INCA TRAIL PERMITS

To hike the Inca Trail, you must have a permit. We obtain the permits for you from the Peruvian government. The permits are issued on a first-come, first-served basis, and sell out months in advance. It is critical you sign up for your preferred dates as early as possible. For summer departures, this would be six months in advance.

WT Difference on the Inca Trail

DECADES OF EXPERTISE ON THE INCA TRAIL

Who you travel with makes all the difference in your experience of the Inca Trail. We have nearly 40 years of expertise on this legendary trail, and you'll see the difference in every detail of your trip. Our itinerary has been honed to perfection, with the very best team of guides, exceptional camps with the finest equipment, and great cuisine.

5 FULL DAYS ON THE TRAIL—AND PERFECTLY PACED!

Most companies offer a trek with just four days on the trail (and some just three days), making for long (and rushed!) hiking days. Our trip has five full days on trek, allowing you to acclimatize gradually to the altitude. You will have four full days at altitude before crossing any high passes, have reasonable wakeup times (no hiking in the dark!), and enjoy well-paced hiking days that give you more time to explore and enjoy the extraordinary Inca ruins along the route.

EXPERT TRIP LEADERS

Our Trip Leaders are simply the most qualified on the Inca Trail. They are experts in Inca history, with a profound connection to Peru's fascinating traditional culture. Our leaders have the wonderful gift for bringing the history and culture to life. Along with their skilled knowledge of the trail, they have a deep commitment to your well being in this mountain environment, ensuring your safety and comfort each day and taking care of all the details so you can savor the wonder of the Inca Trail.

EXCEPTIONAL CAMPSITES, WITH TWO NIGHTS IN PRIVATE CAMPS

One of reasons our itinerary works so well is that we use our own private campsites, both just outside the park boundary, on the first two nights of the trek. Not only does this allow us to improve the timing and logistics of the trek, but it also allows us to provide you with extra amenities on those nights. The first camp has wonderful thatched-roof tent chalets featuring twin or king-size beds and en-suite bathrooms with hot showers, a permanent indoor dining facility as well as a wood-fired sauna. The second also has indoor toilets and hot showers. We enjoy meals inside our dining tent with tables, tablecloths, and chairs with backs—you'll appreciate the difference. For camps 3 and 4, our crew hikes ahead of our group to secure the best spots in the national park campsites, with incredible views over the stunning landscape.

OVERNIGHT RIGHT AT MACHU PICCHU

The Machu Picchu Sanctuary Lodge is the only hotel right at the ruins, and we're one of the very few companies to include a stay here at the end of your trek. You'll be right on the doorstep of this magical site, not waiting in line to get on the buses that bring people up from the town below. An overnight here is a spectacular way to truly experience Machu Picchu, as we have access to one of the wonders of the world when most visitors and tourist buses have left for the day.

Our Route to Machu Picchu

A WORLD-CLASS PILGRIMAGE

Trekking to the legendary lost city of Machu Picchu is one of the world's most inspiring pilgrimages, an exhilarating journey following in the footsteps of the ancient Incas. Our journey begins in Cusco, the imperial city of the Incas, where we stay at the Hotel Monasterio, one of Cusco's most prestigious accommodations.

After visiting the sites of the Sacred Valley of the Incas, we set off on the ancient royal highway to Machu Picchu, staying the first two nights at our own private campsites with full amenities—it even has a sauna! Crossing two high passes, we explore major Inca ruins along the route—you can't reach them any other way than on foot—and enjoy spectacular, specially chosen campsites with fantastic views. One of our camps just above the ruin of Phuyupatamarca has incredible panoramas of the snow-capped giants of Huamantay (19,239') and Salcantay (20,574')—two awesome sentinels of the Inca Trail. The climax of our trek is the hike to Intipunku, Gate of the Sun, on our final day, then we hike down into the captivating ruins of Machu Picchu. The next day we explore the ruins with our guide. Our overnight at Machu Picchu Sanctuary Lodge, set right at the ruins, allows us wonderful access to this mystical site.

Our trip itinerary is specifically designed to give you four full days at altitude before crossing the high passes. The overnights are in Cusco (11,200'), Ollantaytambo (9,160'), and we have hikes to our private camps at 8,900 feet and 12,033 feet.

PROPER ACCLIMATIZATION

Trekking in Style

CAMP AMENITIES & CUISINE

Our tents are roomy, high-quality 4-person mountain tents (used for only 2 people) and 2-person tents (used for singles). At camps 3 and 4, we have our own private, biodegradable chemical toilet. And the food? You'll be surprised and delighted at the variety and quality of our on-the-trail cuisine, a blend of freshly made American and Peruvian dishes.

Each morning, you'll wake up to hot coffee, cocoa, and a choice of teas, brought right to your tent, followed by a freshly prepared breakfast of eggs, pancakes, French toast, or oatmeal, served in our enclosed dining tent, complete with table and chairs. Lunches include delicious pasta salads, soup, casseroles, and other offerings, served at a scenic trailside spot where our staff has set up tables and chairs, and often an open tent for shade. At each lunch stop, we set up our own private, biodegradable chemical toilet for our own group's use. Snacks are on hand when you arrive at our well-located camp at the end of each day's hike, and dinner begins with a hearty soup followed by an entrée of fish, beef, or chicken (with vegetarian options), along with vegetable dishes, fruit, and a light dessert. Our cooks are well-trained in catering to special diet needs including gluten-free and non-dairy, and camp hygiene is practiced at the highest level.

MACHU PICCHU SANCTUARY LODGE

On the final day of the trek, you'll overnight at the legendary Machu Picchu Sanctuary Lodge, with its extraordinary location just steps from the entrance gate to the ruins, a fitting end to a spectacular journey! Most companies use the hotels in Aguas Calientes, the riverside town below Machu Picchu, meaning travelers must wait in line and take a long bus ride up a switchback road to reach the ruins, as well as a long bus ride back. Overnighting at the ruins with WT allows you to explore the site right until closing time, after most visitors have gone. The next morning, you're right in place to take the exciting early morning hike up to the top of Huayna Picchu, the striking peak that forms the photogenic backdrop for Machu Picchu.

"This trip surpassed all our dreams. Everything was superb—the guides, the camping sites, the organization, the porters, the FOOD (better than any restaurant!) Thank you."

Itinerary

INTI RAYMI FESTIVAL OPTION

The June departures include the option of arriving early in Cusco or extending your trip to watch the Inti Raymi Festival (Inca Festival of the Sun), held in Cusco on June 24. Processions, music, dancers, colorful costumes, and celebrations at Saqsayhuaman highlight this observation of the “return of the sun.” South of the Equator, this date follows the winter solstice, the shortest day of the year, and according to Inca traditions, the sun will return at the behest of the Inca high priest to make the days longer, and to make crucial planting and harvesting possible. Please call us for information on booking this extension.

DAY 1 TO CUSCO, PERU (VIA LIMA)

Arrive early in the morning at the airport in Lima and connect with a spectacular flight over the Andes to Cusco (11,200'). Upon arrival, we are met and transferred to the Belmond Hotel Monasterio, a landmark 16th century monastery beautifully transformed into a luxurious 5-star hotel, close to Cusco's central square. Here we drink a cup of maté de coca (the local herb tea) to help us acclimatize to the high altitude, and take deep breaths! Lunch is on your own. In the afternoon, we enjoy a walking tour through central Cusco for a glimpse into the ceremonial heart of the Inca Empire. Our walk includes a visit to the Coricancha, a sacred Inca temple whose walls were once covered with sheets of gold, the Plaza de Armas, and the Baroque cathedral, built on the site of an old Inca palace. We gather for a Welcome Dinner this evening...D

“An amazing, never-to-be-forgotten trip. The almost-full moon over our high elevation campsites, with the snow-capped Andes spread out around us, was unbelievably magical. The whole trip was well planned, well paced, and well executed.”

Sue C., Healdsburg, CA

Note: We recommend coming to Cusco one day early to acclimatize to Cusco's altitude (it's also a delightful place to explore on your own). An extra day makes a world of difference after the long flight from the US. We are happy to book additional hotel nights for you at the Hotel Monasterio (an “on your own” expense).

Cusco: Inhabited by proto-Incas as early as the 12th century AD, Cusco was completely rebuilt in the early 15th century by Pachacutec, the Inca warrior-king. He is credited with creating the Incas' form of worship, system of government, and the distinctive masonry style we still marvel at today. Cusco was the heart of Tahuantinsuyo, the Land of the Four Quarters, as the Incas called their kingdom. The boundary lines of each quarter of the kingdom originated from the main plaza. An elegant imperial city, Cusco was laid out in the shape of a puma. The great fortress of Saqsayhuaman formed its head, while palaces, temples, squares, and streets formed the puma's body and legs. Cusco's paved avenues were flanked by temples, and there were rock-hewn palaces with gold- and jewel-encrusted doors and villas for the brilliantly clad Inca nobles and their retinues. The capital's opulent inner sanctum was the Coricancha, or House of the Sun, once a glittering temple to the gods, full of golden statues (today it forms the foundation for the colonial Santo Domingo church). Although the Spaniards looted the gold and silver from the elaborate Inca temples, most of Cusco remained undisturbed after Pizarro, the Spanish conqueror, made his triumphant entrance into the city in 1533. But in 1536, Manco II, the rebel Inca, led an attack against the Spanish. His men used slingshots to rain hot coals into the city, setting it ablaze. The Spanish triumphed, but the once-glorious city was left a smoking ruin.

DAY 2 SAQSAYHUAMAN / URUBAMBA, SACRED VALLEY OF THE INCAS

This morning we head up to stunning Saqsayhuaman, a monumental Inca fortress overlooking the city, to marvel at the sheer size of this military and religious complex, with its zig-zag walls of enormous, perfectly fitted stones. We then drive out to the beautiful "Sacred Valley of the Incas" and Pisac (9,514'), a colonial and modern village above which lies a majestic Inca fortress overlooking the valley. We explore the towering fortress-ruin of Pisac (11,100'), which has some of the finest examples of Inca terracing in existence, still in use by local inhabitants, then descend 1,300 feet to the colonial Pisac village. Overnight at a lovely hotel in the valley...BLD

Hiking Details: 2.5-3 hours

"The Inca Trail was better than I could have imagined. The trip was organized flawlessly and was truly a once-in-a-lifetime experience. My first big trek and I loved every minute of it."

Brynna P., Washington, DC

Pisac and the Urubamba Valley: The Urubamba Valley was sacred to the Incas for many reasons, a key one being that it has a moderate climate and fertile plains, a rare combination in the high Andes. It is also the route to the jungle, from which the Incas liked to bring tropical fruits and plants (including coca, which was used in rituals). In the Urubamba Valley is the picturesque Andean village of Pisac and a major Inca ruin of the same name. The ruin at Pisac was the largest fortress-city complex of the Incas, yet is another enigma to archaeologists. It was a classic Inca pucara, a huge defended area where the entire population of a wide area could retreat during a military threat, but despite its natural defenses, the Incas made no stand here against the Spaniards. Pisac is particularly well known for the Inca-built terracing—there is an incredible sweeping vista of dozens of terraces, still used for farming, cascading down to the Chongo River valley below. These are the best preserved and most extensive Inca terraces in Peru and were used during Inca times for growing maize, a prestige crop that needed irrigation in the dry highlands. Another interesting feature of the site is its many cliff tombs, found especially in the steep walls to the west of the ruins. Huaqueros (grave robbers) reached them before the archaeologists and today all that is left is a honeycomb of empty tombs in the nearby cliffs.

DAY 3 OLLANTAYTAMBO / BEGIN TREK

We visit the stunning ruins at Ollantaytambo (9,160'), a major Inca fortress-temple and one of the few places where the conquistadors lost a battle with the Incas. The lower ruins consist of beautifully preserved terraces, while the upper ruins boast some of the finest Inca masonry known today. The village below the ruins is unique in that the foundations have survived exactly as the Incas laid them out hundreds of years ago. The major difference between this and modern-day towns is that each block, known as a cancha, is a self-contained unit with only one entrance onto the street. We have the opportunity to stroll through these narrow, quiet streets along with the local inhabitants. In the afternoon, we drive to our trailhead and begin our trek with a three-mile hike to a beautifully situated permanent campsite set on the banks of the river at 8,900 feet and close to the park entrance. The amenities at this camp include wonderful thatched-roof tent chalets with en-suite bathrooms and hot showers—and even a wood-fired sauna! We also enjoy panoramic views of the snow-capped Cordillera Vilcabamba and dazzling Mt. Veronica (18,700'). This is the staging site of all our Inca Trail treks and is a wonderful spot to relax and prepare for the trek ahead...BLD

Hiking Details: 2-3 hours, 3 miles, 200 feet ascent/descent
Maximum Altitude: 8,900 feet / Campsite Altitude: 8,900 feet

DAY 4 TREK TO PAUCARCANCHA

One of the fascinating aspects of this trek is the opportunity to explore remote Inca sites that can only be reached on foot. We cross the Urubamba River on a hanging bridge and walk up to the small town of Piscacucho to check into the park. Returning back down to the bridge, we then head north on a trail that brings us to Willka Raqay, a set of Inca ruins perched high above the ruins of Llactapata. We then continue up the Huayllabamba valley, past the village of Huayllabamba to our camp in a quiet spot near the archaeological remains of an important check-point, Paucarcancha, on a former Inca crossroads off the main Inca Trail. The Inca Trail, now a part of the National Archaeological Park of Machu Picchu, is part of the “royal highway” found by Hiram Bingham in 1915, four years after his discovery of the hilltop city of Machu Picchu, when he returned to clear vegetation from the site. We may pass some of the trekkers on the classic Inca Trail in the morning, but once we ascend past Huayllabamba toward our camp, we have this historic trail largely to ourselves, allowing us to be immersed in the history and atmosphere of the Incan realm. Near our camp, we can visit the Paucarcancha ruins, which include a small tambo or resting place, with partially restored Inca houses surrounded by a wall. Our private camp features hot showers and indoor toilets...BLD

Hiking Details: 6-7 hours, 7.5 miles, 1,435 feet ascent

Maximum Altitude: 10,335 feet / Campsite Altitude: 10,335 feet

DAY 5 TREK TO PACAYMAYO / WARMIWAÑUSQA PASS

Hiking back to the main trail (most hiking groups are now ahead of us), we make a long, uphill climb through villages, woods, and alongside a stream, then continue with a slow but steady ascent up the very steep switchbacks of the famous Warmiwañusqa Pass ("Pass of the Dead Woman") at 13,776 feet.

At the summit (the highest altitude we reach on our trek), we are rewarded by sweeping views of a panorama of snow-covered Andean peaks. We descend to our camp at Pacaymayo at 11,480 feet...BLD

Hiking Details: 6-7 hours, 7 miles, 3,996 feet ascent/2,396 feet descent

Maximum Altitude: 13,776 feet / Campsite Altitude: 11,480 feet

DAY 6 TREK TO PHUYUPATAMARKA

Most trekking groups rush out early on this day, but we take our time and avoid other hiking groups. Today's hike brings us to three of the most fantastic ruins on the classic Inca Trail: Runkuraqay, Sayaqmarka, and exquisite Phuyupatamarca. After visiting Runkuraqay in the morning, we continue our ascent along the original Inca Trail. Our second pass is the Abra de Runkuraqay at about 12,960 feet, with a steep descent on Inca stone stairs to the pretty ruins at Sayaqmarka. There are Inca baths here and we can see many varieties of orchids. The landscape becomes more lush as we head closer to Machu Picchu and away from the Urubamba Valley. Heading uphill again, we cross a relatively short pass at just over 12,000 feet near wonderful Phuyupatamarca. Our support staff will have gone ahead to secure a camp spot above the ruins of Phuyupatamarca. From our special camp here, views of Humantay (19,239') and Salcantay (20,574') are breathtaking. You'll feel like you're at the top of the world!

Hiking Details: 6 hours, 6 miles, 1,480 ascent/900 feet descent
Maximum Altitude: 12,960 feet / Campsite Altitude: 12,033 feet

Runkuraqay: This circular ruin was probably a frontier outpost of the Machu Picchu province. Hiram Bingham named it by asking his local porters what it was called. He heard runku but the porters might have said runcu, which translates as basket or basket-shaped, or rumpu, meaning ball or sphere. Its

"We would highly recommend this trip. It's a special treat to stay at that last campsite—we felt like we were on top of the world. And staying at the Machu Picchu Sanctuary Lodge at Machu Picchu is a must!"

Jill M., San Francisco, CA

circular shape is unusual and its outer walls are massive and have no windows, but the eastern quarter of the courtyard has a magnificent view of the Pacaymayo Valley. It might have been a lookout post or a tambo, a place where travelers could stay.

Sayaqmarka: A small, maze-like ruin perched atop a sheer cliff at about 11,800 feet, Sayaqmarka (“Inaccessible Place”) is clearly illustrative of the military aspect of much Inca architecture and city planning. Bingham found this ruin in 1915 and called it Cedrobamba, Plain of Cedars. Since this is not a plain and there are no cedars, Paul Fejos, an archaeologist who visited the area in 1940 while studying Machu Picchu, subsequently gave it the Quechua name of Sayaqmarka. Sayaqmarka and the surrounding land have no significant remains of Inca agricultural terracing, so the site must have been supplied by food from somewhere else. One of its interesting features is a parabola-shaped building with trapezoidal openings on its west side.

Phuyupatamarca: This is the “Town in the Clouds,” aptly named by Hiram Bingham. Set at 11,700 feet, it has a beautiful set of linked stone baths and carved stone channels where mountain water still runs. There are many agricultural terraces around it. From Phuyupatamarca, an Inca-built stone staircase plunges a half-mile down into high jungle vegetation. This section of the original Inca Trail was only uncovered in 1984. Before then, hikers had to skirt around a modern footpath built to connect two original trail sections.

DAY 7 TREK TO MACHU PICCHU / MACHU PICCHU SANCTUARY LODGE

We take our time hiking today, exploring the ruins of Phuyupatamarca and Wiñay Wayna, the last major site on the trail before we get to Machu Picchu. After lunch, we make our long-anticipated hike up to Intipunku, Gate of the Sun. Here, a magnificent view unfolds before us: the storybook ruins of Machu Picchu, straddling a green ridge high above the Urubamba River. This spot has the absolutely classic view of Machu Picchu, and we will hike down into the ancient city just as the Incas would have done. Our overnight is at Machu Picchu Sanctuary Lodge, the only hotel right at the entrance to the ruins, with breathtaking views of Machu Picchu. The lodge allows unparalleled access to this renowned site (it's just 50 feet away) and a fantastic sunset view! We gather for our Farewell Dinner this evening at the Machu Picchu Sanctuary Lodge...BLD

Hiking Details: 5 hours, 6.8 miles, 4,133 feet descent
Maximum Altitude: 12,033 feet / Machu Picchu Altitude: 7,972 feet

Wiñay Wayna: Wiñay Wayna (“Forever Young”) is one of the most beautiful small Inca ruins, especially when it is seen from a distance, clinging to the side of a ravine. It's named for an orchid, once abundant in this region, that blooms year-round and hence had the Quechua name of “forever young.” A large round structure commands the site and below it a flight of stairs leads down past ten ritual baths. Ritual baths are a feature of major Inca sites.

Machu Picchu: So well hidden in the jungle-covered ramparts of the Cordillera Vilcabamba that the Spaniards never knew of it, Machu Picchu allows us a glimpse into the Inca world. American historian Hiram Bingham, who had a fascination with Peruvian archaeology, found the site in 1911 while searching for the ruins of Vilcabamba, known to be the last place where the rebel Manco II took refuge. A villager told Bingham about some ruins on a high ridge above the Urubamba River and led him there; thus, Bingham found the ruins not of Vilcabamba, but of a mysterious Inca city now believed to be one of the royal estates of the 9th Inca king, Pachacuti—whose name translates as “Transformer of the World.” Pachacuti was a kind of New World Alexander the Great, whose son and grandson continued and consolidated the expansion of Inca power. Bingham returned in 1912 and 1915 to undertake the difficult task of clearing the thick forest that had engulfed the ruins. Peruvian archaeologist Luis Valcarcel undertook further studies and vegetation clearing in 1934, and in 1940 and 1941, a Peruvian-American expedition led by Paul Fejos did more study. Archaeologists know that Machu Picchu was built, occupied, and then abandoned in the course of 100 years. The Palace of Princesses, Temple of the Sun, Temple of the Condor, and the astronomical observatory are only a few of the remarkable restored ruins here. The many beautiful altars, terraces, fountains, and mysterious chambers all display intricate stonework. Discoveries in the 1980s of many other small ruin sites close to Machu Picchu have given weight to the theory that Machu Picchu also served as the administrative center of a huge and populous region. Whatever Machu Picchu’s purpose was, it is certainly one of the most stunning archaeological sites in the world.

DAY 8 MACHU PICCHU / CUSCO

You can set out at 7:00 am for an optional hike up the steep yet rewarding mountain trail of Huayna Picchu. The view here is stunning, with sweeping vistas of Machu Picchu in the morning’s soft light. Later, we explore Machu Picchu and all its terraced wonders on our guided tour, then board the train bound for Cusco at around 3:00 pm, arriving in Cusco in the early evening, with dinner on your own. Overnight at the Hotel Monasterio...BL

We have exclusive use of the private tented chalet camp at legendary Kilometer 82, right by the start of the classic Inca Trail. This “only-with WT” feature gives us wonderful privacy for our groups, incredible views of the Veronica snow peak, and great access to the Inca Trail. The thatched-roof chalets feature twin or king-size beds, electricity, full bathrooms with hot and cold running water, tiled solar-heated showers, and flush toilets. Each tent has its own veranda where you can savor views of the surrounding mountains. Stone pathways connect the tents through landscaped gardens to a cozy lounge area with a fireplace and an enclosed dining room where our delightful meals are served, featuring a wonderful mix of Peruvian and North American dishes. The comfort factor is high here, yet your environmental footprint is small—solid waste is managed with bio-digesters and power is supplied by a hydro-electrical source. The camp also has an on-site sauna, so be sure to bring your suit! This is a unique, exclusive experience, and promises to be a highlight of your Inca Trail hike.

INCA TRAIL TREK CAMPS

Inca Trail, Peru Days 4 to 6 (3 nights)

We make hiking and camping in the Andes as comfortable as it can get! On the trail, you are accompanied by our experienced team of trail guides, and all your gear is carried for you, leaving you free to hike with just a light daypack to hold your camera, water bottle, jacket, etc. Our camp amenities include a dining tent with a dining table, chairs with backs, camp meals prepared by our highly trained staff, and, at two of our camps, indoor toilets and hot showers (toilet tents with chemical toilets at our other camps). We provide sleeping bags, sleeping bag liners, and sleeping pads while on trek. Our camp crew takes care of all camp chores, including bringing tea or coffee to your tent each morning and providing beautiful picnic lunches each day at a scenic spot along the trail. Accommodations are in sturdy mountain-style tents. Our camps are operated to the highest environmental standards.

MACHU PICCHU SANCTUARY LODGE

Machu Picchu Ruins, Peru Day 7 (1 night)

You can't get closer to the Machu Picchu ruins than this! With only 31 rooms, this property is famously set right at the gate of Machu Picchu. Not only does this save you from having to make the 30-minute bus trip to get up to or back from the ruins each day, but it also allows you the luxury of popping back to the hotel for a rest or a bite to eat whenever you like throughout the day. The hotel features a garden with a view of Huayna Picchu, two restaurants, and the food and service are wonderful. While the rooms are small and few offer views of the ruins, the Sanctuary remains the absolute top choice of travelers who decide that if they are only going to do it once, they might as well do it right!

MAKE ALL THE DIFFERENCE

Wilderness Travel Trip Leaders have a passion and a joy for creating an unforgettable journey. We are extremely proud of them and the incredible travel experiences they make possible. For more information about our Trip Leaders, including client comments about them and which specific trips they will be leading, please visit our webpage and click on “Trip Leaders”: www.wildernesstravel.com/trip/peru-inca-trail-machu-picchu-hiking-tour/

JHON ELGUERA

Jhon Elguera was born in 1980 near the ancient Inca stronghold of Machu Picchu in the Santa Teresa Valley. After graduating from high school in Cusco, he undertook computer studies, then later attended guide school, receiving a diploma in cultural tourism. Jhon has been guiding tours in Peru since 2002. An outdoor enthusiast, he has completed several first aid and mountain rescue courses.

MIGUEL PACSI

Miguel Pacsi was born in the highlands southeast of Cusco, not far from snow-capped Ausangate, the most sacred mountain to the Inca people. Born into the WT family, with his father being one of our original camp managers, Miguel is now a second-generation member of our Peru team! He has hiked the famous Inca Trail more than 500 times and holds a teaching degree in history and geography from the University of San Ignacio de Loyola in Lima as well as a guides' degree from the University in Cusco. He is fluent in his native Quechua as well as Spanish and English and loves sharing his vast knowledge of Peru's local traditions as well as its cultural and natural history. Miguel is a favorite among our trip members and receives rave reviews.

HOLLY WISSLER

Holly Wissler, a musician and ethnomusicologist, is one of our most experienced and gifted Trip Leaders, drawing upon her many years of trekking and living in Peru and Nepal. Holly is deeply passionate about Andean culture and music, the topic of her PhD in ethnomusicology and the focus of two documentaries she has produced, “Qoyllur Rit'i: A Woman's Journey,” on Peru's largest Andean pilgrimage festival, and “From Grief and Joy We Sing,” illuminating the musical traditions of the remote Quechua community of Q'eros, Peru. A key leader for our Peru team since 1982, Holly feels at home with the people of the Andes, especially since she adopted her godson, Dante, from the Q'eros community. She is often called “chaka warmi” (bridge woman) because of her extraordinary ability to facilitate meaningful (and fun!) exchanges between travelers and locals. Holly especially loves to bring WT trip members, our trek crews, and the indigenous Q'eros people together through conversation and music making. “People have said that I bring passion and love to my trips and that I laugh a lot—which I do!” A great storyteller too, Holly speaks Spanish, Quechua, Nepali, and ASL.

What to Expect

WHAT THE TRIP IS LIKE

This trip is Level 5, Moderate to Strenuous. Most hiking is between 8,000 and 12,000 feet. The maximum elevation we reach is 13,766 feet, and the highest place we camp is 12,033 feet. The total mileage hiked is about 29. Trails can be rugged, not the well-maintained trails you may be accustomed to in the United States. For the most part, you can hike at your own speed. Out group will spread out along the trail during about six to seven hours of hiking each day (shorter on some days).

On the trail, you will just carry your own daypack for the items that you want with you on the trail, such as a water bottle and a jacket. Our team of Inca Trail porters carries all your other gear from camp to camp. The altitudes are high, but our first hotel night is in Cusco at 11,200 feet, our second overnight is in the Sacred Valley of the Incas at 9,500 feet, our third is at our first camp at 8,900 feet, and our fourth is at our second camp at 10,335 feet. These four days will help your altitude acclimatization before climbing the first pass.

GETTING IN SHAPE

The Inca Trail is mostly stone-paved (Inca stones!) and it undulates up and down across green mountains while crossing two high-altitude passes. For the most part, you can hike at your own speed because we always have a staff member hiking in the lead as well as one behind with the slowest hiker in our group. Any fit, experienced hiker will enjoy this hike, but we recommend you make an extra effort to prepare by engaging in regular exercise well beyond your normal routine. To accelerate your conditioning, try walking faster than 1.5 miles per hour, walking on steeper inclines, using your gym's stair-climbing machines, or going on long hikes (also a good way to break in your boots). Please be aware that there are a few sections of long, steep stone "staircases," so we do suggest hiking poles to protect your knees. The trek takes place at altitudes between 9,840 feet and 13,776 feet.

A TYPICAL TREKKING DAY

Hiking distances on trek are normally measured in hours, not miles, since maps aren't really accurate enough to assess how far we walk up and down on winding mountain trails. With rest stops and photo stops, few people walk faster than one mile an hour in a mountainous region. Some hiking days are shorter than others, and some days are more difficult than others due to altitude gain and loss.

On a typical trek day, you'll wake up to hot coffee, cocoa, and a choice of teas, brought right to your tent. This is followed by a freshly prepared breakfast of eggs, pancakes, French toast, or oatmeal. We set off on the trail while the crew strikes camp and the porters shoulder their loads. There is always a guide in the lead, usually the Trip Leader or the camp manager, who supervises the crew, and someone who hikes behind the slowest hiker. Most of our hikers tend to spread out over the trail, taking photos, stopping to rest, and enjoying the scenery. We typically walk for three or four hours in the morning, depending on the day, then stop for a leisurely lunch at a scenic spot. Lunches consist of a wide variety of dishes, including delicious pasta salads, soup, casseroles, and other offerings. After lunch, we walk for another three hours or so until we reach our next night's camp. The porters and crew pass us in mid-afternoon and set up our next camp. When we arrive at camp, snacks are available, including popcorn, cookies, crackers, and hot or cold drinks. Dinner begins with hearty soup followed by an entrée of fish, beef, or chicken (with vegetarian options), along with vegetable dishes, fruit, and a light dessert.

WHEN IS THE BEST TIME TO GO?

The Inca Trail can be hiked all year except in late January and February, the rainiest months, when the trail is closed for repairs. The trail reopens in March and April, when the rains lighten up and the mountains are still green. High season begins in May and extends through September, as these are the driest months. October through December are considered shoulder season, when occasional rain is possible, but keep in mind that the highlands of Peru are a temperate desert and it is not uncommon for it not to rain for weeks at a time even in the height of the rainy season. This is also the time with the fewest hikers on the trail, more flowers in bloom, and fewer tourists at Machu Picchu as well as in Cusco. Temperatures in the Cusco-Machu Picchu region range from the high 60s in the daytime to the low 40s at night, with some variation depending on the time of year you go.

WHY DO YOU NEED TO BOOK SO EARLY?

To protect the Inca Trail's monuments and environment, Peruvian authorities only issue 200 permits each day for hikers (plus an additional 300 permits for the licensed porters and staff who carry the gear and work on the trips). Permits sell out extremely fast! We must obtain your permit for you when you sign up, so we urge you to book your trip at least six months in advance, especially if you are considering going between May and September.

WEATHER

Being so close to the equator, Peru has only two climate seasons: a dry season from April to October, and a wet season from December to March. Altitude is the main factor controlling the climate. In the mountains, you'll encounter sunny days with daytime temperatures ranging between 65°F and 70°F, dropping to the 40s and lower at night. The sun is very strong at high altitude and it can often be warm enough to hike in shorts and a t-shirt. However, it can also get extremely cold; if you're familiar with mountain weather, you know how suddenly it can get cold even in the daytime if the sun slips behind a cloud. Nighttime temperatures can drop to below freezing. Rain should not be a problem on our treks, but always keep in mind that mountain weather is unpredictable and sudden storms can occur, especially on high mountain passes.

Lima lies in a coastal desert where rainfall is rare and temperatures are usually warm (70s and 80s). Days are overcast most of the year due to the Humboldt current that comes up from Antarctica and meets the warm, tropical El Niño current from the north to create the garua, or coastal fog/mist.

The climate in the Amazon Basin is generally warm and humid throughout the year but can also be unexpectedly cool (usually 60s) due to the breezes that blow down from the Andes.
