of Emperor Shun, and the coup of the eunuchs against Dou Wu and Chen Fan in 168.

⁵¹ Two examples of the Secretariat in that role are the cases of Xiang Kai in 166 and Cai Yong and Cai Zhi in 178.

⁵² See above at note 41.

⁵³ There is one reference to a Commissioner in Plain Clothes 微服使者, Chang Feng, who was sent to review and report upon feelings among the people; there may have been others.

⁵⁴ Such officials are frequently described as Bearing the Staff of Authority (zhijie 持節) and the phrase may be rendered as Bearing authority it conferred varied with the commission. Some messengers with the Staff had only a minor duty, as to grant promotion to a general in the field or serve as an envoy to a state, but at other times the Staff of Authority conferred wide-ranging powers, including the right to make senior appointments and to carry out executions without prior reference to the throne. It was commonly used in time of emergency, or where the local situation was too distant and complex for the normal procedure of submitting reports and receiving instructions.

THE PROVINCES

The Later Han empire was divided into thirteen provinces (州 zhou),⁵⁵ supervising more than a hundred commanderies (郡 jun) or equivalent units, which in turn governed almost 1200 counties (縣 xian), including marquisates and other fiefs. At the time of census about 140 the population was some 48 million individuals in 9.5 million households.

The administrative system of Han was notable for the manner in which it maintained checks and balances, so that, as we have seen, the protection of the emperor was in the hands of the eunuchs of the harem, the Minister of the Household and the Minister of the Guards, while other officers, commanding separate troops, controlled the gates of the palace and of the city, and the precincts within. The same technique and policy was applied in the territories outside the capital, where a complex structure of executive authority, balanced by supervision, restrained local independence and official corruption over the vast area of empire.

We have noted that the capital province was governed by the Director of Retainers, with rank at Equivalent to 2000 shi, and special powers to deal with high officials and the nobility. At the beginning of the dynasty, other provinces were similarly ruled by Governors (牧 mu; Shepherds), at the same rank, with executive authority. In 42, however, and for a century and a half thereafter, regular provinces were placed under Inspectors (刺史 cishi), whose rank was only 600 shi, and who did not have direct authority over the commandery units within their territory. The Inspector reported each year on the affairs of his province, but he could only advise of wrongdoing; action was the prerogative of the central government.

There were two exceptions to this rule. Firstly and generally, when banditry or other disturbance was greater than could be dealt with by the resources of a single commandery, the Inspector was authorised to raise troops throughout the province, and he took command of the united forces. Second and specifically, because the region of Jiaozhi in the far south of the empire was distant from the capital, the Inspector held the Staff of Authority and could act on his own initiative.⁵⁶ In 188, moreover, shortly before the death of Emperor Ling and the collapse of central power, the system of Governors was in part restored; Governors and Inspectors were then appointed to one province or another according to circumstance.

Inspectors and Governors were appointed by the central administration, but their staff was recruited locally, and the chief of them were known as Assistant Officers (從事 congshi; Attendant Clerks). At the centre were the Registrar (主簿 zhubu; Master of Records), the Attendant Officer (別駕 biejia congshi; Aide-de-Camp) and the Headquarters Officer (治中 zhizhong congshi; Attendant Clerk for the Bureau of Headquarters); the Headquarters Officer was responsible for local appointments and recommendations of individuals to the imperial capital. Other Assistant Officers were sent to supervise each commandery unit in the province.

The core of local government was the commandery, ruled by an Administrator (太守 taishou; Grand Administrator), whose rank was 2000 shi, with an Assistant (丞 cheng); in commanderies on the frontier the Assistant was styled a Chief Clerk (zhangshi 長史). Also on the frontier, and in commanderies within the empire when there was continuing serious trouble, a Commandant (都尉 duwei; Chief Commandant) was appointed to deal with military affairs; in some cases more than one, each in charge of a different region (部 bu). All these officials were appointed by the central government, and if the post of Administrator was vacant either the Credentials.

⁵⁵ This includes the capital province under the Director of Retainers. During Former Han, and sometimes still in Later Han, provinces were also referred to as Regional Divisions (bu 部).

⁵⁶ See Dongguan Hanji, quoted by commentary to HHS 118/28:3618.

Assistant or the Commandant could act in place.

There was no real difference between the administration of a kingdom and that of a commandery: a kingdom was a commandery unit which had been made the fief of a member of the imperial house, but the king had no authority within his nominal state. A kingdom was headed by a Chancellor (相 xiang) rather than an Administrator, aided by a Chief Clerk rather than an Assistant and, unlike the commanderies, all kingdoms had a Commandant of the Capital (中尉 zhongwei).

The head of a commandery unit was responsible for all aspects of government within his territory, and he had a large number of locally-appointed officers (吏 li), ranging from high-level assistants in charge of specialised departments or bureaus, through clerks to yamen runners and policemen. Senior local members of staff included the head of the Bureau for All Purposes (五官曹 wuguan cao), the Registrar (主簿 zhubu; Master of Records) and the Officer of Merit (功曹 gongcao; Officer of the Bureau of Merit). Like the Headquarters Officer in a province, the Officer of Merit was responsible for local appointments and for nominations to the capital; he was respected, trusted and influential.

The titles of other commandery bureaus could vary from one jurisdiction to another, but the basic pattern was the same, with officers in charge of grain storage, population registers, legal matters and banditry, ritual ceremonies and schools. Later Han, moreover, had largely abolished the state monopolies and the central control of major resources, so that salt, iron, silver, lead and other minerals, together with special products such as cloth, fine stone and fruits, were now dealt with locally.

To check the conduct of subordinate counties, the commandery sent out Investigators (都郵 duyou), in the same fashion as the Assistant Officers of the province. Like the provinces, the commanderies were required to send annual reports and accounts, including information from the counties; and when a new Administrator took over he was obliged to report upon the conduct of his predecessor and, if appropriate, impeach him for his faults.

At this level, moreover, there were two strong policies. The first, the rule of avoidance, forbade commissioned officials to hold appointments within their native provinces, and the so-called San-hu 三互 regulations extended this prohibition to a connection by marriage.⁵⁷ The second prevented the head of a commandery from taking any action outside his official territory. It was for this reason that command of broader military operations within a province was entrusted to Inspectors, to commissioned generals or to other agents of the emperor; commandery troops could be used, but they were under external control.⁵⁸

Former Han established a number of Dependent States (屬國 shuguo) to supervise non-Chinese peoples subordinate to the empire but whose territory was not yet fully incorporated into the commandery system. Later Han followed the same policy, with Dependent States at both county and commandery level. On several frontiers, however, notably to the west in Yi province and to the northeast in You province, the establishment of a dependent state indicated a loosening of imperial control rather than expansion: in both those areas, dependent states covered territory which had been part of a regular commandery during Former Han.⁵⁹

A dependent state at commandery level was headed by a Commandant ranking at Equivalent to 2000 shi, just below his neighbouring Administrator, and the functions of his regime were similar; the establishment of a dependent state often represented an extension and separation of a region (部 bu) within a commandery which had likewise been controlled by a Commandant. County-level units were commonly known as marches (道 dao), and the same name could also be applied to counties within regular commanderies which had large numbers of non-Chinese.

⁵⁷ See Shi Bi, and also the objection to the system presented by Cai Yong.

⁵⁸ In similar fashion, the head of a territorial unit was required to remain within his jurisdiction unless he had special permission: see, for example, the situation of Huangfu Gui and Hu Fang in 166.

⁵⁹ On the establishment of commandery-level dependent states in the time of Emperor An of Later Han, see deC 84:445-449. In the far north-western frontier of Liang province, however, dependent states which had been established by Former Han were retained by Later Han. On this region, see Loewe 67A:162.

The county was the lowest unit of local administration to be ruled by an official appointed by the central government. Formally speaking, counties of more than ten thousand households were headed by a Prefect (令 ling), with rank at 1000 shi; smaller had Chiefs (長 zhang) at 500 shi or at 300 shi; while the fief of a county marquis was governed by a Chancellor (相 xiang) The distinction between a Prefect and a Chief was not always strictly observed, however, and in the present work I refer to the generality of heads of counties as magistrates.⁶⁰

A county magistrate had an Assistant, and also one or more Commandants (here as wei 尉), for basic police and anti-banditry operations. Otherwise the administrative structure of a county reflected that of a commandery, though on a lesser scale and with smaller salaries for the local officers. There were official bureaus and schools, while subordinate districts and villages were supervised and controlled; their chiefs and headmen were formally appointed by the local government officer, but were normally men recognised by the community.

A county magistrate was certainly a commissioned officer of the imperial service, and in theory the assistants and commandants were too, but in practice these officials could gain their places though a direct imperial commission rather than by the full route of nomination, probation and appointment described below.⁶¹ There are also a number of cases recorded where the position of a county magistrate was filled, at least for the short term, by local appointment: such a brevet magistrate (守令 shouling or 守長 shouzhang) would be a man of distinction, generally with experience at headquarters.⁶²

APPOINTMENT AND RECRUITMENT

Both Former and Later Han distinguished between commissioned and non-commissioned members of the imperial service, and this was particularly noticeable in local government. Inspectors, Administrators, county magistrates and their chief assistants were commissioned officials, appointed from outside the territory they controlled, while their subordinate officers, recruited locally, had no immediate right to further promotion. At the capital, the distinction was less obvious, but certain positions, notably those ranked at 600 shi or above, were held only by commissioned officials, while many clerks and other lower officers had no expectation of advancement.

The essential principle, as for a military commission in many armies of the present day, was that the man concerned should receive formal recognition from the imperial government. Only when that was done could he expect to embark upon a career which would bring substantial responsibility and might lead to high office.

In essence, the process by which a man was chosen for commission followed three stages: nomination, probation, and examination. Depending upon circumstances, however, some men could by-pass one or more of these stages. The most common patterns are summarised below.

Commandery nomination as Filial and Incorrupt (孝廉 xiaolian; Filially Pious and Incorrupt) gave entry to one of three civilian corps of gentleman cadets (郎 lang) under a General of the Household. The candidate undertook a period of probation there, while also serving as a largely decorative guard to the emperor under the authority of the Minister of the Household. The cadets were in three ranks, Equivalent to 300 shi, to 400 shi and to 600 shi; it is likely that the normal period of probation was three years, with promotion by one rank each year.⁶³ At the end of that period, and at intervals during it, each man was assessed by the Minister of the Household and could be given substantive commissioned office, often as a county magistrate.

Following a system established by Former Han, for the first part of Later Han each commandery unit was required to nominate two Filial and Incorrupt candidates each year. In 92, more flexibly, it was ordered that one candidate should be presented for each 200,000 households of population, discounted for commanderies of smaller size. The average entry in either case was some 200 candidates each year, and one of the major duties of ⁶⁰ For the heads of certain counties such as Luoyang, because of their special status, I still use the term Prefect.

⁶¹ Sun Jian, for example, became a county Assistant on the basis of an imperial letter (朝書 zhaoshu).

⁶² Among several examples, we may cite Du Ji of Jingzhao, Li Yi of Zangke, Liu Yao of Dongping and Man Chong of Shanyang. Note, however, that the phrase shouling does not always indicate a brevet magistrate; it can be used as a general compound to refer to administrators (taishou) and magistrates (ling).

⁶³ There are limited details on the procedures, which varied in the course of two centuries; they are discussed by Bn 80:24 and 134-136.

the Officer of Merit in a commandery was to find suitable nominees. They were chosen from men of good family or scholarly repute, frequently but not necessarily from those who had held local office.

There were some checks on the suitability of Filial and Incorrupt candidates: until 126 the head of a commandery unit had to have held office for a full year before he could make a nomination, and in 132 it was ordered that candidates should be more than forty and should take an examination. This latter restriction can have lasted only a few years, and it is in general hard to judge how effective such restraints could be: it was ultimately essential that the imperial government should have an adequate number of officials, and the procedures for getting them were not always ideal.⁶⁴

Each New Year, as a commandery submitted its annual report, a local officer was sent to present them at the capital. This Reporting Officer (上計吏 [shang] jili; Official in Charge of Accounts) was able to provide direct information on his territory, and for several years, from 102 to 163, he received appointment as a probationary cadet in the same fashion as a man nominated Filial and Incorrupt.

There were also annual nominations of men of Abundant Talent (茂才 maocai or moucai), made by the Inspectors of provinces, by the Three Excellencies, and by the Minister of the Household; some seventeen candidates in any year.⁶⁵ Candidates of Abundant Talent had more prestige than those who were Filial and Incorrupt, and while they were sometimes required to present a memorial for assessment, they normally received immediate substantive appointment.⁶⁶

Some candidates and probationary officers were designated First Class (高第 gaodi), a distinction which frequently led to appointment as an Imperial Clerk, Inspector of a province, or similar trusted and censorial office.⁶⁷

Besides the right to nominate men of Abundant Talent, the Excellencies controlled an important route to commission within their own offices. If a gentleman was invited to appointment in the office of an Excellency (辟 pi ... 府 fu), he would take a place as a Senior or Junior Clerk (掾 yuan or 屬 shu) in a bureau. The rank was low and there was an element of probation, but the position gave access and insight to the procedures of government, and excellent opportunity for promotion to higher office. The number of these clerkships was limited, each Excellency having between twenty and thirty, but appointment and promotion may have been comparatively swift. A substantial number of men began their careers in this way, and many rose to high rank.⁶⁸

After three years service at the rank of 2000 shi or above, high officials gained the ren 任 privilege of appointment for their sons or other close kin. This allowed entry to the corps of gentleman cadets, on probation for commissioned rank. The same privilege could also be the subject of a special imperial grant, and there are a number of occasions that entry to the corps of cadets was awarded directly.

The imperial government could also call for particular nominations, identifying in an edict the officials who could present names and the qualities which the candidates should possess; these latter were usually couched in quite general terms, such as Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright (賢良方正 xianliang fangzheng), Capable of Speaking Directly (能直言 neng zhiyan), Understanding the Classics (明經 mingjing) and Knowing the Way (有道 youdao). Nominees were brought to the capital, often in a special official carriage; they might present ⁶⁴ For reforms, see sub Zuo Xiong and Huang Qiong and, on the question of age, HHSJJ 6:269, where Hou Kang cites particularly the stele biographies of Wu Ban and Wu Rong. For evidence of favouritism and corruption, see sub Tian Xin; there are many others.

⁶⁵ During certain periods, the General-in-Chief shared with the Excellencies the right to nominate men of Abundant Talent. The title of this nomination had been Flourishing Talent (xiucai) in Former Han, but it was changed to avoid taboo on the personal name of the founding Emperor Guangwu.

⁶⁶ The style Exceptional Conduct (yuyi 尤異) was normally used as a comment upon local administration, with potential for accelerated promotion, but it sometimes served as a form of provincial nomination: see Miao Tong.

⁶⁷ The term First Class, which also appears as 第一 Number One, was also used for the assessment of an official's performance of his duties, and could lead to accelerated promotion.

⁶⁸ As with nomination for Abundant Talents, some Generals-in-Chief had the right to open an office and make clerical appointments in the same fashion as an Excellency.

a memorial for assessment or undergo a formal examination; and they could then receive appointment as an executive official or an imperial adviser, sometimes at very high rank.

On occasion, moreover, the emperor would issue a specific invitation to a man of exceptional reputation, often someone known for his scholarly achievements who had chosen the life of a hermit. This often entailed a complex pattern of offer, rejection and acceptance, for to attract such an individual could enhance the reputation of the court, while the man himself gained prestige from such imperial attention. Not all invitations were successful, and several gentlemen who came to the capital under these auspices failed to live up to their reputation; in effect, the process was often rather a matter of political show than a serious attempt to fill a senior post.⁶⁹

The Imperial University was an additional source of recruitment to senior ranks of the civil service, but not a particularly large one. A number of Academicians went on to further appointments, some as imperial advisers, rising as high as Palace Attendant, while a few rose to become commandery Administrators or Ministers in the central government. Such promotions were more common in the formative years under the founding Emperor Guangwu, who was personally concerned with the re-establishment of the University; in later years most Academicians appear to have contented themselves with a career in scholarship.

During Former Han and under Wang Mang, as many as a hundred students of the University had been able to gain entry to the imperial service through a system of annual examinations, but though Later Han maintained examinations for University purposes, they no longer served as a route to commissioned office.⁷⁰ A series of edicts from the later 140s, as the regent Liang family demonstrated its patronage of scholarship, provided new opportunities, but they were few compared to those offered by other routes, while the number of students soon afterwards reached thirty thousand.⁷¹ Attendance at the University could be useful for a man to establish his name and obtain nomination or appointment elsewhere, but it did not normally give direct entry to office.⁷²

We have already discussed the Three Corps under the Generals of the Household for All purposes, of the Left and of the Right, and noted that they were occupied by gentleman cadets on probation for commissioned appointments. There was also a lesser category of officials-in-waiting, the Members of the Suite of the Heir (太子舍人 taizi sheren). A designated Heir had a considerable household, but even when there was no Heir some cadets on probation were still given title as Members of the Suite. With nominal salary of only 200 shi, they ranked below the gentleman cadets; and during all of Later Han, no senior official is recorded as having gained entry to the imperial service solely by such an appointment.⁷³

Besides the three civilian corps of gentlemen, however, there may have been a parallel corps of military cadets. The Gentlemen Rapid as Tigers was apparently a hereditary unit, perhaps in the style of the later Manchu banners, but the Gentlemen of the Feathered Forest, recruited from the kinsmen of soldiers who had died in battle ⁶⁹ An example of this process is the case of Fan Ying: see also Vervoorn 90:157-164. His experience was not satisfactory, but the appointment of He Chun, other hand, appears to have been a success.

⁷⁰ There are a few references to appointments of Junior Gentlemen (童子郎 tongzi lang), apparently available to boys of twelve or thirteen, of good family and scholarly bent. The position gave early entrance to the University and probation for a commissioned post in the civil service.

⁷¹ In 148 provision was made for thirty-one successful examinees to be given appointment to senior rank among the gentleman cadets, the next seventeen became members of the Suite of the Heir [on which, see below] and the next seventeen were appointed to the court of a king. In 156 a new system allowed candidates to take examinations in an increasing number of classics over a period of years, and to rise with each success, so that it became possible to obtain a substantive post in the bureaucracy; it would, however, have taken as many as eight years of academic success: deC 66B:73-74.

⁷² Bielenstein argues that entry by examination was available throughout Later Han [Bn 80:140 and 202-203], but I do not find his argument conclusive. The edicts of the 140s, providing for limited entry, indicate that the system had not been in operation up to that time, while there are no records of anyone entering the bureaucracy by such a route. Examinations were indeed maintained, as Bielenstein points out, but it does not appear that they led to anything more than possible promotion within the University itself.

⁷³ After the changes of the late 140s, some students of the University who passed the examinations in the third class received appointment as Literary Scholars (文學 wenxue) or Authorities on Ancient Matters (掌古 zhanggu) in commanderies and kingdoms. These offices, which also could be gained by other routes, presumably dealt with matters of scholarship and education, but again there are no cases recorded where they proved to be the beginning of a great career.

and from respectable families of the northwest, received their appointments as a reward for good conduct and some may have been destined for higher things.

Evidence on this question is slight, for the texts have few records of men at this low level. There are, however, two examples which may support the thesis. Firstly, during Former Han, the noted general Zhao Chongguo 趙充國 served what was evidently an apprenticeship as a member of the Feathered Forest troop; and second, in Later Han, the future usurper Dong Zhuo was a member of the Feathered Forest before he achieved commissioned appointment as a Major.⁷⁴ We may note, moreover, that there appears no other means by which men could be trained and assessed for substantial rank in the army, and it is difficult to believe that all officers were promoted directly from the ranks.

Finally, we may note abnormal forms of entry to the commissioned imperial service. The sale of offices had been used by Emperor Wu of Former Han to finance his great campaigns against the Xiongnu; his example was followed by the regent Dowager Deng at the time of the great Qiang rebellion in 109, and in 161 by Emperor Huan. All these, however, related to comparatively low positions in the guards, minor posts in the ministries and some noble ranks, though Emperor Huan did sell secondary marquisates. From 178, however, Emperor Ling put more substantial positions on the market, and by the mid-180s he had a system of fines for all officials taking a new post; the money went to his private treasury in the Western Garden.⁷⁵

At the same time, Emperor Ling was also arranging for graduates of his special School at the Gate of the Vast Capital (鴻都門學 hongdu men xue), skilled in calligraphy and literary composition, to enter the civil service. The program was bitterly opposed, and fell into oblivion in the chaos which followed the death of the ruler. Both these initiatives of Emperor Ling must be seen as aberrations.

THE ARMY

An army on campaign was commonly commanded by a General (將軍 jiangjun), sometimes, most frequently during the civil wars at the beginning of Later Han, by a Chief General (大將軍 da jiangjun). Later in the dynasty, title as da jiangjun could be awarded to a senior male relative of the Empress or regent Dowager: holders were Dou Xian, Deng Zhi, Geng Bao, Liang Shang, Liang Ji, Dou Wu and He Jin. Of these, only Dou Xian commanded troops in the field, and he owed his position to kinship. In such circumstances, to distinguish these political appointments at the capital from more regular holders of command, I render da jiangjun as General-in-Chief.⁷⁶

With the vast expansion of armies during time of civil war, many generals were appointed with flowery or slogan titles, such as General Who is Firm and Majestic (武威 wuwei jiangjun) or General Who Exterminates Rebels (討逆 taoni jiangjun). For most of the dynasty, however, the recognised titles were General of Chariots and Cavalry (車騎 juji jiangjun), General of Agile Cavalry (驃騎 piaoqi jiangjun), General of the Guards (衛 wei jiangjun), General on the Left or Right (左 zuo or 右 you jiangjun), General of the Van (前 qian jiangjun) and General of the Rear (後 hou jiangjun); like the General-in-Chief, these were usually court appointments and none were maintained consistently. During the course of the dynasty special designations were given for specific campaigns, such as General Who Subdues the West (征西 zhengxi jiangjun) and there was a long-term establishment of the General on the Liao (度遼 du-Liao jiangjun) on the northern frontier; this last is discussed in the section below dealing with non-Chinese peoples.

Below full generals, lieutenant-generals (偏將軍 pian jiangjun) and major-generals (裨將軍 pi jiangjun) could be appointed and, as noted above, Commandants of Cavalry (騎都尉 qi duwei) and of Attendant Cavalry

⁷⁴ HS 69:2971; HHS 72/62:2319, SGZ 6:171. Naturally enough, the histories are concerned primarily with commanders of high rank, who normally came from the great families of the empire, well connected to the throne; middle-ranking officers are seldom cited, and their background is given even less often. Archaeological texts, on the other hand, notably the strips from the northwest as studied by Loewe 67, deal chiefly with the lowest ranks.

⁷⁵ See Bn 80:141-142, deC 89:516-518.

⁷⁶ The General-in-Chief at the capital had at least nominal authority over the regiments of the Northern Army; many of the colonels were also members of the clan of imperial relatives by marriage.

(鮡騎都尉 fūji duwei), and Commandants of the Equipage (奉車都尉 fengju duwei), normally sinecures at court, could also take command in the field; so on occasion did Generals of the Household and imperial agents with special commissions.

At the core of the military establishment of Later Han were the five regiments (部 bu) of the Northern Army (北軍 beijun),⁷⁷ each commanded by a Colonel (校尉 xiaowei) at Equivalent to 2000 shi. Stationed at encampments (營 ying) near Luoyang, they were the Chang River Regiment (長水 Changshui), the Elite Cavalry (越騎 yueji; Picked Cavalry), the Garrison Cavalry (屯騎 tunji), the Archers Who Shoot at a Sound (射聲 shesheng) and the Footsoldiers (步兵 bubing).⁷⁸ Second-in-command were Majors (司馬 sima) at 1000 shi, while an Adjutant (北軍中候 beijun zhonghou; Captain of the Centre of the Northern Army), with a small staff, was responsible for inspection and supervision. Following the common practice of Han, the Adjutant ranked at 600 shi, well below the colonels and the majors.

Each regiment of the Northern Army had up to 750 men and 150 junior officers, for a total of some 4200. This was the central strategic reserve of the empire, and though their numbers were not large, the regiments were composed of professional soldiers, trained to a very high standard, who acted as stiffening for other conscripts and levies.⁷⁹ Colonelcies of the regiments were often awarded to lesser imperial relatives by marriage, but this does not appear to have affected their competence: in action they were presumably commanded by their majors.

The bulk of the imperial military forces was composed of volunteers and convicts (徒 tu), including those whose sentences had been commuted in exchange for military service (弛刑 chixing), and commandery levies, notably from the frontier territories. Unlike Former Han, there was no provision for general conscription or training in the inner commanderies of the empire.⁸⁰ Men could be summoned for military service in time of emergency, but they were not skilled soldiers, and most commuted their regular liability by payment of the gengfu 更賦 tax, a form of scutage which contributed substantially to the revenues of the imperial government.

There were two grades of Major, the regular officer (sima or 軍司馬 jun sima) and the Senior Major (部別司馬 biebu sima; Major with a Separate Command), either of which could command a regiment. Below them were Captains (候 hou) in command of companies (曲 qu); lower ranks and units are mentioned in the frontier strips of the northwest, but seldom appear in the histories.⁸¹ Acting appointments (假 jia) as Major or Captain were made in time of emergency; the officer concerned was generally expected to impress his own troops from able-bodied men of the region.

The staff of a general included a Chief Clerk (長史 zhangshi), who could in some circumstances hold command of troops (將兵 jiangbing changshi). A Protector of the Army (護軍 hujun; Commissioner over the Army), an office which appears briefly under various guises during Former Han, served as a senior assistant with particular attention to military discipline.⁸² Towards the end of the dynasty there are references to Advisers to the Army (參軍事 can junshi), a term which may initially have been a general description of counsellors or staff officers, but was later formalised as a regular appointment.

The officers described above normally held rank on campaign. More static forces were under a Commandant (都尉 duwei). We have observed the role of a Commandant within a frontier commandery or as head of a dependent state, but such officers also held charge of garrisons and fixed encampments: two important appointments were the Commandants of the Camp at Yong 雍營 in Youfufeng, and of the Tiger Tooth Encampment (虎牙營 huya ying) at Chang'an, established against the threat from the non-Chinese Qiang in 110.⁸³ There were also Commandants in charge of the passes which led to central Asia, and at the time of the Yellow Turban rebellion in ⁷⁷ During Former Han, guards within the capital and at the palaces, notably the cadets under the Generals of the Household, had been collectively known as the Southern Army, but the term was not used by Later Han.

⁷⁸ The Northern Army is sometimes referred to as wuying 五營, the Five Regiments.

⁷⁹ The Chang River Regiment was composed of volunteer cavalymen recruited from the Wuhuan people of the northeast; see sub Haodan.

⁸⁰ On this question, see deC 84:48-50, and Lewis 2000, but cf. Bn 80:114.

⁸¹ On these units and servicemen, see Loewe 67A, 76-77.

⁸² See HS 19A:737, discussed by deC 81:62.

⁸³ As described above, however, the recruitment and training camp at Liyang in Wei commandery was controlled by an Internuncio.

184 Commandants were stationed to guard the passes about Luoyang.⁸⁴ Their subordinate officers were majors and captains, as elsewhere.⁸⁵

Towards the end of Later Han there are increasing references to officers with the character du 督 in their title. Some served as senior staff officers, but by the early 200s we find Controllers or Chief Controllers (都督 dudu) holding command of major divisions in a field army.⁸⁶ Later again the term dudu was used for a high-ranking officer with wide authority over a contested frontier, and this became the established usage; in that context I render it as Area Commander.⁸⁷

OFFICIALS DEALING WITH NON-CHINESE PEOPLES

Many of the minor non-Chinese peoples with whom the empire had to deal were managed by the system of dependent states or by formal incorporation of their territory within the local government of commanderies and provinces. Along the northern frontier and in central Asia, however, the situations were more complex and required special handling.

During Former Han officials had been appointed to deal with the Wuhuan tribes of the northeast and the Qiang of the northwest. At the urging of Ban Biao, Emperor Guangwu likewise established a Protector of the Qiang (護羌校尉 hu-Qiang xiaowei; Colonel Protecting the Tibetans) and then a Protector of the Wuhuan (護烏桓校尉 hu-Wuhuan xiaowei). With the Staff of Authority, rank at Equivalent to 2000 shi, and wide-ranging powers across commandery and provincial borders, the Protectors were responsible for dealings with the non-Chinese peoples of their frontier region, including the Di 氏 in the west and the growing power of the Xianbi 鮮卑 in the northeast. Each had a small civilian staff, and relied chiefly upon negotiation, but they could raise troops and command in the field when necessary. The Protector of the Wuhuan maintained a regular market at his headquarters in Shanggu commandery, trading particularly in horses and furs.

At the beginning of Later Han the Xiongnu were committed and dangerous enemies of the new Chinese state, but during the late 40s a succession quarrel caused the claimant Shanyu Bi to turn for support to China. He came with his followers to the Ordos region, kowtowed to the imperial representative, and established a puppet court at Meiji in Xihe commandery. He and his descendants, the Southern Shanyu, were supervised by an Emissary (使匈奴中郎將 shi Xiongnu zhonglang jiang; General of the Gentlemen of the Household in Charge of the Xiongnu), whose rank was Equivalent to 2000 shi, and who was accompanied by a troop of guards.

A few years after this initial settlement, there was concern lest the two rival parties should seek to re-unite, and in 65 the office of General on the Liao (度遼將軍 du-Liao jiangjun; General Who Crosses the Liao River) was established on the northern loop of the Yellow River in Wuyuan commandery, to guard against such contacts, and to serve as a strike force against the Northern Xiongnu.⁸⁸ There were now only a limited number of Chinese settlers in this region, and it appears that the Trans-Liao army obtained most of its soldiers from the Camp at Liyang in Wei commandery, the chief recruitment and training centre for the North China plain.

The Chinese were involved in central Asia from the time of Emperor Wu in Former Han, and during the first century BC a Protector-General of the Western Regions (西域都護 xiyu duhu) had charge of dealing with the various oasis states of present-day Xinjiang. He was accompanied by Wu and Ji Colonels (戊己校尉 wuji ⁸⁴ On the passes of the northwest, see Loewe 67A:61; on the passes about Luoyang, see HHS 8:348; deC 89:550.

⁸⁵ HHS 114/24:3564 identifies the command of a Captain 候 as a qu 曲, and this is followed by Bn 80,120, who renders it as "company." The strips from Juyan in the far northwest have 候官 houguan [Loewe 67A:76; also as "company"], while there are places called Houguan or similar in the northwest, the northeast and in the southeast, no doubt taken from military garrisons [deC 84:457-458]. It seems likely that qu was the name of a unit in a mobile army, and houguan indicated a static position.

⁸⁶ As, for example, under Yuan Shao in 200 [HHS 74/64:2391; deC 96:254] and under Sun Quan in 208 [SGZ Wu 2:1118; deC 96:395].

⁸⁷ JS 24:729; deC 91:152.

⁸⁸ The position was initially qualified as 行 xing: "Acting" and was not made substantive until 110.

Despite its title, the Trans-Liao command had no connection to the river of that name in present-day Manchuria. There had been a general of that style under Former Han, who indeed operated in the northeast, but the incumbent during Later Han was entirely concerned with the northern steppe.

xiaowei), and aided by a Chief Clerk (長史 changshi) and a Senior Colonel (副校尉 fu xiaowei).⁸⁹

Later Han did not regain interest in central Asia until the 70s, and it was twenty years before Ban Chao established Chinese dominance in the territory and was rewarded with title as Protector-General. Contact was then disrupted by the rebellion of the Qiang in the early second century, and though some influence was regained, particularly though Ban Chao's son Ban Yong in the 120s, he held only the position of Chief Clerk. The office of Protector-General was not restored, and in later years a marginal control was exercised not by senior officers on the spot but by the Administrator of Dunhuang and the Inspector of Liang province.⁹⁰

CHINESE TITLES AND ENGLISH-LANGUAGE RENDERINGS

The Table below lists Chinese titles cited in the discussion of the Administrative Structure of Later Han. Arranged according to transcription, they are followed by the renderings used in the present work, and then [in brackets] by some variants which have been used by Dubs, Bielenstein, Loewe and the Cambridge History of China [Cambridge 86]. Though opinions and methods vary, there is still general consensus among scholars in the field, and differences are not so great as to render one system incomprehensible to those who are accustomed to another.⁹¹

beijun 北軍	Northern Army
beijun zhonghou 北軍中候	Adjutant of the Northern Army [Captain of the Centre]
bi erqian shi 比二千石	Equivalent to 2000 shi (rank/salary)
biebu sima 部別司馬	Senior Major [Major with a Separate Command]
biejia congshi 別駕從事	Attendant Officer [Aide-de-Camp]
boshi 博士	Academician [Erudit]
bu 部	regiment: see also ying
bu 部	regional division: see also zhou
buping 步兵	Regiment of Footsoldiers
bushi 暴室	Drying House
cainü 采女	Chosen Woman [Chosen Lady] (imperial concubine)
can junshi 參軍事	Adviser to the Army
cao 曹	Bureau or Department
chang gongzhu 長公主	Senior Princess
Changle shaofu 長樂少府	Steward of the Changle Palace [Privy Treasurer]
Changle taipu 長樂太僕	Coachman of the Changle Palace
Changle weiwei 長樂衛尉	Commandant of the Guards of the Changle Palace [Superintendent]
Changqiu gong 長秋宮	Palace of Prolonged Autumn
Changshui 長水	Chang River Regiment
chaoting hou 朝廷侯	Marquis at Court [Marquis Admitted to Court]
cheng 丞	Assistant
chengmen xiaowei 城門校尉	Colonel of the City Gates
chengxiang 丞相	Imperial Chancellor [Chancellor]
chixing 弛刑	convict with a commuted sentence
cishi 刺史	Inspector

⁸⁹ Most scholars render the title fu xiaowei as Lieutenant-Colonel. It seems clear from the contexts in which it is used, however, that this officer ranked above regular Colonels; the character fu should be interpreted as indicating a position as chief assistant and deputy to the Protector-General or other superior officer.

⁹⁰ The Western Regions in Later Han are discussed by deC 2006A.

⁹¹ In A Dictionary of Official Titles in Imperial China, Stanford UP 1985, Charles O Hucker provided a list of titles through all Chinese dynasties. I have not, however, found his renderings for the Han period reliable or acceptable.

congshi 從事	Assistant Officer [Attendant Clerk]
da changqiu 大長秋	Grand Prolonger of Autumn [Empress' Chamberlain]
da honglu 大鴻臚	Minister Herald [Grand Herald; Superintendent of State Visits]
da jiangjun 大將軍	Chief General (on active service)
da jiangjun 大將軍	General-in-Chief (political appointment)
da sikong 大司空	Excellency of Works [Grand Excellency of Works]
da sima 大司馬	Grand Marshal [Commander-in-Chief; Marshal of State]
da sinong 大司農	Minister of Finance [Grand Minister of Agriculture; Superintendent of Agriculture]
da situ 大司徒	Excellency over the Masses [Grand Excellency over the Masses]
dafu 大夫	Counsellor
dao 道	march
diyī 第一	Number One
dong yuan 東園	Eastern Garden
dongguan 東觀	Eastern Pavilion
du	Controller
dudu 都督	Chief Controller; later Area Commander
du-Liao jiangjun 度遼將軍	General on the Liao [General Who Crosses the Liao River; General, Trans-Liao Command]
duting 都亭	chief village
duwei 都尉	Commandant [Chief Commandant]
duxiang 都鄉	chief district
duyou 都郵	Investigator
erqian shi 二千石	2000 shi (salary)
fengchao qing 奉朝請	Servant at [the Spring and Autumn] Court
fengju duwei 奉車都尉	Commandant of the Equipage [Chief Commandant; Commandant, Imperial Carriages]
fu 傅	Tutor
fuji duwei 鮡騎都尉	Commandant of Attendant Cavalry [Chief Commandant]
fujie ling 符節令	Prefect of Insignia and Credentials
fu xiaowei 副校尉	Senior Colonel [Lieutenant-Colonel]
gaodi 高第	First Class
gengfu 更賦	military tax
gong 公	Duke
gongcao 功曹	Officer of Merit [Officer of the Bureau/Department of Merit]
gongju men 公車門	Gates for Official Carriages
gongju sima ling 公車司馬令	Prefect of the Majors for Official Carriages
gongzhu 公主	Princess
goushun ling 鉤盾令	Prefect of the Palace Gardens [Prefect Intendant of the Imperial Palace Gardens]
guanglu dafu 光祿大夫	Household Counsellor [Imperial Household Grandee; Counsellor of the Palace]
guangluxun 光祿勳	Minister of the Household [Superintendent of the Imperial Household; Superintendent of the Palace]
guannei hou 關內侯	secondary marquis [Marquis Within the Passes or Marquis Within the Imperial Domain or Noble of the Interior or Lesser Marquis]
guiren 貴人	Honoured Lady [Honourable Lady] (concubine)
Henan yin 河南尹	Intendant of Henan [Governor]

hongdu men xue 鴻都門學	School at the Gate of the Vast Capital
hou 侯	marquis [noble/nobility]
hou 候	Captain
houguan 候官	company [on garrison duty]
hou jiangjun 後將軍	General of the Rear
huang taihou 太皇后	Dowager [Empress Dowager]
huangdi 皇帝	Emperor
huanghou 皇后	Empress
huangmen beisi yu 黃門北寺獄	Northern Prison of the Yellow Gates [Prison of the Northern Office of the Yellow Gates]
huangmen ling 黃門令	Prefect of the Yellow Gates
huangmen shilang 黃門侍郎	Gentleman at the Yellow Gates [Gentleman-in-Attendance of the Yellow Gates]
huben 虎賁	Rapid as Tigers/Rapid as a Tiger (imperial guards unit)
hujun 護軍	Protector of the Army [Commissioner over the Army]
hu-Qiang xiaowei 護羌校尉	Protector of the Qiang [Colonel Protecting the Tibetans; Colonel Protector]
hu-Wuhuan xiaowei 護烏桓校尉	Protector of the Wuhuan [Colonel Protecting the Wuhuan; Colonel Protector]
huya ying 虎牙營	Tiger Tooth Camp at Chang'an
ji duwei 騎都尉	Commandant of Cavalry [Chief Commandant; Commandant, Cavalry]
jia 假	acting appointment
jiangbing changshi 將兵長史	Chief Clerk in Command of Troops
jiangjun 將軍	General
jiangzuo dajiang 將作大匠	Court Architect
jianyi dafu 諫議大夫	Counsellor Remonstrant [Grandee Remonstrant and Consultant; Advisory Counsellor]
jie 節	Staff of Authority
jiju 祭酒	Libationer
jili 計吏	Reporting Officer [Official in Charge of Accounts]
Jingzhao yin 京北尹	Intendant of Jingzhao [Governor]
jishi huangmen 給事黃門	Serving within the Yellow Gates
jishi zhong 給事中	Serving within the Palace
juji jiangjun 車騎將軍	General of Chariots and Cavalry
jun sima 軍司馬	Major
jun 君	Lady (with a fief)
jun 郡	commandery
lang 郎	Gentleman/Gentleman Cadet
lantai 蘭臺	Orchid Terrace [Lantai Depository]
liangjia 良家	respectable family [blameless family; well-established family]
ling 令	county magistrate [Prefect]; see also zhang
lingshi 令史	Foreman Clerk
liubo shi 六百石	600 shi (rank/salary)
Liuma yuan 流馬苑	Pasture/Horse-park of Roaming Horses
lu shangshu shi 錄尚書事	authority over the Imperial Secretariat
Luoyang ling 洛陽令	Prefect of Luoyang
maocai 茂才	Abundant Talent
meiren 美人	Beauty [Beautiful Lady] (imperial concubine)

mishu jian 祕書監	Custodian of the Private Library
mingjing 明經	Understanding the Classics
mu 牧	Governor [Shepherd; Regional Commissioner]
neng zhiyan 能直言	Capable of Speaking Directly
pi jiangjun 裨將軍	Major-General
pi 辟 ... fu 府	invited to appointment in the office (of an Excellency)
pian jiangjun 偏將軍	Lieutenant-General
piaoqi jiangjun 驃騎將軍	General of Agile Cavalry [Cavalry on the Alert]
puye 僕射	Supervisor or Deputy Director (in the Imperial Secretariat)
qian jiangjun 前將軍	General of the Van
qing 卿	Minister [Minister of State]
qu 曲	company [in a field army]
ren 任	privileged appointment
san duzuo 三獨坐	Three Special Seats [the Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk, the Director of the Retainers and the Director of the Imperial Secretariat]
san gong 三公	Three Excellencies
sanfu 三輔	Three Adjuncts (commanderies about Chang'an)
sanshu 三署	the three corps (of cadet Gentlemen of the Household)
shangshu 尚書 [office]	Imperial Secretariat
shangshu 尚書 [official]	Master of Writing
shangshu ling 尚書令	Director of the Imperial Secretariat [Prefect of the Masters of Writing]
shangshu puye 尚書僕射	Deputy Director of the Secretariat
shaofu 少府	Minister Steward [Privy Treasurer; Superintendent of the Lesser Treasury]
shesheng 射聲	Regiment of Archers Who Shoot at a Sound [Archers under Training]
shi Xiongnu zhonglang jiang 使匈奴中郎將	Emissary to the Xiongnu [General of the Gentlemen of the Household in Charge of the Xiongnu]
shici hou / 侍祠侯	Marquis Attending Sacrifices
shishi 石室	Stone House
shiyushi 侍御史	Imperial Clerk [Attending Secretary; Secretary in Attendance]
shizhong 侍中	Palace Attendant
shouling 守令	brevet magistrate
shouzhang 守長	brevet magistrate
shu 屬	Junior Clerk in the office of an Excellency [Associate]
shuguo 屬國	dependent state
sikong 司空	Excellency of Works
sili xiaowei 司隸校尉	Director of Retainers [Colonel Director of Retainers; Colonel, Internal Security]
sima 司馬	Major
situ 司徒	Excellency over the Masses
taichang 太常	Minister of Ceremonies [Grand Master of Ceremonies; Superintendent of Ceremonial]
taifu 太傅	Grand Tutor [Senior Tutor]
taiguan ling 太官令	Court Provisioner [Prefect Grand Provisioner]
taipu 太僕	Minister Coachman [Grand Coachman; Superintendent of Transport]
taishi ling 太史令	Court Astronomer [Prefect Grand Astrologer; Director, Astronomy]
taishou 太守	Administrator [Grand Administrator; Governor]
taiwei 太尉	Grand Commandant [Supreme Commander]

taixue 太學	Imperial University [Academy]
taiyi ling 太醫令	Court Physician [Prefect Grand Physician; Director of the Physicians-in-Chief]
taizhong dafu 太中大夫	Palace Counsellor [Grand Palace Grandee; Grand Counsellor of the Palace]
taizi 太子	Heir [Heir-Apparent]
taizi sheren 太子舍人	Member of the Suite of the Heir
taoni jiangjun 討逆將軍	General Who Exterminates Rebels
te jin 特進	Specially Advanced
ting 亭	village [commune]
tingwei 廷尉	Minister of Justice [Commandant of Justice; Superintendent of Trials]
tongzi lang 童子朗	Junior Gentleman
tu 徒	convict
tunji 屯騎	Garrison Cavalry Regiment
wang 王	King [Prince]
wanguo 王國	kingdom/state
wanshi 萬石	Ten Thousand shi (rank/salary)
wei 尉	county commandant
wei jiangjun 衛將軍	General of the Guards [of Defence]
weishi ling 衛士令	Prefect of the Guards
weiwei 衛尉	Minister of the Guards [Commandant of the Guards; Superintendent of the Guards]
wenxue 文學	Literary Scholar/Education Officer
wuguan cao 五官曹	Bureau for All Purposes
wuguan zhonglang jiang 五官中郎將	General of the Household for All Purposes
wuji xiaowei 戊己校尉	Wu and Ji Colonels
wuwei jiangjun 武威將軍	General Who is Firm and Majestic
xi yuan 西園	Western Garden
xian 縣	county
xiang 相	Chancellor
xiang 鄉	district
xianliang fangzheng 賢良方正	Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright
xiao huangmen 小黃門	Attendant at the Yellow Gates [Junior Attendant at the Yellow Gates]
xiaolian 孝廉	Filial and Incorrupt [Filially Pious and Incorrupt]
xiaowei 校尉	Colonel
xing du-Liao jiangjun 行度遼將軍	Acting General on the Liao
xiucai 秀才	Flourishing Talent
xiyu duhu 西域都護	Protector-General of the Western Regions
xuanming dian 宣名殿	Hall of All-Embracing Brightness
yezhe 謁者	Internuncio [Imperial Messenger]
yezhe puye 謁者僕射	Supervisor of the Internuncios
yi 邑	estate of a Princess
yilang 議郎	Consultant [Gentleman Consultant]
ying 營	camp/encampment [regiment/division]
yiting 掖庭	Lateral Courts [Sleeping Apartments]
yiting ling 掖庭令	Prefect of the Lateral Courts
yiting yu 掖庭獄	Prison of the Lateral Courts
Yong ying 雍營	Camp at Yong in Youfufeng

Yongle shaofu 永樂少府	Steward of the Yongle Palace [Privy Treasurer]
you jiangjun 右將軍	General on the Right
you zhonglang jiang 右中郎將	General of the Household of the Right
youdao 有道	Knowing the Way
youfufeng 右扶風	Administrator of Youfufeng [Western Sustainer; Metropolitan Superintendent of the Right]
youxiao ling 右校令	Prefect of the Enclosure of the Right
youyi 尤異	Exceptional Conduct
yuan 掾	Senior Clerk in the office of an Excellency [Division Head]
yueji 越騎	Elite Cavalry Regiment [Picked Cavalry]
yulin 羽林	Feathered Forest (imperial guards unit) [Elite Yulin]
yushi dafu 御史大夫	Imperial Counsellor [Grandee Secretary; Imperial Clerk Grandee]
yushi zhongcheng 御侍中丞	Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk [Palace Assistant Secretary; Assistant to the Imperial Counsellor]
zhang 長	county magistrate [Chief]; see also ling
zhanggu 掌古	Authority on Ancient Matters [Recorder of Precedent]
zhangshi 長史	Chief Clerk
zheng 正	Director [under the Minister of Justice]
zhengxi jiangjun 征西將軍	General Who Subdues the West
zhijie 持節	Bearing the Staff of Authority/Bearing Credentials
zhijinwu 執金吾	Bearer of the Mace [Bearer of the Gilded Mace; Superintendent of the Capital]
zhishu shiyushi 治書侍御史	Imperial Clerk Preparer of Documents
zhizhong congshi 治中從事	Headquarters Officer [Attendant Clerk for the Bureau of Headquarters]
zhong changshi 中常侍	Regular Attendant [Regular Palace Attendant]
zhong erqian shi 中二千石	Fully 2000 shi (rank/salary)
zhong huangmen rongcong puye 中黃門冗從僕射	Supervisor of the Retinue [Supervisor of the Extra Retinue of the Palace Attendants at the Yellow Gates]
zhonggong huangmen rongcong puye 中宮黃門冗從僕射	Supervisor of the Retinue of the Empress [Supervisor of the Extra Retinue of the Attendants of the Yellow Gates of the Empress]
zhonglang jiang 中郎將	General of the Household [General of the Gentlemen of the Household; Leader of the Gentlemen of the Household]
zhongsan dafu 中散大夫	Attendant Counsellor [Palace Attendant Grandee]
zhongwei 中尉	Commandant of the Capital [Superintendent of the Capital]
zhong yezhe 中謁者	Palace Internuncio [Messenger]
zhou 州	province [region]; see also bu 部
zhubu 主簿	Registrar [Master of Records]
zong zheng 宗正	Minister of the Imperial Clan [Director of the Imperial Clan; Superintendent]
zuo jiangjun 左將軍	General on the Left
zuo zhonglang jiang 左中郎將	General of the Household of the Left
zuopingyi 左馮翊	Administrator of Zuopingyi [Eastern Supporter; Metropolitan Superintendent of the Left]
zuoxiao ling 左校令	Prefect of the Enclosure of the Left

EARLY SOURCES

PART I: STANDARD HISTORIES

HHS Hou Han shu 後漢書:¹

Annals 本紀 and liezhuan 列傳 by Fan Ye 范曄 (396-446), with commentary [TC] compiled under the auspices of Li Xian 李賢, Heir of Tang 章懷太子 (651-684);

Treatises 志 incorporated from the Xu Han shu 續漢書 of Sima Biao 司馬彪 (third century), with commentary by Liu Zhao 劉昭 (sixth century) [LC]:

Treatise on Pitchpipes and the Calendar 律歷志

Treatise on Ceremonial 禮儀志

Treatise on Sacrifices 祭祀志

Treatise on the Heavens 天文志

Treatise on the Five Powers 五行志

Treatise on Administrative Geography 郡國志

Treatise on the Bureaucracy 百官志

Treatise on Carriages and Robes 輿服志;

citation by chapter numbers within sections of the work:

HHS 1A = HHS annals 1A

HHS 11/1 = HHS liezhuan 1 [chapter 11 of the whole work]

HHS 101/11 = HHS treatises 11 [chapter 101 of the whole work] pagination to Beijing 1965 punctuated edition of Zhonghua shuju 中華書局, with some references to the Palace 欽定 edition of the Wuying dian 武英殿 (nineteenth century lithograph by the Wuzhou tongwen 五洲同文 Publishing House), to the Bona 百衲 edition of the Commercial Press 商務印書館, Shanghai 1958, and to HHS jijie 集解 [HHSJJ] compiled by Wang Xianqian 王先謙 and students, with additional comments jiaobu 校補 to each chapter, in the Wanyou wenku 萬有文庫 edition of the Commercial Press, Shanghai [WYWK]; individual commentators may be indicated after the Jijie reference: e.g.

HHSJJ 76/66.2719 Hui Dong

Indexes: GoKanjo goi shusei 後漢書語彙集成, Kyoto 1961, and Harvard-Yenching Institute Sinological Index Series No. 41, reprinted Taipei 1966, and Renming suoyin, compiled by Zhonghua shuju: see at * below

HS Han shu 漢書 by Ban Gu 班固 (32-92) and others, with commentary by Yan Shigu 顏師古 (581-645) and others; Zhonghua shuju, Beijing 1962

JS Jin shu 晉書 by Fang Xuanling 房玄齡 (578-648) and others; Zhonghua shuju, Beijing 1974

JTS Jiu Tang shu 舊唐書 by Liu Xu 劉昫 of the ninth century, Zhonghua shuju, Beijing 1975

SGZ Sanguo zhi 三國志 by Chen Shou 陳壽 (233-297), with official commentary [PC] compiled by Pei Songzhi 裴松之 (372-451) and presented to Liu Yu 劉裕, founding Emperor Wu 武 of the Song 宋 dynasty, in 429;²

citation by chapter numbers within sections of the work:

SGZ 1 = Wei shu 魏書 1

SGZ Shu 1 = Shu shu 蜀書 1

SGZ Wu 1 = Wu shu 吳書 1

¹ On the historiography of HHS see Bn 54, Hulsewé 61 and, on the Treatises, MBeck 90.

² On the historiography of SGZ see deC 70 and deC 90.533-589.

- pagination to Beijing 1959 punctuated edition of Zhonghua shuju, with some references to SGZ jiejie 集解 [SGZJJ] compiled by Lu Bi 盧弼, Mianyang 1936, in the facsimile edition by Yiwen 藝文 Publishers, Taipei;
Indexes: Harvard-Yenching Institute Sinological Index Series No. 33, reprinted Taipei 1966, and Renming suoyin, compiled by Zhonghua shuju: see at * below
- SJ Shi ji* 史記 by Sima Qian 司馬遷 (146-c.86 BC), with commentaries:
Jijie 集解 by Pei Yin 裴駙 (fifth century);
Suoyin 索隱 by Sima Zhen 司馬貞 (eighth century);
Zhengyi 正義 by Zhang Shoujie 張守節 (eighth century);
Zhonghua shuju, Beijing 1959
- SS Song shu* 宋書 by Shen Yue 沈約 (441-513), Zhonghua shuju, Beijing 1974
- XTS Xin Tang shu* 新唐書 by Ouyang Xiu 歐陽修, Song Qi 宋祁 and others of the eleventh century, Zhonghua shuju, Beijing 1975

All other standard histories, Nan Qi shu 南齊書, Liang shu 梁書, Chen shu 陳書, Wei shu 魏書, Bei Qi shu 北齊書, Zhou shu 周書, Sui shu 隋書, Nan shi 南史, Bei shi 北史 and Song shi 宋史 are likewise cited from Zhonghua shuju.

Ershisi shi renming suoyin 二十四史人名索引, Beijing 1997, is a comprehensive index of personal names in all editions of the histories published by Zhonghua shuju.

PART II: OTHER PRIMARY TEXTS: BOOKS³

Anon. see QJHHS

Baopu zi 抱朴子 by Ge Hong 葛洪 (fourth century), cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ

biezhuan 別傳 see Secondary Biography sub voce

Bowu zhi 博物志 ascribed to Zhang Hua 張華 (232-300), cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ

Chuguo xianxian zhuan 楚國先賢傳 by Zhang Fang 張方 of Jin, cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ

DGHJ Dongguan Han ji 東觀漢記 by various authors of the first and second centuries AD,⁴ in Sibu beiyao 四部備要 [SBBY]

³ When a fragment of a work is cited by a commentary to Hou Han shu or to Sanguo zhi, the reference is given to that commentator rather than to a modern collection or edition.

⁴ In 72 Ban Gu was appointed to chair the committee of historians commissioned by Emperor Ming to compile the annals of the reign of Emperor Guangwu 世祖本紀. Ban Gu and his colleague Yin Min evidently represented the interest of the Dou family, their fellow committee-members Meng Ji and Ma Yan were chosen to represent the rival faction of the Empress Ma, and two other scholars were neutral. Their work, initially known as the "Diary of the Jianwu Period" 建武注記, became the first part of Dongguan Hanji.

In 120 Liu Taotu and his cousin Liu Yi were commissioned to work with Liu Zhen and Li You on the official history of Later Han, later known as Dongguan Hanji 東觀漢記. The history had been started by Ban Gu and others under orders from Emperor Ming, with the initial title "Diary of the Jianwu Period" 建武注記. This second instalment contained annals for the period 58 to 106, being the reigns of Emperors Ming, Zhang, He and the infant Shang, together with tables and biographies of leading men, imperial relatives by marriage and noted scholars, and the whole compilation was now entitled Han ji 漢記 "Record of Han."

Early in the reign of Emperor Huan, about 151, the government controlled by the Empress Liang Nüying and her brother Liang Ji ordered a third instalment of the "Records of Han" 漢記 Han ji, official history of the Later Han dynasty, known later as Dongguan Hanji 東觀漢記. The chief scholars involved at this time were Fu Wuji, Huang Jing, Cui Shi, Bian Shao and Yan Du, and the compilation included annals, tables of kings and marquises, accounts of the Xiongnu and the Qiang. Fu Wuji and Huang Jing also compiled a Treatise of Geography 地理志, which was evidently edited by Sima Biao to compose the Treatise of Administrative Geography 郡國志 for his Xu Han shu.

Through the 150s and early 160s the committee continued work on this third instalment of the official "Record of Han" 漢紀, adding a Table of the Bureaucracy and biographies of empresses and other individuals, including the eunuchs Cai Lun and Sun Cheng. Scholars identified as taking part in the project at one time or another include Cui Shi, Yan Du, Deng Si, Bian Shao, Cao Shou and Zhu Mu.

Probably in 177 a further continuation was ordered by Emperor Ling. The senior scholar was Ma Midi, and other members of the committee were Cai Yong, Han Yue, Lu Zhi and Yang Biao. Their work included annals for emperors An and Shun, for the infants Chong and Zhi and for Emperor Huan, with biographies updated to the end of the reign of Emperor Huan in 168. It was at this time that the history acquired the name of Dongguan Hanji 東觀漢記, from the Eastern Pavilion of the Southern Palace, where the library and workrooms were located.

In addition to the co-operative compilation, Cai Yong also composed ten Treatises from the official archives and from material passed to him by his former teacher Hu Guang. [These treatises were known as yi 意 instead of zhi 志 to avoid taboo on the personal name of Emperor Huan.]

Dian lue 典略 by Yu Huan 魚豢 (third century), quoted in SGZ PC

FSTY Fengsu tongyi 風俗通義 "A Compendium of Popular Customs" by Ying Shao 應劭, Centre franco-chinois d'études sinologiques, Publication 3;

[this edition, which contains an index-concordance, includes ten full chapters and six of fragments; these latter are indicated by a suffix: e.g. 3f];

see also Nylan 83

Gaoshi zhuan 高士傳 by Huangfu Mi 皇甫謐 (third century), quoted in HHS TC and cited by HHSJJ

Gaoshi zhuan 高士傳 by Xi/Ji Kang 稽康 (third century), cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ

Guangzhou xianxian zhuan 廣州先賢傳 [author unknown], fragments cited by Miyakawa 60 from Guangdong tongzhi 廣東通志 "Gazetteer of Guangdong Province" by Ruan Yuan 阮元 and Jiang Fan 江藩, 1822 reprinted Shanghai 1934, and by Hui Dong in HHSJJ

Guwen yuan 古文苑 by Zhang Qiao 章樵 (Song), in Siku quanshu 四庫全書 Intranet: Sikuquanshu.com [SKQS]

Hainei xianxian zhuan 海內先賢傳 [author unknown (third century)], quoted in HHS TC

[Hanno] Yingxiong ji 漢末英雄記, quoted in SGZ PC

Han-Wei xianxian xingzhuang 漢魏先賢行狀, fragment preserved in Taiping yulan, cited by Hou Kang in HHSJJ

HHJ Hou Han ji 後漢紀 by Yuan Hong 袁宏 (328-396), in WYWK

Hou Han nan ji 後漢南記 by Zhang Ying 張瑩, cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ

HQ Hou Han shu 後漢書 by Hua Qiao 華嶠 (d.293) in QJHHS

HYGZ Huayang guo zhi 華陽國志 by Chang Qu 常璩 [mid-fourth century] and others, cited from Guoxue jiben congshu 國學基本叢書, Taiwan Commercial Press 1968;

also the Huayang guo zhi jiaobu tuzhi 校補圖志 [HYGZJBTZ] edition compiled by Ren Naiqiang 任乃強, Shanghai 1987;⁵

and the index Kayōkoku shi jinmei sakuin 華陽國志人名索引, compiled by Taniguchi Fusao 谷口房男, Tokyo 1983

Jiangbiao zhuan 江表傳 by Yu Pu 虞溥 of the third century, quoted in SGZ PC

Jingzhao jiushi 京兆舊事, cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ [perhaps part of the Sanfu jiushi by Wei Biao q.v. below]

Jiuzhou chunqiu 九州春秋 ascribed to Sima Biao 司馬彪 (third century), quoted in SGZ PC

Jiangbiao zhuan 江表傳 by Yu Pu 虞浦 (third century), quoted in SGZ PC

Jingdian [xuanru dayi] xulu 經典玄儒大義序錄 by Shen Wen'a 沈文阿 (sixth century), cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ

Jiuzhou chunqiu 九州春秋 ascribed to Sima Biao 司馬彪, quoted in SGZ PC

Kuaiji dianlu 會稽典錄 by Yu Yu 虞預 (fourth century), quoted in SGZ PC

Lidai minghua ji 歷代名畫記 by Zhang Yanyuan 張彥遠 of Tang, in SKQS

Lingdi ji 靈帝紀 by Liu Ai 劉艾 (fl.200), quoted in SGZ PC

Lun heng 論衡 by Wang Chong q.v. (first century AD); see Forke 07 and 11

Cai Yong later compiled also the Annals of the reign of Emperor Ling, but that work was soon lost.

In the early 220s, after the abdication of Emperor Xian in favour of Cao Pi, first Emperor of Wei, the elder statesman Yang Biao continued and completed the history down to the end of the Han dynasty.

See Bn [54], 10-11. MBeck [90], 19-27, Texts, 471-472 [Bielenstein and Loewe]

⁵ Huayang guo zhi is a well-organised and valuable history of Yi province, present-day Sichuan, with a quantity of detail, though it frequently contains material that is anecdotal and/or appears unreliable. Transmission, however, is far less secure than that of standard histories such as HHS and SGZ, and there are many places where names and dates are confused. Where HYGZ is clearly in error, I have not indexed or itemised the variants.

- QJHHS* Qijia Hou Han shu 七家後漢書 compiled by Wang Wentai 汪文臺, Taipei 1974: includes the remnant texts of five Hou Han shu: by Xie Cheng [XC], by Xue Ying [XY], by Hua Qiao [HQ], by Yuan Shansong [YSS], of the Xu Han shu by Sima Biao [XHS], and of the Hou Han ji 後漢記/紀 by Zhang Fan [ZF]; at the end of the collection, there are some fragments of histories of Later Han whose authors cannot be identified; these are cited as Anon
- Qunfu lu* 群輔錄 compiled by Tao Qian 陶潛 [Tao Yuanming 淵明] (365-427), cited by Shen Qinhan in HHSJJ
- Runan xianxian zhuan* 汝南先賢傳, ascribed to Zhou Fei 周裴 (third century), cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ
- Samguk-sagi* 三國史記, completed by Kim Pusik (1075-1151), Sonjin Mumhwasu, Seoul 1969
- Sanfu jiushi* 三輔舊事 by Wei Biao (first century), cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ
- Sanfu jue* 三輔決錄 by Zhao Qi (second century), quoted in HHS TC and SGZ PC
- Secondary Biography [biezhuan] of Guo Tai 郭泰別傳 [author unknown], quoted in HHS TC and SGZ PC
- Secondary Biography [biezhuan] of Hua Tuo 華佗別傳 [author unknown], quoted in HHS TC and by SGZ PC
- Secondary Biography [biezhuan] of Li He 李郃別傳 [author unknown], cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ
- Secondary Biography [biezhuan] of Xu Kui 許逵別傳 [author unknown], cited from Taiping yulan by Shen Qinhan in HHSJJ
- Secondary Biography [biezhuan] of Yin Xun 尹勳別傳 [author unknown], quoted in HHS TC
- Secondary Biography [biezhuan] of Zheng Xuan 鄭玄意別傳 [author unknown], cited by Taiping yulan and Hou Kang in HHSJJ
- Secondary Biography [biezhuan] of Zhongli Yi 鍾離意別傳 [author unknown], cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ
- Shi tong* 史通 by Liu Zhiji 劉知幾 (661-721) in Pu Qilong 浦起龍 [ed.] Shitong tongshi 通釋, Shanghai 1978
- Shi xi* 世系 i.e. the genealogies of XTS 71A-75B, as cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ.
- Shixue pian* 始學篇 by Xiang Jun 項竣/峻 of the third century, cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ
- SJZ* Shuijing zhu 水經注 by Li Daoyuan 酈道元 (fifth/sixth century), in Sibu congkan 四部叢刊; Index: Harvard-Yenching Institute Sinological Index Series No. 17 reprinted Taipei 1966
- Shuduan* 書斷 by Zhang Huaiguan 張懷瓘 of Tang, in SKQS
- Soushen ji* 搜神記 by Gan Bao 干寶 (fourth century), cited by Hui Dong in HHSJJ
- SSXY* Shishuo xinyu 世說新語 by Liu Yiqing 劉義慶 of the fifth century, with commentary by Liu Jun 劉峻 of the sixth; see Mather 76
- Sun Sheng 孫盛 (fourth century), author of some histories, including Weishi chungqiu q.v., and various works of commentary described as Ping 評, Zaji 雜記, et al., quoted in SGZ PC
- Taiping yulan* 太平御覽, encyclopaedia edited by Li Fang 昉李 (tenth century), cited in HHSJJ
- Tong dian* 通典 by Du You 杜佑 (735-812), in Shitong 十通 edition, Commercial Press 1935
- Wei-Jin shiyu* 魏晉世語 by Guo Song 郭頌 (third century), quoted in SGZ PC
- Weishi chungqiu* 魏氏春秋 by Sun Sheng 孫盛 q.v., quoted in SGZ PC
- Wen xuan* 文選 collection of Xiao Tong 蕭統 (501-531); see Knechtges 82 and 87
- Wu lu* 吳錄 by Zhang Bo 張勃 (third century), quoted in SGZ PC
- XC* Hou Han shu 後漢書 by Xie Cheng 謝承 (fl. 200), in QJHHS.⁶
- XHS* Xu Han shu 續漢書 by Sima Biao 司馬彪, in QJHHS and see sub Treatises of Fan Ye's Hou Han shu above]
- Xiangyang jijiu zhuan* 襄陽耆舊傳 by Xi Zuochi 習鑿齒 (fourth century), quoted in HHS LC
- Xiandi chungqiu* 獻帝春秋 by Yuan Ye 袁曄 (third century), quoted in HHS TC and SGZ PC
- Xiandi qiju zhu* 獻帝起居注 [author unknown], quoted in HHS TC and SGZ PC
- Xianxian xingzhuang* 先賢行狀 [author unknown], quoted in HHS TC

⁶ The text of this work, now in fragments, is not always reliable. The history contains many anecdotes and accounts of unusual behaviour, with some references to Qin and Former Han.

- XY* Hou Han shu 後漢書 by Xue Ying 薛瑩 (d.282), in QJHHS
- Yibu qijiu zhuan* 益部耆舊傳 by Chen Shou 陳壽? (233-297), quoted in SGZ PC
- Yingxiong ji* 英雄記 see [Hanmo] Yingxiong ji 漢末英雄記
- Yiwen leiju* 藝文類聚, encyclopaedia compiled by Ouyang Xun 歐陽詢 (seventh century), cited in HHSJJ
- YSS* Hou Han shu 後漢書 by Yuan Shansong 袁山松 (d.401), in QJHHS
- ZF* Hou Han ji 後漢記/紀 by Zhang Fan 張璠, in QJHHS
- Zhi lin* 志林 by Yu Xi 虞喜 (fourth century), quoted in SGZ PC
- ZZTJ* Zizhi tongjian 資治通鑑 by Sima Guang 司馬光 (1019-1086), with variorum commentary Kaoyi 考異 by Sima Guang, and commentary by Hu Sanxing 胡三行 (1230-1302), Beijing 1956

PART III: OTHER PRIMARY TEXTS: STELE AND INSCRIPTIONS

- Beitu* Beijing Tushuguan cang Zhongguo lidai shike taben huibian 北京圖書館藏中國歷代石刻拓本匯編 compiled by Xu Ziqiang 徐自強, Beijing 1989
- Cai* Cai zhonglang wenji 蔡中郎文集, the Collected Works of Cai Yong, in Sibu beiyao 四部備要 [identified by the item number within each chapter]
- LHJSJ* Liang-Han jinshi ji 兩漢金石記 compiled by Weng Fanggang 翁方綱 (1733-1818), Nanchang 南昌, Jiangsi 1789
- LS* and LX Li shi 隸釋 and Li xu 隸續, compiled by Hong Kuo [or Hong Gua] 洪适 of Song, Zhonghua shuju 中華書局 1983;
LS 21-23 incorporates the Jigu lu 集古錄 of Ouyang Fei 歐陽棐;
LS 24-26 contains the Jinshi lu 金石錄 of Zhao Mingcheng 趙明誠;
LS 27 contains an extract from the anonymous Tianxia bei lu 天下碑錄, with titles of some extant stele from the Han and Three Kingdoms
- Nagata 94 Nagata Hidemasa 永田英正, Compilation of Stone Inscriptions in the Han Dynasty 漢代石刻集成, Kyoto 1994
- Shike shiliao congshu xinbian* 石刻史料新編, Xinwenfeng 新文豐出版公司, Taiwan 1977;
 includes Jinshi cuibian 金石萃編 [JSCB] compiled by Wang Chang 王昶; and Shike tiba suoyin 石刻題索引, an index compiled by Yang Dianxun 楊殿珣

MODERN WORKS

- Balazs 48 Étienne Balazs, "Entre révolte nihiliste et évasion mystique: les courants intellectuels en Chine au IIIe siècle de notre ère," Études asiatiques 2 (1948), 27-55; translated by Hope M Wright in Chinese Civilization and Bureaucracy: variations on a theme, Yale UP 1964, 226-254
- Balazs 50 —, "La crise sociale et la philosophie politique à la fin des Han," TP 39 (1950), 83-131; translated by Hope M Wright in Chinese Civilization and Bureaucracy, 187-225
- Balazs 64A see Balazs 50
- Balazs 64B see Balazs 48
- Barrett 86 see sub Demiéville 86
- BMFEA Bulletin of the Museum of Far Eastern Antiquities, Stockholm
- Bn 54 Hans Bielenstein, The Restoration of the Han Dynasty: with prolegomena on the historiography of the Hou Han shu, in BMFEA 26, 1954 [includes an appendix of the genealogy of the imperial clan from Emperor Gao of Former Han to the generation of Emperor Guangwu of Later Han]
- Bn 59 —, The Restoration of the Han Dynasty: volume II, the civil war, in BMFEA 31, 1959
- Bn 67 —, The Restoration of the Han Dynasty: volume III, the people, in BMFEA 39, 1967
- Bn 76 —, Lo-yang in Later Han Times, in BMFEA 48, 1976
- Bn 79 —, The Restoration of the Han Dynasty: volume IV, the government, in BMFEA 51, 1979
- Bn 80 —, The Bureaucracy of Han Times, Cambridge UP 1980
- Bn 81 —, "Later Han Inscriptions and Dynastic Biographies: a historiographical comparison," in Proceedings of the International Conference on Sinology, Section on History and Archaeology, Academia Sinica, Taipei 1981, 571-586
- Bn 86A —, "Wang Mang, the Restoration of the Han Dynasty, and Later Han," in CHOC:223-290
- Bn 86B —, "The Institutions of Later Han," in CHOC:491-519
- Bodde 75 Derk Bodde, Festivals in Classical China: New Year and other annual observances during the Han dynasty 206 B.C.-A.D. 220, Princeton UP 1975
- Bodde 86 —, "The State and Empire of Ch'in," in CHOC:20-102
- CHOC The Cambridge History of China, volume 1, The Ch'in and Han empires 221 B.C.-A.D. 220, edited by Denis Twitchett and Michael Loewe, Cambridge UP 1986 [chapters cited by individual authors]
- C/C 99 Robert Joe Cutter and William G Crowell, Empresses and Consorts: selection from Chen Shou's Records of the Three States translated with annotations and introduction, Hawai'i UP 1999 [and see also Cutter 85 and Cutter 92]
- Chavannes 05 Édouard Chavannes, "Les pays d'Occident d'après le Wei lio," in TP [New Series] 6 (1905), 519-571
- Chavannes 06 —, "Trois généraux chinois de la dynastie des Han Orientaux," in TP [New Series] 7 (1906), 210-269
- Chavannes 07 —, "Les pays d'Occident d'après le Heou Han chou," in TP [New Series] 8 (1907), 149-234
- Chavannes 10 —, Le T'ai Chan: essai de monographie d'un culte Chinois, Paris 1910
- Ch'en 66 Ch'en Chih-mai, Chinese Calligraphers and their Art, Melbourne 1966

- Ch'en 75 Ch'en Ch'i-yün [Chen Chi-yun], Hsün Yüeh (A.D. 148-209): the life and reflections of an early medieval Confucian, Cambridge UP 1975
- Ch'en 80 Ch'en Ch'i-yün, Hsün Yüeh and the mind of Late Han China: a translation of Shen-chien with introduction and annotations, Princeton UP 1980
- Ch'en 86 Ch'en Ch'i-yün, "Confucianist, Legalist, and Taoist Thought in Later Han," in CHOC:766-807
- Ch'ü 72 Ch'ü T'ung-tsu, edited by Jack L Dull, Han Social Structure, Washington UP, Seattle 1972
- Cutter 85 Robert Joe Cutter, "The Incident at the Gate: Cao Zhi, succession and literary fame," in TP 71 (1985), 228-262
- Cutter 92 —, "The Death of Empress Zhen: fiction and historiography in early medieval China," in Journal of the Oriental Society of America 112 (1992), 577-583 [see also C/C 99]
- de Bary 60 William Theodore de Bary, Wing-tsit Chan, Burton Watson [compilers], Sources of Chinese Tradition, Columbia UP 1960
- deC 66A Rafe de Crespigny, The Biography of Sun Chien, Canberra 1966
- deC 66B —, "The Recruitment System of the Imperial Bureaucracy of Later Han," Chung Chi Journal 6.1 (November 1966), 67-78
- deC 67 —, "An Outline of the Local Administration of the Later Han Empire," Chung Chi Journal 7.1 (November 1967), 57-71
- deC 70 —, The Records of the Three Kingdoms, Canberra 1970
- deC 75A —, "Political Protest in Imperial China: the great proscription of Later Han 167-184," in PFEH 11 (March 1975), 1-36
- deC 75B —, "The Harem of Emperor Huan: a study of court politics in Later Han," PFEH 12 (September 1975), 1-42
- deC 76 —, Portents of Protest in the Later Han Dynasty: the memorials of Hsiang K'ai to Emperor Huan, Canberra 1976
- deC 80 —, "Politics and Philosophy under the Government of Emperor Huan 159-168 AD," in TP 66 (1980), 41-83
- deC 81 —, "Inspection and Surveillance Officials under the Two Han Dynasties," in State and Law in East Asia [Festschrift Karl Büniger], edited by Dieter Eikemeier and Herbert Franke, Wiesbaden 1981, 40-79
- deC 84 —, Northern Frontier: the policies and strategy of the Later Han empire, Canberra 1984
- deC 89 —, Emperor Huan and Emperor Ling: being the chronicle of Later Han for the years 157 to 189 AD as recorded in chapters 54 to 59 of the Zizhi tongjian of Sima Guang; translated and annotated, Canberra 1989
- deC 90 —, Generals of the South: the foundation and early history of the Three Kingdoms state of Wu, Canberra 1990
- deC 90A —, Man from the Margin: Cao Cao and the Three Kingdoms: the Fifty-first George Ernest Morrison Lecture in Ethnology, Canberra 1990
- deC 91 —, "The Three Kingdoms and Western Jin: a history of China in the third century AD:" Part I in East Asian History [EAH] 1 (Canberra, June 1991), 1-36; Part II in EAH 2 (Canberra, December 1991), 143-165
- deC 95 —, "Local Worthies: provincial gentry and the end of Later Han," in Das Andere China: Festschrift für Wolfgang Bauer zum 65. Geburtstag, Wiesbaden 1995, 533-558
- deC 96 —, To Establish Peace: being the chronicle of Later Han for the years 189 to 220 AD as recorded in chapters 59 to 69 of the Zizhi tongjian of Sima Guang; translated and annotated, Canberra 1996

- deC 2002 —, "A Question of Loyalty: Xun Yu, Cao Cao and Sima Guang," in Sino-Asiatica: papers dedicated to Professor Liu Ts'un-yan on the occasion of his eighty-fifth birthday, edited by Wang Gung-wu, Rafe de Crespigny and Igor de Rachewiltz, Canberra 2002, 30-59
- deC 2006A —, "Some Notes on the Western Regions in Later Han," in Journal of Asian History 40.1 (2006), 1-30
- deC 2006B —, "Scholars and Rulers: imperial patronage under the Later Han dynasty," in Han-Zeit: Festschrift für Hans Stumpfeldt aus Anlaß seines 65. Geburtstage, edited by Michael Friedrich, assisted by Reinhard Emmerich and Hans van Ess, Wiesbaden 2006, 57-77
- Demiéville 86 Paul Demiéville, "Philosophy and Religion from Han to Sui," with a Postscript by Timothy Barrett, in CHOC:808-872 and 873-878
- DeWoskin 83 Kenneth J DeWoskin, Doctors, Diviners and Magicians of Ancient China: biographies of Fang-shih, Columbia UP 1983
- Dubs 38 Homer H Dubs, The History of the Former Han Dynasty by Pan Ku, [translation] volume 1, Baltimore 1938
- Dubs 44 —, The History of the Former Han Dynasty by Pan Ku, volume 2, Baltimore 1944
- Dubs 55 —, The History of the Former Han Dynasty by Pan Ku, volume 3, Baltimore 1955
- Dull 72 Jack L Dull, "The Confucian Origins of Neo-Taoism", [mimeograph] paper contributed to the Second International Conference on Taoist Studies, Harvard 1972
- Eberhardt/Mueller 36 Wolfram Eberhardt and Rolf Mueller, "Contributions to the Astronomy of the Han Period III: astronomy of the Later Han period," in HJAS 1 (1936), 194-241
- Ebrey 78 Patricia Ebrey, The Aristocratic Families of Early Imperial China: a case study of the Po-ling Ts'ui family, Cambridge UP 1978
- Ebrey 80 —, "Later Han Stone Inscriptions," in HJAS 40 (1980), 325-353
- Ebrey 86 —, "The Economic and Social History of Later Han," in CHOC:608-648
- Eichhorn 55 Werner Eichhorn, "Bemerkungen zum Aufstand des Chang Chio und zum Staate des Chang Lu," in Mitteilungen des Instituts für Orientforschung 3 (1955), 292-327
- ESWSBB Ershiwu shi bubian 二十五史補編, Kaiming shuju 開明書局, Shanghai 1936-37 [rep.1957]
- Fang 52 Achilles Fang, The Chronicle of the Three Kingdoms (220-265): chapters 69-78 from the Tzu chih t'ung chien of Ssu-ma Kuang (1019-1086), translated and annotated, volume 1 edited by Glen W Baxter, Harvard-Yenching Institute 1952
- Fang 65 —, The Chronicle of the Three Kingdoms volume 2 edited by Bernard S Solomon, 1965
- Forke 07 & 11 Alfred Forke, Lun heng: Part I Philosophical Essays of Wang Ch'ung, Part II Miscellaneous Essays of Wang Ch'ung [2 volumes], Shanghai 1907 and 1911, reprinted New York 1962.
- G/deC 77 KHJ Gardiner and RRC [Rafe] de Crespigny, "T'an-shih-huai and the Hsien-pi Tribes of the Second Century AD," in PFEH 15 (1977), 1-44
- Gardiner 69A KHJ Gardiner, The Early History of Korea, Canberra 1969
- Gardiner 69B —, "The Hou-Han-shu as a Source for the Early Expansion of Koguryo," in Monumenta Serica 28 (1969), 148-187
- Gardiner 72A —, "The Kung-sun Warlords of Liao-tung (189-238)" Part I, in PFEH 5 (March 1972), 59-107
- Gardiner 72B —, "The Kung-sun Warlords of Liao-tung (189-238)" Part II, in PFEH 6 (September 1972), 141-201
- Goodman 98 Howard L Goodman, Ts'ao P'i Transcendent: the political culture of dynasty-founding in China at the end of the Han, Seattle 1998.
- Goodrich 64-65 & 66 Chauncey S Goodrich, "Two Chapters in the Life of an Empress of the Later Han," Parts I and II, in HJAS 25 (1964-65), 165-177, and 26 (1966), 187-210

- Graham 79
GSR William T Graham Jr, "Mi Heng's 'Rhapsody on a Parrot'," in HJAS 39 (1979), 39-54
Bernhard Karlgren, Grammata Serica Recensa, in BMFEA 29, 1957 [note that characters are cited by number not by page]
- Haloun 49/50 G Haloun, "The Liang-chou Rebellion 184-221 A.D.," in Asia Major [New Series] 1 (1949-50), 119-132
- Henry 92 Eric Henry, "Chu-ko Liang in the Eyes of his Contemporaries," in HJAS 52 (1992), 589-611
- HJAS* Harvard Journal of Asiatic Studies
- Ho 66 Ho Peng Yoke, The Astronomical Chapters of the Chin shu, with amendments, full translations and annotations, Paris 1966
- Holmgren 80 Jennifer Holmgren, Chinese Colonisation of Northern Vietnam: administrative geography and political development in the Tongking delta, first to sixth centuries A.D., Canberra 1980
- Holzman 57 Donald Holzman, "Les débuts du système médiéval de choix et de classement des fonctionnaires: les neuf catégories et l'Impartial et Juste," in Mélanges publiés par l'Institut des Hautes Études Chinoises 1 (1957), 387-414
- Hopkins 83 Donald R Hopkins, Princes and Peasants: smallpox in history, Chicago UP 1983
- Hou Kang Hou Kang 侯康, Bu Hou Han shu yiwen zhi 補後漢書藝文志 in ESWSBB II, 2105-2304 [cited by pagination only]. Comments by Hou Kang in other works are cited by HHSJJ.
- Hsia 68 C.T. Hsia, The Classic Chinese Novel: a critical introduction, Columbia UP 1968
- Hsü 80 Hsü Cho-yün [Cho-yun Hsu], Han Agriculture: the formation of early Chinese agrarian economy (206 B.C.-A.D. 220), edited by Jack L Dull, Washington UP, Seattle 1980
- Hughes 60 ER Hughes, Two Chinese poets: vignettes of Han life and thought, Princeton UP 1960
- Hulsewé 55 AFP Hulsewé, Remnants of Han Law volume I, Leiden 1955.
- Hulsewé 61 —, "Notes on the Historiography of the Han Period", in WG Beasley and EG Pulleyblank [eds], Historians of China and Japan, Oxford UP 1961, 31-43.
- Hulsewé 79 —, China in Central Asia: the early stage 125 B.C. - A.D. 23, with an Introduction by Michael Loewe, Leiden 1979
- Hulsewé 86 —, "Ch'in and Han Law," in CHOC:520-544
- Kaltenmark 79 Max Kaltenmark, "The Ideology of the T'ai-p'ing-ching," in Holmes Welch and Anna Seidel [eds], Facets of Taoism: essays in Chinese religion, Yale UP 1979, 19-45
- Kandel 79 Barbara Kandel, Taiping Jing - the origin and transmission of the 'Scripture on General Welfare' - the history of an unofficial text, Hamburg 1979
- KG Kaogu: 考古 "Archeology", Beijing.
- Kinney 90 Anne Behnke Kinney, The Art of the Han Essay: Wang Fu's Ch'ien-fu lun, Arizona State University 1990
- Knechtges 82 David R Knechtges, Wen xuan or Selections of Refined Literature: volume one, rhapsodies on metropolises and capitals; by Xiao Tong (501-531), translated with annotations and introduction, Princeton UP 1982
- Knechtges 87 —, Wen xuan or Selections of Refined Literature: volume two, rhapsodies on sacrifices, hunting, travel, sightseeing, palaces and halls, rivers and seas; by Xiao Tong (501-531), translated with annotations, Princeton UP 1987
- Kramers 86 Robert P Kramers, "The Development of the Confucian Schools," in CHOC:747-765
- Künstler 69 Mieczyslaw Jerzy Künstler, Ma Jong: vie et oeuvre, Warsaw 1969
- Lao Kan 勞幹 An Anthology of the Articles in the Academic Works 勞幹學術論文集, [2 volumes], Taipei 1976 [includes Lun Handai zhi luyun yu shuiyun 論漢代之陸運與水運, from Chung-yang yen-chiu-yüan li-shi yü-yen yen-chiu-suo chi-k'an 16 (1947), 69-91

- Leban 71 Ts'ao Ts'ao and the Rise of Wei: the early years," doctoral dissertation, Columbia University 1971
- Leban 78 —, "Managing Heaven's Mandate: coded communications in the accession of Ts'ao P'ei, A.D. 220," in David T Roy and Tsuen-hsuein Tsien [eds], Ancient China: studies in early civilization, Chinese UP, Hong Kong 1978, 315-341
- Legge CC James Legge, The Confucian Classics, reprinted Hong Kong 1960
 —, CC I: The Confucian Analects, The Great Learning, The Doctrine of the Mean
 —, CC II: The Works of Mencius
 —, CC III: The Shoo King, or the Book of Historical Documents
 —, CC IV: The She King, or the Book of Poetry
 —, CC V: The Ch'un Ts'ew with the Tso Chuen
- Lewis 2000 Mark Edward Lewis, "The Han Abolition of Universal Military Service," in Warfare in Ancient China, edited by Hans van de Ven, Leiden 2000, 33-75
- Liu 2006 Liu Ts'un-yan, "Was Celestial Master Zhang a Historical Figure?" in Taoism in History: essays in honour of Liu Ts'un-yan, edited by Benjamin Penny, London and New York 2006, 189-253
- Loewe 60 Michael Loewe, "The Orders of Aristocratic Rank in Han China," in TP 48 (1960), 97-174
- Loewe 67A-B —, Records of Han Administration [2 volumes], Cambridge UP 1967
- Loewe 74 —, Crisis and Conflict in Han China 104 B.C. to A.D. 109, London 1974
- Loewe 86A —, "Introduction," CHOC:1-19
- Loewe 86B —, "The Former Han Dynasty," in CHOC:103-222
- Loewe 86C —, "The Conduct of Government and the Issues at Stake (A.D.57-167)," in CHOC:291-316
- Loewe 86D —, "The Structure and Practice of Government," in CHOC:463-490
- Loewe 86E —, "The Religious and Intellectual Background," in CHOC:649-725
- Loewe 86F —, "The Concept of Sovereignty," in CHOC:726-746
- Loewe 93 —, see Texts
- Loewe 2000 —, see QHX
- Loewe 2004 —, The Men who Governed Han China: companion to A Biographical Dictionary of the Qin, Former Han and Xin Periods, Leiden 2004
- Mather 76 Richard B Mather, Shishuo Xinyu: A New Account of Tales of the World, by Liu I-ch'ing with commentary by Liu Chün, translated with introduction and notes, Minnesota UP 1976
- MBeck 80 BJ Mansvelt Beck, "The Date of the Taiping jing," in TP 66 (1980), 147-182
- MBeck 86 —, "The Fall of Han," in CHOC:317-376
- MBeck 90 —, The Treatises of Later Han: their author, sources, contents and place in Chinese historiography, Leiden 1990
- McNeill 76 William H McNeill, Plagues and Peoples, New York [Doubleday Paperback] 1976
- Miao 82 Ronald C Miao, Early Medieval Chinese Poetry: the life and verse of Wang Ts'an (A.D. 177-217), Wiesbaden 1962
- Miyakawa 60 Miyakawa Hisayuki, "The Confucianization of South China," in Arthur F Wright [ed.], The Confucian Persuasion, Stanford UP 1960, 21-46
- Needham 59 Joseph Needham, with the collaboration of Wang Ling, Science and Civilisation in China, volume 3, Mathematics and the sciences of the heavens and the earth, Cambridge UP 1959

- Needham 62 —, Science and Civilisation in China, volume 4: Physics and Physical Technology; part 1: Physics [with the collaboration of Wang Ling and the special co-operation of Kenneth Girdwood Robinson], Cambridge UP 1962
- Needham 65 —, Science and Civilisation in China, volume 4, Physics and Physical Technology; part 2: Mechanical Engineering [with the collaboration of Wang Ling], Cambridge UP 1965
- Needham 71 —, Science and Civilisation in China, volume 4, Physics and Physical Technology; part 3: Civil Engineering and Nautics [with the collaboration of Wang Ling], Cambridge UP 1971
- Needham 74 —, Science and Civilisation in China, volume 5, Chemistry and Chemical Technology; part 2: Spagyric discovery and invention: magisteries of gold and immortality [with the collaboration of Lu Gwei-djen], Cambridge UP 1974
- Needham 85 —, Science and Civilisation in China, volume 5, Chemistry and Chemical Technology; part 1: Paper and Printing by Tsien Tsuen-hsuei, Cambridge UP 1985
- Needham 86 —, Science and Civilisation in China, volume 6 Biology and Biological Technology; part 1: Botany [with the collaboration of Lu Gwei-djen and a special contribution by Huang Hsing-tsung], Cambridge UP 1986
- Nishijima 86 "The Economic and Social History of Former Han," in CHOC:545-607
- Ngo 76 Ngo Van Xuyet, Divination, magie et politique dans la Chine ancienne, Paris 1976
- Nylan 83 Michael Nylan, "Ying Shao's Feng su t'ung yi: an exploration of problems in Han dynasty political, philosophical and social unity," doctoral dissertation, Princeton University 1982
- Nylan 92 —, The Shifting Center: The Original "Great Plan" and Later Readings, Monumenta Serica Monograph Series XXIV
- O'Hara 55 A R O'Hara, The Position of Women in Early China, according to the Lieh nü chuan [of Liu Xiang 77?-6? BC]: the biographies of Chinese women, Hong Kong 1955 (?)
- Paper 87 Jordan D Paper, The Fu-zi: a post-Han Confucian text, Leiden 1987
- Pearson 89 Margaret J Pearson, Wang Fu and the Comments of a Recluse, Arizona 1989
- Petersen 89-90 "The Early Traditions Relating to the Han Dynasty Transmission of the Taiping jing," in Acta Orientalia, Copenhagen: Part I (1989); Part II (1990)
- PFEH Papers on Far Eastern History, The Australian National University, Canberra
- Powers 91 Michael J Powers, Art and Political Expression in Early China, Yale UP 1991
- QHX Michael Loewe, A Biographical Dictionary of the Qin, Former Han and Xin Periods, Leiden 2000
- Romance Sanguo [zhi] yanyi 三國志演義 "Romance of the Three Kingdoms" by Luo Guanzhong 羅貫中 of the fourteenth century, cited by chapter numbers
- Sailey 78 Jay Sailey, The Master who Embraces Simplicity: a study of the philosopher Ko Hung A.D. 283-343, Taipei 1978
- Schafer 63 Edward H Schafer, The Golden Peaches of Samarkand: a study of T'ang exotics, California UP 1963
- Schafer 67 —, The Vermilion Bird: T'ang images of the South, California UP 1967
- Schreiber 47 Gerhard Schreiber, "Das Volk der Hsien-pi zur Han-Zeit," in Monumenta Serica 12 (1947), 145-203
- Scott 53 Margaret I Scott, "A Study of the Ch'iang, with special reference to their settlements in China from the second to the fifth century A.D.," doctoral dissertation, University of Cambridge 1953
- Seidel 69 Anna Seidel, La Divinisation de Lao tseu dans le Taoïsme des Han, Paris 1969
- Seidel 69/70 —, "The Image of the Perfect Ruler in Early Taoist Messianism: Lao-tzu and Li Hung," in History of Religions 9.2/3 (November 1969-February 1970), 216-247

- Seidel 78 —, "Der Kaiser und sein Ratgeber" in Saeculum 29/1 (1978), 18-50
- Sivin 69 Nathan Sivin, "Cosmos and Computation in Early Chinese Mathematical Astronomy," TP 55 (1969), 1-73
- SKQSCM Siku quanshu congmu 四庫全書總目, Taipei reprint 1974
- Stein 47 Rolf A Stein, "Le Lin-yi: sa localisation, sa contribution à la formation du Champa et ses liens avec la Chine," in Han-hiue: Bulletin du Centre d'Études Sinologiques de Pékin 2.1-3 (1947)
- Sun 56 Sun Wenqing 孫文青, Zhang Heng nianpu 張衡年譜, Shanghai 1956
- Swann 32 Nancy Lee Swann, Pan Chao, foremost woman scholar of China, first century A.D., New York 1932
- Tang 55 Tang Changru 唐長孺, Wei-Jin nanbeichao shi lun cong 魏晉南北朝論叢, Beijing 1955
- Taylor 83 Keith Weller Taylor, The Birth of Vietnam, California UP 1983
- Texts Early Chinese Texts: a bibliographical guide, edited by Michael Loewe, The Society for the Study of Early China 1993:
contributors include Hans Bielenstein, William G Boltz, Ch'en Ch'i-yün, Anne Cheng, W South Coblin, Christopher Cullen, AFP Hulsewé, Robert P Kramers, John Lagerwey, DC Lau, Michael Loewe, John Makeham, Roy Andrew Miller, Margaret Pearson, Timoteus Pokora, Jeffrey K Riegel, Edward L Shaughnessy, Axel Schuessler
- Tjan 49 Tjan Tjoe Som, Po hu t'ung: the comprehensive discussion in the White Tiger Hall, volume 1, Leiden 1949
- Tjan 52 —, Po hu t'ung: the comprehensive discussion in the White Tiger Hall, volume 2, Leiden 1952
- TP T'oung Pao, Leiden
- Tsunoda/Goodrich 51 Tsunoda Ryusaku and LC Goodrich, Japan in the Chinese Dynastic Histories, South Pasadena 1951
- van Ess 93 van Ess, Hans, Politik und Gelehrsamkeit in der Zeit der Han (202 .Chr.-220 n.Chr): die Alltext/Neutext-Kontroverse, Wiesbaden 1993
- van Ess 99 —, "The Apocryphal Texts of the Han Dynasty and the Old Text/New Text Controversy," TP 85 (1999), 29-64
- Vervoorn 90 Aat Vervoorn, Men of the Cliffs and Caves: the development of the Chinese eremitic tradition to the end of the Han dynasty, Chinese UP, Hong Kong 1990
- Welch 66 Holmes Welch, Taoism: the parting of the Way[revised edition], Boston 1966
- Wilhelm 66 Richard Wilhelm, The I Ching or Book of Changes: the Richard Wilhelm translation rendered into English by Cary F Baynes, with Foreword by C G Jung and Preface to the Third Edition by Hellmut Wilhelm, Princeton UP 1966.
- Wu 89 Wu Hong, The Wu Liang Shrines: the ideology of early Chinese pictorial art, Stanford UP 1989
- WW Wenwu 文物 "Cultural Relics," Beijing
- Wu/Yang Wu Zengjin 吳增僅 and Yang Shoujing 楊守敬, Sanguo junxian biao fu kaozheng 三國郡縣表附考證, in ESWSBB III, 2821-2968 [cited by pagination only]
- Yang Shu-ta 楊樹達 Handai hunsang lisu kao 漢代婚喪禮俗考, Shanghai 1933
- Yang 63 Yang Lien-sheng, Studies in Chinese Institutional History, Harvard-Yenching Institute 1963
- Yao Zhenzong 姚振宗 Hou Han shu yiwen zhi 後漢書藝文志 in ESWSBB II, 2305-2130 [cited by pagination only]
- Yen Keng-wang 嚴耕望 [Yan Gengwang], History of the Regional and Local Administration in China 中國地方行政制度史, Part I: The Qin and Han dynasties [2 volumes], Taipei 1961

- Young 84 GC Young, Three Generals of Later Han, Canberra 1984
 Yü 67 Yü Ying-shih, Trade and Expansion in Han China: a study in the structure of Sino-barbarian economic relations, California UP 1967
 Yü 86 —, Yü Ying-shih, "Han Foreign Relations," in CHOC:377-462
Zhongguo lishi ditu ji 中國歷史地圖集 II compiled by Tan Qixiang 譚其驤 and others, Shanghai 1982
 Zhou Mingtai 周明泰 Sanguo zhi shixi biao 三國志世系表 in ERWSBB II, 2645-2724
 Zürcher 59 E Zürcher, The Buddhist Conquest of China, Leiden 1959

MODERN COMMENTATORS QUOTED IN HHSJJ AND SGZJJ

- | | |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| Chen Jingyun 陳景雲 (d.1747) | Ruan Yuan 阮元 (1764-1849) |
| Gu Yanwu 顧炎武 (seventeenth-century) | Shen Mingyi 沈銘彝 [Qing] |
| Hang Shijun 杭世駿 (1696-1773) | Shen Qinhan 沈欽韓 (1775-1832) |
| Hong Liangji 洪亮吉 (1746-1809) | Su Yu 蘇輿 [Qing] |
| Hong Yixuan 洪頤煊 (1765-1837) | Wang Guowei 王國維 (1877-1927) |
| Hou Kang 侯康 (1798-1837) | Wang Wentai 汪文臺 [Qing] |
| Hui Dong 惠棟 (1697-1758) | Wang Xianqian 王先謙 (1842-1917) |
| Liu Congchen 劉從辰 [Qing] | Zhao Yiqing 趙一清 [eighteenth century] |
| Qian Daxin 錢大昕 (1728-1804) | Zhou Shouchang 周壽昌 (1814-1884) |
| Qian Dazhao 錢大昭 (1744-1813) | |

LITERARY AND SCHOLARLY WORKS OF LATER HAN

This list is designed as an index to writings mentioned in the various biographies; fuller details are provided under the entries for the various authors. I have made no attempt to record every work mentioned in the histories: that work has been comprehensively carried out by Hou Kang and Yao Zhenzong.

The major genres of writing common at this time are rendered as follows:

bei 碑 stele inscription [funerary or commemorative]	mu zhi 墓誌/志 tomb marker
biezhuan 別傳 secondary biography	shi 詩 poem
fu 賦 rhapsody	song 頌 hymn
lei 誄 eulogy	ya 雅 ode
ling 銘 inscription	zan 讚 eulogy
ling biao 靈表 memorial statement	zhangju 章句 commentary or detailed commentary
lun 論 discussion or essay	[lit. "Exposition in Paragraphs and Sentences"]
mu biao 墓表 tomb inscription	zhen 箴 exhortation

Larger works were commonly measured in pian 篇 sections, which could contain a number of juan 卷 scrolls. Modern measurements equate juan to chapters.

PART I: CONFUCIAN CLASSICS, SCHOOLS AND COMMENTARIES¹

1. Five Classics were represented by Academicians at the Imperial University:

Book of Changes: Yi jing 易經 or Zhou yi 周易

New Text:

Shi interpretation [of Shi Chou 施讎 of Former Han]*²

Meng interpretation [of Meng Xi 孟喜 of Former Han]*

Liangqiu interpretation [of Liangqiu He 梁丘賀 of Former Han]*

Jing interpretation [of Jing Fang 京房 of Former Han]*

Old Text:

Fei interpretation [of Fei Zhi 費直 of Former Han]

Gao interpretation [of Gao Xiang 高相 of Former Han]

Classic of History: Shu jing 書經 or Shangshu 尚書

New Text [based upon the version of Fu Sheng 伏勝 of Qin/Former Han]

Ouyang interpretation [Ouyang Gao 歐陽高 of Former Han]*

Elder Xiahou 大夏侯 [Xiahou Sheng 夏侯勝 of Former Han]*

Younger Xiahou 小夏侯 [Xiahou Jian 夏侯建, nephew of Sheng]*

Old Text 古文尚書 [allegedly found in a wall of the house of Confucius and sponsored by Kong Anguo 孔安國 of Former Han]

Classic of Poetry: 詩經 Shi jing [comprising the Airs of the States 國風 Guo feng, the Greater and Lesser Odes 大雅 Daya and 小雅 Xiaoya, and the Hymns 頌 Song]

New Text:

Han 韓詩 founded by Han Ying 韓嬰 of Former Han*

¹ HHS 79/69A:2545; Texts, Bn 79:184-197, and Tjan 49. Bold lettering indicates the citation system used in this work.

² An asterisk * indicates that the school was represented by an Academician at the University.

Lu 魯詩 founded by Shen Pei 申培 of Former Han*

Qi 齊詩 founded by Yuan Gu 轅固 of Former Han*

Old Text:

Mao 毛詩 founded by Mao Heng 毛亨 and his nephew Chang 萇 of Former Han Ritual 禮: the present-day Yi li 儀禮 and Li ji 禮記³ known variously as:

Shi li 士禮: New Text version, first identified by Gao Tangsheng 高堂生 of Former Han

Li gu jing 禮古經 or Yi li 逸禮 "Lost Rites": Old Text version, said to have been found in the wall of Confucius' house during Former Han

Li jing 禮經: Han term for the present Yi li, incorporating records/notes 記 ji

Yi li 儀禮: this title, first cited in the Lun heng of Wang Chong of the first century AD, later became the standard name for the present-day Yi li

Qu li 曲禮: title of a work cited by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄 of the second century AD

New Text schools of interpretation/editions:

Elder Dai 大戴 [Dai De 戴德 of Former Han]*

Younger Dai 小戴 [Dai Sheng 戴聖, nephew of Dai De]*

Qing [Qing Pu 慶普 of Former Han]*⁴

Chunqiu 春秋 Spring and Autumn Annals

Gongyang 公羊 commentary [ascribed to the New Text]

Zhuang/Yan interpretation [of Zhuang Pengzu 莊彭祖 of Former Han]*⁵

Yan interpretation [of Yan Anle 顏安樂 of Former Han]*

Guliang 穀梁 commentary [ascribed to the New Text]

Zuo zhuan 左傳 [ascribed to the Old Text]

sponsored by Liu Xin 劉歆 (46 BC-23 AD)*⁶

2. Other works of Confucianism not included in the University canon:

Analects of Confucius 論語 *Lun yu*⁷

Book of Mencius 孟子 Mengzi

Book of Filial Piety 孝經 Xiao jing

in both an Old Text and a New Text version

Er ya 爾雅⁸

Zhou li 周禮: originally known as 周官 Zhou guan "Offices of the Zhou dynasty"

Old Text, sponsored by Liu Xin 劉歆

Note: The Stone Classics 石經 were engraved by Cai Yong, Ma Midi and others, in response to an edict of 175; the work was completed about 183. The classics chosen were Analects, Changes, Ritual, History, and Chunqiu with the Gongyang commentary. See Bn 76.70 and deC 89.481-483, also Li shi 14 [which includes an extract from the Poetry in the Lu interpretation: this must be from later work of the Wei period.]

3. Later Han editions and commentaries to the Confucian classics Analects 論語

by Bao Xian 鮑咸

by Cheng Ping 程秉

by He Xiu 何休

³ See Texts:234-241 [Boltz] and 293-297 [Riegel].

⁴ The Qing school was initially represented by an Academician at the University, but was later disestablished.

⁵ After Liu Zhuang 劉莊, Emperor Ming, came to the throne in 57, the surname Zhuang 莊 was tabooed as Yan 嚴.

⁶ Emperor Guangwu established a chair for Zuo zhuan, but allowed it to lapse a few years later.

⁷ Though the Analects were not represented by a chair at the University, they were included in the Stone Classics of 175 at the expense of the Poetry: see sub Cai Yong.

⁸ The Er ya dictionary is listed by HS 30:1718 in the section allocated to the Book of Filial Piety. Its history is discussed by Texts: 94-99 [South Coblin].

- by Ma Da 麻達
 by Ma Rong 馬融
 by Yu Fan 虞翻
 by Zhang Zhao 張昭
 by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄
- Book of Changes 易經
 by Cheng Ping 程秉
 by Cui Zhuan 崔篆: Zhouyi lin 周易林, a study of divination by Dong Yu 董遇
 by Fan Ying 樊英: Fanshi xue 樊氏學 "Teachings of Mr Fan" by Feng Hao 馮顥
 by Gui Dan 注丹: Yi tonglun 易通論, later known as Guijun tong 注君通 "Explanations of Master Gui" by Jing Luan 景鸞: Yi shuo 易說 "Discussion on the Changes," in his He-Luo jiaoji 河洛交集 "Connected Collection to [the Map from] the Yellow River and [the Book from] the Luo" by Liu Biao 劉表 [see also also Qimu Kai 蔡母闔 et al.]
 by Lu Ji 陸績
 by Ma Rong 馬融
 by Qimu Kai 蔡母闔, Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷 and others for Liu Biao 劉表: the "Later Edition" 後定 [and note Liu Biao above] by Wang Lang 王朗: Yi zhuan 易傳 by Wei Boyang 魏伯陽
 by Xu Jun 許峻: Yi lin 易林 and other studies by Xun Shuang 荀爽: Yi zhuan 易傳
 by Yu Fan 虞翻
 by Yuan Jing 袁京: Nan ji 難記 "Record of Problems" by Yuan Taibo 袁太伯
 by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄
- Book of Filial Piety 孝經
 by He Xiu 何休
 by Liu Xi 劉熙
 by Ma Rong 馬融
 by Yan Jun 嚴峻
 by Zheng 鄭 of the second century AD [probably not Zheng Xuan 鄭玄] by Wang Fu 王輔, on Xiao jing wei Yuanshen qi 孝經緯援神契, an apocryphal work associated with the Book of Filial Piety by Zhai Fu 翟輔, on the apocrypha to the Book of Filial Piety
- Chunqiu 春秋 [Spring and Autumn Annals] with Gongyang and Guliang commentaries, and Zuo zhuan by Dong Yu 董遇: Zuo zhuan zhuhei bieyi 左傳朱墨別異, a variorum edition by Fan Shu 樊儵/條: Fanhou xue 樊侯學 "Teachings of the Marquis Fan" later abridged by Zhang Ba 張霸 q.v.
 by Fu Qian 服虔: Chunqiu Zuoshi zhuan jie[yi] 春秋左氏傳解[詁] "Explanation of Zuo zhuan" by He Xiu 何休: Chunqiu Gongyang jiegu 春秋公羊解詁 by Jia Hui 賈徽: Zuoshi tiaoli 左氏條例 by Jia Kui 賈逵: "Explanation and Commentary" 解詁 to Zuo zhuan by Kong Jia 孔嘉: Zuo zhuan shuo 左氏說 by Kong Qi 孔奇: Chunqiu Zuoshi shan 春秋左氏刪

- by Li Yu 李育 IV: Nan Zuo zhuan yi 難左傳義 "Errors in Zuo zhuan" by Liu Mu 劉睦: commentary to Chunqiu by Liu Tao 劉陶: Chunqiu tiaoli 春秋條例 by Peng Wang 彭汪: commentary to Zuo zhuan
 by Qimu Kai 綦母闔, Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷 and others for Liu Biao 劉表: the "Later Edition" 後定
 by Tang Gu 唐固: commentaries to Gongyang and Guliang by Xie Gai 謝該, compiled by Yue Xiang 樂詳: Xieshi shi 謝氏釋 "Explanations by Mr Xie," also known as Zuo zhuan wen qishier shi 左傳問七十二事 "Questions on Seventy-two Matters in Zuo zhuan" by Xun Shuang 荀爽: Chunqiu tiaoli 春秋條例 by Yang Zhong 楊終: Chunqiu 春秋外傳 by Ying Rong 穎/穎容: Chunqiu Zuo zhuan tiao li 春秋左氏條例 by Zhang Ba 張霸: "Mr Zhang's Study" 張氏學, abridgement of Fan Shu 樊榑/儵 q.v.
 by Zhang Zhao 張昭: commentaries to both Chunqiu and Zuo zhuan]
 by Zheng Zhong 鄭眾
 by Zhong Xing 鍾興: abridgement of the detailed commentary to Chunqiu from Former Han

Classic of History 書經 Shu jing or 尚書 Shangshu

- by Cheng Ping 程秉
 by Huan Rong 桓榮 and Huan Yu 桓郁, abridging the work of Zhu Pu 朱普 of Former Han: "Greater and Lesser Commentaries of the Ministers of Ceremonies the Lords Huan" 桓君大小太常章句 by Liu Tao 劉陶: the "Median Edition" 中文尚書 of the Old Text and New Text
 by Lu Zhi 盧植
 by Ma Rong 馬融
 by Mou Qing 牟卿 of Former Han and Mou Zhang 牟張/長: 牟氏章句 [abridged by Zhang Huan 張奐 (see below)]
 by Qimu Kai 綦母闔, Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷 and others for Liu Biao 劉表: the "Later Edition" 後定
 by Wang Su 王肅, who allegedly forged an ancient text [and also Kongzi jiayu q.v.] by Wei Hong 衛宏: Gu Shangshu xunzhi 古文尚書訓旨, an exposition of the Old Text by Xun Shuang 荀爽: 尚書正經 Shangshu zhengjing by Zhang Huan 張奐: Shangshu jinan 尚書記難; also an abridgement of the commentary by Mou Jing and Mou Zhang by Zhang Kai 張楷 [doubtful authenticity]
 by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄
 by Zhou Fang 周防: Shujing zaji 書經雜記

Classic of Poetry 詩經 Shi jing

- by Du Fu 杜撫: Shi tiyue yitong 詩題約義通 and see also sub Xue Han 薛漢
 by Du Qiong 杜瓊
 by Fu An 伏黯, detailed commentary later abridged by Fu Gong 伏恭 by Fu An 伏黯: Jieshuo 解說 "Explanation of Terms" by Hou Ba 侯芭
 by Jing Luan 景鸞: Shi jie 詩解 "Explanation of the Poetry," in his He-Luo jiaoji 河洛交集 "Connected Collection to [the Map from] the Yellow River and [the Book from] the Luo"
 by Ma Rong 馬融
 by Qimu Kai 綦母闔, Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷 and others for Liu Biao 劉表: the "Later Edition" 後定
 by Xue Han 薛漢 and Du Fu 杜撫: a detailed commentary

- by Xue Han 薛漢: Mao-Shi xu 毛詩序, a preface to the Mao recension by Xun Shuang 荀爽: Shi zhuan 詩傳
 by Zhang Kuang 張匡
 by Zhao Ye 趙晔: Shi xili shenyuan 詩細歷神淵, interpreting the classic by calendrical calculations
 by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄

Er ya 爾雅

- by Li Xun 李巡

Mencius 孟子 Mengzi

- by Cheng Zeng 程曾
 by Zhao Qi 趙岐/歧
 by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄

Ritual 禮

- by Cao Bao 曹褒
 by Cao Chong 曹充
 by Liu Biao 劉表 [see also Qimu Kai 綦母闔 et al.]
 by Lu Zhi 盧植
 by Ma Rong 馬融
 by Qimu Kai 綦母闔, Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷 and others for Liu Biao 劉表: the "Later Edition" 後定 [and note Liu Biao above] by Xun Shuang 荀爽
 by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄

Zhou li 周禮 or Zhou guan 周官

- by Du Zichun 杜子春
 by Jia Kui 賈逵
 by Lin Shuo 臨/林碩
 by Ma Rong 馬融
 by Zhang Heng 張衡
 by Zhang Pingzi: Zhouguan jieshuo 周官解說 by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄: Zhouguan zhu 周官注
 by Zheng Zhong 鄭眾

PART II: OTHER WORKS

- Ai dian* 哀典 "An Account of Mourning" by Li You 李尤
Ailao zhuan 哀牢傳 "Account of the Ailao People" by Yang Zhong 楊終
Baigua fu 白鵠賦 "Rhapsody on the White Crane," by Cui Qi 崔琦
Ba-Shu qijiu zhuan 巴蜀耆舊傳 "Venerable Men and Ancient Affairs of Ba and Shu" by Wang Shang 王商, Zhao Qian 趙謙 and Zheng Qin 鄭勤/廛
Beizheng fu 北征賦 "Rhapsody on a Northward Journey" by Ban Biao 班彪
Biandao lun 辯道論 by Cao Zhi 曹植
Bian-he tong zhi lun 辯和同之論 "Discussion on the Reconciliation of Differences" by Liu Liang/Cen 劉梁/岑
Bian lun 邊論, a discussion of the frontier, by Du Du 杜篤
Bingyun tu 兵雲圖, a table for predicting the course of warfare from the appearance of clouds, see sub Yang You 楊由
Boguan zhen 百官箴 "Admonitions to Officials" by Hu Guang 胡廣 and others
Bohu tong 白虎通 "The Comprehensive Discussions in the White Tiger Hall" by Ban Gu 班固
Bohu tongyi 白虎通義, summary account of the general significance of the discussions in the White Tiger Hall
Bohu tong delun 白虎通德論 i.e. Bohu tongyi by Ban Gu 班固 and others
Bohu yizou 白虎議奏, memorials from the conference in the White Tiger Hall

- Cai Yong bencao* 蔡邕本草, a work of pharmacology by Cai Yong
- Cao Dagu ji* 曹大家集, collected works of Ban Zhao 班昭, collected by the Lady Ding 丁氏
- Caoshu shi* 草書勢, a treatise on Grass Style calligraphy, by Cui Yuan 崔瑗
- Ce shibing ye fu* 刺世疾邪賦 "Rhapsody on the Ills of the Times" by Zhao Yi 趙壹
- Changyan* 昌言 "Admirable Words" by Zhongchang Tong 仲長統, with an Introduction by Miao Xi 繆襲
- Chanwei* 讖緯, apocrypha, imperial edition by Xue Han 薛漢 [and see sub Yin Min 尹敏]
- Chaoshui lun* 潮水論, an account of the Chao River in south China, by Yan Jun 嚴峻
- Chen feng shi* 晨風詩, a mourning poem, by Yang Zhong 楊終
- Chenliu fengsu zhuan* 陳留風俗傳 "Record of the Customs of Chenliu" by Juan Cheng 圈稱
- Chenliu qijiu zhuan* 陳留耆舊傳 "Venerable Men and Ancient Affairs of Chenliu" by Juan Cheng 圈稱, sponsored by Yuan Tang 袁湯
- Chenzi* 陳子, collected works by Chen Ji 陳紀
- Chonghou lun* 崇厚論 "Essay in Praise of Liberality" by Zhu Mu 朱穆
- Chu ci zhangju* 楚辭章句, commentary by Wang Yi 王逸 [and see Li sao]
- Chunqiu Han yi* 春秋漢議 by He Xiu 何休
- Chunqiu Han yi bo* 春秋漢議駁 by Fu Qian 服虔
- Cishe shuo* 刺奢說, an essay against extravagance, by Feng Hao 馮顥
- Cisong bi* 辭訟比 "Precedents for [Civil] Cases" by Chen Chong 陳寵
- Daosao fu* 悼騷賦 by Liang Song 梁竦
- Daque fu* 大雀賦 "Rhapsody on the Great Bird [from the West]" by Ban Zhao 班昭
- Daru lun* 大儒論 "An Essay on Great Confucianism" by Wang Chong 王充
- Dayan xuanji* 大衍玄基, on prognostications, by Wang Jing 王景
- De xing* 德行 "Virtuous Conduct," a posthumous record of Li Gu 李固, compiled by Du Fang 杜訪, Zhao Cheng 趙承 and others
- Denglou fu* 登樓賦 "Rhapsody on Climbing the Tower" by Wang Can 王粲
- Dengtai fu* 登臺賦 "Rhapsody on Climbing the Terrace" by Cao Zhi 曹植
- Dili zhi* 地理志 "Treatise of Geography" by Fu Wuji 伏無忌
- Dongdu fu* 東都賦 "Rhapsody on the Eastern Metropolis" by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Dongguan Hanji* 東觀漢記: by Ban Gu 班固, Bian Shao 邊韶, Deng Si 鄧嗣, Du Fu 杜撫, Liu Taotu 劉陶駢, Liu Yi 劉毅, Liu You 李尤, Liu Zhen 劉珍, Yan Du 延篤, Zhu Mu 朱穆 et al.; also Yi 意 Treatises by Cai Yong 蔡邕
- Dongli [ji]* 洞歷紀, presumably a study of historical precedents, by Zhou Shu 周樹
- Dongzheng fu* 東征賦 "Rhapsody on an Eastward Journey" by Ban Zhao 班昭
- Dudian* 獨斷 "Solitary Decisions[?]" by Cai Yong 蔡邕
- Fa yan* 法言 by Yang Xiong 楊雄 of Former Han, commentary by Hou Ba 侯芭
- Fan Han Fei* 反韓非 "Against Han Feizi" by Liu Tao 劉陶
- Fanshi xue* 樊侯學 "Teachings of the Marquis Fan" by Fan Shu 樊儵/儵
- Fanshi xue* 樊氏學 "Teachings of Mr Fan" by Fan Ying 樊英: a commentary to the Book of Changes q.v. above
- Feng-Shan shu* 封禪書 "Treatise on the Feng and Shan Sacrifices" by Yang Zhong 楊終
- Feng-Shan yi ji* 封禪儀記, "Record of the Observance of the Feng and Shan Sacrifices" by Ma Dibo 馬第伯
- Fengsu tongyi* 風俗通義 "A Compendium of Popular Customs" by Ying Shao 應劭
- Fu Meng Ke* 復孟軻 "In Support of Mencius" by Liu Tao 劉陶
- Fuhou gujin zhu* 伏侯古今注 "Notes of the Marquis Fu on Things Ancient and Modern" by Fu Wuji 伏無忌
- Gan sao* 感騷, an elegy for Qu Yuan, by Ying Feng 應奉
- Guangcheng song* 廣成頌 "Hymn to the Guangcheng Park" by Ma Rong 馬融
- Guangwu shouming zhongxing song* 光武受命中興頌 "Hymn on the Receipt of the Mandate and the Restoration" by Liu Cang 劉蒼, with commentary by Jia Kui 賈逵
- Guijun tong* 注君通 "Explanations of Master Gui [on the Book of Changes]" by Gui Dan 注丹

- Guitian fu* 歸田賦 "Rhapsody on Returning to the Fields" by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Guo yu* 國語, commentaries by Jia Kui 賈逵 ["Explanation and Commentary" 解詁], by Tang Gu 唐固 and by Yu Fan 虞翻
- Han jiuyi* 漢舊儀 "Ancient Han Ceremonial" ascribed to Cai Zhi 蔡質
- Han jiuyi* 漢舊儀, an account of the institutions of Former Han, by Wei Hong 衛宏
- Han shi* 漢詩 "Poems of Han," by Wang Yi 王逸
- Han shi* 漢事 "Affairs of Han" by Ying Feng 應奉
- Han shu houxu* 漢書後序 "Postscript to the History of Han" by Ying Feng 應奉
- Han shu* 漢書 by Ban Biao 班彪, Ban Gu 班固, Ban Zhao 班昭 and others; commentary by Ying Shao 應劭
- Han song* 漢頌 "Hymns of Han" by Cao Shuo 曹朔
- Han yi* 漢儀 "Han Ceremonial" ascribed to Cai Zhi 蔡質
- Han yi* 漢議, a compendium of legal cases and precedents, by Ying Shao 應劭
- Han yu* 漢語, a collection of moral tales, by Xun Shuang 荀爽
- Hande chunqiu* 漢德春秋 by He Ying 何英
- Hande song* 漢德頌 "Hymns to the [Men of] Virtue of Han" by Liu Fu 劉復
- Hanguan* 漢官 or Hanguan mulu 漢官目錄; anonymous compilation on official titles
- Hanguan dianzhi yishi xuanyong* 漢官典職儀式選用 "Administrative Observances of the Han Official System Selected for Use" by Cai Zhi 蔡質
- Hanguan liyi gushi* 漢官禮儀故事 "Ceremonial Precedents for Han Offices" by Ying Shao 應劭
- Hanguan mulu* 漢官目錄 see Hanguan 漢官
- Hanguan yi* 漢官儀 "Ceremonial of Han Offices" by Ying Shao 應劭
- Hanguan zhu* 漢官注 "Notes on Han Offices" by Ying Shao 應劭
- Hanji* 漢紀, a chronicle of Former Han, by Xun Yue 荀悅
- Hanji* 漢記 see Dongguan Hanji 東觀漢記
- Hanlü zhangju* 漢律章句 and similar titles, commentaries to the laws of Han compiled variously by Guo Lingqing [possibly Guo Hong 郭弘/宏 or his son Guo Gong 郭躬], by Ma Rong 馬融, by Shusun Xuan 叔孫宣 and by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄
- Hanmo yingxiong ji* 漢末英雄記 "Records of the Heroes and Champions at the End of Han" by Wang Can 王粲
- Hanzhong qiju zhuan* 漢中耆舊傳, "Venerable Men and Ancient Affairs of Hanzhong" by Zhu Gui 祝龜
- Hetu Luoshu* 河圖洛書, "The Diagrams from the Yellow River and the Book from the Luo," works of divination; explanations by Zhu Cang 朱倉: He-Luo jie 河洛解, and see sub Yang Tong 楊統
- He-Luo jiaoji* 河洛交集 "Connected Collection to [the Diagrams from] the Yellow River and [the Book from] the Luo" by Jing Luan 景鸞 [and see sub Book of Changes and Classic of Poetry above]
- Hou Han shu* 後漢書 by Xie Cheng 謝承
- Huainan zi* 淮南子, commentaries by Gao You 高誘 and by Ma Rong 馬融
- Huang Xi bian* 皇羲篇, a study of the legendary emperor Fuxi 伏羲, by Liu Hong 劉宏, Emperor Ling
- Huangde zhuan* 皇德傳 "An Account of Sovereign Virtue" by Hou Jin 侯瑾
- Hunli ye wen* 婚禮謁文, on the ceremonial for visits at times of marriage, by Zheng Zhong 鄭眾
- Hunyi zhu* 渾儀注, a commentary on the armillary sphere, by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Ji jing* 針經, a treatise on acupuncture, by the Old Man of the Fu River 涪翁老父
- Jiadian song* 嘉瑞頌, hymn in honour of a phoenix and a dragon, by Yang Zhong 楊終
- Jian lun* 檢論 by Zou Bin 鄒邠: a commentary on the Xin lun 新論 of Huan Tan 桓譚
- Jianwu zhuji* 建武注記 "Diary of the Jianwu Period" [originally Shizu benji 世祖本紀] by Ban Gu 班固, Chen Zong 陳宗, Du Fu 杜撫, Ma Yan 馬嚴 and Meng Ji 孟冀
- Jiaoshi lun* 矯世論 "A Discussion on Reform" by Hou Jin 侯瑾
- Jiaozhou yiwu zhi* 交州異物志, a collectanea of strange matters from south China by Yang Fu 楊孚 [and see Yiwu zhi]

- Jiebin fu* 解擯賦 "Rhapsody to Explain [my] Rejection" by Zhao Yi 趙壹
- Jieyi* 讖義 "Censures" by Wang Chong 王充
- Ji-Han fuchen zan* 季漢輔臣贊 "Praises of Ministers Who have Supported Junior Han" by Yang Xi 楊戲/羲
- Jihui pian* 記誨篇, a text on conduct, by Su Jing 蘇竟
- Jin dan jue* 金丹訣 [an ancient Taoist text], commentary by Yin Changsheng 陰長生
- Jin dao* 琴道 "On the Art of the Lute" by Huan Tan 桓譚, completed by Ban Gu 班固
- Jingfang songshuo* 經方頌說 "Eulogy and Explanation of the Classical Arts" by Li Zhu 李助
- Jingzhou xing jing* 荊州星經, a list of celestial omens compiled on the orders of Liu Biao 劉表 [also known as Jingzhou xing zhuan 荊州星傳]
- Jingzhou xing zhuan* 荊州星傳 or Jingzhou zhan 荊州占, a list of celestial omens, by Liu Rui 劉叡
- Jisu* 讖俗 "On Common Morality" by Wang Chong 王充
- Jiugong fu* 九宮賦 "Rhapsody on the Nine Palaces" by Huang Xiang 黃香
- Jiuzhang suanshu* 九章算術 "Nine Chapters on the Art of Mathematics," compiled in Qin and Former Han, with Later Han additions, completed in the first century AD; commentary by Liu Hong 劉洪, and see sub Zheng Zhong 鄭眾
- Jiuzhang suanshu* 九章算術 "Nine Chapters on the Art of Mathematics;"
- Jizhou ji* 冀州記, a history of Ji province, by Xun Wei 荀緯
- Jueshi dumu* 決事都目 "General Principles for Deciding Cases" by Chen Chong 陳寵
- Kongzi ban* 孔子版 "Tablet of Confucius," an oracular work
- Kongzi jiyu* 孔子家語 "Home Sayings of Confucius," allegedly a forgery by Wang Su 王肅
- Kuang Laozi* 匡老子 "In Support of Laozi" by Liu Tao 劉陶
- Laozi ming* 老子銘 stele composed by Bian Shao 邊韶
- Laozi* 老子 [Daode jing 道德經], commentaries by Dong Yu 董遇 [Laozi xunzhu 老子訓注], by Ma Rong 馬融 and by Yu Fan 虞翻
- Li lue* 禮略 "Outline of the Ritual" by Jing Luan 景鸞, a study of divination techniques
- Li lun* 歷論 "Essay on the Calendar" by Jia Kui 賈逵
- Li sao* 離騷 of Qu Yuan 屈原, commentaries by Ban Gu 班固, by Jia Kui 賈逵 [both as Li sao jing zhangju 離騷經章句] and by Ma Rong 馬融
- Li shi* 隸勢, an essay on aspects of the "Clerical Style," by Zhong 鍾 [personal name unknown]
- Liangdu fu* 兩都賦 "Rhapsody on the Two Capitals" by Ban Gu 班固
- Lienü zhuan* 列女傳 "Biographies of Women;" commentary by Ma Rong 馬融 either to the work compiled by Liu Xiang 劉向 of Former Han or to the relevant chapter of the Han shu 漢書 of Ban Gu 班固 et al.
- Lieyi zhuan* 列異傳 "Chronicle of Strange Events" compiled by Cao Pi 曹丕
- Lingdi ji* 靈帝紀 by Liu Ai 劉艾
- Lingguang dian fu* 靈光殿賦 "Rhapsody on the Hall of Numinous Brilliance" by Wang Yanshou 王延壽
- Ling xian* 靈憲 "The Spiritual Constitution of the Universe" by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Lishi yaolu* 李氏藥錄 by Li Dangzhi 李當之
- Louke fa* 漏刻法, a manual on the clepsydra, by Yin Kui 殷旭/夔
- Louke jing* 漏刻經, on the clepsydra, by Huo Rong 霍融
- Lüli yi* 律曆意 "Treatise on Pitchpipes and the Calendar" by Cai Yong 蔡邕 and Liu Hong 劉洪
- Lun du fu* 論都賦 "Rhapsody on the Capitals" by Du Du 杜篤
- Lun heng* 論衡 "Discourses Weighed in the Balance" by Wang Chong 王充
- Lun jiu jun wei* 論舊君諱, an essay on the ancient use of taboo names, by Wang Lang 王朗 and Zhang Zhao 張昭
- Lun wen* 論文 "Essay on Literature" by Cao Pi 曹丕
- Luoshen fu* 洛神賦 "Rhapsody on the Goddess of the Luo River" by Cao Zhi 曹植
- Luoshu* 洛書 "The Book from the Luo River," a text of divination, see sub Yang Tong 楊統
- Lüshi chunqiu* 呂氏春秋, commentary by Gao You 高誘

- Meng fu* 夢賦 "Dream Rhapsody" by Wang Yanshou
- Mingshi lun* 明世論, on current affairs, by Du Du 杜篤
- Mouzi* 牟子 by Mou Rong 牟融
- Mouzi* 牟子 [not by Mou Rong], a Buddhist apologia attributed to a retired scholar-official of Cangwu in the second century AD [see Zürcher 59:13].
- Nanbei jiao guanmian ch'efu zhidu* 南北郊冠冕車服制度 "Regulations for the Caps, Crowns, Carriages and Robes for the Northern and Southern Sacrifices [to Heaven and to Earth]" by Liu Cang 劉蒼 and others
- Nandu fu* 南都賦 "Rhapsody on the Southern Capital" by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Nanyang wenxueguan zhi* 南陽文學官志 "Account of the Literary Office in Nanyang" by Cui Yuan 崔瑗
- Nei chan* 內讖 [apocrypha], commentary/explanation by Yang Tong 楊統
- Niaoqing zhan* 鳥情占, on prognostication by the appearance of birds, by Wang Qiao 王喬
- Nü jie* 女誡 "Precepts for Women" by Ban Zhao 班昭
- Nü jie* 女誡 "Precepts for Women" by Du Du 杜篤
- Nü jie* 女誡 "Precepts for Women" by Xun Shuang 荀爽
- Nü xun* 女訓 "Advice for women" by Cai Yong 蔡邕
- Nushe bifa* 弩射祕法, a textbook on the crossbow, by Liu Chong 劉寵
- Pang xi pian* 滂喜篇 by Jia Fang 賈魴/訪, a commentary to the calligraphy manual Cang jie 蒼頡, originally composed by the minister Li Si 李斯 of Qin
- Pei wang tonglun* 沛王通論 "Comprehensive Essays by the King of Pei" by Liu Fu 劉輔
- Poqun lun* 破羣論 "Discussion on Eliminating Factions" by Liu Liang/Cen 劉梁/岑
- Qi feng* 七諷 "Seven Incitements" by Fu Yi 傅毅
- Qi shuo* 七說 "The Seven Discussions" by Huan Lin 桓麟/麟 and Huan Bin 桓彬
- Qi tan* 七歎 "Seven Laments" by Li You 李尤
- Qi xu* 七序 "Seven Essays" by Liang Song 梁竦
- Qi yao lun* 七曜論 "The Seven Heavenly Bodies" by Liu Tao 劉陶
- Qi'ai shi* 七哀詩 "Poem of Seven Sorrows" by Wang Can 王粲
- Qianfu lun* 潛夫論 "Comments of a Recluse" by Wang Fu 王符
- Qiju zhu* 起居注 "Diary of Activity and Repose" for Emperor Ming, compiled under the auspices of the Lady Ma 馬, his widowed Empress and Dowager
- Qiping* 其平, on prognostication, by Yang You 楊由
- Renwu zhi* 人物志 "Record of Men and Things" by Liu Shao 劉邵
- Renxiao lun* 仁孝論 "Essay on Humanity and Filial Piety" by Yan Du 延篤
- Sanfu jiushi* 三輔舊事, an account of the region about Chang'an, by Wei Biao 韋彪
- Sanfu jueju* 三輔決錄 "Evaluative Records of the Three Adjuncts" by Zhao Qi 趙岐/歧
- Sanzhou lun* 三州論 "Essay on the Three Provinces" by Jiang Ji 蔣濟
- Shanghan lun* 傷寒論 "Dissertation on Typhoid Fever" by Zhang Ji 張機
- Shanyang xianxian zhuan* 山陽先賢傳 "Accounts of Worthy Men of the Past of Chenliu" by Zhongchang Tong 仲長統
- Shen Nong bencao jing* 神農本草經 pharmacopeia ascribed to Hua Tuo and Zhang Ji 張機, compiled by Wu Pu 吳普
- Shenjian* 申監 "Extended Reflections" by Xun Yue 荀悅
- Shenjue song* 神雀頌 "Hymn to the Sacred Birds" by Jia Kui 賈逵
- Shenqing fu* 申情賦 "Expressing my Feelings" by Ma Zhi 馬芝
- Shi ben* 世本, a treatise on government, by Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷
- Shi fa* 諡法, a study of posthumous titles, by Liu Xi 劉熙
- Shi hui* 釋誨 "Instruction Explained" by Cai Yong 蔡邕
- Shi ji* 史記 by Sima Qian 司馬遷, revised and extended by Yang Zhong 楊終
- Shi ming* 釋名 dictionary by Liu Xi 劉熙

- Shi ming* 釋名 dictionary by Liu Zhen 劉珍
- Shibi wen* 石壁文 by Fan Ying 樊英
- Shiwu lun* 世務論 "Essays on Affairs of the World" by He Wen 何汶
- Shiyao lun* 時要論 "Essay on the Needs of the Time" by Wang Ji 王基
- Shizu benji* 世祖本紀, annals of the reign of Emperor Guangwu, see Jianwu zhuji
- Shu ke* 屬科, administrative code of Shu-Han, compiled by Zhuge Liang 諸葛亮, Fa Zheng 法正, Li Yan 李嚴, Liu Ba 劉巴 and Yin Ji 尹籍
- Shuowen jiezi* 說文解字 dictionary by Xu Shen 許慎
- Shushu ji yi* 數術記遺, "Memoir on some Traditions of Mathematical Art," largely concerned with Taoism and divination, by Xu Yue 徐岳
- Si chou* 四愁 "Four Sorrows" poem by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Simin yueling* 四民月令 "Monthly Ordinances for the Four Categories of People" by Cui Shi 崔寔/實
- Siti shushi* 四體書勢 "Aspects of the Four Styles of Calligraphy" by Wei Ji 衛覬
- Sixuan fu* 思玄賦 "Contemplating the Cosmos" by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Sun Jian 孫堅 and Sun Ce 孫策, biographies by Zhang Hong 張紘
- Sunzi bingfa* 孫子[武]兵法 "The Art of War" ascribed to Sun Wu; commentaries by Cao Cao 曹操 and by Shen You 沈友
- Taiping jing* 太平經 see Gan Ji 干吉, Gong Chong 宮崇, Xiang Kai 襄楷
- Taiping qingling shu/dao* 太平清/青領書/道 see Gan Ji 干吉, Gong Chong 宮崇, Xiang Kai 襄楷
- Taixuan jing* 太玄經 "Classic of the Great Mystery" by Yang Xiong 楊雄 of Former Han; commentaries by Cui Yuan 崔瑗, by Hou Ba 侯芭, by Lu Ji 陸績, by Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷, by Zhang Heng 張衡 and by Zou Bin 鄒邠
- Tangzi* 唐子 by Tang Qiang 唐羌
- Tangzi* 唐子 by Tang Tan 唐檀
- Tangqi jing* 彈碁經, a treatise on a form of chess, by Liang Ji 梁冀
- Tongren lun* 金人論 "Discussion by the Metal Men" by Wang Jing 王景
- Han shu* 漢書: Treatise on the Heavens 天文志 and Introduction to the Table of Officials 百官公卿表 by Ma Xu 馬續
- Waiqi zhen* 外戚箴 "Exhortations to the Consort Clan" by Cui Qi 崔琦
- Wang Zhi* 王穉/稚, biography compiled by his disciples
- Wangming lun* 王命論 "Essay on the Mandate" by Ban Biao 班彪
- Wangzi* 王子 by Wang You, collated by Wang Huo 王護/獲
- Wanji lun* 萬機論 "Myriad Subtleties" by Jiang Ji 蔣濟
- Wei qingzi* 韋卿子 "The Book of Minister Wei," the collected works of Wei Biao 韋彪
- Wei zhi* 慰志 "Rhapsody of Regret" by Cui Zhuan 崔篆
- Weizi* 魏子 by Wei Lang 魏朗
- Wen shen* 問神 "Question to the Gods" by Zhou Jizhen 周季貞
- White Tiger Hall Discussions, see Bohu tong 白虎通
- Wujia yaoshuo zhangju* 五家要說章句 "Detailed Commentary to Major Points of the Five Classics" by Liu Zhuang 劉莊, Emperor Ming, and Huan Yu 桓郁 q.v.
- Wujing yiyi* 五經異義 "Different Meanings of the Five Classics" by Xu Shen 許慎
- Wushi bencao* 吳氏本草, a pharmacological work, by Wu Pu 吳普
- Wuxing zhangju* 五行章句, a detailed commentary on the school of the Five Powers, by Liu Zhuang 劉莊, Emperor Ming
- Wuxing zhi* 五行志 "Treatise on Portents/the Five Powers" by Dong Ba 董巴
- Wuyi zhi ge* 五噫之歌 "Five Exclamations" by Liang Hong 梁鴻
- Wu-Yue chunqiu* 吳越春秋 by Zhao Ye 趙曄, with a supplement 外記 by Zhang Xia 張暹

- Wuyue zhenxing tu* 五嶽真形圖 "Veritable Images of the Five Sacred Peaks," a set of mystical diagrams, also known as Wuyue tu 五岳圖; see Lu Nüsheng 魯女生, Feng Heng 封衡 [or Feng Junda 君達] and Zuo Ce 左慈
- Xiandi ji* 靈帝紀 by Liu Ai 劉艾
- Xiangsu ji* 鄉俗記 "Record of Local Customs [of Shu commandery]" by Zhao Ning 趙寧
- Xianshi fu* 顯士賦 "Revealing my Aspirations" by Feng Yan 馮衍
- Xiaoxue Hanguan pian* 小學漢官篇 "Han Offices Explained for Beginning Students" by Wang Long 王隆, with commentary by Hu Guang 胡廣
- Xidu fu* 西都賦 "Rhapsody on the Western Metropolis" by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Xin li* 新禮 "New Rituals" by Cao Bao 曹褒
- Xin lun* 新論 by Huan Tan 桓譚, commentary by Zou Bin 鄒邠: Jian lun 檢論
- Xin shu* 新書, the collected works of Xun Shuang 荀爽
- Xingli lun* 刑禮論 "Essay on Criminal Law and Ritual" by Liu Yi 劉廙 and Ding Yi 丁廙
- Xuan si* 玄思 by Zou Bin 鄒邠: a commentary to the Taixuan jing 太玄經 "Classic of the Great Mystery" by Yang Xiong 楊雄 of Former Han
- [Yang Tong] jiafa zhangju 楊統家法章句, a handbook and commentary to his school of thought, by Yang Tong
- Yangxing jing* 養性經, a Taoist treatise on cultivation of the spirit, by Wu Guang 巫光
- Yangxing shu* 養性書 "On Macrobiotics" by Wang Chong 王充
- Yaoyan* 要言 "Precepts" by Chen Rong 陳融
- Yi fa* 醫法, on medicine, by Ji Liao 蒯遼
- Yi* 意 treatises to Dongguan Hanji by Cai Yong 蔡邕
- Ying binnan* 應賓難 "Replies to Questions from a Guest" by Hou Jin 侯瑾
- Ying xian* 應閒 "Response [to Criticism] of my Idleness" by Zhang Heng 張衡
- Yingwu fu* 鸚鵡賦 "Parrot Rhapsody" by Ni Heng 禰衡
- Yingxiong ji* 英雄記 see Hanmo yingxiong ji 漢末英雄記 by Ying Shao 應劭
- Yishi* 弈勢, a treatise on the art of chess, by Ying Chang 應瑒
- Yiwu zhi* 異物志, a general collectanea of strange matters, by Yang Fu 楊孚 [and see Jiaozhou yiwu zhi]
- Yuanyi huaide geshi* 遠夷懷德歌詩 "Songs of the Distant Barbarians Embracing the Virtue [of Han]" presented by the Zuodu 苻都 people [see sub Tangzou 唐菽]
- Yuanyi lede geshi* 遠夷樂德歌詩 "Songs of the Distant Barbarians Delighting in the Virtue [of Han]" presented by the Zuodu people [see sub Tangzou]
- Yuanyi mude geshi* 遠夷慕德歌詩 "Songs of the Distant Barbarians Longing for the Virtue [of Han]" presented by the Zuodu people [see sub Tangzou]
- Yue jue shu* 越絕書, a historical gazetteer, by Yuan Kang 袁康? or by Zhao Ye 趙曄? or by other writers⁹
- Yueling zhangju* 月令章句, commentary to an ancient calendrical text, by Jing Luan 景鸞
- Yue niu lu* 越絕錄, a historical work, by Wu Jungao 吳君高
- Yufu zhi* 輿服志 "Treatise on Carriages and Robes" by Dong Ba 董巴
- Yukou lun* 禦寇論 "Discussion on How to Resist the Insurgents" by Zhao Qi 趙岐/歧
- Yuntian tu* 憚天圖, a chart of the heavens, by Lu Ji 陸績
- Zeng Boma wang Biao* 曾白馬王彪 poem "To Cao Biao, King of Boma" by Cao Zhi 曹植
- Zhanghua fu* 章華賦 "Rhapsody on the Zhanghua Pavilion" by Bian Rang 邊讓
- Zhanguo ce* 戰國策, commentary by Gao You 高誘
- Zhen* 箴 "Exhortations" compiled by Yang Xiong 楊雄 of Former Han, supplemented by Cui Yin 崔駰, Cui Yuan 崔瑗 and Liu Tao 劉陶
- Zhen ling* 箴銘 "Admonitions Engraved in Stone" by Yuan Wenshu 袁文術
- Zheng lun* 政論 "An Essay on Government" by Cui Shi 崔寔/實

⁹ See Texts: 490-493 [Scheussler and Loewe].

Zheng lun 政論 "An Essay on Government" by Liu Yi 劉廙

Zheng wu 政務 "On Government" by Wang Chong 王充

Zheng zhi 鄭志, on questions in the classics, by Zheng Xuan 鄭玄, compiled by his students

Zhenmai fa 診脉法, a treatise on medicine, by the Old Man of the Fu River 涪翁老父

Zhong lun 中論 "Discussions of the Mean" by Xu Gan 徐幹

Zhou bei suan jing 周髀算經 "The Arithmetical Classic of the Gnomon and the Circular Paths of Heaven;"
commentary by Zhao Junqing 趙君卿 q.v.

Zhuan shi 篆勢, an essay on aspects of the traditional Seal Script, by Cai Yong 蔡邕

Zhude fu 追德賦 "Rhapsody of Virtue Remembered" by Liu Hong 劉宏, Emperor Ling

GENERAL INDEX

This index has two main purposes: first to serve as an introduction to particular topics and second to supply characters for special terms and smaller places that are not dealt with in the sections above on administrative structure and official geography. A full index would be cumbersome and unwieldy, and I seek only to offer a guide, not a concordance. I therefore limit the citations as follows:

- Books and commentaries are generally dealt with in the list of Literary and Scholarly Works, but a few special cases are indexed here.
- Territories listed in the Provinces and Commandery Units of Later Han are normally cited only by the page of that table, shown in italics. Some special cases, notably commanderies established during the time of civil war during the last years of the dynasty, have more detailed citations.
- Most official titles are discussed in the survey of the Administrative Structure, to which page references are given in italics. Further citations are provided for unusual offices or those of special interest.

- | | | |
|---|--|---|
| abdication, of Emperor Xian of Han, 43, 45, 70, 75, 155, 211, 355, 348, 352, 375, 411, 541, 555, 575, 578, 801, 828, 839, 859, 897, 901, 945, 1086
other, 158, 529, 542, 1010 | 40, 44, 49, 50, 229-30, 247, 266, 381-82, 484, 504, 541, 768, 900, 905, 943, 1002, 1009-10, 1013, 1138, 1149, 1165 between lineages, 50, 70, 162, 708, 1012, 1164 by women, 22, 47, 121, 247, 279
refused, 118, 919 | 濃校尉, 439, 738
Commandant in Charge 宜禾都尉, 439
Commissioner 典農中郎將, 716, 738, 936, 1026, 1111, 1222 |
| Academician 博士, 1222, 1232, and see Imperial University and Libationer | Adviser to the Army 參軍事, 950, 1234 | Ailao 哀牢 people, 405, 497, 562, 606, 611, 632, 838, 889, 968, 1120, 1121 |
| acupuncture, 87, 195, 217, 292, 332, 406, 610, 680, 915, and see medicine | Agricultural colonies 屯田 [also as military colonies, military agricultural colonies, farming colonies] on external frontiers and in the Western Regions, 1, 8, 23, 41, 126, 131, 180, 190, 234, 296, 321, 457, 476, 614, 654, 726, 1109 within China, 28, 32, 36, 37, 63, 272, 293, 297, 322, 324, 426, 463, 505, 531, 622, 716, 750, 773, 800, 894, 932, 1007, 1026, 1038, 1159 | altars, imperial:
Altar, Northern 北郊 [Altar of Earth], 40, 460, 565, 613
Altar, Southern 南郊 [Altar of Heaven], 40, 179, 209, 270, 460, 565, 613, 898, 1108
Altar for Rain 雩場, 565
[Five] Suburban Altars, 五郊祀, 30, 40, 151, 460, 608, 613 |
| Adjuncts, the Three 三輔, 1103, and see Jingzhao, Youfufeng and Zuopingyi
Commandant of the Adjunct Capital Region, 京輔都尉, 1092 | Agriculture, Colonel in Charge 典 | Anding 安定 commandery, 1207 |
| Adjutant, 626, 714, and see Northern Army | Agricultural Colonies, Commandant 屯田都尉, 28, 152, 716, 1026 | Andun 安敦 [emperor of Rome], 1, 600 |
| Administrator 太守 1216, 1228 | Agriculture, Colonel in Charge 典 | Anling 安陵 in Youfufeng, 317, 656 |
| adoption, 41, 43, 47, 162, 195, 300, 329, 448, 936, 1182
by eunuchs, 35, 48, 88, 214, 230, 242, 244, 316, 387, 475, 533, 574, 766, 772, 776, 783-84, 818, 827, 905, 943, 948, 1030, 1045, 1122, 1125, 1131, 1181 | Agriculture, Colonel in Charge 典 | Anping 安平 commandery/kingdom, 105, 430, 1055, 1059, 1115, 1165, 1197 |
| maintaining lineage/succession, | Agriculture, Colonel in Charge 典 | Anxi 安息 state [Parthia], 239, 663 |
| | Agriculture, Colonel in Charge 典 | Anyang 安陽 in Runan, Princess of, 32, 930 |

- Anyi 安邑 in Hedong, 73, 87, 133, 195, 198, 302, 523, 555, 569, 822, 839
- Anzhong 安衆 in Nanyang, 487, 493, 567, 750
- Ao Granary 敖倉 in Henan, 70, 126, 260, 317, 383, 472, 532, 536, 605
- apocryphal texts 讖緯, 33, 40, 84, 194, 204, 207, 318, 338, 346, 367, 394, 439, 460, 477, 498, 504, 565, 574, 701, 756, 812, 825, 854, 922, 947, 960, 965, 979, 1028, 1039, 1049-50, 1126, 1127, and see divination
- Archers Who Shoot at a Sound 射聲 Regiment, 1234
- Archery ceremony, see Great Archery
- Area Commander 都督, 50, 63, 92, 185, 211, 218, 313, 410, 411, 463, 623, 624, 626, 634, 663, 857, 866, 883, 996, 1018, 1048, 1058, 1064, 1111, 1164, 1235, and see Laixiang
- armillary sphere, 229, 382, 617, 970, 1050
- Arsenal 武庫 at Luoyang, 656
- Art of War* 兵法 ascribed to Sima Rangju 司馬穰苴, 215, 248
- Art of War* 兵法 ascribed to Sunzi 孫子 [Sun Wu 武], 35, 38, 223, 731
- Ascending the Imperial Tombs 上陵 ceremony, 30
- Assistant of a commandery 丞, 1228
- Assistant of a county 丞, 1230
- Assistant Officer 從事 in a province, 1228
- astronomy/astrology, 9, 29, 187, 190, 209, 226, 233, 242, 403, 415, 464, 526, 584, 617, 654, 704, 721, 776, 777, 819, 822, 866, 886, 942, 952, 960, 964, 966, 979, 1027, 1101, 1147, 1180
- Astronomer, Court 太史令, 1222, and Bureau of Astronomy, 78, 109, 222, 228, 246, 292, 304, 320, 358, 382, 454, 475, 508, 726, 743, 778, 814, 824, 899, 917, 918, 920, 935, 970, 1046, 1049-50, 1071, 1078, 1174, 1176, 1179, and see calendar and Moon Office and Spiritual Terrace
- Attendant at the Yellow Gates 小黃門, 1218
- Attendant Officer 別駕從事 in a province, 1228
- auspicious grain 嘉禾, 616, 707, 960
- Authority, Staff of 節, 1227-28, 1235
- Authority on Ancient Matters 掌古, 1232
- Ba 巴 commandery, 1205
- Badong 巴東 commandery, 1205
- Bailang shan 白狼山, see White Wolf Mountain
- Banshun 板楯 people, 46, 86, 191, 216, 237, 308, 437, 515, 691, 891, 1015, 1063, 1100, 1107
- Bao 保, see Mo and Bao
- Baoye Road 褒斜道, 59, 97, 230, 581, 818, 832, 860, 953, 1105, 1106, 1174
- Baxi 巴西 commandery, 1205
- Bearer of the Mace 執金吾, 1225
- Beauty 美人 [imperial concubine], 1217
- Beginning of Spring 立春 festival, 310
- Beidi 北地 commandery, 1208
- Beihai 北海 commandery/kingdom, 1201
- Beimang 北芒 hills, 112, 288
- Beiping 北平 in Zhongshan, 830, 1090
- Bian River/Canal 卞河/水, 37, 196, 317, 606, 819, 835, 1011
- Bing province 并州, 1209
- Biyang 比陽 county in Nanyang, Princess, 468
- Biyong* 辟雍, see Circular Moat
- Black Mountain 黑山 bandits, 23, 24, 237, 271, 281, 357, 399, 409, 516, 545, 624, 634, 697, 708, 745, 762, 772, 788, 808, 864, 878, 949, 994, 1010, 1020, 1062, 1064, 1083, 1162, 1185
- Bobo 白波 bandits, 23, 280, 302, 325, 419, 516, 679, 712, 949, 1020, 1104
- Bohai 勃海 commandery, 1198
- Boling 博陵 commandery/kingdom, 1197
- Boma 白馬 hills in Henei, bandits, 70
- Boma 白馬 in Dong commandery, 440; King [under Wei], 35, 366
- Book of Filial Piety*, moral influence, 82, 127, 208, 754, 824, 888
- Boyang 鄱陽, see Poyang
- brevet magistrate 守令/長, see magistrate
- Bright Hall 明堂, 40, 337, 460, 565, 608, 613, 1039, 1108, 1169
- Bronze Horse 銅馬 bandits, 70, 112, 133, 145, 225, 250, 348-49, 560, 726, 766, 820, 868, 971, 1019
- Buddha 浮圖/浮屠/Buddhism, 120, 579, 602, 607, 887, 1028, 1158-59, 1173
- Bureau 曹, 1221, 1226, 1229, 1230, 1231
for All Purposes in a commandery 五官曹, 1229
- Buwei 不韋 in Yizhou commandery [later in Yongchang], 542
- cadet gentleman 郎, 1222, 1230
three [civilian] corps 三署, 1222
- Caiyang 蔡陽 in Nanyang, 487, 490, 519, 537, 539, 558, 567, 594
- calendar, 103, 146, 148, 167, 315,

- 368, 384, 578, 617, 1112, 1126, 1127, 1128-29
 under Emperor Guangwu, 911, 1157
 under Emperor Ming, 13, 152, 383, 946, 1066, 1074 under Emperor Zhang, 21, 367, 408, 410-11, 462, 498, 503, 761, 850, 917, 920, 925, 940, 1066 under Emperor He, 925, 1175-76 under Emperor An, 50, 84, 108, 344, 416, 447, 524, 718, 740, 1049, 1150 under Emperor Shun, 20, 995, 1177-78
 under Emperor Ling, 30, 68, 215, 222, 292, 385, 507, 510, 1175, 1178 under Wei, 75, 246, 304, 772, 918 under Wu, 31-32, 388, 510
 calligraphy, 29, 48, 71, 101, 104, 175, 176, 274, 292, 306, 325, 351, 354, 364, 453, 534, 632, 633, 683, 724, 741, 756, 794, 808, 851, 852, 973, 1036, 1052, 1090, 1091, 1109, 1114, 1133, 1135, 1156, 1185
 under Emperor Ling, 366, 376, 448, 453, 500, 501, 512, 955, 1019 canal works, 37, 109, 130, 156, 184, 200, 310, 496, 660, 801, 807, 825, 834, 999, and see water control, also sub
 Bian, Hutuo, Junyi, Pinglu, Quanzhou, Yang and Vast Canals
 Cangwu 蒼梧 commandery, 1213
 Canlang 參狼, see Shenlang tribe of the Qiang
 Cap of Manhood, to take 加元服/capping 冠禮, 34, 92, 98, 123, 177, 450, 454, 456, 460, 474, 498, 513, 533, 555, 572, 581, 586, 589, 591, 596-97, 798, 1006, 1069, 1072, 1140
 Capital Granary 京師倉 in Hongnong, 132, 288, 295, 568, 733, 829, 835, 997
 Capital Hostel 都亭 at Luoyang, 169-70
 Captain 候, 1234-35
 Cavalier Attendant 散騎侍郎, 1225
 Cavalier Regular Attendant 散騎常侍, 1225
 Celestial Masters 天師 [Taoist], 1051, 1065, and see the biography of Zhang Lu
 Censorate [Imperial Clerks], 1222, 1224, 1225, 1227
 Chancellor, Imperial 丞相, 37, 1221
 Chancellor of State 相國, 158, 361, 1099, 1135
 Chancellor 相 of a county marquisate, 1220
 Chancellor 相 of a kingdom, 1220
 Chang River 長水 Regiment, 40, 308, 472, 716, 1234
 Chang Slope 長阪 in Nan commandery, 37, 40, 481, 862, 911, 1043, 1114
 Chang'an 長安 in Jingzhao, saepe
 Chang'an, Lady of 長安君, 918
 Changcheng 昌城 in Julu, 552, 556, 595
 Changguang 長廣 commandery, 312
 Changle Palace [Prolonged Joy] 長樂宮, 161, 812, 1217
 Coachman 長樂太僕, 10, 1218
 Commandant of the Guards 長樂衛尉, 43, 48, 81, 166, 323, 616, 805, 849, 850, 897, 982, 1044, 1109, 1218
 Steward 長樂少府, 283, 340, 347, 437, 449, 470, 473, 912, 1097, 1155, 1218
 Changling 長陵 in Youfufeng [later in Jingzhao], 268, 841
 Changlü 昌慮 in Donghai [as a commandery], 978
 Changping Slope 長平阪, 301, 650
 Changqiu Palace [Prolonged Autumn] 長秋宮, 1217, and see Grand Prolonger of Autumn
 Changsha 長沙 commandery/kingdom, 1203
 Changshan 常山 commandery/kingdom, 1197
 Changshan Pass 常山關, 870
 Changshe 長社 in Yingchuan, Princess, 262, 468
 Changyi 昌邑 in Shanyang, 7, 768, 959
 Chaoge 朝歌 in Henei, 679, 998-99
 Chen 陳 commandery/kingdom, 1196
 Chencang 陳倉 in Youfufeng, 91, 157, 225, 301, 308, 356, 624, 630, 814, 1101
 Cheng'an 成安 in Yingchuan, Princess, 554
 Chengdu 成都 in Shu commandery, saepe
 Chenggao 成臯 in Henan, 701, 722
 Chengyang 城陽 commandery/kingdom, 261, 771, 1199, 1200
 Chengyang 城陽 in Langye, 570
 Chengyang 成陽 in Jiying, 277, 540, 960, 979, 1133-34
 Chenliu 陳留 commandery, 1198
 Chief Clerk 長史
 in a commandery, 1228
 in a kingdom, 1229
 to a general, 1234
 see also sub Western Regions
 Chief Clerk in Command of Troops 將兵長史, 5, 24, 80, 115, 790, 791, 812, 866, 1234
 Chief Controller 都督, 1235, and see Area Commander chief district 都鄉, 1220
 Chief General 大將軍, 1233 [and see General-in-Chief] of Agile Cavalry 驃騎大將軍,

- 180, 383, 1177
Who Supports Han 輔漢大將軍, 1035
chief village 都亭, 1220
Chongling 春陵 in Nanyang, 435, 487, 490, 519, 539, 558, 567, 594-95, 1167
Chosen Woman 采女 [imperial concubine], 1217
Chu 楚 commandery/kingdom, 1200
Chu ci 楚辭 "The Songs of the South," 635, 838
Chuge, see Xiuchuge 休著/屠各
Chuihui 垂惠 in Pei, 379, 584, 620, 651, 760, 800, 1142-43, 1148
Circular Moat, Hall 辟雍 [Bi-yong], 230, 337, 340, 438, 460, 477, 565, 571, 722, 806, 1039, 1108, 1164, and see Great Archery and Serving the Aged clepsydra, 358, 411, 743, 850, 978, 1050
Coach-houses for the imperial equipage, Prefect 車府令, 906
Coachman 太僕 at a royal court, 373, see also Minister Coachman and sub Palace of Perpetual Peace coinage/currency, 145, 158, 270, 471, 548, 563, 659, 750, 1160
Collator 校書 in an imperial library, 6, 114, 174, 549, 648, 669, 838
Colonel 校尉, 1234
Northern Army 北軍校尉, 1234
Western Garden 西園校尉, 1234
see also sub Western Regions
Colonel of the City Gates 城門校尉, 1125 colonies 屯田, see agricultural colonies Commandant of a commandery 都尉, 1228-29 of a county 尉, 1230
of a Dependent State 屬國都尉, 1229
Commandant of Attendant Cavalry 鮪馬都尉, 1223
Commandant of Cavalry 騎都尉, 1223
Commandant of the Capital 中尉 in a kingdom, 1229
Commandant of the Equipage 奉車都尉, 1223 commandery 郡, 1228
Commission of Eight (in 142), 181, 221, 294, 339, 413, 450, 473, 475, 631, 1045, 1145, 1150, 1227
Commissioner in Embroidered Garments 繡衣直指, 57
Commissioner in Plain Clothes 微服使者, 57, 415
Commissioner to the [Northern] Frontier 安邊節使, 890 company in a field army 曲, 1235 company in a garrison position 候官, 1235
Consultant 議郎, 1223
Controller 督, 1235
convict 徒, 1234
convict with sentence commuted 弛刑, 1234
Copper Bird Terrace 銅雀臺 at Ye city, 38, 51
Counsellor, Attendant 中散大夫, 1223
Counsellor, Household 光祿大夫, 1223
Counsellor, Palace 太中大夫, 1223
Counsellor Remonstrant 諫議大夫, 1223
Counsellor, Royal 御侍大夫 under Wei, 333, and see Imperial Counsellor county 縣, 1220, 1226, 1230
Court Architect 將作大匠, 1225
Court Astronomer 太史令, see sub astronomy
Court Musician 太樂令, see sub music
Court Physician 太醫令, 126, 187, 219, 292, 320, 360, 489, 696, 740, 944, 1131, 1224 and see medicine
Court Provisioner 太官令, 83, 247, 737, 1034, 1224 court, take part in the affairs of/ attend 臨朝 [regent Dowager], 122-23, 136
Criminals, Officer for 賊曹 in a commandery, 55, 89, 342, 873, 1069
Dai 代 commandery, 1211
Daifang 帶方 commandery, 268, 1036
Dali Lake 大里湖 in Yongchang, 405, 606, 611, 632, 838, 1120
Daling River 大凌河, 37, 125, 590, 781
Dan'er 僮耳 people, 607, 1043
Dangxiang 當鄉 in Runan, 402
Danyang 丹陽 commandery, 1204
non-Chinese of the hills, see Shanyue 山越
Daqin 大秦 [Roman Empire], 1, 125, 239, 600, 990
Datong 大彤 bandits, 208, 365, 1035, 1135
Dayuan 大宛 [Ferghana], 432, 704, 885, 969
Dependent State 屬國, 1229
Di 氏 people, 390, 416, 639, 659, 685, 700, 710, 761, 855, 872, 969, 1056, 1164
White Horse 白馬 tribe, 269, 402
Xingguo 興國 tribe, 1
Di 箒 and Xia 袷 sacrifices, 1039
Dian Lake 滇湖, 811
Didao 狄道 in Longxi, 248
Dingjun Mountain 定軍山, battle (219), 38, 185, 194, 283, 352, 482, 829, 884-85, 1048, 1113
Dingling 丁零 people, 56
Dingtao 定陶 in Jiyin, 250, 580
Dingxi 丁奚 in Beidi, 177-78, 257, 355, 731, 747, 1133

- Dingxiang 定襄 commandery, 1210
- Director 正 in the Ministry of Justice, 74, 83, 281
- Director of the Army 軍正, 800
- Director of Retainers 司隸校尉, 1226, 1228
- Disrespect 不敬, 13, 30-31, 79, 346, 529, 618, 945, 956, 1047, 1131
- district 鄉, 1220, 1230
- divination and fortune-telling, 94, 99, 150, 154, 198, 207, 221, 227, 233, 265-66, 269, 281, 304, 314, 315, 327, 339, 375, 384, 394, 403, 412, 423, 431, 444, 464, 491, 551, 618, 634, 670, 675, 679, 688, 703, 713, 734, 754, 759, 766, 771, 806, 807, 808, 819, 866, 901, 903, 917, 918, 934, 977, 998, 1027, 1050, 1131, 1149, and see apocrypha, astronomy/astrology, dreams; by birds, 829, 964 by diagrams and numbers, 105, 217, 265, 414, 421, 584, 818, 917, 960, 1096, 1119 by oracle bones, 454, 518, 526, 907 by wind/weather, 191, 207, 209, 403, 404, 405, 464, 708, 721, 740, 866, 872, 895, 964, 1027, 1032, 1037, 1049, 1127
- Dodder Park 菟苑 at Luoyang, 451
- Dong 東 commandery, 1198
- Dong'a 東阿 in Dong commandery, 92, 1026
- Dong'an 東安 in Langye [as a commandery], 566, 712, 835
- Dongguan 東莞 in Donghai [as a commandery], 978
- Donghai 東海 commandery/kingdom, 1200
- Donglai 東來 commandery, 1202
- Dongping 東平 commandery/kingdom, 1199
- Dongwuyang 東武陽 in Dong commandery, 1025
- Dongye 東冶 in Kuaiji, 765, 823, 1122
- Dongzhou Troops 東州兵, 573, 587, 1106
- Dowager 皇太后, 1216-18
- dreams, 20, 78, 93, 121, 187, 203, 237, 269, 282, 331, 333, 403, 438, 444, 491, 527, 545, 554, 593, 635, 694, 751, 755, 763, 798, 838, 863-64, 886, 915, 916, 944, 970-72, 1047, 1068, 1074, 1115, 1128, 1146, 1150
- Drying House 暴室, see prisons
- Duke 公, see under fiefs
- Duke Who Continues and Honours the Yin 殷紹嘉公, 389
- Dukes 公, see Excellencies
- Duling 杜陵 in Jingzhao, 796, 841, 931
- Dunhuang 敦煌 commandery, 1208, Administrator, 1236
- Dunrenyi 敦忍乙 people, 676
- E 鄂 in Jiangxia:, see Wuchang
- Eastern Garden 東園, 524, 1224
- Eastern Pavilion 東觀 library, 1225
- education, 101, 467, 670, 707, 754, 823, 925, 986, 1136, 1222, 1232 Assistant Officer for Education 勸學從事/師友從事 in a province, 704, 980, 986, 1075, 1147 Education Officer/ Literary Scholar in a commandery 文學[掾], 77, 176, 263, 858, 863, 876, 955, 964; offices 學官, 543, 619, 863; Senior Officer 文學祭酒, 1019 Education, Colonel for 典學校尉 in Shu-Han, 401 see also Book of Filial Piety
- Elite Cavalry 越騎 Regiment, 1234
- Emissary to the Xiongnu 使匈奴 中郎將, 1235
- Emperor 皇帝, 1216
- Empress 皇后, 1217
- Empty City stratagem 空城計, 863, 1115, 1173
- Enclosure of the Left/Right, Prefect 左/右校令, 1225
- epidemics, see sickness
- Er ya* 爾雅 dictionary, 173, 367, 433
- Examiner 校事 [censorial officer under Cao Cao], 243, 617, 1106
- Excellencies, the Three 三公, 1221, 1222, 1226-27, 1231
- Excellency over the Masses 司徒/Grand Excellency over the Masses, 1221
- Excellency of Works 司空/Grand Excellency of Works, 1221
- Exceptional Quality 尤異 [of administration], 83, 151, 184, 217, 230, 583, 833, 1053, and see sub nomination
- faction 部黨, accusations, 31-32, 107, 184, 206, 214, 248, 320, 334, 349, 357, 378, 533, 556, 602, 766, 805, 831, 840, 892, 894-95, 939, 958, 967, 1054, and see sub proscription
- Fan 范 in Dong commandery, 207
- Fan 樊 in Nanyang, siege (219), 38, 47, 156, 308, 483, 663, 686, 689, 905, 982, 997, 1158
- Fangling 房陵 commandery, 114, 399, 504, 667, 887
- Fanting Mountain 凡亭山, battle (169), 189
- farming, see agriculture
- Feathered Forest guards 羽林郎, 1223, 1232-33 General of the Household 中郎將, 1222-23 Inspector of the Left 羽林左監, 335
- Fen River 汾水, 293, 357, 368, 712, 1020

- Feng and Shan 封禪 sacrifices, 134, 214, 285, 337, 460, 565, 641, 968, 1039, 1108
- Fengyi Mountain 逢義山, battle (168), 189
- festivals of Fishes and Dragons 魚龍 and the Manyan 曼延 monster, 126
- First Class 高第, 1231, and see Number One
- Five Banners 五幡 (Wufan) bandits, 224, 651, 868
- Five Dou of Rice sect 五斗米道 or Rice Sect or Rice Rebels 米賊, 1066, and see the biography of Zhang Lu
- Five Streams 五溪/濞溪/武溪 people, 258, 542, 660, also as Five Gorges
- Five Towers 五樓 (Wulou) bandits, 224, 868, 971, 1077, 1173
- Five-fold Experienced 五更, 214, 337, 608, 1153
- Flying Fox Road 飛狐道, 180, 800
- Footsoldiers 步兵 Regiment, 1234
- Foreman Clerk 令史, 142, 666, 1121, 1130, 1226, 1227
- Four Types of Virtuous Conduct 四行, 201, 493, 876
- Fu River 涪水, 54, 87, 267, 270, 292, 631, 680, 841, 932, 961, 1023
- Fu 涪 in Guanghan, 875, 1174
- Fucheng 父城 in Yingchuan, 223, 672
- Fuchun 富春 in Wu, 313, 330, 769, 994, 1032
- Fufeng 扶風, see Youfufeng
- Fuhan 枹漢 in Longxi, 753-54
- Fuling 阜陵 in Jiujiang, King, 485, 493, 500, 503, 518, 544, 550, 571
- Funan 扶南 state, 626
- Fuping 富平 in Beidi, battle (117), 124, 652, 719
- Fuping 富平 in Pingyuan, bandits, 236, 261, 909
- Fuyang 復陽 in Nanyang, 904, 1167
- Fuyu 夫餘 people, 125, 237, 263, 271, 581, 600, 763, 861, 971
- Gan River 贛水 in Yuzhang, 795, 1046
- Ganling 甘陵 commandery/kingdom, 1198
- Ganyu 贛榆 in Langye, 71, 153, 689
- Gaocheng 高城 in Bohai, Princess, 33
- Gaogouli 高句驪 people, 23-24, 26, 84, 108, 125, 210, 217, 254, 257, 263, 268, 385, 581, 590, 611, 677, 702, 763, 861, 970-71, 988, 1029, 1036, 1171
- Gaoliang 高涼/高梁 commandery, 1213
- Gaoliu 高柳 in Dai commandery, 369, 869
- Gaomi 高密 commandery/kingdom, 1202
- Gaoping 高平 in Shanyang, Princess, 229, 468
- Gaoxing 高興 commandery, 1213
- Gaoyi 高邑 in Changshan, 560
- Garden of the Shining Dragon 濯龍園, 599, 602
- Garrison Cavalry 屯騎 Regiment, 1234
- Gates for Official Carriages, Prefect of the Majors 公車 [門]司馬令, 177, 892, 1001, 1049, 1154, 1223
- Gate of the Vast Capital 鴻都門 at Luoyang, 40, 67, 105, 146, 394, 400, 438, 551, 634, 740, 902, 922, 1019, 1057, 1105, 1119, 1155
- School 鴻都門學, 30, 376, 500, 512-13, 947, 955, 958, 1019, 1233
- General 將軍, 1233
- of Agile Cavalry 驃騎將軍, 143, 157, 176, 191, 356, 489, 531, 639, 1086, 1150, 1233
- of Chariots and Cavalry 車騎將軍, 1233
- Controller and Protector 都護將軍, 365
- of the Guards 衛將軍, 1233
- on the Left 左將軍, 1233
- on the Liao 度遼將軍, 606, 1233, 1235, Acting 行, 874, 1235
- New Beginning (genshi) 更始將軍, 567
- of the Rear 後將軍, 1233
- on the Right 右將軍, 1233
- of Towered Ships 樓舟將軍, 191
- of the Van 前將軍, 1233
- Who Detests the Xin Dynasty 厭新將軍, 532
- Who Exterminates the Caitiffs 討虜將軍, 772
- Who Exterminates Rebels 討逆將軍, 765, 1233
- Who is Firm and Majestic 武威將軍, 542, 1233
- Who Maintains the South in Peace 鎮南將軍, 486, 1166
- Who Smashes the Caitiffs 破虜將軍, 769
- Who Subdues the West 征西將軍, 249, 1233
- Who Supports Han 輔漢將軍, 494, 997
- Who Supports the State 輔國將軍, 233
- General-in-Chief 大將軍, 1217, 1233, and see Chief General
- General of the Household 中郎將, 1222
- for All Purposes 五官中郎將, 1222
- of the Left 左中郎將, 1222
- of the Right 右中郎將, 1222
- see also Feathered Forest and Rapid as Tigers guards
- General of the Household Manager of the Army 掌軍中郎將, 150

- General of the Household
Protector of the Xiongnu 護匈奴中郎將, 1053, and see Emissary
- Gong 共 in Henei, Princess, 492
- Gong'an 公安 in Nan commandery, 481, 588, 738
- Governor 牧 of a province, 1228
- grain policy/price control, 472, 536, 605, and see monopolies
- Ever-Full Granary 常滿倉, 472, 605
- Ever-Normal Granaries 常平倉, 472
- Office for Price Adjustment and Stabilisation, 均輸官, 472, 536, 634
- granaries, official
- commandery office 倉曹, 106
 - county granary, 980
 - Great Granary 太倉 at Luoyang, 605, 705, 777, 880, 1106, see also Ao Granary and Capital Granary
- granaries open in time of distress, 126, 144, 183, 209, 259, 300, 316, 475, 592, 625, 762
- Grand Chief Commandant for Han 漢大都尉 [non-Chinese], 139, 990, and see Western Regions
- Grand Commandant 太尉, 1221
- Grand Excellency over the Masses 大司徒, 1221, and see Excellency over the Masses
- Grand Excellency of Works 大司空, 1221, and see Excellency of Works
- Grand Marshal 大司馬, 47, 72, 85, 191, 210, 264, 267, 272, 383, 414, 418, 438, 495, 531, 550, 559, 563-64, 568, 579, 585, 626, 627, 739, 760, 777, 799, 868, 894, 909, 932, 961, 983, 1084, 1101, 1108, 1153, 1166-68, 1171, 1221, and see Grand Commandant and the biography of Wu Han;
- Grand Marshal of the Van 前大司馬, 495
- Grand Master 太師, 158, 821-22, 920, 1162,
- Grand Minister of Agriculture 大司農, see Minister of Finance
- Grand Prolonger of Autumn 大長秋, 1217, and see Changqiu Palace
- Grand Tutor 太傅, see sub Tutor
- Great Archery 大射 ceremony, 40, 244, 337, 608, 613, 1069, 1164
- Great Exorcism 大讎, 126
- Great Peace, Book of* 太平經, 238
- Great Peace, Way of 太平道, 514-15, 1058 and see the biography of Zhang Jue
- Great Refractoriness 大逆, 137, 393, 579, 1131
- Green Calf 青犢 bandits, 13, 260, 317, 365, 766, 868, 1019
- Gu River 穀水, 825, and see Stone Bridge
- Guandu 官度 in Henan, battle (200), 37, 42, 98, 243, 290, 376, 386, 631, 716, 730, 763, 884, 905, 928, 996, 1011, 1018, 1048, 1105
- Guangchuan 廣川 kingdom, 1198
- Guang'e 廣阿 in Julu, 255, 382, 397, 559
- Guanghan 廣漢 commandery, 1205
- Guanghan 廣漢 in Guanghan, 932, 1023
- Guanghan Dependent State 廣漢屬國, 1206
- Guangle 廣樂 in Liang, 317, 580, 760, 869, 871, 1142
- Guangling 廣陵 commandery/kingdom, 1200
- Guangping 廣平 commandery/kingdom, 180, 553, 744, 868, 1197
- Guangyang 廣陽 commandery/kingdom, 1211
- Guangzong 廣宗 kingdom, 1197
- Guanjun 冠軍 in Nanyang, Princess, 517
- Guantao 館陶 in Wei, Princess, 493
- Guardian of Honesty 司直, 179, 236, 656, 824, 920
- Guisai 媯塞 state, 745
- Guiyang 桂陽 commandery, 1203
- Guling 固陵 commandery, 683
- Gumo 姑墨 state, 5-6, 8, 23-24, 457
- Hall of All-Embracing Brightness 宣名殿 library, 608, 1225
- Hall of the Established Beginning 建始殿, 761
- Hall of Virtuous Light 德陽殿, 338, 765
- Han Feizi 韓非子, 206, 549, 1151
- Han 韓 people, see Mahan 馬韓
- Han'an 漢安 commandery, 1195
- Hanchang 漢昌 commandery, 621, 628
- Handan 邯鄲 in Zhao, 111, 118, 184, 250, 260, 365, 386, 419, 530, 559-60, 696, 800, 823, 868, 893, 1036, 1062, 1157
- Hangu Pass 函谷關 in Hongnong, 197-98, 800, 981
- Hanning 漢寧 commandery, 1205
- Hanshou 漢壽 in Wuling, 830
- Hanshou Village, Marquis 漢壽亭侯 [Guan Yu], 277
- Hanxing 漢興 commandery, 1195
- Hanyang 漢陽 commandery, 1207
- Hanzhong 漢中 commandery/kingdom, 1204
- He 郾 in Changshan, 560
- Headquarters Officer 治中從事 in a province, 61, 82, 152, 331, 348, 419, 609, 695, 730, 806, 823, 828, 831, 951, 1038, 1155, 1228
- Hedong 河東 commandery, 1194
- Hefei 合肥 in Jiujiang, 37, 79, 239, 273, 313, 319, 331, 375, 377, 410, 467, 505, 628, 683, 692, 754, 773, 777, 789, 795, 861, 910, 923, 946, 973, 1052, 1064, 1079

- Heir 太子, 1216
- Hejian 河間 commandery/kingdom, 1197
- Henan 河南 commandery, 1194
Intendant 河南尹, 1224
- Henei 河內 commandery, 1194
- Hengnong 恆農 commandery, 1194
- Hepu 合浦 commandery, 1213
- Hetu 河圖, Diagrams from the Yellow River, 384, 960, 1119
- Heyang 河陽 in Zuopingyi, 46, 722
- Hongnong 弘農 commandery, 1194
- Hongxi/Hongqi dam 鴻郤陂, 112, 915
- Honoured Lady 貴人 [imperial concubine], 1217
- Houguan 候官 in Kuaiji, 304, 313, 315, 726, 1031, 1083
- Hu/Ku 苦 in Chen, 20, 275, 390
- Huai River 淮河, saep
- Huai 懷 in Henei, 594
- Huaili 懷里 in Youfufeng, 45, 97, 502, 650, 658, 724
- Huainan zi 淮南子, 246, 350, 649
- Huaiyang 淮陽 commandery/kingdom, 1196
- Huan 皖 in Lujiang, 239, 296, 414, 424, 467, 570, 628, 1015, 1022, 1064, 1083, 1093
- Huang-Lao 黃老, 119-20, 127, 165, 199, 202, 208, 217, 275, 310, 324, 380, 396, 494, 553, 579, 597, 601-02, 607, 714, 720, 767, 858, 887, 952, 1058, 1114, 1117, 1123, 1148, 1173
- Huang Shan 黃山 range in Danyang, 74, 313, 381, 663, 712, 1180
- Huangcheng 皇城 in Shangdang, 12, 223, 419, 1075, 1159
- Huangzhong 湟中 [the valley of the Xining 西寧河 or Huang River 湟水], 130, 301
Loyal Auxiliary of Barbarians 湟中義從胡, 14, 130, 188-89, 283, 653
- Huayin 華陰 in Hongnong, 190, 289, 418, 785, 805, 1042, 1161
battle (23), 132, 568, 835, 997
battle (211), 38, 47, 92, 301, 324, 419, 463, 639, 650, 853, 884, 902, 940, 958, 1051, 1056, 1135, 1164
- Hui and Mo 濊貊 people, 26, 217, 263, 581, 970
- Huling 湖陵 in Shanyang, 379, 580, 760, 804, 1142
- Huojia 獲嘉 in Henei, Princess, 215, 518
- Huosuo 獲索 bandits, 231, 261, 294, 909
- Hutou Mountain 壺頭山 in Wuling, 258, 889
- Hutuo River 呼/虜沱河, 534, 651, 800, 940 canal project, 114, 130, 496
- Huyang 湖陽 in Nanyang, 199, 487, 552, 604
Princess, 517
- immortal/ity 仙人, 61, 68, 78, 210, 238, 294, 332, 362, 380, 437, 702, 726, 778, 815, 829, 882, 975, 994, and see longevity
- Impartial and Just 中正, 75, 737
- Imperial Clerks 侍御史 in the Censorate, 1227
Preparer of Documents 治書侍御史, 1227
- Imperial Clerk in Command of Troops 督軍御史, 146
- Imperial Counsellor 御侍大夫, 95, 470, 543, 563, 1221, 1227
- Imperial Secretariat 尚書, see Secretariat
- Imperial University 太學, 1222, 1225, 1232
- Impiety 無/不道, 20, 136, 166, 233, 278, 351, 389, 393, 406, 430, 466, 491, 494, 507, 527, 567, 579, 581, 593, 613, 678, 738, 751, 823, 858, 1102, 1106
- India, 600, 607, 611, 1120
- Insignia and Credentials, Prefect 符節令, 1225
- Inspector 刺史 of a province/region, 1228-1231, 1236
- Internuncios 謁者, 1227
Supervisor 謁者僕射, 1227
- Internuncio for Engineering 將作謁者, 835
- Internuncio in charge of the Camp at Liyang 監黎陽營謁者, 130, 386, 408, 937, 1098 [as Internuncio in charge of the Reserve Camp of the Trans-Liao Command 監度遼營謁者], 1227, 1234
- Investigator 都郵, 1229
- invitation to the office of an Excellency 辟公府, 1231
- iron, 854, 881, and see metal and monopolies
- Jade Hall 玉堂 at Luoyang, 610
- Jade House 玉室, see Stone House in Chengdu
- Jade Sceptre Park 畢圭苑, 513, 722, 948
- Japan, 268, 563
Wa/Wo 倭 people, 125, 697, 741, 787
- Ji province 冀州, 1196
- Ji 冀 in Hanyang, 230, 316, 376, 453, 639, 687, 840, 847, 849, 854, 869, 898, 938, 943, 950, 965, 1094, 1104, 1180
- Ji 薊 in Guangyang, 117, 224, 257, 260, 272, 559, 586, 693-94, 799, 823, 971, 1098, 1157, 1121
- Ji Colonel 己校尉 see Wu and Ji Colonels
- Jiameng 葭萌 in Guanghan, 231, 358, 482, 888
- Jian'an 建安 in Kuaiji, 313
- Jianchang 建昌 in Yuzhang, 781
- Jiang 絳 in Hedong, 1158
- Jiangling 江陵 kingdom, 507, 1202
- Jiangling 江陵 in Nan command-

- ery, 37, 40, 47, 53-54, 239, 328, 425, 427, 436, 467, 481, 528, 628, 667, 671, 680, 738, 773, 792, 862, 905, 1152-53, 1166
- Jiangxia 江夏 commandery, 1203
- Jiangyang 江陽 in Jianwei [as a commandery], 89, 93, 580, 695, 738
- Jiangzhou 江州 in Ba, 54, 211, 218, 269, 270, 561, 717, 792-93, 941, 1023, 1043, 1107, 1114-15
- Jianwei 犍爲 commandery, 1205
- Jianwei Dependent State 犍爲屬國, 1206
- Jianye 建業 in Danyang, 622, 767, 773-74, 910, 1052, 1063
- Jiao province 交州/Jiaozhi region 交趾部, 1213
- Jiaodong 膠東 commandery/kingdom, 1202
- Jiaozhi 交趾 commandery, 1213
- Jibei 濟北 kingdom, 1199
- Jie Bridge 界橋 in Qinghe, battle (192), 272, 711, 934, 1010
- Jiedu Village 解瀆亭 in Hejian, Marquis, 147, 492, 510, 546, 612, 880
- Jiluo Mountain 稽落山 in Mongolia, battle (89), 115, 171, 249, 256, 258, 447, 742, 796, 874, 930, 937
- Ji'nan 濟南 commandery/kingdom, 1201
- Jincheng 金城 commandery, 1207
- Jing province 荊州, 1202
- Jingzhao/Jingzhao yin 京北尹 commandery, 1194
Intendant [yin] 京北尹, 1226
- Jinmen 金門 hills in Henei, bandits, 70
- Jinpu 金蒲 in Jushi, 252, 275
- Jinwei ranges 金微山 in the Altai Mountains, 256
- Jinxiang 金鄉 in Shanyang, 321
- Jinyang 晉陽 in Taiyuan, 634, 1058
- Jishi Mountain 積石山, battle (160), 188
- Jiujiang 九江 commandery, 1203
- Jiuquan 酒泉 commandery, 1208
- Jiuyuan 九原 in Wuyuan, 614-15, 763
- Jiuzhen 九真 commandery, 1214
- Jiyang 棘陽 in Nanyang, 52, 439, 487-88, 558, 567, 594, 803
- Jiyin 濟陰 commandery/kingdom, 1199
- Ju River 菊水 in Nanyang, 327
- Ju 莒 in Langye, 195-96, 890, 1021
- Ju 劇 in Zichuan [later in Beihai], 261, 1035
- Juancheng 甄城 in Jiyin, 282, 929
- Juchao 居巢 in Lujiang, 1022
- Juli 巨里 in Ji'nan, 211, 261
- Julu 鉅鹿 commandery/ kingdom, 1196
- Jumi 拘彌 state, 2, 5, 94, 144, 210, 372, 640, 704, 709, 819, 885, 897, 899, 916, 969, 1102
- Junior Clerk 屬 in the office of an Excellency, 1231
- Junior Gentleman 童子朗, 349, 748, 893, 1024, 1098, 1183, 1232
- Junyi 浚儀 in Chenliu, 1018
Princess, 604
- Junyi Trench 浚儀渠, 818, 835, 1018
- Jushi region [Turfan], 6, 14, 24, 72, 125, 163, 213, 252, 275, 356, 432, 476, 497, 587, 606, 646, 885, 1026, 1104, 1128
- Jushi, Further 後車師 state, 1, 3, 8, 15, 44, 51, 73, 125, 202, 248-49, 252, 275, 319, 380, 387, 679, 680, 691, 702, 725, 740, 754, 757, 780, 787, 826-27, 860, 900, 935, 939, 991, 1044, 1174
- Jushi, Nearer, 前車師 state, 1, 8, 51, 73, 190, 202, 248-49, 252-53, 275, 356, 387, 757, 780, 826-27, 860, 885, 900, 1040, 1174
- Justice, Department 理曹 [Wei], 243, 692, and see Department of Law 法曹
- Juyan in Zhangye Dependent State 張掖居延屬國, 1209
- Juyong 居庸 in Guangyang, 710
- Juyong Pass 居庸關, 870
- Kaiyang 開陽 in Langye, 521, 1021
- Kangju 康居 state [Sogdiana], 5, 704, 969, 1132 kingdom 王國, 1219, 1229
- Ku 苦 in Chen, see Hu 苦
- Kuaiji 會稽 commandery, 1204
- Kunming 昆明 people, 632
- Kunyang 昆陽 in Yingchuan, 119, 919
battle (23), 72, 111, 167, 223, 231, 434, 488, 550, 558-59, 567-68, 651, 672, 714, 799, 804, 810, 821, 1107, 1171, 1177
- La 臘 winter/New Year sacrifice, 305, 972-73
- Laixiang 庾降 territory in Yi province, Area Commander, 113, 416, 662, 1086
- Langye 琅邪 commandery/kingdom, 1200
- Langzhong 閬中 in Ba, 202, 1040, 1043
- Lanling 蘭陵 in Donghai, 15, 317-18
- Lantian 藍田 in Jingzhao, 827, 931
- Laozi 老子, 119-20, 181, 275, 380, 390, 549, 597, 601, 648, 812, 843, 1058, 1149, 1181, and see Huang-Lao
- Laozi ming 老子銘 stele, 20, 275, 601
- Lateral Courts 掖庭, 129, 212, 1217-18
Prefect 掖庭令, 18, 1217
and see sub prisons

- Law, Department 法曹 [Wei], 243, and see Department of Justice
- Le'an 樂安 commandery/kingdom, 1201
- Lcheng 樂城 commandery/kingdom, 1197
- Legal Matters, Officer 決曹 in a commandery, 342, 670, 672, 828, 986, and see sub Criminal, Law and Justice departments
- Leiyang 耒陽 in Guiyang, 854
- Lelang 樂浪 commandery, 1212
- Leling 樂陵 commandery, 69, 297
- Li 里 people, 1087
- Li 歷 in Hanyang, 373, 378
- Liang province 涼州, 1207
Inspector 涼州刺史, 1236
- Liang province rebellion, see the biographies of Beigong Boyu and Han Sui
- Liang 梁 commandery/kingdom, 1196
- Lianju 令居 in Jincheng, 685, 896
- Liaodong 遼東 commandery, 1212
- Liaodong Dependent State 遼東屬國, 1212
- Liaoxi 遼西 commandery, 1212
- Libationer 祭酒, 141, 910, 1019
- Libationer, as head of the Imperial University 太學祭酒, 1222
- Libationers 祭酒 [under Zhang Lu], 1067
- Libationers of the Rice Magicians 米巫祭酒, 343, 669, 832, 949, 1073, 1098
- libraries, see Eastern Pavilion, Orchid Terrace, Palace Library, Private Library, Stone House
- Lieutenant-General 偏將軍, 1233
- Ligui 驪歸 state, 861, 1021
- Linchuan 臨川 commandery, 1165
- Linguang Palace 靈光宮 in Lu, 538, 838
- Lingling 零陵 commandery, 1203
- Lingzhou 靈州 in Beidi, 138, 444, 930
- Linhuai 臨淮 commandery, 1201
- Linlü 林慮 in Henei, 249, and see 619, 785, 843, 936, 1180, and see immortality
- Longlü 隆慮 in Henei, Princess, 579
- Longxi 隴西 commandery, 1207
- Lu 魯 commandery/kingdom, 1196
- Luduo 鹿蓼 people, 889
- Lueyang 略陽 in Tianshui, 381, 402, 438, 453, 794, 848
- Luhun Pass 陸渾關, 197-98, 894
- Lujiang 廬江 commandery/kingdom, 1204
- Luling 廬陵 commandery, 1204
- Luo 雒 people of Jiaozhi, 1119
- Luo 雒 in Guanghan, 268, 573, 588, 653, 689, 712, 718, 777, 803, 830, 1073, 1095
- Luoping 平臯 in Dong, Princess, 554
- Luoshu 洛書, Book from the Luo, 384, 960, 1119
- Luoyang 洛陽 in Henan [imperial capital], passim
Prefect 洛陽令, 1226
- Luyang 魯陽 in Nanyang, Princess, 492
- magic/witchcraft, 20, 39, 72, 207, 210-11, 217, 239, 307, 309, 332, 343, 350, 376, 379, 442, 502, 506, 579, 609, 632, 711, 743, 815, 829, 836, 850, 880, 894, 895, 903, 917, 998, 1040, 1059, 1060, 1094, 1176, 1180 accusations, 60, 86, 119, 122, 137, 160, 260, 499, 571, 589, 599, 750, 812, 94, 890, 974-76, 984, 1074, 1167 mystical diagrams, 384, 618, 960, 1119, 1180
Yue magic 越方, 617, 1094
- magistrate of a county 令 or 長, 1230 brevet 守令/長 [within one's own commandery] 14, 52, 177, 343, 366, 368, 435, 574, 662, 671, 673, 679, 680, 691, 695,
- Longlü 隆慮
- Linqiong 臨邛 in Shu, 268
- Lintao 臨洮 in Longxi, 25, 396, 403, 543, 641, 659
- Linyi 林邑 state, 626, 681
- Linying 臨穎 in Yingchuan, Princess, 528
- Linyuan 臨沅 in Wuling, 542, 889
- Linzi 臨淄 in Ji'nan, 71, 261, 556, 926, 1051, 1135
- Liqiu 黎丘 in Nan commandery, 26, 53, 705, 792, 896, 1100
- Literary Scholar 文學 in a household, 246, 292
see also Education Officer in a commandery and sub nomination
- Liu'an 六安 commandery/kingdom, 1204
- Liuma pasture/horse-park 流馬苑, 316, 1223
- Liuzhong 柳中 in the Western Regions, 8, 190, 252, 275, 457
- Liwu 蠡吾 in Zhongshan, Marquis, 456, 526, 544-45, 576, 595, 638, 937, 1093, 1141
- Lixia 歷下 in Ji'nan, 261
- Liyang 黎陽 in Wei, 378, 996
- Liyang Camp 黎陽營, 3, 130, 171, 183, 263, 386, 388, 476, 652, 674, 685, 710, 721, 748, 874, 1020, 1024, 1084, 1107, and see Internuncio
- Liyi 鄆邑 in Nanyang, Princess, 545
- Long Road 隴道 to the Western Regions, 15, 139, 308, 353, 458, 476, 718
- Long Slope 隴坻 in Tianshui/Hanyang, 134, 197, 225, 262, 318, 402, 651, 680, 840, 848, 898, 951, 1030
- Longbian 龍編 in Jiaozhi commandery, 739
- Longcheng 龍城 in Mongolia, 16, 171, 249, 796
- longevity, 39, 150, 159, 217, 239, 307, 332, 360-61, 425, 466,

- 938, 956, 1091, 1136, 1139, 1230 temporary or provisional 守令/長, 536, 626, 664, 976, 1045, 1080, and see brevet above
 Magistrate of the Markets 市長, 99, 740
 Mahan/Ma and Han) 馬韓 people, 263
 Major [軍]司馬, 1234
 Major, Acting 假司馬, 256, 258, 283, 769, 1084, 1234
 Major, Senior 別部司馬, 1234
 Major of the Vermilion Bird Gate 朱爵司馬, 574
 Major of the Xuanwu Gate 玄武司馬, 7
 Major-General 裨將軍, 1233
 Manbo 曼柏 in Wuyuan, 2, 874
 Manyan 曼延 monster, 126
 Maoling 茂陵 in Youfufeng, 152-53, 813, 931
 march 道, 1229
 Marquis 侯, 1219, and see under fiefs
 Servant at Court 奉朝請, 71, 112, 115, 135, 168, 251, 256, 262, 462, 495, 531, 557, 651, 715, 720, 1024, 1168
 Specially Advanced 特進, 43, 48, 116, 118, 131, 134, 136, 162-64, 168, 200, 229, 286, 326, 426, 447, 458, 461, 464, 642-43, 646, 766, 948, 976, 981, 985, 1099
 Marquis at Court 朝廷侯, 472
 Marquis Attending Sacrifices 侍祠侯, 472, 1044
 Marquis in Recompense of Perfection 褒成侯, 393-95
 Marquis Who Honours the Sage 崇聖侯, 393
 Marquis Who Honours Virtue 崇德侯, 502, 505, 508, 525, 533, 538, 550, 553, 578, 603
 Marquis, secondary 關內侯, 1219
 Master of Writing 尚書, see Secretariat medicine, 63, 130, 195, 210, 233, 239, 244, 292-293, 299, 327, 332-333, 360-361, 362, 406, 421, 434, 442, 554, 557, 610, 678, 778, 798, 815, 850, 851, 915, 933, 1055, 1060, 1120, 1168, and see acupuncture and longevity and sickness
 Medicines, Officer for 尚藥監, 244, and see Court Physician
 Mei 鄆 in Youfufeng, 100, 149, 152
 Meiji 美稷 in Xihe, 17-18, 23, 56, 186, 227, 257, 305-06, 446, 458, 655-56, 707, 781, 782, 795, 840, 878, 899, 1040, 1052
 Meiyang 美陽 in Youfufeng, battle (185), 11, 15, 157-58, 1077, 1147
 Meiyang Pass 美陽關 in Youfufeng, 458
 Meng Crossing 孟津 of the Yellow River, 139, 224, 397, 530, 719, 1156, and see Mengjin Mengjin 孟津 in Henan, 144, 957, and see Meng Crossing metal/metallurgy, 184, 297, 585, 721, 854, 881
 Commandant for Metal, 司金都尉, 298
 Commissioner for Metal, 司金中朗將, 1085
 Internuncio in charge of Metallurgical Production, 監冶謁者, 297
 Mi 密 in Henan, 1173
 Mianchi 澠池 in Hongnong, 155, 368
 Mianzhu 綿竹 in Guanghan, 54, 176, 211, 423, 572-73, 731, 777, 799, 830, 1024 military agricultural colonies 屯田, see agricultural colonies
 Military Commissioner 堅軍使者, 572, 587
 Min River 閩江 in present-day Fujian, 313, 320, 331, 873, 875, 1015, 1179
 Min River 岷江 in present-day Sichuan, 54-55, 322, 715, 870, 961, 1023, 1114
 Minister Coachman 太僕, 1223
 Minister Herald 大鴻臚, 1223-24
 Minister of Ceremonies 太常, 1222
 Minister of Finance 大司農, 1224
 Minister of Justice 廷尉, 1223
 Director 正 in the Ministry of Justice, 74, 83, 281
 Minister of the Guards 衛尉, 1223
 Minister of the Household 光祿勳, 1223-24
 Minister of the Imperial Clan 宗正, 1224
 Minister Steward 少府, 1224-25
 Minzhong 閩中, 902
 Mo Slope 摩陂 in Nanyang, 185
 Mo 麻 and Bao 保 encampments in Jiangxia, 778, 1152 monopolies and government production of salt, iron and other commodities, 181, 473, 496, 505, 565, 585, 593, 605, 631, 645, 824, 853, 1065, 1129, 1135, 1160
 Moon, Office for Phases and Eclipses 弦望月食官, 383, 946, 1074
 Mount Chonggao 崇高山, 787, and see Mount Songgao
 Mount Heng 恆山, 1167
 Mount Hua 華山, 46, 181, 190, 206, 292, 619, 691, 772, 785, 805, 1005, 1042, 1161
 Mount Liangfu 梁父山, 565
 Mount Long 隆山 in Nanyang, 331
 Mount Peng 彭山 in Nanyang, 186
 Mount Song/Songgao 嵩高山, 787, and see Mount Chonggao
 Mount Tai 泰山, 87, 93, 285, 460, 475, 496, 565, 579, 812, 907, 1039, 1059 bandits, 58, 159, 268, 744, 768, 771, 866, 978, 996, 1021-22,

- 1093
 Mount Yanren 燕然山 in Mongolia, 249, 796
 music, 5, 11, 18, 28, 29-31, 76,
 103, 125, 433, 479, 495, 527,
 535, 599, 649, 678, 725, 735,
 811, 856, 911, 990, 1007, 1009, 1153 ceremonial music, 13, 40, 116,
 270, 339, 485, 489, 498, 538,
 602, 642, 669-70, 977, 980,
 1045, and see pitchpipes
 Court Musician 太樂令, 57,
 179
 Gentleman of the Court Music
 雅樂郎, 178
 Yu Musician 太子樂, 40
 Mysteries, Study of [Xuan xue],
 375, 578, 617, 618, 801, 1149
- Nan 南 commandery/kingdom, 1202
 Nan'an 南安 commandery, 1207
 Nanhai 南海 commandery, 1213
 Nanpi 南皮 in Bohai, 411, 1013,
 1018
 Nanxiang 南鄉 commandery, 287
 Nanyang 南陽 commandery, 1202
 Nanzheng 南鄭 in Hanzhong, 270,
 322, 519, 931
 Neihuang 內黃 in Wei, Princess,
 468
 Nieyang 涅陽 in Nanyang,
 Princesses, 545, 604
 Nine Distinctions 九錫, 38, 95,
 156, 570, 683, 929, 1007, 1037
 Ning 寧 in Shanggu, 262, 308
 Ningping 寧平 in Huaiyang/Chen,
 Princess, 154, 489
 Niuzhu 牛渚 in Danyang, 201, 998 nomination/recommendation:
 Able to Deal in Affairs of State
 能從政者, 347
 Able to Speak Directly and Admonish Unflinchingly 能直
 言極諫, 1123
 Abundant Talent 茂才, 1231 Advantageous Proposals, to put forward 上便宜, 246
 Capable and Good, Sincere and Upright 賢良, 96, 536
 Confucian Scholarship 儒學
 [qualification 科 for nomination], 347
 Direct Speech 直言, 241, 540,
 881
 Exceptional Quality 尤異, 672, and see also sub voce
 Extremely Filial 至孝, 205,
 925, 927
 Extremely Filial and of Exceptional Conduct 至孝獨/篤行,
 101
 Extremely Filial and Knowing the Way 至孝有道, 1116
 Filial and Fraternal Affection
 孝悌 [qualification 科 for nomination], 347
 Filial and Incorrupt 孝廉, 1230
 First Class 高第/Number One 第一, 1231, and see also sub voce
 Flourishing Talent 秀才, see Abundant Talent
 Kind and Worthy 仁賢, 127,
 208
 Knowing the Classics 通經, 823
 Knowing the Way 有道, 22,
 64, 150, 175, 207, 266, 290,
 291, 403, 421, 734, 740, 751,
 812, 866, 888, 892, 918, 927,
 984, 1062, 1091, 1112, 1116,
 1127, 1175
 Literary Ability 文吏, 347
 Literary Scholar 文學, 235, and see also sub voce
 Men of Honour 義士, 532, 767
 Plain and Honest 敦朴/樸,
 127, 208, 1056
 Qualified to Deal with Complex Affairs 理劇, 77, 1102
ren 任 right, 40, 41, 42, 67, 82,
 146, 230, 236, 245, 248, 250,
 264, 268, 328, 346, 394, 438,
 441, 646, 740, 789, 826, 902,
 922, 1019, 1057, 1105, 1149,
 1155, 1176, 1231
 Sincere and Upright 方正, 64,
 127, 208, 310, 328, 394, 403,
 439, 550, 709, 772, 783, 887,
 960, 1091
 Understanding the Classics 明
 經, 107, 151, 434, 596, 858,
 956, 1008, 1082, 1147
 Worthy and Good 賢良, 913,
 1052
 Worthy and Good, Sincere and Upright 賢良方正, 105, 150,
 207, 373, 410, 522, 526, 546,
 572, 584, 619, 733, 761, 802,
 809, 888, 927, 1020, 1060,
 1111, 1127, and see Capable and Good Worthy Confucian Gentleman living in Obscurity 隱士大儒, 409 see also Reporting Officer Northern Army 北軍, 1234, and see Archers Who Shoot at a Sound, Chang River, Elite
 Cavalry, Footsoldiers and Garrison Cavalry;
 Adjutant 北軍中候, 294, 319,
 392, 485, 735, 1165, 1179, 1234
 Northern Road 北道 of the Western Regions, 8, 252, 275,
 356, 371, 388, 432, 476, 827
 Number One 第一 grading of a magistrate, 442, 984, 1028;
 in classical scholarship, 230
 see also First Class
- Office for Sacrificial Grains and Animals 廩犧官, 151
 Officer of Merit 功曹 in a commandery, 1229, 1231
 Orchid Terrace 蘭臺 library, 4, 6,
 30, 235, 367, 433, 438, 513,
 968
 Palace Assistant Imperial Clerk

- 御侍中丞, 1226-67, and see Censorate
- Palace Attendant 侍中, 1225
- Palace Gardens, Prefect 鈎盾令, 62, 1130, 1224
- Palace Internuncio 中謁者, 1218
- Palace Library 中書 of Wei, 503, 779
- Palace of Perpetual Joy, see Yongle Palace
- Palace of Perpetual Peace, Coachman 永安太僕, 827
- Palace of Prolonged Joy, see Changle Palace
- Palace School for Noble Families 四姓小侯學校, 112, 115, 127, 452, 608, 644, 704, 707, 1071
- Palace Workshop 尚方, 27, 126, 229, 711, and see Eastern Garden
- Panyu 番禺 in Nanhai, 342
- Pei 沛 commandery/kingdom, 1196
- Pei/ Xiaopei 沛/小沛 in Pei, 480
- Pengcheng 彭城 kingdom, 1200
- Pengcheng 彭城 in Chu/Pengcheng, 317
- Pengli 彭蠡 lake/marshland, 348
- Perfect Man 真人, 190, 275, 597, 975, 978
- physiognomy, 559, 679, 778, 822, 865, 1027, 1088, 1128, 1161 of men, 242, 246, 412, 521, 678, 865, 1001, 1112, 1136 of women, 121, 454, 530, 532, 634, 664, 865, 874 of horses, 23, 1161
- Ping province 平州 under Gongsun Du, 266
- Pingchun 平春 in Jiangxia, King, 540, 1122
- Pinggao 平皋 in Henei, Princess, 554
- Pinglin 平林 in Nanyang, 567
Troops, 73, 465, 487-88, 567, 810, 821
- Pinglu Trench 平虜渠, 156
- Pingshi 平氏 in Nanyang, Princesses, 603, 609, 637
Lady of 平氏君, 1104
- Pingshu 平舒 in Dai, Marquis, 639
- Pingyang 平陽 in Hedong, 293, 357, 638, 686, 712, 1020, 1135
Marquis, 215, 217
Princess, 535
- Pingyi 馮翊, see Zuopingyi
- Pingyi 平邑 in Dai, Princess, 550
- Pingyuan 平原 commandery/kingdom, 1201
- Pishi 皮氏 in Hedong, 368
- pitchpipes 音律, 178, 320, 932, 940, 960, 1047
Expectant Appointee Watcher of the Zhong Pitchpipe 待詔候鍾律, 983
- Piyang 泚陽, see Biyang 比陽 in Nanyang
- plague, see sickness
- Ploughing the Sacred Field 耕藉田, 38, 347, 496, 606, 608
- portraits, 61, 69, 77, 240, 327, 344, 348, 374, 376, 390, 421, 434, 439, 454, 488, 500, 720, 886, 888, 890, 915, 922, 931, 933, 954, 955, 960, 970, 977, 1019, 1120, 1165 at the Cloud Terrace 雲臺 at Luoyang, 55, 71, 180, 226, 231, 251, 262, 318, 366, 373, 383, 398, 427, 442, 531, 595, 640, 652, 661, 696, 715, 798, 801, 804, 825, 972, 1024, 1031, 1169, 1173
- Poyang 鄱陽 region of Yuzhang, 153, 313, 348, 377, 439, 466, 622, 626, 693, 694, 814, 990, 1165
- Poyang 鄱陽 commandery, 25, 52, 1140, 1204
- Prefect of the Gentlemen of the Palace 郎中令, 314, 422
- Prefect of the Guards 衛士令, 1223
- Princess/Senior Princess 公主, 1220, and see under fiefs
- prisons at the capital:
Imperial Prison 詔獄 at the Ministry of Justice, 62, 107, 190, 385, 443, 550, 1080, 1129, 1151, 1165, 1223
Imperial Prison 詔獄 under the Prefect of Luoyang, 80, 592, 1044, 1223, 1226
Northern Prison of the Yellow Gates 黃門北寺獄, 63, 201, 437, 549, 725, 888, 984, 1218
- prisons outside the capital:
commandery/kingdom, 72, 103, 106, 142, 166, 173, 206, 339, 368, 412, 461, 688, 735, 737, 915, 924, 975, 1003, 1087, 1099 county, 177, 209, 292, 797, 1021, 1025, 1131-32, 1136, 1141
province, 1165
- prisons in the harem:
Drying House 暴室, 119, 974, 1218, Bailiff 暴室齋夫, 1170
Prison of the Lateral Courts 掖庭獄, 60, 137, 589, 599, 751, 1074, 1218
- Private Library, Custodian, 祕書監, 371, 836, 851, 929, 1225
- proscription 禁錮, 84, 101, 126, 140, 185, 195, 215, 299, 313, 334, 339, 349, 353, 357, 430, 449, 452, 524, 533, 556, 621, 632, 648, 744, 745, 805, 840, 967, 983, 1053, 1118, 1143, 1183
- Proscribed Party/Faction 黨錮, 55, 65, 81, 158, 170, 364, 511, 513, 541, 623, 947, 1097, 1141
First Faction Incident (166-167), 21, 65, 77, 80, 106, 169-70, 181, 201, 279, 290, 326, 346, 359, 363, 394, 404, 436-37, 602, 680, 735, 812, 933, 982, 984, 986, 1016, 1037, 1066, 1075, 1103, 1143, 1169
Second Faction Incident and

- the Great Proscription (169-184), 3, 43, 44-45, 47, 55, 66, 68, 77-78, 98, 166, 170, 181, 198, 201, 205, 220, 232, 272, 292, 311, 315, 318, 323, 329, 354, 355, 363, 383, 384, 437, 463, 485, 511, 540-41, 550, 603, 630, 704, 734, 744, 751, 776, 783, 784, 791, 809, 842, 857, 866, 881, 908, 920-24, 927, 963, 982, 988, 1006, 1016, 1027, 1056, 1076, 1086, 1103, 1116, 1127, 1133, 1155, 1163, 1169
- Protector of the Army 護軍, 42, 85, 194, 283, 297, 308, 348, 377, 639, 834, 877, 914, 923, 961, 1130, 1152, 1167, 1234
- Protector of the Qiang 護羌校尉, 1235
- Protector of the Wuhuan 護烏桓校尉, 1235
- Protector-General of the Western Regions 西域都護, 1235-36
- province 州 or region 部, 1228
- Puban Crossing 蒲阪津, 38, 905, 1164
- Pulei Lake 蒲類海, 248, 358, 587
- Pure Conversation 清談, 379, 395, 907
- Puyang 濮陽 in Dong, 138, 613, 625, 995; Princess, 522
- Qi 齊 commandery/kingdom, 1202
- Qi Mountain 祁山 in Hanyang, 378, 1094
- Qi Park 淇園 in Henei, 397
- Qi Pass 箕關 in Henei, 133
- Qiang people, passim
- First Great Rebellion (107-118), 123-24
- Second Rebellion (140-144), 476
- tribal groups:
- Bi'nan 卑南, 140, 420, 766, 1178
- Dangdian 當闐, 674, 1021
- Dangjian 當煎, 159, 188, 385, 600, 632, 652, 663, 674, 723
- Dazangyi 大群夷, 51
- Dianna 滇那, 188
- Gongtang 鞏店, 366, 1095
- Goujiu 句就, 140
- Han 罕, 1095
- Hunu 狐奴, 446
- Jiaogong 効功, 308
- Lejie 勒姐, 159, 188, 253
- Lianyu 零吾, 188, 353
- Li'nan 離南, 446
- Shaodang 燒當, 25, 131, 139, 140, 159, 160, 188, 250, 253, 306, 308-09, 543, 566, 641-42, 652-53, 663, 674, 677, 723, 896, 1088
- Shaohe 燒何, 22, 188, 253, 652, 674, 1046, 1095-96
- Shendi 沈氏, 652
- Shenlang 參狼, 407, 567, 659, 896
- White Horse 白馬, 385, 405, 613, 653, and see Di people
- Xianlian 先零, 124, 139, 140, 188-89, 227, 353, 515, 601, 639, 652, 659, 663, 684, 718, 723
- Zhong 鍾, 139, 380, 403, 653
- Qiansheng 千乘 commandery/kingdom, 1201
- Qiantang River 錢唐江, 770, 816
- Qiantang 錢唐 in Wu, 90, 694, 864, 1140
- Qiao 譙 in Pei, 34, 35, 37, 48-49, 976
- Qiaoyao 僬僥 tribe, 632
- Qichun 蕲春 in Jiangxia, 313, 382, 671, 753, 779, 894
- Qing province 青州, 1201
- Qing Dyke 青陵 in Runan, 433
- Qing River 清水, 272, 934
- Qing Shan 青山 hills in Beidi, 225
- Qinghe 清河 commandery/kingdom, 1198
- Qingzhou Troops 青州兵, 36, 368, 996, 1022
- Qinshui 沁水 in Henei, Princess, 595
- Qiongzhou 邛都 in Yuexi, 544, 715
- Qiongzhou 邛都 people, 228
- Qiuzi 龜茲 state, 5-6, 8, 15, 23-24, 73, 86, 94, 174, 190, 252, 275, 277-78, 292, 371, 457, 537, 590, 611, 699, 731, 745, 791, 885, 891, 970, 991, 1095, 1132, 1174
- Qiuzi 龜茲 in Shang commandery, 1053
- Qu 朐 city in Donghai, 153, 689, 777, 869
- Quanzhou Trench 泉州渠, 156
- Queen Dowager 王太后, 288
- Quintuply Experienced 五更, 1033
- Quyong Spring 曲陽泉 in Xiapi, 238
- Rang 穰 in Nanyang, 177
- Rapid as Tigers guards 虎賁郎, 1223, 1232
- General of the Household 虎賁中郎將, 1222-23
- Red Cliffs 赤壁 in Jiangxia, battle (208), 37, 40, 47, 90, 239, 277, 285, 296, 344, 371, 427, 467, 480-81, 538, 621, 626, 628, 773-74, 1090, 1152, 1172
- Red Eyebrows 赤眉 [Chimei] bandits/rebels, 195-98 et saepe
- region 部 within a commandery, 1228, and see province
- Registrar 主簿 in a commandery, 1229
- in a province, 1228
- Regular Attendant 中常侍, 1218
- religious rebels 妖賊, 81, 96, 108, 191, 211, 276, 311, 386, 414, 416, 475, 477, 514, 534, 551, 573, 600, 601, 605, 611, 661, 758, 856, 901, 904, 910, 986, 1024, 1025, 1048, 1051, 1080-81, 1093, and see the biographies of Zhang Jue [Yellow Turbans] and of Zhang Lu [Rice sect]

- Rencheng 任城 commandery/kingdom, 1199
- Reporting Officer [上]計吏, 46,
68, 86, 96, 107, 146, 173, 182,
187, 203, 205, 240, 259, 271,
282, 290, 301, 353, 366, 375,
395, 435, 510, 543, 577, 585,
685, 691, 694, 705, 725, 748,
779, 817, 838, 851, 859, 880,
906, 946, 968, 986, 988, 1061,
1112, 1121, 1125, 1231
- Rice Sect [Five Dou of Rice sect]
五斗米道 or Rice Rebels 米賊,
see the biography of Zhang Lu
- Rinan 日南 commandery, 1214
- roads and road-works, 14, 53, 60,
91, 285, 306, 309, 410, 429,
439, 460, 496, 615, 627, 659,
660, 665, 709, 744, 798-99,
844, 848, 854, 860, 999,
1067, 1091, 1101, 1119, 1141,
1156, and see Baoye Road,
Flying Fox Road, Long Road,
Northern Road, Southern Road, trestle roads and canals
- Roman Empire, see Daqin
- Rongyang 滎陽 in Henan, 113,
472, 475, 492, 605-06, 746,
812, 817, 819, 835, 886
battle (190) 36, 42, 716, 909, 964
- Rongyang 滎陽 commandery, 771
- Ru River 汝水 in Runan, 112,
427, 433
- Runan 汝南 commandery, 1195
- Ruxu 濡須 in Lujiang, 38, 47,
153, 239, 377, 628, 633, 773,
778, 910, 1038, 1148, 1159
- Ruyang 汝陽 in Runan, Princess,
507
- Ruyin 汝陰 in Runan, 751-52
commandery, 62
- San-hu* 三互 regulations, 30, 735, 921
- Sanmen Gorges 三門峽 of the Yellow River, 410, 418-19,
470, 944
- Sanshui 三水 in Anding, 614
- Seal of State 傳國璽, 769, 909, 1012
- Secretariat, Imperial of Han, 尚 書, 1216
authority over/control of the affairs of 錄尚書事, 1217 bureaus 曹, 1226
Deputy Director [Supervisor]
尚書僕射, 1226
Director [Prefect] 尚書令, 1226
Foreman Clerks 令史, 1226
Gentleman 郎, 1226
Masters of Writing [officers]
尚書, 1226
- Secretariat of Gongsun Shu, 894
- Secretariat of Shu-Han: 83, 155,
194, 325, 378, 411, 421, 433,
442, 471, 648, 963, 972, 1074,
1086, 1172
- Secretariat of Wei: 58, 70, 100, 102, 109, 178, 185, 234, 303,
312, 335, 375, 436, 453, 543,
553, 622, 663, 672, 746, 852,
859, 884, 905, 907, 908, 914,
915, 924, 928, 1056, 1117
- Secretariat of Wu: 239, 275, 619, 741, 781, 783, 853, 924, 937
- seismograph 候風地動儀, 475,
1050
- Senior Clerk 掾 in the office of an Excellency, 1231
- Senior Colonel 副校尉, 171, 249,
256, 258, 937, 1236 under the Emissary to the Xiongnu, 17, 840
under the General on the Liao, 401 for the West of the Yellow River 河西副校尉, 213
see also sub Western Regions
- Senior Major 別部司馬, 1234
- Serving the Aged 養老 ceremony,
30, 40, 151, 214, 236, 337,
409, 412, 608, 613, 620, 947,
960, 1005, 1008, 1033, 1153;
in a commandery, 442, 707
- Serving within the Palace 給事中,
148, 338, 759, 1129, 1225
- Serving within the Yellow Gates 給事黃門, 1104, 1173, 1225
- Seven Masters of the Jian'an period 建安七子, 72, 144, 306,
393, 593, 724, 803, 904, 962,
986, 1052
- Shan 擢 people, 990
- Shan Crossing 陝津 of the Yellow
River, 418
- Shang 上 commandery, 1209
- Shang 商 in Hongnong, 184
- Shangdang 上黨 commandery,
1209
- Shangdu 賞都 commandery, 829
- Shanggu 上谷 commandery, 1211
- Shanggui 上邽 in Tianshui/
Hanyang, 438, 722, 794, 849, 938
- Shanglin Park 上林苑 near Chang'an, 225, 448
- Shanglin Park 上林苑 near
Luoyang, 696
- Shangyong 上庸 commandery,
504, 667, 729-30, 905
- Shanshan 善鄯 state, 1, 4-6, 8, 51,
125, 190, 252, 275, 277-78,
356, 476, 699, 780, 827, 885,
991, 1040
- Shanyang 山陽 commandery/
kingdom, 1199
Duke, 521 [Liu Jing]
- Shanyang in Henei 山陽公, Duke,
555 [Liu Xie, former emperor]
- Shan-yue 山越 [non-Chinese of the hills in southeast China],
212, 313, 515, 745, 773, and see Yue people
- Shaobei 芍陂 lake, 819
- She 葉 in Nanyang, see Ye/She
- Shehu Valley 射虎谷, see Shoot-
Tiger Valley
- Shentu 身毒, see India
- Shequan 射犬 in Henei, 250, 254,
365, 672, 762, 868, 923, 971
- Shi shu* 史書 "Book of History," 121

- Shining Dragon, Garden 濯龍園 at Luoyang, 599, 602
- Shoot-Tiger Valley 射虎谷 in Hanyang, battle (169), 189, 1061
- Shouchun 壽春 in Jiujiang, 112, 571, 639, 737, 777, 929, 951, 1012
- Shouyang Mountain 首陽山, 63, 761, 914,
- Shu commandery 蜀郡, 1205
- Shu Dependent State 蜀郡屬國, 1206
- Shu 舒 in Lujiang, 639, 962
- Shu-Han 蜀漢 state, see the biography of Liu Bei
- Shule 疏勒 state, 2, 5, 8, 46, 86, 93, 94, 95, 123, 174, 210, 319, 371-72, 457, 611, 669, 682, 683, 718, 720, 791, 891, 904, 916, 973, 1083, 1132
- Shule 疏勒 in Jushi, 252
- Shuofang 鴈門 commandery, 1210
- Shuofang 鴈門 province, 1210
- Si River 泗水, 318, 651, 688, and see Sishui
- sickness, widespread, 34, 58, 72, 126, 183, 292, 422, 514-15, 593, 600, 633, 634, 904, 985, 986, 1058, 1080, 1136
- sickness in an army, 37-38, 260, 285, 314, 481, 660, 782, 803, 1064
- Sili 司隸 [the capital province], 1194
- Sishui 泗水 commandery/kingdom, 1201
- Sixth Venerable One 六宗, 128, 415, 581, 897
- slaves and slavery, 24, 27, 54, 97, 116, 146, 154, 162, 164, 168, 216, 222, 266, 272, 283, 305, 308, 337, 344, 345, 354, 359, 380, 387, 422, 431, 432, 439, 440, 447, 451, 461, 463, 464, 489, 491, 492, 501, 507, 517, 525, 537, 538, 539, 552, 565, 613, 635, 642, 643, 644, 655, 666, 669, 687, 694-95, 705, 719, 741, 742, 754, 756, 775, 776, 782, 784, 801, 845, 866, 905, 914, 925, 976, 977, 990, 993, 994, 1010, 1030, 1036, 1055, 1126, 1139, 1147, 1160, 1174, 1181
- Soils and Grains 社稷, worship, 565
- Song 宋 in Runan, Duke, 389
- Songzi 宋子 in Julu, 250, 258-59, 262
- Southern Road 南道 of the Western Regions, 278
- Specially Advanced 特進, see sub Marquis
- Spiritual Jade Park 靈琨苑, 513, 722, 948
- Spiritual Terrace 靈臺 observatory at Luoyang, 40, 337-38, 565, 613, 982, 1108
- Spiritual Terrace 靈臺 in Jiying, 277, 729, 960, 979, 1133, 1134
- Stables for Thoroughbreds 駉驥廄, 513
- Stone Bridge 石橋 at Luoyang, 14, 97, 378, 451, 653, 714, 726, 730, 744, 809, 834, 839, 1110
- Stone Classics 石經, 30, 32, 236, 433, 486, 513, 517, 647, 726, 759, 764, 786, 947, 969, 1078, 1083, 1113, 1181
- Stone House 石室 archive/library at Luoyang, 346, 1225
- Stone House 石室 or Jade House 玉室 hall in Chengdu, 244
- Suanzao 酸棗 in Chenliu, 1010
- Suite of the Heir 太子舍人, 84, 98, 268, 291, 346, 363, 368, 390, 422, 452, 513, 575, 596, 714, 781, 927, 1005, 1008, 1183, 1232
- Member, 太子舍人 in the Bureau of Astronomy, 222, 416, 917, 1047
- Palace Cadet 太子中庶子, 408
- Suiyang 睢陽 in Liang, 317, 379, 579-80, 708, 759-60, 869, 1142
- Suoju 莎車 state, 1, 5-6, 25, 94, 167, 192, 277-78, 300, 387, 388, 692-93, 704, 713, 731, 745, 861, 885, 899, 969, 1021, 1132, 1174
- Supervisor of the Retinue of the Emperor [中黃門]宄從僕射, 185, 1218
- Supervisor of the Retinue of the Empress 中宮[黃門]宄從僕射, 1217
- sweet dew 甘露, 24, 431, 617, 707, 729, 734, 811, 874, 876, 923, 1123
- Taishan 太山 commandery, 1199
- Taiyuan 太原 commandery, 1209
- Tan 鄴 in Donghai, 153, 317-18
- Tangming 堂明 state, 626
- Tangyang 堂陽 in Julu, 982, 1077
- Tanxiang 檀鄉 [Tan District] in Dong commandery, bandits, 149, 159, 180, 372, 420, 431, 531, 651, 825, 868, 971, 981, 1173, 1177
- Tao 桃 in Dongping/Rencheng, 688-89
- tax and corvee, administration, 67, 77, 473, 564, 599, 617, 676, 777, 841, 854, 882, 1028, 1029, 1053, 1065, 1073, 1075, 1088, 1111, 1116, 1121, 1167, 1182, 1224
- heavy, 417, 423, 475, 513, 572, 645, 712, 885, 930, 1000
- relief/exemption, 67, 37, 124, 125, 126, 312, 328, 355, 359, 364, 427, 496, 512, 581, 592, 597, 599, 606, 645, 684, 1120, 1182
- gengfu* 更賦 military tax/commutation, 565, 1029, 1234
- Temples, Imperial Ancestral 宗廟, 110, 151, 168, 310, 477, 516, 565, 583, 592, 602, 977, 1108, 1153
- Temple of the Eminent

- Founder 高廟 at Chang'an, 133, 400
 Temple of the Eminent Founder 高廟 at Luoyang, 214
 Duplicate Temple of the Eminent Founder 高原廟 at Pei, 317
 Temple of the Epochal Founder 世祖廟, 608
 Temple of Confucius 孔子廟 in Lu, 11, 295, 389, 390-91, 394-95, 736, 875, 973, 1100
 Three Dukes 三公, see Three Excellencies
 Three Enclosures 三雍, see Bright Hall, Circular Moat and Spiritual Terrace
 Three Excellencies 三公, 1221-22, 1226-27, 1231
 Three Excellencies Mountain 三公山 in Changshan, 212, 734, 881
 Three Special Seats 三獨坐, 920, 1226, and see Director of Retainers, Secretariat and Censorate
 Three Terraces 三臺 [Secretariat 尚書, Internuncios 謁者, and either the office of Insignia 符節 or the Censorate], 1008
 Thrice Venerable of the State 國三老, 230, 409, 412, 529, 620, 947, 960, 1005, 1008, 1153
 Thrice Venerable of a locality 三老, 208, 707, 815, 834, 961, 982, 1101
 Thrice Venerable 三老 [rebel title], 195-97, 566, 1015
 Tianshui 天水 commandery, 1207
 Tianzhu 天竺, see India
 Tiger Tallies 虎符, 184
 Tiger Tooth Camp 虎牙營 at Chang'an, 227, 257, 570, 719, 754, 785, 874, 1102, 1109, 1177, 1234
 Tong Pass 潼關 in Hongnong, 38, 301, 905, 1164
 Tong River 鮑水 in Runan, 310 trestle roads 閣道, 97, 309, 744, 848, 1091
 Troops from Pinglin 平林兵, see Pinglin
 Troops from the Lower Yangzi 下江兵, 72-73, 86, 196, 364, 426, 465, 476, 488, 688, 803-04, 810, 821, 894, 1023, 1032, 1033, 1171
 Troops from Xinshi 新市兵, see Xinshi
 Tuogan fortress 它乾城 in Qiuzi, 190, 457
 Tutor, Grand, to an emperor 太傅, 30, 65, 110, 123, 134, 166, 170-72, 181, 193, 220, 311, 315, 327, 333, 340, 355, 437, 450, 474, 486, 496, 510, 546, 547, 552, 585, 589, 610, 616, 647, 676, 701, 704, 714, 757, 783, 811, 887, 907 [in Shu-Han], 932, 999, 1012, 1013, 1060, 1087, 1097, 1100, 1109, 1133, 1151, 1173, 1221
 Tutor [Senior/Junior] to the Heir 太子 [太/少]傅, 86, 90, 182, 312, 329, 335-36, 340, 391, 453, 474, 609, 697, 808, 898, 924, 932, 1071-72, 1078, 1080, 1085, 1089, 1119, 1120, 1132
 Tutor to a king 傅, 27, 89, 179, 236, 246, 310, 508, 525, 526-27, 538, 540, 674, 729, 735, 857, 956, 1219
 Vast Canal 鴻溝, 37, 126, 472, 475, 536, 605, 607, 819, 835, 1019, 1076 Vast Pond 鴻池 park, 126, 1096
 village 亭, 1220
 Wa/Wo 倭 people, see Japan
 Wan 宛 in Nanyang, 28, 265, 324, 325, 423, 425, 434, 567, 583, 686, 714, 795, 854, 954, 988, 1041, 1057, 1069, 1081, 1160, 1179 fighting at (20s), 73, 113, 153, 197, 372, 406, 465, 488, 519, 530, 558-59, 561, 567, 803, 810, 821, 942, 981, 1032 fighting at (184), 305, 706, 769, 908, 1068, 1162
 Wang 芒 in Pei, 180
 Wannian 萬年在 Zuopingyi, Princess, 468 water control, general, 14, 112, 126, 185, 310, 433, 505, 565, 645, 693, 722, 731, 819, 831, 915, 1046, 1123 commandery office, 177, 641, 693, 741, 1040
 Assistant Officer in a province 河隄從事, 1077 on the Yellow River, 21, 113, 196, 605-06, 817, 819, 835, 886, 1019, 1076; Internuncio for Control of the Yellow River 河堤謁者, 80, 746, 817, 819, 1008
 Weaving House 織室, 637
 Wei 魏 commandery, 1196
 Wei 衛 in Dong commandery, duchy, 147, 361
 Wei 濊 people, see Hui and Mo people
 Wei 魏 state, see the biography of Cao Cao
 Weili 尉黎/犁 state, 6, 195, 277-78, 1016, 1062
 Weixing 魏興 commandery, 730
 Weixu 危須 state, 6, 1016, 1062
 Welcome the Ethers [of the season] 迎時氣 ceremony, 30, 498, 608
 Wen 溫 in Henei, 397, 913
 Wensu 溫宿 state, 6, 8, 23, 24, 457
 Western Garden 西園, 1224
 treasury of Emperor Ling, 100, 355, 513-14, 1233 colonels [private army of Emperor Ling], 11, 35, 98, 215, 311, 316, 355, 372, 514, 517, 683, 882, 1010, 1100, 1104, 1113

- Western Regions, Chief Clerk 西域長史, 6, 8, 94, 640, 709, 744, 754, 819, 991, 1040, 1102, 1236
 Colonel 西域校尉, 1235, and see Senior Colonel below and Wu and Ji Colonels
 Grand Chief Commandant 大都尉 [non-Chinese], 94-95, 388, 885
 Protector-General 都護 [Chinese official], 1235-36
 Protector 護西域 646
 Senior Colonel 副校尉, 190, 292, 432, 457, 718, 1095, 1236;
 Senior Colonel Protector 護西域副校尉, 8 wet-nurses, imperial, 21, 84, 92, 136, 138, 154, 206, 247, 346, 376, 411, 412, 417, 422, 439, 473, 491, 501, 508, 539, 550, 554, 576, 581-82, 665, 669, 736, 752, 809, 823, 828, 831, 833, 839, 895, 961, 965, 1006, 1079, 1104, 1141, 1170, 1184
 White Horse 白馬 tribe, see sub Di people and sub Qiang
 White Tiger Hall 白虎觀, conference, 7, 33, 87, 98, 142, 340-41, 367, 439, 498, 553, 591, 608, 612, 616, 728, 858, 903, 968, 1071, 1095
 White Wolf Mountain 白狼山 battle (207), 25, 37, 40, 237, 268, 388, 613, 677, 698, 700, 780, 781, 790, 879, 890, 938, 1009, 1014, 1064
 Winter Wine 冬酒 ceremonies, 236 witchcraft, see magic wounds as disqualification for civil office, 829
 Wu and Ji Colonels 戊己校尉, 73, 157, 213, 249, 275, 497, 718, 1046, 1058, 1235
 Wu Colonel 戊校尉, see Wu and Ji Colonels
 Wu Pass 武關 in Hongnong, 132, 197, 495, 568, 684, 733, 931, 997
 Wu Stream 蕪溪/武溪 in Wuling, 543, 888, and see Five Streams people
 Wu 吳 commandery, 1204
 Wu 吳 in Kuaiji/Wu commandery, 695, 763
 Marquis, 765
 Wu 吳 state, see the biography of Sun Quan
 Wu'an 武安 in Wei, Princess, 518
 Wuchang 武昌 city [formerly E 鄂 in Jiangxia], 273, 767
 Wuchang 武昌 commandery, 739-40
 Wude 武德 in Anping, Princess, 535
 Wudu 武都 commandery, 1207
 Wuhu 烏滸 people, 274, 453
 Wuhuan 烏桓 people, passim
 Red Mountain 赤山 group, 696, 899, 1028-29
 Wulei 烏壘 state, 745
 Wulin 烏林, see Red Cliffs
 Wuling 武陵 commandery, 1203
 Wuqi 五溪, see Five Streams
 wushu 五鑄, see coinage
 Wusun 烏孫 people, 5, 8, 252, 435, 796
 Wuwei 武威 commandery, 1208
 Wuxi 五溪, see Five Streams
 Wuxiao 五校 bandits, 70, 149, 180, 242, 256, 258, 261, 365, 383, 584, 744, 760, 825, 869
 Wuyang 武陽 in Jianwei, 54-55, 245-46, 740, 870
 Wuyang 舞陽 in Yingchuan, Princess, 544
 Lady, 315
 Wuyin 舞陰 in Nanyang, 1107
 Princesses, 486, 579
 Wuyuan 五原 commandery, 1209
 Xi 西 in Longxi [later in Hanyang], 54, 262, 318, 438, 460, 794, 818, 840, 849, 869, 898, 1112, 1154
 Xi'an 西安 in Qi, 926
 Xia 衿 sacrifice, see Di and Xia sacrifices
 Xiabian 下辯 in Wudu, 999
 Xiagui 下邳 in Jingzhao, 808, 837
 Xiakou 夏口 in Jiangxia, 769
 Xianbi 鮮卑 people, saepe, and see the biographies of Qizhijian and of Tanshihuai
 Xianglin 象林 in Rinan, 681
 Xiangyang 襄陽 in Nan commandery, 85, 181, 277, 446, 485, 686, 758, 769, 862, 905, 1018, 1052
 siege (219), 277, 504, 712, 838, 1056
 Xiangyang 襄陽 commandery, 683
 Xiangyi 襄邑 in Chenliu, 317, 902
 Xianling 先零 see Xianlian tribe of the Qiang
 Xianyang 咸陽 in Youfufeng, 225
 Xiao 蕭 in Pei, 529, 558, 560
 Xiao-Chang'an 小長安, battle (22), 52, 73, 111, 408, 426, 465, 488, 489, 519, 529, 558, 586, 594, 604, 682, 803, 810, 821
 Xiaopei 小沛 i.e. Pei city in Pei commandery
 Xiapi 下邳 commandery/kingdom, 1201
 Xiapi 下邳 in Xiapi, 34, 48, 244, 307, 343, 464, 479, 577, 606, 701, 772, 804, 875, 877, 902, 913, 949, 1042, 1062, 1083
 siege (198), 36, 67, 174, 244, 285, 321, 480, 625, 706, 708, 755, 820, 857, 912, 996, 1018, 1051, 1084
 Xiaquyang 下曲陽 in Julu, 281, 651, 1034
 Xi'e 西鄂 in Nanyang, 23, 185, 786
 Xifang 西防 in Shanyang, 180, 379
 Xihai 西海 commandery, 590,

- 691, 1070, 1207
 Xihe 西河 commandery, 1209
 Xincheng 新成 commandery, 667
 Xindu 信都 commandery, 1197
 Xindu 信都 in Xindu, 224, 442, 559, 638, 640, 695-96, 715, 798, 893, 971, 982, 1077, 1176
 Xinfeng 新豐 in Jingzhao, 209, 330, 875, 1101
 Xinping 新平 in Zuopingyi, 1111
 Xinshi 新市 in Jiangxia, 810, 821 Troops, 73, 196, 364, 434, 465, 487-88, 650, 810, 821, 1166
 Xinxing 新興 commandery, 1210
 Xinye 新野 in Nanyang, 111-13, 115, 132, 206, 488, 558, 682, 705, 979
 Lady 新野君, 111, 899, 974 Princess, 586
 Xiongnu 匈奴 people [Northern and Southern], see the biographical entries for Bi, for Dou Xian, and for Shanyu clans:
 Xiluo 醯落, 921
 Xiuchuge/Chuge 休著/屠各, 700, 898, 921, 1020, 1053, 1085
 Xubu 須卜, 921, 992, 1020
 Xiping 西平 in Jincheng, 377, 711 commandery, 177
 Xiping 西平 kingdom, 1195
 Xiuwu 脩武 in Henei, Princess, 473
 Xiye 西夜 state, 885
 Xu province 徐州, 1200
 Xu 許 city in Yingchuan, agricultural colonies at, 36, 297, 324, 716, 936, 1026 imperial capital transferred to, 36, 92, 141, 149, 156, 185, 233, 287, 302, 334, 427, 470, 555, 712, 814, 909, 928-29, 945, 949, 955, 958, 987, 1010, 1055, 1057, 1107, 1131, 1135 puppet imperial capital under Cao Cao, 63, 69, 95, 97, 102, 155, 255, 301, 319, 333, 360, 361, 362, 375, 459, 480, 505, 536, 543, 555, 587, 647, 662, 672, 678, 692, 779, 801, 807, 812, 823, 852, 873, 892, 929, 950, 1016, 1019, 1051, 1056, 1110-11, 1128
 Xuan xue 玄學, see Mysteries
 Xuantu 玄菟 commandery, 1212
 Xuchang 許昌, 901, and see Xu city
 Xunyang 尋陽 in Lujiang, 628
 Xunyi 枸邑 in Youfufeng, 1092
 Xuwu 徐無 in Youbeiping, hills, 790
 Yan province 兗州, 1198
 Yan Crossing 延津 of the Yellow River, 861, 996
 Yang Canal 陽渠, 472, 605, 1039 Bridge 陽渠橋, 653, and see Stone Bridge
 Yang province 揚州, 1203
 Yang'an 陽安 in Runan, Princess, 517
 commandery, 427
 Yangche Slope 楊車阪 in Hanzhong, 416
 Yangcheng 陽城 in Yingchuan, 307
 Yangdi 陽翟 in Yingchuan, 291 Princess, 566
 Yangping Pass 陽平關 in Hanzhong, 38, 246, 902, 943, 1077
 Yangping 陽平 in Dong [as a commandery], 750
 Yanmen 鴈門 commandery, 1210
 Yanqi 焉耆 state, 5-6, 8, 73, 195, 237, 252, 275, 277-78, 287, 292, 371, 476, 590, 744, 885, 1016, 1062, 1132
 Yan-Xin 厭新 "Detest the Xin dynasty" bandits, 532
 Yanzhi 闕氏, consort of the Xiongnu Shanyu, 256, 258
 Ye 鄴 in Wei, 52, 71, 132, 356, 420, 431, 539, 566, 868, 893, 1116 under the Cao family, 12, 37, 45, 51, 58, 81, 93, 102, 162, 185, 241, 293, 298, 303, 357, 368, 410, 462-63, 469, 639, 650, 654, 686, 700, 749, 768, 851, 884, 902, 914, 931, 954, 957, 962, 997, 1009, 1022, 1031, 1064, 1067, 1175; Prefect 令, 368
 under the Yuan family, 37, 42, 156, 218, 296, 408, 411, 467, 657, 667, 711, 730, 761, 788, 896, 899, 905, 916, 978, 987, 994, 1005, 1009, 1010, 1013, 1015, 1018, 1020, 1084, 1085, 1092, 1118
 Ye/She 葉 in Nanyang, 829
 Yellow Gates, Attendant 小黃門, 1218
 Yellow Gates, Gentleman 黃門侍郎, 1225
 Yellow Gates, Northern Prison 黃門北寺獄, 1218
 Yellow Gates, Prefect 黃門令, 1218
 Yellow Gates, Serving within 給事黃門, 1104, 1225
 Yellow Turban 黃巾 rebellion, see the biography of Zhang Jue
 Yewang 野王 in Henei, 422-23, 680, 1084
 Yi province 益州, 1204
 Yi 易 in Hejian, 271, 272, 276, 791, 864, 889
 Yicheng 宜城 in Nan commandery, 1100
 Yidao 夷道 in Nan commandery, 54, 432
 Yidu 宜都 in Nan [as a commandery], 207, 667, 1043
 Yiling 夷陵 in Nan commandery, 239, 791, 792, 896
 Yin'an 陰安 in Wei, Princess, 518
 Yingchuan 潁川 commandery, 1195
 Yingtao 嬰陶 in Julu, King [Liu Kui], 526
 Yingyin 潁陰 in Yingchuan,

- Princess, 520
- Yinping 陰平 in the Dependent State of Guanghan, 245-46
- Yinyang 陰陽 teachings, 80, 238, 292, 425, 456, 496, 688, 903, 949, 960, 1088, 1178
- Yique 伊闕 in Henan, 1037
- Yiwu/lu 伊吾/盧 in the Western Regions, 51, 125, 163, 432, 457, 468, 476, 606, 640, 664, 718, 780, 797, 937, 1016
- Yiyang 益陽 in Changsha, Princess, 396, 468
- Yiyang 宜陽 in Hongnong, 198, 225
- Yiyang 弋陽 in Runan [as a commandery], 794
- Yiyang 易陽 in Zhao, 905
- Yizhou 益州 commandery, 1206
- Yong 雍 province, 1193
- Yong Camp 雍營, 719, 1044, 1234
- Yong'an 永安 in Ba, 483
- Yongchang 永昌 commandery, 1206
- Yongle Palace [Perpetual Joy] 永樂宮, 147, 359, 937, 1217
- Steward 少府, 75, 200, 827, 914, 1218
- Yongning 永寧 in Kuaiji, 304, 311, 313
- Yongqiu 雍丘 in Chenliu, 995, 1017, 1025, 1037, 1069
- Yongyang 永陽 commandery, 313
- You province 幽州, 1211
- Youbeiping 右北平 commandery, 1212
- Youfufeng 右扶風 commandery, 1195
- Youlai 尤來 Mountain in Taishan, bandits, 71, 196, 539, 651, 766, 868, 893, 1019, 1035
- Yu province 豫州, 1195
- Yu River 滄水, 488, 567
- Yu Valleys 榆谷 on the upper Yellow River, 41, 140, 276, 674
- Yu 虞 in Liang, 580
- Yu 郇 in Ganling, 361, 1163
- Yuan River 沉水 in Wuling, 543, 889
- Yuanjie 允街 in Jincheng, 188
- Yuanwu 原武 in Henan, 108, 236, 1024
- Yuanya 允吾 in Jincheng, 21, 81, 301, 1180
- Yue 越 people of the south and southeast, 339, 442, 814, 963, 966, and see Shanyue
- Yue cloth 越布, 617
- Yue magic 越方, 617, 1094
- Yuexi 越嶠 commandery, 1206
- Yuezhi 月氏/支 peoples: Greater 大月氏 [Kushan], 2, 5-6, 94, 497, 590, 891, 973, 1132
- Little 小月氏 tribes [in northwest China], 14, 130, 168, 321, 590, 674, 685
- Yulin 鬱林 commandery, 1213
- Yunmeng 雲夢 marshland in Nan commandery, 193, 592, 599
- Yunzhong 雲中 commandery, 1210
- Yutian 于寘/于闐 state, 2, 5-6, 25, 94, 144, 192, 210, 277-78, 300, 372, 387, 590, 640, 699, 704, 709, 713, 723, 744, 745, 754, 780, 819, 861, 885, 897, 899, 916, 1021, 1102, 1132
- Yuyang 滄陽 in Nanyang, Princess, 530
- Yuyang 漁陽 commandery, 1211
- Yuzhang 豫章 commandery, 1204
- Yuzhong 榆中 in Jincheng, 1147
- Zangke 牂牁 commandery, 1205
- Zhang River 漳水, 641, 693, 1040
- Zhangling 章陵 in Nanyang, 595, 610
- commandery, 349, 399, 1111
- Zhanguo ce* 戰國策, 246, 706
- Zhangye 張掖 commandery, 1208
- Zhangye Dependent State 張掖屬國, 1208
- Zhao 趙 commandery/kingdom, 1198
- Zhencheng 鄆城 in Jiyin, King, 35, 51
- Zhending 真定 commandery/kingdom, 1197
- Zheng 鄭 in Jingzhao, 197, 535, 691
- Zhengqiang 征羌 in Runan, 379, 402
- zhibo* 直百, see coinage/currency
- Zhongmou 中牟 in Henan, 616, 632, 683, 716, 964
- Zhongshan 中山 commandery/kingdom, 1197
- Zhouzhi 熬屋 in Youfufeng, 633, 810-11
- Zhu'a 祝阿 in Pingyuan, 71, 261
- Zhuangzi 莊子, 448, 648
- Zhuo 涿 commandery, 1211
- Zhuoye Mountain 涿邪山 in Mongolia, 56, 171, 228, 796, 896, 919, 937, 1029
- Zichuan 蓄/淄川 commandery/kingdom, 1202
- Zigui 秭歸 in Nan commandery, 588
- Zong 寶 people, 191, 237, 415-16, and see Di 氏
- Zuodu 蓀都 people, 269, 420, 468, 607, 786, 790, 1158
- Zuoneishi 左內史 commandery, 435, 934
- Zuopingyi 左馮翊 commandery/kingdom, 1195

LIST OF STYLES

For each biographical entry, I include the style [zi 子] where it is known; when only the style of a person is recorded, it appears as a normal entry, though marked by brackets []. The list below provides cross-references from style to surname+personal name. In a few cases, we are told of the childhood name; these are also included.

- | | | |
|---------------------------|-----------------------------------|---------------------------|
| Aihou 哀侯=Yang You 楊由 | Bofang 伯方=Liang Mao 涼茂 | Bokuang 伯況=Su Jing 蘇竟 |
| Aman 阿瞞=Cao Cao 曹操 | Bofu 伯符=Sun Ce 孫策 | Bokuang 伯況=Zhou Dang 周黨 |
| Anguo 安國=Guan Xing 關興 | Bogao 伯高=Long Shu 龍述 | Boguo 伯括=Du Chong 杜崇 |
| Asu 阿蘇=Qin Lang 秦朗 | Bogao 伯高=Zhao Song 趙嵩 | Bolang 伯郎=Meng Tuo 孟佗 |
| Ayi 阿巖=Pang Jian 龐儉 | Bogong 伯恭=Zhang Yi 張翼 | Boli 伯儺=Song/Zong Ju 宋/宗俱 |
| Ban 母班=Humu Jipi 胡母季皮 | Bogui 伯珪/圭 | Boli 伯儺=Zong/Song Ju 宗/宋俱 |
| Baojian 堅寶=Xu Xuan 徐宣 | =Gongsun Zan 公孫瓚 | Boliang 伯梁=Wei Heng 衛衡 |
| Benchu 本初=Yuan Shao 袁紹 | Boguo 伯括=Du Chong 杜崇 | Bolin 伯麟=Liu Xiu 劉脩/修 |
| Biecheng 別成=Fu Gan 傅幹 | Bohai 伯海=Sun He 孫河 | Boling 伯靈=Zhu Gui 朱龜 |
| Binbo 賓伯=Fei Guan 費觀 | Bohai 伯海=Zhong Xin 仲訢 | Boluan 伯鸞=Liang Hong 梁鴻 |
| Binqing 邠卿=Zhao Qi 趙岐/歧 | Bohao 伯豪=Zuo Xiong 左雄 | Bomi 伯彌=Feng Sheng 逢盛 |
| Binshi 寶石=Sun Song 孫嵩/崧 | Bohe 伯和=Liu Xie 劉協 | Bomiaio 伯苗=Deng Zhi 鄧芝 |
| Binshuo 賓碩=Sun Song 孫嵩/崧 | Bohe 伯河 | Boming 伯明=Li Guang 李光 |
| Bo'an 伯安=Liu Yu 劉虞 | =Huang Shang/Xiang 黃尚/向 | Boming 伯明=Li Zhao 李昭 |
| Boben 伯本=Kong Dan 孔耽 | Bohe 伯闔=Dan Wang 但望 | Bonan 伯南 |
| Bobing 伯并=Tangxi Dian 堂谿典 | Bohou 伯侯=Du Ji 杜畿 | =Han Yan/Yin 韓續/演/寅 |
| Bochang 伯長=Liu Shou 劉壽 | Bohou 伯厚=Zhu Zhen 朱震 | Bonan 伯南=Qin Shao 秦邵/邵 |
| Bochu 伯初=Geng Bing 耿秉 | Bohuai 伯淮=Jiang Gong 姜肱 | Bonan 伯南=Wu Zhou 武周 |
| Bochu 伯楚=Yuan Peng 袁彭 | Bohuai 伯槐=Chang Lin 常_林 | Boneng 伯能 |
| Bochun 伯春=Huan Yu 桓虞 | Bohuan 伯桓 | =Deng Sheng/Cheng 鄧盛 |
| Bochun 伯春=Shao Xun 召馴 | =Yong Wang/Yi 雍望/翌 | Boning 伯寧=Man Chong 滿寵 |
| Bochun 伯春=Wei Xun 隗恂 | Boji 伯奇=Yue Hui 樂恢 | Bopi 伯邳 |
| Bochun 伯春=Zhang Chong 張充 | Boji 伯濟=Guo Huai 郭淮 | =Yang Huai/Zhun 楊淮/準 |
| Bochun 伯澗=Liang Hong 梁鴻 | Boji 伯濟=Xu Ying 徐英 | Boping 伯平=Qin Peng 秦彭 |
| Boda 伯達=Sima Lang 司馬朗 | Boji 伯紀=Luo Yan 羅衍 | Boping 伯平=Zhou Xi 州熹 |
| Boda 伯達=Xu Shu 徐淑 | Bojian 伯儉=Yan Wen 閻溫 | Boping 博平=Du Shang 度尚 |
| Boda 伯達=Zhang Yu 張禹 | Bojian 伯堅=Du Gen 杜根 | Boqi 伯奇=Han Lang 寒朗 |
| Boda 伯達=Ren Jun 任峻 | Bojian 伯堅=Zheng Gu 鄭固 | Boqi 伯岐=Zhang Yi 張巖 |
| Boda 伯達=Zhang Min 張敏 | Bojian 伯堅=Zhou Pan 周磐 | Boqi 伯岐=Zou Bin 鄒邠 |
| Bodao 伯道=Hao Zhao 郝昭 | Bojian 伯建=Hu Yi 胡伊 | Boqi 伯旗=Xun Qi 荀祈 |
| Bodao 伯道=Qiao Shu 橋術 | Bojie 伯喈=Cai Yong 蔡邕 ¹ | Boqi 伯起=Wen Yi 溫益 |
| Bode 伯德=Zhou Tang 州湯 | Bojin 伯進=Xu Shu 徐淑 | Boqi 伯起=Yang Zhen 楊震 |
| Bodu 伯度=Dou Xian 竇憲 | Boju 伯舉=Yin Mao 尹茂 | Boqi 伯齊=Hu Zheng 胡整 |
| Bodu 伯度=Li Fa 李法 | Boju 伯車=Liang Ji 梁冀 | Boqian 伯謙 |
| Bodu 伯度=Ren Xun 任循 | Bokang 伯康=Wu Kuang 吳匡 | =Xianyu Huang 鮮于璜 |
| Bodu 伯都=Li Xi 李翕 | Bokao 伯考=Zhi Shou 鄧壽 | Boqian 伯騫=Liu Zong 柳宗 |
| Bodun 伯敦=Wang Chun 王純 | Bokuang 伯況=Liu Fang 劉方 | Boqian 伯騫=Ma Shi 馬寔/實 |

¹ There was another Cai Bojie, whose personal name is not recorded.

- Boqiang 伯彊=Zhang Tai 張泰
 Boqin 伯禽=Shen Fu 沈輔
 Boqin 伯禽=Zhu Pu 朱普
 Boqing 伯卿=Ren Guang 任光
 Boqiu 伯求=He Yong 何顥
 Boran 伯然=Zhao Kuan 趙寬
 Boran 伯然=Zhao Yan 趙儼
 Borang 伯讓=Chen Qian 陳謙
 Borao 伯饒=Xu De 許德
 Borao 伯饒=Zhang Ba 張霸
 Boren 伯仁=Chen Bao 陳褒
 Boren 伯仁=Li You 李尤
 Boren 伯仁=Zhang Chun 張純
 Boren 侯伯仁
 =Xiahou Shang 夏侯尚
 Borong 伯榮=Wang Yong 王永
 Boru 伯儒=Wei Ji 衛覲
 Boshan 伯山=Cao Zeng 曹曾
 Boshan 伯山=Dou Lin 杜林
 Boshan 伯山=Geng Chun 耿純
 Boshen 伯慎=Zhang Wen 張溫
 Bosheng 伯升=Liu Yan/Yin 劉縯
 Bosheng 伯升=Tan Xian 譚賢
 Bosheng 伯盛=Hou Cheng 侯成
 Boshi 伯世=Sheng Yun 盛允
 Boshi 伯始
 =Han Leng/Ling 韓棱/稜
 Boshi 伯始=Hu Guang 胡廣
 Boshi 伯師=Cao Zhong 曹眾
 Boshi 伯師=Yin Mu 尹睦
 Boshi 伯師=Zhao Jun 趙峻
 Boshi 伯式=Zhe Xiang 折像/象
 Boshi 伯時=Shi Chen 史晨
 Boshi 伯時=Zhou Chang 周暢
 Boshu 伯篠=Xun Kun 荀緄
 Bosi 伯嗣=Ren Yin 任胤
 Bosun 伯孫=Liang Song 梁松
 Bota 伯達=Gao Hui 高恢
 Botai 伯泰=Zhao Shao 趙邵
 Botai 伯臺=Chen Ya 陳雅
 Botiao 伯條
 =Xun Yu/Yi 荀昱/翊/翌
 Botong 伯通=Peng Chong 彭寵
 Bowei 伯威=Liang Qin 梁懂
 Bowei 伯威=Ma Leng 馬棱
 Bowei 伯瑋=Geng Xun 耿勳
 Bowen 伯文=Fu Long 伏隆
 Bowen 伯文=Yue Ji 樂己
- Bowu 伯武=Fang Zhi 房植
 Bowu 伯武=Gao Hong 高弘
 Boxi 伯僖=Zhang Shou 張壽
 Boxia 伯夏=Liang Shang 梁商
 Boxian 伯先=Liu Zhi 劉植
 Boxian 伯獻=Yang Ci 楊賜
 Boxiang 伯向=Dou Zhang 竇章
 Boxiang 伯庠=Deng Bao 鄧豹
 Boxiao 伯蕭=Bi Feng 費鳳
 Boxin 伯信=Lu Xun 陸遜
 Boxing 伯興=Liu Ban 劉般
 Boxing 伯興=Wang Ji 王基
 Boxing 伯行=Teng Yan 滕延
 Boxiu 伯休=Han Kang 韓康
 Boxiu 伯休=Zhu Tian 祝恬
 Boxiu 伯修
 see Xun Yu/Yi 荀昱/翊/翌
 Boxu 伯徐=Kang Xu 抗徐
 Boxu 伯緒=Huan Jie 桓階
 Boya 伯雅=Zhang De 張德
 Boya 伯雅=Zhang Xuan 張玄
 Boyan 伯彥=Han Kui 韓揆
 Boyang 伯陽=Sun Ben 孫賁
 Boyang 伯陽=Xia Fang 夏方
 Boyang 伯陽
 =Yang Feng/A'ruo 楊豐/阿若
 Boyang 伯陽
 =Zhao Xi 趙熹/壹/熹
 Boye 伯業=Wang Zun 王尊 IV
 Boye 伯業=Yuan Yi 袁遺
 Boyi 伯義=Cheng Xin 程信
 Boyi 伯儀=Zhong Qiu 仲球
 Boyi 伯夷=Dou An 杜安
 Boyi 伯奕=Jiang Xu 姜敘
 Boyi 伯益=Guo Yi 郭奕
 Boyi 伯益=Guo Yi 郭奕
 Boyi 伯義/儀=Wang Zhang/
 Shang 王章/璋/商
 Boyi 伯邑=Zheng Qin 鄭勤/廛
 Boyin 伯尹=Xiang Bao 向豹
 Boying 伯應=Xuan Feng 宣豐
 Boying 伯英=Zhang Zhi 張芝
 Boyou 伯游=Li Xiu 李脩/修
 Boyou 伯猷=Yang Ci 楊賜
 Boyou 伯儵
 see Xun Yu/Yi 荀昱/翊/翌
 Boyu 伯於=Hu Su 胡肅
 Boyu 伯玉=Li Shu 李儵
- Boyu 伯玉=Tian Yi 田邑
 Boyu 伯玉=Wang Zhang 王璋
 Boyu 伯玉=Wei Zheng 魏整
 Boyu 伯瑜=Dou Qiong 杜瓊
 Boyu 伯豫=Li Quan 李權
 Boyu 伯豫=Liu Kai 劉愷
 Boyu 伯輿=Wang Ji 王基
 Boyu 伯遇=Song Feng 宋豐/豐
 Boyu 伯魚=Diwu Lun 第五倫
 Boyuan 伯元=Liang Wei 梁鮪
 Boyuan 伯元=Yin Xun 尹勳
 Boyue 伯約=Jiang Wei 姜維
 Bozai 伯載=Zhang Chao 張超
 Bozhang 伯張=Xu Gan 徐幹
 Bozhao 伯昭=Geng Yan 耿弇
 Bozhang 伯昭=Wang Hui 王暉
 Bozhen 伯珍=Lai Li 來歷
 Bozhen 伯真
 =Deng Sheng/Cheng 鄧盛
 Bozhen 伯真=Chen Qiu 陳球
 Bozhi 伯志=Sima Deng 司馬登
 Bozhi 伯志
 =Song/Zong Yi 宋/宗意
 Bozhi 伯志
 =Zong/Song Yi 宗/宋意
 Bozhi 伯持=Zhou Chang 周暢
 Bozhi 伯直=Cai Leng 蔡稜
 Bozhu 伯重=Hu Lei 扈累
 Bozhou 伯周=Xie Yun 謝惲
 Bozhu 伯著=Yong Dou 雍竇
 Bozhuo 伯卓=Liang Ji 梁冀
 Bozong 伯宗=Geng Gong 耿恭
 Bozong 伯宗=Liu Qin 劉勤
 Bozong 伯宗=Wang Gong 王龔
 Bozong 伯宗=Xia Qin 夏勤
 Bozong 伯宗=Zhang Sui 張睢
 Bozu 伯祖=Liu You 劉祐
 Cangshu 倉舒=Cao Chong 曹沖
 Chanbo 產伯
 =Chao Hanjiang 鼂漢薑/彊
 Changbo 鄭長伯
 =Zheng Chun 鄭純
 Changchong 長沖
 =Xi Guang 錫光
 Changde 長德=Wang Chang 王萇
 Changhua 萇華=Fei Zhi 肥貉
 Changji 長季=Han Chong 韓崇
 Changjun 長君=Zhao Ye 趙曄

- Changping 長平=Ma Kuang 馬況
 Changping 長平=Zhao Xiao 趙孝
 Changqing 長倩=Xun Yun 荀惲
 Changquan 長全=Guo Jiu 郭究
 Changsheng 長生=Guan Yu 關羽
 Changsheng 長生=Zhou Shu 周樹
 Changsun 長孫=Chen Yuan 陳元
 Changsun 長孫=Ren Yan 任延
 Changwen 長文=Chen Qun 陳羣
 Changwen 長文
 =Wang Hong 王宏
 Changwen 長文=Zhen Yu 甄宇
 Changxu 長緒=Sun Shao 孫邵
 Changyu 長魚=Fan Shu 樊儵/儵
 Chanruo 彥若=He Zong 何宗
 Chanying 彥英=He Zong 何宗
 Chaoguang 昭光
 =Ren Gu/Jia 任覈
 Chengbo 承伯=Ma Qi 馬齊
 Chengguo 成國=Liu Xi 劉熙
 Chengming 承明=Pan Jun 潘溶
 Chengyuan 承淵=Ding Feng 丁奉
 Chouhou 紬侯=Guo Ji 郭伋
 Chun'guang 春光
 =Gongsun Ye 公孫曄
 Chunqing 春卿=Huan Rong 桓榮
 Chunqing 春卿
 =Yang Guang 楊廣
 Chuqi 初起=Qin Jie/Xie 秦頡
 Churen 處仁=Zhang Cun 張存
 Chushan 初山=He Chang 何萇
 Chuxu 處虛=Zhang Xuan 張玄
 Cibo 次伯=Jiang Ge 江革
 Ciming 慈明
 =Xun Shuang/Yu 荀爽/譚
 Ciqing 慈卿=Wang Wang 王望
 Ciqing 次卿=Yan Yan 嚴延
 Cisun 次孫=Li Shan 李善
 Ciwen 次文=Zhong Xing 鍾興
 Ciweng 次翁=Jiang Ge 江革
 Ciyang 次陽=Yuan Wei 袁隗
 Dachun 大春=Jing Dan 井丹
 Dafang 大房
 =Xin Tong/Yong 辛彤/彤
 Daguo 大國=Liu Yi 劉逸
 Daiping 代平=Sun Lang 孫朗
 Daming 大明=Zhou Xin 周昕
 Daochu 道初=Cui Jiu 崔湫
 =Wenren Xi 聞人襲
 Daohe 道和=Cui Wen 崔溫
 Daozhen 道真=Yin Zhen 尹珍
 Daxun 大遜=Li Chong 李充
 Dayi 太儀=Wu Liang 吳良
 De'ang 德印=Li Yong 李顥
 De'ang 德昂=Li Hui 李恢
 Decao 德操=Sima Hui 司馬徽
 Dedu 德度=Zhao Zi 趙咨
 Degao 德高=Han Song 韓嵩
 Degong 德公=Li Xie 李燮
 Degong 德公=Wei Zhao 魏昭
 Deguang 德光=Gong Jiao 龔曠
 Degui 德珪=Cai Mao 蔡瑁
 Delian 德璉=Ying Chang 應瑒
 Demou 德謀=Cheng Pu 程普
 Derang 德讓=Kong Qian 孔謙
 Derong 德容=Zhang Ji 張既
 Deru 德儒=Cui Lin 崔林
 Derun 德潤=Kan Ze 闕澤
 Deshan 山=Feng Dai 馮岱
 Deshan 德山=Deng Fang 鄧方
 Deshan 德山=Wu Liang 五梁
 Deshu 德樞=Cheng Bing 程秉
 Deshu 德樞=Cheng Ping 程秉
 Desi 德嗣=Yin Li 殷禮
 Deta 德達=Sun Li 孫禮
 Dewei 德偉=Lei Huang 韋晃
 Dewei 德偉=Jin Yi 金禕
 Dexian 德賢=Li Ren 李仁
 Dexin 德信=Ma Zhong 馬忠
 Dexiong 信=Mu Bing 沐并
 Dexu 德緒=Gong Lu 龔祿
 Deyan 德豔=Zong Yu 宗預
 Deyao 德曜=Meng Guang 孟光
 Deyi 德禕=Jin Yi 金禕
 Deyu 德瑜=Wu Qiong 伍瓊
 Deyun 德雲=Fan Ling 樊陵
 Deyu 德瑜=Wu Fu 伍孚
 Dezhong 德仲=Yang Zong 楊宗
 Dezhou 德胄=Shi Miao 時苗
 Dezu 德祖=Yang Xiu 楊脩
 Digong 第公=Li Zhang 李章
 Ding'an 安定=He Jin 何進
 Ding'an 定安=Yu Xu 虞詡
 Dinggong 定公=Geng Kui 耿夔
 Dinggong 定公=Lü Dai 呂岱
 Dingqing 人定卿
 =Wenren Xi 聞人襲
 Dingzu 定祖=Ren An 任安
 Disun 弟孫=Zhai Zun 祭遵
 Fangzheng 方正=Yang Qiu 陽球
 Fenggao 奉高=Yuan Lang 袁閔
 Fengqing 奉倩=Xun Can 荀粲
 Fengqing 奉卿=Gao Hong 皋閔
 Fengxian 奉先=Liu Zu 劉祖
 Fengxian 奉先=Lü Bu 呂布
 Fengxiao 孝奉=Guo Jia 郭嘉
 Fengxun 奉遜=Li Hong 李鴻
 Fucheng 甫成=Guo Fu 郭輔
 Fuguo 輔國=Li Yi 李翊
 Fuguo 輔國=Xue Biao 薛彪
 Fuluan 輔鸞=Xie Bi 謝弼
 Fuxing 甫興/輔興
 =Shang/Xiang Xu 尚/向詡/栩
 Fuxing 甫興/輔興
 =Xiang/Shang Xu 向/向栩/詡
 Fuxiu 甫休
 =Wei Duan/Rui 韋端/瑞
 Fuxuan 輔宣=Xie Bi 謝弼
 Gaoqing 高卿=Fa Zhen 法真
 Genju 根矩=Bing Yuan 邴原
 Gong'a 公阿=Zhao Bing 趙炳/炳
 Gongbi 公弼=Xu Xiang 許相
 Gongchao 公超=Tao Shuo 陶碩
 Gongchao 公超=Zhang Kai 張楷
 Gongda 公達=Xun You 荀彧
 Gongdu 公度=Sima Liang 司馬量
 Gongfang 公房=Guo Xi 郭禧/僖
 Gongfang 公方=Meng Ying 孟英
 Gongfang 公方=Zhang Qian 張遷
 Gongfen 公憤=Zhao Tai 趙臺
 Gongfu 公甫=Zhao Xin 趙訢
 Gongfu 公覆=Huang Gai 黃蓋
 Gongfu 公輔=Han Yi 韓翼
 Gongfu 公輔=Lu Kuang 魯匡
 Gonggan 公幹=Liu Zhen 劉楨
 Gonggao 公高=Xun Wei 荀緯
 Gongheng 公衡
 =Huang Quan 黃權
 Gongji 公紀=Lu Ji 陸績
 Gongji 尹功季=Yin Min 尹敏
 Gongjie 公節=Wang Kuang 王匡
 Gongjin 公瑾=Zhou Yu 周瑜
 Gongju 公舉=Fei Shi 費詩
 Gongli 公禮=Sun Shao 孫韶

- Gongli 公里
=Zhongchang Tong 仲長統
- Gongliang 公梁=Zhao Song 趙誦
- Gongliang 公良=Du Kui 杜夔
- Gonglu 公路=Yuan Shu 袁術
- Gongmiao 公苗=He Qi 賀齊
- Gongming 公明=Xu Huang 徐晃
- Gongping 公平=Ma Fang 馬防
- Gongqi 公旗/祺=Zhang Lu 張魯
- Gongqian 公謙=Shi Bi 史弼
- Gongqing 公卿=Wang Jia 王嘉
- Gongran 公然=Wang Qing 王青
- Gongren 公仁=Dong Zhao 董昭
- Gongshan 公山=Liu Dai 劉岱
- Gongshan 公山=Liu Dai 劉岱
- Gongshi 公始=Zhang Fang 張方
- Gongshu 公叔=Zhu Mu 朱穆
- Gongsi 公嗣=Liu Shan/Chan 劉禪
- Gongsi 公嗣=Liu Yi 劉廙
- Gongsun 公孫=Yin Song 尹頌/訟
- Gongtai 公臺=Chen Gong 陳宮
- Gongti 公悌=Fu Xuan 傅選
- Gongting 公挺=Yang Qi 楊琦/奇
- Gongwei 公偉=Yang Qi 楊琦/奇
- Gongwei 公偉=Zhu Jun 朱儁/雋
- Gongwei 公威=Meng Jian 孟建
- Gongwei 公瑋=Chen Yu 陳瑀
- Gongwen 公文
=Guo Liang 郭涼/涼
- Gongxi 公喜/熙=Yuan Pang 袁滂
- Gongxian 公先=Su Buwei 蘇不韋
- Gongxian 公先
=Zhang Cheng 張承
- Gongxian 公先=Zhang Feng 張奉
- Gongxiang 公向=Feng Ti 馮趯
- Gongxiao 公孝=Cen Zhi 岑晫
- Gongxin 公信=Feng Yuan 馮允
- Gongxin 公信=Feng Yun 馮允
- Gongxing 興=Hu Qian 胡潛
- Gongxiu 公休=Li Xuan 李宣
- Gongxiu 公休=Wu Can 吳粲
- Gongxu 公緒
=Kong Zhou 孔侑/胄
- Gongxu 公緒=Luo Tong 駱俊
- Gongxu 公績=Ling Tong 凌統
- Gongxuan 公選
=Wang Hong 王閔
- Gongya 公雅=Huan Dian 桓典
- Gongyan 公琰=Huang Wan 黃琬
- Gongyan 公琰=Jiang Wan 蔣琬
- Gongye 公業=Zheng Tai 鄭泰/太
- Gongyi 公儀=Zhang Biao 張表
- Gongyi 公儀=Zhang Fan 張範
- Gongyi 公奕=Jiang Qin 蔣欽
- Gongyou 公淤
=Dongguo Yannian 東郭延年
- Gongyou 公祐=Sun Gan 孫乾
- Gongyuan 公元=Zhu Mu 朱穆
- Gongyuan 公圓=Zhou Gui 周規
- Gongyuan 公淵=Liao Li 廖立
- Gongzai 公載=Guo Zhi 郭芝
- Gongze 公則=Guo Tu 郭圖
- Gongzhen 公振=Wei Zhen 衛臻
- Gongzhi 公知=Xiang Kai 襄楷
- Gongzhi 公至=Han Ji 韓暨
- Gongzhong 公仲=Yan Gan 嚴幹
- Gongzhong 公仲
=Liu Xi/Jia 劉喜/嘉
- Gongzhu 公助=Wang Fu 王輔
- Gongzi 公子=Xue Han 薛漢
- Gongzi 公次=Wen Xu 溫序
- Gongzu 公祖=Chong Dai 种岱
- Gongzu 公祖=Qiao Xuan 橋玄
- Gongzu 恭祖=Ba Su 巴肅
- Gongzu 恭祖=Tao Qian 陶謙
- Gongzu 恭祖=Xue Qin 薛勤
- Guangshi 廣世=Chen Chong 陳充
- Guangyuan 廣元=Shi Tao 石韜
- Guofu 國輔=Dü Wei 杜微
- Guoping 國平=Qin Peng 秦彭
- Guorang 國讓=Tian Yu 田豫
- Guoshan 國山=Wang Fu 王甫
- Guoyi 國儀=Sun Fu 孫輔
- Hanbo 漢伯=Jing Luan 景鸞
- Handa 漢達=Qiao Min 譙敏
- Hanfeng 漢豐=Cao Jie 曹節
- Hangong 漢公=Chen Dan 陳耽
- Hanhe 含和=Wu Rong 武榮
- Hannan 漢南=Li Miao 李邈
- Hanru 漢儒=Liang Fu 諒輔
- Hansheng 漢升
=Huang Zhong 黃忠
- Hansheng 漢盛
=Lü Qiang 呂彊/強
- Hanwen 漢文=Dong Yi 董翊
- Hanyu 漢瑜=Chen Gui 陳珪
- Hanzong 漢宗=Dong Hui 董恢
- Hengzhi 恆直
=Guo Liang 郭亮/諒
- Hongbo 弘伯=Qian Hong 騫宏
- Hongmo 鴻默=Li Hu 李護
- Hongqing 鴻卿=Feng Gun 馮緄
- Hongqing 鴻卿=Xu Jing 許敬
- Hongsi 弘嗣=Wei Zhao 韋昭
- Hongyu 鴻豫=Chi Lü 郗慮
- Houguang 侯光
=Yunqi Yao 運期耀
- Houqing 厚卿=Yuan Liang 袁良
- Hua Ziyu 子魚=Hua Xin 華歆
- Huangong 桓公=Liu Kun 劉昆/琨
- Huangong 桓公=Su Chun 蘇純
- Huangqing 皇卿=Feng Gun 馮緄
- Huanzhong 桓鍾=Guo Zhen 郭鎮
- Huazhong 華中=Ying Shun 應順
- Huida 惠達=Sima Jin 司馬進
- Huigong 惠公=Fu Zhan 伏湛
- Huigong 惠公=Guo He 郭賀
- Huiji 惠姬=Ban Zhao 班昭
- Huimeng 惠孟=Wang Yuan 王元
- Huiqing 惠卿=Xu Shu 許淑
- Huishu 惠怒=Zhang Wen 張溫
- Huiwen 惠文=Zhou Jia 周嘉
- Huzi 胡子=Liu Lin 劉林/臨
- Jiajing 嘉景=Pi Xiang 蕃嚮
- Jiamou 嘉謀=Zhou Zhong 周忠
- Jianbo 堅伯=Zhou Pan 周磐
- Jiangong 建公=Sima Fang 司馬防
- Jiangping 江平=Ma Fang 馬防
- Jianhou 建侯=Zhao Dun 趙敦
- Jianshou 建壽=Kong Yao 孔曜
- Jianxian 建賢=Li Li 李立
- Jianyang 建陽=Ding Yuan 丁原
- Jibao 季寶=Yang Mao 羊茂
- Jibao 季豹
=Cao Gan/Lang 曹幹/良
- Jiben 季本=Jin Yuan 金援
- Jibi 季弼=Chen Jiao 陳矯
- Jibo 機伯=Yin Ji 尹籍
- Jicai 季才=Lu Jun 陸駿
- Jicai 季才=Yang Jun 楊俊
- Jicai 季纜=Xu Yi 徐奕
- Jichan 季產=Zheng Zhong 鄭眾
- Jichang 季常=Ma Liang 馬良
- Jichang 季長=Ma Rong 馬融

- Jicheng 季承=Liu He 劉郃
 Jicheng 季誠=Feng Xin 馮信
 Jida 季達=Sima Kui 司馬馮
 Jidao 季道=Wang Ze 王澤
 Jide 季德=Lai Yan 來豔
 Jidu 季度=Tangxi Xie 堂谿協
 Jiexin 節信=Wang Fu 王符
 Jieying 節英=Duan Gong 段恭
 Jiezai 節宰=Zhao Yue 昭約
 Jifang 季方=Chen Chen 陳謹
 Jigao 季高=Fan Ying 樊英
 Jigao 季高=Wu Xiong 吳雄
 Jigong 季公=Ding Hong 丁鴻
 Jigong 季公=Li Zi/Ci 李茲/慈
 Jigong 季公=Wang Gong 王恭
 Jigui 季珪=Cui Yan 崔琰
 Jigu 季過=Geng Ye 耿暉
 Jihe 季和=Xun Shu 荀淑
 Jihong 季鴻=Gu Feng 顧奉
 Jihui 季回=Gao Xu 高詡
 Jiji/qi 季期=Zhang Xie 張協
 Jijiang 季姜=Wen Ji 文極
 Jijiang 季將=Kong Zhou 孔宙
 Jijie 季節=Liu Yu 劉瑜
 Jijie 季節=Wei Yi 韋義
 Jiliang 季良=Du Bao 杜保
 Jilin 季林=Liu Sheng 劉勝
 Jiling 季陵=Liu Sheng 劉勝
 Jimeng 季孟=Wei Ao 隗囂
 Jiming 季明=Cheng Yishi 成翊世
 Jiming 季明=Liu Xi 劉喜/憲/熹
 Jiming 季明=Sun Huan 孫奂
 Jiming 季明=Wei Bao 韋豹
 Jiming 季明=Zhong Hao 鍾皓
 Jiming 季明=Duan Jiong 段熲
 Jimo 季默=Cheng Ji 程畿
 Jimou 季謀=Fa Yan 法衍
 Ji'nan 季南=Guo Zhen 郭鎮
 Jin'e 進娥=Li Er 李珥
 Jingbo 敬伯=Wang Tang 王堂
 Jingbo 景伯=Chong Gao 種高
 Jingbo 景伯=Jia Kui 賈逵
 Jingbo 景伯=Yuan Bao 袁苞
 Jingcai 敬才=Hu Miao 胡邈
 Jingcheng 景成=Dai Jiu 戴就
 Jingda 敬達=Meng Yu 孟軻/郁
 Jingda 敬達=Lai Min 來敏
 Jingdao 敬道=Dou Tong 竇統
 Jingfeng 敬風=Lu Kai 陸凱
 Jinggong 敬公=Gao Huo 高獲
 Jinggong 敬公=Xia Gong 夏恭
 Jinggong 景公=Chen Zhong 陳重
 Jingli 敬禮=Ding Yi 丁廙
 Jingliao 景遼=Tang Chao 唐超
 Jingming 景明=Zhang Dao 張導
 Jingping 敬平=Ma Liao 馬廖
 Jingqing 景情=Xun Yi 荀顛
 Jingqing 景卿=Shisun Fen 士孫奮
 Jingran 景然=Han Xuan 韓宣
 Jingrang 敬讓=Zhang Xin 張歆
 Jingshan 景山=Xu Miao 徐邈
 Jingsheng 景升=Liu Biao 劉表
 Jingsun 經孫=Liu Xi 劉歛
 Jingtong 敬通=Feng Yan 馮衍
 Jingwen 敬文=Xue Zong 薛綜
 Jingxing 景興
 =Wang Lang/Yan 王朗/嚴
 Jingyou 景由=He Wen 何汶
 Jingyu 敬輿=Liu Ji 劉基
 Jingyuan 景完=Cao Quan 曹全
 Jingzai 景載=Zheng Yan 鄭彥
 Jingzhong 敬仲=Cai Lun 蔡倫
 Jingzhong 敬仲=Wei Hong 衛宏
 Jingzu 敬祖=Ba Zhi 巴祇
 Jini 季尼=Liu Yao 劉曜
 Jining 季寧=Lu Kang 陸康
 Jiping 季平=Lü Kai 呂凱
 Jiping 季平=Xi/Yuan Yan 奚/爰延
 Jiping 季平=Yuan/Xi Yan 爰/奚延
 Jiping 季平=Zheng Zhong 鄭眾
 Jiping 機平=Yang Xuan 楊璇/璇
 Jipu 季醕=Wang Zheng 王政
 Jiqi 季齊=Fan Ying 樊英
 Jiqi/ji 季期=Zhang Xie 張協
 Jiqing 季卿=Ren Tang 任棠
 Jiquan 季權=Xiahou Wei 夏侯威
 Jique 季闕=Xu Xu 許栩
 Jiran 季然=Cheng Ji 程畿
 Jirui 季叡=Hu Shuo 胡碩
 Jishan 季山=Xu Jun 許峻
 Jishan 紀山=Chen Shan 陳禪
 Jishi 季士=Li Yu 李禹
 Jishi 季師=Xu Xun 許訓
 Jishu 季叔=Yang Feng 楊奉
 Jitu 紀圖=Fu Bao 傅保/寶
 Jiwei 季偉/瑋=Mao Rong 茅容
 Jiwei 季爲=Miao Hong 繆紅
 Jiwen 季文=Li Yi 李軼
 Jixi 季習=Wang Bo 王博
 Jixing 季興=Cao Teng 曹騰
 Jixing 季行=Geng Ji 耿紀
 Jixiu 季休=Yang Hong 楊洪
 Jixu 季緒=Liu Xiu 劉脩
 Jiya 季雅=Dü Du 杜篤
 Jiyang 紀陽=Dong Chun 董春
 Jiye 季意=Liu Cheng 劉丞
 Jiying 季英=Wu You 吳祐/佑
 Jiyou 季友=Humu Ban 胡毋班
 Jiye 季玉=Liu Zhang 劉璋
 Jiye 季瑜=Ying Xun 應珣
 Jiye 季遇=Geng Ye 耿暉
 Jize 季則=Ma Xu 馬續
 Jizhi 季智
 =Qiu Lan/Xiang 仇覽/香
 Jizhi 季智=Qiu Lingju 丘靈舉
 Jizhi 季智=Yuan Bo 袁博
 Jizhi 季智=Zhang Xi 張熹
 Jizhi 季直=Dong Yu 董遇
 Jizhi 季直=Zhi Xun 摯恂
 Jizhong 季重=Wu Zhi 吳質
 Jizhou 季周=Xie Du 謝篤
 Jizhu 季主=Ma Yuan 馬員
 Jizi 季子=Li Li 李歷
 Jizu 季租=Feng Xun 馮巡
 Jizuo 季佐=Sun Kuang 孫匡
 Jubo 巨伯
 =Liu Zhi/Zhong 劉祉/終
 Juda 巨達=Xiang Lang 向朗
 Jugao 巨高=Cao Song 曹嵩
 Jugong 巨公=Guo Min 郭昱
 Jugong 巨公=Xuan Bing 宣秉
 Jugong 巨公=Zhu Zeng 竺曾
 Juguang 巨光=Pei Mao 裴茂
 Jujian 巨堅=Zhou Chao 州超
 Jujun 巨君=Zheng Hong 鄭弘/宏
 Jun'ai 儁乂=Zhang He 張郃
 Junbo 君伯=Wei Ying 魏應
 Junce 君策=Shisun Rui 士孫瑞
 Junchang 君長=Bao Yong 鮑永
 Junchang 君長=Yin Mo 殷謨
 Junchu 君初=Zhao Zi 趙咨
 Junda 君大=Xun Ren 郇/荀恂
 Junda 君達=Sheng Ji 盛吉
 Junda 君達=Feng Gao 封告

- Junda 君達=Feng Heng 封衡
 Junda 君達=Geng Bao 耿寶
 Junfang 君房=Hou Ba 侯霸
 Jungao 君高=Mou Zhang 牟張/長
 Jungong 君公=Du Shi 杜詩
 Jungong 君公=Wang Zun 王遵
 Jungong 君貢=Zhuge Gui 諸葛珪
 Junguang 君光=Zhou Jing 周憬
 Junhuang 君黃=Qiao Xuan 譙玄
 Junji/qi 君期=Lu Fang 盧芳/方
 Junju 君舉=Yang Tiao 楊調
 Junlang 君郎/朗=Liu Yan 劉焉
 Junlang 君郎=Feng Liang 馮良
 Junli 君理=Zhu Zhi 朱治
 Junlin 俊林=Cao Ru 曹儒
 Junlin 俊林=Xiahou Ru 夏侯儒
 Junling 君陵=Yin Xing 陰興
 Junmeng 君孟
 =Yin Lu/Mu 陰陸/陸
 Junping 君平=Ma Kuang 馬況
 Junping 君平=Shi Yan 施延
 Junqi/ji 君期=Lu Fang 盧芳/方
 Junqian 君遷=Li Gao 李暁
 Junqian 君遷=Ma Cheng 馬成
 Junqiao 君橋=Zhao Song 趙松
 Junqing 君卿=Feng Liang 馮良
 Junran 君然=Cen Peng 岑彭
 Junrong 君榮=Shisun Rui 士孫瑞
 Junshan 君山=Huan Tan 桓譚
 Junshang 君上=Lü Gai 呂蓋
 Junshang 君上=Zhang Xing 張興
 Junshu 君叔=Lai Xi/She 來歙
 Junsi 君嗣
 =Liu Desheng 劉德升/昇
 Junsi 君嗣=Zhang Yi 張裔
 Junsi 君思=Tang You 唐佑
 Junsu 君肅=He Zhi 何祗
 Juntai 君臺=Guan Zun 管遵
 Junwen 儻文=Zhang He 張郃
 Junwen 君文=Jia Fu 賈復
 Junwen 君文=Liu Yi 劉軼
 Junweng 君翁=Zang Gong 臧宮
 Junxia 君夏=Zhang Xuan 張玄
 Junxian 君先=Pei Bi 裴畢
 Junxian 君賢=Guo Qian 郭虔/乾
 Junya 君雅=Wu Feng 吳鳳
 Junyan 君嚴=Wang Liang 王梁
 Junyang 盧君陽
 =Suolu Fang 索盧放
 Junye 君業=Guo Dian 郭典
 Junye 君業=Ren Yong 任永
 Junye 君業=Zhu Cai 朱才
 Junyi 君義=Shi Ren 士仁
 Junyin 君因
 =Chen Mao/Mou 陳茂
 Junyou 君游=Wan Xiu 萬脩/修
 Junyou 君游=Zhang Kan 張堪
 Junyu 君玉=Lü Gai 呂蓋
 Junyu 君魚=Kong Fen 孔奮
 Junyun 君雲=Fan Zhong 樊重
 Junzhang 君章=Zhi Yun 鄧惲
 Junzhong 君中=Cai Shun 蔡順
 Junzhuo 君卓=Xue Cheng 薛丞
 Junzi 君子=Shi Yan 施延
 Juqing 屠巨卿
 =Shentu Gang 申屠剛
 Juqing 巨卿=Gong Sui 龔遂
 Juqing 巨卿=He Yan 蓋延
 Juqing 巨卿=Kong Xun 孔恂
 Jushan 巨山=Kong Song 孔嵩
 Jusheng 巨勝=Zhou Xie 周勰
 Jushi 巨師=Pang Hong 龐宏
 Jusun 巨孫=Du He 杜合
 Juwei 巨尉=Wang Lin 王琳
 Junian 巨先=Linghu Yu 令狐禹
 Juxian 巨先=Yuan She 袁涉
 Juyou 巨遊=Li Ye 李業
 Juzi 莒子=Han Meng 韓猛
 Kangcheng 康成
 =Zheng Xuan 鄭玄
 Kongcai 孔才=Liu Shao 劉邵
 Kongdu 孔都=Qin Shang 秦尚
 Konghe 孔和=Zhou Xuan 周宣
 Kongming 孔明=Hu Zhao 胡昭
 Kongming 孔明
 =Zhuge Liang 諸葛亮
 Kongqu 孔渠=Yang Pei 楊沛
 Kongru 孔儒=Liang Yu 梁寓
 Kongshan 孔山=Deng Fang 鄧方
 Kongshu 孔叔
 =Linghu Shao 令狐邵
 Kongwen 孔文=Gao Dai 高岱
 Kongxin 孔信=Qiu Shen 仇審
 Kongxiu 孔休=Yin Guan 殷觀
 Kongyi 孔異=Hao Zhou 浩周
 Kongzhang 孔璋=Chen Lin 陳琳
 Kuanfang 貫方=Gao Yi 高頤
 Kuan'guang 貫光=Gao Yi 高頤
 Liangdao 梁道
 =Jia Kui/Qu 賈逵/衢
 Ligong 禮公=Qian Xin 錢訢
 Lingming 令明=Pang De 龐惠/德
 Lingqing 令卿
 =Guo Hong 郭弘/宏
 Lingzi 令則=Luo Xian 羅憲
 Linsu 林叔=Zheng Mao 鄭袤
 Linzong 林宗=Guo Tai 郭泰/太
 Lou Yuankao 元考
 =Lou Shou 婁壽
 Lou Zibo 子伯=Lou Gui 婁圭
 Lou Zici 子次=Lou Wang 婁望
 Mancai 曼才=Yan Jun 嚴峻
 Mancheng 曼成=Li Dian 李典
 Manji 曼基=Wen Hui 溫恢
 Manqing 曼倩=Xun Xian 荀詵
 Mao'an 茂安=Dong Fu 董扶
 Maochang 茂長=Xue Yong 薛永
 Maoni 茂尼=Chang Qia 常洽
 Maotai 茂泰=Ning Shu 甯叔
 Maotong/Moutong 茂通
 =Li Sheng 李勝
 Mengben 孟本=Xu Qiu/Jiu 徐璆
 Mengbo 孟博=Fan Pang 范滂
 Mengchang 孟嘗/常
 =Xue Bao 薛苞/苞
 Mengda 孟達=Wei Biao 韋彪
 Mengde 孟德=Cao Cao 曹操
 Mengdu 孟度=Yan Xian 閻憲
 Menggao 孟高=Dong Zhuo 董擢
 Menggao 孟高=Liu Ling 劉陵
 Menggao 孟高=Zhong Xuan 仲選
 Menggong 孟公=Chen Zun 陳遵
 Menggong 孟公=Liu Gong 劉龔
 Menghou 孟侯=Yan Feng 嚴豐
 Menghou 孟侯=Yang Mu 楊牧
 Menghou 孟侯=Zhang Pu 張輔
 Mengjian 孟堅=Ban Gu 班固²
 Mengjian 孟堅=Jia Cong 賈琮

² There was another Ban Mengjian, whose personal name is not recorded.

- Mengjian 孟堅=Wang Hui 王誨
 Mengjian 孟建=Fan Shao 樊紹
 Mengjie 孟節=Li He 李郃
 Mengju 孟舉=Juan Cheng 圈稱
 Mengping 孟平=Xu Qiu/Jiu 徐璆
 Mengqi 孟起=Ma Chao 馬超
 Mengqing 孟卿=Zhao Qin 趙勤
 Mengsun 孟孫
 =Chunyu Gong 淳于恭
 Mengsun 孟孫=Dou Gu 竇固
 Mengsun 孟孫=He Xi 何熙
 Mengsun 孟孫
 =Guiyang Hong 觥陽鴻
 Mengwen 孟文=Yang Huan 楊渙
 Mengxi 孟喜=Cai Yan 蔡衍
 Mengxin 孟信=Yang Mu 楊牧
 Mengyang 孟陽=Liu Xiong 劉熊
 Mengyou 孟由=Qin Jian 禽堅
 Mengyu 孟玉=Xu Qiu/Jiu 徐璆
 Mengyu 孟玉
 =Zhou Qiu/Jiu 周璆/糾
 Mengyuan 孟元=Li Ji 李幾
 Mengyuan 孟元=Zhou Yong 州永
 Mengyuan 孟元=Chang Yi 常翊
 Mengzhuo 孟卓
 =Zhang Miao 張邈
 Mengzong 孟宗=Dou Zhen 杜真
 Miaocai 妙才
 =Xiahou Yuan 夏侯淵
 Miaogao 妙高=Chen Du 陳度
 Miqing 靡卿=Fan Hong 樊宏
 Misun 秘孫
 =Liu Zhen/Bao 劉珍/寶
 Mou 茂 see Mao 茂
 Nanhe 南和=Zhang Yu 張裕
 Nanrong 南容=Fu Xie 傅燮
 Ningbo 寧伯=Zhao Xun 趙勳
 Ningfang 甯方=Xu Man 許曼
 Nixun 女荀=Xun Cai 荀采
 Pengzu 彭祖=Cao Yu 曹宇
 Pianzu 翩祖 see Yang Zhi 羊陟
 Pinghou 平侯=Feng Huan 馮煥
 Pingqing 平卿
 =Zheng Ju/Qu 鄭據/璩
 Pingshu 平叔=Deng Xun 鄧訓
 Pingshu 平叔=He Yan 何晏
 Pingsun 平孫=Zhou Rong 周榮
 Pingwang 平王=Qin Zhou 秦周
 Pingzhong 平仲=Zhao Yan 趙晏
 Pingzhong 平仲=Liu Shun 劉順
 Pingzhong 平仲=Dai Feng 戴封
 Pingzhong 平仲=Wang You 王祐
 Pingzi 平子=Zhang Heng 張衡
 Puzi 鋪子=Hou Ba 侯芭
 Qianjiu 千秋
 =Liu Zhen/Bao 劉珍/寶
 Qiaoqing 喬卿=Dong Xian 董憲
 Qiaoqing 喬卿=Fa Zhen 法真
 Qiaoqing 喬卿=Guo He 郭賀
 Qiaoqing 喬卿=Wei Ba 隗霸
 Qiaozhi 驕稚=Xu Xuan 徐宣
 Qinzong 欽仲=Li Zhuan 李譔
 Qinzong 欽仲=Li Xuan 李譔
 Qiongyu 瓊玉
 =Cheng Zhenjue 程貞決
 Qiqing 齊卿=Wei Jie 魏桀/傑
 Qishi 起世=Zhou Bo 州博
 Qiusun 秋孫
 =Liu Zhen/Bao 劉珍/寶
 Ranming 然明=Zhang Huan 張奐
 Rendu 仁篤=Xu Ci 許慈
 Renming 仁明=Zhou Yu 周囑
 Rongzu 榮祖=Liu Chong 劉寵
 Ruqing 孺卿=Ma Dun/Fu 馬敦/敷
 Ruqing 孺卿=Niu Han 牛邯
 Rusun 孺孫=Liu Hong 劉弘/宏
 Ruwen 孺文=Su Zhang 蘇章
 Ruzhong 儒/孺仲=Wang Ba 王霸
 Ruzi 孺子=Xu Zhi 徐稚
 Shanling 山陵=Sun Qiu 孫璆
 Shanming 山名=Chen Ji 陳紀
 Shanpu 山甫=Kong Jia 孔嘉
 Shaobo 召伯=Dou Bang 杜邦
 Shaofu 邵輔=Yuan Hong 袁弘
 Shaogan 少贛=Zheng Xing 鄭興
 Shaogong 召公=Zheng Kai 鄭凱
 Shaogong 邵公=He Xiu 何休
 Shaogong 邵公=Yuan An 袁安
 Shaojie 少節=Mao Yi 毛義
 Shaolin 少林=Wang Chun 王忖
 Shaoping 少平=Dong Xuan 董宣
 Shaoping 邵平=Zhu Liang 祝良
 Shaoqing 少卿=Guo Dan 郭丹
 Shaoqing 少卿=Xu Qian 徐遷
 Shaoqing 少卿=Yi Ying 乙瑛
 Shaoqing 邵卿=Zhu Liang 祝良
 Shaotong 少通=Yan Xin 嚴訢
 Shaoxian 少閑=Wei Tan 魏譚
 Shaoxian 紹先=Huo Yi 霍弋
 Shaouxuan 少玄=Wang Yin 王音
 Shaoying 少英=Wei Lang 魏朗
 Shaoyou 少幼=Li Tong 李統
 Shaoyou 少游=Zhang Fang 張昉
 Shaozhang 少張=Xu Jing 許荊
 Shaozi 少子=Cheng Gong 承宮
 Shaozi 少子=Pang An 逢安
 Shenfu 申甫=Chong Shao 种劭
 Shengbo 升伯=Hou Qi 侯祈
 Shengda 升達=Fan Min 樊敏
 Shengda 聖達=Yang Qiao 楊喬
 Shengda 聖達
 =Shen/Zhen Feng 沈/甄豐
 Shengda 聖達
 =Zhen/Shen Feng 甄/沈豐
 Shenggong 聖公=Liu Xuan 劉玄
 Shengguo 盛國
 =Yang Chong 楊充
 Shenghou 升侯=Gong Tiao 龔調
 Shengji 升濟
 =Gongsun Du 公孫度 Shengjian 聖建
 see Yang Qiao 楊喬
 Shengming 聖明=Fang Chu 方儲
 Shengping 升平
 =Gaotang Long 高堂隆
 Shengqing 升卿=Jia Fang 賈魴/訪
 Shengqing 升卿=Yu Xu 虞詡
 Shengqing 聖卿=Ma Yu/Xu 馬余
 Shengshu 升叔=Zhou Zhang 周章
 Shengtai 聖臺=Sun Qiang 孫羌
 Shengxian 盛先
 =Chen Bao/Shi 陳寶/實
 Shengzhen 聖眞
 =Huang Chang 黃昌
 Shibi 世鼻=Wang Bi 王畢
 Shicheng 士成=Su Zhang 蘇章
 Shichun 始春=Huan Luan 桓鸞
 Shici 叔慈=Xun Jing 荀靖
 Shide 德世=Yang Ding 羊定
 Shigong 世公=Wang Fu 王阜
 Shihui 士會=Qin Jia 秦嘉
 Shiju 世舉=He Ju 何矩
 Shilin 世林=Zong Cheng 宗承
 Shiqi 士起=Guan Jing 關靖

- Shiqing 世卿=Zhao Wuji 趙無忌
 Shishu 世叔=Cao Shou 曹壽
 Shishu 世叔=Ying Feng 應奉
 Shiwei 世威=Feng Zhou 馮冑
 Shixian 世賢=Duan Guang 段光
 Shixin 世信=Liu Chong 劉寵
 Shiyi 世益=Li Liang 李諒
 Shiying 世英=Huang Qiong 黃瓊
 Shiyou 世遊=Yu Cheng 庾乘
 Shiyou 士遊=Jiang Shi 姜詩
 Shiyuan 士元=Pang Tong 龐統
 Shiyun 史雲
 =Fan Dan/Ran 范丹/冉
 Shizai 士載=Deng Ai 鄧艾
 Shizi 士則=Deng Fan 鄧範
 Shizong 始宗=Liu Xian 劉先
 Shizong 壽成=Ma Teng 馬騰
 Shubao 叔寶=Yang Mao 羊茂
 Shuben 叔本=Ren Mo 任末
 Shubi 叔弼=Sun Yi/Yan 孫翊/愷
 Shubo 叔博=Wang Yan 王晏
 Shubu 叔布=Zhou Shu 周舒
 Shuchang 叔暢=Ji Mao 吉茂
 Shuchun 叔春=Ding Han 丁邯
 Shuda 叔達=Du Bin 杜賓
 Shuda 叔達=Meng Min 孟敏
 Shuda 叔達=Meng Yu 孟軻/郁
 Shuda 叔達=Sima Fu 司馬孚
 Shuda 叔達=Zhou Teng 周騰
 Shude 叔德=Xia Kan 夏堪
 Shudu 叔度=Huang Xian 黃憲
 Shudu 叔度=Lian Fan 廉范/範
 Shudu 叔都
 =Song/Zong Zi 宋/宗資
 Shudu 叔都=Tian Hui 田輝
 Shudu 叔都
 =Zong/Song Zi 宗/宋資
 Shufang 叔方=Chen Zheng 陳正
 Shufang 叔方=Liu Ju 劉矩
 Shufang 叔方=Zhang Dun 張敦
 Shufu 叔輔=Teng Fu 滕撫
 Shugao 叔高=Dou Yuan 竇元
 Shugao 叔高=Ren Jun 任峻
 Shugao 叔高=Yang Fen 養奮
 Shugao 叔高=Zhang Liao 張遼
 Shugong 叔公=Bi Min 辟敏
 Shugu 叔固=Yan Du 延篤
 Shuhe 叔和=Du Fu 杜撫
 Shuhe 叔和=Wang Tiao 王調
 Shuhe 叔和=Wu Shun 吳順
 Shuhe 叔和=Xiang Song 項誦
 Shuhe 叔河=Ding Fang 丁飭
 Shuhou 叔侯=Gong Tiao 龔調
 Shuji 叔奇=Zhao Feng 趙豐
 Shuji 叔紀=Deng Hong 鄧弘/宏
 Shujian 叔堅=Yan Du 延篤
 Shujie 叔節=Yang Bing 楊秉
 Shujie 叔節=Han Chi 韓勅
 Shujing 叔敬=Liang Song 梁竦
 Shujing 叔景=Luo Hun 羅暉
 Shujing 叔經=Wang Zhen 王真
 Shuju 叔鉅=Fan Xian 范顯
 Shujun 叔俊=He Ying 何英
 Shukang 叔康
 =Yang Kuang/Zhang 楊匡/章
 Shulang 叔朗=Sun Jiao 孫皎
 Shuliang 叔梁=Yin Qin 尹勤
 Shulin 叔林=Kong Gui 孔桂
 Shulin 叔林=Liu Ru 劉儒
 Shuling 叔陵=Cai Xuan 蔡玄
 Shuling 叔陵=Lu Pi 魯丕
 Shulong 叔龍=He Kui 何夔
 Shuli 叔慮=Geng Guo 耿國
 Shulu 叔路=Song You 宋由
 Shuman 叔鸞=Dai Liang 戴良
 Shumao/Shumou 叔茂
 =Wang Chang 王暢/暢
 Shumao/Shumou 叔茂
 =Zhao Jian 趙戩
 Shuming 叔明=Cai Zhao 蔡昭
 Shuming 叔明=Chen Yan 陳弇
 Shuming 叔明=Lu Bao 陸褒
 Shuming 叔明=Yu Cheng 虞承
 Shuming 叔明
 =Zhang Hao 張皓/浩
 Shupan 陸叔盤=Lu Yu 陸紆
 Shupi 叔皮=Ban Biao 班彪
 Shuping 叔平=Dai She 戴涉
 Shuping 叔平=Sima Jun 司馬鈞
 Shuping 叔平=Song Du 宋度
 Shuping 叔平=Yuan Chang 袁敞
 Shuqi 叔起=Wang Zhi 王稚/稚
 Shuqi 叔齊=Chu Xi 褚禧
 Shuqi 叔齊=Fu Gong 伏恭
 Shuqing 叔情=Xun Wu 荀僕
 Shuqing 叔卿=Yang Bing 楊秉
 Shuquan 叔權
 =Xiahou Cheng 夏侯稱
 Shurang 叔讓=Hu Qianyi 胡千億
 Shurong 叔榮=Du Qiao 杜喬
 Shuru 叔儒=Han Yue 韓說
 Shuru 叔儒
 =Liang Yongguo 梁永國
 Shushan 叔山=Ma Guang 馬光
 Shusheng 叔盛=Liu Mao 劉茂
 Shusheng 叔盛=Zhao Kang 趙康
 Shushi 叔師=Wang Yi 王逸
 Shushi 叔時=Yin Hua 殷華
 Shushi 叔嗣=Zhang Xiu 張休
 Shutong 叔通=Cao Bao 曹褒
 Shuwei 叔威=Zhang Meng 張猛
 Shuwei 叔韡=Hu Qianyi 胡千億
 Shuwen 叔文=Lu Huan 陸桓
 Shuwen 叔文=Shi Bao 史苞
 Shuwen 叔文=Wei Shun 韋順
 Shuwu 叔武=Sun Huan 孫桓
 Shuxian 叔憲=Geng Guo 耿國
 Shuxiang 叔庠
 =Song/Zong Jun 宋/宗均
 Shuxiang 叔庠
 =Zong/Song Jun 宗/宋均
 Shuxing 叔興=Li Hui 李恢
 Shuya 叔牙=Wei Man 魏滿
 Shuya 叔牙=Yan Cen 延岑
 Shuya 叔雅=Bao Ang 鮑昂
 Shuyang 叔陽=Song Deng 宋登
 Shuyang 叔陽=Zhang Xi 張翕
 Shuyang 叔陽=Zhu Bo 朱勃
 Shuye 叔業=Bao Xun 鮑勛
 Shuye 叔業=Cai Xi 蔡攜
 Shuye 叔業=Jia Hong 賈洪
 Shuyi 叔毅=Li Gang 李剛
 Shuyi 叔異=Ru Yu 汝郁
 Shuyi 叔異=Miao Yu 繆宇
 Shuyi 叔異=Sima Zhi 司馬直
 Shuying 叔穎=Dong Min 董曼
 Shuying 叔英=Li Xun 李恂
 Shuying 叔英=Sun Jun 孫俊
 Shuyou 叔優=Wang Rou 王柔
 Shuyu 叔玉=Zhou Zhong 州忠
 Shuyu 瑜叔=Li Jin 李瑾/珪
 Shuyuan 元=Zhu Fu 朱浮
 Shuyuan 叔元=Huan Yan 桓焉
 Shuyuan 叔元=Luan Ba 欒巴

- Shuzai 叔宰=Feng Hao 馮顥=
 Shuze 叔則=Hun Dian 函典
 Shuzhao 叔昭=Deng Kui 鄧惺
 Shuzhen 叔珍=Chen Gui 陳龜
 Shuzhen 叔貞=Zhao Jian 趙堅
 Shuzhi 叔智=Huo Xu 霍誦
 Shuzhi 叔治=Wang Xiu 王脩
 Shuzhi 叔至=Chen Dao 陳到
 Shuzhong 叔仲=Yang Kuan 楊寬
 Shuzhong 叔重=Xu Shen 許慎
 Sigong 嗣公=Xu Xu 許續
 Siqian 思潛=Yin Mo 尹默
 Siran 思然=Ji Mu 吉穆
 Sizong 嗣宗=Zhang Guang 張廣
 Sizu 嗣祖=Yang Zhi 羊陟
 Sizu 思祖=Lu Chang/Ci 陸暢/賜
 Suigao 遂高=He Jin 何進
 Suigong 綏公=Xing Mu 邢穆
 Suizong 綏宗=Wu Liang 武梁
 Sunde 孫德=Li Fu 李福
 Sunjing 孫卿=Jing Dan 景丹
 Sunqing 孫卿=Zhu Chang 朱侗
 Taiqing 臺卿=Zhao Qi 趙岐/歧
 Taisheng 臺生
 =Zhao Jia/Qi 趙嘉/岐/歧
 Taizhong 泰中=Guo Chang 郭敞
 Tianxiu 恬休=Han Kang 韓康
 Tingbo 亭伯=Cui Yin 崔駟
 Tongta 通達=Hu Min 胡敏
 Tongyao 通耀=Wang Rui 王叡
 Tongzhi 通直=Guo Yu 郭玉
 Wangsi 王思=Yan Zun 嚴遵/尊
 Wanyi 萬億=Li Tong 李通
 Wanyi 萬億=Li Tong 李通
 Weibo 偉伯=Feng Qin 馮勤
 Weichang 偉長=Xu Gan 徐幹
 Weidu 偉度=Hu Ji 胡濟
 Weifang 生偉防
 =Zhousheng Feng豐
 Weigong 偉公=Zhou Fang 周防
 Weigong 偉恭=Li Su 李肅
 Weigong 威公=Yang Yi 楊儀
 Weihao 豪=Zhao Bao 趙苞
 Weijie 偉節=Jia Biao 賈彪
 Weijun 偉君
 =Pi Tong/Yong 邳彤/彤
 Weijun 偉君=Xu Yang 許楊/陽
 Weijun 衛君=Zhang Ji 張稷
 Weikang 偉康=Jia Xu 賈許
 Weikao 威考=Cui Lie 崔烈
 Weiming 偉明=Fu Rong 符融
 Weiming 甫威明
 =Huangfu Gui 皇甫規
 Weiming 威明=Li Liang 李亮 [
 Weinan 偉南=Li Shao 李邵
 Weinan 偉南=Li Chao 李朝
 Weiping 偉平=Xie Cheng 謝承
 Weiqing 偉卿=Deng Chen 鄧晨
 Weiqing 威卿=Ma Yan 馬嚴
 Weiqing 威卿=Shen Rong 沈戎
 Weishi 威石=Sun Cong 孫琮
 Weishi 威碩=Liu Yan 劉琰
 Weitai 偉壺=Wang Guan 王觀
 Weiyan 威彥=Shi Xie 士燮
 Weize 偉則=Hu Zong 胡綜
 Weizhang 偉章=Zhao Ang 趙昂
 Wenbao 文寶=Lü Guo 呂國
 Wenbao 文寶=Sun Jing 孫敬
 Wenbao 文寶=Wang Jie 王戒
 Wenbiao 文表=Rui Xuan 芮玄
 Wenbiao 文表=Bing Xuan 邴玄
 Wenbiao 文表=Qin Song 秦松
 Wenbiao 文表=Wang Shang 王商
 Wenbo 文伯=Dong Jun 董鈞
 Wenbo 文伯
 =Su/Yu Kuang 王/玉況
 Wenbo 文伯=Wang Kuang 王況
 Wenbo 文博=Zhu Ling 朱靈
 Wencai 文才?=Hu Zhen 胡軫
 Wencai 文才=Bao Chu 鮑出
 Wenchang 文長=Wei Yan 隗延
 Wenchu 文楚=Zhao Zi 趙咨
 Wende 文德=Hu Zhi 胡質
 Wendu 文都=Wang Yi 王邑
 Wen'gao 文高=Fan Fan 樊梵
 Wen'gao 文高=He Chang 何敞
 Wen'gao 文高=Wang Bin 王斌
 Weng'ao 翁敖=Liu Qing 劉慶
 Wengjun 翁君=Han Xin 韓歆
 Wengjun 翁君=Li Zhu 李助
 Wengjun 翁君=Yang Mang 楊莽
 Wengong 文公=Bao Die 鮑疊
 Wengong 文公
 =Wenren Tong 聞人統
 Wengong 文公=Zheng Hun 鄭渾
 Wengshu 翁叔=Ma Midi 馬日磾
 Wengu 文固=She Jian 射堅
 Wengui 文珪=Pan Zhang 潘璋
 Wengzhong 翁中=Zhou Ba 周霸
 Wenhe 文和=Jia Xu 賈詡
 Wenhe 文和=Xuan He 玄賀
 Wenheng 文衡=Feng Zun 馮遵
 Wenhong 文宏=Xuan He 玄賀
 Wenhui 文惠=Gao Rou 高柔
 Wenji 文姬=Cai Yan 蔡琰
 Wenji 文季=Pei Hui 裴徽
 Wenji 文季=Zhu Hui 朱暉
 Wenji 文紀=Zhang Gang 張綱
 Wenjian 文堅=Jing Yi 景毅
 Wenjie 文節=Han Fu 韓馥
 Wenjie 文節
 =Yang Shan/Chan 楊禪
 Wenjin 文進=Zhang Nan 張南
 Wenju 文矩=Cheng Zhi 程祗
 Wenju 文舉=Kong Rong 孔融
 Wenkai 文開=Yuan Cheng 袁成
 Wenkai 袁成=Yuan Ping 袁平
 Wenli 文理=Liu Zhi 劉質/質
 Wenli 文理=Tao Dun 陶敦
 Wenli 文禮=Bian Rang 邊讓
 Wenli 文禮=Kong Bao 孔褒/褒
 Wenlie 文烈=Cao Xiu 曹休
 Wenlin 文林=Huan
 Ye/Yu/Yan 桓曄/煜/嚴/儼/礪
 Wenlin 文林=Yang Fei 顏斐
 Wenluan 文鸞=Bing Liang 邴良
 Wenluan 文鸞=Rui Liang 芮良
 Wenming 文明=Zhou Huan 周奐
 Wenming 文明=Zhu Hao 朱皓
 Wenqi 文起=Liao Fu 廖扶
 Wenqian 文謙=Yue Jin 樂進
 Wenqiang 文彊=Fa Xiong 法雄
 Wenqiang 文彊
 =Huang Xiang 黃香
 Wenran 文然=Ji Miao 吉邈
 Wenran 文然=Yang Xi 楊戲/羲
 Wenruo 文若=Xun Yu 荀彧/郁
 Wenshan 文山=Li Jun 酈嶮
 Wenshan 文山=Wang Long 王隆
 Wensheng 文勝=Li Yan 酈炎
 Wenshi 文始=Ren Fang 任昉/方
 Wenshi 文始
 =Shisun Meng 士孫萌
 Wenshi 文始=Wang Fang 王防

- Wenshi 文師=Su Ze 蘇則
 Wenshu 文叔=Liu Xiu 劉秀
 Wenshu 文舒=Wang Chang 王昶
 Wenshu 文舒=Zhang Chang 張昶
 Wensi 文寺=Li Qing 李磬
 Wensi 文思=Luo Su 駱肅
 Wensi 文思=Ma Ying 馬英
 Wenta 文達=Huang Lang 黃朗
 Wenta 文達=Li Tong 李通
 Wenta 文達=Zhang Liao 張遼
 Wentai 文臺=Sun Jian 孫堅
 Wenti 文悌=Ren Kai 任愷
 Wentong 文通=Gao Feng 高鳳
 Wentong 文通=Yan Bao 嚴苞
 Wentong 文通
 =Zhang Kuang 張匡
 Wentong 文通=Zhou Yu 周紆
 Wenwei 文偉=Fei Yi 費禕
 Wenwei 文威=Geng Wu 耿武
 Wenxian 文先=Yang Biao 楊彪
 Wenxiang 文嚮
 =Xu Sheng/Cheng 徐盛
 Wenxiang 文祥=Xi Zhen 習禎
 Wenxiong 文雄=She Yuan 射援
 Wenxiu 文休=Diwu Xun 第五巡
 Wenxiu 文休=Xu Jing 許靖
 Wenxiu 文繡=Yu Xin 虞欽
 Wenya 文雅=Miao Pei 繆裴
 Wenya 熙伯=Miao Xi 繆襲
 Wenyang 文陽=Sun Xiang 孫香
 Wenyao 文饒=Liu Kuan 劉寬
 Wenyi 文义=Gongsha Mu 公沙穆
 Wenyi 文儀=Kou Huan 寇權
 Wenyi 文儀=Wang Lian 王連
 Wenyi 文儀=Xie Gai 謝該
 Wenyi 文義=Yang Ren 楊仁
 Wenyu 文優=Li Ru 李儒
 Wenyu 文有=Tan Fu 檀敷
 Wenyu 文玉=Yin Song 陰嵩
 Wenyu 文蔚=Lu Cui 路粹
 Wenyuan 文元=Li Tong 李通
 Wenyuan 文元=Zhu Mu 朱穆
 Wenyuan 文淵=Bao Yu 鮑昱
 Wenyuan 文淵=Fan Jin 范津
 Wenyuan 文淵=Zheng Quan 鄭泉
 Wenyuan 淵=Ma Yuan 馬援
 Wenyue 文約=Han Sui 韓遂
 Wenzai 文載=Yue Xiang 樂詳
 Wenze 文則=Yu Jin 于禁
 Wenzhang 文章
 =Huang Xiang 黃向
 Wenzhi 文直=Zhou Buyi 周不疑
 Wenzi 文則=Wu Fan 吳範
 Wenzhi 文則=Yan Xiang 嚴像/象
 Wenzu 文祖=Wang Kao 王考
 Wuru 武孺=Jia Zong 賈宗
 Wuxing 武興=Feng Qi 封祈
 Wuxuan 武宣=Dan Yang 單颺
 Wuxuan 武宣=Shan Yang 單颺
 Wuzhong 武仲=Fu Yi 傅毅
 Xiafu 夏甫=Huang Zhen 黃真
 Xiafu 夏輔=Yuan Hong 袁閔
 Xianda 顯達=Sima Xun 司馬恂
 Xianfu 顯甫=Yuan Shang 袁尚
 Xiangong 憲公=Li Ji 李基
 Xiangong 顯公=Fu Fu 輔服
 Xiangsun 襄孫=Chen Yuan 陳元
 Xianhe 憲和=Jian Yong 簡雍
 Xianqing 顯卿=Guo Xun 郭訓
 Xiansi 顯思=Yuan Tan 袁譚
 Xianyi 顯奕=Yuan Xi 袁熙
 Xianyong 顯雍=Yuan Xi 袁熙
 Xianzong 顯宗=Wen Gong 溫貢
 Xiaobin 小寶=Sima Jun 司馬均
 Xiaobo 小伯=Chen Zhan 陳湛
 Xiaochu 孝初=Zong Ci 宗慈
 Xiaocun 孝存=Lin Shuo 臨/林碩
 Xiaofu 孝甫=Gao Shen 高慎
 Xiaogong 孝公=Ding Hong 丁鴻
 Xiaoju 孝琚=Meng Xuan 孟琬
 Xiaolian 孝連=Ding Lan 丁覽
 Xiaoqi 孝起=Chen Zhen 陳震
 Xiaoqi 孝起=Feng Guan 封觀
 Xiaoran 孝然=Qiao Xian 譙先
 Xiaoren 孝仁=Cang Ci 倉慈
 Xiaoshan 孝山=Li Nan 李南
 Xiaoshan 孝山=Shi Cen 史岑
 Xiaoshan 孝山=Su Shun 蘇順
 Xiaosui 孝遂=Cheng Yang 程陽
 Xiaosun 孝孫=Feng Fang 馮魴
 Xiaosun 孝孫=Liu Jia 劉嘉
 Xiaosun 孝孫=Ma Fang 馬防
 Xiaowei 孝威=Tai Tong 臺佟
 Xiaowei 孝威=Xue Ti 薛悌
 Xiaoxian 孝先=Bian Shao 邊韶
 Xiaoxian 孝先=Chen Zhong 陳忠
 Xiaoxian 孝先=Mao Jie 毛玠
 Xiaoyi 孝懿=Li Yi 李義
 Xiaoyou 孝友=Su Lin 蘇林
 Xiaoyu 孝裕=Meng Guang 孟光
 Xiaoyuan 孝元=Yang Fu 楊孚
 Xiaoyuan 孝遠=Luo Jun 駱俊
 Xiaoze 孝則=Gu Shao 顧邵
 Xiaozhang 孝章
 =Sheng Xian 盛憲
 Xiaozhi 孝治=Dong An 董黯
 Xiaozhi 孝直=Fa Zheng 法正
 Xiaozhong 孝仲=Zhu Zun 朱遵
 Xiayou 俠游=Geng Kuang 耿況
 Xibo 羲伯=Wang Xiang 王象
 Xihou 細侯=Guo Ji 郭伋
 Xijun 細君=Fan Chong 樊崇
 Xijin 細君=Liu Xin 劉歆
 Xingba 興霸=Gan Ning 甘寧
 Xingxian 興先
 =Diwu Zhong 第五種
 Xingzu 祖=Yang Xu 羊續
 Xingzu 興祖=Heng Fang 衡方
 Xingzu 行祖=Li Yun 李雲
 Xiubo 休伯=Po Qin 繁欽
 Xiufu 休甫
 =Wei Duan/Rui 韋端/瑞
 Xiugong 秀升=Cheng Zeng 程曾
 Xiulian 休璉=Ying Qu 應璩
 Xiuming 休明=Huang Xiang 皇象
 Xiuming 休明=Wei Zhu 韋著
 Xiumu 休穆=Zhu Huan 朱桓
 Xiurui 秀叡=Hu Shuo 胡碩
 Xiuruo 休若=Xun Yan 荀衍
 Xiuyuan 休元=Feng Xi 馮習
 Xiuyuan 休元=Feng Yi 馮習
 Xiuzhao 休昭=Dong Yun 董允
 Xuande 宣德=Zhu Jie 朱頡
 Xuande 玄德=Liu Bei 劉備
 Xuanfeng 玄風=Bu Jing 卜靜
 Xuangao 宣高=Zang Ba 臧霸
 Xuanguang 宣公
 =Zhang Mu 張胤 [
 Xuanguang 宣光=Zhou Ju 周舉
 Xuanmeng 宣孟
 =Pang Xiong 龐雄
 Xuanren 宣仁=Gao Bao 高褒
 Xuansheng 宣聲=Xue Xia 薛夏
 Xuansi 宣嗣=Bing Zhi 郢祉

- Xuansi 宣嗣=Rui Zhi 芮祉
 Xuansui 宣睢=Zhou Xin 州歆
 Xuanxing 宣興=Zhou Long 州龍
 Xuanyu 宣豫=Zhou Mu 州穆
 Yada 雅達=Sima Tong 司馬通
 Yaguang 雅光=Lang Yi 郎顛
 Yagui 雅珪=Zhao Yan 趙琰
 Yanbo 延博=Yin Bao 尹苞
 Yancai 彥材=Fu Gan 傅幹
 Yanfang 彥方=Wang Lie 王烈
 Yangshi 陽士=He Xia 和洽
 Yanhuang 彥皇=Zhan Qian 棧潛
 Yanhuang 彥黃=Pei Xuan 裴玄
 Yankao 彥考=Wang Lie 王烈
 Yanlin 彥林=Fu Gan 傅幹
 Yanlin 彥林=Huan Bin 桓彬
 Yanlong 彥龍=Sun Zi 孫資
 Yanming 彥明
 =Yan Xing/Yan 閻行/豔
 Yannian 延年=Wei Ba 隗霸
 Yanshan 彥善=Zhao Yue 趙越
 Yanxin 彥信=Zhao Qian 趙謙
 Yanyun 彥雲
 =Wang Ling 王陵/凌/凌
 Yanchang 彥長=Wei Yu 衛愉
 Yanzhen 彥真=Zhang Sheng 張升
 Yanzu 彥祖=Zhou Xie 周燮
 Yaoqing 堯卿=Xie Yiwu 謝夷吾
 Yaoqing 堯卿
 =Yuan Huan 袁煥/煥
 Yeqing 謁卿=Xu Fang 徐防
 Yibo 意伯=Zhao Jie 趙戒/誠
 Yide 益德=Zhang Fei 張飛
 Yidu 異度=Kuai Yue 蒯越
 Yi'en 益恩=Zheng Yi 鄭益
 Yifang 義方=Gao Biao 高彪
 Yifeng 義封=Zhu Ran 朱然
 Yigao 義高=Ying Rong 應融
 Yigong 義公=Han Dang 韓當
 Yiju 義舊=Jiang Pin 姜嬭
 Yiju 義舉=Shen Dan 申耽
 Yiliao 宜僚=Ban Yong 班勇
 Yingbo 穎伯=Chong Fu 种拂
 Yingbo 穎伯=Yang Bi 楊弼
 Yin'gong 隱公=Huang Fu 黃浮
 Yiqi 義起=Gongsha Fan 公沙樊
 Yiqiang 義彊=Wang Shi 王士
 Yiqing 異卿=Xu Shao 徐少
 Yiqing 益卿=Zhao Qin 趙勤
 Yiqu 義渠=Jiang Qi 蔣奇
 Yiquan 義權=Xiahou He 夏侯和
 Yishan 義山=Yang Fu 楊阜
 Yize 義則=Gongsha Kui 公沙逵
 Yizhen 義眞
 =Huangfu Song 皇甫嵩
 Yongnan 永南=Li Chao 李朝
 Yongnan 永南=Li Shao 李邵
 Yongnian 永年=Peng Yang 彭羨
 Yongning 永甯=Yuan Bi 袁祕
 You'an 幼安=Guan Ning 管寧
 Youchang 幼常=Ma Su 馬謖
 Youchun 幼春=Ding Chen 丁綝
 Youda 司馬幼達
 =Sima Min 司馬敏
 Youji 幼季=Yin Min 尹敏
 Youjian 幼簡=Guo Xian 郭憲
 Youju 幼舉=Juan Cheng 圈稱
 Youling 幼陵=Fan Zhun 樊準/准
 Youping 幼平=Zhou Tai 周泰
 Youping 游平=Dou Wu 竇武
 Youqi 幼起=Dai Shao 戴紹
 Youqi 幼起=Fu Xie 傅燮
 Youquan 幼權
 =Xiahou Rong 夏侯榮
 Youruo 攸若=Xun Shen 荀諝
 Youtai 幼臺=Sun Jing 孫靜
 Youweng 游翁=Wang Yuan 王元
 Youyi 幼異=Ru Yu 汝郁
 Youzheng 幼正=He Chang 何萇
 Yuanbi 元弼=Fu Kuang 輔匡
 Yuanbin 元賓=Qiao Dai 橋載
 Yuanbin 元賓=Qiao Zai 橋載
 Yuanbo 元伯=Liu Long 劉隆
 Yuanbo 元伯=Wang Ba 王霸
 Yuanbo 元伯=Zhang Shao 張劭
 Yuancai 元才=Gao Gan 高幹
 Yuanchang 元常=Zhong Yao 鍾繇
 Yuanchang 元長=Han Rong 韓融
 Yuanchang 元長=Han Shao 韓韶
 Yuanchun 元春=Li Yu 李育
 Yuanda 元大=Xu Ling 徐陵
 Yuande 元德=Zhu Mu 祝睦
 Yuanfang 元方=Chen Ji 陳紀
 Yuanfang 元方
 =Wang Chang 王敞
 Yuanfang 放元=Zuo Ce 左慈
 Yuanfeng 元鳳
 =Zhang Xiang 張翔
 Yuanfeng 元鳳=Huan Lin 桓麟/麟
 Yuanfu 元復
 =Taishi Xiang 太史享
 Yuanfu 元服=Yuan He 袁賀
 Yuanfu 元甫=Ge Gong 葛龔
 Yuanfu 元輔=Wang Yi 王翊
 Yuangu 元固=He Xun 蓋勳
 Yuangui 元珪=Zhao Yao 趙瑤
 Yuanhai 元海=Ma Jiang 馬江
 Yuanhao 元皓=Tian Feng 田豐
 Yuanhou 元侯=Yan Bin 燕邠
 Yuanhua 元化=Chen Tiao 陳調
 Yuanji 元基
 =Yin Xiu/Xun 陰脩/循
 Yuanji 元機=Jin Xuan 金旋
 Yuanji 元集=Jia Xu 賈栩
 Yuanjian 元儉=Liao Hua 廖化
 Yuanjian 元堅=Liang Xiu 梁休
 Yuanjiang 元將=Wei Kang 韋康
 Yuanjiang 元江=Zhang Ji 張濟
 Yuanjie 元節=Yi Li 伊立
 Yuanjie 元節=Zhang Jian 張儉
 Yuanjie 元節=Heng Li 衡立
 Yuanju 元矩=Song Zi 宋則
 Yuanlao 元老=Zhang Biao 張表
 Yuanli 元禮=Li Ying 李膺
 Yuanling 元靈=Zhu Gui 祝龜
 Yuanlong 元龍=Chen Deng 陳登
 Yuanmao/Yuanmou 元茂
 =Pan Xu 潘勗
 Yuanming 元明=Qin Lang 秦朗
 Yuannai 元艾=Huang Yun 黃允
 Yuanqi 元起=Gui Hao 媯皓
 Yuanrang 侯元讓
 =Xiahou Dun 夏侯惇
 Yuanrang 元讓=Shen Huang 審晃
 Yuanshang 元上=Kong Biao 孔彪
 Yuansheng 元升=Zhi Xi 脂習
 Yuansheng 元勝=Zhu Yue 朱越
 Yuanshi 元始
 =Cui Shi/Zhi 崔寔/治
 Yuanshi 元始=Cui Zhi 崔治
 Yuanshi 元石=Sun Gen 孫根
 Yuanshu 元叔=Zhao Yi 趙壹
 Yuansi 元嗣=Han Hao 韓浩
 Yuansi 元嗣=Zhao Xi 趙襲/息

- Yuanta 元達=Zhao Yu 趙昱
 Yuantai 元泰=Wang Mou 王謀
 Yuantu 元圖=Pang Ji 逢紀
 Yuanwei 元偉
 =Cao Jie/Meng 曹節/萌
 Yuanwei 元偉=Qiao Mao 橋瑁
 Yuanxian 元先=Cui Ji 崔濟
 Yuanxian 元顯=Ma Fu 馬浮
 Yuanxiang 元襄=Dai Hong 戴宏
 Yuanxiao 元孝=Wang Zhi 汪直
 Yuanxiong 元雄=Ding Gong 丁宮
 Yuanxiong 元雄=Wu Ban 吳班
 Yuanxiu 元脩
 =Zhang Liangze/Zc 張亮則
 Yuanyi 元異=Sima Jun 司馬儁
 Yuanyi 元異=Zhang Biao 張表
 Yuanyi 元異=Zuo Biao 左表
 Yuanying 元穎=Liu Fu 劉馥
 Yuanyu 元瑜=Ruan Yu 阮瑀
 Yuanyue 元約=Wu Zi 吳資
 Yuanzai 元宰=Liu Heng 劉衡
 Yuanze 元則=Huan Fan 桓範
 Yuanzhang 元章=Duan Yi 段熲
 Yuanzhen 元貞=Li Xian 李咸
 Yuanzhi 元智=Xun Tan 荀曇
 Yuanzhi 元直=Xu Shu 徐庶
 Yuanzhi 元直=Zhou Buyi 周不疑
 Yuanzhi 元知=Kong Chou 孔疇
 Yuanzhong 元仲=Cao Rui 曹叡
 Yuanzhuo 元卓=Li Xian 李咸
 Yuanzhuo 元卓=Liu Hong 劉洪
 Yuanzhuo 元卓=Pan Qian 潘乾
 Yuanzong 元宗
 =Zhang Sheng/Cheng 張盛
 Yugao 于高=Liu Hong 劉弘
 Yunchang 雲長=Guan Yu 關羽
 Yunci 允慈=Gongsha Fu 公沙孚
 Yunnan 允南=Qiao Zhou 譙周
 Yunqian 雲卿=Zhu Cang 朱倉
 Yunrang 允讓
 =Gongsha Ke 公沙恪
 Yuqing 愚卿=Liu Min 柳敏
 Yuqing 虞卿=Xu Ying 許嬰
 Zhaobo 伯昭=Geng Yan 耿弇
 Zhaogong 昭公
 =Chen Chong 陳寵
 Zhaoji 昭姬=Cai Yan 蔡琰
 Zhaoqing 昭卿=Jin Dan 金丹
- Zhengfang 正方
 =Li Yan/Ping 李嚴/平
 Zhengfu 正輔=Yuan Zhong 袁忠
 Zhengli 正禮=Ding Yi 丁儀
 Zhengli 正禮=Liu Yao 劉繇
 Zhengliu 正流=Li Ping 李平
 Zhengnan 正南=Shen Pei 審配
 Zhengnan 正南=Tang Fu 唐扶
 Zhengping 正平=Ni Heng 禰衡
 Zhengsi 正思=Ouyang Xi 歐陽歛
 Zhengxiu 整脩=Yang Ding 楊定
 Zhengzong 正宗
 =Wang Hong 王宏
 Zhenji 真紀=Lü Meng 呂孟
 Zhibo 志伯=Zhao Jie 趙戒/誠
 Zhibo 智伯=Deng Biao 鄧彪
 Zhichang 稚長=Zhao Rong 趙融
 Zhichu 智初/知初=Lu Xu 陸績
 Zhidu 穉都=Zhou Ze 周澤
 Zhigui 稚珪=Zhao Yan 趙琰
 Zhihuang 雉璜=Pei Yu 裴瑜
 Zhiji 稚紀=Wang Sheng 王升
 Zhiming 智明=Zhang Hao 張顥
 Zhiqing 稚卿=Sun Cheng 孫程
 Zhiquan 稚權
 =Xiahou Hui 夏侯會
 Zhishu 稚叔?=Chen Lin 陳臨
 Zhishu 稚叔=Zhang Yang 張楊
 Zhisun 知/智孫
 =Yin Can/Shen 殷參
 Zhitong 稚通=Zhang Fen 張奮
 Zhiwei 穉威=Hu Ning 胡寧
 Zhiye 雉業=Cheng Ji 程基
 Zhiyua 穉淵=Yang Bao 楊寶
 Zhizi 稚子=Wang Huan 王渙
 Zhongbo 仲伯=Luo Heng 羅衡
 Zhongcai 仲才=Yin Tao 殷陶
 Zhongcheng 仲成
 =Sima Bao 司馬苞
 Zhongcheng 仲承=Liu Shu 劉淑
 Zhongchun 仲春=Huan Yu 桓虞
 Zhongda 仲達=Sima Yi 司馬懿
 Zhongda 仲達=Yang Bo 楊博
 Zhongda 仲達
 =Pang Can/Shen 龐參
 Zhongde 仲德=Fan Yi 樊毅
 Zhongdu 仲都=Li Zhong 李忠
 Zhongdu 仲都=Xu Feng 徐豐
- Zhong'en 仲恩=Huan Yu 桓郁
 Zhonggong 仲公
 =Ding Sheng/Cheng 丁盛
 Zhonggong 仲公=Lei Yi 雷義
 Zhonggong 仲弓/躬
 =Chen Shi 陳寔
 Zhonggong 仲弓=He Tang 何湯
 Zhonggong 仲弓
 =Yuan Zhen 苑鎮
 Zhongguo 仲國=Wang Peng 王彭
 Zhonghe 仲和=Kong Xi 孔僖
 Zhonghe 仲和=Ren Wei 任隗
 Zhonghe 仲和=Song Han 宋漢
 Zhonghe 仲河=Yuan Tang 袁湯
 Zhonghe 仲和=Li Sheng 李盛
 Zhonghua 仲華=Deng Yu 鄧禹
 Zhonghua 仲華
 =Fan Ye/Yu 樊曄/煜
 Zhonghuan 仲桓
 =Yang Hou/Xu 楊厚/后/序
 Zhonghuan 仲桓=Yang Ban 楊班
 Zhonghuan 仲桓=Yang Lun 楊倫
 Zhonghuang 仲黃/潢
 =Han Shao 韓韶
 Zhonghui 仲回=Wang Dan 王丹
 Zhongjian 仲堅=Wei Gu 衛固
 Zhongjian 仲簡
 =Chunyu Qiong 淳于瓊
 Zhongjian 仲將=Wei Dan 韋誕
 Zhongjie 仲節=Ying Zhi 應志
 Zhongjie 仲節=Zhang Bing 張秉
 Zhongjin 仲進=Zhou Fu 周福
 Zhongjing 仲景=Zhang Ji 張機
 Zhongju 仲舉=Chen Fan 陳蕃
 Zhongkang 仲康=Lu Gong 魯恭
 Zhongkang 仲康=Xu Chu 許褚
 Zhongli 仲理=Yang Lun 楊倫
 Zhongli 仲理=Cao Feng 曹鳳
 Zhongliao 仲遼=Liu Guang 劉光
 Zhongliao 仲遼=Wang Zhuo 王卓
 Zhonglin 仲麟=Chen Xiang 陳翔
 Zhonglü 仲慮=Bi Fan 費汎/汜
 Zhongmao/Zhongmou 仲茂
 =Xun Hong 荀闕
 Zhongmiao 仲邈=Huo Jun 霍峻
 Zhongming 仲明=Cai Lang 蔡朗
 Zhongming 仲明=Chen Yan 陳弇
 Zhongming 忠明=Duan Wei 段熒

- Zhongmou 仲謀
=Diwu Fang 第五訪
- Zhongmou 仲謀=Sun Quan 孫權
- Zhongnan 仲南=Guo Pei 郭配
- Zhongning 仲寧=Yong Lang 雍朗
- Zhongning 仲寧
=Liang Tong 梁統
- Zhongning 重寧=Liu Ao 劉囂
- Zhongping 仲平
=Linghu You 令弧由
- Zhongqian 仲謙=Tang Yue 唐約
- Zhongqin 仲欽=Li Zhuan 李譔
- Zhongqing 仲卿=Chen Gang 陳綱
- Zhongqing 仲卿=Li Zhong 李忠
- Zhongqing 仲卿=Yi Ying 乙瑛
- Zhongquan 仲權
=Xiahou Ba 夏侯霸
- Zhongrang 仲讓=Su Qian 蘇謙
- Zhongren 仲仁=Chen Bao 陳褒
- Zhongren 仲任
=Wang Chong 王充
- Zhongru 仲孺=Sun Ru 孫孺
- Zhongshan 仲山=Feng Ji 封岷
- Zhongshan 仲山
=Kong Song 孔嵩
- Zhongsheng 仲升=Ban Chao 班超
- Zhongshi 仲始=Hu Kang 胡康
- Zhongshi 仲師=Zhao Mu 趙牧
- Zhongshi 仲師
=Zheng Zhong 鄭眾
- Zhongshi 仲式=Sun Qi 孫期
- Zhongshu 仲叔=Min Gong 閔貢
- Zhongshu 仲叔=Zhang Ye 張業
- Zhongshu 仲舒=Fu Xian 傅賢
- Zhongsi 仲嗣=Zhang Cheng 張承
- Zhongsui 仲綏=Lang Zong 郎宗
- Zhongsun 仲孫=Guo Gong 郭躬
- Zhongtai 仲臺=Sun Guan 孫觀
- Zhongtong 仲通=Wang Jing 王景
- Zhongtong 仲通=Yang Tong 楊統
- Zhongwei 仲威=Li Zhen 禮震
- Zhongwei 仲威=Zhu Chong 朱寵
- Zhongwen 仲文=Song Guo 宋果
- Zhongwen 文=Feng Bao 馮豹
- Zhongwu 仲吾=Zhang Shou 張壽
- Zhongxian 仲先=Zhu You 朱祐
- Zhongxiang 仲嚮
=Tian Sheng/Cheng 田盛
- Zhongxiang 仲翔=Yu Fan 虞翻
- Zhongxiang 仲饗/嚮
=Zhou Jing 周景
- Zhongxin 仲信=Du Dun 杜敦
- Zhongxin 仲信=Xi Xun 郗/郤巡
- Zhongxuan 仲宣=Wang Can 王粲
- Zhongyan 中兗=Xia Cheng 夏承
- Zhongyan 仲巖=Lu Jun 魯峻
- Zhongyan 仲彥=Jiao Shen 橋慎
- Zhongye 仲業=Wen Ping 文聘
- Zhongyi 仲乙=Song Guo 宋果
- Zhongyi 仲翼=Zhang He 張合
- Zhongyi 仲異=Sun Yu 孫瑜
- Zhongying 仲穎
=Dong Zhuo 董卓
- Zhongying 仲膺=Shu Shao 舒邵
- Zhongying 仲英=Du Kuang 都匡
- Zhongyu 仲彘=Sun Qi 孫期
- Zhongyu 仲虞=Zheng Jun 鄭均
- Zhongyu 仲譽=Yuan Jing 袁京
- Zhongyu 仲豫=Xun Yue 荀悅
- Zhongyu 仲魚=Yang Ji 羊羈
- Zhongyuan 仲原=Hu Gen 胡根
- Zhongyuan 仲淵=Kong Fu 孔扶
- Zhongyuan 仲瑗/遠/援
=Ying Shao 應劭
- Zhongyuan 仲遠
=Zhou Bi 周玘/毖
- Zhongyun 仲允=You Chu 游楚
- Zhongze 仲則=Cao Xi 曹喜
- Zhongzhao 仲昭=Wang Fu 王福
- Zhongzhen 中真
=Yuan Kang 苑康
- Zhongzhen 仲真=He Chun 賀純
- Zhongzhi 仲治=Xin Ping 辛評
- Zhongzhi 仲直=Zhou Qun 周羣
- Zhongzhou 仲周=Xie Mi 謝宓
- Zhongzi 仲子
=Song Hong 宋弘/宏
- Zhongzi 仲子
=Song/Zong Zhong 宋/宗忠/衷
- Zhongzi 仲子=Wang Liang 王良
- Zhongzi 仲子=Yin Tao 殷陶
- Zhongzong 仲宗=Zhang Yi 張異
- Zhoufu 周甫=Dü Mi 杜密
- Zhougong 周公=Dou Rong 竇融
- Zhoulin 周林=Wei Teng 魏滕
- Zhounan 周南=Yin Zhou 尹宙
- Zhouyang 周陽=Yuan Feng 袁逢
- Zhugong 諸公=Dü Mao 杜茂
- Zhuhu 朱虎=Cao Biao 曹彪
- Zhujun 諸君=Zhang Zong 張宗
- Zi'a 子阿=Zhongli Yi 鍾離意
- Zi'ai 子艾=Huang Yun 黃允
- Zi'an 子安=Cao Jun 曹峻
- Zi'an 子安=Zhang Qian 張鉗
- Zi'ang 子昂=Xing Yong 邢顛
- Zibing 子並=Zhang Chao 張超
- Zibing 子炳=Wang Huan 王奐
- Zibing 文公=Zhang Bu 張步
- Zibo 子伯=Chen Zhan 陳湛
- Zibo 子伯=Xu Qing 許慶
- Zibo 次伯=Liu Liang 劉良
- Zibo 次伯=Yin Shi/Zhi 陰識
- Zibu 子布=Zhang Zhao 張昭
- Zicai 子才=Shi Xu 石勳
- Zicai 子材=Li Xiu 李休
- Zichan 子產=Tang Tan 唐檀
- Zichan 子產=Wei Li 衛颯
- Zichang 子長=Cui Rong 崔融
- Zichang 子昌=Wang Huan 王奐
- Zichi 子勅=Qin Mi 秦宓/密
- Zichu 子初=Liu Ba 劉巴
- Zichu 資初=Feng Shi 馮石
- Zichun 子春=Huan Rong 桓榮
- Zichun 子春=Lu Hong 陸閔
- Zichun 子春=Wang Zun 王遵
- Zichun 子春=Zhu Hao 祝皓
- Zida 子大=Yu Yan 虞延
- Zidan 子丹=Cao Zhen 曹真
- Zide 子德=Cai Zhan 蔡湛
- Zidu 子度=Meng Da 孟達
- Zidu 子篤=Zhang Zhong 張重
- Zidu 欠都=Zheng Jing 鄭敬
- Zifang 子方=Mi Fang 麋芳
- Zifang 次房=Wen Xu 溫序
- Zifu 子服=Wang Fu 王服
- Zifu 子甫=Jiang Han 江漢
- Zigang 子綱=Zhang Hong 張紘
- Zigao 子高=Dai Zun 戴遵
- Zigao 子高=Liu Hong 劉弘
- Zigao 子高=Liu Xuan 劉宣
- Zigao 子高=Sun Deng 孫登
- Zigao 子高=Wu Ping 吳馮
- Zigao 次高=Dü Yuan 杜瑗
- Zigong 子公=Chen Ao 陳囂

- Zigong 子恭=Rong Liang 戎良
 Zigong 子恭=Xue Qin 薛勤
 Zigong 子恭=Yang Song 楊疎
 Zigu 子穀?=Cao Cheng 曹成
 Zigui 子珪=Bian Yu 卞玉
 Zihan 子幹=Lu Zhi 盧植
 Zihe 子和=Cao Chun 曹純
 Zihe 子和=Kong Xi 孔偃
 Zihe 子和=Zheng Chong 徵崇
 Zihe 子河/何=Ci Chong 茨充
 Ziheng 子橫=Guo Xian 郭憲
 Ziheng 子璜=Liu Xun 劉勳
 Ziheng 子璜=Quan Zong 全琮
 Ziheng 子衡=Lü Fan 呂範
 Zihou 子厚=Jia Shu 賈淑
 Zihua 子華=Sima Zhi 司馬芝
 Zihuan 子桓=Cao Pi 曹丕
 Zijì 子伋=Jian Tan 堅鐔
 Zijì 子奇=Fei Sui 費遂
 Zijì/qì 子期=Cao Jing 曹竟
 Zijia 子家=Lu Yu 盧毓
 Zijian 子堅=Li Gu 李固
 Zijian 子建=Cao Zhi 曹植
 Zijian 子建=Cui Ting 崔挺 []
 Zijiang 子將=Xu Shao 許劭
 Zijie 子節=Meng Zheng 孟政
 Zijin 子禁=Zhang Fan 張汎/汜
 Zijing 子京=Wei Feng 魏諷
 Zijing 子敬=Huang Mu 黃穆
 Zijing 子敬=Lu Su 魯肅
 Zijing 子敬=Meng Da 孟達
 Zijing 子景=Han Xuan 韓宣
 Zijing 子經=Qian Zhao 牽招
 Ziju 子助=Han Zhuo 韓卓
 Ziju 子居=Zhou Cheng 周乘
 Zijun 子儁=Zhang Xun 張馴
 Zijun 子均=Wang Ping 王平
 Zijun 子浚=Song Chong 宋沖
 Zijun 子雋=Song Chong 宋沖
 Zikang 子康=Pang Meng 逢萌
 Zikang 子康
 =Zhuo Mao/Mou 卓茂
 Zike 子恪=Lü Qian 呂虔
 Zikuang 次況=Yao Qi 鈔期
 Zilan 子蘭=Wu Shi 吳碩
 Zilang 子朗=Li Xiu 李休
 Zilang 子郎=Zhang Na 張納
 Zilang 次朗=Chao Kan 巢堪
 Zili 子禮=Cai Mao 蔡茂
 Zili 子禮
 =Handan Chun/Zhu 邯鄲淳/竺
 Zili 子禮=Xue Dun 薛惇
 Zili 子離=Wang Hao 王皓
 Zilian 子廉=Cao Hong 曹洪
 Ziliang 子良=Bao Xian 鮑咸
 Ziliao 子遼=Zhu Ye 朱野
 Zilin 丘子林
 =Taoqiu Hong 陶丘洪
 Zilin 子林=Xiahou Mao 夏侯楸
 Zilin 子麟=Chen Xiang 陳翔
 Ziling 子陵=Diwu Xi 第五頡
 Ziling 子陵=He Lin 何臨
 Ziling 子陵
 =Shentu Pan 申屠/徒蟠
 Ziling 子陵
 =Yan Guang/Zun 嚴光/遵
 Zilong 子龍
 =Shentu Pan 申屠/徒蟠
 Zilong 子龍=Zhao Yun 趙雲
 Zilu 子路=Yuan Zeng 爰曾
 Zilü 子閻/廬=Fan Qian 范遷
 Ziluan 子鸞=Zhao Qi 趙旂
 Zimei 子沒=Song Chong 宋沖
 Zimin 子閔=Fan Zeng 范曾
 Ziming 子明=Lü Meng 呂蒙
 Ziming 子明=Xu Xiang 徐詳
 Ziming 子明=Zhang Zun 張錡
 Ziming 子明=Zhou Cheng 州稱
 Zi'nan 季南=Zhao Shao 趙邵
 Zini 子尼=Guo Yuan 國淵
 Zipei 子佩=Han Heng 韓珩
 Zipi 子皮=Jian Tan 堅鐔
 Ziping 子平
 =Xiang/Shang Chang 向/尚長
 Ziping 子平=Jiang Qi 姜岐
 Ziqi/ji 子期=Cao Jing 曹竟
 Ziqi 子起=Gongsha Shao 公沙紹
 Ziqi 子棄=Liu Fang 劉放
 Ziqi 子奇=Xie Lu 謝祿
 Ziqi 子旗=Wei Jing 衛旌
 Ziqi 子奇=Wen Qi 文齊
 Ziqian 子騫=Cai Gong 蔡弓
 Ziqiao 子喬=Zhang Song 張松
 Ziqin 子琴=Liu Ci 劉賜
 Ziqing 子卿=Diao Yao 刁曜
 Ziqing 子卿=Yu Fang 虞放
 Ziran 子然=Chen Lin 陳臨
 Ziran 子然=Ding Gong 丁恭
 Ziran 子然=Li Bing 李昞
 Zirao 子饒=Duo Rang 杜穰
 Ziren 子仁=Duo Ci 杜慈
 Ziren 子仁=Liu Dun 劉惇
 Zirong 子容
 =Zhuo Mao/Mou 卓茂
 Zirong 子榮=Diao Wei 刁韞
 Zirou 子柔=Feng Xi 馮熙
 Zirou 子柔=Kuai Liang 蒯良
 Zirou 子柔=Zhao Wen 趙溫
 Zishan 子山=Bu Zhi 步騭
 Zishan 子山=Yang Zhong 楊終
 Zishen 子慎=Fu Qian 服虔
 Zishen 子慎=Fu Zhi 服祗
 Zishen 子慎=Fu Zhong 服重
 Zisheng 子升=Hu Teng 胡騰
 Zisheng 子聲=Zhao Shang 趙商
 Zishi 子師=Wang Yun 王允
 Zishi 子師=Zheng Zhong 鄭眾
 Zishi 子石=Wang Pan 王磐
 Zishi 子石=Zhang Pan 張磐
 Zishu 子叔
 =Handan Chun/Zhu 邯鄲淳/竺
 Zishu 次叔=Zhou Zhang 周章
 Zishuo 子碩=Ma Ping 馬平
 Zisi 子嗣=Wang Shen 王諶
 Zisong 子松=Kong Qiao 孔喬
 Zisong 子誦=Xin Xian 鐔顯
 Zisu 子肅=Jin Gong 金恭
 Zisun 次孫
 =Zhai Tong/Yong 祭彤/彤
 Zitai 子泰=Tian Chou 田疇
 Zitai 子臺=Liu Xun 劉勳
 Zitong 子通=Jiang Ji 蔣濟
 Ziwei 子威=Che Cheng 車成
 Ziwei 子微=Xie Zhen 謝甄
 Ziwei 子瑋=Cui Qi 崔琦
 Ziwei 子衛=Fu Jun 傅俊
 Ziwei 子衛=Liu Mao 劉茂
 Ziwen 子文=Cai Zhi 蔡質
 Ziwen 子文=Cao Zhang 曹彰
 Ziwen 子文=Wang Jun 王儁
 Zixia 子夏=Qin Qing 禽慶
 Zixian 子憲=Li Fu 李孚
 Zixian 子顏=Wu Han 吳漢
 Zixiao 子孝=Cao Ren 曹仁

- Zixiao 子孝=Zhang Zhan 張湛
 Zixing 子興=Chen Xuan 陳宣
 Zixing 子行=Yang Zheng 楊政
 Zixiu 子休=Taoqiu Hong 陶丘洪
 Zixiu 子脩=Cao Ang 曹昂
 Zixu 子緒=Du Xi 杜襲
 Zixu 子緒=Yao Zhou 姚祐
 Zixu 子許=Wei Zi 衛茲
 Zixun 子勳=Ji Liao 薊遼
 Zixun 子訓=Ji Liao 薊遼
 Ziya 子牙=Wei Xi 隗禧
 Ziya 子雅=Chen Jin 陳禁
 Ziya 子雅=Zhao Xuan 趙宣
 Ziyan 子琰=Huang Wan 黃琬
 Ziyan 次彥=Zhou Pang 周滂
 Ziyang 子揚=Liu Ye 劉曄
 Ziyang 子陽
 =Gongsun Shu 公孫述
 Ziyang 子陽=Peng Xiu 彭脩
 Ziyan 子嚴=Ying Rong 穎/穎容
 Ziyi 子異=Kong Qi 孔奇
 Ziyi 子異=Pang Yu 龐涓
 Ziyi 子義=Taishi Ci 太史慈
 Ziyi 子翼=Jiang Gan 蔣幹
 Ziyi 子翼=Kou Xun 寇恂
 Ziyi 子翼=Yan Yu 嚴羽
- Ziyi 子議=Zhang Zi 張咨/資
 Ziyin 子殷=Duan Gui 段珪
 Ziyong 子雍=Wang Su 王肅
 Ziyou 子佑=Fan An 樊安
 Ziyou 子優=Mou Rong 牟融
 Ziyou 子游=Chen Yi 陳逸
 Ziyou 子猷=Yang Ci 楊賜
 Ziyu 子序=Jia Shu 賈淑
 Ziyu 子玉=Cui Yuan 崔瑗
 Ziyu 子玉=Gui Dan 桂丹
 Ziyu 子瑜=Hou Jin 侯瑾
 Ziyu 子瑜=Zhuge Jin 諸葛瑾
 Ziyu 子羽=Shi Yi 是[氏]儀
 Ziyu 子虞=Liang Xi 梁習
 Ziyu 子魚=Zhou Fang 周魴
 Ziyuan 子元=Wang Fu 王扶
 Ziyuan 子源=Zang Hong 臧洪
 Ziyuan 子遠=Wu Yi 吳懿/壹
 Ziyuan 子遠=Xu You 許攸
 Ziyuan 子遠=Zhang Xia 張遐
 Ziyuan 次元=Li Tong 李通
 Ziyun 子雲=Li Tan 李曇
 Ziyun 子雲=Li Tan 李曇
 Ziyun 子雲=Zhang Jin 張津
 Zizeng 次曾=Yin Feng 尹奉
 Zizhang 子張=Ma Wu 馬武
- Zizhang 子張=Xie Gong 謝躬
 Zizhang 子張=Xu Jing 許荆
 Zizhang 子璋=Lu Mao 陸瑁
 Zizhao 子昭=Chen Jun 陳俊
 Zizhao 子昭=Yang Yong 楊顥
 Zizhao 子超=Zhai Fu/Pu 翟輔/酺
 Zizhen 子慎=Zhang Xiu 張修
 Zizheng 子政=Xu Qian 許虔
 Zizheng 子正=Chen Duan 陳端
 Zizheng 子正=Shen You 沈友
 Zizheng 子正=Tang Gu 唐固
 Zizheng 子正=Ying Yu 應余
 Zizhen 子眞=Cui Shi/Zhi 崔寔/治
 Zizhi 子智=Sun Lü 孫慮
 Zizhi 子治=Xia Fu 夏馥
 Zizhi 子釋=Sun Kan 孫堪
 Zizhong 子仲=Fan An 樊安
 Zizhong 次中=Dai Ping 戴憑
 Zizhong 子仲=Mi Zhu 麋竺
 Zizhong 子仲=Yu Fang 虞放
 Zizhong 次仲=Wei Hong 衛宏
 Zongmei 宗美=Ma Jiang 馬姜
 Zongxin 宗昕=Sun Xun 孫訓
 Zuoming 作明=Peng Hong 彭閔
 Zuozhi 佐治=Xin Pi 辛毗
 Zurong 祖榮=Liu Chong 劉寵

NOTABLE EXPERIENCES OF WOMEN

The list below may serve as a guide to some of the activity by and related to women recorded in the histories.

Some attitudes or incidents which may be considered normal are not specifically referred to. I do not include, for example, references to regular marriage or concubinage; to the proper respect shown by a child to its mother or between husband and wife; to the unfortunate fate of the family of a defeated politician or military man; nor to the political complications of the imperial harem and the court: accounts of these last may be found in the biographies of various empresses and concubines.

It should be noted, moreover, that in most cases we are not told the status of an individual's mother: whether she was a full wife or a concubine. And while the fact of adoption is often identified, the natural lineage is frequently ignored or left uncertain. Two important examples from the end of Later Han are the origins of Cao Song, father of the warlord Cao Cao, and the exact relationship between two of his rivals, Yuan Shu and Yuan Shao.

Each citation below is intended as a guide to an entry in the biographical list, where an incident or attitude is described in more detail.

PERSONAL ATTRIBUTES AND QUALITIES

Beauty

Lady Du I
Lady Gan, concubine of Liu Bei Han Zhongbo, wife of Ladies Qiao
Lady Ren II
Sun Shou
Wu Ji
Lady Zhen
Ladies Zhao
Zuo Da'e
Zuo Shao'e

Extravagant/poor conduct

Lady Cui, wife of Cao Zhi [executed for disobeying sumptuary laws]
Lady Huan II [over-dressed at funeral]
Liu Shou [spoilt and jealous, killed by husband]
Sun Shou

Fine conduct

Cao E [filial piety to death]
Fan Xian, mother of [inspires son to face execution]
Kong Zhou, widow of Lady Liu V
Ma Yi [suicide for chastity]
Song Run [chastity]
Xian Luo [filial piety]

Wang Ji [suicide for chastity]

Yue Yangzi, wife of [suicide for chastity]

Zhao Hua [suicide for chastity]

Heroic conduct

Gou Yu [vendetta]
Lady Jiang II [defiance to death]
Lady Kong I [defiance to death]
Lü Rong [revenge and chastity]
Lady Xu IV [revenge]
Yang Jingyang [vendetta]
Zhao E [vendetta]

Literary and scholarly ability

Ban Zhao
Cai Yan
Cao Fengsheng
Lady Ding I
Huangfu Gui, wife of Lady Kong II
Ma Lun
Ma Zhi
Xu Shu
Yin Jipei

Sexual misconduct

Ai Zhi
Lady Bian [sing-song girl]
Lady Cao II
Lady Chen I [sing-song girl]

- Cheng Tuo [murdered by his wife's lover
Guo Zhen]
- Deng Yuan [go-between for adultery]
- Empress-Dowager Dou of Emperor
Zhang [accused of fornication]
- Dun Zixian, wife of [kills husband through intercourse]
- Liu Huang
- Liu Xiande
- Liu Zheng
- Sun Shou
- Ren Yong, wife of
- Lady Xu I
- Zhou Bi [adultery arranged by husband]
- MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE
[see also Sexual misconduct above;
[and Widows and Household below]
- Questionable marriage/concubinage
- Lady Bian, wife of Cao Cao
[former sing-song girl]
- Lady Cao V and He Yan
[half-brother and sister]
- Cao Boshi [demands another's wife;
she kills herself]
- Cao Pi and Lady Zhen [first husband still alive]
- Lady Chen I, mother of Emperor Zhi
[former sing-song girl]
- Chen Jiao [marries woman of his own birth-clan]
- Lady Dong [forced to re-marry
while her husband still alive]
- Dou Mu [forges orders for divorce]
- Dou Yuan [ordered to marry imperial daughter]
- Li Niao
[formerly in imperial harem]
- Li Yusheng [king marries a former slave]
- Liu Chang [dismisses wife to marry concubine]
- Liu Qian [takes late father's concubine]
- Lady Xiahou II [abducted by Zhang Fei]
- Li Yusheng [former slave]
- Wang Yong and Liu Gui
[wet-nurse and imperial kinsman]
- Lady Xu/Ying [transferred from one husband to another for breeding]
- You Tongji [formerly in imperial harem]
- Affection/respect between husband and wife
- Chang Lin
- Fan Shu
- Luxi [fatal]
- Pang Degong
- Peng Chong
- Qin Jia
- Sheng Ji
- Wang Gong
- Xun Shuang
- Zhou Jizhen
- Zhuge Jin [concubine]
- Wife supports husband
- Han Shu'nan
- Huan Shaojun [hermit life]
- Huang Bo
- Liu Yiwang
- Meng Guang [hermit life]
- Wang Ba
- Yang Ji
- Lady Yuan I [hermit life]
- Zhai Zun
- Zhang Chunhua
- Wife reforms husband
- Liu Pu, wife of [warns children of his faults]
- Lü Rong
- Yue Yangzi, wife of
- Zhao A [unsuccessful]
- Wife/concubine harms husband
- Lady Cao II, wife of Xiahou Mao [angered by his adulteries]
- Lady Cheng, wife of Yang Qiu
- Fan Sheng, third wife of
- Li Yan, wife of [husband insane]
- Zhou Ba [wife arranges changeling]
- Husband and wife parted
- Lady Dai and Huang Chang
- Liu Bei, various wives and concubines
- Ren Teng
- Sun Ben
- Lady Xi and Pang Lin
- Husband's lack of concern/respect for wife
- Feng Liang
- Han Chong
- Han Pin
- Han Zhongbo

- Jiang Shi
 Kong Fen
 Kong Rong
 Li [personal name unknown]
 Li Ye
 Qiu Lan
 Wang Yan [wife feels insecure]
 Wei Zhen
 Xia Chen
 Xue Qin
 Yang Pei
 Yuan Peng
 Zang Hong [kills favourite concubine to provide meat during a siege]
 Zhou Ze
 Zhu Fu [kills wife to escape]
- Family gains nothing from official position
- Ba Zhi
 Fan Qian
 Fu Yu
 Gao Shen
 Han Chong
 Pei Qian
 Wang Liang
 Wei Ba
 Xie Dun
 Yang Mao
- Husband divorces/sends away wife
- Bao Yong [wife spoke unkindly to a dog]
 Fan Sheng [divorces several wives]
 Huan Rong [failure to breed]
 Li Chong [prefers own family]
 [sub] Li Jing [wife kills maid-servant]
 Liu Chang [marries concubine instead]
 Liu Xu [obliged to divorce wife by forged imperial order]
 Lady Ren I by Feng Yan [madness?]
 Lady Ren II by Cao Pi [nagging]
 Ru Dun [greedy wife]
 Lady Xiahou I from Huang Yun
 Lady Xu/Ying
- Women accompany campaign
- Ban Chao [wife and family]
 Feng Gun [female slaves]
 Feng Yi [wife and family]
- Special cases
- Chen Wu [concubine and retainers said to have been buried with him]
 Guanqiu Chang [wife allowed into prison to become pregnant]
- Eunuchs take concubines
- Ju Yuan
 Tang Heng
 Xu Huang
 Zuo Guan
- HOUSEHOLD AFFAIRS
- Worthy women at home
- Lady Yao, mother of Ren An
 Yang Ji
 Yang Jin
 Yang Ligui
 Zhang Huiying
 Zhang Lixiu
- Worthy women bringing up children
- Cheng Zhenjue [cares for nephew and other dependents]
 Du Taiji
 Lady Geng [nephew]
 Huang Lieying [step-children]
 Liu Taiying
 Liu Yiwang [nieces]
 Ma Jiang [daughters]
 Sima/Ma Jingsi [step-children]
 Wang He
 Wen Ji [step-children]
 Zhang Shuji
 Zhang Yu [brothers]
- Worthy women managing household
- Lady Ma I [when young]
 Lady Ma IV [given charge of affairs for incompetent son]
 Lady Zhou II [given charge of affairs for incompetent grandson]
- Domestic disorder
- Ai Jiao [murders brother-in-law]
 Fan Feng, wife of [kills maid-servant]
 Lady Feng III [murdered by rivals]
 Han Xu [murdered]
 He Shi [attacks husband's aunt]
 Li Li [kills brother-in-law]
 Li Yi [murdered]

Lady Liu XV [kills and mutilates late husband's concubines]
 Liu Ding, wife of [insulted by husband's brother, who was severely punished]
 Liu Shou [murdered]
 Liu Xiande [murdered]
 Lady Ren I [attempted murder]
 Pang Can, wife of [kills step-children]
 Tian Sheng [murdered by Dowager Dou]
 Lady Wang [murdered by Empress He]
 Lady Xu II [ill-treated by step-son]
 You Tongqi [mutilated]
 Zhang Chunhua [kills maid-servant]
 Lady Zong [quarrels with sons]

WIDOWHOOD

Marriage of widows

Lady Du I [forced]
 Lady Dong V [forced]
 Lady Fan II, sister-in-law of Zhao Fan [offered]
 Lady Wu III [to Liu Bei]

Widows: refuse to remarry

Cao Jing [attempted suicide]
 Chang Yuan [suicide]
 Chen Zhu [attempted suicide]
 Cheng Zhenjue
 Du Ci [suicide]
 Han Jiang [suicide]
 He Xuan [suicide]
 Lady Huan I [cuts off ear]
 Huangfu Gui, wife of [killed by Dong Zhuo]
 Li Er [cuts off hair]
 Li Ping [attempted suicide]
 Peng Fei [cuts off hair]
 Tang Ji [former concubine of Liu Bian the Little Emperor]
 Wang He [cuts off ear]
 Xiang Wu [suicide]
 Xun Cai [suicide]
 Yuan Fu [suicide]
 Lady Zhang I [cuts off hair and ears]
 Zhang Zhaoyi [suicide]
 Zhou Du [cuts off hair, then nose]

Widows: other virtues

Lady Cao I
 Chang Michang
 Luo Gong
 Xie Ji [ashamed to have no children: suicide]
 Yang Ligui
 Yin Jipei
 Lady Zuo

Widow chooses life and burial separate from her late husband: Sima/Ma Jingsi

Widower refuses to marry again
 Zhu Hui

OTHER FAMILY RELATIONSHIPS

Mother: special affection

Guanqiu Chang
 Hu Hao for Zhao Yongjiang
 Kong Fen
 Lu Xu
 Wei Xiang
 Wu Shun
 Xu Shu

Zhang Chunhua [supported by children against father]

Mother: lack of respect

Wu Xiong
 Yuan Hong
 Zhen Shao

Mother-in-law: ill-treatment by

Lady Li IV, wife of Deng Yuanyi and then of Ying Shun [sub] Li Jing [daughter-in-law accused of theft]
 Zhang Lixiu [by husband's aunt]

Mother-in-law: devotion to Pang Xing

 Lady Xu III
 Yang Jin
 Zhang Xianzhang

Step-mother

Li Mujiang [ill-treated by step-sons]
 Li Tan [shows great respect]
 Wen Ji
 Pang Can
 Lady Xu II [ill-treated by step-son]
 Yang Bo [ill-treated by step-mother]
 Lady Zhu [ill-treats step-son]

Grief for loss of child

Lady Lin and Ma Keqing

Grief for loss of a foster-child

Lady Ding III and Cao Ang

PUBLIC LIFE

Advice, good/wisdom

Chen Huiqian

Li Wenji [advises caution]

Lady Sun II

Xie Gong, wife of

Xin Xianying

Yue Hui, wife of [advises caution]

Advice, bad/interference/intrigue

Lady Liu XV, wife of Yuan Shao

Lady Cai IV, wife of Liu Biao

Guo Si, wife of

Lady Han, concubine of the Gengshi

Emperor

Li Tong, wife of [unsuccessful]

Lü Bu, wife of

Shama

Shang Dan

Wang Li

Wei Zhu

Lady Yang, wife of Ma Chao

Lady Zhang II

Zhao Rao

Aggression

Lady Hou, mother of eunuch Hou Lan

Lady Peng [punished for staring]

Lady Sun III

Sun Shou

Crime: punished for relative

Lady Bo [liable for execution]

Jiao Kuang [family punished]

Jiang Pin [exiled although betrothed]

Lady Kou I, wife of Deng Zhi

Shi Jun [executed for son]

Lady Song III

Yin Jiu and wife [for son Ying Feng's murder of his wife, Princess Liu Shou]

Zhao Yuanjiang

Crime: victim

Li Gao, concubine of [murdered in vendetta]

Li Yong, wife of [murdered in vendetta]

Liu Shou [murdered for adultery]

Su E and her servant Zhi [murder]

Yao Bi [murdered]

Yao Rao [murdered]

Hostages

Bi Chen [changes sides]

Cen Peng [forced to fight]

Guan Tong [family killed]

Kong Fen [family killed]

Li Zhong [no change; later released]

Liu Bei [several times: no change]]

Liu Long [family killed]

Liu Zhi [family killed]

Pi Tong [no change; later released]

Xu Shu [changes sides]

Yang Hou [no change; later released]

Zhao Bao [family killed]

Zhu Ling [mother killed]

Magical/mystical experience/ability

Lady Huang II [changed shape]

Lady Li I [divination]

Xian Luo [appears in a dream]

Lady Wu I [taken by a demon]

Yao Bi [appears in a dream]

Yao Rao [appears in a dream]

Yi Xi [poltergeist]

Lady Zhang III, mother of Zhang Lu

[religious adept]

Medical treatment

Cao Daofei and sisters

Rescued from tomb

Li E

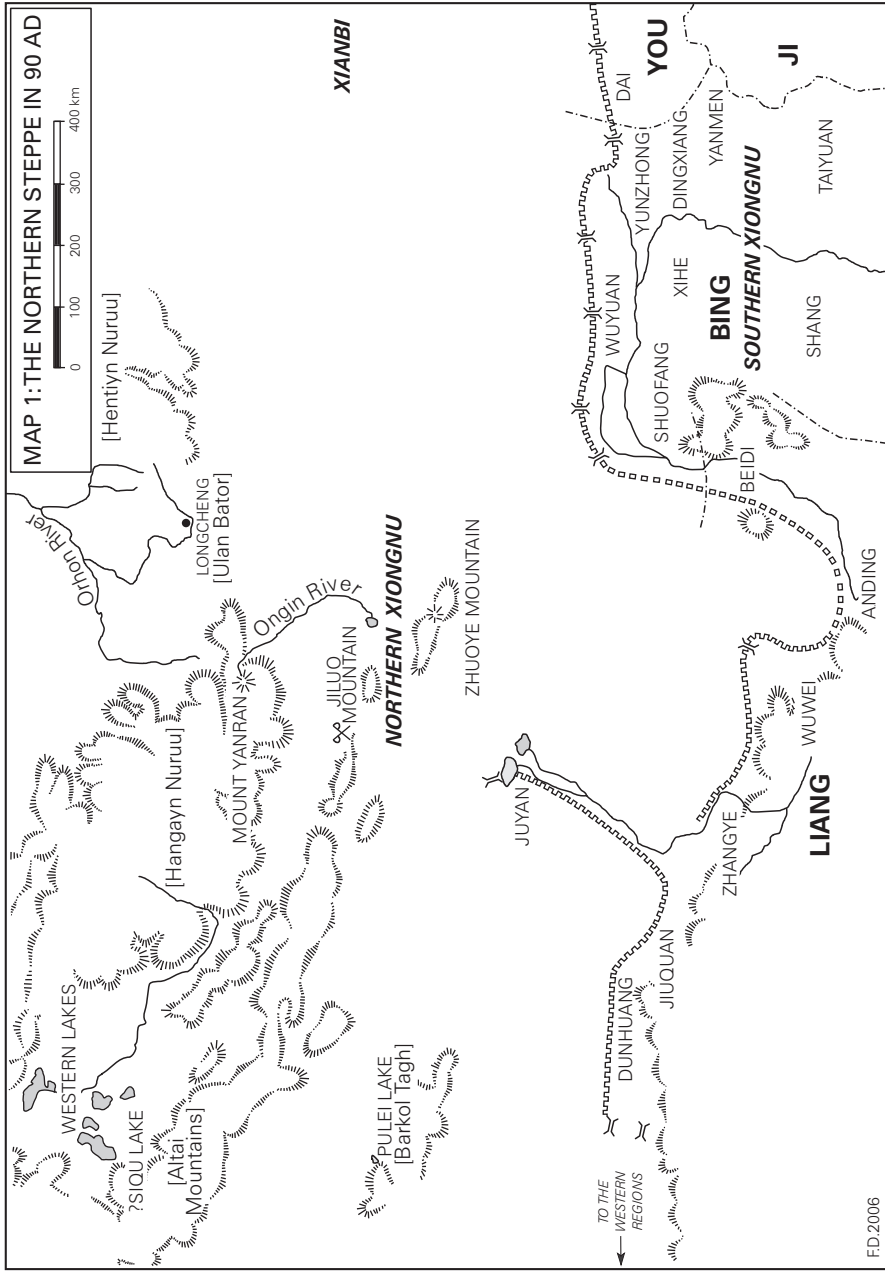

Strange births

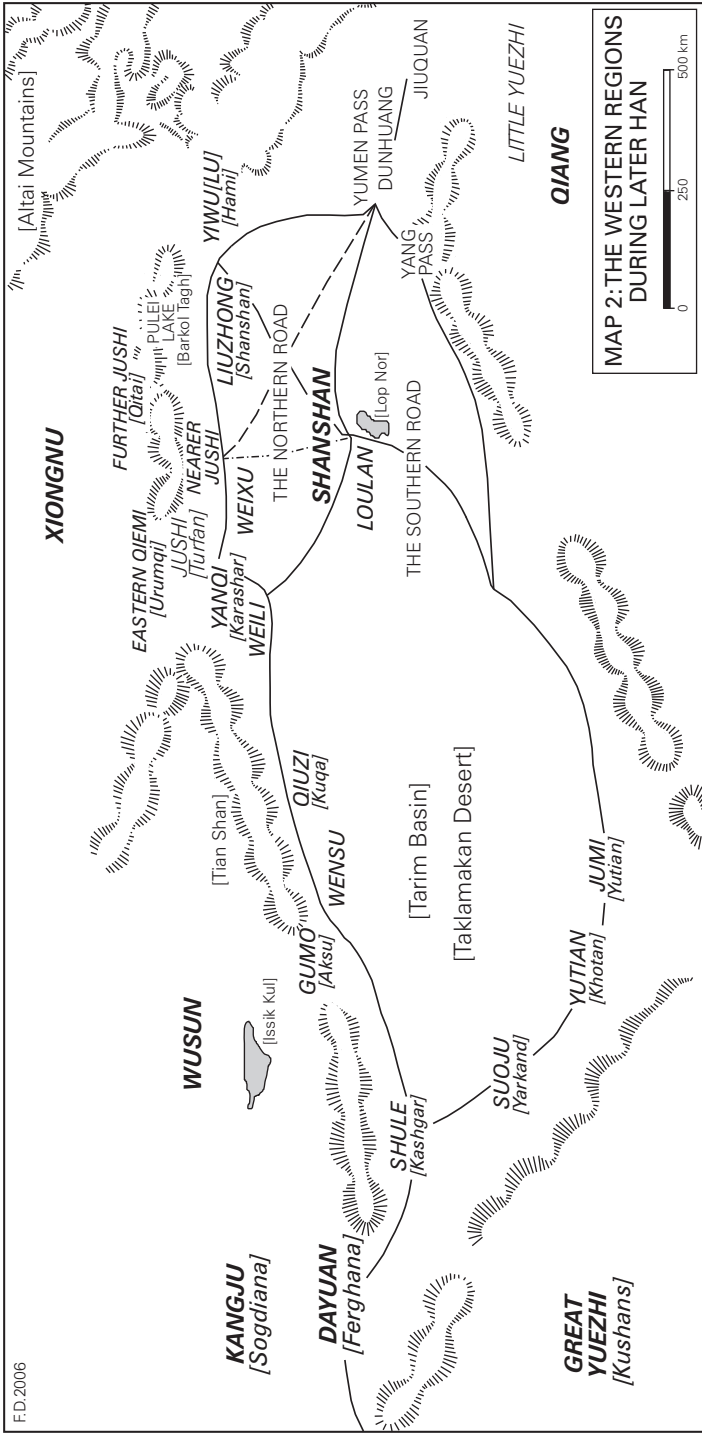

Dou Feng, wife of [gives birth to a snake]

Liu Cang, wife of [child with two heads]

LIST OF MAPS

Map 1: The Northern Steppe in 90 AD	1308
Map 2: The Western Regions during the Later Han Period	1309
Map 3: The Later Han Empire in 140 AD	1310

MAP 2: THE WESTERN REGIONS DURING LATER HAN

MAP 3: THE LATER HAN EMPIRE c. 140 AD

For the generality of the empire, commandery units are shown with their boundaries, but in the region of the North China plain they are indicated by the sites of their capitals, with abbreviated names as listed below:

Ji province:	Yan province:	Qing province:	Xu province:	Yu province:
AP Anping	CL Chenliu	BH Beihai	DH Donghai	C Chen
BH Bohai	D Dong	DL Donglai	GL Guangling	L Liang
CS Changshan	DP Dongping	JN Jinan	LY Langye	LU Lu
HJ Hejian	JB Jibei	LA Lean	PC Pengcheng	P Pei
JL Julu	JY Jiyin	PY Pingyuan	XP Xiapi	RN Runan
QH Qinghe	RC Rencheng	QI Qi		YC Yingchuan
W Wei	SY Shanyang
Z Zhao	TS Taishan
ZS Zhongshan

On the northern and western frontier, DS indicates a dependent state.

MAP 3: THE LATER HAN EMPIRE c. 140 AD

0 250 500 km

FD.2006